GENERAL REFLECTIONS

UPON

SAINT PAUL'S EPISTLES.

THE Epistles of St. Paul form so important a part of the Holy Scriptures, as to be in themkives almost fufficient, under divine grace, to impart a clear and distinct knowledge of all the tuchs necessary to falvation, and to form our hearts to devotion. They exhibit more particularly an intimate acquaintance with the books of the Old Testament, and of the mysteries of the ancient dispensation : and the proofs drawn from that facred source, for the confirmation and illustration of the doctrines of the Gospel, are so very numerous, and are set in to clear a light, that we cannot fail to admire the conformity of the New Testament with the Old, and fully to acknowledge the infpiration of the former, when already fatisfied of the divinity of the latter. But the more grandeur and fublimity we fee in the proofs and reasonings of St. Paul, the greater difficulty does the understanding fometimes find in keeping pace with him; and the profundity of these matters, great and difficult in themselves, occations a degree of obscurity, upon a flight perusal of the Epistles of this Apostle, which however clears away by degrees, if we continue to read with attention and in a fpirit of faith. This is the remark of St. Peter in his Second General Epiftle: Account that the long-fuffering of our Lord is falvation; even as our beloved brother Paul alfo, according to the wifdom given unto bim, bath written unto you; as alfo in all bis epiftles, speaking in them of these things; in which are fome things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, a they do alfo the other scriptures, unto their own destruction; 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16. It appears from the teltimony of St. Peter, that he possefield a high opinion of the deep knowledge of St. Paul; and that what is hard to be understood in his Episitles arises from. the nature of the fubjects themfelves, and not from the manner in which they are treated. Neither are these difficulties found throughout the whole of any one Epistle, so as to render it unintelligible to the understanding of any perfon who feeks folely for instruction and confolation: 5.

confolation: they occur only in a few places, where the fubject is not fufceptible of the fame clearnefs as in all the reft: and here the profundity, rather than the obfcurity, ought to humble our conceit of ourfelves, and awaken our attention and zeal in the perufal of thefe incomparable Epifiles. According to St. Peter, none but minds full of ignorance or of prejudice, or wholly given up to the world, can fail of edification in reading them. But St. Paul tells us himfelf, (Titus, i. 15.) that unto the pure all things are pure : but unto them that are defiled, and unbelieving, is nothing pure ; but even their mind and confcience are defiled. Even thole who envied him, and were jealous of the high effeem in which he was held by all the churches, and who laboured with all their might to leffen his reputation, dared not attack his Epiftles, nor attempt, on any pretence of obfcurity, to prevent Christians from reading them. They acknowledged them to be weighty and powerful, 2 Cot. x. 10. two words which convey a high eulogium : the first sheat their fubject is grand and important; and the fecond, that it is handled with a force of understanding and strength of reafoning capable, through grace, of convincing the most obstinate.

We have fourteen Epifles by this Apoftle, including that to the Hebrews, which, though not bearing his name, is certainly his, as we shall shew when we come to that excellent piece. As it is of little importance to the edification of the church, in what order these Epistles are placed in the collection which has been made of them, much less attention has been paid to the order of time in which they were written, than to the arrangement of the fubjects which they contain. (See the Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans.) Thus the Epistle to the Romans has always been placed first, on account of its excellence, which has ever caused it most justly to be regarded as one of the noblest productions of inspiration, and most useful to the church of Christ.

PREFACE.

WHILE St. Paul was labouring with indefatigable application and zeal in the conversion of the people in most of the provinces of Asia, and throughout all Greece, the church at Rome became daily celebrated on account of the purity of its faith, and the progress made by the Gospel in that capital of the world. Rom. i. His joy at feeing the kingdom of God strengthening itself in a city which then gave laws to the whole earth, and his wish to contribute all his zeal and knowledge to the fame end, had often made St. Paul form a defign of going to Rome, thence to visit all Italy, and to pass on into Spain; chap. xv. 23, 24. But Providence having hitherto prevented him, and he being defirous to give the Romans a tellimony of his apostolic zeal, he addreffed to them from Corinth, about four years previous to his first imprisonment, this excellent Epissie, in which he has collected together, with the divinest art, the most profound doctrines of the Christian religion.

He treats expressly and at length of our justification before God, and of the calling of the Gentiles, as connected with the rejection of the Jews : fubjects high and momentous in themfelves, and which required from the Apostles every exertion to place them in a clear point of view, both to confirm Christians in their faith, and, if possible, to withdraw the Jews from their erroneous ideas on those two important points. With regard to the first, it is certain, that the Jews in general, little instructed in the intention or end of the law, and the meaning of the prophets, knew no other means of being justified before God, than by keeping the law of Moles. This, then, was the grand error, against which St. Paul had to contend. And, to do this with the greater effect, and at the fame time in a most methodical way, he first flews that all men are finners, and consequently under a curfe; this he begins to lay down from the 17th verse of the first chapter; he then proceeds to prove, that the Gentiles are Vol. II.

PREFACE TO THE

not only finners, but deferving of God's feverest judgments. After which he comes immediately to the Jews, and shews, in the second chapter, and in the third, as far as the 19th verse, that their condition in this respect is very little different from that of the Gentiles; that they are all, like them, finners, and merit the condomnation which the very law that they have received, and in which they pride themfelves, denounces against the guilty. And hence he draws this evident inference, that by the deeds of the law, or by his own righteoufnels, there shall no flesh be justified; chap. iii. 10. fo that, either no man can be justified and faved, or there must be some other means of justification besides that of works, or the perfonal righteousness of finful man. Now, as we cannot affirm the former polition without injuring the mercy of God, and annihilating the covenant which he had made with mankind in Adam through the feed of the woman, we must conclude that God, in his word, has opened a real fource of justification and falvation for the faithful. This fource is, the righteousness of God by faith of Jesus Christ, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; chap. iii. 21, 22. And becaufe this righteousnels is a spontaneous favour of God towards man, to which the finner among the Jews has no more right than the finner among the Gentiles, the Apostle proves that God has imparted it to Jews and Gentiles indifferently, and that both are justified by faith in Christ, the author and principle of that righteoufness.

Herein St. Paul taught two things which gave offence to the Jews: first, that the uncircumcifed Gentile was justified by the fame means as the circumcifed Jew; and fecondly, that the Jew who was under the yoke of the law could only be justified by grace: but he clears up these difficulties in the following chapter, which is the fourth. The first he explains by the example of Abraham, whose faith was counted to him for righteousses, before he had yet received circumcision; and the fecond, by the express declaration of David, who makes the blesses of man in general (and consequently of the Jews, of which he was one) to consist in the grace of God, who has provided a propitiation for their fins, which conceals them from the eyes of his justice; and St. Paul had already faid, chap. iii. 24, 25. that this propitiation fet forth by God was Jesus Christ. The remainder of the chapter is employed in establishing the fame truth.

The fifth chapter contains an excellent parallel between Chrift and Adam, tending to fhew that fin and condemnation flow from Adam unto all mankind, and that justification flows equally from Jefus Chrift.

The fixth chapter replies to an objection against the doctrine of grace and justification, through faith in a Mediator: the objection is, that we have only to follow our own inclinations, and the vicious bent of our nature, without confining ourfelves to practife the duties fet forth in the law, fince we are not to be justified by fulfilling the law. This objection contained fomething specious, especially for minds prejudiced against the Gospel, and eager to blacken it by the vilest imputations: but the Apostle defends it against this envenomed envenomed dart; and throughout this chapter he shews, that justification by faith in Christ, and the fanchification or holy life of the believer, are things infeparable.

But because the Jews had too high an opinion of themsfelves, and of the importance of the law, and fallely conceived that a man's righteousness was from the law, St. Paul in the feventh chapter opposes these phantoms raised by felf-love, and the illusions of the Jews upon the subject of the law of Moses, by shewing throughout this chapter, and to the 16th verse of the following, that our fanctification, as well as jultification, proceeds from the Lord Jelus Christ, and is wrought by the Spirit of grace. The rest of the eighth chapter, which is one of the finest and richest in all Holy Writ, is taken up in describing the happiness and glory to which fanctification joined with justification leads; and here St. Paul concludes the explanation of the first point that he had proposed in this Epistle; which was, justification by faitb.

He now comes to the fecond point, the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles into the peculiar covenant of the Meffiah, chap. ix.; and, because the subject was odious to the Jews (Acts, xxii. 22.) and fince St. Paul, who was particularly and emphatically called the Apostle of the Gentiles, was supposed by the Jews not to be well-affected towards their nation, he endeavours, from the beginning of this chapter, to do away thefe unjust suspicions, by the strongest assurances of his zeal for that people; so far indeed, that if it would enfure their falvation, he would subject himself to a curse. But, because the error of the Jews in this matter arole, on the one hand, from an opinion which they entertained, that, as God had once honoured them by his alliance, they had thereby gained a perpetual title, an unalienable right; and on the other, that, as God had in times paft suffered all nations to walk in their own ways, Acts, xiv. 16. there was no probability that he would hereafter alter his conduct in regard to them ;-St. Paul in this chapter treats generally upon election and reprobation, as they relate to nations, and to the peculiar privileges of the different dispensations; shewing by two well-known examples in the families even of the patriarchs, the first of Isaac and Ishmael, the other of Jacob and Esau, that God is free to beltow his gifts and privileges as he pleafes.

Towards the end of this chapter, and in the following, he fnews the Jews, that their dire misfortune arole from their pride, obstinacy, and wilful blindness in not understanding that the law was not given them for their justification, but that its intent was, to lead them to Jesus Christ; nevertheless, on the contrary, they had rejected him, and adhered obstinately to the law: whereas the Gentiles, having no fuch prejudices, received Christ when he was declared to them, and embraced his Gospel with joy.

The eleventh chapter continues to treat of the fall and rejection of the Jews; but it concludes with affurances, founded upon the oracles of the ancient prophets, that they fhould one day be recalled into the church.

The twelfth and following chapters are filled with ferious and powerful leffons of morality, exhoring Christians to edify one another in their whole life and conduct. For it is St. Paul's method

PREFACE, Sc.

method to begin his Epistles with doctrine, and to conclude them with instruction; that we may learn to hold the mystery of faith in a pure conscience. 1 Tim. iii. 9.

After what has been faid on the defign and execution of this Epiftle, it will not be difficult to comprehend in what fenfe we are to take the words law, faith, jufification, and fome others which often occur in the argument.

The law then is to be generally, though not always, taken for the Mofaic difpensation; and the works of the law are those performed in execution of God's ordinances, whether moral or ceremonial. See the Critical Notes.

Faith is a true and right knowledge of Jefus Christ, a profound sentiment of the soul, embracing him as its Saviour and Redeemer.

As for the term juffification, it can be no otherwife underftood, in a work treating of culprits, of a law, a tribunal, a judge, an accufer, a furety, a redemption (as thefe are all treated of), than in the common acceptation of the bar, of pardon, or of difcharging a criminal, through fpecial favour, from the punifhment that he had merited. And hence, juftification and remiffion of fins, are indifcriminately ufed in the fourth chapter as fynonymous terms, meaning abfolutely the fame thing in this controverfy; and for the fame reafon St. Paul, in chap. vi. diffinguifhes juftification from fanctification, which he needed not to have done, if juftification had meant the fame thing as making holy.

INTRODUCTION TO THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

THE fum and fubftance of the Christian religion is contained in the history of the life and death, the destrine and discourses of our Lord in the four Gospels. The epistolary writings of the applies were occasional, being intended to confirm the several churches to which they are addressed, in the rules of Gospel faith and practice wherein they had before been instructed; and are accomwoduted to the disputes and controversies, errors and false notions, which prevailed among them. The general method observable in these apostolical letters is, first, to discuss the particular point debated in the church, or among the persons to whom they are addressed, and which was the weating of their being written : and in the next place to give such exhortations to every Christian duty, grace, and virtue, as would be at all times, and in every church, of necessary and absolute importance; paying a particular regard to those graces and virtues, which the disputes that occafoned the Episle might tempt them to neglect.

The former part of thefe epifolary writings cannot be properly underflood, but by attending carefully to the flate of the question there determined : therefore, the errors and vain disputes concerning full and works, justification and fantification, election and reprobation, and the like, which bave so much vexed and distracted the minds of Christians, have all arisen from one grand mistake, of applying to themselves, or other particular perfons, now, certain phrases or passages which plainly referred to the then state and condition, not of particular perfons, but of whole churches, whether of Jews or Gentiles.

Of the Epifiles, fourteen are written by St. Paul, which are not placed in our Bibles according to the order of time in which they were written, but according to the precedence, or supposed rank of the churches and perfons to whom they are addressed. We will here subjoin a brief chromological order, according to Michaelis and some others.

- It will be unneceffary to fay any thing concerning St. Paul, and the proofs arifing to our common Christianity from his wonderful conversion, after what has been offered in the notes on the foregoing book: to which, therefore, we refer our readers, particularly to the notes and inferences on the ninth chapter.
- That St. Paul was the author of the celebrated Epifile before us, appears, first, from the infcription; fecondly, from his ufual falutation at the end; thirdly, from the flyle and matter, both which are correspondent with the rest of his writings; and fourthly, from the consent of the most early fathers, and the universal church. It was written from Corinth, when St. Paul was setting out for Jerusalem with the fupplies which had been collected in Macedonia and at Corinth; that is, in the year 58, which was the fourth of the emperor Nero. Paul had never been at Rome when be wrote this letter; and therefore it cannot turn upon fome particular points, to revive the remembrance of what he had more largely taught in perfon, or to fatisfy the forupulous in fome things which be might not have touched upon at all. But we may expect a full account of his Gospel, or those glad tidings of falvation which he preached among the Gentiles, feeing this Epifile was intended to fupply the total want of his preaching at Rome.
- He underftood perfectly well the fystem of religion that be taught; for he was instructed in it by the immediate revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ; (Gal. i. 11, 12. Ephes. iii. 3. 1 Cor. xi. 23.;) and being also endowed with the most eminent gifts of the Holy Spirit, and quite unbialsed by any temporal confiderations, we may be sure he has given us the truth, as he received it from our Lord. On the other hand, he was also well acquainted with the sentiments and system of the religion that he opposed; for he was thoroughly skilled in Jewish literature and Jewish controversy; and therefore we may very reasonably suppose that the questions and objections, which in this Epissie he puts into the mouth of the Jew, were really such as had been advanced in opposition to his arguments. He was a great genius and a fine writer, and be seems to have exercised all his talents, as well as the most perfect Christian temper, in drawing up this Epissie. The plan of it is very extensive; and it is supprising to see what a spacious field of knowledge he has comprised, and how many various designs, arguments, explications, instructions, and exhortations he has executed in so fimall a compas.
- This letter was fent to the world's metropolis, where it might be exposed to all forts of perfons, Heathens, Jews, Christians, philosophers, magistrates, and the emperor himself: no doubt the apostle kept this in view while he was writing, and guarded and adapted it accordingly. However, it is plain enough that the Epistle was designed to confute the unbelieving, and instruct the believing Jew; to confirm the Christian, and to convert the idolatrous Gentile. These feveral designs St. Paul reduces to one scheme, by opposing and arguing with the infidel, or unbelieving Jew, in favour of the Christian, or believing Gentile. Upon this plan, if the unbelieving Jew escaped, and remained unconvinced, yet the Christian Jew would be more inoffensively, and more effectually instructed in the nature of the Gospel, and the kind brotherly regard that be ought to have to the believing Gentile, than if he had directed his discourse flew, yet the believing Gentile would fee his interest in the covenant and kingdom of God as foldy established, by a full confutation of the Jewish objections, (which were the only objections that could, with any show of reafon, realon, be advanced against it,) as if the Epistle had been writen for no other purpose : and thus it is of the greatest use to us at this day.

- Bolb ancients and moderns make beavy complaints of the obscurity of this Epistle, though all agree it is a great and most useful performance : but we shall have a tolerable idea of it, if we observe that it confiles of four great parts or divisions. The first division contains the first five chapters ; the fecond, the fixth, feventh, and eighth; the third, the ninth, tenth, and eleventh; the fourth, the luft five chapters.
- Part I. difplays the riches of divine grace, as free to all mankind; Jews and Gentiles were equally finful and obnoxious to wrath; and therefore there was no way for the Yew to be continued in the kingdom of God, but by grace through faith; and by grace and faith the Gentile might be admitted into it. To reject this way of justification, was to reject the very method in which Abraham himself was justified, or interested in the covenant made with him; in which covenant believing Gentiles were included, as well as believing Jews; and bad now as great or greater privileges to glory in. But if the Jew should pertinaciously deny that, he could not deny that all mankind are interested in the grace of Gud, which removes the consequence of Adam's offence. Ibrough that offence all mankind are subjected to death, and through Christ's obedience unto death, all mankind shall be restored to life at the last day. The resurrection from the dead is therefore a part of the grace of God in the Redeemer; and if all mankind have an interest in this part of the grace of God, why not in the whole of it? If all mankind are fubject to death through Adam's one offence, is it not much more reasonable, that through the opposite nobler cluufe,-the goodnefs and obedience of the Son of God,-all mankind should be interested in the whole of the grace which God has established upon it. And as for law, or the rule of right otion, it was abfurd for any part of mankind to expect pardon, or any bleffednefs upon the ground of that, feeing all mankind had broken it; and it was still more absurd to seek pardon and life by the law of Moses, which condemned those who were under it to death for every transgreffion.
- Part 11. Having proved that believing Jews and Gentiles were pardoned, and interested in all the bleffings and privileges of the Gospel, through mere grace, St. Paul next shews the obligations laid upon them to a life of bolinefs and piety under the new difpensation; and upon this subject be adapts his discourse to the Gentile Christians, in the 6th chapter ; and in the 7th and part of the the be turns himself to the Jewish Christians; then from ver. 12. to the end of the 8th chapter be addreffes bimfelf upon the fame head to both Christian Jews and Gentiles; particularly giving them right notions of the fufferings to which they were exposed, and by which they might be deterred from the duties required in the Gofpel.
- Part III. gives right fentiments concerning the rejection of the Jews, which was matter of great moment to the due establishment of the Gentile converts; concerning which see particularly the full note on chap. ix.
- Part IV. Is taken up with a variety of practical instructions and exhortations; the grand design and use of all which is, to engage Christians to act in a manner worthy of that Gospel, the excellency whereof be had been illustrating.
- I will be of great advantage to the reader, to have this sketch of the Epistle ready in his thoughts : be cannot, bowever, enter entirely into the spirit of it, unless be enter into the spirit of a few in those times, and have some just notion of his utter aversion to the Gentiles; his valuing and tailing himself upon his relation to God and to Abraham, upon his law, and pompous worship, circumcifion, &c. as if the Jews were the only people in the world who had any manner of right to the favour of God. And it should be well noted, that St. Paul, in this Epifile, diffutes with the whole body of the Jews, without respect to any particular sect or party among them, and in opposition to the whole body of the Gentiles : for the grand proposition, or question in debate, is, " Are we Jews better than they Gentiles? See chap. iii. 9, 29. In confequence of this, we observe farther, that we cannot have clear conceptions of the argumentative, or controver/ial versial part of the Epistle, unless we are clear in this point, —that the justification for which the Apostle argues, is the right which we believing Gentiles have, through the favour and gift of God in Christ, to the bleffings, honours, and privileges of his evangelical kingdom in this world: Not so as thereby to have possed for the beavenly and eternal kingdom absolutely secured to us, but so as to be bleffed with the assure of pardon, the promises and hope of the eternal kingdom, and all proper light and means to prepare us for it, if we do not wickedly despise and abuse it. It is this notion of justification alone which corresponds to the above-mentioned general collective notion of Jews and to the end and design of the Epistle.

- We observe once more, that the whole Episite is to be taken in connection, or confidered as one continued discourse, and the sense of every part must be taken from the drift of the whole. Every fentence or verse is not to be regarded as a distinct mathematical proposition or theorem, or as a fentence in the book of Proverbs, whose sense is absolute, and independent of what goes before or comes after; but we must remember that every sentence, especially in the argumentative part, bears relation to, and is dependent upon the whole discourse, and cannot be understood, unles we understand the scope of the whole; and therefore the whole Epistle, or at least the eleven first chapters of it, ought to be read over at once, as the most closely connected piece.
- With respect to the Apostle's manner of writing, it may be proper to take this opportunity to remark, that it is fpirited, clear, and perfpicuous; for it will not be difficult to underfland him, if our minds are unprejudiced, and at liberty to attend to the fubject he is upon, and to the current fcriptural fenfe of the words that he uses : for he keeps very strictly to the standard of Scripture phrafeology. He takes great care to guard and explain every part of his fubject, in which he is particularly cautious and exact; fometimes writing notes upon a fentence liable to exception, and fometimes commenting upon a fingle word. He was fludious of a perspicuous brevity. Sce chap. v. 13, 14. He treats his countrymen the Jews with great caution and tendernefs; he bad a natural affection for them, and was very defirous of winning them over to the Gofpel. He knew their passions and prejudices were very strong for their own constitution ; therefore, in his debates with them, he avoids every thing har/h, introduces every kind and endearing fentiment, and is very nice in choosing foft and inoffensive expressions, so far as he honestly could; for he never flatters, or diffembles the truth. His transitions and advances to an ungrateful fubject are very dextrous and apposite, as chap. ii. 1-17. viii. 17. He often carries on a complicated defign, and while he is teaching one thing, gives us an opportunity of learning one or two more. So chap. xiii. 1-8. he teaches the duty of fubjects, and at the fame time instructs magistrates in their duty, and shews the true grounds of their authority. He is a nervous reasoner, and a close writer, who never loses sight of his subject, and who throws in every colour which may enlighten it. He writes under a deep and lively fense of the truth and importance of the Gofpel, as a man who clearly understands it, and in whose heart and affections it reigned far fuperior to all temporal confiderations. But concerning St. Paul's manner of writing, you will see more in the note on 2 Pet. iii. 16.

We hope that what has gone before will enable our readers to perufe this Epifle with greater profit. Nowever we may fuljoin, in the courfe of the annotations, a more particular detail of the contents of each part of it; while we refer those who are desirous of a more accurate analysis to Taylor's "Key to the Apostolic Writings," and his preface to the Epifile to the Romans, Locke's Synopsis, Michaelis's Introduction, p. 339. #### CHAP. I.

THE unbelieving Jews having violently opposed the Colpel becaufe it was preached to the uncircumcifed Gentiles, and because Jefus, whom the Christians called the Chrift, was not fuch a one as they expected ; the Apoftle, in the infeription of this epiftle, affirmed, that the Gofpel was preached to the Gentiles in fulfilment of God's promile made by the prophets in the Scriptures, ver. 1, 2.; and that Jefus, whom the apoftles called the Chrift, was, as to his flefh, fprung of the feed of David, ver. 3.; but as to his divine nature, he was with the greatest power of evidence, declared to be the Son of God by his refurrelion, ver. 4. And becaufe St. Paul was perfonally unknown to most of the Christians in Rome, he assured them that he was made an apostle by Christ himself, for the purpose of preaching the Gospel to the Gentiles, ver. 5.; of which class of men, most of the inhabitants of Rome were, ver. 6. He was therefore authorized to write this ktter to all the inhabitants of Rome .- So many particulars crowded into the infeription, has made it uncommonly long. But they are placed, with great judgment, in the very entrance, because they are the foundations on which the whole scheme of doctrine contained in the epistle is bailt.

Because it might seem strange, that St. Paul, the apostle eide Gentiles, had not hitherto visited Rome, the most noted Gentile city in the world, he affured the Romans that he had often purposed to come to them, but had litherto been hindered, ver. 13, 14 .- However, he was fill willing to preach the Gospel in Rome, ver. 15.; being neither afraid, nor ashamed, to preach it in that great and kamed city; because it reveals the powerful method which God has devifed for bettowing falvation on every one who believeth; on the Jew first, to whom it was to be first preached, and also on the Greek, ver. 16 .- In this account of the Gospel, the Apostle infinuated, that no Jew could be faved by the law of Moles, nor any Gentile by the law of nature. For, if the Jews could have been faved by the one haw, and the Greeks by the other, the Gofpel, inflead of being the power of God for falvation to every one who believeth, would have been a needlefs difpensation; and the apostle ought to have been ashamed of it, as altogether superfuous,

To prove that the Gospel is the power of God for falvation to every one who believeth, the apostle first observes, that therein the righterufness of God by faith is revealed : in the Gofpel, the righteoufnels which God will accept and reward, is revealed to be a righteoufnefs not of works, but of faith. And this being the only righteoufness of which finners are capable, the Gofpel which discovers its acceptablenefs to God, and the method in which it may be attained, is without doubt the power of God for falvation, to all who believe, ver. 17. Here an effential defect, both in the law of Mofes and in the law of nature, is tacitly infinuated. Neither the one law, nor the other reveals God's intention of accepting and rewarding any righteoufnefs, but that of perfect and immaculate obedience.-Secondly, To prove that the Gofpel alone is the power of God for falvation, the Apostle observes, that both in the law of nature, and the law of Moles, the wrath of God is revealed from heaven, &c.; that is, thefe laws, initead of granting pardon to finners, fubject them to punifhment, however penitent they may be; confequently, thefe laws are not the power of God for falvation, to any one. But the Gofpel. which promifes pardon and eternal life, is the effectual means of faving finners. In fhort, any certain hope of mercy which finners entertain must be derived from revelation alone, ver. 18. And as the apostle wrote this epistle to the Romans for the purpole of explaining and proving these important truths, the declaration of them, contained in verses 16, 17, 18. may be confidered as the proposition of the fubjects to be handled in this epiftle.

Accordingly, to fhew that no perfon living under the law of nature has any hope of falvation given him by that law, the Apoftle begins with proving, that, inftead of poffeiling that perfect holinefs, which is required by the law of nature, in order to falvation, all are guilty before God, and doomed by that law to punifhment. To illuftrate this propofition, St. Paul took the Greeks for an example, becaule, having carried the powers of reafon to the higheft pitch, their philofophy might be confidered as the perfection both of the light and of the law of nature; confequently, among them, if any where, all the knowledge of God, and the method of falvation, difcoverable by the light of nature, and all the purity of manners, which men can attain by their own powers, ought to have been found. thelefs, that people, fo intelligent in other matters, were in religion foolifh to the laft degree, and in morals debauched almost beyond belief. For, notwithstanding that the knowledge of the being and perfections of the one true God fubfifted among them in the most early ages, ver. 19 .- being understood by the works of creation, ver. 20.-their legiflators, philosophers, and priests, unrighteously holding the truth concerning God in confinement, did not glorify him as God, by difcovering him to the people in general, and making him the object of their worship: but, through their own foolifh reasonings, fancying polytheifm and idolatry more proper for the people in general than the worthip of the one true God, they themfelves at length loft the knowledge of God to fuch a degree, that their own heart was darkened, ver. 21.—Thus the wife men among the Greeks became fools in matters of religion, and were guilty of the greatest injustice both towards God and men, ver. 22 .- For by their public inflitutions, they changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image of corruptible man, and of birds, &c. which they held up to the people as the objects of worship. And by their own example, as well as by the laws which they enacted, they led the people to worthip these idols with the most impure and detestable rites, yer. 23.—For which crime, God permitted those pretended wife men, who had fo exceedingly diffeonoured him, to difbonour themfelves with the most brutish carnality; of which the apostle gives a particular description, ver. 24-26.; and observes, that those proud legislators and philosophers, who thought they had discovered the highest wisdom in their religious and political institutions, thus received in themfelves the recompense of their error, which was meet, ver. 27.—So that the abominable uncleannefs, which was avowedly practifed by the Greeks, and which was authorized by their public inftitutions, as well as by the example of their great men, was both the natural effect and the just punishment of that idolatry, which, in every state, was established as the national religion. -Farther, because the Grecian legislators did not approve of the true knowledge of God as fit for the people, the great men, as well as the generality of the people whom they deceived, loft all fense of right and wrong in their general behaviour towards one another, ver. 28 .- most of them being filled with all manner of injustice, fornication, wickedness, &c. ver. 29-31. Nay, although by the law of God, written on their hearts, they knew that those who commit fuch crimes are worthy of death, to fuch a degree did they carry their profligacy, that they not only committed these things themselves, but encouraged the people at large to commit them, by the pleafure with which they beheld their debaucheries in the temples, and their revellings on the feftivals of their gods, ver. 32.

Such is St. Paul's account of the manners of the Greeks :

from which it appears, that their boafted philosophy, notwithstanding it enabled them to form excellent plans of civil government whereby the people were infpired with the love of their country, and good laws for maintaining the peace of fociety, it proved utterly ineffectual for giving the legiflators the knowledge of falvation, and for leading them to eftablish a right public religion;-defects which entirely deftroyed any influence which their political institutions might otherwise have had, in aiding the people to maintain a proper moral conduct. In fhort, the vicious characters of the falfe gods whom the legislators held up to the people as objects of their worship, and the impure rites with which they appointed them to be worfhipp d, corrupted the morals of the people to fuch a degree, that the Greeks became the most debauched of mankind, and thereby loft all claim to the favour of God. But if this was the cafe with the most intelligent, most civilized, and most accomplished heathen nations, under the -tuition of their boafted philosophy, it will easily be admitted, that the light of nature, among the barbarous nations, could have no greater efficacy in leading them to the worfhip of the true God, and in giving them the knowledge of the true method of falvation. The most civilized heathen nations, therefore, equally with the most barbarous, having, under the guidance of the light of nature, loft the knowledge of God, and become utterly corrupted in their morals, it is evident, that none of them could have any hope of a tuture life from the law of nature, which condemns all to death without mercy, who do not give a finlefs obedience to its precepts. Wherefore, both for the knowledge of the method of falvation, and for falvation itfelf, the Greeks were obliged to have recourfe to the Gofpel, which teaches, that becaufe all have finned by breaking the law of God, God has appointed for their falvation, a righteoufnefs without law, that is, a righteoufnefs which does not confitt in immaculate obedience to any law whatever; - even the righteous fuels of faith; and at the fame time declares that God will accept and reward that kind of righteoufnefs through Chrift. Thefe inferences, indeed, the apoftle has not drawn in this part of his letter, because he intended to produce them, (chap. iii. 20-28.) as general conclusions concerning all mankind, after having proved the infufficiency of the law of Moles for justifying the Jews. Yet it was fit to mention them here, that the reader might have a complete view of the apoftle's argument.

I shall finish this illustration with the following remarks.

1. The picture which the apoftle has drawn of the manners of the Greeks, is by no means aggravated. It was given by the unerring infpiration of the Holy Ghoft. And we may add, that the intercourfe which he had with the philofophers, and more efpecially with his own difciple, Dionyfius

Dionyfus the Areopagite, enabled him to form a just judgment of the learning and religion of that celebrated people ; as his long refidence in Athens, Corinth, and other Greek cities, made him perfectly acquainted with their manners. But though his description is not exaggerated, we must remember that it does not extend to every individual. It is an image of the manners of the Greek nations in general.

2. My fecond remark is, that although the revelation of the wrath of God from heaven against all ungodlines and unrighteoulnels of men, mentioned by the apostle, Rom i. 18. certainly implies, that no finner can have any hope of falvation from the law of nature, it does not follow, that the pious heathens had no hope of falvation. The heathens in general believed their deities placable, and in that perfusion offered to them propitiatory facrifices, merpected to be pardoned and bleffed by them even in a fu'ure flate: nay, many of them believed they were to reanunate their bodies. But these hopes they did not dethe from the law or light of nature, but from the promife which God made to the first parents of mankind. For that promife being handed down by tradition to Noah and histons, they communicated the knowledge thereof, together with the use of facrifice, to all their descendants. So that the hope of pardon and immortality, which the pious heathens entertained, was the very hope which the Golpel has more clearly brought to light, and was derived from the fame fource, namely, from divine revelation. Withal, being agreeable to the natural wifhes of mankind, and the only remedy for their greatest fears, these circumfances contributed to preferve it in the world.-Since then the hope of pardon and of a future state, which the heathens entertained, was derived not from the light of nature, but from the primitive revelations, the Apottle's rationing in this chapter is clear and evident, and this conclution stands firm; namely, that the light and law of nature hold out no method in which a finner can be faved, and that it is the Gospel alone which has brought the important fecret to light, by explaining and enlarging the primitive revelations, and by teaching in the clearest manner, that God will accept men's faith for righteoufnels, and, at the judgment, reward it for the fake of Jefus Chrift, as if it were a righteousness which fulfilled the law of innocence.

3. My third remark is, that the defcription which the Apoille has given of the national manners of the Greeks, however disgraceful to human nature, being perfectly true, ments attention; because it is a complete confutation of these who contend, that natural reason has always been full to lead mankind to just notions in religion, and to a proper moral conduct. For after the weakness of human reason, in matters of religion and morality, has been to clearly demonstrated by experience in the case of the Greeks, who, of all mankind, were the most diftinguished for their intellectual endowments, the futile pretence of the fufficiency of the light of nature, fet up by modern infidels, for the purpose of rendering revelation needlefs, fhould be rejected with a contempt due to fo grofs a falsehood. And all who are acquainted with the actual state of the world under the guidance of the light of nature, ought thankfully to embrace the instruction contained in the Gospel, as the most effectual means of training ignorant finful creatures to holinefs and heaven; and flould humbly fubmit to the method of falvation by Chrift, therein revcaled, as of divine appointment, and as the only method in which finners can be faved.

Ver. 1. Paul, a fervant, &c.] From this to the fifteenth verfe we have the introduction to this epiftle, in which St. Paul afferts his commission as the apostle to the Gentiles; throws in fuch reflections concerning the Gofpel and our Lord, as were proper to arreft the attention of the Jews; and teftifies his fincere affection to the Christians at Rome, and his earnest defire to preach the Gospel among them. The first feven verses of this chapter are but one complete period, every member of it reprefenting to the mind of the devout reader fome august mystery and edifying moral of our holy religion. The original word  $\Delta cure religion is a bond$ fervant, or flave, who is the abfolute property of his mafter,. and bound to him for life. He terms himfelf a called or invited apostle, and therefore a true apostle, -as an invited guest is a true and proper guest. See on chap. viii. 23. Concerning his feparation to the Gofpel, as the judaizing teachers difputed St. Paul's claim to the apoftolical office, it is with great propriety that he afferts it in the very entrance of an epistle, in which he proposed an entire refutation of their principles. See Taylor, Locke, Calmet, and Blackwall.

Ver. 2. Which he had promifed afore, &c.] The Apoftle, it is likely, afferts this to infinuate a good idea of the Gofpelinto the mind of the Jews at first setting out, and to put them upon inquiring; for even an unbelieving Jew, if at all disposed to think, could not overlook or flightly regard. this fentiment. Taylor.

Ver. 3. According to the flefb] That is, with regard to. his human nature. Both the natures of our Saviour are mentioned in this and the following verfe. This too regards the Jew, and puts him in mind that Jefus, whom Paul preached, was of the royal ftock, whence they expected the Meffiah would fpring. See Taylor and Locke.

Ver. 4. With power] See on ver. 16. He who will read in the original what St. Paul fays, Ephef. i. 19, 20. concerning the power which God exerted in raifing Chrift from the dead, will hardly avoid thinking that he there fees St. Paul labouring for words to express the greatness. σf of it. The word declared does not exactly answer the original, nor is it perhaps eafy to find a word in English which perfectly answers to the Greek word spioling, in the fenfe the Apostle uses it here. The original word "OpiZeiv fignifies properly to bound, terminate, or circumfcribe; by which termination the figure of things fenfible is made,—and they are known to be of this or that fpecies, and fo diffinguished from others. Thus St. Paul takes Chrift's refurrection from the dead and entering into immortality to be the most eminent and characteristical mark whereby Chrift is certainly known, and as it were determined, to be the Son of God; and undoubtedly his refurrection amply rolled away all the reproach of his crofs, and intitled him to the honour of the first-born among many brethren. The phrafe according to the Spirit of holinefs, fays Mr. Locke, is here manifestly opposed to according to the fless in the foregoing verse, and so must mean his divine nature; unless this be understood, the antithesis is lost. Dr. Doddridge, however, and others think, that it appears little agreeable to the ftyle of Scripture in general, to call the divine nature of Christ the Spirit of bolinefs, and therefore they rather refer it to the operation of the Spirit of God, in the production of Chrift's body; by which means the opposition between the fielb and the Spirit will be preferved, the one referring to the materials acted upon, the other to the divine and miraculous agent. Compare Luke, i. 35. The fenfe of the verfe may be expressed thus: "But " determinately, and in the most convincing manner marked " out to be the Son of God, as to that fpinitual part in " him, which remained perfectly holy and fpotlefs under all temptations, by his being raifed from the dead to " univerfal dominiou."

Ver. 5. We have received] This is a modeft way of expression; the Apostle meaning himself by the word we. Grace or favour, and apofle ship, fome think mean the favour of being made an apoltle. Hence zzeis, grace, is put for the apoltolic office; ch. xii. 3. xv. 15. 1 Cor. iii. 10. Ephef. lii. 8. and in general grace or favour may fignify any benefit, office, or endowment, which is the gift or the effect of favour. But others would keep the claufes diffinct, " as it is certain, fay they, that Paul did receive grace to • fubdue his heart to the obedience of Chrift, and fit him " to the ministry of the Gospel, before he received his " apostolical commission, whenever we suppose that com-" million to be dated." Wells renders the next claufe, to the obedience of faith concerning his name among all the Gentiles. Dr. Heylin's translation, though rather paraphraftical, feems to express the apofile's meaning: that I may, for the glory of his name [2 Theff. i. 12.] reduce to the obedience of faith [or of the Gospel] fome among all nations.

Ver. 6, 7. The called of Jefus Chrift, &c.] Called of Jefus Chrift,-called to be faints,-are but different expressions for professors of Christianity. Any nation or people is called or invited of Jefus Chrift, called to be faints, who have in fact received the Gofpel, by what means foever it has been conveyed to them. In order to underftand the Apoftle aright in this first part of his introduction, all from the word Lord, in the middle of ver. 3. to the beginning of ver. 7. should be read as in a parenthesis. The attentive reader will observe with great pleasure what a variety of proper and important thoughts are fuggefted in thefe verfes; particularly the views which the Jewish prophets had given of the Gofpel,-the defcent of Christ from David,-the great doctrine of the refurrection and divinity of Chrift,—the fending of the Gofpel to the Gentiles,—the privileges of Chriftians, as the called and beloved of God, and the faith, obedience, and fanctity to which they are obliged by their profession. See Locke, Taylor, Doddridge, and Turretin.

Grace—and peace] Grace, the peculiar favour of God; and peace, or all manner of bleflings, temporal, fpiritual, and eternal, from God the Father This is the ufual way wherein the apoftles fpeak :- God the Father, - God our Father : nor do they often, in speaking of him, use the word Lord, as it implies the Jehovah, the proper name of God. In the Old Teftament, indeed, holy men generally faid the Lord our God; for they were then as it were fervants, whereas now they are fons; and fons fo well known to the Father, that they need not frequently mention his proper name. It is one and the fame peace, and one and the fame grace, which is from God and from Jefus Chrift. Our truft and prayer fixed on God, as he is the Father of Chrift; and on Chrift, as he prefents us to the Father. Bengelius.

Ver. 8. First, I thank, &c.] In the very entrance of this epiftle are the traces of all fpiritual affections; but of thankfulnefs above all, with the expression of which almost all St. Paul's epifiles begin. He here particularly thanks God, that what otherwise himfelf fhould have done, was done at Rome already. My God, expresses faith, hope, love, and confequently all true religion. The goodnefs and wildom of God are remarkable, in that he established the Christian faith in the chief cities, fuch as Jerufalem and Rome, whence it might be diffufed throughout the whole world. Bengelius.

Ver. 9. With my Spirit] "Not only with my body, " but with the whole bent, the greatest integrity and ar-" dour of my foul."

many ages his people nominally, could not be denied by the Christians; whereupon the former were apt to perfuide their convert Gentiles, that the Messiah was promiled and fent to the Jewish nation alone, and that the Gentiles could claim or have no benefit by him; or if they were to receive any benefit by the Mefliah, they were yet bound to observe the law of Moses, which was the way of worthip prefcribed by God to his people. This in feveral places very much shook the Gentile converts. St. Paul makes it his butinefs in this epiftle (as we have observed in the introduction) to prove that the bleffings of the Mefinh were intended for the Gentiles as well as the Jews; and that to make any one partaker of the benefits and privileges of the Gospel, there was nothing more required than to believe and obey it: and accordingly here, in the entrance of the epiftle, he wifnes to come to Rome; that, by imputing fome miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoft to tlem, they might be established in the true notion of Chrittianity, against all attempts of Jews, who would either exclude them from the privileges of it, or bring them under the law of Mofes. So where St. Paul exprefles his care that the Coloffians should be established in the faith, it is visible by the context that what he opposed was Judaifm. The Corinthians, who had enjoyed the prefence of St. Paul, abounded in spiritual gifts. See 1 Cor. i. 7. 11 1, &c. xiv. 1, &c. So did the Galatians likewife ; and indeed all those churches, which had enjoyed the prefence et any of the apostles, had peculiar advantages in this from the laying on of their hands; for it was the particular of the apostles to bestow miraculous gifts by this method (Acts, viii. 17, &c. xix. 6.). But as yet the Romans were greatly inferior to other churches in this ruped; for which reafon the Apostle, in the 12th chapter, mases 2 very beautiful mention of their fpiritual gifts. He therefore defires to impart fome, that they might be effa-Lithed; for by thefe the teftimony of Chrift was flrongly Columed among them. See Locke, Bengelius, and Box.

Ver. 12. That is, that I may be comforted] St. Paul, in the former verfe, had faid, that he defined to come among them, to globil for them. In these words that is, he explains, or as it were recals, what he had faid, that he might not form to think them not fufficiently infructed or eftablished in the faith; and therefore he turns the end of his coming Vol. 11.

to them, to their mutual rejoicing in one another's faith, when he and they fhould come to fee and know each other. This thought, fo full of refpect to his Chriftian friends at Rome, is fuggefted with great delicacy and addrefs; and it is reafonable to fuppofe that every new inftance, in which miraculous gifts were communicated by the laying on of hands of any of the apottles, would be a fource of new edification and comfort to thefe holy men, as being fo evident a token of the divine prefence with them, and a new and folemn feal fet to the commiffion which they had received. This verfe would be more properly tranflated, That is, that while I am among you, we may be comforted together by the mutual faith, &c. Sec Locke, Doddridge, Calmet, and Beaufobre and Lenfant.

Ver. 13. But was let] Hindered.

Ver. 14. I am a debtor] As the Gofpel was committed to his truft, he was a truftee, and fo a debtor to difpenfe it freely to all, as he fhould have opportunity, I Tim. i. II. I Theff. ii. 4. St. Paul includes the Romans under the term Greeks; for the Jews called all foreigners Greeks or Gentiles, as the Greeks and Romans called all foreigners barbarians; fo that this division comprises all nations. The laft claufe fhould be rendered, beth to the learned and the ignorant; for as the original word  $\sigma \sigma \rho \sigma$  often fignifies learned (fee I Cor. i. 20, &c.); confequently the other,  $dvon \tau \sigma$ ; muft fignify ignorant, or those whose underitandings had not been improved by cultivation. See Bengelius, and Beaufobre and Lenfant.

Ver. 15. I am ready, &c.] The Greek word  $\pi g \Im u_2 \Im$ not only expresses readine  $\mathcal{G}$ , but in some cases an experine  $\mathcal{G}$ of define. Gentile world had of the mercy of God, as they flood obnoxious to his wrath for their idolatry, and abominable wickednefs, which are defcribed at large, ver. 18-32. This was proper to convince and awaken the Gentile, and to engage his attention; for this was proof enough, even to the wifest philosopher, how defective and erroneous he was in the knowledge of divine things, and how ineffectual any thing that he had framed was to reform himfelf or the rest of mankind. But the Apostle has his eye too upon the Jew, and it is his defign to point this black defeription at his confcience. Nothing would enter more readily into the thoughts of the Jew than the corruption of the Gentile world, which he would immediately and ftrongly condemn, and fo would be duly prepared for the application in the next chapter : for what if his nation was not a whit better in their morals than the heathens? How could they, with any confcience or modefty, arrogate all the divine mercy to themfelves, or pretend that other men were unworthy of it, when they had done as much or more to forfeit it than others. See on chap. ii. 1. St. Paul calls the Gospel the power of God. The original word Divapus fignifies frequently a moral power; either, first, objectively, as the power of evidence and motives to effect and influence the mind, Mark, ix. 1. Acts, iv. 33. 1 Cor. i. 18. Secondly, fubjectively it fignifies capacity, virtue or good dispositions in the fubject acting, Matt. xxv. 15. Luke, i. 17. Acts, i. 8. Hence we may conclude, that the Gofpel is the power of God to falvation, either as it is the effect of his great love and goodness [his divine Power hath given unto us all things that pertain to life and godlinefs, 2 Pet. i. 3.], or as it is admirably adapted to enlighten our minds and fanctify our hearts, or both. There is a noble franknefs, as well as a very comprehensive sense, in the last words of this verfe ; to the Jew first, &c. by which St. Paul, on the one hand, ftrongly infinuates to the Jews their absolute need of the Gofpel in order to falvation; and on the other, while he declares to them that it was also to be preached to the Gentiles, he teaches the politest and greatest of these nations, to whom he might come as an ambaffador of Christ, both that their falvation also depended upon receiving it, and that the first offers of it were every where to be made to the defpifed Jews. See Doddridge.

Ver. 17. For therein is the righteoufness of God revealed, Sec.] The term Auziorian Or plainly fignifies here, and in feveral other passages of this epistle, not the estential righteoufnefs of God's nature, but the manner of becoming righteous which God has appointed and exhibited in the Golpel (compare chap. iii. 21, 22. x. 3. Philip. iii. 9. Matt, vi. 33.); and the phrase may perhaps have the same feule in many paffages of the Old Testament. See Ifai.

xlvi. 13. li. 5, 6, 8. lvi. 1. In this fense it feems better to render the original by justification; for rightcoufnefs, both in the fense and found, is too remote from justified. In those places where it fignifies moral rectitude in general, the word righteoufnefs properly answers the fense of the Greek word. The juffification of God revealed, in this verfe, is plainly in opposition to the wrath of God revealed in the next, and therefore justification must be understood in a fense opposite to wrath. Some read this clause, the justification of God by faith is revealed to faith; but Vorstius, and after him Mr. Locke, feem rightly to judge the fense to be, " that the rightcoufnefs of God is all through from one " end to the other, by faith; for the Golpel falvation is " indeed from first to last of faith on our part." By faith we are admitted into our prefent flate of grace and favour, chap. v. 2.; by faith we continue in it, chap. xi. 20.; by faith we duly improve it, Jude, ver. 20.; and the faithful are kept by the power of God, through faith unto falvation, 1 Pet. i. 5. But then a progretfion or increase is at the fame time implied; for this mode of fpeaking is applied to things meafurable or improveable, and denotes a fucceflion, accellion, or improvement; ix, from, fignifying the point whence the progress or increase begins; and is, to, fignify-ing the point to which it tends. Thus, first, in things measurable, Exod. xxvi. 28. The bar shall reach from end to end. Secondly, in things improveable, Pial. Ixxxiv. 7. They ga from firength to firength, that is, with a ftill greater degree of firength. Jer. ix. 3. They proceed from evil ta evil; that is to fay, grow worfe and worfe. 2 Cor. iii. 18. From glory to glory; that is, from one degree of glory to another : and fo here the falvation which God has provided the Gospel is fram faith to faith, or wholly of faith on our in part, by way of progrefs and improvement from the first faith to a still higher degree; fignifying the advances that we ought to make in this grand principle of our religion. And this agrees very well with the Apostle's quotation, Habak. ii. 4. the just foall live by his faith ;--- that is, he who believes, and improves his faith into a conftant principle of righteousness, and through faith continues to work righteoufnefs, fhall live ;- But if ye draw back, my foul fhall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them that draw back unto perdition,-having caft off their first faith,-but of them that believe, by a progressive faith, unto the faving of the foul, Heb. x. 38, 39. Mr. Locke thinks, that the defign of the quotation from Habakkuk is to prove, that, whoever are justified either before, without, or under the law of Mofes, faith alone. See Gal. iii. 11. Ver. 18. For]. "There is no other way of obtaining " life and falvation." Having laid down his propolition, the Apostle now enters upon the proof of it. His first argunent or under the Gospel, are justified not by works, but by

gument is, "The law condemns all men, as being under "in; none therefore are justified by the works of the "hw." This is treated of to chap. iii. 20. And hence he infers, "therefore justification is by faith." The wrath of Gad fignifies the vengeance of God, the destruction and punifhment which he will inflict upon finners. This is rerealed not only by the general light of nature, (if I can use the exprellion, when every thing good is from grace,) and by frequent and fignal interpretations of the divine providence, but likewife in the facred oracles, and particularly by that fame Gospel which reveals God's manner of justifying men. See Acts, xvii. 30, 31. chap. ii. 5. 2 Tim. i. 10. Ungedlinefs, feems to comprehend the atheilm, polytheifm, and idolatry of the heathen world; as unrighteoufnefs their other milcarriages and vicious lives; according to which they are diffinctly treated of by St. Paul in the following refes. The fame appropriation of these words may be oblerved in other parts of this epiftle. Of men, means of men of all nations, all men every where. Before, it was only to the children of Israel that obedience and transgrethon were by revelation declared and proposed, as terms of life and death. The word rendered hold, fignifies to rtain or bold fast; and then the Apostle's meaning will be their holding fast, or retaining, or knowing the truth in fpeculation, though they violate it in their lives. They are not wholly without the truth, but yet do not follow what they have of it; living contrary to what they do know, or neglecting to know what they might. This is evident fiom the next words, and from the fame reason of God's wrath, given chap. ii. 8. in these words, who do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness. See Locke, Bengelius, and Hammond.

For 19. Is maniful in them, &c.] Is maniful among them, for God hath manifuled it unto them. See the next verte, and chap. ii. 15.

Ver. 20. For the invifible things, &c.] For from the cretion of the world these things of him which are invisible, are (hing duly attended to) clearly seen by the things which are made; even his eternal power and divinity. Those invisible things of God, of which the Apostle here speaks, lie within the teach and discovery of men's reason and understanding; but yet they must exercise their faculties, and employ their minds about them: they are and can be discovered only if they be attentively confidered: and yet the whole must be accompanied by divine light and divine grace (which are offered to all) in order to the production of any genuine good. Bishop Warburton has a peculiar remark upon the lift words of this verse, and those in the next, wherein he observes, that the apostle evidently condemns the foolish policy of the Gentile fages, who when they knew God, yet glorified him not as God, by preaching him up to the people; but, carried away in the vanity of their imagination, by a mistaken principle of politics, that a vulgar or general knowledge of him would be injurious to fociety,-fhut up his glory in their MYSTERIES, and gave the people in exchange for an incorruptible God, an image made like corruptible man, &c. wherefore God, in punifhment for their fins, thus turning his truth into a lic, fuffered even their mysteries, which they erected (though on thefe wrong principles) for a school of virtue, to degenerate into an odious fink of vice and immorality ;-giving them up unto all uncleannefs and vile affections. That this was the Apostle's meaning, appears not only from the general tenor of the paffage, but from feveral particular expressions; as ver. 23. where he fpeaks of changing the glory of God to birds, beafts, and creeping things : for this was the peculiar fuperstition of Egypt, and Egypt was the first inventress of these mysteries. Again, he fays, They worfbipped and ferved the creature more than the Creator, ver. 25. This was strictly true with regard to the MYSTERIES : the CREATOR was there acknowledged by a fmall and felect number of the participants; but the general and folemn worfhip in these celebrations was to their natural idols. See Div. Leg. b. ii. fect. 4. and Pearfon on the Creed, Art. 1.

Ver. 21. Neither were thankful] It is worthy our obfervation, that gratitude to God is here put for the whole of religion; and as no principle can be nobler, fo none can be ftronger or more extensive. Mr. Locke illustrates the next claufe by the ftupid folly and vanity of their idolatry. See 2 Kings, xvii. 15-17. Acts, xiv. 15. But the word Siatoyiouois, imaginations, or rather reasonings, feems more properly to refer to the fophiftry of the philosophers. They did violence to their judgments, and became void of judgment: they loft their understanding, because they would not follow its direction. They put the candle of the Lord under a bushel, and the candle went out. The cafe is unhappily the fame under any, even the clearest dispensation. The word 2 ouveros, rendered fooligh, fignifies inconfiderate, in the highest and most culpable degree, as opposed to a fincere rile of what means and knowledge of God they had. Their heart was inconfiderate ; that is, they made no ferious, confcientious use of their understanding. See Locke, Sykes's Connection, chap. xiv. p. 364. and Cudworth's Intellectual System, ch. iv. fect.

Ver. 23. And changed the glory] As their folly was evident in a variety of other vices, in which the philofophers of heathen nations joined with the people in general, fo, particularly, in the early and almost universal prevalence of idolatry among them; by which they changed the glory of the immortal, incorruptible, and eternal God, even all the majeflic fplendours in which he fluines forth through earth and heaven, into the reprefenting image of mortal and corruptible man; which, how elegantly foever it might be traced, was a great and infufferable degradation, had their folly proceeded no farther : but, not content with this, they fet up as an emblem of Deity, and objects of worthip, brutes, and their images, birds, and four-footed animals, and even fuch vile reptiles as beetles, and various kinds of ferpents which creep on the duft. See Acts, xxviii. 6. It is a curious fpeculation, and has employed the thoughts and pens of many, what could be the original of animal worship, - of a worship fo degrading as that referred to in the prefent verfe, and which, though prevailing in almost all nations of the earth, was yet in a great measure peculiar to the Egyptians. Bifhop Warburton urges, and with great fhew of reason, in his very learned discourse on the ancient hieroglyphics, that fymbolic writing [through the univerfal corruption of mankind] was the origin of animal worfhip: for, fays he, in those improved hieroglyphics called fymbols, in which it is confessed the ancient Egyptian learning was contained, the lefs obvious properties of animals occasioned their becoming marks of analogical adaption for very different ideas, whether of fubflances or modes; which plainly intimates that phyfical knowledge had been long cultivated : now thefe jymbols I hold to be the original of animal worthip: for, first, this kind of idolatry was peculiar to the Egyptian fuperflition, and almost unknown to all the casts of paganism, but such as were evidently copied from that original. Secondly, The Egyptians not only worfhipped animals but plants, and, in a word, every kind of being which had qualities remarkable, fingular, and efficacious, becaufe all thefe had found their place in fymbolic writing. Thirdly, Befides the adoration of almost every thing existing, the Egyptians worfhipped a thousand chimeras of their own creation, fome with human bodies, and the head or feet of brutes, &c. For befides the fimpler methods in hieroglyphic writing of expressing their hero-gods by an entire plant or animal, there were two others, which the more circumftantial hiftory of thefe idol deities brought in ufe. Thus when the fubject was only one fingle quality of a god or hero, the human fhape was only partially deformed, as with the head of a dog, &c. But where the fubject required a fuller catalogue of the hero's virtues, there they employed an affemblage of the feveral parts of various animals, each of which, in hieroglyphic writing, was fignificative of a diffinct property; in which affemblage that animal more particularly reprefentative of the god was most confpicuous. Fourthly, That animal which was worshipped in one city, was facrificed in another. Thus at Memphis they adored the ox, at Thebes the ram; yet in one place each of these animals was used in facrifice. The reafon of this can only be, that at Memphis the ox was in hieroglyphical learning the fymbol of fome deity, and at Thebes the ram: for what elfe can be faid for the original of fo fantaffical a diversity in reprefentative idol-deities within a kingdom of one national religion? Fifthly, Brute-worthip was at first altogether objective to their hero-gods, of whom animals were but the reprefentatives. This is feen from the rank they hold on ancient monuments, from the unvaried worfhip of fome few of them, - as the Apis, which still continued to be worflipped as the, reprefentative of Ofiris;-and from the tertimony of Herodotus, who fays, " That when the " Egyptians addreffed the facred animal, their devotions " were paid to that God to whom the beaft belonged." Sixthly, 'I o make the matter plainer, it may be obferved, that the most early brute-worfaip in Egypt was not an adoration of the living animal, but only of its picture or image. Were indeed the original of brute-worthip any other than what is here supposed, the living animal mult have been first worthipped, and the image of it would have been only an attendant fuperflition. Thefe confiderations are fufficient to fhew, that bieroglaphies were the origin of brute-worfhip, which was confequently begun in Egypt, and was propagated from thence. There the method of the learned was to record the hiltory of their hero-gods in improved heroglyphics, which gave birth to brute worfbip. For the characters of this kind of writing, being the figures of animals, which flood for marks of their elementary gods, and principally of their kerves, foon made their hierog'yphies facred. And this in a great fpace of time, introduced a fymbolie worfhip of their gods under hieroglyphic figures. But the people prefently forgot the fymbol or relation, and depraved this superstition still farther by a direct worfhip; till at length the animals themfelves, whofe figures there hieroglyphic marks reprefented, became the objects of religious adoration. Which fpecies of idolatry, by the credit and commerce of the Egyptians, and their carriers the Phœnicians, in course of time spread amongst other nations. See Div. Leg. b. iv. fect. 4. p. 176.

Ver. 24. Wherefore God alfo gave them up] There are three degrees of ungodinefs and of punifhment defcribed in these verses: the first in ver. 21. to 24.; the second in ver. 25. to 27.; the third in the 28th and following verses. The.

We have the fame thought again, ver. 27. and define phrafe; where we render it in themfelves. The original word 'Ev, in the Helleniftic Greek, as the critics tell us, has the force of all prepofitions, and here may be ttanilated from, or by. See Bengelius and Bos.

For 25 Who charged the truth of God into a lie] Elfner this creat pains to thew, that the truth of God, here fignets with the really was; and a lie, a falle reprefentation. It is well known that idols are often called lies. See Ifai. who ac, &c. "They changed the truth of God, the "true dedrine of his nature, and the genuine inftitutions "of his worthip, into a lie, into abominable idolatries, "founded on the falleft reprefentations of God, and often "typetid by a train of artful forgeries." See Elfner's Utilitations, vol ii. p. 11.

For 16. Into that which is against nature] Many hortike automions of this may be feen in Bos's Exercitations of the place.

Fr. 27 And likewife alfo the men] How just the h We reflections are, and how pertinently he has placed the coll abominable abufe of human nature at the head of the vices into which the heathen world were fallen, buche icen, if we observe, that Cicero,-the greatest phihigher in Rome,-a little before the Gospel was Fuched, - in his book concerning the Nature of the Gods, (where you will find a thousand idke fentiments upon that filleft,) introduces, without any mark of difapprobation, Cette, a man of the first rank and genius, freely and findially owning to other Romans of the fame quality, this worte than beaftiy vice as practifed by himfelt; and quoting the authority of ancient philosophers in Mulcation of it. See lib. i. fect. 28. Nay, and do we rot even find the most elegant and correct both of the Geek and Roman poets, avowing this vice, and even celebrating the objects of their abominable affection?— Indeed it is well known, that this most deteftable vice was long and generally practited among the heathens by all forts of men, philosophers and others: whence we may conclude, that the Apottle has done justice to the Gentile world in the other instances that he gives of their corruption. Error is used also for idolatry, 2 Pet. ii. 18. See Calmet and Bos.

Ver. 28. And, even as they did not like to retain God, &c.1 The word  $\Delta c_{\mu} \mu \alpha \zeta \omega$ , which we render like, fignifies to fearch or explore; as goldimiths try metal, to diffinguish the good from the counterfeit. I Theff. v. 21. 1 Pet. i. 7. In opposition to this, the phrase adding wir, which we render a reprodute mind, Mr. Locke very ingeniously obferves, must fignify an unfearching injudicious mind; for St. Paul often ules compounds and derivatives, in the fense wherein a little before he used the primitive words, though a little varying from the precife Greek idiom; an example whereof we have in this very word a Sorius; 2 Cor. xiii. where, having, ver. 3. uled the Greek word doman for a proof of his million by fupernatural gifts, he ules the contrary word adding (), for one who was deftitute of fuch a proof. So here he tells the Romans, that the Gentiles not exerciting their minds to fearch out the truth, and form their judgments right, God left them to an unfearching injudicious mind. The words rendered, In their knowledge, is in graden, would be rendered more properly, with acknowledgment : for that the Gentiles were not wholly without the knowledge of God in the world, St. Paul tells us in this very chapter. But they did not acknowledge him as they ought : they did not fo improve their knowledge, as to acknowledge or honour him as they ought. This verse feems in other words to express the fame as ver. 21. The last words are an instance of the figure called meisfis; for they imply those things which are make inexpedient and enormous; fuch as are mentioned in the next verfes. The reader will find in Wifd. xiv. 11, &c. a difcourfe like this of St. Paul, wherein idolatry is fet forth as the fource of men's greateft crimes and profligacies. Mr. Locke thinks that the copulative and, at the beginning of this verfe, joins it to the 25th, and that the intermediate verses should be read in a parenthesis: but it is eafy to fee how the thread of the Apollle's difcourfe is carried on, without supposing any parenthesis .--- Ver. 23. the heathen diffeonoured God, by reprefenting him under the images

Ver. 25. they changed the true nature of God into a lie : And ver. 26, 27. he left them to change their nature into fomething worse than brutal. Laftly, ver. 28. they did not exercise their minds in fearching and inquiring, that they might retain the knowledge of God, and reject the falfe notions of men; and therefore God gave them up to an unthinking, unfearching, flupid mind. They would not use their reason, through the divine light and grace offered to them, in the knowledge and worfhip of God; and they acted as if they had no reason in the manner of their living among men. And in the fame way, all corruption of true religion is, and ever will be in proportion attended with corrupt and vicious practices. See Hammond, Locke, and Bos.

Ver. 29. Wickednefs] The original word fignifies doing mifchief: that rendered malicioufnefs denotes a malicious temper; and that rendered malignity, a cuftom of repeating their malice frequently. Unrighteoufnefs or injuffice ftands first in this black catalogue, unmercifulnefs last. The whole enumeration contains nine particulars relating to the affections, two to conversation, three respecting God, themselves, and their neighbour; two to the transacting of outward affairs, and fix to the various relations in which they stood. See Bengelius, and Calmet.

Ver. 30. Haters of God] Difcontented with his government, and difaffected to his rule, as a righteous and holy Being who could not but be highly difpleafed with their abominations. The original word 'YGcisas, rendered despiteful, would be more properly rendered vislent or overbearing in their behaviour to each other. It properly exprefles the character of a man who is refolved to gratify his own appetites and paffions, and to purfue what he apprehends his own interest, right or wrong; without at all regarding those inconveniencies or fufferings which he may thereby bring upon himfelf. Inventors of evil things, means tuch as piqued themfelves on making new difcoveries in the arts of fenfuality or of milchief; who found out new pleasures, new ways of gain, and new arts of hurting their fellow-creatures, particularly in war. See Bengelius, Calmet, and Mintert.

Ver. 31. Without underflanding] Without confideration, "Aau/itze. See on ver. 21.—Covenant-breakers: it is well known that the Romans, as a nation, from the very beginning of their commonwealth, never made any feruple of vacating altogether the most folemn engagement, if they did not like it; though made by their fupreme magistrate, in the name of the whole people. They only gave up the general who had made it, and then fupposed themfelves to be at full liberty. The custom of exposing their own new-born children to perifh by cold, hunger, or wild beafts, which fo generally prevailed in the heathen world, particularly among the Greeks and Romans, was an amazing proof of their being without natural affection: as was also that of killing their aged parents: for the Greek word  $d_{scigyn}$  may include the absence both of parental and filial affection. See Bengelius, and Doddridge.

Ver. 32. Who knowing the judgment of God, &c.] It feems here to be ftrongly implied, that to look with complacency on the vices of others is one of the laft degrees of degeneracy. A man may be hurried by his pailions to do the thing he hates; but he who has pleafure in thofe that do evil, loves wickednefs for wickednefs' fake. And hereby he encourages them in fin, and heaps the guilt of others upon his own. See the following Inferences, Locke, Mill, Erafmus, Doddridge, and Hallet's Introduction to J. Pearce on the Hebrews, p. 22.

Inferences.—From the foregoing verfes we have a long catalogue of the blackeft fins which human nature, in its higheft depravation, is capable of committing; and that fo perfect, that there feems to be no fin imaginable but what may be reduced to and comprifed under fome of the fins here fpecified. In fhort, we have an abridgement of the lives and practices of the whole heathen world; that is, of all the bafenefs to which both the corruption of nature, and the inftigation of the devil, could for fo many ages bring the fons of men.

And yet, full and comprehensive as this catalogue of fin feems to be, it is but of fin under a limitation : an univerfality of fin under a certain kind; that is, of all fins of direct and perfonal commission. And is not this, it may well be aiked, a fufficient comprehension of all? Is not a man's perfon the compafs of his actions ? Or can he operate farther than he exifts ?-Yes, the Apoftle tells us, in fome fenfe he may; as he may not only commit fuch and fuch fins kimfelf, but also take pleafure in others who commit them. This is indeed the fartheft that human depravity can reach; the higheft point of malicioufnefs to which the debauched powers of man's mind can afcend. For furely that fin, which exceeds the horrible lift before us, must needs be such a one, that it must nonplus the devil himfelf to proceed farther. It is the very extremity, the concluding period of fin, the laft finishing stroke of the devil's image drawn upon the human foul.

The fende of St. Paul's words, in ver. 32. naturally refolves itfelf into this plain proposition: "That the guilt "arifing from man's delighting or taking pleafure in the "fins of others, (or in other men for their fins, which is "all one,) is greater than he can possibly contract by a "commission of the fame fins in his own perfon:" and this for the following reasons:

1. There is no natural motive to induce or tempt a man that they who commit such things are worthy pleasure in them that do them. of death, not only do the same, but * have min to this mode of finning; and it is a moft certain truth, that the lefs the temptation is, the greater the fin; for in every fin, by how much more free the will is in its choice, by io much is the act more finful. If the object be catternely pleafing, and apt to gratify it, there, though the will has full the power of refufal, yet it is not without forme difficulty where grace does not fully reign; on which account it is that men are fo ftrongly incited to and to hardly diverted from the practice of vice; namely, becaule the femfual appetite arifing from it is ftill importuning and drawing them to it.

"But whence (it may be asked) fprings this pleafure? " Is it not from the gratification of fome defire founded "in nature?" It is indeed very often an irregular gratification; yet still the foundation of it is, and must be, femething natural. So that the whole amounts to this; that the naturalises of a defire, is the caufe that the gratifeation of it is pleafure, and pleafure importunes the will, and to renders a refulal or forbearance difficult, except to the genuine believer. Thus drunkennefs is an irregular laistiction to the appetite of thirft; uncleannels an unlawini gratification of another appetite, and covetoufnefs aboundeds purfuit of the principle of felf-fecurity. So that all these are founded in some natural defire, and therefore pleasurable, and on that account capable of foliciting and enticing the will. In a word, there is hardly any one vice or fin, of direct and perfonal commission, but what is an abule of one of those two grand natural principles;-either that which inclines a man to preferve him-M or that which inclines him to pleafe bimfelf.

But what natural principle, faculty, or defire, either of pleafure or prefervation, can be gratified by another man's puriant of vice? It is evident that all the pleafure which retardly can be received from a vicious action, can immediately affect none but him who perpetrates it, and no man can feel by another man's fenfes. So that the delight which a man takes from another's fin, can be only a furaffic, preternatural complacency, arifing from that of which he has really no feeling : it is properly a love of tice as fuch; a delighting in iniquity for its own fake; and it is a direct imitation, or rather exemplification of the malice of that evil fpirit, who delights in feeling those fins committed, of which the very condition of his nature tenders him incapable.

If a man plays the thief, as Solomon remarks, and fleals to jet if the hunger; though it cannot excufe the fact, yet it tometimes extenuates the guilt: we confider the ftrong impute of appetite, we confider the frailty of human mature; and we cannot but pity the perfon, while we abbor the crime: it being like the cafe of one seady to drink peilen, rather than die with thirft.

Eutwhen a man shall, with a sober, fedate, diabolical inceur, enjoy himself in the fight of his neighbour's filme, and secretly hug himself upon the ruins of a broker's virtue, and the dishonours of his reason, can ke pead the infligation of any appetite in nature, inclining him to this?-this is impossible, and beyond a pretence. To what caufe then can we affign this monftrous disposition? All that can be faid in this case is, that nature proceeds by quite another method,-having given men füch and fuch appetites, and allotted to each their respective enjoyments,-the appetite and the pleasure still cohabiting in the fame fubject,-the devil, and long cuftom of finning, have, in the prefent inftance, superinduced upon the foul, new, unnatural, and absurd defires, which have no real object; which relifh things not at all defirable; but, like the diftemper of the foul, feed only on filth and corruption, and give a man both the devil's nature, and the devil's delight; who has no other joy or happinefs, but to diffionour his Maker, and to deftroy his fellow-creatures ;--- to corrupt them here, and to torment them hereafter. In fine, there is as much difference between the pleafure that a man takes in his own fins, and that which he takes in other men's, as there is between the wickednefs of a man, and the wickednefs of a devil.

2. A fecond reation why a conduct like this is attended with fuch an extraordinary guilt, arifes from the unlimited nature of this mode of finning; for hereby a man contracts a kind of univerfal guilt, and as it were fins over the fins of all other men. So that while the act is exclusively theirs, the guilt is equally his. Confider any man as to his perfonal powers, and opportunities of finning,—at the greateft they muft flill be limited by the measure of his actings and the term of his duration. His active powers are but weak, and his continuance in the world but fhort : fo that nature is not fufficient to keep pace with his corruptions by anfwering defire with proportionable practice.,...

To initance only in those two grand extravagancies of luft and drunkenness; let a man be never to general and licentious in his debaucheries, yet age will in time chill the heats of appetite, and the impure flame will either die of itself, or confume the body which harbours it. Let a man be never to infatiable in drinking, he cannot be fuch a fwine as to be always pouring in; but he will, in the compass of years, drown his health and his ftrength in his own belly; and, after all his drunken trophies, at length drink down himfelf too; an event which certainly will and mult put an end to the debauch.

But this collateral mode of finning, which we have been attempting to delineate, is neither confined to place, nor weakened by age. The bed-ridden, the gouty, the lethargie, all may, on this account, equal the activity of the ftrongeft, and the fpeed of the most impetuous finner. Such a one may take his brother by the throat, and act the murderer, even while he can neither ftir a hand, nor lift a foot; and may invade his neighbour's bed, even while weaknefs has tied him down to his own. He may fin over all the adulteries and debaucheries, all the frauds and oppreffions of the whole neighbourhood, and break every command of God's law by proxy :-- and (ns a learned divine emphatically concludes) well were it for him, if he could be damned by proxy too.-- A man, by delight C H A P. II. They that fin, though they condemn it in others, cannot excufe themfelves, and much lefs efcape the judgment of God, whether they be Jews or Gentiles. The Gentiles cannot efcape, nor yet the Jews, when their circumcifion fhall not profit, if they keep not the law.

delight and fancy, may grafp in the fins of all countries and ages, and, by an inward liking of them, communicate in their guilt; he may take a range all the world over, draw in all that wide circumference of vice, and centre it in his own polluted breaft. So that hereby there is a kind of transfmigration of fins, much like that which Pythagoras held of fouls; fuch a one, as makes a man not only (according to the Apossile's phrase) a partaker of other inen's fins, but alfo a deriver of the whole aggravated guilt of them to himfelf;—yet ftill fo, as to leave the actual perpetrator as full of guilt as he was before !

Hence then we fee the infinitely fruitful and productive power of this mode of finning; how it can increase and multiply beyond all measures of actual commission; how vaftly it fwells the finner's account in an inftant! So that a man shall, out of all the various villainies acted round about him, extract one mighty guilt, and adopt it for himfelf, and thus become chargeable before God, the judge of hearts, and accountable for a world of fin, without a figure.

3. The third and laft reafon that we fhall offer of the extrevelinary guilt attending this peculiar vice, arifes from the foul's preparation and passage to such a disposition, as it prefuppofes and includes in it the guilt of many preceding fins. A man mult have paffed through many periods of fin before he can arrive at it; for it is in a manner the very quinteffence and fublimation of vice, by which, as in fpirituous liquors, the malignity of many ingredients is contracted into a little compass, but with a greater advantage of strength by fuch a contraction. In a word, it is the wickedness of a whole life discharging all its defilements into one common quality, as into a great fink of turpitude; fo that nothing can be fo properly, or fignificantly called the very finfulnefs of fin as this. No wonder, therefore, if, containing in its bowels the guilt of fo many years, it stands here eternally stigmatized by the Apostle, as a temper of mind rendering men fo detestably bad, that Satan himfelf, the great enemy of mankind, is neither able nor defires to make them worfe. What can or need be faid more to awaken the abhorrence of every ferious reader against it !---It is indeed a condition not to be thought of by any perfon ferious enough to weigh and confider confequences, without the utmost horror. Happy they who truly fear and love God; for fuch will not only be kept from it, but from those eafily befetting fins which lead to this perfection of iniquity!

for wherein thou judgest another thon condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest does the fame things.

2 But we are fure that <sup>b</sup> the judgment of God is according to truth against them which commit fuch things.

1. With an account of the author. Paul a fervant of Jefus Chrift, once an envenomed perfecutor, but now called to be an Apofile, and glorying in this honourable name; feparated unto the Gofpel of God; to that delightful and happy work of preaching the glad tidings of falvation through a dying Redeemer; fignally diftinguithed by the Spirit's call, qualified by the working of his mighty power, and folemnly dedicated and devoted to this fervice.

2. The Apostle no fooner mentions the Gospel of God, than his heart fires at the views of its glory and excellence. The wondrous fcheme had been the burden of the prophetic word from the beginning, where various hints of it had been given, and promifes made of a more clear revelation of the divine mind and will which might be expected in the fulnels of time. The grand fubject of this Gospel is Jefus Chrift, the Meffiah, the anointed Saviour, and our Lord; the object of our faith and worfflip, and the King to whom we owe all duty and allegiance; who, in his human nature, was made of the feed of David according to the fleft, as had been foretold (Pf. cxxxii. 11.), and as to his divine nature, he was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holinefs by the re-furrection from the dead. As the eternal Son of God, he possessed the fame divine nature and perfections with the Father, they being one in the Spirit of holinefs, in the effence of the undivided Godhead; a demonstration of which appeared, when, by the exertion of his own power, through the operation of the holy Spirit, he raifed his body from the grave; fo that he is God and man in one Chrift.

3. From this rifen Saviour he profefles to have received, together with his brethren, grace and apyllyfip, both the high honour of that office, and ability to difeharge it to the glory of God; for obedience to the faith among all nations for his name; this being the great end of their ministry, to bring all men, both Jews and Gentiles, to the faith of the Gofpel, and that holy obedience which flows from it, by which the name of Jefus should be to eternity exalted. Note; As obedience to God's law is the great fruit of faith, fo is faith itfelf a most eminent part of obedience, when confidered as an act of fubmission to the righteoufness of God.

Note; (1.) The higheft advanced in faith and grace have need of farther eftablishment. (2.) Mutual communications of the dealings of God with our fouls greatly tend both to our comfort and eftablishment in the faith.

4. He informs them that he had long meditated a vifit to them, though hitherto he had been providentially hindered by the difficulties that he had to encounter, and the engagements which lay upon him; being earneftly defirous to have fome fruit among them, even as among other Gentiles; that he might fee his ministry attended with the fame bleffed effects, as in fo many other places. And in thefe his labours he looked upon himfelf as a debtor bath to the Greeks and to the Barbarians; his call of God to the office of apoftlefhip, and the qualifications that he was endued with, obliged him to be faithful to his truft : and as the deepeft adepts in Grecian literature were, refpecting the way of falvation, as far removed from the truth as the molt unpolifhed barbarian, he endeavoured to fuit his difcourfes to both, that the wife men of this world might become wife unto falvation through the Gofpel word, and the weaker and more unlearned be fed with the fincere milk of heavenly truth. Note; (1.) All our abilities and gifts of nature, providence, or grace, are lent us of the Lord, and to be accounted for to him, as being his debtors for them. (2.) We must fuit our discourses to our auditory; and though the matter be the fame, the manner should be varied, to give every man his portion in due feafon.

5. He profess the alacrity and cheerfulness wherewith he looks towards Rome, amid all the dangers that he might expect to encounter there, ready to preach the Gospel in the most public manner, and fearless of any confequences from the opposition of the many or the mighty. The ministers of grace should thus be bold as lions in the cause of truth, nor fear the faces of men.

3dly, The apolle having experienced the power of the Gofpel on his own foul, fo far was he from being afhimed of the reproach of the crofs, which to the Jews was a flumbling-bock, and to the Greeks foolifhnefs, that he gloried in the honour of being fent to publifh to finall and great the glad tidings of falvation through a crucified Jefus; and he gives his reafons for fo doing.

Because the Gospel which he preached was the power of God unto falvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew  $j_1$ ,  $j_1$ and alfo to the Greek; this being the great mean which God is pleased to make use of, and through the Spirit's working comes with demonstration to the funner's heart; and it was fent to the Jews first, and then more generally to the Gentile world, that they might believe the divine report, and by faith embrace and lay hold of the hope of eternal life revealed in the Gospel; for therein is the right confirs of God revealed from faith to faith, being wholly of faith, exclusive of all works and duties of our own (fee 2 Cor. iii. 18.), or from the doctrine of faith in the word, to the grace of faith in the heart; or rather from one degree of faith to another; as it is written, in the Old Teftament, which exactly corresponds in doctrine with the New, the just or justified man, fball live by faith; hereby he is brought into, and continues in, a flate of fpiritual life; fo that fin has no more dominion over him.

2.1 Because without this method of divine grace every human creature must lie down under eternal wrath and dulpair : for the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodlinefs and unrighteoufnefs of men, who hold the truth in unrighteoufnefs; God's word denounces vengeance on every transgreffor; his judgments past have often fearfully fpoken his difpleafure against fin; and the whole world are found guilty before him, fince all have finned in oppolition to their better knowledge, whether Jews, who enjoyed the light of revelation; or Gentiles, whom God left without witnefs, giving them fufficient traditionary notices of his being, perfections, and attributes, which the visible objects around them ferved to explain, fo as to leave them without excufe in their idolatry and difobedience. Note; (1.) Every finner at God's bar will ftand felfcondemned; he will be made to own that he knew better, and did worfe. (2.) Fearful is the wrath revealed against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men : if it once feize on the finner, it will burn, and never can be quenched. (3.) How highly flould we value, and how eagerly embrace that glorious Gofpel, which affords shelter from those terrible blasts of the divine vengeance !

4thly, The deplorable flate of guilt in which the Gentile world lay is pathetically defcribed, and the judgment of God against them therefore evidently appears to be the most righteous.

1. They had, though not the light of revelation, yet fuch notices of God's being and attributes, as left them inexcufable. Becaufe that which may be known of God is manifest in them, or among them; for God bath shewed it unto them, by the traditionary notices delivered down from the beginning, and by the works of creation and providence, which confirm and evidence the truth of the being and glory of the eternal Jehovah; whole invisible things, his divine perfections, his eternal power and Godhead, his felf-existence, incorporeal nature, infinite wildom and goodnefs, are clearly feen, being understood by the things that are made: the intellectual faculties contemplating the visible objects, and man himfelf (xliois x00µ8,) the most remarkable creature upon earth, might from the creation of the world, through the fecret influences of divine grace, receive fufficient confirmation of what God had shewed unto men concerning himfelf.

2. They notwithstanding fell into the groffest and most inexcusable idolatry. When they knew God, had some notions of his being and attributes, and might have obtained clearer discoveries had they attended to the means of instruction which he afforded them; they glorified him not as God, neither in their hearts, their worship, nor their conduct, not regarding and treating him fuitably to his nature and perfections; neither were thankful, infenfible to the bleffings of his providence, and imputing to fecond caufes all the mercies which they received from the first. Hence they became vain in their own imaginations, indulging their fancies, and, proudly reafoning about matters which were too high for them, the philosophers fet up their various fystems, and in their contests and disputations for their own opinions erred alike from the truth; and their foolifb heart was darkened, their boafted wildom became folly, the corruption of their nature blinded their understanding, and, in the midft of the higheft pretentions to fcience, they funk into the most fatal depths of ignorance and error; profeffing themselves to be wife, puffed up with the conceit of their vait attainments, they became fools, perfect idiots in the most obvious matters refpecting the divine Being and worthip; and, instead of a Spirit immortal, invisible, eternal, they changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beafts, and creeping things; fo flockingly debafing his dignity; fo horridly infatuated in their wild imaginations; changing the truth of God into a lie, ascribing to idols the honour due to Jehovah; making fuch falfe reprefentations of him, as if he were corporeal; and worfhipping and ferving the creature more than the Creator, (waga,) above, befides, or contrary to him. Though they acknowledged a fupreme Numen, their worship was chiefly directed to their inferior deities; and all the fervices which they paid to their idols were the greatest dishonour to God, and reflected most highly upon his being and perfections, who is bleffed for ever. Amen ! He is infinitely and neceffarily bleffed and glorious in himfelf, the only author of bleffednefs to all his creatures, and the alone worthy object of their worfhip and adoration; to whom may it be for ever rendered and afcribed !

3. In just judgment upon them for fuch abominable idolatry, and direct opposition to the notices that he had given them concerning himfelf, he gave them up; abandoned them to their own heart's lufts; which, when his reftraining grace was withdrawn, hurried them headlong into the foulest and most unnatural acts of uncleanness, the very mention of which should make us shudder with horror. To commit fuch uncleannefs with greedinefs was at once the filling up of the measure of their iniquities, and the heavy and deferved punishment inflicted for their idolatry, the recompence of their error which was meet. And as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, but quenched the gift that he had bestowed, and acted in opposition to the knowledge which he had vouchfafed to them, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, rejected them with abhorrence, and left them to the blindnefs, hardnefs, and malignity of their fallen hearts, to do those things which are not convenient, detestable to God, dishonourable to themselves, and the confequences of which must be eternally ruinous, being filled with

with all unrighteoufnefs. And the dreadful catalogue of fins here given, was not merely applicable to the more ignorast and unrefined part of the Gentile world, but was netorioully true of their wifest philosophers and their most fand moralifis; who knowing the judgment of God, and having fufficient light in their confciences to difcover, that they which commit fuch things are worthy of death, as tranfgrefiors against the Majesty on high ;-yet fo enflaved were they by their vile affections, that they not only do the fame themkires, but have pleafure in them that do them, encourage, countenance, and take delight in others who commit the ime abeminations. From all which it is most evident, that men of fuch a character as these can never, by any works of righteoufnefs which they can pretend to, be justified before God; but must be faved by abounding grace, or petilh. Note; (1.) Nothing is a forer punifhment than for the finner to be given up to his own heart's lufts. (2) When God withdraws his reftraints, there are no abominations into which we shall not rush headlong, as the horse rusheth into the battle. (3.) When we see the dire iniquities here recorded, and behold them in the practice and temper of others, we flould reflect for our own humiliation, that our hearts are by nature the fame, alike corrupt. (4.) Sin against light and knowledge is most exceeding finful; but the fummit of iniquity is, to take a diabolical pleasure in the wickedness of others, and to love in for its own fake.

CHAP. II.

THE Apostle having shewn that the Gentiles could not ementain the leaft hope of falvation according to the tenor of the law of nature; it was next to be confidered, whether the law of Moles gave the Jews any better hope. This inquiry the Apostle managed with great address. Well knowing, that, on reading his description of the manners of the Greeks, the Jews would pronounce them worthy of damation, he fuddenly turned his difcourfe to the Jews, thing them, that they who passed such a judgment on the Genules, were inexcufable in hoping to be faved through the law of Moles; because, by condemning the Gentiles, ther suitually condemned themfelves, who, being guilty of the very fame crimes, were thereby under the curfe of Moles' law, ver. 1.-And to enforce his argument, the Apolle observed, that God's sentence of condemnation, pulied in the curfe of the law upon them who commit luch things, is known by all to be according to truth, Mr. 2.-But although every Jew was condemned by the turie of the law of Mofes, they all expected falvation on account of their being Abraham's children, Matt. iii. 8, 9. and of their enjoying the benefit of revelation, Rom. ii. 13. Wherefore to flew them the vanity of that hope, the Apolile proposed the following question : Dost thou, who tondemnest the Gentiles for their crimes, and yet commateff the fame thyfelf, think that thou shalt escape the nghicous featence of God, declared in the cutfe of the law of Moles, merely becaufe thou art a fon of Abraham, and a member of God's vilible church? ver. 3.-By entertaining fuch a notion, thou judgeft amifs of thy privileges, which are beftowed on thee, not to make finning more fafe to thee than to others, but to lead thee to repentance, vcr. 4.—Thefe privileges, therefore, inflead of making thy falvation fure, if abused by thy obdurate and impenitent heart, will make thy punifhment greater in the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of Ged, ver. 5.

Having mentioned the general judgment, the Apoftle for the inftruction of the Jews, and of all who, like them, expect falvation, because they are favoured with revelation, discoursed at large concerning future retributions. And first of all, he shewed them from the natural character of God, that rewards and puniforments will be difpenfed at the judgement to every man, not according to the outward privileges and advantages which he enjoyed in this life, nor according to the flattering opinion which he entertains of himfelf, but according to his works, ver. 6. More particularly, to them who, by perfeverance in well-doing, earneftly feek glory, honour, and immortality, God will render eternal life, ver. 7 .- But them who obey unrighteoufnefs, he will punish with indignation and wrath, ver. 8. Left, however, the Jews might have imagined from the Apostle's mentioning cternal life (ver. 7.), that he spake of the members of the vilible church of God only, and that no others are to have eternal life, he repeated his account of the judgment in fuch terms as to make his readers fenfible, that he is fpeaking of men of all nations and religions. Affliction and anguish shall come upon every foul of man who worketh evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Greek, ver. 9.—But glory, honour, and peace shall be to every one who worketh good, to the few first, and all to the Greek, ver. 10. For as few and Greek is a division which comprehends all mankind, there can be no doubt of the Apostle's intention to declare, on the one hand, that every impenitent finner, and among the reft the impenitent members of God's visible church, shall assuredly be punished; and, on the other, that all who have wrought good, whether they be Jews, or heathens, or Christians, shall through Jefus Chrift alone have glory, bonour, and peace, that is, eternal life, rendered to them : Becaufe with God there is no respect of perfons, ver. 11.

His account of the judgment, the Apostle introduced in this place with admirable propriety, not only for the reafon already mentioned, but left the heathen philosophers and Jewish scribes, from his teaching that no man can be faved, either by the law of nature, or by the law of Moles, might have fulpected it to be his opinion, that all are to be condemned who have not the Gospel-revelation; and that the holinefs and good works of Jews and heathens will be of no use to them at the last. For by declaring that glory and peace shall come through Jesus Christ alone (which must be always implied) not only upon fuch Jews, but upon fuch Greeks, as have lived to God by the fecret in-D 2 fluepr fluences of his Spirit, he has taught that falvation is not confined to them who have enjoyed revelation; that in all nations there are men who fear God and work righteoufnefs; and that at the judgment, fuch shall have the benefit of the method of falvation established at the fall, and revealed in the Gofpel, extended to them through the Divine Mediator, though it was not different to them during their lifetime on earth.

Moreover, becaufe the Jews really held the uncharitable opinion, falfely imputed to the Apoftle, configning to damnation all who had not the Mofaic revelation, the Apoftle affured them, that the revealed law of God is not the rule by which the heathens are to be judged : as many as bave finned without law, fball perifb without law; without being judged by any revealed law. So that in punithing them, God will confider those hindrances of their holiness and virtues, and those alleviations of their fins, which refulted from the imperfection of the difpensation under which they were placed. Whereas all who have finned under a revealed law, fhall be judged by that law : the aggravations of their fins, refulting from the advantages which they enjoyed, will be taken into the account, and punished, ver. 12.-And with respect to men's being faved, because they have enjoyed an external revelation, the Apostle expressly declared, that not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified : ver. 13 .- He therefore concluded, that when the Gentiles, who have not a revealed law, do, by the fecret influences of the Spirit of God (which mult be implied according to the analogy of faith) the internal and external works which confeience dictates to them, ver. 14. and fhew thereby, that there is a law of God written in their hearts, to which their reafon and conficence bear witness, ver. 15. they shall, through the alone merit of Jefus Chrift obtain eternal life, in the day when God will judge the hidden things of men, namely, their inward dispositions, by Jesus Christ, according to the Gofpel which Paul every where preached, ver. 16.

Here let it be observed, first, that to shew the unbelieving Jews the vanity of placing their hope of falvation on God's having chofen them for his people, and on his having given them the law, the Apostle inquired what efficacy the law of Mofes, with their other privileges as the people of God, had had in leading the men of rank and learning among the Jews to a right practice. Now, that he might not feem to undervalue their privileges as Jews, he enumerated them particularly : Behold, thou art called a Jew, and refleft in the law, &c. ver. 17-20. Then he asked the doctors and feribes, how it came to pafs that, notwithstanding they had the express image of knowledge and truth in the law, and had fet themfelves up as guides of the blind Gentiles, they had not fo inftructed themfelves, as to refrain from breaking the law in the many flagrant inftances which he. mentioned, ver. 20-23. At the fame time, that he might not charge the Jews with those gross immoralities without foundation, he quoted pallages from their own Scriptures, which declare, that the name of God was blafphemed among the Gentiles through the wickedness of the Jewish rulers and feribes, ver. 24. Wherefore, feeing that not the hearers of the law, but the doors of it shall be justified, the men of rank and learning, as well as the people in general among the Jews, had not the least ground to expect falvation through the law, but were under a neceffity of feeking juftification through faith : and the Gentiles were under no obligation to be guided, in the interpretation of the revelations of God (fee ver. 19.), by perions whole practice was fo contrary to the precepts of revelation.

In the feernd place, becaufe the Jows expected falvation on account of their being the children of Abraham, and members of God's covenant, and gloried in their circumcifion, as the fign of that covenant, and of their defcent from Abraham, the Apofile told them that their circumcition, though a proof of their defcent from Abraham, and of their relation to God as his people, would not profit them, if they were breakers of the law: but in that cafe, they would be in no better a condition than the uncircumcifed Gentiles, ver. 25. ; whereas if the Gentiles are found through the fecret power of divine grace to have polfeffed the holinefs, and performed the good actions enjoined by the law of God given to the Jews, their circumcifion will be no obstacle to their falvation through the alone merits of Chrift, ver. 26.; confequently they will put the Jews to fname, by obtaining that falvation which fhall be denied to the unregenerate Jews, ver. 27. For he is not a Jew, or fon of Abraham, and heir of the promifes, who is fo by defcent and profession only; ver. 22: but he is a fon of Abraham, and an heir of the promifes, in their highest meaning, whatever his pedigree may be, who is Abraham's fon in the temper of his mind : and true circumcifion is that of the heart, which is made by cutting off evil affections, according to the fpirit, and not according to the letter of the law of circumcifion. And where that circumcifion was found, though fuch a perfon might not receive praise from the Jews, as one of the people of God, he shall assuredly receive it from God at the judgment, who will own him as one of his people, by conferring upon him the bleffings promifed to Abraham, and to his feed, through Jefus Christ alone, ver. 29.

Reader, behold and admire the benignity and impartiality of the divine government, as fet forth in the Gospel. At the judgment, God will render to every man according to his works; without flewing more favour to those who have enjoyed revelation, merely because they have enjoyed it, than to those who, in the exercise of his fovereignty, have been denied that favour. In other words, the enjoyment of revelation will not be imputed to any man for commendation, nor the want of it be confidered as a fault : but, but, in judging men, God most rightcous will confider the advantages and difadvantages which refult from the nature of the difpenfation under which they lived, and will pels fentence upon them accordingly. And therefore, if, a the judgment, fome who have not enjoyed revelation are found to have feared God, and wrought righteoufnets netwithitending the difadvantages they laboured under, he will not deny them those rewards which are proportionable to the diffeentation under which they lived, and the meafures of holinefs which they experienced, but all through the close merits of the Son of his love.

To this liberal and feriptural doctrine, it has been objected,

1. That, no works being good but fuch as proceed from faith, none of the heathens will be found, at the judgment, where wrought good, as they had no opportunity to behere the revelations of God: confequently the Apostle's eccinine, that glory, bonour, and peace, fhall be to every one who worketh good, is not to be understood of the heathens, but must be limited to fuch Jews and Greeks, as have coved the benefit of an external revelation.

But the answer is, inasmuch as the influences of the Split of God are not confined to them who enjoy revektion, but are promifed in the gracious covenant made with mankind at the fall to all who are fincere, a heathen. by those influences may in his measure attain faving faith, and thereby may pleafe God. For faith is more a work of the heart than of the understanding. So our Apostle traches, Rom. x. 10. With the heart we believe unto rightenfrefs. So that although the perfons to whom revelation is denied, may not have the fame objects of belief with thele who enjoy revelation, they may have the fame Spirit g fatth, as it is termed, 2 Cor. iv. 13. Of this Abraham, Rhab, the centurion, whole fervant Chrift healed, the Libiopian eunuch, and Cornelius, are examples; for, in manuncilion, they exercised such faith as was acceptable "God. And therefore St. Peter did not fcruple to fay, Ads, 1. 33. Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of My but in every nation, he that feareth God and worketh meteuinefs, is accepted with him. And 1 Pct. i. 17. The baks, without respect of perfons, judgeth according to every monts work.

That the pious heathens should have their faith counted m taem for rightcoulnels at the judgment, notwithstanding it my have been deficient in many particulars, and even trencous, is not unreasonable; provided that, in these infances of error, they have used their best endeavours to know the truth, and have not been led by these errors into habitual fin.

2. It has been objected to the falvation of the heathens, but they have not that explicit knowledge of Christ, nor kith in him as the Saviour of the world, which is required in the Gespel. But to this I reply: The Gospel does not Ease it necessary to falvation, that men should have an. explicit knowledge of Chrift, and a direct faith in him, if they never have had an opportunity of knowing and believing on him. On the contrary, by informing us, that all mankind live at prefent, and shall hereafter be raifed from the dead, through the obedience of Chrift to the death of the crofs, although the greatest part of them know nothing of him, nor of his obedience, the facred oracles lead us to conclude, that, at the general judgment, many shall be faved through Chrift, who till then never heard of him. Befides, is it not as agreeable to juffice and goodnefs, to fave the pious heathens through Christ, notwithstanding they never heard of him, as it was to condemn all mankind to death for the fin of Adam, although the greatest part of them never heard of his difobedience? Withal, finee at the judgment, the ground of the falvation of mankind shall be declared in the hearing of the affembled universe, the discovery of Christ as Saviour will be made to the faved heathens, in time fufficient to lay a foundation for their gratitude and love to him through all eternity. In fine, if the efficacy of Chrift's obedience to death does not extend to the faving of the pious heathens, what intepretation can we put on Rom. v. 12-21, where the professed purpofe of the Apoftle's reafoning is, to fhew that the effects of Chrift's obedience are greater than the confequence of Adam's difobedience 🖓

2. To the falvation of the heathens it has been objected. that if juftifying faith confifts not fo much in the number and extent of the doctrines believed, as in the disposition of the heart to believe, fo that many who have lived and died in falfe religion may be faved, what purpose does it ferve, to give any of mankind the true form of faith and worfhip by revelation ? This objection the Apoftle himfelf has flated in the beginning of chap. iii. and has answered it very folidly, by shewing, that in the true religion men have many more and better opportunities of cultivating good difpolitions, by the Spirit of God, and of being prepared for heaven, by the difcoveries which revelation makes of fpiritual things, than can be had in any falfe religion. In thort, the true form of religion, instead of being of no use, is the greatest blessing that men can enjoy ; becaufe, by affording better means of improvement, it enables them to acquire, through divine grace, a greater measure of holines, and a more diffinguished reward.

This illustration will not be thought tedious by those who confider the importance of rightly understanding what the Golpel teaches concerning the falvation of the heathens. For,

First, To know that this fiberal doctrine makes part of the Chriftian revolation, must give the highest pleafure to every benevolent mind, on account of the glory which will redound to God, from the falvation of fo many of the human race, through the coming of his Son into the world.

In the fecond place, this liberal doctrine puts an end to thole

those specious cavils, whereby the enemies of revelation have endeavoured to difcredit the Gofpel in the eyes of the intelligent. For it can no longer be pretended, that by making faith the means of falvation, the Gofpel has configned all the heathens to damnation. Neither can God be accufed of partiality, in conferring the benefit of revelation upon fo fmall a portion of the human race, in the falle notion, that the actual knowledge of revelation is effentially neceffary to falvation. For although the number of those who have lived without revelation, has hitherto been much greater than of those who have enjoyed that benefit, no unrighteousnels can be imputed to God, fince he has not excluded those from falvation who have been denied revelation, but has graciously determined, that all in every difpentation, who, by perfeverance in well-doing through the fecret power of grace, feek for glory, honour, and immortality, fhall obtain eternal life, by having their fpirit of faith counted to them for righteoufnels through Jefus Chrift. Moreover, all the heathen who are condemned, shall be condemned, not because they lived without revelation, but becaufe they lived in opposition to the law of God written on their heart. Wherefore, the ftrongeft of all the objections with which revelation has been attacked having no foundation, the Gospel ought to be received by every one to whom it is offered, as a difcovery from God of the only method in which finners can be faved ; namely, not by a righteoufnefs of law, which in our present state is unattainable, but by a righteousness of faith counted to us by the mere favour of God, on account of the obedience of Chrift.

Ver. 1. The representation of the moral state of the heathen world, in the foregoing chapter, is a proof of the neceffity of the Gospel, or of a further dispensation of grace or favour, for the falvation of mankind: and how rich the favour wherewith God vifited the world! То have defiroyed the race of the apostate rebels who had abufed their understandings and every gift of a bountiful Creator, would have been justice; to have spared them, lenity and mercy: but to fend his only-begotten Son from heaven to redeem us from all this iniquity and ungodlinefs by his own blood, is the most wonderful and exuberant favour. Rightly is the doctrine which teaches it called Gospel, or glad tidings: according to its true nature it fhould have filled the whole world with transports of joy : however, one would think it could not poffibly have met with opposition from any part of mankind. But the Jew opposed it : he abhorred the Gentile, and contradicted the grace which honoured and faved him. The Apoftle pleads and defends our cause : his business is, to confound the Jew, and to prove that we have as good right as he to all the bleffings of the Meffiah's kingdom; and by the description of the vicious state of the Gentiles in the former chapter, he has delicately availed himfelf of the prejudices of the Jew. He endeavours, from the beginning of the epiftle, to court bis attention; but nothing would please him more than a difcourfe, in which the Gentiles were reduced to fuch a vile and abject state. Thus the Apostle rouses his contempt of the Gentiles, and gives him occasion to condemn them :---but it is, that he may the more effectually humble him in this chapter; in which he proves, that the Jews, having in an aggravated manner defpifed the goodnefs and broken the law of God, were as obnoxious to his wrath as the Gentiles. How could they, with any confcience or modesty, arrogate all the divine mercy to themselves; or pretend that other men were unworthy of it, when they had done as much, or more, to forfeit it than others? Must they not exclude themselves from being the people of God under the Gofpel, by the fame reason that they would have the Gentiles excluded ? This, however, was an argument highly ungrateful to the Jow: and it would be very difficult to fix any conviction upon his mind: therefore the Apostle first address him in a covert general way, thou art therefore inexcufable, O man ! &c. not giving out expressly that he meant the Jew, that the Jew might more calmly attend to his reafoning, while he was not apprehensive that he was the man. Secondly, Most judicioully, and with irreliftible force of reafoning, he turns his thoughts from his prefent fuperior advantages to the awful day of judgment (ver. 5 - 16.), when God, in the most impartial equity, will render to all mankind without exception according to their works. Thus the Apoftle grounds his following argument very methodically and folidly on God's equal regards to men in all nations, who fear him and uprightly practife truth and goodnefs; and his difapproving, and at laft condemning all men in any nation, however privileged, who live wickedly. This is ftriking at the root of the matter, and demolifhing, in the most true and effectual manner, the Jew's prejudices in favour of his own nation, and the unkind thoughts that he had entertained of the Gentiles. For if a Jew could be convinced, that a fober virtuous heathen, fearing God and working righteousness, might, through the infinite merit of the Mefliah and the fecret influences of the Holy Spirit, be bleffed with eternal falvation, he must be perfuaded that it was no fuch flocking or abfurd matter, that believing Gentiles should be pardoned and taken into the visible church. Thus the Apostle advances with great skill and with the justest steps in his argument ; infinuating himfelf by degrees into the Jew's confcience. This paffage is also well adapted to encourage the Gentile, humbled by the difmal representation in the foregoing chapter; for he would here fee, that he was not utterly abandoned of God; but might, upon good grounds, hope for his mercy and kindnefs. We may just observe farther, that what St. Paul fays of the Jews, in the present chapter, anfwers to what he had charged on the Gentiles in the first. For there is a fecret comparison of them one with another, running through these two chapters; which, as soon as it comes to be confidered, gives such a light and lustre to St. Paul's discourse, that one cannot but admire the skilful turn as have finned in the law shall be judged by before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified.

tum of it, and look on it as the most fost, the most beautiful and most preffing argumentation; leaving the Jews to ay for themselves, why they should have the privilege continued to them under the Gospel, of being alone in a rational fense the people of God. See Locke, and on tet. 29.

That judgest 'O relivary, the judger, is here very emphatical; and the more fo, as it is repeated in the latter part of the rafe. It denotes more than fimply judging : it implies aligning the character, place, and authority of a judge; which would be feen more clearly, if the verfe were rendered thus; Therefore, thou art inexcusable, O man ! whiter art a judger ; for wherein thou judgest another, thou enlanned thyfelf; for thou, the judger, doest the fame things. There will need no remark, to those who read this epiltle with the least attention, to prove that the judging which St. Paul here speaks of, refers to that aversion which the lews generally had to the Gentiles : infomuch that the unconverted Jews could not bear the thought of a Mefth who admitted the heathen equally with them into his kingdom; nor could the converted Jews be eafily breakt, for a confiderable time, to admit them into their communion, as the people of God, now equally with themferes; to that they generally, both one and the other, at that time judged them unworthy the favour of God and incapable of becoming his people any other way than by tircumcifion and an observance of the ritual parts of the hw;-the inexcufableness and absurdity whereof St. Pul thews in this chapter. Dr. Doddridge observes, that there is a greater delicacy in the Apostle's transition here, than most commentators have imagined. From what he had before faid, to prove the wicked and abandoned among te heathens inexcufable in their wickedness, he justly infes, that the crimes of those who had fuch knowledge of the truth as to condemn the vices of others, were proportorably yet more inexcufable. This was eminently the cafe while Jews. But he does not directly speak of them till thegitterfe; drawing the inference at first in such general Massasmight also comprehend Gentiles, philosophers, and a others who contradicted the moral instructions which they themfelves gave. Though the black detail of vices turnerated in the preceding chapter is fuch as cannot fail to hock the thinking mind; yet whoever will take the truble to fearch into the flate of religion and virtue among the Jour at the fame period will confess, that the Apostle is tacher tender than rigid in his accufations. See Joseph. Irwih War, b. v. c. 13. b. vii. c. 8. and Whitby.

Vn. 2. Is according to truth] The Apostle is here straing of the general punishment of fin, in whomfoever is found. The judgment of God is according to truth sting them [-all of them, Jews or Gentiles] who do fuch ling: and he has his eye, not upon the rejection of the Jew, in this world, but upon the day of wrath, and revesion of the righteous judgment of God; ver. 5, 6. 16. Ver. 4. Goodnefs and forbearance, &c.] Taylor observes, that goodnefs is here to be understood of the mercy and goodnefs of God, which bestowed superior light and advantages upon the Jews. Goodnefs is used in the same fense with regard to the Gentiles, chap. xi. 22. We may observe, that the Apostle uses general terms, that the Jew may not too plainly see that he is speaking to bim. When he fays, leadeth thee to repentance, the meaning is, ought to lead thee : for it should be carefully noted, that it is very common in the facred writings, to express not only our Christian privileges, but also the duties to which they oblige, in the present or preterperfect tense; or to speak of that as done which only ought to be done; and which, in fact, may possibly never be done. See Matt. v. 13. I Pet. i. 6. Heb. xiii. 14, &c.

Ver. 6. Deeds] 'Epyz, works; as it is rendered in other places.

Ver. 7. By patient continuance] Patient, in this verfe, feems to be opposed to contentious in the next: the former referring to the patience of Christians under Jewish perfecutions, the latter to the bitter perfecuting spirit of the Jews. See Locke.

Ver. 8. Do not obey the truth Though by the truth the Golpel be here meant, yet St. Paul feems plainly to have uled the term truth with an eye to the Jews; for, though fome few of them received the Golpel, yet even a great part of these few joined with the rest of their nation in opposing this great truth of the Golpel;-that under the Meffiah, the Gentiles were the people of God as much as the Jews; and, as fuch, were to be received by them. In the last words of this verse there seems to be a reference to Pfal. lxxviii. 49. when, speaking of the Egyptians, it is faid, He cast upon them the fierceness of his anger, wrath, indignation, and trouble : and it may intimate with great delicacy, that the Jews would in the day of vengeance be more feverely punished than even their Egyptian enemies were, when God made their plagues to wonderful. There should be a full stop at wrath. Tribulation and anguish in the next verse begin a new sentence, which affirms that to be a general rule of God's dealing with mankind at large in judgment, which in the two foregoing verfes he feems to mean only of Christians so called, and Jews. The word sevoxweia, rendered anguish, fignifies straitnes; and is used by Xenophon to denote a narrow way, which cannot be passed. See Locke, Doddridge, Raphelius, and Effner.

Ver. 9, 10. Upon every foul, &c.] We fee by thefe two verfes, and chap. i. 16. how carefully St. Paul lays it down, that there was now under the Gofpel no other national diffinction between Jews and Gentiles, but only a priority in the offer of the Gofpel; which may farther fatisfy us, that the diffinction which St. Paul infifts on fo much here, and all through the first part of this epiftle, is national; the comparison being between the Jews, as nationally nationally the people of God, and the Gentiles, as not the people of God before the Melliah; and that under the Methah the professors of Christianity, confisting chiefly of converted Gentiles, were the people of God, owned and acknowledged as fuch by him,-the unbelieving Jews being rejected, and the unbelieving Gentiles not received; but that yet, perforally, both Jews and Gentiles, every fingle perfon, shall be punished for his own particular fins; as appears by the next two verfes.

Ver. 11. There is no respect of perfons with God ] That is, in palling the final fentence he is determined by their real characters. See the note on Acts, x. 34. This is perfectly confistent with an inequality in distributing advantages, and opportunities of improvement, according to the fovereign pleafure of the great Lord of all. This affertion of the Apostle, so often repeated, will appear the more important and reafonable, as the Jews thought that no Ifraelite should be deprived of future happines, whatever his faults had been, unlefs he was guilty of apoflacy, idolatry, and fome few other very enormous crimes. See Jortin's Discourses, page 26.

Ver. 12. Without law_without law] Without the law, &c. Those under the law, St. Paul fays, shall be judged by the law; and this is eafy to conceive : becaufe they were under a politive injunction, wherein life and death were annexed as the reward and punifhment of obedience and difobedience. But of the unbelieving Gentiles, who were not under that politive injunction, he fays barely, that they shall perifb. St. Paul does not use these fo eminently different expressions for nothing. See particularly chap.

v. 13. Ver. 13. For not the heavers, &c.] This, and ver. 14, 15. are a comment upon the 20th verfe. In ver. 12. he remarks upon the latter part of the 12th, that enjoying the advantages of revelation will not fave us, unlefs we duly improve them. Ver. 14, 15. he remarks upon the former part of the 12th, and proves that the Gentiles, who have no revelation, are yet condemnable for their wickednes, because they transgress against the light of their difpenfation.

Ver. 15. In their hearts, &c.] 'This is the force and ftrefs of the Apostle's argument. He is proving that the Gentiles have a rule of action; and where is that rule ?---It is written in their hearts, infcribed upon their mental faculties; a fenfe of moral good and evil is common to all mankind; and a fecret power offered by divine grace to embrace the one and to avoid the other. The laft claufe literally rendered is, and their reafonings between one another, acculing or elfe defending. This interpreters in general underitand of the workings of the confcience in one and the fame perfon, alternately accufing the actions which are bad, and justifying those which are good. But here it is proper to observe, I. That warny opsivier, accusing, and a πολογουμίνων, defending or an swering for themselves, are forenfic terms, and correspond to plaintiff and defendant in legal procefs. Now plaintiff and defendant fuppole a difputation, and are correlates, which exist together at the fame time; but to fay that the fingle principle of confcience forms two litigant parties in itfelf, the one acculing, the other defending, is incongruous. Conficience is a law, not a litigant, unless it be with a different principle, luft, (of which the Apostle fays nothing here,) but never with itfelf, or its own reflections upon a perfon's conduct. II. The copulative xai, and, as it flands here, points to a diffinct head; " their confeience alfo bearing witnefs, that the work" " of the law is written in their hearts; and their reafonings " between one another, acculutg or answering for themselves, " bearing witnefs that the work of the law is written in " their hearts." This is the proper structure and conftruction of the Greek. But if this last clause be underftood of the workings of confeience, it will be a tautology; for the Apostle must be supposed to fay, their confeience bearing witnefs, and the workings of their conficience, alternately accufing or defending, bearing witness. III. The phrase μεταξύ αλλήλων, between one another, denotes the litigant parties, accufing or elfe defending; and who fhould thofe be but the Gentiles, the perfous concerning whom the Apostle is arguing? The word 'And inon, one another, always, it is conceived, denotes parties exifting at the fame time. But we cannot fuppofe that litigant parties exift at the fame time in the confeience, one acculing, and the other excufing a man's conduct. To whom then does the word advay, their, in the preceding claufe refer, but to the Gentiles ?-And not only the Tenfe, but the like polition of the words, directs us to refer annihous, one another, to the fame antecedent: for the words lie in this order, their confeiences bearing witnefs, and their between-one-another-debates [bearing witnefs]. IV. The Greek word λογιζω fignifies to reckon, reafon, debate; (see Mark, xi. 31. 2 Cor. x. 5, &c.); agreeably whereto the original word Noysouw, in the present passage, should have been rendered, -their reafonings, debates, difputes one with another, when one party was plaintiff, and the other defendant. This proves that they both had, and knew they had, a law or rule of action among them : for as plaintiff and defendant neceffarily suppose each other, to do they necessarily suppole a law, determining some actions to be true, just, and good; others to be false, unjust, and evil: for if there were no difference of actions, there could be no accufation of wrong, nor defence of right. The Apoftle fays, accufug or elfe anfwering for themselves; because either of these is fufficient to his purpofe: either their accusing others of wrong, or defending themfelves as in the right, (whichever of the parties was really in the right or in the wrong,) proved that they had a law among them,-a law written in their hearts.

The fecrets of men] Not, we conceive, their letter bad actions, but, agreeably to the preceding difroufe, their moral flate and circumstances under different degrees of light; which are jecrets now to us, or of which reare by no means competent judges. We cannot judge vba capacities, opportunities, and advantages every man, is every different age and country, enjoys; nor what use he makes of them; thefe are things only known to God. This interpretation will be confirmed by observing, that this 16th verse is in connection with the 12th. According um Gafpel refers not to the day of judgment in general, sit the Apofile intended no more, than that he made hown a future judgment in his preaching the Gofpel.liuvas not peculiar to St. Paul's preaching as he was the Apolile of the Gentiles; other apolites and preachers mide known a future judgment, as well as St. Pauly therefore it feems rather to refer to God's judging the kuns of men. It might be asked by what rule will he judge them? The answer is, According to my Gospel ; that is "according to the nature and extent of the Gospel " which I preach among the Gentiles, and which repre-" fents all mankind as the objects of the divine benefi-" cence, cognizance, and care through the merit of the " great Atonement." According to St. Paul's Gospel, or pon its principles, God is the God, Father, and Judge of all, who has in one degree or other revealed himfelf to all, the exp cts a proportionable obedience from all; and intequenty will judge, and either reward or punish all the nations of the world under different dispensations, and this degrees of light; and this principle is expressed milenty full words of the first fermon preached to the were also guilty. St. Paul fays emphatically, theu art called a Jew; for such a Jew as described in the following verses, he infifts, was a Jew only in name, not in reality; and fo he concludes, ver. 28, 29. The Greek words Kauxaoman, kauxnua, kauxnow, are used by none of the New Teltament writers except St. Paul and St. James; by the latter thrice, by the former above fifty times. They are favourite terms with St. Paul, probably becaule of their very expressive and extensive fignification. We render them by boafing, glorying, rejoicing, joy; but glorying best fuits all the places where they are found. Now glorying, as it gives the fenfe of those words, denotes being pleafed with, and acquiefcing in the object wherein we glory, as it is supposed to be an object of joy and delight, of hope and dependence; as being praise-worthy, and reflecting an honour upon us : and fuch an object may be either in ourfelves, or in other things or perfons. These feveral senfes the words above mentioned will admit; but commonly more fenfee than one are implied, and fometimes all the feveral fignifications are included in the force of the word : fo here, and makeft thy boaft, or rather, and glorieft in God; that is to fay, " You rejoice in him as the object of your hope " and dependence; -you praise, or speak well of him; " you account it your honour that he is your God, and that you worship him, &c." felves they thought them in knowledge. The word µoepwork, rendered form, ver. 2c. feems to mean the fame with the word runos, ch. vi. 17. that is, fuch a draught, as contained and reprefented the parts and lineaments of the whole ;for it is to be remembered, that the Apostle uses these terms here in the same sense that the Jews spoke of themfelves, vaunting over the Gentiles; thereby placing their crime in the ftrongest light, in judging the Gentiles as they did. See 2 Tim. iii. g. Locke, Bos, and Beaufobre aud Lenfant. .... Ver. 21. Doft thou feal ?] Grotius on this text proves from Josephus, that some of the Jewish priefts lived by rapine, depriving others of their due fhare of the tithes, and even suffering them to perish for want : that others were guilty of großeuncleangels : and as for facrilegioully robbing God and his altars, it had been complained of as early as Malachi's days (Mal. i. 8, 12, 13:). See Grotius and Doddridge.

Vir. 25. For] It is most evident that yap; for, cannot here fignify that the following words are a reaton for what was afferted in those immediately preceding: It seems little more than an expletive, as the particle now is frequently among us. Circhmeisson is here: put for being a friv, as being one of the chief, and most diferiminating rites of that people: It profiteth, fays St. Paul, (or, as it may be rendered, It is indeed an advantage,) if thou keep the law:

Ver. 26. The righteoufnefs of the law] Mr. Locke renders the original words. dualing to the law] Mr. Locke renders the original words. dualing to the word rectifude? This rule of their actions, all mankind uncircumcifed as well as circumcifed had, and it is that which the Apofle, in ch, i. 32. calls disalwas rs. Des, the judgment of God, because it came from God, and was made by him the moral rule to all mankind. And this rule of morality; St. Paul fays, the Gentile world did acknowledge : fo that disalwas rs Des, the judgment of God, ch. i. 32. fignifies that rule of right taken in general; and dualwas rs voui, the righteaufnefs of the law, here fignifies the particular branches of it, contained in the law of Moles: for no other part of that law could a Heathen be fuppofed to observe, or be concerned in; and therefore those only can be the diaminara ranaux, the rightcoufnels of the law, here meant.

Ver. 27. And fall not uncircum-ifen, &c.] The Apofile here fuppofes that a heathen may be an honeft, fober, good, kind, benevolent and holy man through the focret influences of the Spirit of God: for were it impossible for the Gentiles in any fense to fulfil the law of love, it would not be supposible that, he should do it; and then the Apostle's argument would be without any foundation. And that he does not here fpeak of a Heathen converted, or to be converted to Christianity, is manifeld from the whole context. Hence it appears, that it was the Apolile's fentiment that a man under the Heathen difpendation might do the will of God by the fecret influences of the Holy Spirit, and through the alone merits of Jefus Chrift be faved for ever,---not indeed by his works : it is of grace that be is faved. See chap. iii. 20. The following words, judge thee, look back as far as the first verse: whethever thou art that judgest. This judging, as Mr. Locke obferves, relates to the unkind erroneous fentiments of the Jews concerning the uncircumcifed Gentiles; judging them utterly unworthy of the favour of God, and disqualified from being his people. But here the Apolle, with great force and truth, retorts the centure upon them. " Shall a vir-" tuous and pious Heathen condemn you, wicked Jews, " as unworthy of God's favour, and difqualified from " being any longer his people ?" That this is the Apottle's meaning, appears from the next verfe; For he is not a Jew, &c.; and in the following dialogue, concerning the rejection of the Jews, he inppoies that the Jews would take this to be his fenfe; nor could my Jew in those days, ac--quainted with St. Paul's principles, mils of understanding him thus. In ch. xiv. 3, 4 the word judge is uted in the stame fenie. See Locke, and the note on ver. 15. . Ver.

· . . 1 ÷ 9. : Informers.-Milerable are those judges, preachers, mallers, &c. who, in arraigning others, condemn themking. It is for our own interest to be very flow and referred in the judgment we pass upon our neighbours; becaule God judges us as we judge others. We readily mough blame vice, when we fee it only in others; but God lees it better in us, than we do in them. We frequently condemn our fellow-creatures, in order to justify outlelves before men; and this very thing does but the more condemn us in the fight of God, yer. Inter

In as revere the righteous judgment of God, which is here lid before us in fo particular and affecting a manner; remembering that we are each of us to have our part in that day of final retribution; and that the fecrets of our harts will then be made manifest. It behoves us often to reflect upon the aweful refult; and to coulider, that inlignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, will be our pottion, if we are contentious and difobedient to the truth; yes, if we do not, by a patient continuance in well-doing, feck the monifed glory, bonour, and immortality. This if we do by the grace of God, we shall, through the alone merits et our adorable Saviour, secure eternal life. Ver. 7-9. Bu otherwife, vain will our knowledge and our best profellion be found, and our testimonies against the fins of others will only inflame the guilt of our own ....

What caufe have we to adore that goodnefs of God, which b ten's takes unworthy finners, as it were by the hand, ind ladeh them to repentance! ver. 4. While we confinaly ire upon this goodnefs, let us not act in contespt of its bleihngs, or abuse it to our own ruin. It will be a molt impartial, as well as important day ! It does not much concern as to know how the Heathen wilfare in it : it may fuffice us, that if they be condemned, they will be righteoufly condemned ;---not for remaining unstant of that Gofpel, which they never had an opportunty of hearing, but for violating those precepts of the dhine law, which were inferibed on their confeiences. Tor. 29. Whole proje is not of men], Perhaps here is a infult attend on those, who, having belides this, the law of the Gofpel, the example of the life of Chrift, and the fuperior illuminations of the Holy Spirit, live notwithstanding as if they had no law at all ! For how devautly focver we may have heard and fpoken of ir, we fhall be condemned, at the laft, if we have not acted agreeable thereto; The use of the law is, to hear it with docility, to preferve the remembrance of it with gratitude, to meditare upon it with faith, to perform it with fidelity, to covet it with all our heart, and to make it our joy and delight : to effect une all which is the work of grace in us, and that grace a gift of God, which we mult earneftly supplicate, if we would favingly receive.

> How little will it fignify, to have the name of a Jew or a Chriftian! To boalt in an external and temporary relation to God, if we be fuch as fhall finally be difowned by him, will but render us more wretched. To have known bis will ; to have distinguished things that differ, and fet up for inftructors or reprovers of others, will only furnish out matter of condemnation from our own mouths. if while teaching others we teach not our felves, ver. 17-21. Well may the punishment be aggravated, where the guilt is fo great, when it brings fo peculiar a reproach upon religion, and, in effect, dictates to many blasphemies against the name of God, at the very time it pretends to exalt it, ver. 24. For as a good life is the praife which tends most to the honour of God; fo a wicked life, in a profession holy of itself, includes in it a kind of blasphemy, and is often the fatal occasion thereof in others.

> We pity the Gentiles, and we have reason to pity thema but let us take heed, left those appearances of virtue, which are to be found among fome of them, condemn sur conduct, who with the letter of the law and the Gofpel, and with the folemn tokens of a Christian relation to God about us, tranfgrefs his precepts, and violate-our engagements to him; turning the very means of goodnefs and happinefs into the occasions of more unpardonable guilt, yer. 26, 27. na la tre

The outward appearance, which was not fufficient to make a real Jew in the times of the law, can never be fufficient to make a true Christian in the times of Gofpel grace. We are nothing for or before God, but what we are in the inward man; all the reft is fhadow only and hypocrify in the fight of heaven. the All-feeing,-All-wife,-All-powerful God, condemns and disapproves?

REFLECTIONS .- Ift, Nothing could be urged against the prophane Gentiles which the Jews would not with fatisfaction admit. But, while they judged them, they in fact condemned themfelves, being chargeable with the fame abominations, and that with more aggravated guilt becaufe of their superior advantages. To them therefore the Apostle addresses himself, and proves them most inexcufable in their cenfures, and liable to the fame wrath of a juftly-offended God.

1. They were guilty of the fame fins which the Gentiles committed, yet flattered themfelves that they should escape the judgment of God. But it was folly in them to promile themfelves impunity, when the God of truth and judgment had fully declared his determined purpole to punith fuch workers of iniquity : and all who knew the unchangeablenels of his word were fure that vengeance muft overtake the impenitent tranfgr flors, whether they were Jews or Gentiles. Note; (1.) It is vile hypotrify to condemn that in others which we allow and practife ourfelves. (2.) God's judgment will be according to truth, and none thall be able to object to the righteoufnels of his fentence, any more than they can escape from the execution of it.

2. They abufed God's patience, and made the most ungrateful returns for his goodnefs. Peculiar mercies they had enjoyed, the most wonderful forbearance they had experienced, and all his multiplied favours had the most direct tendency to melt down their obdurate hearts Into ingenuous shame and contrition, and to engage them to return to him: but they confidered not their deep obligations, were infenfible to all the wonders of his grace, and, after their Bardnefs and impenitent hearts, treasured up unto themselves wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righterus judgment of God , fo eager in pursuit of their miguities, as if they were heaping up the most valuable treasures. Note; (1.) There is a day of wrath, of terrible wrath, approaching, when inexorable judgment will feize the impenitent foul. (2.) In all God's decisions his rightcouincis will appear, and even the damned be forced to own their sentence just. (3.) A hard and impenitent heart is the direft plague on this fide of hell. (4.) The time of God's patience is expiring, and abused patience will bring down the heaviest vengeance.

3. God, in his procedure at the day of judgment, will act with the greatest impartiality, rendering to every man according to his deeds. (1.) To them who by patient continuance in well-doing, who in the perfevering exercise of faith in a Redeemer are in the use of the appointed means working out their falvation ; and feek for the glory, benzur, and immortality which is brought to light in the Golpel; to them God will give eternal life : glory, bonour, and peace, are the affured portion fecured to every man that, under the influence of faith and love, perfeveringly worketb good, actuated by Gospel principles, and proposing as his end the divine glory. And herein there is no difference between Jew or Gentile, nor is God a respecter of one more than the other; the faithful of both denominations shall share the same blessedness according to their measure of grace; as they are interested in the fame divine Saviour, they shall be entitled, in proportion to their faithfulness and holinefs, to the fame reward. (2.) On the other hand, unto them that are contenticus, and do not obey the truth, contradicting and opposing the method of divine grace revealed in the Gofpel; but obey unrighteoufnefs, walking in unbelief, iniquity, and impenitence; indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiß, even all the terrors of vengeance which a righteous Judge will inflict, must be poured out up in every man that doeth evil; of the Jew first, to whom all his outward privileges will be no protection; and alfa of the Gentile, who shall no more escape than the Jew, if he perfeveringly neglect the great falvation of the Gofpel: and each wilk bear their punishment according to the advantages which they have enjoyed, and the means and mercies which they have abused.

4. In judging the world, God will regard the different measures of light against which men have finned, and will punish them according to the feveral aggravations of their guilt.

The Genriles, who have finned without law, must perish without law. They have not had indeed the fame clear revelation as was made to the Jews at Sinai; but they have a law written on their hearts, some more obscure traces of God's will have been delivered down to them, and their confciences, though defiled, have some general notions, of good and evil, right and wrong, truth and falfehood; by which means these heathens, though not having the law, are a law unto themselves; and, when they correspond in their practice with these dictates of natural conficience through the fecret influences of the Spirit of God, their thoughts and judgment acquit and approve them; or, if they deviate therefrom, they are accused, reproached, and condemned in their own hearts*. The unbelieving Gentiles, therefore, though not fo criminal as the unbelieving Jews, who refift clearer manifestations of

The unbelieving Jews, as many as have finned in the law, again the holy commandments which were delivered unto them, fhall be judged by the law; and, as their fin is mor aggravated, their condemnation will be more grievous. And though they valued themfelves highly on their external privileges as the difciples of Mofes, and thought themfelves the favourites of heaven, becaufe they were equinted with God's law, and heard it constantly read and explained to them, they were most fatally deceived ; fine most the heavers of the law are just before God, but the her of the law shall be justified.

In the day therefore when God fball judge the fecrets of non by Jefus Chrift, to whom all judgment is committed, acroning to the Gofpel, which Paul calls my Gofpel; not as if he was the author of it, but as being put in truft with it; then thall impartial justice be executed on transfer-flors, and according to the measure of their guilt thall be their oudemnation. Note; (1.) An aweful day of judgment approaches: it highly imports every foul to inquire how they hall come and appear before God. (2.) Whatever a now concealed with most cautious care thall foon be wought to light: we believe that he thall be our Judge, from whom nothing is hid, nothing is fecret.

adly, The great rock on which the Jews fplit, was their vin dependence on the law of Moles; when in fact that very law on which they trufted denounced indignation and wath upon them as tranfgreffors of it.

1. The Apostle mentions various particulars in which they proudly gloried. Behold, thou art called a Jew; they ralued themselves highly on their descent from Abraham; and refleft in the law; fecure of heaven because they had Moles for their teacher, though they obeyed not his injunctions; and makeft thy booft in God, as if peculiarly inunfied in him, and, exclusive of all other nations, possessing instanour and regard; and knoweft bis will, and approveft the thing that are more excellent, being infructed out of the her, putted up with the conceit of their fuperior knowledge of God's mind above any other people, accurate to difcern truth from falfebood, profefling their high estimation of the divine law, and from earliest youth (nolng- uevos) catechiled and instructed out of it; and art confident that thou Will art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in toriness, an instructor of the fooligh, a teacher of babes; such high and lofty titles they affumed, when regarding their Gentie neighbours, on whom they looked down with forereign contempt, and thought the wifest heathens were but as infants to them, and needed to come to their school to learn the elements of divine knowledge ; when, in fact, all they posselled was but a form of knowledge and of the hub in the low; for in reality they neither understood its Pature, extent, or fpirituality; nor practifed its precepts. Nate; (1.) External privileges refted upon, inftead of improved, tend but more fatally to deceive and deftroy us.

(2) Unfanctified knowledge is a dangerous poff flion, putting up the foul in pride, and leading it to perdition. (3.) A form of found words in our lips may impose upon men; but without the power of divine grace in the heart, all the reft is no better than founding brats and a tinkling cymbal.

2. He charges them with various crimes, the more aggravated because of the privileges in which they boafted, and the knowledge which they professed. While they taught others, they never preached to their own hearts ;; their lives gave the lie to their instructions. They declaimed against thest, yet practifed it themselves, Matt. xxiii. 14. and lived in that adultery which they fo fharply condemned in others: they teftified their abhorrence of idols, yet facrilegioully robbed God of his honour, not only by withholding their offerings from his altar, but more abundantly by making void his law through their traditions, and, while fcrupulous in trifles, neglecting the weightier matters. Thus they flood most inexcusably guilty; and by such flagrant breaches of his law, even while they boafted of it. as their great privilege, and trufted on it as their fecurity, they put the highest dishonour upon God, and brought the greatest reproach on their profession, giving occasion to the very Gentiles to blaspheme and speak evil of that religion, the professors of which were to infamoully vile; and acting over the same part as it is written their fathers had done before them, Ezek. xxxvi. 20-23. Note; (1.) Example influences more than precept. Indeed how can it be expected that the people should believe those, who shew by their practice that they do not believe themfelves ? (2.) They who prove falle to their professions, give the deepest stab to the caule of God.

3. The Apostle confiders the Jewish plea of circumcifion, and proves the vanity of it. It profited them, if they kept the law perfectly; but, in cafe of transgreffion. it flood them in no flead but as it led them to view the great atoning Saviour, nor were they at all more acceptable to God than an uncircumcifed Gentile. And if, for argament's fake, it be fuppoled that a heathen fhould obferve all the precepts of the law, would he not be an object of God's regard, as much as if he had been circumcifed ? and would not fuch a moral heathen, though uncircumcifed. condemn thee a Jew, and circumcifed, if he observed that law, which you, though professing to hold, and by circumcifion obliging yourfelf to keep, notwithstanding tranfgrefs ? Undoubtedly he would. Note; The comparative exemplariness of those who enjoy less means, and make lefs profession of religion, will justly condemn those, who with greater advantages and more pretentions to piety difhonour, by their unfaithfulnefs, the holy name whereby they are called.

4. He describes the true circumcision. It is not mere outward profession which seals a man a true Israelite; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the fless available to any faving purpose: but he is the true fon of Abraham, who in faith and spirit resembles this eminent friend.

friend of God; and the true circumcifion, which God regards, is that of the heart, purified by faith; in the fpirit, and not in the letter; where not only a profession is made, but a real inward change is wrought by the power of the Holy Ghoft; whele praife is not of men, but of God; it is what men cannot difeern; and as they who profess it defire not human but divine approbation, their great care and concern is that they may be accepted of God. ## CHAP. III.

THE foregoing reafonings being contrary to the prejudices of the Jews, one of that nation is here introduced, objucting, if our being the children of Abraham, members of the church of God, and heirs of the promifes, will procure us no favour at the judgment; and if the want of thefe privileges will not preclude the Heathens from falvation ;---what is the pre-eminence of a Jew above a Gentile, and what is the advantage of our being made the vifible church of God? ver. 1.-The Apostle replied, That the Jews, as a nation, enjoyed great advantages by being the church of God: to them were committed the oracles of God, the law of Mofes, and the writings of the prophets, in which the coming of the Seed of Abraham, who was to blefs all nations, is foretold, ver. 2.-But, fays the Jew, What good have we derived from these oracles, if the greatest part of us have not believed on him whom you affirm to be the feed of Abraham? Will not our unbelief occasion our rejection, and thereby destroy the faithfulnefs of God, who promifed to Abraham to be a God to him and to his feed in their generations? ver. 3.-This confequence the Apostle denied. Because, although all the natural feed of Abraham were rejected for unbelief, the faithfulnefs of God would not be destroyed thereby, but rather established; as the casting of Abraham's feed out of the covenant for unbelief and difobedience, was tacitly threatened in the covenant itfelf, ver. 4 .- But, replied the Tew, If our unrighteoufnefs, in not believing on Jefus, eftablifth the faithfuinefs of God, by occasioning our losing the privileges of the covenant, Is not God unrighteous in destroying us also as a nation for the fin of not believing on Jefus ? ver 5. By no means, answered the Apostle; for if no fin could be righteoufly punished, which is attended with good confequences, How fhall God judge the world? How shall he render to every man according to his works? ver. 6. - This answer not convincing the Jew, he urged his objection in a stronger form, as follows: If the truth of God, in executing his threatenings on us as a nation, bath abounded to his glory through our lie, Why are we punished as finners individually, for what has contributed fo exceedingly to God's plory, that it can fearcely be called a fin? To this objection the Apoftle adds, Why not fay slfo, what we apostles are flanderously reported to practife, and even to order; Let us do evil that good may come?

This permicious doctrine the Apostle reprobated with abhorrence, by declaring, that the condemnation of those who hold it is most just, ver. 8. which is all that he now thought fit to fay on the fubject; intending to confute both the objection and the flander more fully afterwards; chap. vi. vii. viii. -

Because the Apostle had affirmed, ver. 2. that the preeminence of the Jews above the Gentiles confilted in the advantages which they derived from the oracles of God, for improving themselves in knowledge, holines, and virtue, the Jew alks, Do you acknowledge that we excel the Gentiles in worthinefs of character, and that, on account thereof, we are entitled to be juffified by the law? Not at all, fays the Apostle; for we have formerly, chap is and ii. proved Jews and Gentiles, that is the fcribes, Pharifees, and lawyers among the Jews, and the flatefmeny philosophers, and common people of the Gentiles, to be all under fin, and obliged to feek juffification by faith<sub>x</sub> ver. 9.-And with respect to the common people of the Jews, I will fhew you by paffages from your own Scriptures, that the generality of them have always been exceedingly corrupt, notwithstanding the advantages which they derived from the oracles of God, ver. 12 - 18. Wherefore Jews and Gentiles being finners, every mouth of man, pretending to juftification as due on account of works, is effectually ftopped, both by the law of nature and by the law of Mofes, and all the world ftands condemned by both, as liable to punifiment from God, ver. 19. -The Apofile having thus, ftep by ftep, led his readers to' the great conclusion which he meant to establish, he produces it as the refult of all his reafonings hitherto : Wherefore, by works of law, there shall no fligh be justified in his fight : becaufe through law is the knowledge of fin, ver. 20.-That is, neither Jew nor Gentile can be justified meritorioufly by works of law; becaufe, law requiring immaculate obedience under the penalty of death, its only operation is to make finners fenfible that they are liable to condemnation, without giving them the leaft hope of mercy: fo that any expectation of eternal life which finners can entertain, must be founded upon a method of justification different from that of law.

This being the proper place for it, the Apoftle introduces his account of the Gofp :1-method of justification, as follows. Becaufe both the law of nature, and the lawof Mofes have made immaculate obedience necessary to juftification, and because no man is able to give such an obedience, a righteousness without law, that is, a different righteousness from immaculate obedience to any law whatever, is now discovered in the Gospel, to be what God requires in order to falvation. And to reconcile the Jews to that kind of righteoufnefs, the Apoftle told them, (deferring the proof of his affertion till afterwards, chap. iv. 1-8.) that it is 'testified by the law and the prophets, ver. 21. even the righteoufness which God has appointed from the beginning, as the righteoufnels of finners; a righteoufnefs which is through the faith enjoined by Jefus Chrift, and which, won all who believe; for with God there is no distinction of perions, in his method of juftifying mankind, ver. 22 .--hand all have finned and c.me fort of the praise of God, 15.23.

Nany of the Jews, however, continued utterly averfe to the new dispensation : First, Because its doctrine of justification by faith rendered the Levitical facrifices, which they believed to be real atonements, altogether ufelefs; and, jurnelly, because they fancied that no facrifice for fin vas appointed under the Golpel. - This latter miltake the Apolite corrected, by informing them that juftification is after gift from God, bultowed on finners through the redemption which is by Chrift Jefus, that is through the ammement which he has made for fin by the facrifice of timelf: ver. 24.-And that on account of his having stand a factifice fo meritorious, God has fet him forth as a arcy-feat, feated on which, confittently with his jufice, he forbears to punish finners immediately, and grants then face to repent and believe, that he may pardon both them who have repented, and believed before the coming of Chrift, ver. 25. and them who shall repent matcheve after his coming, even to the end of the world; nt. 26 - Where then is b. ufling? the boafting of the Genthe philolophers, and of the Jewish scribes, who, being putted up with pride, the one on account of their intellecwal attainments, and the other on account of their zeal in performing the rives of Motos, fancy themfelves enlike to eternal life. To this question the Apostle replies, his excluded: not bowever by law, which only justifies men mentioniously through an immaculate obedience to its propas; but by the law of faith, the Golpel, which juithes linners gratuitoully through faith, ver. 27. and thereby uterly beats down the pride both of the Jews and the Gestiles.

Haing thus explained the Gospel-method of justificaten, and thewn that it is founded not on the merit of men's werks, but in the mercy of God, and in the atonement made for fin by the death of Chrift, the Apostle produces his kcond great conclusion : We conclude then, that by faith man " politica with ut works of law, ver. 28. And truly, unlefs they with the arguments which support it, had been added, the former conclusion, ver. 20. By works of law there shall "All highly fid in his fight, would have an fwered no purpose, but to territy honers .- Farther, to wean the Jews effectually from the legal method of juffification by facrifices, washings, me mate, on which they doted, the Apostle observed, that Itws and Gentiles being all under the government of the fame God, who is equally related to all, as their creator and judge, ver. 29. there cannot be one way of justificaion appointed for the Jews, and another for the Gentiles; but all are to be juffified in one method, namely, by faith, M. 30 .- To conclude: becaufe the unbelieving Jews and Goules affirmed, That in teaching a gratuitous justifica-which from mere favour, will be counted to all, and rewarded tion by faith without works of law, the Apofile made law useles, he told them, this doctrine does not make law ufelefs, but rather establishes it as absolutely necessary, ver. 31. However, the proof of his affortion being a matter of great importance, the Apoltle deferred it till afterwards, that he might propole it at large, chap. vii.

Ver. 1.] The Apostle, in the latter end of the foregoing chapter, has carried his argument to the utmost length. What remains is, to keep the Jew in temper, to fix his convictions, and to draw the general conclution. He has fhewn that the Jews were rather more wicked than the Gentiles, and flood condemned by fuch of them as fincerely did their duty through the fecret influences of divine grace y that a possession of the law, circumcision, and an outward profession of relation to God, gave them no character, and fignified nothing, as to their acceptance with him. This was in effect to fay, that the Jews were as unworthy to be continued in the church, as the Gentiles to be taken into it; and confequently, that in order to their enjoying the privileges of the church, under the Meffish, they flood in need of a fresh display of grace; which if they rejected, God would caft them out of the vineyard. And the Apostle was fensible that the Jew would understand what he had faid in this fenfe. To fet afide his law, his circumcifion, his external advantages, as infufficient to gain him any interest in the favour of God, was to strip him of his peculiar honours, and quite ruin him as a Jew. This must be very difgusting : and the Apostle, who had often debated the point with his countrymen, knew very well what a Jew would be ready to fay upon this occasion. Here, therefore, he feafonably introduces a diakgne between himfelf and the Jew, indulging, as it were, his difgult, by giving him leave to speak for himself; ver. 1-8. and what he is fuppoled to ipeak, we have realon to think was what the Jews had actually replied and objected against the Apostle. This would amuse, and at the fame time inftruct him, and poffibly cool his refentment; efpecially as the Apostle's answer to the first question is much in his favour. There feems no room to doubt, that this dialogue relates to the rejection of the Jews; a fubi-ft which would have come in here naturally enough. But then it would have broken in too much upon the Apoflie's argument: for which reafon he but just touches upon it here, referving the full confideration of it to the oth, 10th, and 11th chapters; particularly ch. ix. 4-23. where we have the fame queftions more diffinctly put, answered, and largely discutted; only we may observe, that here they relate folely to the rej. ction of the Jews, but there they take in allo the calling of the Gentiles. After the dialogue, St. Paul refumes his argument, ver. 9. proves farther by Scripture quotations, that the Jews were guilty before God as well as other men, ver. 10-19. and concludes that no part of mankind could have a right to the bleffings of God's kingdom and covenant upon the footing reported, and as fome affirm that we fay,) damnation is just.

9 What then ? " are we better than they ? No. 'Let us do evil that good may come? whole in no wile: for we have before "proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under fin :

footing of any works of obedience which they had done, ver. 20. but only by the favour of God in the Gospel; which he explains, ver. 21, &c. The fum and force of the ApoRle's argument is this: " All forts of men, Jews " as well as Gentiles, have finned: therefore no part of " mankind can lay claim to the bleffings of God's kingdom and covenant upon the fcore of obedience; and therefore the Jew stands as much in need of grace or " favour, to give him a title to those bleffings under the " kingdom of the Meffiah, as the Gentile. Confequently " the Gentile has as good a title as the Jew; for those bleffings are given only by grace; and grace, or mere favour, is alike free to all mankind : and when all are " # in equal circumstances, it is perfectly absurd for any " to pretend to engrofs it to themfelves, exclusively of " others, who are as good, or but as bad, as they." And thus the Apostle very folidly, and to our great comfort, proves, that we Gentiles, through faith alone, have a good and firm title to all the bleffings of the Gofpel covenant; pardon, privileges, ordinances, the Spirit of God, and the rich hope of everlafting life.

Ver. 2. Much every way ] St. Paul gives a lift of the advantages which the Jew had over the Gentile, ch. ix. 4, 5. but here mentions only one of them, which was most proper to his prefent purpose; and which is so remarkable and important a teltimony to the divine infpiration of the Old Teftament in general, that it can leave no doubt of the full perfuasion of St. Paul upon this head. See Doddridge and Locke. We may read the next claufe, Becaufe they were intrusted with the oracles of God.

Ver. 3. For what if fome did not believe? &c.] This and the following verle are generally understood as a continuation and explication of the Apoltle's answer in the second verfe; whereby the fenfe of the third and fourth verfes is generally embarrafied, as they will not admit of a con-nection with the fecond verie. For in truth, ver. c. is not the words of the Apolle, but a fecond qualition or objection advanced by the Jews: nor is yze, for, a caufal, fhewing the reafon why the having the oracles of God committed to them was a privilege, notwithit anding their nubelief; but the original words ri rale, are interrogative, and may be translated, well, and what? And thus the phrafe is frequently ufed in Xenophon's Memoirs of Socrates: see particularly, sb. ii. c. 6. fect. 2. Whence it appears that the phrase r. yre, in a dialogue, and when the word 7; has no following tubitantive to agree with it, is a form of introducing another question or objection by the inquirer. And as the Apoltle in this place is carrying on a dialogue after the Socratic manner, it is to be underflood as advancing a new queition or objection; and thus every thing flands right and eaty, which otherwife is in great diforder. Did not believe, should rather be, Have not been faithful; that is to fay, have not been obedient. See 1 Pet. ii 7. The Jew here alludes to the charge of wickedness which the Apollie had brought against the Jews in the foregoing chapter. St. Paul has the fame fentiment as the next claufe in chap. ix. 6. He is speaking of the fame thing in both places; and therefore evidently the faith of God, here, is the same with the faith of God, there, or that faithful promise which he made to Abraham. See Gen. xvii. 7, 8. I'illotfon's Sermons, vol. xii. ferm. 1. The verie may be rendered, For what if fome of them were unfaithful, shall their unfaithfulness make void the faithfulnefs of God?

Ver. 4. But every man a liar] Though every man should be a liar. For the next claufe, fee the note on Pfal. li. 4. Dr. Taylor observes, that the Hebrew of that verse literally is, that thou mayes be just in thy speaking, and clean [that is clear] in thy judging. The speaking meant is, the word of promise which God made to David, 2 Sam. vii. 12-16. and the judging referred to is the execution of the threatening denounced, 2 Sam. xii 9-13. and David owns, that if the threatening did not agree with the promife, God was clear from the charge of falfehood; the inconfiftency mult be affigned to his own wickednefs. This is full to the Apostle's purpose. If the promise to Abraham was not made good, as the Jews expected, they might thank themfelves for it. See Lillotfon, vol. xii. ferm. 8.

Ver. 5. The righteoufnefs of Gid] St. Paul hereby intends God's faithfulnets in keeping his promife. This verfe is the language of an unbelieving Jew, and therefore in his mouth God's righteoufnefs, or fidelity to his promife, has relation only to the nation of the Jews, and their being still continued the church and people of God.-Who taketh vengeance, might be rendered, more agreeably to the original, who inflicteth wrath, or, "who is the inflicter of "wrath, as you intimate." See on chap. ii. 1. and on i. 18. This expression evidently points at the rejection of the Jews, and therefore is closely connected with chap. ix. where the Apostle not only handles the fame subject, but refumes thefe very queftions or objections of the unbelieving Jew, and anfwers them at large; and as the rejection of the Jews flands here inferted in the midit of his argument relating to the justification of the Gentiles, it is manifestly connected with that argument, or with the Apostle's doctrine of justification by faith. For after his discourse here, upon the rejection of the Jews, he immediately subjoins, ver. 9. What then ? are we better than they ?-In answer to which, he proves to the end of the chapter that the Jews were not better than the Gentiles, feeing both flood in need of the grace or favour of God for their justification. Thus, in the Apostle's discourse and argument, the rejection of the Jews stands in close connection with his doctrine of justification. But what connection or relation is there between the justification of the Gentiles, and the rejection of the Jews ?- This will appear from what is faid chap. ix. 30, 31, and the note there. In fhort, the rejection of the Jews for their want of faith stands in direct opposition to the justification of the Gentiles by faith; therefore, if we have a true idea of the rejection of the lews, we may thence collect a true idea of the julification of the Gentiles; but the rejection of the Jews is that being caft out of God's church, and ftripped of the privileges and bleffings of God's peculiar people; conkquently the justification of the Gentiles, for which the Apolle pleads, chap. iii. and iv. is their being pardoned, and received to all the privileges and bleffings of God's preulist people. See Locke.

Va. 6. God forbid !] This verfe is the Apostle's answer to the Jews, which he crowds in while the Jew is going on with his observation. In reverence of the Divine Majety, who is perfectly righteous, he qualifies the mere supposition for a moment of his being unrighteous (though this is proposed only for the fake of argument) three ways; phy by putting it into the form of a question, Is God unrightau? Secondly, by adding immediately, that he fpoke in the perfon of another, and as a man might fay who was arguing that the calling off the Jews was a thing incon-Ettent with God's righteoufnels. Thirdly, by interrupting the lew with a ftrong affertion of the most perfect rightcoulnels of God, in the words of Abraham, Gen. xviii. 25. We have a fimilar inftance of crowding in an answer while another perfon is speaking, Hor. lib. ii. fat. 3. Ver. 187.

Ver. 7, 8. For if the truth of God, &c.] The particle for 1018 what follows in this verie, to vengeance, or verath, in the fifth, and shews it to be a continuation of the objection begin there. But the whole eighth verfe is the Apostle's man, the true fenfe of which feems to be this: Says the Jur, "If the faithfulness of God in keeping his promise "is, through our wickedness, made far more glorious than "chewife it would have been, why fhould we Jews be "blamed and condemned as finners, for that which re-"dounds to the honour of God ?" To which the Apofle "His, ver. 8. " And why do you not fay, and draw it into "ageneral rule and maxim, that in all cafes we ought to "do nichtedly, becaufe God can one way or other turn it to "hisown glory? an impious fentiment, which forme charge "upon me; as if, when I magnify the grace of God in "Prioring fin, I advanced this notion, that we ought to "do tril, that good (God's glory) may come of it : for which, and other malicious opposition to the Gospel, "they thall come under the just condemnation of God." See a further answer, chap. ix. 19, &c. We may just there, that rather, ver. 8. is not in the Greek, and it ferns to be improperly supplied. The fense is more truly ad clearly filled up thus: And why do you not fay? which falls in naturally with what follows, "Why do you not "fay, as fome affirm that we fay?" Such an elliptical way of speaking we have, Rev. xxii. 9. Oga un, fee not, that is to fay, "See thou do it not." Ibrough my lie, ver. 7. is to be understood as not believing, ver. 3. and as Ifai. lxiii. 8. For he faid, fur ly they are my people, children that will not lie; that is, "violate my covenant by per-" fidioufly forfaking me, and falling into difobedience and "wickednefs." The last claufe of ver. 8. whofe condemnation is just, feems manifefuly to imply, that there are certain rules which God has laid down for us, difobedience to which, in any imaginable circumstances, is univerfally a moral evil; even though the quantity of good arising thence to our fellow-creatures flould be greater than that arifing from an observance of those rules; for if this be not allowed, there can be no fhadow of force in the Apolile's conclution. See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 9. What then ?- Are we better than they ?] The Apostle having given the Jew leave to put in his objections. in reference to what would difgust him most,-the rejection of the Jews; and having given fuch answers as he thought proper at prefent,-now returns to the main point, namely, to prove that the Gentiles have as good a right to the privileges and bleffings of God's covenant as the Jews; which he introduces very properly by putting this question into the Jew's mouth; What then? Are we better than the Gentiles? which by the way makes it clear, that in his arguments he confiders the Jews and Gentiles in a body. or collective capacity, and that he is arguing for a justi-. fication agreeable to fuch a capacity; namely, by which the believing Gentiles were taken into the church, when the unbelieving Jews were call out. For this point, when ther Jews, or how far Jews were better than Gentiles, or had a better claim to the bleffings and privileges of the kingdom of God, is the very fuoject upon which he is difputing; and in this extensive collective fenfe, all his arguments and conclutions are to be understood. He fays, see have before proved,-namely, chap. ii. 3. where, under the gentler compellation of O man! he charges the lewswith being finners, as well as the Gentiles, and ver. 17 -24. thews, that by having the law, they were ng more kept from being finners, than the Gentiles were without the law : and his charge against them that they were finners, he he reproves from the testimony of their own facred books contained in the Old Teftament. tations from Scripture, the Apostle is evidently giving a defcription of the general character and morals of the infidel Jews in his own time, when he wrote the Epifile; a description, which suits their case as exactly as the foregoing one of the degeneracy of the heathen world fuits theirs, the passage being picked and chosen for the purpole; but the manner of representing it is different. In the cafe of the Gentiles, he fpeaks out plainly; for the Jews would freely enough attend to an account of their corruptions; and the Gentile, it is probable, would be more in danger of defpifing and neglecting what he faid, than of being difgusted at it. But had he used the Jews in the fame open manner, it would have roufed every paffion and prejudice of the Jewish reader; and he could have expected no other but a rejection of his letter with indignation. To keep him therefore in temper, he, 1. gives no intimation of his defign, but enters upon it covertly, -as it is written. 2. He couches the charge under Scripture expressions, and turns the eyes of the Jew rather to ancient facts, in which notwithstanding, as in a glafs, he might fee the very deformed complexion of the prefent Jews. 3. He uses the term law, in ver. 19. (which there fignifies the whole Old Teftament,) rather than Scriptures, as being of greater force and authority with the Jews; and then concludes in that general manner; We know that what foever things the law faith, it fuith to them that are under the law; meaning the Jews, and fuggefting the obligation that they were under to attend to a charge advanced against them out of their law, which they owned was of divine authority. This was fufficient for a Jew who was difpoled to reflect, and at the fame time avoids what might pervert his calm and fober reflections. It is farther observable, that these quotations from Scripture do not prove that these characters belonged to all the ancient Jews without exception : for there were at the fame time in the nation perfons of a different character; nor could the Apostle intend that they fhould be applied to every individual among the Jews in his own time; for then they would have included himself with the rest of the Apostles, and all the other Jews who had embraced the Christian faith, and were perfons of undoubted piety and holinefs. Nay, he could not suppose, that even his account of the corrupt morals of the beathen world, given in chap. i. 18, &c. was true of them all, without exception. His own arguments, chap ii. 10, 14, 15, 26, 27. evince the contrary. It was fufficient to his purpofe, if the generality of mankind were corrupt: for this appears ground fufficient for the rejection or excision of them, with regard either to temporal life, or the privileges of the church; that is to fay, God might in justice have deflroyed the whole world, which was generally exceedingly vicious, although there were fome few perfons of piety and goodness in it (for whole happinels he eafily could and certainly would have provided in the world to come through the alone merit of Chrift). The Apostle is here speaking of bodies of people,---of Jews and Gentiles in a collective capacity. In the affair of the golden calf, wherein the Ifraelites fo corrupted themfelves, Exod. xxxii. 7, 8. God might justly have rejected and confumed them, and have made his promife good in the perfon of Mofes and his posterity, as he proposed, ver. 10. though we have reafon to think that there were fome who had not engaged in that inftance of idolatry and defection from God; for we find that numbers appeared on the Lord's fide, ver. 26-29. In fhort, the Apostle is taking collective bodies of men into the church, or continuing them in it; in reference to which it is true, that those may not be taken into the church in this world, who yet fhall be taken into the kingdom of heaven in the world to come; and many are now taken into the church, who shall for ever be excluded from happinels in the other world. Confequently a fet of texts, which prove the general corruption of the Jewish nation, may be a good argument of their deferving to be rejected from the privileges of God's church; or that it must be by grace alone, that they, in this general collective fenfe, could be continued in the visible church and special covenant of God, notwithftanding there might be among them fome righteous perfons, not involved in the general corruption; who, whether they were in the church, or out of it, would be taken care of in the great day of account;-that is, whether they were or were not juffified with regard to the donation and poffeffion of church privileges, or the elcaping of the wrath which would fall on the Jewish nation, when they were rejected, and their polity demolifhed,-would certainly be jutlified, and faved in the day of judgment. In fine, we cannot have a just idea of the Apostle's arguments, unles we keep in mind that he is arguing concerning the rejec-tion of Jews, and the reception of Gentiles, in a general collective capacity, to the prefent privileges of the church and covenant of God; namely, in fuch a fenfe and capacity, that fome good and righteous men might be left out among the rejected, and some unrighteous perfons taken in among the elect and justified. See on Pfal. xiv. 3.

Ver. 19. The law fuith] It appears here, that this word law fometimes fignifies the Old Teftament in general; for not one of the quotations above is taken from the Pentateuch. Instead of that every mouth may be flopped, the original would be better rendered, fo that every mouth is flopped. Instead of may become guilty before God, the original may be rendered more exactly, fland convicted before God. Archbishop Archbishop Tillotson would render it, liable to divine julia, which is the fame in sense. See his works, fol. rol. i. p. 126.

Vo. 20. By the deeds of the law] The deeds or works of the law here mentioned appear to be those in which both lews and Gentiles were defective; and with regard to which every mouth was flopped, or on account of which to part of mankind could plead a right or worthiness to be admitted into the kingdom of God. Some render the last caute, The law takes cognizance of fin. See Locke, Vitringa, and Bilhop Bull's Harmonia.

Fa. 21. But now, &c.] But now a righteoufness of God without law is discovered, being testified by the law and the triphets, (ver. 22.) even the righteoufnefs of God through faith in Jelus Chrift, &c. See the note on chap. i. 17. The quettion with the Apostle is, "Upon what footing do "either Jews or Gentiles obtain this inftance of justi-"fication or falvation,-namely, to have a place among "God's people, in his family and kingdom, and to be "made meet to be partakers of the promises, and of the "heavenly calling ?" Now in a court of judicature there ate two ways of righteousnels, or justification. First, when <sup>2</sup> perfon stands upon his obedience to law, or a rule of atica; then righteousness, justification, or a right to the deling, whatever it be, is his due; and the lawgiver is build by his own conflitution to give it : this is the righteopines or justification which is of law or works. The d'er way of justification is, by the mere grace or favour of the lawgiver. When the law is tranigreffed, the finner has no dependence but upon the mercy and goodness of the invgiver or judge, and can be justified only by his Mice, temitting fin, and conferring the undeferved blefings. Now this is the righteousness or justification of God seitent law, because it is provided and granted by him, Letting afide law, or in a way different from that in which ber jullifies; or, it is the righteousness or justification of faith, as it is answered on our part, only by belief and trut in the mercy and favour of God. Law and works give us a right which the lawgiver cannot deny, unless he "in teverie and break his own conflitution, granting life and happines to the obedient; which constitution the Apolle here fuppoles: but grace and faith fuppole that We are tranforeflors, obnoxious to wrath; and that if we escape destruction, and obtain any blessings, it is purely because the judge is merciful, and of his own fovereign goodness chooses to spare us, and to bestow farther favours upon us. Of works, as antecedent to justification, and inconfiftent with grace and faith, the Apolle fpeaks, in chapters iii. iv. v. ix. x. Of works, as confequent to justification, and confiftent with grace and faith, he discourses, chapters vi. vii. viii. xii. xiii. xiv. Or thus,-Of grace and faith, as excluding works, he discourses in chapters iii. iv. v. ix. x. Of grace and faith, as obliging to good works, and producing them, he fpeaks in chapters vi. vii. viii. xii. xiii. xiv. Or it may otherwife be expressed thus :---Of the terms of our prefent admittance into the kingdom and covenant of God, he discourses in chapters iii. iv. v. ix. x. and of our obligations to obedience, after we are taken into them, he discourses in chapters vi. vii, &c. But it is proper to observe, that by what is here offered, it is not meant that no works or obedience but what are finlefs will be accepted; or as if there were no allowance for repentance, or no benefit of pardon, now that we are taken into the kingdom and covenant of God. For pardon, upon repentance, is one of the privileges of that kingdom, and a bleffing freely given us in Chrift, and not to us only, but to the truly penitent in all ages and nations, who will be pardoned at last, though they have not in this life fuch clear knowledge of it as we enjoy. Ver. 23. And come fort of the glory of God] "They "have failed of rendering him that glory which was fo "justly his due; and thereby have not only made them-"iclues unworthy of the participation of glory and hap-"pinefs with him, but itand exposed to his fevere and "dreadful difpleafure."

Ver. 24. By his grace] Grace or favour means that compationate difpolition of the divine nature, whereby God freely remits his right of punishment, and receives penitent finners into favour on terms which he was not bound in justice to do. Concerning the true import of the words redemption, propitiation, &c. we refer to what has been faid in the notes on the Old Testament, at the fame time referring the reader to Peter Whitfield's "Christianity of "the New Testament," p. 95, &c. where he will find a very learned and copious elucidation of these words on Exod. xxv. 17. The Alexandrian copy omits the words dia missues by faith, which feems conformable to the fense of the Apostle here. He fays that God hath fet forth Chrift to be the propitiatory in his blood : the atonement under the law was made by blood, fprinkled on the propitiatory, or mercy-feat; Lev. xvi. 14. " Christ," fays St. Paul here, " is now fet forth, and fhewn by God to be " the real propitiatory in his own blood." See Heb. ix. 25, 26. where the facrifice of himfelf is opposed to the blood of others. God hath fet him forth to be fo, to declare his righteoufnefs,-the mercy-feat being the place whereon God fpake, and declared his pleafure; Exod. xxv. 22. There God always appeared, Levit. xvi. 2. It was the place of his prefence; and therefore he is faid to dwell between the cherubim (Pfal. ixxx. 1.); for the mercyfeat was between the cherubim : in all which refpects our Saviour, who was the antitype, is properly called the propitiatory. If, however, the words through faith be retained, they must not be understood as if our faith was the cause of Christ's being appointed to be a mercy-feat. The cause of Chrift's being appointed to be a mercy-leat is, the free purpofe and grace of God; but it has reference to our ufe and application of the merc yseat. See Rev. vii. 14. xii. 11. For the remiffion of fins that are pash, may be read, In relation to the remiffion, &c.; for the original word do, with an accufative, frequently fignifies. in respect, or relation to. See on chap. viii. 10. The fins that are p.f., evidently mean in this place, the fins which both Jews and Gentiles had been guilty of before the Gofpel had been promulgated; by which fins both were deferving of deftruction, and unworthy the bloffings of God's covenant. See 2 Cor. v. 19. Locke and Bos.

- Ver. 26. To declare, I fay, &c.] "He has, I fay, proposed "his Son for a demonstration of his rightcoufnets, or " method of juftifying; which now, in this prefeat ever-" memorable and fignal time, is fo wonderfully illustrated " in the great transactions of our own age; intended for " this purpofe, that he might be and appear strictly just, " and yet at the fame time, without impeaching in any " degree the rights of his government, the justifier of him " who is of the faith of Jeius; that is, of every one who " fincerely believes in him; and acquicfces in that method " of falvation, which God has published by him, and eftablished in his perfect obedience and meritorious suf-"ferings." It is no way wonderful that God fhould be merciful, or fuithful to his promifes, though the justifier of believing finners,—as fome would have us understand this paffage; but that he should be just in such an act, might have feemed incredible, had we not received an account of the propitiation and atonement, by whom made, and in how aweful a manner. Thus the perfections of God, which were diffionoured by our rebellion, are glorified. He appears, by this method of juffification, inconceivably rich in thewing mercy ; yet fleady, inflexibly fleady, in executing vengeance. The feeptre of grace and the fword of justice have each their due exercise, each their full fcope. The holinefs of the divine nature, and the dignity of the divine government, are not only maintained, but most magnificently difplayed. Indeed it is the poculiar excellence of this wonderful expedient, that it renders all the divine attributes fupremely venerable, and fupremely amiable. The words at this time, is to ive wage, the now time, or the time that now is, meaning the time when the Gofpel was promuged, are emphatical. They diffinguish the justification which God at that time exhibited to the world, from the justification which he will manifest to them who do good, that is, produce all the fruits of juffifying faith, in the day when he will judge the world by Jefus Chrift. See Doddridge and Fletcher.

Ver. 27. Where is boaffing then? ] Where is glorying then? See on chap. ii. 17. What is here meant by glorying, may be nearly determined by thefe two remarks: First, this question muit be different from that in ver. 9. What then? are we better than they? - Secondly, the glorying here fpoken of must be fuch, as is congruous to works of righteoufnets which a perfor performs; but which faith, or a dependence on favour, will not admit : for the Apolle here tells us, that this glorying is not excluded by the law of works, but by the law of faith; and chap. iv. 2. that he who is juftified by works, hath glorying; and Ephef. ii. 8, 9. By GRACE are ye faved through faith ;- not of WORKS, lva 12h Tis xau; nonlai, lo that no man can glory. Were we faved, or taken into God's kingdom or covenant by works, there would be room for glorying; that is, our falvation might be afcribed to human virtue or goodnefs: but whereas it is the effect of pure free grace, there is no place for glorying.

Ver. 28. Therefore we conclude] This inference is drawn from the whole preceding argument. The Greek word "Autheamos, in the fingular, without the article, frequently fignifies man, mankind, or any man whatfoever. And the Apoftle's argument requires it fhould be taken in this general fenfe, fo as to include all mankind, Jews and Gentiles, or all flefb, in opposition to no flefb, ver. 20. For ver. 28. is the reverse of ver. 20. and this extensive fenfe of the word man is confirmed by the following verse; for the Apostle divides the whole world in this Epistle only into Jews and Gentiles. It is evident from ver. 30. that the

the meaning of the claufe, Man is justified by faith, is, "Mankind may be justified, or may be interested by faith "in the bleffings of the Meffiah's kingdom ;" for it is faid, that God will juffify the circumcifion, &c. that is, Lither Jew er Gentile, any part of mankind, may be justified by faith. Ged is ready to juffify them whenever they believe.

Vn. 30. Seeing it is me God, &c.] So that it is one God, the fime eternal and unchangeable ] chovah, who will justify, ke. Mr. Locke would render it, feeing God is one ; and fuppole it an allusion to the prediction, Zech. xiv. 9. that the Lord full be One, and his name One,-fulfilled by the publication of the Gofpel: but the ailufion appears far-fetched. The Apollie, having afferted that God is the God of the Gentiles, as well as of the Jews, goes on to observe that there is but one God, whole tender mercies are over all bis write; and with whom there is no acceptance of perfons. See chap. ii. 11.

Var. 31. Yea, we establish the law] Meaning, through jab. He did not make word law through fuith, but, on the contary, shalified law through faith. Now this demonfutes that low, in this chapter, is to be understood neither of the ceremonial law, nor of law in the rigorous fenfe, with the penalty of death annexed for every transgration ; for it scertain, the Apostle through faith stablished law in nuther of thefe fenfes. Law therefore, in this chapter, not neeffarily be und rstood in that general fenfe, in which it may be applied both to J ws and Gentiles; or, as it is simply, a rule of obedience, or the law of the Gofpel. See on ver. 20. Faith, in the apollolic feheine, is the purciple of obedience: Gofpel faith works by love, and whent works is dead, James, ii. 17. We are God s work-Parily, acated in Chrift Jefus unto good works : they that here in Goal, sught to be careful to maintain good works. The Christian as under the strongest obligations to righutulates and obedience. This the Apostle urges very Autooully in chap. vi. where he fliews at large how he had a law, or chedience through faith. See " Chrift the "Matter," p. 90, &c.

Istantia.-The fad use which those perfons have heretofee made of the divine favours, by whole hands they Leve been conveyed down to us (ver. 1.), ought by no meens to leffen our gratitude towards God. If it were Regention advantage to the Jews, to have received the and of Gid wrapped up in fo many obfcure clouds, and it were fealed up (ver. 2.); how great is the mercy tewards Ceruflians, who have received the interpretation, and the effect of the promises contained in them ! But a the time time, what a weful judgment may not they ex-Pd, who fail to make a good use of this extraordinary piniegel-Gratitude and fear ought scarce ever to be iquaid in reference to this fubject ; but while we thanktels own the inetlimable goodness of God in having fatoured us with his facred oracles, it behoves us to endeatour to improve in the knowledge of them. And, thus instructed, let us be careful to form the most honourable notion of God, as the worthy and universal Judge, who will never fail to do right, without respect of perfons.

What a ftriking reflection does the Apoftle fuggeft in ver. 6. !-God himfelf, were he unjuft, could not be the Judge of the world; and yet man, who is comparatively nothing but injuffice,-vain, erring man, undertakes boldly to judge of every thing. May these views of God and of ourfelves produce in us an abhorrence of every evil thing, of every rafi judgment, which must necessarily be displeasing to him: nor let us even allow ourfelves to be brought under the influence of those fallacious and pernicious maxims, which would perfuade us that, " The goodness of " the intention fanctifies the badnefs of the action;" (fee ver. 8.) or that the pretended benevolence of the end will juftify irregularities in the means. God's judgment and decifion is final; and the infpired Apolile's authoriev is an answer to a thousand subtilities, which might attempt to turn us from the ftricteft rules of that immutable rectitude, on which it always proceeds.

Who can read the melancholy picture of human nature, ver. 10-19. copied by the hand of St. Paul, from the lines first drawn by other inspired writers, without deep humility and lamontation? To fuch a degree was it funk, that there was none righteous, no, not one ; none difpofed to f ek after God, or to cultivate his fear :-- and from this bitter root, the apoftacy of our nature, what deteftable fruits may not be expected to proceed !- The threat like an open fepulchre, ready to confume and devour,---the deceitful tongue, - the envenomed lips, - the malicious heart, the murderous hand ! And who can wonder, that fuch reb.ls to their heavenly Father thould fometimes prove rufians to their brethren!

Let those devoutly blefs God, who have been preferved either from falling into fuch enormities, or from falling by them. It was his grace that reftrained us from finning against him in so aggravated a manner; it is his providence which has guarded us from those, whose feet are fruift to fled blood, and whole paths are freewed with defirition and mifer y.

Above all, we fhould remember the view in which thefe inftances of corruption were brought; it was to evince this deplorable but undeniable truth, that Jews and Gen-tiles are all under fin, ver. 19. The purpose, therefore, of divine conviction being hereby answered on our hearts, let us humble ourfelves before God, as those who stand guilty in his prefence, and obnoxious to his judgment.

How fhould our whole fouls rejoice in that glorious difplay of divine mercy, attempered and harmonized with divine justice, in our redemption by Christ, to which the Apoille bears fo noble a testimony ! ver. 20-24. We are all become guilty before God; fo that if he should mark iniquity, no flesh living could be justified before hun: what fo reafonable, what fo indifpendably necessary, therefore, fore, as with all reverence to effeem, and with all joy to embrace the righteousness of God, as now attested by the law and the prophets, by Chrift and his apoftles; and which we have the divine word to affure us, shall be upon all believers, without any difference,-humbling ourfelves in the prefence of God, as those who have finned, and come flort of the glory of God; and feeking to be justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chrift Jefus !

To this mighty Deliverer let us continually look, as the great propitiation of loft man; exercifing faith in his Blood, and rejoicing that those, which seemed to our seeble apprehensions the most jarring attributes of the Deity, are now reconciled and glorified ;- that mercy and truth have met together, that righteoufnefs and peace have kiffed each other. And while we readily acknowledge that all boufling is excluded, let us, in the grateful overflowings of our fouls, fall down before that throne whence pardon is difpenfed; confessing that this act of grace is our only plea, and abaling ourfelves before God for ever, in a fense of the demerit of our fins, and of the abundance of his mercy, ver. 25-27. It should at all times be noted that the more faith there is in a foul, the lefs pride is there. Where is boafing then ?- It is excluded .- By what law ?the law of faith. Faith humbles man by making him fenfible that without Chrift he is nothing but falfehood, fin, and unworthinefs; and that it is through the merits and grace of his Saviour, that he begins, continues, or completes any thing which is really good.

Yews and Gentiles are bound to unite in thankfgivings to God, and in love to each other, as having been all involved in the fame condemnation,-all partakers of the fame compation. But Chriftians are especially called upon to remember, that by this rich display of grace, the Almighty intended not to fuperfede, but to eftablish the law. See ver. 29-31. May we, therefore, make it our ferious concern, that not only the actions of our lives, but the fentiments of our hearts, be directed and determined by that law ; which is now peculiarly enforced by more powerful motives, than when it appeared from Sinai in all its unallayed terrors : let it be feen at all times, and in all our conduct, that the love of Christ effectually constrains us to glorify his name, and exalt the honours of our incarnate God,—that God, who never flews himfelf more plainly to be our God, than when he produces fincere love through faith in our hearts.

REFLECTIONS .- ift, The Apofile proceeds to answer the objections raifed against the doctrine that he had advanced, and to confirm the truth which he had afferted.

1. He answers the objections raifed against his positions. [1.] If the Jews are thus in the fame condemnation as the Gentiles, what advantage have they, notwithftanding the peculiar favours fhewn them of God, and the divinely instituted rites, particularly circumcision, which he appointed them? The Apostle answers, Much every way: chiefly becaufe that unto them were committed the oracles of God. In the law and the prophets they had the most bleffed means vouchfafed them to come to the knowledge of the truth, and effectially of that Meffiah who was the fum and fubstance of the oracles of God: and it was also their honour to be intrusted with the keeping of these facred records. Their advantages therefore above the Gentiles were very great and fingular. Note; Among our most invaluable bleffings we fhould always reckon our Bibles; for in them we have eternal life revealed to us.

[2.] If it be objected to this, that, though the Jews had the oracles of God, fome did not believe ; admit it. But what then ? fball their unbelief make the faith of God without effect? Shall the promife-keeping God, becaufe of the infidelity of fome, fail of fulfilling his promifes to Abraham and his faithful spiritual feed, who perfeveringly truft upon him according to his word? God forbid ! His word mult be accomplished, and his promises are fure to every faithful foul. Yea, let God be true, let it be for ever acknowledged that he is fo; but let every man, who dates difpute his veracity and truth, know that he must be found a liar. Men are inconftant, deceitful, and vain; no confidence, comparatively speaking, is to be placed in them; but God never can nor will deceive us: as it is written, That thou mighteft be justified in thy fayings, and mighteft overcome when thou art judged; as David acknowledged, Pf. li. 4. for, notwithstanding his foul falls and great unfaithfulnels, God would not alter the word which was gone out of his mouth concerning that Meffiah who fhould fpring from his loins. And he will for ever ftand clear of all imputations which foolifh men may caft upon him, and be found faithful and true, though we prefumptuoufly dare arraign his rightcousnels, or censure his conduct.

[3.] But some perverse Jew may fay, whose character I will perfonate, speaking as such a man, If our righteous fuels commend the righteoufness of God, and he gain glory by our wickedness and unbelief, both glorifying his justice in our punishment, punithment, and his grace in calling the Gentile finners in our flead, and justifying them through the obedience of his Son unto death, what fhall we fay? Is not God unrightens, (un that, what fhall we fay? Is not God unrightens, (un that, obe), who taketh vengeance for that unbelief and unrighteoufnefs, which ferves as a foil more eminently to difplay the lustre of his divine perfections, his truth, holinefs, and grace? With abhorrence the Apolle rejets the infinuation. God farbid ! for then how fail God junge the world? If he were not infinitely righteous in his nature, he would be unfit for this high office : and if h, by his overruling providence, brings good out of eril, and magnifies his grace more eminently where fin has most abounded, fin has not therefore the lefs evil or malighty, nor has the finner aught to plead, fince he defigns moting lefs than the divine glory.

[4] But the fame carnal Jew, whom I have perfonated before, may farther urge, If the truth of God hath more drunded through my lie unto his gl.ry; and my unbelief which gives the lie to his promifes, and my wickedness which gives the lie to my profession, ferve to magnify his teracity, why yet am I alfo judged as a finner ? and punished for transgretitions which ferve rather to magnify God than w diffionour him? and may we not rather abandon ourklus to evil, in order that good may come, and God's grace and truth receive greater glory in justifying those who betere on his Son? And fuch malicious and blafphemous nputs are spread by our Jewish enemies, who confidently thim that this is the doctrine which we as apostles preach, and as Chrittians believe. But we abhor the fuggestion, are declare to fuch flanderers of us and the truth, and to al who date thus abuse the holy doctrines of grace, that their damnation is juff, and inevitable. Note; (1.) The ked of ministers and of men have had the foulest afperbus alt on them, and been charged with holding the net barid blasphemies. (2.) The injured characters of his intellidors God will avenge. (3.) 'They who abuse the dollrines of grace, as arguments for, licentiousnels, Till perifh with most aggravated guilt.

2 The Apofile returns, after confuting the Jewish objettins, to the main queftion in debate, Whether Jews, 8 will as Gentiles, were not all under fin? Are we better thating? No, in no wife: for we have before proved at large in the two former chapters, that both Jews and Gentur art all under fin, condemned by the guilt, enflaved by the power, and liable to the eternal wrath which is the vers of fin. And to enforce this truth, the Apofile with the Scriptures, which the Jews admitted, as conting the fulleft proof of his affertion. God declares, Pl. tiv. 1-3. That there is none righteous, according to the pathet demends of his holy law, no not one: fo corrupted hour nature, that there is none that underflandeth; the human mind by nature is darkened, and cannot diffeover or receive the things which be of the Spirit of God; there is none that feeketh after God, no one good difpolition remaining in the natural heart, nor defire after communion with God; but evil, and only evil, and that continually. Hence the Pfalmift afferts of all mankind, that they are all gone out of the way, following the bent of their native corruption; they are altogether become unprofitable, bringing forth no fruit to God's glory in that flate of nature; there is none that doeth good, no not one. And the foul ftreams which flow from this polluted fountain are deferibed in other places of the Scripture : their throat is an open fepulchre, voracious and infatiable in the purfuits of their lufts and covetoufnefs ; with their tongues they have used deceit, flattering, false, faithless; the poison of asps is under their lips, fecretly, artfully, does their tongue drop the malignant venom, to blaft the fame or deftroy the life of their neighbour; whole mouth is full of curfing and bitternels, blal-pheming God himfelf, and shooting out their bitter words of rancour and reviling against the people and the good ways of the Lord; their feet are fwift to fled blood, every member of their body is a ready inftrument of iniquity; defiruction and mifery are in their ways, and wherever they go they mark their path with mifchief, fpreading their wickedness as a plague, pestilential to others, and at laft bringing perdition on themfelves; and the way of peace have they not known, ftrangers to whatever would conduce to their own peace and happine's both here and hereafter; diflurbing, as far they can, by their malignity and perverfenefs, the peace of mankind : there is no fear of God before their eyes; destitute of every gracious principle : and as this is the root of all their wickedness, fo it is the fumnit of all their ungodlinefs,-they leave God far above out of their fight. And fuch being the fpirit of God's defcription of every man by nature, declared by him who fearcheth the heart, and knoweth what is in man, the univerfal guilt and desperate wickedness of the whole human race, both Jews and Gentiles, cannot but be most evident. While we read the dreadful charge, may we be led to a humbling acknowledgment of the truth, and from the deepest heartfelt conviction be laid in the duft, fubmitting wholly to the righteoufnefs of God by faith !

2dly, The Apofile proceeds to apply the truths which he had advanced and proved.

1. All the world is become guilty before God, and no fleih can be justified in God's fight by the deeds of the law, because all have funced and come flort of the glory of God, have come flort of righteousness, and therefore of heaven. According to the several dispensations under which they have lived, the law speaketh both to Jews and Gentiles, and condemns them as transgreffors. The Gentiles have offended against those precepts of the moral law, which God, though more obscurely, has shewed them; and are forgiven, and whole fins are covered.

and the Jews, against the clearer revelation, which in the Scriptures they have enjoyed; fo that every mouth muff be flopped, and guilt evident and confessed appear upon every living foul. For by the law is the knowledge of fin; fo far from being able to justify any man, it is a glass which can of itself only show him his deformity, the straight rule to mark his fad deviations from it. Note; (1.) Man in his fallen nature is become flefb, fallen and corrupted; and therefore it is impollible that, in his prefent ruined state, he should of himself be just before God. (2.) All flesh mult  $\mu$  ad guilty at God's bar, and no man can possibly be faved, till he has feen, felt, and owned that he has deferved most justify to be dammed.

2. To those who, from the conviction which the law brings to their confciences, are driven to defpair of acceptance with God on account of any doings and duties of their own, the Gospel reveals the method of divine grace, appointed and provided for the finner's juftification before God. But now, fince all hope is fled of obtaining favour with God on the footing of our own obedience, the righteoufnefs of God without the law, which the moral law never difcovered, is manifelled by Jefus Chrift, and by the preaching of the Gospel, being witheffed by all the types and figures of the ccremonial law, and by the prophets, Ifai. xlv. 24 25. Jer. xxiii. 6. Dan. ix. 24. So that even during the time that the Mofaical dispensation lasted, the Jews were taught to look for a better righteoufnefs than that which they could obtain by the deeds of the law; even the rightesufness of God which is now received by faith in our adored Redeemer Jefus Chrift, and judicially made over, and reckoned to the account of every foul which, renouncing every other hope, lays hold on this fet before him; and it is unto all and upon all them that believe, whether Jew or Gentile, for there is no difference ; they alike need it, as having all finned and come fhort of God's glory, and he freely beftows it on them without any regard to the degrees of their guilt. Nor is there the leaft first-moving cause in any of us to engage God to have respect to us. We lie in one promiscuous mass of cor-• ruption, till through grace we repent, and are justified freely by his grace through the redemption which is in Jefus Chrift, who by his obedience unto death paid down the invaluable price of our redemption, which does not at all affect the riches of the grace respecting us, but rather infinitely enhances it: we owe it to God's boundlefs mercy, that he provided, qualified, and accepted our glorious Surety, and freely gave him up for us all .- Whom God hath fet forth, in the fulnefs of time fending him in the human nature, to be a propitiation, to be the one great propitiatory facrifice, that, through faith in his blood, the chief of finners might boldly approach a throne of grace. And hereby, (1.) The best of bickings is secured to us, even the remission of fins that are past, through the forbearance of God. The facrifices under the law were infusficient to take away fin; the faithful therefore under the Old Testament had recourie to this atoning Blood which in the fulnefs of time flould be flied, and in the view thereof God bore with them, pardoned and accepted them. And we are infinitely indebted to. this Blood which speaks before the throne, and to the forbearance of God with us in confequence thereof, that we have not through our repeated provocations been cut off long fince, as we have deferved, and been caft into hell for our fins. (2.) Hereby the greatest honour redounds to God; for in this his method of dealing with finners, he thews and demonstrates his own righteoufnefs, both the glory of his justice in the publiment of fin, and the transcendent excellence and perfection of the Redeemer's infinite merit, by means of which, confistent with the divine glory, an honourable provision was made for the pardon of fin, and neither God's truth, juffice, nor holinefs impeached by the grace extended to the finner: fo that at this time, under the Gospel dispensation, he declares his righteoufnels, that he may be just, and withal the justifier of him which believeth in Jefus. Never was God's difpleafure against fin more awefully difplayed than when he laid upon his Son the iniquities of us all. (3.) Hereby all boafting is excluded from the fons of men; none can fay he is accepted before God on account of any works of rightcoufnefs done by him, or forefeen in him; all are excluded. By what law? f works? Nay, but by the law of fuith; by that gracious evangelical difpentation, wherein the blood of God our Redeemer is proposed as the only meritorious caufe of the finner's acceptance. The conclusion then from the above premifes is evident, that a man is and can be juftified before God in no other way than by faith only, without the deeds of the law.

3. This privilege of free juftification, through a Redeemer's blood, is common to the Gentile as well as the Jew. Is God then, in this new difpenfation of his grace in the Gofpel of his dear Son, the God of the Jews only? or peculiarly? Is he not of the Gentiles alfo? Yes, of the Gentiles alfo. It is a common fulvation, and both are alike freely invited to partake of it;—Seeing it is one God which fhall juffify the circumcifion by fait, and the uncircumcifion through faith, both Jews and Gentiles flanding exactly on the fame footing, without refpect of perfons, or any difference in the way of their acceptance.

4. He concludes with obviating an objection which fome might raife, as if he hereby made void the moral law, the eternal rule of righteoufnefs, as ufelefs and infignificant; but he rejects with deteftation the fuggeftion;—Gad farbid! Yea, fo far from making it void, we effabligh the law. Its true ufe remains the fame as ever, to convince of fin, and to be, not a covenant of life, but a law of obedience; and that faith which flews it manifefted in the higheft by the perfect obedience of Chrift to the death of the crois, as it works by love, is the most powerful principle to engage our hearts to delight in the law of God after the inner man, and to run the way of his commandments, walking in in the glorious liberty of the children of God, a liberty not to transgress, but to obey.

9 Cometh this bleffedness then upon the also? for we fay that faith was reckoned to circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision Abraham for righteousness.

CHAP. IV.

THE Apolle having, in the preceding chapter, fhewn the impollibility of man's being justified meritoriously by obelience to any law, moral or ceremonial, judged it necellury, for the fake of the Jews, to confider more particularly the merit and efficacy of ceremonial performances. For these having no foundation in the nature of things, the only motive from which they can be performed, must be a regard to the divine command. Hence they have always hen confidered as acts of piety highly pleafing in the fight of God. This was the cafe more especially with the Jews, who because the rites of Moses were of divine appointment, thought the observance of them fo meritorious, that they had not the least doubt of obtaining justification and bivation by them : and therefore they were at all times more careful in observing the rites of the law, than in performing the moral righteoufness which it enjoined.

To correct this, which is the error of the superstitious in al religions, the Apostle examined the justification of Abraham, the father of believers ; and thewed from Molcs's account, that his circumcifion, though performed when he ras ninety-nine years old, had not the least influence in his justification; he having obtained the promife of justiheation by means of his faith, long before he was circumcird. To this example, the Apostle appealed with great propriety, both becaufe circumcifion was the most difficult of all the rites enjoined in the law, and because, Abraham bing the father of believers, his justification is the pattern of theirs. Wherefore, if circumcifion contributed nothing towards Abraham's juffification, the Jews could not hope whe julified thereby, nor by the other rites of the law; and were much to blame in preffing thefe rites on the Gentiles, as neceffary to their falvation, and in configuing il to domnation who were out of the pale of the Jewish durch.

lie Apostle begins his reasonings on this subject, with aking the lews what it was that Abraham, the father of bilities, obtained by those fervices pertaining to the flesh, which they to highly valued, ver. 1.- He did not obtain justification: for if Abraham were justified by the merit el un morel or ceremonial work, he might have boafted that he julification was no favour, but a debt due for what he had performed. Yet in this transaction with Ged, he had no fuch ground of boafting, ver. 2 - As is plan from Ged's counting his faith to him for righteoufach; which implies, that in rewarding him as a righteous serion, God did not discharge a debt, but bestow a favour, to 3-For the perfon who works receives the reward, tet a a favour, but as a debt, ver. 4.-But to one who is et laid to have wrought, but to have believed what was [amiled by God, whole prerogative it is to justify finners, hash is counted for righteoufnefs, by more favour, Wherefore, from Mofes's account of the juflifi-142. IL cation of Abraham, it appears that he was juftified freely, without meriting it by any kind of work whatever; confequently that the Gospel method of justification is testified by the law itself, as the Apostle affirmed, chap. iii. 21.

The fame thing is teftified by the prophets. For David nowhere reprefents men as juftified before God, either by obeying the precepts of God's law perfectly, or by performing circumcinon, or by offering facrifice, or by doing any of those rites which purify the fleft; but he defcribes the bleffednefs of the man to whom the Lord counteth righteousnefs without such works; faying, (Pfal. xxxii. 1, 2.) Bleffed, like Abraham, are they whose inquities are forgiven, ver. 7.—And to whom the Lord will not count fin, ver. 8.—From this it appears, that the not counting of fin is the fame with the counting of righteousnefs, as it obtains pardon for the finner for all his transgressions.

In chap. ii. the Apostle, by arguments taken from the character and perfections of God, had proved that the heathens may be faved, though they never have enjoyed any external revelation, nor were members of God's visible church. But this doctrine, it feems, the Jews rejected, on pretence that it was contrary to their feriptures. Wherefore, to fhew the fallehood of that pretence, the Apofile, after defcribing the juftification of Abraham, introduced the fubject of the falvation of heathens anew, by afking, Cometh this bleffednefs of justification on the circumcifion only, or on the uncircumcifion alfo? and demonstrated the pollibility of the falvation of the heathen, though no members of God's visible church, by observing that Abraham had his faith counted to him for righteoufnefs, and received the promife of the inheritance in uncircumcifion; that is, while he was no member of any visible church, neither performed any ritual fervice whatever, ver. 10 .- For it happened full thirteen years before he and his family were made the visible church of God by circumcifion.

But because the Jews might ask, if Abraham obtained the promife of juftification before he was circumcifed, why was that rite enjoined to him? The Apostle told them, it was enjoined merely as a feal, or confirmation on God's part, of his counting to him for rightcoulnefs that faith which Abraham had exercifed in uncircumcifion, and of his having made him the father or federal head of all the faithful who are out of God's visible church, to affure us, that their faith, like his, fhall he counted to them for rightcoufnefs, and rewarded with the inheritance of the heavenly country, of which Cansan was the type, though they be no members of any visible church of God, ver. 11 .- a feal alfo or proof of his being the father of all who believe in the vilible church, to give them the fame affurance concerning their faith, provided that, to their outward profession of faith, they join such an obedience to God, as Abraham exercifed while he was out of the vifible church, ver. 12. Thus, as in the fecond chapter the Apofile had established the doctrine of the falvation of the heathens by faith, without arguments drawn from revelation, fo in this chapter he establishes the same doctrine by arguments taken · from to How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcifion, or in uncircumcifion? "Not in circumcifion, but in uncircumcifion. 11 And he received the fign of circumcifion, a feal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcifed: that from revelation. And by both he has expressly condemned the bigotry of all, who, like the Jews, confine falvation to their own church, or mode of faith; and has beautifully illustrated the righteousness and impartiality of God's moral government of the world.

Farther, 'To she'w that the whole body of the ritual fervices enjoined by Moles, taken together, had no influence to procure falvation for the Jews, the Apostle told them, that the promife to Abraham and to his feed, that they fould be heirs of Canaan, and of the heavenly country typified by Canaan, was not given them by a righteoufnefs of law; that is, by an immaculate obedience to any law, whether moral or ceremonial, but by a righteoulnels of faith, ver. 13.-For if they who are righteous by an immaculate obedience to law, are heirs either of the earthly or of the heavenly country, their faith is of no use in obtaining it; and the promife by which the inheritance is bestowed on them as a free gift, has no influence at all in the matter, contrary to the express declaration of Scripture, ver. 14.-Belides, in the nature of the thing, no one who has ever tranfgreffed law, can obtain the inheritance through law. For law, inftead of rewarding, worketh wrath to every transgressor, and among the rest to the heirs, not excepting Abraham himfelf, who by receiving the inheritance as a free gift, was shewn to be, not an innocent person, but a transgreffor of fome law or other, namely, of the law written on his heart. For where no law is, there is no transgression, nor treatment of persons as transgressors, ver. To these things add, that the promise was bestowed 15. on Abraham and his feed, not by an immaculate obedience to any law, either natural or revealed, but by faith, that the inheritance promised might be a free gift, and be made fure to all perfevering believers: not to those only, who enjoy an external revelation, but to those also who, like Abraham, believe out of God's visible church : for the inheritance was promifed to them in the perfon of Abraham, who in uncircumcifion was made the father or federal head of fuch believers, for the purpole of receiving that promife on their behalf, ver. 16 .- according to what God faid to him, A father of many nations I have conflictuted thee, ver. 17. -This great honour was done to Abraham on account of the excellency of his faith ; ver. 18-21.-For which reafon it was counted to him for righteoulnels, and he received the promife of the inheritance, ver. 22 .- Now God directed Mofes to record this, not for Abraham's take alone, but for ours alfo, if we believe in Him who raifed Jefus from the dead, ver. 23, 24.-who was delivered to death to make atonement for our offences, and was raifed again for our juflification, ver. 25.

Thus it appears that the method of juftifying funners, by accepting their faith in place of immaculate obedience which law requires, and by rewarding it as if it were a perfect righteoufnels flowing from perfect innocence, is no new way of falvation. It was appointed at the fall for Adam and all his posterity, and was then obscurely revealed in the promife that the Seed of the woman should bruife the head of the ferpant : afterwards it was more explicitly declared in the covenant with Abraham, wherein God promifed to give to him and to his feed by faith, whether they be Jews or Gentiles, the land of Canaan for an everlafting inheritance, as the reward of their faith. Wherefore, when the Jews in general denied falvation to the believing Gentiles, unlefs they entered into their church by receiving circumcifion, they fhewed great ignorance of the method of falvation which was established at the fall, and which was made known to themfelves in the covenant with Abraham. And when they refused to be united with the believing Gentiles, into one body, or church, they rebelled against God, and for their disobedience were justly cast off: while a few of their brethren, more obedient to God, continued his people; and the Gentiles, who believed the Gospel, were incorporated with them, as joint members of the covenant with Abraham; and both together formed that great community called the Ifrael of God, and the church of the first-born. Wherefore, in the article of man's justification, the Mofaic and Christian revelations perfectly agree.

Ver. 1. What fhall we then fay] In the foregoing chapter the Apostle has proved, that neither Jews nor Gentiles have a right to the bleffings of God's peculiar kingdom, otherwife than by grace, which is free to the one, as well as the other. In this chapter he advances to a new argument, admirably adapted to convince the Jew; to fnew the believing Gentile in a clear light the high value of the mercies freely bestowed upon him in the Gospel, and at the fame time to difplay the wondrous plans of the providence and grace of God. His argument is taken from Abraham's cafe. Abraham was the father and head of the Jewish nation. God pardoned him through faith, and took him and his feed into his effectial covenant, and beflowed upon them many extraordinary bleffings above the reft of the world. Thus he was justified through faith; and it is evident he was justified not upon the footing of obedience to law, or the rule of right action, but in the only way a finner can be juftified,-by the favour of the Law-giver. Now this is the very fame way in which the Gofpel faves the believing Gentiles, and gives them a part in the bleflings of God's covenant. Why then flould the Jews to violently oppose the Gentiles being interested in those bleffings? -- Especially if it be farther observed, that the believing Gentiles are actually included in the promife made to Abraham, and the covenant established with him; for at the time God entered into covenant with Abraham, he confidered him as the head, not of one nation only, but of many nations (Gen. xvii. 4.). As f.r me, beheld my covenant is with tize, and they failt be, with regard to this my covenant, the father of many, or a multitude of nations; confequently, the covenant being made with Abraham, as the head or father of many nations, all in any nation, who should fland upon the fame religious principle principle with him, were his feed, and with him interested in the covenant that God made with him : but be flood only upon the footing of faith in the mercy of God through the feed of the woman, pardoning his fins and graciously bestowing extraordinary bleffings ; - and upon this footing alfo the believing Gentiles stand in the Gofpd; therefore they are the feed of Abraham, and included in the covenant of promife made to him. Now to all this the Apolle knew very well it would be objected, that it was not faith alone which gave Abraham a right to the blefings of the covenant; but his obedience to the law of circumcifion; which, being peculiar to the Jewifh nation, give them also, and them alone, an interest in the Abrahamic covenant : confequently, whoever among the Gentiles would be interested in that covenant, ought to embrace ludifin, and, as the only ground of their right, perform obelience to the law of circumcifion, and fo come under the obligations to the whole law. With this objection the Apostle introduces his argument, ver. 1, 2 ; Thews that, according to the Scripture account, Abraham was justified by faith, ver. 3-5.; explains the nature of that justification by a quotation out of the Pfalms, ver. 6-9.; proves that Abraham was justified long before he was circumcifed, ver. 9-11.; that the believing Gentiles are his feed, to whom the promife belongs, as well as to the believing Jews, ver. 12-17.; and describes Abraham's faith, in order to explain the faith of the Goipel; ver. 17. to the end. See Locke.

Abrohem our father] Father is of an extensive and emphatical lignification in the Hebrew : amongst other things, it lignifies a perfon who is first in the invention, use, or rejorment of any thing, with regard to those who imitate him, or derive from him any particular cuftom or advanue. Gen. iv. 20, 21. Jabal was the father of flepherds ; fild was the father of all fuch as handle the harp and organ. inchim is the father of all them that believe, ver. 11. and the fater of us all, ver. 16. : namely, as he was the first bwien the grant or promife of extraordinary bleffings vis made upon his faith, and as all that believe are indeard in that promise, and are justified in the fame way that he was. In this fense the lew here calls Abraham to faker; meaning, not only as the Jews were naturally chended, but as they held all their privileges from him, wite included in the promifes made to him, and must be judified as he was. Thus we must understand our father, 10 give the lew's argument its proper sense and force; and this be meant according to his own narrow notion, as if ' Abr.lum, in this respect, was father to the Jews only, and to no other people. But the Apostle proves that he *45, in this respect,-namely as the head and pattern of julification,-the father of all them that believe, whether Heathens or lews. The expression, as pertaining to the fift, or with refpet to the fleft, evidently relates to circumcition, and the obligation it laid upon the Jews: for in the fil,-ofter the field,-or appertaining to the floth, are thus frequently used ;-Gal. vi. 12. 1 Cor. x. 18. 2 Cor. v. 16. xi. 18. Philip. iii. 3. This was the Jew's glorying in the flefb, and is fufficient to point out the fense of Abraham's finding or obtaining, as appertaining to or after the flefh, that whereof he had navynua, to glory. See chap. iii. 27. and on ii. 17. It is what the Jews suppose he procured from God, for his obedience to the law of circumcifion, and for answering the peculiar obligations he was thereby brought under; as farther appears from ver. 9-12. where, arguing against the Jew's objection started here in the first and fecond verfes, he afks, How was faith reckoned to Abrabam ?-when he was in circumcifion or uncircumcifion ?-Not in circumcifion, but in uncircumcifion, &c. Now as this reafon is undoubtedly full to the purpose of the Jew's objection, it coufirms, or rather makes neceffary, the fense we have given of the phrafe before us.

Ver. 2. But not before God] This appears to be the Apollic's answer to the Jew's objection (ver. 1, 2.), and it implies that Abraham might have fome fort of glorging, possibly fuch as the Apostle himself had, I Cor. ix. 15. 2 Cor. i. 12. x. 13, &c. xi. 16-30. The Apostle had glorging in his fuperior vouchfafements and labour, but only before men, and with respect to them; not before God, in regard to whom his language was, Not I, but the grace of God. Note farther, that before God hints, that the Apoftle confiders Abraham as ftanding in the court before God's tribunal, when the promife was given him. It perhaps would make this passage clearer, if the prefent verse ended with the word glory, and the third began with the claufe before us. See Raphelius.

Ver. 3. It was counted] The original word 'Exoyialn, in our translation, is rendered counted, reckined, ver. 4, &c. and imputed, ver. 6, &c.: but 2s the word and the fenfe are conftantly the fame, it would certainly have been better to have rendered it conftantly by one word; and reckoned feems as proper as any other. Indeed this is a remark which may be extended to many other words; as it would certainly help the English reader to find out and pursue the fenfe of Scripture, if the fame original word were every where rendered by the fame English word.

Ver. 4. Of grace] Of favour. Raphelius has fhewn that the Greek word Missis does not only mean a reward of dibt, but also a gift of favour; and that the phrase purpoy Swesne, occurs in Herodotus : fo that a reward of grace or favour is a claffical as well as theological expression.

Ver. 5. The ungally] Abraham is the fubject of the Apostle's difcourse; and he plainly hints, though he did not choose to speak out, that even Abraham before his conversion was chargeable with not paying due reverence and worthip to God, as the word 'Asefns, which we render ungodly, properly imports. See on chap. i. 18.

namely, "the not reckoning of fin to any one;"-"the " not putting fin to his account;" the Apoltle, in these verfes, using the expressions as equivalent. Hence the expression of blotting out iniquity, so frequently used in facred Scripture, may be underflood ; that is, the firiking it out of the account. The Greek word Aoyi Geobas, fignifies to reckon or account; and, with a dative cafe, to put to any one's account. See Locke on ver. 3. and the note on ver. 22.

Ver. 10. Not in circumcifion, but in uncircumcifion | Faith was reckoned to Abraham for justification, Gen. xv. 6. but circumcifion was not inftituted till about fourteen or fifteen years after that, Gen. xvii. 1, 2, &c. for faith was reckoned to Abraham for justification before Ishmael was born, at least one year. Compare Gen. xv. and xvi. At Ishmael's birth, he was eighty-fix years of ago (Gen. xvi. 16.); and at the inftitution of circumcifion, Ishmael was thirteen, and Abraham ninety-nine years old. See Gen. xvii. 24, 25.

Ver. 11. And he received the fign of circumcifion] Hence it appears, that the covenant established with Abraham, Gen. xvii. 2-14. is the fame with that, Gen. xii. 2, 3. and Gen. xv. 5, &c. For circumcifion was not a feal of any new grant, but of the justification which Abraham had received before he was circumcifed; and that juftification included the Gofpel covenant, in which we are now interested : for the Scripture, forefeeing that God would justify us heathens through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, faying, In thee shall all nations be bleffed, Gal. iii. 8. Gen. xii. 3. The whole of the Apostle's argument in this chapter proves, that we believing Gentiles are the feed of Abraham, to whom, as well as to himfelf, the promise was made; consequently it is the Abrahamic covenant in which we now ftand; and any argument taken from the nature of that covenant, and applied to ourfelves, must be good and valid. It is also undeniably evident from this verse, as well as from Gen. xvii. 1-11. that circumcilion was a feal or fign of the covenant of grace, and not merely of temporal promifes; which confequently obviates the most confiderable objection that has ever been urged against Infant Baptism. Mr. Locke observes, that the Apostle's fense, at the close of this verse, properly runs thus: "That he might be the father of the Gentiles who " believe, though they be not circumcifed, that righteouf-" nefs might be imputed to them alfo." Ver. 12. " And " the father of the Jews, that righteoulnels might be " imputed, not to them who have circumcifion only, " but to them who also walk in the steps of the faith of "our father Abraham, which he had being uncircum-" cifed."

Ver. 13. The heir of the world ] Abraham and his feed together are the beir of the world; for the promife is made to both; and the original word avers includes both: and bis feed, in the next verse, are called heirs as well as he;

that is to fay, heirs of the world, not lords and poffeffors of it, as fome suppose. The world, we conceive, must here be confidered as a great family, and Abraham and his feed as the heir or heirs, to whom, by the free donation of God, belonged the birth-right, the double portion of the father's goods, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power, Gen. xliii. 33. xlix. 3. Deut. xxi. 15-17. Agreeably to this fentiment, the Lord flyles the whole body of the Ifraelites his son, his first-born, or heir ; Exod. iv. 22. Jer. xxxi. 9. Hence the Christian church or congregation is called the church of the first-born, Heb. xii. 23. which is the thing the Apoftle demonstrates in this chapter; namely, that we are heirs, or the first-born of the world, as we are by faith the feed of Abraham, to whom the promife was made, at the fame time that it was made to him. And if ye be Chrift's, then are ye Abraham's feed, and heirs according to the promife; Gal. iii. 29. This is a very just as well as a very beautiful way of reprefenting the extraordinary privileges and bleffings vouchfafed to the peculiar congregation and people of God : for, first, this gives us a clear idea in what fenfe the Apostle is here speaking of the justification both of Abraham and his feed; for the promife to Abraham and his feed, that he should be the heir of the world, is manifeftly that justification, about which the Apostle is arguing from the beginning of the chapter. This, fecondly, fhews in what light we are to view the Gentiles, or those parts of the world who are not taken into the congregration of God; namely, not as wholly excluded from his favour and bleffing, but as enjoying a lefs degree of advantage. The beir in the family poffeffed a double portion of the father's goods, but the reft of the children had fome fhare of the fubftance: fo it is with the heathen; they have their part of God's bleffing, though we, as the first-born, enjoy the double portion. This alfo, thirdly, fnews with how much propriety the Apostle uses the instance of Esau, Heb. xii. 16, 17. to caution Christians against the contempt and abuse of their prefent privileges. Efau, as Jacob's heir or first-born, had a birth-right, an invaluable bleffing, which for one morfel of meat he fold, and loft for ever; and we alfo, as the first-born, or heirs of our heavenly Father, have a birthright, even the revelation and promifes of all the bleffings of the Golpel-covenant. This is our great happinels above the heathen, who have not the promifes and grace of this covenant revealed to them : but we may forfeit this birth-right, and shall certainly lose it for ever, if we prefer the pleafures of fin before the favour of God, and that eternal life which he has given us in Jefus Chrift our Lord; and then the virtuous beathen, who, through the fecret influences of the Spirit of God, fincerely improves his leffer fhare of the divine goodnefs, shall, in the life to come, be received into the kingdom of God, through the alone merits of the Saviour of the world, while the profane and wicked Christian, who receives heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his feed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.-

14 'For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promife made of none effect:

15 'Because the law worketh wrath: ' for where no law is, there is no transgreation.

16 Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promife might be fure to all the feed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all, 17 (As it is written, * I have made thee a father of many nations,) <sup>9</sup> before him whom he believed, even God, who <sup>2</sup> quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were.

rectives the grace of God in vain, shall be cast into outer drinels.

Var. 14. For if they which are of the law be heirs] The Apolle here (peaks of the performance of the law, with teterence to a moral impossibility: for it feems eviden. from what follows, that the law is to be confidered as infiting on an obedience abfolutely perfect: fo that those good men who were justified under it, were not justified y it, but by the dispensation of grace under which Abraham was; which, though not a part of the covenant of God by Mofes, was not, and could not be abrogated by it. See Gal. iii. 17. and Doddridge.

Vor. 15. Where no law is, &c.] "Of that concerning "which there is no law, with the fanction of a punifhment "annexed, there can be no transferellion, incurring wrath "or punifhment." Thus it may be rendered, if we read the original word 5, with an afpiration, as fome do: but whether it be taken to fignify where or whereof, the fenfe will be the fame; for the Greek word  $\varpi a a b x \sigma c_s$  is here, to which it be taken to force, mult fignify fuch a the drefters as draws upon the transferentiate wrath and putthment by the force and fanction of a law; and for the drefter's proposition is made good,—that it is the law alone which exposes us to wrath, and that it is all which the luw in this fenfe can do, for it gives us no power to priorm. Locke.

For 16. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace] By jovar. Here it fhould be well obferved, that faith and jovar do mutually and necessarily infer each other; for the grace or favour of God in its own nature requires hith in us, and faith on our part in its own nature fuppofes the grace or favour of God. If any bleffing is the free giked God in order to influence our temper and behaviour, then in the very nature of things it is neceffary that we be fathle of this bleffing, and perfuaded of the grace of God who beflows it; otherwife, it is not poffible we fhould improve it. On the other hand, if faith in the goodnefs or favour of God, with regard to any bleffing, is the principle of our religious hopes and actions, then it follows. that the bleffing is not due in strict justice, or upon the footing of law; but that it is the free gift of divine goodnels. If the promife to Abraham, conflituting him and his feed the heirs or first-born of the world, is of faith on our part, then is it by favour on the part of God; and it is of faith that it might be by favour. Favour, being the mere good-will of the donor, is free and open to all whom he chooses to make the objects of it : and the divine wifdom appointed faith to be the condition of that promife, because faith, or a persuasion of the truth of the promise, is on our part the most simple principle; bearing an exact correspondence to grace or favour, and reaching as far as that can extend; that fo the happy effects of that promife might foread far and wide, take in the largeft compais, and be confined by no condition, but what is merely neceffary in the nature of things. See Bengelius, and Calmet. Mr. Locke observes, that the grammatical construction at the beginning of this verse does not feem much to favour inheritance, as the word to be fupplied, (therefore the inheritance is of faith,) because it does not occur in the preceding verfes; but he that observes St. Paul's way of writing, who more regards things than forms of speaking, will be fatisfied that it is enough that he mentions beirs, ver. 13, 14. And that he means inheritance here, is put past a doubt by Gal. iii. 18.

Ver. 17. As it is written, &c.] That Abraham's being the father of many nations, has relation to the covenant that God made with him, may be feen Gen. xvii. 4, 5. Bebold, my covenant is with thee, and thou fhalt be a father of many nations: neither fhall thy name any more be called Abram; but thy name fhall be Abraham: for a father of many nations have I made or conflituted thee, by virtue of my covenant with thee. Dr. Doddridge, instead of, before him whom he believed, even God, reads, like God whom he believed; for fo he thinks the original word xarivavri, may fignify. The meaning of the last clause feems to be, "Who fpeaketh of things which do not yet exist, as if they

Ver. 22. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteou[nefs] To what has been faid concerning the word rendered imputed in ver. 8. we add the following remarks: All manner of imputation feems to be a metaphor taken from books of account between creditor and debtor; and from mercantile affairs, it is fometimes applied to judicial; as crimes to be accounted for, are also fometimes called debts. When the matter, however, is well understood in one view, it is eafy to apply it to the other: to impute any act of fin, or of obedience to a perfon, is therefore properly no other than to fet it down to his account. The great God of heaven and earth is reprefented in Scripture,-with humble condescension to our manner of acting and conceiving of things,-as keeping a most exact book of records and accounts, in which those things are registered concerning every one of us, which he will bring into that last review and furvey, by which our characters and flates fhall finally be determined. And as the most exact and perfect obedience is a debt which we owe him as our great Creator, Benefactor, and Governor: fo, on the breach of his law, we owe him fome proper fatisfaction for it. In this view we are all charged as debtors, poor miferable infolvent debtors, in the book of God. Innumerable fins are imputed, or fet down to our account; and were things to go on in this courfe, we fhould ere long be arrefted by the divine juffice, and, being found incapable of payment, fhould be cast into the prison of hell, to come out no more. But God, in pity to this our calamitous state, hath found out a furety and a ranfom for us; hath provided a fatisfaction in the death and facrifice of his only begotten Son. It is with a gracious regard to this,--to express his high complacency in it, and, if we may fo fpeak, his pleafing remembrance of it, that all who are justified meet with divine acceptance and favour.-But then, it is an invariable rule in the divine proceedings, that this atonement and fatiffaction of Christ be a means of justifying those, and only thole who believe. Purfuant therefore to the above metaphor, when any particular perfon believes, this is fet down to his account, as a most important article, or as a memorandum, if we may fo express it, in the book of God's remembrance, that such a one is now actually become a believer, and therefore is now entitled to justification through Chrift. In this fense his faith is imputed for righ-teousnels. Yet it is not regarded by God as the grand confideration which balances the account, or indeed as paying any of the former debt,-which it is impossible it should; but only as that which, according to the gracious conflitution of the Gofpel, gives a man a claim to what Chrift has paid, and which God has gracioufly allowed, as a valuable confideration, in regard to which he may honourably pardon and accept of all who shall apply to him in his appointed way, or in the way of humble believing. Abraham the father of the faithful, had a clear view of this great Atonement in the visions of God. "He rejoiced to "fee the day of Chrift : and he faw it, and was glad," John, viii. 56. And he believed, not only in the temporal promifes relating to his natural feed, but above all in the fpiritual promifes which regarded the Meffiah, himfelf, and his spiritual feed : and his faith was counted to him for righteoufnefs. See the Notes on Gen. chap. xxii.

Ver. 24. But for us alfo] But for our fake alfo.

Ver. 25. Who was delivered for our offences] See chap. iii. 25. v. 6-10. Ephel. i. 7, 14. v. 2. Col. i. 14, 20-22. 1 Tim. ii. 6. Titus, ii. 14. 1 Cor. xv. 17. In these feveral texts of St. Paul may be feen his own explication of what he fays here; namely, that our Saviour, by his death, atoned for our fins, and fo the justified believer is made innocent of his paft tranfgreffions, and thereby freed from the punifhment due to them; and yet fiill on the condition of perfevering faith and love. But he role again to ascertain eternal life for the faithful; for the reward of righteousness is eternal life, to which inheritance we have a title by adoption in Jefus Chrift. But if he himfelf had not poffeffed that inheritance, if he had not rifen into the possession of eternal life, we, who hold by and under him, could not rife from the dead; and fo could never come to be pronounced righteous, and to receive the reward of it, if faithful, even everlasting life. Hence St. Paul tells us, that if Chrift be not raifid, cur faith is wain ; we are yet in our fins : that is, as to the attainment of eternal life, it is all the fame as if our fins were not forgiven. And thus he rofe for our justification, not only as his refurrection affords the most folemn confirmation of the whole new covenant, but also enables him confistently with the divine perfections to raife us from the dead, and to give us, dying in faith and holinefs, eternal life. John, xiv. 19. See Locke.

good use h, and in his own will; which does not come from God, and which is owing only to himfelf. The factor Christian, on the contrary, places all his joy in owing every thing to God, through Jefus Christ: and where is defirous to glery in any thing independently of Him, will meet with nothing but thame and confusion at the laft. In this view Abraham is the first witnefs to grac, and the righteoufnefs of faith before the law, ver. 1, 2 and the pattern of right conduct to every truly taitful perfon.

We are faved by a divine fcheme, which allows us not mention any works of our own, as if we had where if to glay blare God, but teaches us to afcribe our acceptance blore God to the belief in Him who juffifieth the ungodly. Nor need we be athamed of flying to fuch a method: Abraham, the father of the faithful, had recourfe to it himfelf, ver. 3-5. and built on it his eternal hope. May w that his difpolition of mind, that fo we may inherit the fame promifes: and thus we alfo, walking in the fteps of our father Abraham, fhall be called like him the friends and children of God; and fit down with the patriarchs and prophets of old in his heavenly kingdom !

If there be indeed any fuch thing as happiness to be moved by mortals, it is the portion of that man of whom Dand speaks, - of him whose iniquity is pardoned, whose fin ".wird, and who enjoys the manifestation of that parion, rer. 7, 8. Well may fuch endure the greatest afflictions of life with cheerful fubmiffion, and look forward to dath with comfort,- to that awful yet transporting day, when the fling of all these evils, shall be taken out, and maring tokens of the divine favour convert them into beings. How earnelly should we then supplicate the, threne of grace, that this happiness may become ours! that the steat and glorious Being, whom by our fins we the lo offended, and in whom alone the right and power of parcon mindes, would spread the weil of his mercy over our provocations, and blot them out of the book of his remembrance! Let us only, on the one hand, fix it in our mands, that it is the character of the man to whom this blenidnets belongs, that in his fpirit there is no guile : and on the other reflect, that it is in confequence of the rightous obedience of Christ unto the death of the cross and his infinite merit which faith receives and applies.

How common is it for men to glory in the piety and boinces of those to whom they bear any relation; but how rarely do they walk in their fleps, by imitating their example! fee ver. 12. 'The faith which does not difpofe us to forfake all for the fake of God, and to facrifice every thing to his known will, is not the faith of a fon of Abraham; not fuch a faith as can ever be accounted for righteoufnefs.

Though by our manifold tranfgreffion of the perfect law of God, we can never inherit by any claim from that, which only worketh wrath and condemnation, in confequence of our breach of it (ver. 14, 15.); yet fhall we, by believing and obeying the Gofpel of our Redeemer, find the promife fure to us, as the fpiritual feed of Abraham, (ver. 16.) and be for ever happy in the enjoyment of that better Canaan, where every earthly inheritance fhall be no more.

Let us then bear continually in our minds the great, the venerable example of Abraham our father; labour to the utmost to trace his steps, and have faith in that omnipotent God, who at his pleasure quickeneth the dead, and calleth the things which are not, as if they were, ver. 17. If fenfe were to judge, it would pronounce many of those difficulties infurmountable, which feem to oppose the accomplishment of his promifes ;-but we have the truth of God pledged as our fecurity, that they shall all be fulfilled to the faithful in their feafon. Surely no argument fhould be fo effectual as this to render us strong in faith, and thus difpofe our hearts to glorifying God, ver. 20. He hath promifed, and he is able alfo to perform ; for with him all things are possible. Already has he done that for us, which we had much lefs reafon to expect or conceive, than we now have to hope for any thing remaining. He that delivered up his Son Jefus for our offences (ver. 25.), to redeem us by his blood from final and everlatting ruin ;--How fhall he not with him alfo freely give us all things ?

Be it our daily joy, that this mighty Saviour was raifed again for cur juffication. A belief of the refurrection of Chrift comprehends every thing, fince it includes the belief of all the myfterics and truths of Chriftianity, whether antecedent or fubfequent; the refurrection being in fact the feal of every thing which the bleffed Jefus did, fuffered, taught, and promifed. Let it therefore be continually confidered as the nobleft argument to ethablish our faithin him who performed this illustrious work of mercy and of power. So shall it be accounted to us likewile for righteousness, ver. 22, 23. Yea, so shall the righteousness of God be revealed to our fouls from faith to faith to all the the bleffed purposes of our justification (see chap. i. 17.); and, if we perfeveringly cleave to this adorable Saviour, we shall be accepted through his blood to all eternity.

REFLECTIONS.—If, Abraham was the renowned anceftor, on their defcent from whom the Jews fo highly prided themfelves. If therefore it can be made to appear, that he who was fo eminent for his obedience was jultified not by works but by faith, then furely none of his defcendants, who came fo flort of his excellent character, may expect to be juftified in any other way.

What fhall we fay then that Abraham, our father as pertaining to the flefh, hath found? Did he obtain justification by the efforts of his natural wisdom and strength, or by circumcifion, or his other outward privileges and performances? No, in no wife. For,

1. If he were justified by works, he might have had room for boasting; but whatever excellence there was in his character before men, he had nothing whereof to glory before God. Therefore, when speaking of Abraham, the Scripture expressly observes, Gen. xv. 6. Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteouss field which he believed respecting the promised seed, who should suffer in his stead, was reckoned to his account, as the ground of his justification before God, and not any doings or duties of his own.

2. If Abraham were justified by works, his reward would have been of debt, not of grace; for perfect obedience would have entitled him to eternal life: but God called Abraham when he was  $(\alpha \sigma \iota \epsilon n)$  an ungodly perfon, and justified him through faith in the promifed Messiah. And to him that worketh not, who is utterly unable to perform that immaculate obedience which the law requires, but believeth on him that juffifieth the ungodly, confcious that this is his character, and perceiving the absolute necessity of an infinitely meritorious facrifice for his fins, even that which God hath provided in his Son; his faith is counted to him for his justifying righteoufnefs and title to God's favour. If Abraham then must be justified as an ungodly finner, as one that worketh not, it would be ftrange prefumption in his defeendants, or any others, to expect juitification in any other way.

3. He argues the neceffity of free juftification from the declarations of the Pfalmift, who defcribes him as the truly bleffed man, not who has no fins to answer for, but who has them not counted or imputed to him, being juftified from them all by the free grace of God, without any works of his own, of whatever kind, to recommend him to the divine regard.

2dly, The bleffednefs above deferibed is, no doubt, moft defirable; the queftion is, to whom it belongs? Is it peculiar to the circumcifed Jews, or common to the uncircumcifed Gentiles? The former would fain monopolize it as the fole privilege of those who were within the pale of circumcifion; but the Gospel declares the uncircumcifed Gentiles alike capable of receiving it.

It was faith, not circumcifion, which was Abraham's jultifying righteoufnefs, as we have before thewn. This was imputed to him, and in confequence thereof he was a justified man, fourteen years before he was circumcifed. It is evident therefore that when he afterwards fubmitted to this inftituted ordinance of God, and received the fign of circumcifion, it was not in order to his being justified, fince that he had been long before, but as a fcal of the righteousness of the faith which he had, being yet uncircumcifed ; a visible token that God had taken him and his feed into the bond of the covenant, and an affurance to him, if faithful, of all the bleffings which were to be procured by that Redeemer in whom he had believed. Thus, in this eminent inftance of him who bore the diffinguithed title of father of the faithful, and from whom the Meffiah fhould fpring in whom all nations were to be bleffed, the Gentiles, though uncircumcifed, might behold the way of juRification freely opened to them, and ftand in the nearest relation to Abraham, whole faith they followed, as his fpiritual children; and, though they were not his natural defcendants, might thare in all his most diftinguished bleffings, and righteoufnefs be reckoned or imputed unto them alfo, in like manner as it was to him during his uncircumcifed ftate.

And herein alfo God shewed to the Jews, that it was not their being the natural defeendants of Abraham, and partakers of circumcifion with him, which entitled them to pardon; but that the diftinguishing privileges of that covenant of grace into which Abraham was admitted, belonged only to those woolked in the fleps of the faith of our father Abraham which he had, being yet uncircumcifed; and without which, circumcifion, and all their other duties and performances, would never procure for them juffification to life.

3dly, As circumcifion was not a juftifying righteouIncis to Abraham, nor to any of his feed; neither was the law, in which the Jewith people trufted. For the promife, that he foould be heir of the world, was not to Abraham or to his feed through the law of Mofes, which was not yet given, nor in virtue of any perfonal obedience of his or theirs, but through the righteoufnefs of faith. For if they which are of the law be beirs, and the title to the bleffings promifed arole from the fulfilling the law, whether that of Moles or any other, then faith is made void ; there is no place for the exercise of it; and the promife is of no effect, fince the bleffings of it would depend on our perfect and immaculate obedience: if that were not perfect and immaculate, the promite would be ufelefs, which must necessarily be the cafe in our prefent corrupted flate; becaufe the law worketh wrath, and can only deliver over every man to the righteous judgment of God, as transgreffors. Had there indeed been no law given, had no notice of God's will, traditionary or revealed, been afforded, there would have been no confeience of fin, for where no law is, there is no transgression; but now that there is a law, the offender is obnoxious to the curfe, which is the fanction annexed to the transgression of it. Therefore, fince none by their obedienco

In a spiritual inte, before him whom he believed, even God, was he thus routed as the father of nations; even before him who satisation the dead; Abraham and his wife, whose bodies we now as good as dead; or the Gentiles dead in tref-[sho and fins; or the bodies of the deceafed in the laft up and who, in virtue of his almighty power, calleth thefe they which be not as though they were, fince whatever he uls, at his word flarts into being. Perfuaded of this, toundifianding all the difficulties which his faith had to mounter, Abraham against hope, if reason were confulted, viewin type; and against all arguments which fense or axtience urged, he refled fatisfied in the fulfilment of in promise, that he fould become the father of many nations, studing to that which was forken, Gen. xv. 5. when, pointing In to the flars, God affured him, fo fball thy feed be, fo contents, fo illustrious. Having this divine promife, augered not a moment through any improbabilities wh unbelief might fuggest, from the confideration of laown great age, which, with regard to his having childeen, tendered his body as if already dead, nor at the fand of Surab's womb, long fince patt child-bearing; he av drong in faith, giving glory to Ged, with the fulleft allerate aperting the fulfilment of what God had promille and was able alfo to perform. And therefore it was "splitting for righteoufnels, and what he faw about to be fore by the promited feed, Chrift Jefus, was now techoued to his account, and he ftood thereby justified bine God. Note: Where God has promifed, whatever of cions canal reason and unbelief may make, it is our Wilcom to turn a deaf ear to every fuggestion, and con-Lenir wait die accomplifhment of his word; and this tires God the highest glory.

CHAP. V.

TO comfort the Roman brethren under the evils which the profeffion of the Gofpel brought upon them, the Apoftle, in the beginning of this chapter, enumerated the privileges which belong to believers in general. And from his account it appears, that the privileges of Abraham's feed, by faith, are far greater than the privileges which belonged to his feed by natural defcent, and which are defcribed, Rom. ii. 17-20.

The first privilege of the fpiritual feed is, that, being justified by faith, they have peace with God through Jefus Chrift, ver. 1. This, to the Gentiles, must have appeared an unspeakable bleffing, as the Jews had constantly confidered them as excluded from the privileges of the true religion, and from eternal life. Their fecond privilege is, By the command of Chrift they are admitted through faith into the covenant made with Abraham, and into the Chriftian church.-Thirdly, they glory in the hope of beholding the glory of God in heaven ;- a privilege far superior to that of beholding the glory of God in the tabernacle, and in the temple on earth, of which the natural feed boafted : for it is the hope of living eternally with God in heaven, ver. 2 .- Their fourth privilege is, They glory in afflictions, especially those which befal them for the name of Christ: because afflictions improve their graces, and strengthen their hope of eternal life, ver. 3, 4 .- But many, even of the believing Jews, denied that the Gentiles had any reafon to hope for eternal life, while they did not obey Mofes. Wherefore, to fnew that the believing Gentiles are heirs of that and of all the bleflings promifed in the covenant to the feed of Abraham, by faith, equally with the Jews, the Apolle appealed to God's thedding down the Holy Ghoft upon them, even as on the Jews, ver. 5 .- and to Chrift's dying for them in their ungodly flate, ver. 6-8. -and told them, fince they were already juffified and reconciled, that is, received to pardon and favour by the blood of Chrift, they might well hope to be faved in due time from wrath by his obedience unto death in the human nature; fince in that nature he exercises the office of Lord and Judge of the world, ver. 9, 10 .- The last privilege belonging to the fpiritual feed, mentioned by the Apottle, is, that, being juffified, they can glory in the true God as their God, equally with the natural feed, whole relation to God was citablished by the law of Moses only, And this privilege, he told them, they had obtained, like all the reft, through Jefus Chrift, by whom they had received the reconciliation.

Having mentioned the reconciliation of the believing Gentiles, H the k John, g. 16. 1 John, 4. 9, 10. 1 Peter, 3. 18. 16. 53. 6. Ver. 6. 10.

the Apostle took occasion, in this place, to discourse of the entrance of fin and death into the world, and of the remedy which God has provided for these coils, and of the extent of that remedy; becaufe it gave him an opportunity, not only of explaining what the reconciliation is, which believers receive through Christ, but also of displaying the justice of granting reconciliation to all mankind who shall believe according to the light of their dispensation, notwithstanding the greatest part of them never heard any thing either of the reconciliation, or of Chrift who procured, it for them: but still the whole proceeds from mere favour through the alone merit of Jefus Chrift our Lord.

And first, to shew the justice of providing a reconciliation through Jefus Chrift for all of the human race who truly believe according to the divine light bestowed upon them, notwithstanding many of them are ignorant of Chrift as the Saviour, the Apostle reasoned in this manner : As it pleafed God, through the difobedience of one man, to subject all mankind to fin and death, notwithstanding the greatest part of them never heard of that man's difobedience; fo to render this determination confiftent with juflice, it pleafed God, through the obedience of one man, to make all men capable of righteoufnefs and life, notwithfanding the greatest part of them have no knowledge of the perfon to whom they are indebted for these great benefits, ver. 12 .- This fecond member of the comparison, indeed, the Apostle has not expressed, because he supposed his readers could cafily supply it, and because he was afterwards to produce this unfinished comparison in a complete form, by leparating it into two parts, and adding to each part the claufe of the omitted member which belongs to it. Wherefore, having enunciated the first member of the comparison, instead of adding the second, he proceeds to establish the first, because on it the truth of the second member, which he supposes his reader to have supplied in his own mind, depends. The proposition afferted in the first member is, that all men are subjected to death for Adam's fin. This the Apostle proves by the following argument : no action is punished as a fin, where there is no knowledge of any law forbidding it, ver. 13 .- Neverthelefs from Adam to Mofes, death feized infants and ideots, who, being incapable of the knowledge of law, were incapable of tranfgrefling law. Wherefore, having no fin of their own, for which they could be punished with death, they must have fuffered for Adam's transgression; which shews clearly, that death is inflicted on mankind, not for their own, but for Adam's fin, who, on that account, may, by contrast, be called the type of him who was to come and reftore life to all men, ver. 14.

Farther, it was a matter of great importance to prove, that all mankind are punified with death for the fin of the first man, because it shews, that the punishment of our first parents' fin was not forgiven, but only deferred, that the human species might be continued. Accordingly, by God's fentence pronounced after the fall, Gen. iii. 15-19.

Adam and Eve were allowed to live and beget children. And as in the fame featence, they were told, that the Seed of the woman would bruife the ferpent's head, it was an intimation, that on account of what the Seed of the woman was to do, a new trial, under a better covenant than the former, was granted to them and their posterity, that they might have an opportunity of regaining that immortality which they had forfeited. These things the Apostle suppoles his readers to know; for he proceeds to compare the evils brought on mankind by Adam, with the advantages procured for them by Christ, that all may understand the gracious nature of the new covenant, under which the human race is placed fince the fall.

From what the Apostle has faid of the effects of Christ's, obedience, compared with the confequences of Adam's difobedience, it appears, that the former are fuperior to the latter in three respects. The first is, Christ's obedience has more merit to obtain for all mankind a fhort life on earth, and after death a refurrection to a new life, in which fuch of them as are capable of it, are to enjoy happinels for ever, than Adam's difobedience had demerit to kill all mankind, ver. 15 .- The fecond is, the fentence passed on mankind was for one offence only, committed by their first parents, and it subjected them all to death temporal; but the fentence which bullows the gracious gift of pardon, has for its object the offence of Adam, and all the offences which the faithful faints of God themfelves may have committed during their own probation; and iffues in their being accounted righteous, and entitled to eternal life, ver. 16.-The third is, In the life which they who are pardoned and accounted righteous, and have perfevered in the obedience of faith, shall regain through Chrift, they shall enjoy much greater happiness than they lofe by the death to which they are subjected through Adam's offence, ver. 17.

Having thus contrasted the benefits procured for mankind by Chrift with the evils brought on them by Adam, the Apofile fums up these particulars in two conclusions. The first is: As it was just, on account of one offence committed by Adam, to pais featence of condemnation on all, by which all have been fubjected to death; fo it was equally just, on account of one act of rightcousness performed by Chrift (his dying on the crofs), to pais fentence on all, by which all obtain the justification of life; that is, a fhort life on earth, and at the last day a refurrection from the dead, ver. 18. - The fecond conclusion is: As it was just, through the offence of one man to constitute all men finners; that is, through the difobedience of Adam, to convey to all men a corrupted nature, whereby they are made liable to iin, and to eternal death; fo it was equally just, through the obedience of one man, to constitute all mankind righteous; that is, to put them in a condition of obtaining righteousness here, and eternal life hereaster, ver: 19 .- For in what manner could all mankind be constituted righteous, unless by granting them a personal trial under a new covenant, in which not immaculate obedience is required, in order to righteoufnefs and life, but the obtience of faith. From thefe two conclutions, we learn what the condemnation is, which was brought on all mankind by Adam, and what the reconciliation is, which all mankind receive by Chrift. By Adam mankind were made mortal, and liable to fin. By Chrift they are allowed a temporary life on earth, and have a trial appointed them, under a gracious covenant, by which they may attain righteoufnefs acd eternal life through faith.

In the two conclutions just now mentioned, the unfinited comparison, with which the Apostle introduced this admirable discourse, is completed. For in the first conclution, ver. 18. the entrance and progress of death thrugh Adam's fin, being described as in ver. 12. its remay is declared, which is there wanting. And in the ktend conclusion, ver. 19. after mentioning the entrance and progress of fun, as in ver. 12. its remedy, which is vanting there, is likewife defcribed. This order the Apolle followed, because, though the entrance of fin was pror to that of death, he mentioned the entrance of fin hit, that he might have an opportunity of fpeaking conarming the rule by which Adam and his posterity, now in this conditional or probationary fense reconciled, were to and their actions, during the trial appointed them under the new covenant. For after telling us, that as all were conflituted furners by Adam's difobedience, fo all fhall be unibuted righteous through the obcdience of Chrift, he with But law filently entered : that is, after the fentence ras patied, Gen. iii. 15-19. whereby Acam was allowed 10 lire and beget children, and with his posterity was Accel under the new covenant, the law of God written of their hearts filently took place as the rule of their conded under that covenant. And though the offence of adul transgression thereby abounded, grace has superaccarded, in the refurrection of all who die in infancy and ideay, to a better life than that which they lote through Adam's difobedience, and by beflowing the fame blefing on fuch adults as fulfil the requifitions of the gracous new covenant, under which they are placed, ver. 20. -And thus it has come to pais, that as the fin of the first man has exceedingly tyrannized over the whole fpecies, by introducing actual transgreefion and death ; fo also the infait gooincis of God shall reign, by destroying fin and eath through a righteousness of faith, which shall be Cated to believers, and, producing as its natural fruit a Er of Lolineis and obedience to the end, fhall be rewarded Fila eternal life; and all through Jefus Chrift our Lord, ta. 21.-Thus, according to the doctrine of the Apostle, ill mankind are, and ever have been, included in the new contrast. Confiquently the advantage which they have recircl by Christ, is much greater than the loss they have And it is reafonable to think it hould be to a becaufe the goodness of God more effectually dipoles him to beflow bleffings on mankind, on account of Christ's obedience, than to inflict evils on them, on account of Adam's difobedience.

Before this fubject is difmiffed, it may be proper to obferve :

1. That in this remarkable passage, we have the true account of the entrance of fin and mifery into the world, and of the method in which these evils have been remedied ; fubjects which none of the philosophers or wife men of antiquity were able by the light of reason to fathom. Sin entered through the disobedience of our first parents, whereby they became liable to immediate death; and if God had executed his threatening, the fpecies would have ended in them. But becaufe, in due scalon, his Son was to appear on earth in the human nature, and to make atonement for the fin of men, God, in the profpect of that great act of obedience, suffered Adam and Eve to live and propagate their kind, and granted them a new trial under a covenant better fuited to their condition than the former; in order that if, through his grace which should be offered to them, they behaved properly during their probation, he might raife them to a better life than that which they had forfeited. In this new covenant the obligation of the law written on their heart was continued; only immaculate obedience to that law was not required in order to life, but the obedience of faith. And although the punifiment of their first fin took place fo far, that the life granted to them and to their posterity was to be a gradual progress through labour and milery to certain death; yet, being all comprehended in the gracious new covenant, they are all to be raifed to life at the laft day, that fuch of them as are found to have given the obedience of faith during their probation, may receive a more happy life than that which was forfeited by the diffebedience of their first parents, and be continued in that happy life for ever. Thus, by the remedy which God has applied, for curing the evils introduced by the first man's difobedience, the righteous will be raifed to a greater degree of happinefs, than if thefe evils had not taken place.

2. According to the view which the Apoftle has given us of the ruin and recovery of mankind, the scheme of redemption is not a remedy of an unexpected evil, con-. trived after that evil took place. Chrift's obedience unto death was appointed as the means of our deliverance, at the very time when the refolution permitting the entrance of fin was formed. And therefore, to make mankind fenfible of this, the Apostle assures us, (Ephef. i. 4.) that we were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world : and 2 Time. i. 9. that we are faved and called according to God's own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ, before the world began : and I Pet. i. 20. that Chrift was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifested in these . lift times for us.-And as the plan of our redemption was formed along with the divine resolution to permit our fall, , fo its operation was coeval with the introduction of that H 2 cyil :

evil; and extends to all, fo as to place all in a capacity of falvation. Hence Christ is called, Rev. xiii. 8. The Lamb which was flain from the foundation of the world; and he is faid, 2 Cor. v. 15. To have died for all And his death is termed, 1 John, ii. 2. A propitiation for the whole world.

3. From other paffages of Scripture we learn, that fin and death were permitted to enter into the world, not only because by the remedy to be applied to these evils, God intended to make the faithful among mankind more happy than they would have been if these evils had not existed, but even to promote the good of the universe. Accordingly, in the fcheme of redemption there is a higher difplay of the perfections of God to all intelligent beings, than could have been made, had there been no fin nor mifery to be remedied. So St. Paul teaches, Ephef. iii. 10. That now unto governments and powers in the heavenly regions, the multiform williom of God may be made known through the church. Farther, the new difplay of the perfections of God made in the plan of redemption, by furnishing many powerful motives to holinefs and virtue, whofe operation is not confined to any one order of rational beings, nor to any particular time, will render God's moral government profitable and delightful to all his holy intelligent creatures for ever. See the Introduction to the New Testament.

4. By the illustrious difplay of the scheme of redemption, made in this admirable paffage, and by fhowing that it has for its object not a fingle nation, nor any small portion of the human race, but believers of all nations, the Apostle has condemned the bigotry of the Jews, and of all who, like them, confine falvation to their own church, and exclude others from fharing in the mercy of God through Christ, merely because they are ignorant of him, not through their own fault, but through the good pleafure of God, who has denied them that knowledge : or, becaufe they do not hold the fame objects of faith with them, although they posses the fame fpirit of faith, and, through the fecret influences of the Spirit of God, live pioufly and virtuoufly according to their knowledge. For his whole reasoning on this subject proceeds on the supposition, that if it was confonant to justice, that the demerit of Adam's difobedience fhould extend to all mankind, notwithstanding the greatest part of them never knew any thing either of him or of his difobedience; it must be equally confonant to justice, that the merit of Christ's obedience should extend to all mankind who are capable of being benefited by it, although many of them have had no opportunity of knowing any thing concerning that meritorious obedience. Befides, as the plan of redemption will, no doubt, be fully made known to the pious heathens, after they are admitted into heaven, the glory of God and the honour of Chrift will be advanced by the difcovery at that period, as effectually as if it had been made to them during their life-time on earth. And with respect to themselves, although the knowledge of Chrift and of the method of falvation through him, is not bestowed on them, till they come into heaven, or till the day of judgment, it will then operate as powerfully in making them fenfible of the mercy of God, and in laying a foundation for their love and gratitude to Chrift through all eternity, as if that knowledge had been communicated to them fooner. If fo, to fancy that perfons, who, notwithftanding their want of revelation, are through the grace of God actually prepared for heaven, will be excluded from that bleffed place, merely becaufe, while on earth, they were denied that knowledge of Chrift, which, with equal effect, may be communicated to them in heaven, is to contradict all the reprefentations given in the Scriptures of the impartiality of God, as the righteous governor of the univerfe.

Ver. 1. The Apofile, having proved in the former chapter, that the believing Gentiles are justified in the fame way with Abraham, and in fact are his feed, included with him in the promife or covenant, he judged this a proper place (as the Jews built all their glorying upon the Abrahamic covenant) to produce fome of those privileges. and bleffings in which the Christian Gentile could glory, in confequence of his justification, or his being pardoned, and taken into the covenant and peculiar kingdom of God by faith. And he chooses to instance in three particulars, which above others were adapted to this purpole; namely, first, the hope of eternal life, in which the law, wherein the Jews glorified, ch. ii. 17. was defective. ver. 2. Secondly, the perfecutions and fufferings to which Christians were exposed, ver. 3, 4. and on account of which the Jow was greatly prejudiced against the Christian profession: and here, having flewn that tribulations have a happy tendency to establish our hearts in the hope of the Gospel, he wifely adds, to alleviate the frightful afpect of tribulation, fome weighty reafons to prove, that the glorious. hope of the Gospel will certainly be made good to faithful fouls in their eternal falvation by Jefus Chrift, ver. 5-11. Thirdly, an interest in God, as our God and Father; a privilege upon which the Jews valued themfelves highly above all other nations. See ch. ii. 17. Thefe three are the fingular privileges belonging to the Gofpel state, wherein we Chriftians may glory, as really belonging to us, and greatly redounding, if duly underftood and improved, to our honour and benefit. See Locke.

We have peace with God] That is, we Gentiles, who are not under the law. It is in their names that St. Paul fpeaks in the laft three verfes of the foregoing chapter, and fo on to ver. 11. as is evident from the illation here, —therefore, being juffifed by faith, we, &c. it being an inference drawn from his having proved in the former chapter, that the promife was not to the Jews alone, but to the Gentiles alfo; and that juffification was not by the law, but by faith, and confequently defigned for the Gentiles as well as the Jews. We have peace with God, is thus paraphrafed by Dr. Doddridge: "Oar guilty fears are "filenced, and we are taught to look up to him with "fweet ferenity of foul, while we to longer conceive of "him as an enemy, but under the endearing character "of a friend and father."

St. Paul uses the fame word rejoice or glay for the convert Gentiles, which he had used before for the bailting of the lews; and the fame word he applied when he examined what Abraham had bound, d. it. 2, &c. : which plainly shews us that he is here oppring the advantages which the Gentile converts to Chanity have by faith, to those which the Jews gloried with to much haughtines and contempt of the Gentiles.

Whis. Because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts] The original word Executai, interview of the second Holy Ghoft is spoken of. Wherefore, as the Apple, in this paffage, had in his eye the gifts of the particular on the Gentiles, as proofs of God's love when, he adds for their comfort and encouragement, the the love of God was poured out into their hearts along with the spiritual gifts.

By the Holy Ghoft which is given unto us.] The spiritual gits bestowed on the first Christians were clear proofs, specially in the cafe of the Gentiles, of the love which God bare to them, and of his will that they should be and And therefore, when the Jewish believers, who reported Peter for preaching the Gospel to Cornelius and his friends, heard that they had received the Holy Ghoft, had their peace, and glorified God, faying, Then bath God this the Gentiles granted repentance unto life, Acts, xi. 18. linder; the ordinary influences of the Spirit, bestowed on believers, by renovating their nature, afford them the fullef affurance of pardon and acceptance through faith : hence they are faid to be fealed with that holy Spirit of pro-When which is the earnest of our inheritance, Eph. i. 13, 14. and is faid, Rom. viii. 16., to bear witnefs with their spirit, that they are the children of God.

his life by giving up his own. Ver. 7. For fearcely for a righteous man, &c.] Now fcarcely, &c. for  $\gamma \alpha \rho$  cannot have the force of an illative particle here. He may in common fpeech be called a just or righteous man, who gives to every man what is by law his due; and he a good or benevolent man, who voluntarily abounds in kind and generous actions, to which no human laws can compel him. There may poffibly be fome allufion here to a rabbinical distribution of mankind into three classes, good men, righteous men, and finners. See Gonwin's Jewith Antiq. lib. i. c. 6.

Ver. 8. But Goil commendeth his love, &c. 7 St. Paul gives them here another evidence of the love of God towards them.-'The ground they had to glory in the hopes of eternal faivation is the death of Chrift for them while they were yet in their unconverted Gentile flate, which he defcribes by calling them, ver. 6. JoBevers, without strength : - a or Eus, ungodly ; a magtwo os, finners ; ver. 8. : and ix beoi, enemies, ver. 10. Thefe four epithets are given to them as Gentiles, they being ufed by St. Paul as the proper attributes of the unconverted Heathen world, confidered in contradistinction to the Jewish nation. What St. Paul fays of the Gentiles in other places will clear this. The helplefs condition of the Gentile world, in the ftate of Gentilism, fignified here by aoveres, without firength, he terms, Col. ii. 13. dead in fin; a state surely, if any, of utter weakness. And hence he fays to the Romans converted to the Lord Jefus Christ; yield yourfelves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and yourfelves as instruments of righteouf-nefs unto God, ch. vi. 13. How he describes docteray, ungodlinefs, mentioned ch. i. 18. as the state of the Gentiles in general, we may fee ver. 21. 23. That he thought the title aµaorwou, finners, belonged peculiarly to the Gentiles. in contradiftinction to the Jews, he puts past doubt in these words, We who are Jews by nature, and not finners of the Gentiles, Gal. ii. 15. See also ch. vi. 17-22. And as for  $i_{\chi}\theta_{fo}$ , enemies, you have the Gentiles in general before their conversion to Christianity fo called, Col. i. 21.

If it were remembered that St. Paul, all along through the eleven first chapters of this episitle, speaks nationally of the Jews and Gentiles as it is visible he does, and not perfonally of fingle men, there would be lefs difficulty and fewer miftakes in understanding this epiftle. This one place that we are upon, is a fufficient inftance of it. For if by these terms here we shall understand him to denote all men perfonally, Jews as well as Gentiles, before they are favingly ingrafted into Jefus Chrift, we shall make his discourse disjointed, and his fense mightily perplexed, if at all confiftent.

That there were fome among the Heathen as holy in their lives, and as far from enmity to God as fome among the Icws, cannot be questioned. Nay, that many of them were worthippers of the true God, if we could doubt of it. is manifest out of the Acts of the Apofles : but yet St. Paul.

in the places above quoted, pronounces them all together, a'refeis and a'been, ungodly and without God (for that by these two terms applied to the same persons, he means the fame, that is to fay, fuch as did not acknowledge and, worship the true God, seems plain), He therefore uses, the terms ungodly and finners of the Gentiles, as nationally belonging to them in contradictinction to the people of the Jews, who were the people of God, while the other were the provinces of the kingdom of Satan : not but that there were finners, heinous finners among the Jews; but the nation, confidered as one body and fociety of men, difowned and declared against and opposed itself to those crimes and impurities which are mentioned by St. Paul, ch. i. 24, &c. as woven into the religious and politic conftitutions of the Gentiles. There they had their full fcope and fwing, had allowance, countenance, and protection. The idolatrous nations had by their religions, laws, and forms of government, made themfelves the open votaries and were the professed subjects of devils. So St. Paul, I Cor. x. 20, 21. truly calls the gods which they worfhipped and paid their homage to. And fuitably hereunto, their religious observances, it is well known, were not without great impurities, which were of right charged upon them, when they had a place in their facred offices, and had the recommendation of religion to give them credit. The reft of the vices in St. Paul's black lift, which were not warmed at their altars and fostered in their temples, were y.t by the connivance of the law cherished in their private houses, made a part of the uncondemned actions of common life, and had the countenance of cultom to authorize them, even in the best regulated and most civilized governments of the Heathens. On the contrary, the frame of the Jewifli commonwealth was founded on the acknowledgment and worship of the only true invisible God, and their laws required an extraordinary purity of life and ftrictness of manners.

That the Gentiles were styled ix feoi, enemies, in a political or national sense, is plain from Ephes. ii. where they are called, aliens from the commonwealth of Ifrael, and strangers from the covenant. Abraham, on the other fide, was called the friend of God, that is to fay, one in covenant with him, and his professed subject who owned God to the world : and fo were his posterity, the people of the Jews, while the reft of the world were under revolt, and lived in open rebellion against him, Isai. xli. 8. And here in this epiftle St. Paul expressly teaches, that when the nation of the Jews, by rejecting of the Melliah, put themfelves out of the peculiar kingdom of God, and were caft off from being, any longer the peculiar people of God, they became enemies, and the Gentile world were reconciled. See ch. xi. 15. Hence St. Paul, who was the Apostle of the Gentiles, calls his performing that office the minifiry of reconciliation, 2 Cor. v. 18. And here in this, chapter, ver. 1. the privilege which they receive by the accepting of the covenant of grace in Jefus Chrift, he tells them is this, that they have peace with God, that is to fay, are no longer incorporated with his enemies, and of the party of the open rebels against him in the kingdom of Satan, being returned to their natural allegiance in their owning the one true supreme God, in submitting to the kingdom that he had fet up in his Son, and being received by him as his fubjects and children Suitably hereunto, St. James, speaking of the conversion of the Gentiles, says of it, that God did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. Acts, xv. 14. and ver. 19. he calls the converts, those who from among the Gentiles are turned to God.

Befides what is to be found in other parts of St. Paul's epiftles to juftify the taking of thefe words here, as applied nationally to the Gentiles, in contradiffinction to the children of Israel, that which St. Paul fays, ver. 10, 11. makes it neceffary to understand them fo. We, fays he, when we were enemies were reconciled to God, and fo we now glory in him, as our God. We here must unavoidably be spoken in the name of the Gentiles, as is plain not only by the whole tenor of this epille, but from this paffage of glorying in God, which he mentions as a privilege now of the unbelieving Gentiles, furpating that of the Jews, whom he had taken notice of before, ch. ii. 17. as being forward to glory in God as their peculiar, right, though with no great advantage to themfelves. But the Gentiles who were reconciled now to God by Chrift's death, and taken into covenant with God, as many as received the Gofpel, had a new and better title to this glorying than the Jews. Those who now are reconciled, and glory in God as their God, he fays, were enemies. The Jews, who had the fame corrupt nature common to them with the reft of mankind, are no where that I know called ixbgoi, enemies, or access, ungodly, while they publicly owned him for their God, and profeffed to be his people. But the heathens were deemed enemies, for being aliens to the commonwealth of Ifrael, and ftrangers from the covenants of promife. There were never but two kingdoms in the world, that of God, and that of the devil; these were opposite, and therefore the subjects of the latter could not but be in the ftate of enemies, and fall under that denomination. The revolt from God was univerfal, and the nations of the earth had given themfelves up to idolatry, when God called Abraham, and took him into covenant with himself, as he did afterwards the whole nation of the Mraelites; whereby they were re-admitted into his kingdom, came under his protection, and were his people and fubjects, and no longer enemics; whilft all the reft of the nations remained in the flate of rebellion, the profesfed subjects of other gods, who were usurpers upon God's. right, and enemies of his kingdom. And indeed if the epithets given by St. Paul to the heathens, as mentioned above, be not taken as spoken of the Gentile world in this political and truly evangelical fense, but in the ordinary fystematical

Intennical notion applied to all mankind, as belonging miverfally to every man perfonally, whether by profettion Gentile, Jew, or Christian, before he be actually regepensed by a faving faith and an effectual thorough conversion, the illative particle wherefore in the beginning of ver. 12. will hardly connect it and what follows to the foregoing part of this chapter. But the first eleven verses mit be taken for a parenthesis, and then the therefore in the beginning of this 5th chapter, which joins it to the ath with a very clear connection, will be wholly infignificant, and, after all, the fense of the 12th verse will but illound with the end of the 4th chapter, not with ftanding the starfore which is taken to bring them in as an inlour. Whereas thefe first eleven verfes being supposed a belpoken of the Gentiles, makes them not only of a pite with St. Paul's defign in the foregoing and following the put is, but the thread of the whole difcourfe goes on they mooth, and the inferences (ulhered in with therefore in the fift verse, and with wherefore in the 12th verse) are the faily, clear, and natural, from the immediately precomg verles. That of the first verfe may be feen in what the lare already faid, and that of the 12th verfe in fhortand thus: "We Gentiles have by Chrift received the "muciliation, which we cannot doubt to be intended for Muswell as for the Jews, fince fin and death entered into "the world by Adam, the common father of us all. And "as by the difobedience of that one, condemnation of "death came upon all; fo by the obedience of One, "jultification to life came upon all."

Ver. 9. From wrath] See on chap. i. 18. and I Theff.

Fr. 11. And not only fo] These words join this verse " the third. The Apolitle in the fecond verse fays, "We, "the Centiles who believe, glory in the hopes of an "etemal, sp'endid state of blifs." In ver. 3. he adds, " In! not only fo, but our afflictions are to us matter of "glorning:" which he proves in the feven following The; and then, returning to his fubject, adds, " And not "th h but we glory in God alfo as our God, being "rached to him in Jefus Chrift :" and thus he fnews that the convert Gentiles had whereof to glory, as well as the lens, and were not inferior to them, though they had M circumcifion and the law, wherein the Jews gloried fo much, but with no ground, in comparison of what the Gentiks had to glory in, by faith in Jefus Chrift now mder the Gofpel. The verfe may be paraphrafed ; " It is "true, we Gentiles could not formerly glory in God, as "ear God; that was the privilege of the Jews, who alone, " of all the nations, owned him for their King and God, " and were his people in covenant with him. All the reft "of the kingdoms of the earth had taken other lords, and "girm themfelves up to falle gods to ferve and worthip "them; and fo were in a state of war with the true God, "the God of Ifrael: but now we being reconciled by Jefus "Chnit, whom we have received and owned for our Lord, "and thereby being returned into his kingdom, and to our " ancient allegiance, we can truly glory in God as our "God; which the Jews cannot do, who have refuted to " receive Jefus his eternal Son for their Lord, whom God " hath appointed Lord over all things." As our translators have rendered the Greek vetb xaralaasw, by reconcile in the foregoing verfe and in all other places, and the Greek word waradaged, in all other places, by reconciliation; it should certainly have been fo rendered here.

Ver. 12.] Here the Apostle advances his third and last argument, to prove the extensiveness of the divine grace, or that it reaches to all mankind as well as to the Jews. His argument ftands thus : "The confequences of " Chrift's obedience extend as far as the confequences of " Adam's difobedience; but those extend to all mankind; " and therefore fo do the confequences of Christ's obe-" dience." Now if the Jews will not allow the Gentiles any interest in Abraham, as not being naturally descended from him, yet they must own that the Gentiles are the descendants of Adam, as well as themselves; and being all equally involved in the confequences of his fin, that is to fay, temporal death and its concomitants, from which they fhall all equally be releafed at the refurrection, through the free gift of God, refpecting the obedience of Chrift,they could not deny the Gentiles a fhare in all the other bleffings included in the fame gift. This argument, befides proving the main point, ferves to fhew, 1st, That the grace of God in the Gofpel abounds beyond, or very far exceeds, the mere reverfal of the fufferings brought upon mankind by Adam's one offence, as it bestows a vast furplufage of bleffings, which have no relation to that offences but to the many offences that mankind have committed, and to the exuberance of the divine grace. 2dly, To shew how justly the divine grace is founded upon the obedience of Chrift, in correspondence to the dispensation that Adam was under, and to the confequences of his difobedience. If his difobedience involved all mankind in death, it was proper that the obedience of Chrift fhould be the reafon and foundation, not only of reverfing that death to all mankind, but alfo of any other bleffings which God fhould fee fit to beftow upon the world. 3dly, It ferves to explain, or fet in a clear view, the difference between the law and grace. It was the law, which for Adam's one transgreffion fubjected him and his posterity, as included in him when he transgreffed, to death, without hopes of a revival. It is grace, or the favour of the law-giver, which reftores all men to life at the refurrection ; and, over and above that, has provided a. gracious dispensation for the pardon of their fins; for reducing them to obedience; for guarding them against temptations; for fupplying them with ftrength and comfort; and, if faithful to the grace of God, for advancing them to eternal life. This would give the attentive Jew a just notion of the law which himself was under, and under which he was fond of bringing the Gentiles.

The order in which the Apoltle handles the argument is this: Firft, he affirms, that death paffed upon all mankind by Adam's one offence, ver. 12. Secondly, He proves this.

many be dead, much more the grace of God, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many. and the gift by grace, which is by one man, 16 * And not as it was by one that finned, this, ver. 13, 14. Thirdly, He affirms that there is a correspondence between Adam and Christ, or between the offence and the free gift, ver. 15. Fourthly, This correspondence, so far as the two opposite parts answer each other, is fully expressed, ver. 18, 19.; and there we have the main or fundamental polition of the Apoltle's argument, in relation to the point which he has been arguing from the beginning of the Epiftle; namely, the extensivenefs of the grace of the Gospel, that it actually reaches to all men, and is not confined to the Jewith peculiarity. Fifthly, But before he lays down this polition, it was neceffary he should shew that the correspondence between Adam and Chrift, or between the offence and the gift, is not to be confined firicitly to the bounds fpecified in the position, as if the gift reached no farther than the confequences of the offence, when in reality it extends greatly beyond them, ver. 15-17. Sixthly, Having fettled thefe points as previoufly neceffary to clear up his fundamental polition, and fit it to his argument, he then lays down that polition in a diversified manner of speech, ver. 18, 19. just as in 1 Cor. xv. 20, 21. and leaves us to conclude from the premifes laid down, ver. 15-17. that the gift and grace, or favour of God, in its utmost extent, is as free to all mankind who are willing to accept of it, as this particular inftance, the refurrection from the dead. Seventhly, Having thus thewn the extensiveness of the divine grace, in opposition to the direful effects of the law, under which Adam was, that the Jew might not overlook what he intended he should particularly observe, the Apostle puts him in mind, that the law given to Adam, transgres and die, was introduced into the Jewish constitution by the ministry of Moses; and for this end, that the offence, with the penalty of death annexed, might abound, ver. 20. But to illustrate the divine grace, by fetting it in contrast to the law, he immediately adds, where fin subjecting to death bath abounded, grace bath much more abounded; that is to fay, in bleffings beftowed, it has ftretched both far beyond Adam's trangression, and the transgressions under the law of Moles; ver. 20, 21. Upon this argument the two following general remarks may be made: First, As to the order of time, the Apostle carries his arguments backward, from the time when Chrift came into the world (chap. i. 17. to chap. iv.) to the time when the covenant was made with Abraham, chap. iv. and to the time when the judgment of condemnation pronounced upon Adam came upon all men; chap. v. 12. to the end. And thus he gives us a view of the principal dispensations from the beginning of the world. "Secondly, In this last cafe, as well as the . two former, he uses law or forensic terms; judgment for condemnation, - justification, -- justify, -- made righteous; and therefore as he confiders both Jews and Gentiles at the coming of Chrift, and Abraham when the covenant was made with him, fo he confiders Adam and all men as standing in the court before the tribunal of God; and this was the clearest and concisest way of representing his arguments.

Wherefore, as by one man, &c.] The fense and connection of this verfe feems well kept up, if the x, and, in the fecond claufe be confidered as redundant, which it frequently is, I Cor. xiv. 27. 2 Cor. i. 6. As by one man fin entered,-fo, or even fo, death paffed upon all men. And thus the politions in each claufe aptly and regularly anfwer each other. All other interpretations of the verfe feem greatly to embarrafs the construction and the fenfe. Wherefore, dià teto, frequently lignifies in relation to the affair going before, not by way of inference from it, but to denote a farther enlargement upon it, or the advancing of fomething which enforces or explains it. For that all have finned, is rendered by fome unto which all have finned; that is, " all are fo far involved in the confequences of Adam's first " tranfgreffion, as by means of it to become obnoxious to ... " death." St. Paul is here evidently speaking of that mortality to which all men became subject in consequence of Adam's transgression. Volumes have been written to prove, that the death inflicted upon all mankind, as a punishment for that transgression, was not only natural, but fpiritual and eternal; but after all that has been controverted on the subject, it appears a mere strife of words. That in Adam all die, or become fubject to temporal death, is a fact which we too fatally experience : that this death was the confequence of fin is equally certain; and if there be any meaning in the words, fin is certainly the fpiritual death of the foul: the fpiritual death therefore introduced the natural; and that the finful foul dying to this life cannot be admitted into the life of glory with God, is a fact equally certain, upon the authority of revelation, with those already advanced. If therefore it be allowed, that by one man fin entered into the world, and natural death by fin, it must be allowed that from the fame fource proceeds the fpiritual and eternal, as well as the natural death. With all this I do not on any account mean to affert, that this death is inflicted upon all mankind as their, punifhment for Adam's tranfgreffion. The plain fact stands only thus :---that we are fubject to fin and death, in confequence of fin and death introduced into the world by Adam.

Ver. 13. For until the law, fin was [counted] in the world] The Apottle's doctrine, that all have received the reconciliation through Chrift, being founded on the f.a, that all have been fubjected to fin and death through Adam, he immediately enters on the proof of that fact, by appealing to the death of infants and others, who, not being capable of actual fin, cannot be thought to die for their own tranfgreffion. But to fee the argument in its full force we must fupply the word counted or imputed in the first claufe, which is inferted by the Apostle in the fecond: fin was counted in the world to all men: that is, all men without exception fuffer death, the punifhment of fin.

But sin is not imputed, when there is no law] By law Mr. Locke understands a revealed positive law threatening death for every-offence. But on that supposition, no fin could be punished before the law of Moses was given, contrary his the gift: for the judgment was by one to offences unto justification.

17 For if by one man's offence <sup>2</sup> death condemnation, but the free gift is of many reigned by one; "much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of contrary to what happened to the autediluvians. And after it was given, none but the fins of the Jews could be punished. Whereas the Apostle affirms, chap. i. 32. that the Gentiles know, that they who fin against the law writtum this beart, are worthy of death. I therefore think that the expression, Where there is no law, is general, and means, where no law of God is known; and that the Apostle had in his eye the cafe of infants and idiots, to whom cermin's there is no law, as they are not capable of the howledge of law; confequently they are not capable of formy actually like Adam. Wherefore fince death reigns over them, equally as over others, it is evident, that, bring no fin of their own, they die through Adam's fin alone.

Ver. 14. Who is the figure of him that was to come] Mam is faid to be the figure of him who was to come, that not Christ the Messiah; for this is one of the marks or merby which the Jews fignified the expected Meffiah. See Lake, xxiv. 21. John, vi. 14, 15. xi. 27. Heb. x. 37. he Greek it is ring, the type of him that was to come. Atorfignifies fuch a mark or impression as is made by a loss or a feal. It is used, John, xx. 25. to fignify the mit which the nails made in our Saviour's hands when he was nailed to the tree, and it is rendered the print of the Rull. See also Acts, vii. 44. Heb. viii. 5. A type therefore is a relative word, fignifying a thing to which another 18 to answer or agree, as the figure upon the wax answers, is like to, and agrees with, the figure upon the feal; or as the thing which is made, answers to the pattern after which it is made. Hence St. Paul feveral times applies it 10 moral action, under the notion of an example, namely, when the behaviour of one man is made the feal or ftamp whe impressed upon another man; or when one man's attions are made a pattern to be copied after by another ma, as Philip. iii. 17. 1 Theff. i. 7. 2 Theff. iii. 9. 1 Tim. ". in. Tit. ii. 7. In the place before us, when Adam is fuit to be a type of him that was to come, no doubt can be nade that St. Paul intends thereby to denote, that there wis fomething with reference to Chrift which was to bear a correspondence or to answer to fomething with reference 10 Adam; or that he draws a comparison between something which Adam did, and the confequences thereof, and femething which Christ did, and the confequences thereof. This comparison he begins at ver. 12. and carries on to the end of the chapter; and it confifts of three parts,-two affirmative propolitions, and the connection or relation between them, thus :- PROPOSITION I. "By Adam's dif-"obedience death came upon all men." CONNECTION: Adam in this was a type or figure of Christ ; or in respect 10 this, Chrift is the counterpart to Adam. PROPOSITION IL "By Christ's obedience life is restored to all men." The attentive reader will observe how methodically the Aposlic preceeds in clearing the first proposition and the Fol. II.

connection, before he advances to the fecond propolition. It may be proper just to remark, that this and the preceding verse form an instance of the perspicuous brevity for which St. Paul was remarkable. One shall hardly find in any other author an argument fo justly managed, fo fully established, attended with such a variety of instructive fentiments, in the compass of thirty words :- for, fetting afide the articles, there are no more in the Greek. It is by this upparallelled art that the Apoftle has brought fuch a variety of arguments, inftructions, and fentiments, all stated, proved, and fufficiently guarded, explained, and defended, within the limits of this Epiftle, as have made it a magazine of the most real, extensive, useful, and pleafant knowledge.

Ver. 15. But not as the offence] This evidently shews that the Apostle in this paragraph is running a parallel, or making a comparison between the offence of Adam and its confequence, and the opposite free gift of God and its confequences; and in these three verses he shews, that the comparison will not hold in all respects, because the free gift beftows bleffings far beyond the confequences of the offence, and which therefore have no relation to it; and this was neceffary, not only to prevent miltakes, concerning the confequence of Adam's offence, and the extent of Gofpel grace; but it was also necessary to the Apostle's main defign ; which was, not only to prove that the grace of the Gofpel extends to all men, fo far as it takes off the conf quence of Adam's offence; but that it likewife extends to all men with refpect to the furplufage of bleffings. in which it firetches vafily beyond the confequence of Adam's offence; for both the grace which takes off the confequence of Adam's offence, and the grace which abounds beyond it, are included in the fame xagio ia, free gift, which fhould be well observed; for in this I conceive lies the connection and force of his argument. The free gift, which stands oppoled to Adam's offence, and which appears to have been bestowed immediately after his offence (Gen. iii. 15.), includes both the grace which answers exactly to the offence, and alfo that part of the grace which ftretches far beyond it. And if the one part of the gift be freely bestowed upon all mankind, as the Jews allow, why not the other ? especially confidering that the whole gift ftands upon a reason and foundation, in excellence and worth valtly furpalling the malignity and demerit of the offence; and confequently capable of producing benefits vaftly beyond the fufferings occasioned by the offence? This is the force of the Apostle's argument; and therefore fuppoling that in the letter of verfes 18, 19. he compares the confequences of Adam's offence and Christ's obedience, only fo far as the one is commenfurate to the other; yet his reasoning, ver. 15-17 plainly shews, it is his meaning and intention that we fhould take into his conclusion the whole of the gift, fo far as it can reach to all mankind. Many be dead-unto many The many died-unto the many. I suppose, fays Mr. Locke, that the phrase or worker, and the other 78; worrs, may fland here for the multitude or collective body of mankiad : for the Apoftle in express words affures us, 1 Cor. xv. 22. that in Adam all died, and in Chrift all feall be made alive; and fo here ver. 18. all men fell under the condomnation of death, and all men were reftored unto juftification of life: which all men, in the very next words, ver. 19. are called or workor, the many. . So that the many in the former part of this verfe, and the many at the end of it, comprehending all mankind, muft be equal. The comparison, therefore, and the inequality of the things compared, lie not here between the number of those who died, and the number of those who shall be reflored to life; but the comparison lies between the perfons by whom this general death and this general reftoration to life came ;-Adam the type, and Jefus Chrift the antitype: and it feems to lie in this, that Adam's lapfe came barely for the fatisfaction of his own appetite and defire of good to himfelf; but the refloration was from the exuberant bounty and good-will of Chrift towards men; who at the cost of his own painful death purchased life for them. I may add to what Mr. Locke has advanced, that fince all mankind were made mortal for Adam's fin, the Apoftle by or worker, the many, certainly means all mankind. Befides, Christ, in speaking of this very subject, used the word in that extensive fense (Matt. xxvi. 28.); This is my blood of the new covenant which is fiel (wept workay) for many; that is, for the collective body of mankind. And as the many who died, are all mankind; to the many in the end of the verle, to whom the gift by grace is faid to have abounded, are all mankind. For the abounding of the gift by grace, as is plain from ver. 19. means only that, by the gracious gift of God, all mankind, for the fake of Chrift's obedience, are allowed a short life on earth, and a trial under a better covenant than that under which Adam fell; and that all are to be raifed from the dead at the laft day, to receive according to their deeds. Hence we are told, 1 Cor. xv. 22. As by Adam all die; fo by Chrift all fhall be made alive. See alfo the following, ver. 16. where many offences fignifies all offences.

By one man Jefus Chriff] The Apostle calls the Lord Jefus Christ a man, to show that in comparing him with Adam, his actions in the human nature chiefly are confidered.

Ver. 16. And not as it was by one that finned, &c.] The Apoftle here manifestly enters upon another respect, in which the gift reaches beyond the offence :  $\kappa_2$ , and, has nearly the fame force as al/o. See on chap. i. 17. and the introduction to the present chapter. Ver. 17. Much more they which receive, &c.] The abounding of grace here, is without all doubt the fame as the grace of God which bath abounded to many, ver. 15. and the gift of righteoufnefs or juffification, is the fame as the gift by the grace of one man, Jefus Chrift, ver, 15. There, the grace and the gift are confidered fimply and biolutely,—as free to the many, or to all mankind: here, they are confidered as received, or duly improved by fome of the many, or fome part of mankind, in order to their eternal happinefs. Grace is the favour or good-will of the donor; the gift of juftification is one of the great benefits that he has beftowed. Inflead of reigned by one,—in life by one, we may read through one.

Ver. 18, 19. Therefore, as by the offence of onc] Therefore as through one offence all men fell under condemnation; even fo through one righteoufnefs all men are reflored unto justification of life. "Aga in, therefore, always denotes the grand point the Apofile is aiming at, and which, after having given reafons, diffinctions, or explications, he at last lays down as fully cleared or established. See ch. vii. 3, 25. viii. 12. ix. 16, 18. xiv. 12, 19. And fo in this and the following verfe he clofes his argument, and finishes the comparison which he left incomplete in the 12th verfe. It feems as if the comparison in these two verses should be understood only fo far as the confequences of Chrift's obedience are of the fame extent with the confequences of Adam's difobedience. The very form of the fentence leads us to this opinion; and this exact comparison is the just and true ground of the Apostle's argument, taken from Adam's offence, for the conviction of the Jew. The stress of the argument evidently lies upon the phrafe, all men; and 'to fix a conviction upon the Jew the refloration of all men to life, which he owned, and which he must own was the effect of grace,-was the most proper topic to be infitted on. It may be objected, that justification of life, and being made righteous, feem too ftrong terms for expressing the general refurrection: but confider, first, the Apottle ules law or forenfic terms in his two foregoing arguments, and therefore no wonder if he uses them in his third and last argument. Secondly, Justification of life is opposed to condemnation; and being made righteous, is opposed to being made finners. Now if our common mortality is fignified by c.ndemnation, and made finners, what impropriety is there, in supposing that the refurrection which stands opposed to that mortality is fignified by justification of life, and being made righteous? Thirdly, Justification-being justified or made righteous, are terms applicable to any instance of deliverance from fuffering. See Judg. v. 11. Pialm iv. 1. xxii. 31. xxxi. 1. Fourthly, In the two foregoing arguments faith is infifted on as, on our part, the condition condition of juffification; but here St. Paul mention's no condition at all. He does not fay, justification of life by faith,-many fail be made righteous by faith ;--- and confequentily thus directs our thoughts to fome unconditional dicharge. But, after all, as the fense of ver. 15-17. is intended and underflood in ver. 18, 19. and as the drift of the Apoffle's conclusion is to fnew that the gift, in its utmolt extent, is free to all mankind; if any one fhall 'judge that justification of life, and shall be made rightcous, do diredly denote not only the refurrection, but the free giftinits full latitude, as free to all mankind who receive and improve the grace of God; and that the many fball be sail righteous, is to be understood as the grace of God, and the gift bath abounded unto many, ver. 15. there is certainly no need to contend; for the difference is not very material, the Apolite's argument being the fame either way. See Doddridge and Calmet.

Va. 20. Morrover, the law, Sc.] But the law, &c. Thus can be nothing plainer than that St. Paul, in this ad the next verle, makes a comparison between the flate of the Jews, and that of the Gentiles, as it flands defcribed in the eight preceding verfes; to thew wherein they diffirid or agreed, fo far as was necessary to his prefent purpole, of fatisfying the convert Romans, that in refarmee to their interest in the Gospel, the Jews had no advantage over them by the law. With what reference to those eight verses he wrote this and the following, sprears by the very choice of the words. He tells them, in 12. that death by fin entered (unnable) into the world; and here he tells them, that the law, (for fin and death rece entered already,) wassion ale, entered a little; a word which let in opposition to 110 201, gives a diffinguishing ide of the extent of the law, fuch as it really was; little and narrow as were the people of Ifrael whom alone it reached intelect of all the other nations of the earth, with whom " had nothing to do; for the law of Mofes was given to linel alone, and not to all mankind. The Vulgate, therefore, rightly translates the word fubintravit; it entered, but not for: that is to fay, the death which followed upon the account of the Mofaical law, reigned over but a fmall pan of mankind, viz. the children of Ifrael, who alone unt under that law; whereas, by Adam's transgreffion of the positive law given him in Paradife, death paffed upon all men. The Apostle, as we have observed, uses the Ford law in various fenses; sometimes for a rule in gene-14, chap. iii. 27.; fometimes for the whole Jewith code, " the Old Testament, chap. iii. 19.; fometimes for a rule a action, chap. iii. 20.; sometimes for a rule of action "th a penalty of death annexed, as here and chap. vi. 15. 14 4 &c. Such a law Adam was under; - On the day that the catef thereof, thou fhalt die : and fuch a constitution the law of Moles was, fubjecting those who were under it to death for every transgreffion. For observe, it is the try nature of how, whether divine or human, (for law in its nature and properties is the fame, whether enacted by God or man,) never to remit the penalty or forfeiture. The law of England makes felony death. The criminal, when convicted, is dead in law; and when executed, fhould he come to life again, the law flays him again that very moment; and orders him again to execution, and fo on for ever. The everlafting language of law to every one that breaks it, and confequently for every breach and tranfgreffion of it, is, Thou fhalt die, or thou fhalt be punished. Law never does, nor can pardon; but all the world knows and allows that it is the prerogative of every law-giver to pardon or remit the penalty, as he fees fit: and therefore the language of law, dying theu fhalt die, though it may also be confidered as the language of the lawgiver, yet it is not to be underflood of the event, as if the threatening must and would certainly and eventually be executed, but of the demerit of tranfgreffion; referving to the wifdom of the governor liberty to execute, mitigate, or totally remit the penalty, as he shall judge proper. Shall die, in the language of lawgivers enacting laws, mult be underftood not as the language of private perfons, but as implying and including a referve in favour of the governor's prerogative to mitigate or remit the penalty. Were it not fo, all mankind must have perished in Adam, and all the Jews. under the law had been loft for ever; and every felon in England must have been actually executed. Now, when the lawgiver or governor mitigates the penalty, or fuspends the execution,-granting the finner the benefit of repentance, and promifing pardon and life; this is Gofpel; then he is not under law but under grace or favour; not under law, fubjecting to death for every tranfgreffion, but yet under law as a rule of action which he is as much as ever obliged to obey, though every act of difobedience does not bring him under unpardonable wrath and condem-This is the difpenfation, in greater or leffer denation. grees of light, under which all mankind have been, from the time of the promife (Gen. iii. 15.) to this day; excepting that the law in its rigour was introduced among the Jews. To us Christians the grace of God is clearly difplayed : yet fo, that we are at the fame time expressly affured, that if it is perfeveringly rejected and abufed, we mult expect no farther efforts of the divine goodnets for our falvation; Heb. vi. 4-8. x. 26, 27. If, defpifing God's present patience and forbearance, we live after the flesh, the law at the last day will take place, or be executed, and we shall die, chap. viii. 13.; for the law is for holy, and good, and juft, that it can be relaxed only in favour of the finner's repentance. But in the cafe of impenitents and incurables, it must and will take place; that is to fay, in other words, it is perfectly right and fitting that they, being the corruption and nuifance of God's creation, fhould be destroyed as tares and chaff in the fire.

abound, or rather fo that the offence might abound. See chap. The meaning is not, that the law was brought in iii. 19. among the Jews to make them more wicked, or guilty of more fins than they were before ; but the meaning is, that by the entrance of the law every fin which the Jew committed made him liable to death; and fo the offence of the fame nature with Adam's was multiplied. Mr. Locke is of opinion, that the last clause of this verse is spoken with fpecial relation to the Jews, and denotes all that furplufage of grace which God vouchfafed to them above the reft of the world. But though this may be true, there is no neceffity for excluding the grace which extends to all mankind; and the following verfe, as it is the concluding stroke of the Apostle's argument, naturally leads our thoughts to take in the whole compais of fin, and its effects upon all the world, as well as the whole of God's grace, not only to the Jews, 'but to all mankind. See Locke, Doddridge, and Whitby.

Inferences.—As the fall of man happened in a higher and very different order of nature from the prefent, it is not pollible for us to have a clear and adequate knowledge of it. But there are numberlefs degrees between a perfect knowledge and a total ignorance. We are told all that it concerns us to know; and that we fhould attend to as an important part of our own hiftory. In forming our notion concerning it from the account given in Scripture, we mult make due allowance for the imperfection of human language, which c mnot express fpiritual things otherwife than by figures founded in that analogy which fubfifts between the vifible and the invifible world.

But it may be afked, Whence came evil into the world? This has been deemed a queftion of great intricacy; but it may be folved by confidering only whence meral good proceeds. Does it not arife from the right ufe which a free agent makes of his liberty, when he chorfes that which is proper for him, and rejects the contrary? whether the power fo to do, refers to man in his original flate of innocence; or to man in his fallen flate, unable as of himfelf to do any thing good, but able to do all things through Chrift flrengthening him? Evil therefore flows from the abufe of moral liberty; and it is needlefs to attempt to account for its exiftence from any other fource. Take away moral liberty, that is, the power of choofing what is good, and avoiding what is evil, and there can be no moral good in man.

Adam by the abufe of his free-will pulled down defluction upon himfelf. He difobeyed his Creator, and he had in part the punithment he deferved. So far, I think, there is no ground for objection. But the confequence of his fall involving all his race, and making infirmity permanent, as Efdras fpeaks; this is a great offence to many. We are apt to fay with him, That it had been better not to have given the earth to Adam; (not to have trufted him with the fate of his pofterity;) or elfe when it was given him, to have refireined him from finning. This fentiment, though a rafh one, is viry natural to our frailty and ignorance; as is also the exclamation which follows: O Adam, what haft thou done ! for though it was then that finned/l, then art not fallen alone, but we all that come of thee. Such complaints and fuch expoftulations have been common among men; but it is common to complain without reafon; and if we faw the whole plan of Providence with relation to mankind, I am fully perfuaded that we fhould find this complaint very unreafonable, and even most ungrateful to our Redeemer; who has provided an ample remedy for all damages arifing from Adam's transferefilen, by atoming not only for original fin, but alfo for the many actual offences of penitent finners, as is fluwed at large in the chapter before us.

I would only observe in this place, that the reafon why we are fo prone to complain and lament ourselves, is, becaufe we now feel the inconveniences of our prefent flate, and are not fufficiently apprifed of many of its advantages, nor of the greater difadvantages which other initiating flater may be liable to. It is very probable, that every intelligent being has a time of trial or probation. Some of the angels are fallen irrep rably. Our father Adam was placed in a lower flation than they: his fall confequently was lefs, and by the marcy of our great Mediator, he and Eve, the companion of his fall, are now fully reflored. We find ourfelves, not originally by our own fault, at the bottom. But a ray of light reaches down to us, and a way is opened for our alcent. That light and that way is our dear Redeemer, who is ever prefeut with and in the believer, to enlighten, guide, and affift him in his paflage.

But why (it may be faid) did not God make us happy at once? Why fhould he fuffer his creatures to run any hazard of being miferable? He might have made juffice as natural and neceffary as refpiration; and thereby fpared us all the pains which we must now be at before we can be happy upon the terms which he has fet us?

To this we might anfwer in the words of the Apottle: Nay but, O man, who art thou that replieft against God? Shall the thing formed fay unto him who formed it, why haft thou made me thus? Hath not the patter power over the clay? -&c. Thus we might anfwer, and thereby fatisfy a pious mind: although these words were spoken only concerning God's electing a peculiar people, called to the diffinguithed privileges of the Golpel difpendation; and were not intended to be applied, as they have fince been, to the bulk of mankind, whofe fentence, as well as ours, at the laft day, will be according to their works : which I remark here, becaufe this way of arguing, which refolves difficulties by vouching divine fupremacy, has been fo abufed. To those therefore who move this question, "Why did " not God make us happy at once, without our paffing " through any flate of probation ?" it will be more fatiffactory, if we can intelligibly unfold this knot, instead of cutting it by dint of fovereign power.

The objectors would be difperfed from all probationary flates; they would take no trouble, and run no hazard: they would have nothing to do, but to enjoy; they would be immutably, eternally, infinitely, happy. They want no more of God; they have no other cares or defires.

Let it now be confidered, whether fuch defires are reafonable. Are they not, on the contrary, most ungenerous

We are all children of the Almighty Father, and confequently under fact obligations as that relation infers. hum in this flate of confusion, we think it wrong when a worthle's man is possible of great wealth or preferment. Hugh thefe are far from being any real good, yet, as men value them, they judge them misplaced in the hands of a fool. In the kingdom of heaven there will be no inch preposerous distribution; but excellence that be the metiure of blis; and none shall be errowned, but those webo inv conquered.

And this may ferve for an answer to those, who are inclined to charge God foolifhly, for permitting the in-Bernet of the first man's transgression to infect all his take. This infection we commonly call original fin, which his been denied by fome, and milrepresented by others, with fuch gross aggravations, as render it offensive to common feme, and inconfishent with the revealed doctrines, principally those of this Epistle.

As for those who deny it, I fhall not difpute with them; for the would debate with a blind man about darkness? And the must be blind indeed, who perceive not evil in their natures. The truth here is to be felt, and needs no foreign proof.

I thail here just take notice of the account of original In given in the articles of faith of the church of England: which was made to render us the more fensible of our eligatons to the Redeemer, and is expressed in terms which are literally true in a certain fense, yet may easily be militken. As where it is faid [the IXth article] that original fin is not only the corruption, but the fault of the nature if every man, and deferves condemnation. When we call it a fail, we mult remember to diffinguish it from our own adult faults, and remark, that the article calls it the fault if your nature. Fault is used here, as we apply it to imatimate beings, and in the fame fense, as when we fay of a wild, that it is faulty, that is to fay, defective, ufclefs, delowing to be rejected and caft away. However, for the prefent, it has fpoiled us, it makes us abominable : for a fault is a fault, and corruption is corruption, whichever way it came, or whatever use may be made of it. It has happened without our crime, and it may have an iffue unfpeakably to our advantage. But neither of these are here confidered. Regard is had only to the prefent nature of man in his fallen and unregenerate ftate, which is notorioufly unjust, and as fuch deferves condemnation, as a dead tree cumbering the ground, if there were no reviving power, if there were no Redeemer. But this is putting a cafe, which never was, nor could have been. For the Almighty, who inhabiteth eternity, and whole all-feeing eye reaches through the whole extent of it, foreknowing the lapfe of the first Adam, had, before the foundation of the world, provided a fecond head of human nature, through whom to derive his bleffings to the whole race, when the first channel was polluted and spoiled. And as by the first channel death came into the world, fo refarreetion proceeds from the fecond : for as in Adam all die, fo in Chrift fball all be made alive. And thefe who have done good, fhall come forth to the refurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the refurrestion of condemnation.

The prefent life is our time of trial, during which our gracious Redeemer administers proper affiftances to each man particularly according to his capacity. For as he has tapled death for every man; fo he is the Saviour of all men, and the light of all men, having written the law in their hearts, and offering grace to fulfil it.

As for us, who have the light of revelation, we have fo much more to anfwer for. Let us not then wafte our time in vain complaints, or abfurd cavils at the divine difpenfation. We fee indeed but little of God's ways, yet what we fee is fufficient for our conduct, and to filence all reafonable objections; fince we are affured that the merits of Chrift are co-extended with the demerits of Adam, and that every man at the laft day fhall be judged only according to his own deeds. Then the mercy, as well as the juffice of God, will be exerted in a manner which far transfeends all notions that we can now form of them; the clouds, which now cover the ways of Providence, will be diffipated; wifdom will be juftified of her children; and even thofe who thall be then reprobated, will be forced to acknowledge the equity of their condemnation.

of our justification, but the alone and infinite merit of our Lord and Saviour Jefus Chrift. Being now justified,

1. We have peace with God. The dreadful breach which 'fin had made is repaired, the enmity between God and us is removed, and being reftored to a flate of favour and reconciliation with him, we have that peace of God in our fouls which paffeth all understanding, and which none can know or tafte till they have, through Jefus Chrift-cur-Lord, received the atonement.

2. We have accefs by faith into this grace wherein we fland; have freedom and liberty to approach a throne of grace, as in a state of acceptance before God; and are assured that all our requests which are agreeable to his will, shall through our great High-prieft be heard and anfwered.

3. We rejoice in hope of the glory of God, that glory which shall be revealed at the day of the appearing of our great God and Saviour Jefus Chrift, and which we can now antedate by faith.

4. Even our feverest trials now have in them matter of abundant joy. And we can not only rejoice in the prospect before us, but we glory in tribulations alfo, in all our afflictions, perfecutions, fufferings, and reproaches for Chrift, knowing that, however grievous to flefh and blood these things at prefent may be; in the iffue they shall prove that they have been bleffings in difguife; while tribulation worketh patience, and gives us an opportunity to exercife God's holy will; and, without repining, cheerfully to refign ourfelves into his hands, neither angry at the inftruments of our troubles, nor refenting their indignities. And patience brings experience of God's power, grace, and faithfulnefs, fupporting us under our trials, and extricating us out of them; and of our own frailty and fidelity, while we feel how weak we are in ourfelves, yet that we can do all things through Chrift ftrengthening us. And experience begets hope; every support which the Lord ministers, every deliverance which he gives, confirms and encourages our hope in him; and hope maketh not afhamed, gives us a holy but humble boldnefs to approach the throne of grace, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghoft which is given unto us; and our hope refts not on any goodness or strength in ourselves, but on him whofe free and boundlefs love has, in the most copious ftreams, poured forth the Holy Ghoft into our hearts in the richeft manifestations, and produces these bleffed and happy effects.

2dly, The Apostle, having mentioned that delightful theme, the love of God which is in Chrift Jefus our Lord, cannot but expatiate thereon. It is amazing love, if we confider the perfons to whom it is fhewn, the manner in which it is expressed, and the bleffings thence derived. (1.) The perfors were ungodly wretches, apostates from God, desperately wicked, sunk in the lowest abyfs of milery, funers in nature and in practice, and exposed to all the terrible wrath of an offended God, without flrength to afford themfelves the least relief, in order to escape the just and inevitable destruction which was before them; yea, encinies, determinately fet on evil, and rebels open and avowed against God's crown and dignity. (2.) In this ftate of deadly guilt and hopeless milery, in due time, according to the divine appointment, Chrift died for the ungodly; an inftance of fuch transcendent grace and love as never had appeared on earth before. Were we to fearch the world throughout, fcarcely could we find a man who, for the most righteous, excellent, and amiable person, would lay down his own life to ranfom him : though peradventure for a good man, whole public ulefulnels was eminent, or to whom he owed the deepest obligations, one might be found fo generous and grateful, as even to dare to die in his flead. And with what aftonifhment would fuch an heroic action be heard, and preferved in the records of fame, for the admiration of all fucceeding ages. But lo! with infinitely transcending glory does God commend the furpassing excellence of his love towards us, in that while we were yet finners Chrift died for us, took our nature, ftood in our place, endured the curfe which we had deferved, and by the ranfom of his own blood redeems every believer from his state of guilt, misery, and despair. Hear it, ye angels, with admiration and aftonishment ! Hear it, ye finful fons of men, with wonder and love; and henceforth let heaven echo and earth refound with the praifes of redeeming love ! (3.) Ineftimable are the bleffings derived to all the faithful through this love of God in Jefus Chrift.

1. We are now juffified through his blood, and reconciled to God by his death. All the enmity between us is done away, his favour is reftored, and we are accepted in the beloved.

2. Much more then may we depend upon it, as a most affured truth, that if we are now justified before God, and cleave to Jefus to the end, (which must be implied according to the whole analogy of faith,) we fhall be faved from wrath through him. For if, when enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being now in a flate of reconciliation, and having an advocate in our afcended Jcfus, to whom all power is given in heaven and in earth, and cleaving perfeveringly to him, [ball we be faved by his life.

3. Such a prospect ministers the most enlivening delight to the foul. Not only are we reconciled, and raifed fuperior to all tribulations, but having through Jefus Christ now received the atonement, and being actually made partakers of justification and acceptance, which, by his obedience to the death of the cross, he purchased for us; we joy in God through our Lord Jefus Chrift, as our God, our portion, and exceeding great reward. Bleffed and happy the people that are in fuch a cafe!

3dly, From the 12th verse to the end of the chapter, the Apofule draws a parallel between the two covenant heads, heads, Adam and Chrift; between the guilt and mifery derired from the one, and the blefiednefs obtained by the other: where it appears how men came into the wretched thate of fin in which at prefent they appear, and how rich is that here of God which draws the faithful out of it.

Browman fin entered into the world; one fin opened the feed-gates of ungodlinefs, and deluged the world, overwhething it with miferies unutterable; and death by fin, in every tremendous form, feized on the human nature; and plash, the wages of fin, paffed upon all men, for that all bere fored. Adam was the common parent and covenanthead of manking, and at that time poffeffed the whole lumm nature; to that all his posterity, being in his loins, (Hanil 9, 10.) fell with him. So that it appears hereby tha Jews as well as Gentiles are in the fame state of igning. For until the law, before the revelation of God's will on mount Sinai was made, fin was in the with death and all its attendant miferies; but this tuppoles lome law in force, before that which was given by Moles; for fin is not imputed when there is no law, nor weld any punifhment have been inflicted where there vis to offence committed. But though the law of Moles va not in being, neverthelefs death reigned from Adam to Mich not only over actual transgressors grown up to the knowledge of good and evil, but even over them that is nu finned after the fimilitude of Adam's transgression, ushindes of infants fuffering in the deluge and in the utidations of Sodom and Gomorrah; and daily their dying guins and agonies teftify that fin is in them, because the ruges of it is exacted from them, and evidently proves, that they are implicated in the curfe inflicted for that one nun's disobedience by which fin and death entered into the world; and who is the figure of him that was to come, the tp: of our fecond covenant-head and representative, Jesus Unit, who in the fulnefs of time fhould become incarnate ; that as lin and death are communicated to us by the one, blivul tighteoufners and life be obtained for us by the than But, though the parallel between them is ftriking, fer comparing them the latter far excelleth : for not as the first, half is the free gift; the benefit accruing from the infinite merit of Christ's obedience to the death of the tics, does not barely answer the dire effects of the first mails in ; it does much more. For if through the offence I are many be dead, the dreadful fontence being paffed upon them; much more the grace of God, and the gift by For which is by one man, Jojus Chrift, who has made that Find stonement, by which the most unfearchable riches Gidine grace are procured for his faithful faints, bath Surface unto many, fecuring to all perfevering believers, the merely fuch a life as Adam had in innocence, but one ir lupating in glory, and eternal in its endurance. And " as it was by she that finned, fo is the gift; the diffimilitude Caliberable with regard to the efficacious influence of the tradicions of the two great covenant-heads : for the judgtear by one fin, of one man, to the condemnation of all Spotenty whom he represented ; but the free gift of God, through the Redcemer's obedience to death, reaches not to the pardon of one fin, but of many offences unto juflification; and it is through faith in him, that all true believers are freely and fully delivered from all condemnation, and accepted as righteous before God. For if by one man's offence, or by one offence, death reigned by one, and let up the pillars of his throne, bringing the whole human race under his mortal power, much more they which receive abundance of grace, even all that fulness which is laid up for them in Jefus Chrift, and of the gift of righteoufnefs, living up to the privileges of their high and holy difpenfation through grace, fball reign in life by one, Jefus Chrift, triumphant over fin, its guilt and power, quickened to fpiritual life here, and looking for that life of glory hereafter, when they shall reign with Jefus in heaven, and fee fin and death and hell for ever destroyed. Therefore as by the offence of one, or by one offence, judgment came (or fin entered, as it may be fupplied) upon all men to condemnation, and they were exposed to death thereby; even so by the righteousness of one, the fecond man, the Lord from heaven, the free gift came. upon all men to justification of life. For where fin abounded, grace did much more abound ; God taking occafion, even from the creature's vilenefs, to magnify the more transcendently the riches of his own free mercy, in pardoning, juftifying, and faving loft fouls, and raifing the faithful to higher glory than that which they had loft by the first man's difobedience. So that as fin hath reigned unto death, and, usurping the throne, spreads its dire dominion over the fallen fons of men; even fo might victorious grace erect her throne on the ruins of these vanquished foes, and reign through righteoufnefs, by Jefus Chrift our Lord, over all the faithful faints of God unto eternal life ; refcuing them from the power of 6n and death, bringing them into a ftate of favour with God, which is better than life itfelf, quickening them to spiritual life here, and to eternal life hereafter. Thou God of all grace, fet up this bleffed kingdom in my heart, and reign for ever there !

ST. Paul's defign in this and the two following chapters, was to confute the flanderous report mentioned chap. iii. 5. namely, that the Apoftles ordered their disciples to fin, that grace might abound in their pardon : alfo to prove, in opposition to the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles, that the doctrine of justification by faith without works of law, does not render law ufelefs, but rather establishes it as highly useful, chap. iii. 31. His transition to these subjects is elegant. For, in the foregoing chapter, having thewn that all mankind die for the fin of Adam ; also having discoursed. chap. v. 20, 21. of the fuperabounding of grace, through Christ, in producing the righteousness of faith, and in rewarding that righteousness with eternal life, he begins this chapter with asking, Whether any one could feriously think that he could be fo inconfistent as to order men to fin. that grace might the more abound in their pardon? ver. 1. -Persons, faid he, who teach as we do, that God has Jubjected fubjected the whole human race to death for the one offence of the first man, never can fancy that God will beitow eternal life the more abundantly on men, becaufe they continue in fin, ver. 2 .- Next, to fhew that the Apostles, who taught the doctrine of justification by faith without works, did not mean thereby to fet their disciples free from the obligations of morality, he observed that, in baptifin, the rite of initiation into the Christian church, the baptized perfon is as one put to death with Chrift on account of fin, in order that he may be strongly impressed with a fenie of the malignity of fin, and excited to hate it as the greatest of evils, ver. 3.-Moreover, in the fame rite, the baptized perfon is taught that he shall be raifed from the dead with Chrift, by the power of the Father, to live with him for ever in heaven, provided he is prepared for that life by true holinels, ver. 4, 5.-Farther, by their baptifin, believers are laid under the ftrongest obligations to holinefs, becaufe it reprefents their old man, their old corrupt nature, as crucified with Chrift, to teach them that their body, which fin claimed as its property, being put to death, was no longer to ferve fin as its flave, ver. 6. - By calling men's body the body of fin, the Apostle reprefents fin, or evil defire, as a perfon who, by overcoming the first man, had made him and all his posterity his flaves by right of conquest, and who, as their master, was continually demanding from them, with rigour, the ignominious fervice of wicked actions. And becaufe the Greeks and Romans were well acquainted with the manner in which flaves were acquired, and with the laws by which their lives and fervices were regulated, he appealed to thefe known cuftoms, to prove that, by the death of Chrift their federal head, the claim which fin has fet up to the perfons and fervices of mankind, in confequence of the fall of the first man, is utterly destroyed.

Sin, fays the Apostle, claims you as his flaves, in confequence of having fubdued your first parents, and taken them captives: but I will shew you by the laws of flavery, that that claim is now cancelled, and that it is both your right and your duty to shake off the yoke of that tyrannical master. Sin having put you to death with Christ, ye are no longer his flaves. For the flave of fin who is dead, is freed from the dominion of fin, even as every flave who is put to death by his mafter, is freed from the dominion of that mafter, ver. 7.-But though we died with Chrift on the crofs, we live at prefent, and shall afterwards, if faithful, live together with him in heaven; and therefore we are now, of right, his fervants, ver. 8, 9, 10 .- Farther, that the Romans might rightly understand this argument, the Apostle defired them to conclude, from what he had told them, that at the fall they had been killed, both corporally and spiritually, by the fin of their first parents, but were made alive, both in body and spirit, by Christ, who on that account was become their rightful Lord, ver. 11 .---Wherefore, it was both their duty and their interest, not to allow fin to rule them any longer, in the life which they had acquired through Chrift, but to employ both the members of their body, and the faculties of their mind, in the fervice of God, as perfons, who have been made alive from the death brought on them by fin, ought to do; ver. 12, 13.

Next, in answer to the calumny, that the Christian teachers encouraged their disciples to fin, by telling them that they were not under law, but under grace, the Apoftle affirmed that that doctrine has the direct contrary tendency. Sin shall not lord it over you, for this very reason, that ye are not under law, but under grace : and he had good reason to fay so, because he had shewn, ver. I L. that under grace, that is, under the new covenant, men are made fpiritually alive by God; confequently they have fufficient ftrength communicated to them for conquering evil defires, and for working righteoufnefs; and great encouragement to do fo, by the promife of pardon which is made to them. in that covenant. Whereas law, by rigoroufly requiring perfect obedience to all its precepts, and by refuling pardon to finners, drives them to defpair, and hardens them in their fins, ver. 14.-Thefe, faid the Apostle, being the doctrines which we constantly preach, can you believe that we ever faid, Let us fin, becaufe we are not under law, but under grace? ver. 15.-In the mean time, I must inform you, that the advantages which you enjoy under grace, though very great, are of fuch a kind as to leave you still at liberty to give yourfelves up, either to holy affections, or to finful defires, as you choose; and that, to whomfoever of these masters you yield yourfelves flaves, you give him the absolute direction of you, ver. 16.-However, I thank God, that ye Romans, though formerly the flaves of fin, have obeyed the form of doctrine into which ye were delivered, as into a mould, ver. 17 .- and are become the fervants of righteousness, ver. 18 .--- Withal, to prevent the Romans from being furprised at the things that he had written, he told them, that, on account of the weaknefs of their understanding in spiritual matters, he had reasoned from the laws and cuftoms of men respecting flaves, to give them a just idea of the power of men's affections. And therefore, as formerly, through the power of their lufts, they had employed themfelves wholly in wickednefs, he exhorted them now, by the aid of the Spirit of God, (without whom they could do nothing,) through the influence of holy affections, to employ themfelves wholly in working rightcoulnels, ver. 19, 20.-Then he contrasted the miferable condition and end of the flave of fin, with the happy flate and reward of the fervant of God: from which it appears, that even under the gracious new covenant, the wages of hn obflinately continued in, is death; but the reward of holinefs, is everlafting life, ver. 21, 22, 23.

The metaphors in this chapter are extremely bold; yet, being taken from matters well known, they were used with with great advantage. For the influence of finful paffions, in confirmining wicked men to commit evil actions, could not be better represented to those who were acquainted with the condition of flaves, and with the cuftoms by which their lives and fervices were regulated, than by the rover which a tyrannical lord exercifed over his flaves. Neither could any thing more affecting be devifed, to fliew the militable condition of a perfon habitually governed by. his lufts, than to liken it to the state of a slave under a ferere usprincipled mafter, who rigoroufly requires him to fpend the whole of his time and ftrength in his work, who cracks from him things both painful and ignominious, and who, by the feverity of the fervices which he impofes, micrably puts an end to the lives of his flaves.

Va. 1.] The Apoftle having now proved, by three dilinet arguments, that both Gentiles and Jews can be putioned, and made partakers of the privileges and bleffags of the kingdom of God under the Meffiah, no othervie than by the grace of God, through faith alone; he ut proceeds, in proper order, to fnew the obligations that both Gentiles and Jews were under to a life of holinefs in this their new flate, and the means and advantages which they enjoyed for that purpole. This he does, not only to intrud the Christians, and to prevent their mistakes, but alo to wipe away a calumny industriously spread, as if, in Etting juffification by grace without works, he had taught that we are under no obligation to obedience, chap. iii. 8. Against this objection, miltake, or calumny, he puts in a areat, chap. iii. 31. and handles the point at large. See the introductory notes to this chapter.

Va. 2, 3. How fall we, that are dead, &c.] The obkdion which carnal minds are naturally apt to make scale julification by God's free grace, through the intute merit of Christ, is not to be answered by allowing it cut own righteousness is to be joined in part with his to him us; for, on that fuppofition, there would be no tora in the chieftion, and the affertion would be conthey while whole analogy of faith. But it is to be anfacility howing, as the Apolile does, the indifpenfable Rectar of perfonal holiness in them who are justified, the infeparable connection which is fixed, by the ordivien of God in the Gofpel, between these things, "A sut blending them together, or confounding one with t: et.er. While therefore we, after the Apostle's exapple, adhere strictly to the doctrines of grace, and guard " dis manner against the abuse of them, we may be fished that our doctrine is the fame, and fully aniwers bei me objection with his : and while we keep both thefe Pats in view, in our dealings with God, and walking in terels of life before him, we need not fear a miscarriage that way to heaven. The Apostle's answer is, No, by <sup>29</sup> means: this would be the vileft abufe of this moft the aring and comfortable truth, and directly contrary to its her nature and defign. For, though we cannot be juf-1 M. II.

tified by any of our own works; yet how can we, who profess and are obliged to die to fin, and who are really mortified in our affections to it, as to the worft of evils, if we be fincere believers; how, I fay, in any confiftence with our flate and character, and with a fenfe of duty and gratitude; or with what confcience, hope, or peace, can fuch as we are, go on any longer in a course of fin, or allow ourfelves in the practice of any known iniquity? It is monitroufly abfurd to suppose it.

Ver. 4. Buried with him by baptifin] As the ordinance of baptifin feems plainly to be fometimes reprefented, by fprinkling or pouring water; as particularly when God is faid to fave us by the waybing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoft, which he feed on us abundantly through Jefus Chrift our Saviour (Tit. iii. 5, 6): fo fome have thought that it is here mentioned with an allufion to the laying of a body under water; and yet, according to this mode of reafoning, it more naturally alludes to the throwing of earth upon the dead corpfe, in which the body is entirely paffive, and not at all active in going down into the grave, than to plunging it into the earth or water. But, after all, I am very much of opinion with Mr. Henry, or his continuator, Dr. Evans, who, in the exposition of this passage, fays, "Why this burying in baptism should fo " much as allude to any cuftom of dipping under water " in baptism any more than our baptismal crucifixion and " death fhould have any fuch reference, I confefs I cannot "fee. It is plain, that it is not the fign, but the thing " fignified in baptifm, that the Apoflie here calls being " buried with Chrift ; and the exprellion of burying alludes " to Chrift's burial. As Chrift was buried, that he might " rife to a new and more heavenly life; fo we are in bap. " tifm buried, that is to fay, cut off from the life of fin. " that we may rife again to a new life in faith and love." Others have thought, that the reference is only to the benefits of fpiritual baptifin, and that nothing can be concluded about the external mode of baptifm from this verfe, more than from the next, which speaks of our being therein fymbolically planted together in the likeness of Chrift's death; or than from the figure of baptifin faving us, as reprefented by the floating of Neak's ark, when the few that were in it were faved by water; I Pct. iii. 20, 21. But no mode of baptifin can be fignified by either of thefe. As the church at Rome feems to have been planted about the year 43, and this Epillle was written in the year 58, that is, fifteen years after; and yet the Apostle speaks of the converted Romans in general as haplized; it must be supposed that baptifin was administered to those whole parents had been Chriftians at the time of their birth. See Gale's Serm. vol. ii. p. 202.

Some commentators have translated the words thus : For if we have been made growers-together with Christ in the likeness of bis death [or in that which is like his death], we shall be also growers-together with him in the likenefs of [or in that which is like] his refurrection. It appears to be a metaphor, and a very beautiful one, taken from grafting, or making the feion grow together with the new flock. Ver. 6. Our old man] Our wicked and corrupt fleshly felf, Gal. v. 24. Ephef. iv. 22. Col. ii. 11. 1 Pet. iv. 1. The utter deftruction of the body of fin in us, is certainly intended in the Gofpel; but the particular import of the Greek word naraeynes, is, to make void, debilitate, enervate, difannul, abolifb, or depose. Compare chap. iii. 31. iv. 14. I Cor. ii. 6. xiii. 8. xv. 24. Ephef. ii. 15. 2 Tim. i. 10. It will conduce much to the underftanding of St. Paul in this and the two following chapters, if it be observed that thefe phrafes, to ferve fin,-to be fervants of fin,-fin reigning in our mortal bodies,—to obey fin in the lufts of our bodies,—to yield our members instruments of unrighteousness unto sin, or servants of uncleanness,-and of iniquity unto iniquity,-to be free from rightesufnefs,-to walk, live, or be after the flefb,to be carnally-minded, all fignify one and the fame thing; namely, the giving ourfelves up to the conduct of our carnal and finful appetites; allowing any of them the command over us, and the conduct and prevalency in determining us. On the contrary, the walking after the spirit, or in neumess of life,-the crucifixion of the old man,the destruction of the body of fin, the deliverance from the body ef death, - to be freed from fin, - to be dead to fin, and alive unto God,-to yield ourfelves unto God, as thefe who are alive from the dead, to yield our members fervants of righteoufnefs unto holinefs, or instruments of rightcoufness unto God,-to be fervants of chedience unto righteousness,-made free from fin,fervants of righteousness,-to be after the Spirit, to be spiritually-minded,-to mortify the deeds of the body,-do all fignify a conftant fleady purpose and fincere endeavour to obey the law and will of God in every thing through grace; these feveral expressions being used in feveral places, as best ferves the occasion, and illustrates the fense.

Ver. 7. He that is dead is freed from fin ] St. Peter feems to paraphrafe this verfe, I Pet. iv. I. He that hath fuffered in the flefb, kath ceafed from fin; as if he had faid, "The " Chriftian who is fo refolute, by the power of the Spirit " of God, as to refift all temptation to fin, and chooles " rather to fuffer any temporal calamities than commit fin, " or neglect his duty, is the only man who has done with " fin ;- who is effectually delivered from the power and " condemnation of it." The Greek word discussofial, frequently fignifies in Scripture to be faved or delivered. See Itai. xlv. 25. James, ii. 25. and on ch. v. 16. Mr. Locke paraphrafes this pallage thus : "For he that is dead is fet " free from the vaffalage of fin, as a flave is from the " vaffalage of his master." St. Paul makes it his bufinefs, in this chapter, not to tell the Jews what they certainly are; but to exhort them to be what they ought and are engaged to be, by becoming Christians; namely, that they ought by the power of grace to emancipate themfelves from the vaffalage of fin; not that they were fo emancipated without any danger of return : for then he could not have faid what he does, ver. 1, 12, 13. which fuppoles it in their power to continue in their obedience to fin, or return to that vaffalage if they would.

Ver. 10. For in that he died, &c.] Dr. Doddridge translates and paraphrafes the passage thus : " For whereas " be died, he died once for all, as a factifice for fin, to atone " the injured justice of God, and repair the honours of " his violated law : and as he liveth he liveth to God for "ever; his immortal life is entirely appropriated and " devoted to his fervice; wherein we ought to make it our " conftant care to imitate his example." See chap. viii. 17. Gal. ii. 20. 1 Pet. ii. 21. iv. 1.

Ver. 11. Likewise, &c.] Thus then reckon ye yourselves, &c. See Col. iii. 3.

Ver. 12. Let not fin therefore reign in your mortal body] Sin is here spoken of as a person; a prosopopaia made use of throughout this and the following chapter; which mult be observed if we will understand them right. See I Pet. iv. 1. Dr. Heylin renders this verse, Let not fin therefore reign in your mortal bodies, fo as to obey it by indulging the appetites of the body. Mr. Locke observes, that the prepolition w, in the Apostle's writings, often fignifies by; and as here, as well as in the following chapter, ver. 18. and 24. and elsewhere, he places the root of fin in the body, the fense feems to be, "Let not fin reign over you, " by the lufts of your mortal body." The force of St. Paul's argument appears to be this: "By your baptifm " you are engaged to become conformable to Chrift's death " and refurrection: he once died for fin, fo do you count " yourfelves dead to fin : he role to life, wherein he lives "wholly to God; fo must your new life be under the " vaffalage of fin no more ; but you mult live entirely to-" the fervice of God, to whom you are devoted."

Ver. 13. Your members as instruments] Sinful lufts, at least those to which the Gentiles were most eminently enflaved, feem fo much placed in the body and the members, that they are emphatically called the members. See Col. iii. 5. The word only, rendered influments, properly fignifies weapons; and in this fense has a beautiful propriety. Sce Locke, Doddridge, and Mintert. Ver.

Vn.14 For fin, &c.] That is, " Sin shall not be your "multer, to dispose of your members and faculties in its "drugery and fervice as it pleafes: you shall not be "under its controul, in subjection to it, unless by your "own free choice you enthral yourselves to it, and by a "roluntary obedience give it the command over you, and "art willing to have it your master." We must bear in mind, that St. Paul here, and in the following chapter, perfonishes fin, as striving with men for mastery to deftoy them. The force of his reasoning here stands thus: " You are obliged, by your taking on you the pro-"felion of the Gospel, not to be any longer flaves and "tulls to fin, not to be under the fway of your carnal " hefe, but to yield yoursclves up to God, to be his fer-"rants, in a conftant and fincere purpose and endeavour "to chey him in all things. This if you do, fin shall not "be able to procure you death; for you are not now "under a law which condemns to death for every the leaft "transgreffion, though it be but a flip of infirmity; but by " your receiving Jefus Chrift with genuine faith you are "entered into the covenant of grace : and being under "grace, God accepts of you, and, if you perfevere in that "fath which works by love, will give you eternal life "through Jefus Chrift. But if you, by a willing obe-" dance to your lufts, make yourfelves vaffals to fin, Sin, "asthe brd and mafter to whom you belong, will pay " yes with death, the only wages he has to give." Com-Fur tet. 23. Mr. Locke is of opinion, that by law and grass the Apostle here means the Jewish and Christian dipolations. See the next chapter. But others observe, that by law is here meant firict rigid law, which was but a part of the Jewish dispensation, threatening det to every transgreffion ; and that by grace are meant the gracious terms, provisions, and diffeoveries of the 6 fel; and that both are to be understood as they relate to fractity of life, the fubject upon which the Apoille is V. In-

Fig. 16. Obtience] That which he calls here fimply tiline, in other places he calls obtience of faith, and obttra of Chrift; meaning a reception of the Gofpel of Grift. The Apolle explains the obligations of Gentile Callians in their prefent flate, in opposition to the Gentle or heathen flate, by the cafe of flaves, at that time well method all over the world. A fervant or flave was his fuller's preperty, a part of his goods, which he might the for hit, fell to another mafter, or manumit and fet free, as he pleafed. Confequently the fervant muft be employed, as the mafter that he was under was either good or bad; and muft fare according as his mafter happened to be rich or poor, good-natured or churlifh, niggardly or liberal: and his being releafed from a bad mafter, and put into the hands of a good one, kind and generous, muft be a very defirable and happy alteration in his circumftances. See Locke.

Ver. 17. But God be thanked ] Here the Apostle thanks God, that whereas they had been heathens, and fo ranked among the fervants of fin, they were now become Christians, and confequently ranked among the fervants of the Gofpel, or fuch as were obedient to it. This he explains by a metaphor taken from the coining, ftamping, or cafting of metal in a die or mould. The tung, (the form, as we translate it,) that is, the flamp, die, or mould, is the doctrine of the Gospel. Their being put into or under this mould, was their palling out of the heathen into the Christian state. By the counfel of God, who had before determined to take the Gentiles into his Gofpel church; by the preaching of the Gospel, whereby they were called into the church; and by their willingly embracing the genuine faith of the Gospel, they were put, or delivered, into or under the die or mould, from which they had received a new impression, or were fashioned into new creatures. And their obeying from their heart the mould, or model of doctrine, refers to their first faith, at their conversion. By this they were put or delivered into the die or mould of the Golpel: and their farther and continued obedience is what the Apoftle in this chapter earneftly exhorts them to; namely, that as they had, through the grace of God, the doctrine of the Gofpel, and were now put into it, fo they would labour to admit a clear, fair, and full impression upon their hearts and lives. The figure upon the die is the image of God in righteoufnefs and true holinefs : for the new man (Ephef, iv. 24.), or the Gospel state, is created or erected in rightcoufnefs and holinefs after the image of God. This therefore is the figure upon the ftamp or mould : this the image and fuperfcription of God : and the Christian's duty and great work is, to be conformed to this image; to take care that a full and fair representation of it be struck upon all his principles and actions : that in the disposition of his mind, and in every part of his conversation, he may shew the image and fuperfcription of God, bright and perfect, as upon a newly-coined piece of money. Ver. 19. I fpeak after the manner of men] There was a neceflity for fome little kind of apology for a figure of fpeech, which he dwells upon quite to the end of this chapter. This first clause should be read in a parenthesis.

Ver. 23. For the wages of fin is death] The wages of fin does not here fignify the wages which are paid for finning, but the wages which fin pays. This is evident not only from the opposition which is here put between the wages of fin, and the gift of God; namely, that fin rewards men with eternal death for their obedience; but that which God freely gives to thofe, who, believing in Jefus Chrift, labour fincerely after righteousness, is life eternal : but it farther appears by the whole tenor of St. Paul's difcourse, wherein he fpeaks of fin as a perfon and a mafter, who is ferved and obeyed. And fo the wages of fin, being the wages of a person here, must be what it pays. We may observe, that fin pays death to those who are its obedient vallals: but God rewards the obedience of those to whom he is Lord and Master, by the gift of eternal life. Their utmost endeavours and highest performances can never entitle them to it of right; and fo it is to them not wages, but a free gift. See chap. iv. 4. and Locke.

Inferences. - How groundlefs and injurious are all charges of licentioulneis on the doctrine of iallification alone by the free grace of God, through the infinite merit of Chrift! Though no good works of our own bear any part in our juffification before God, yet they frand in a close and necessary connection with it; and nothing can be more deteftable than to continue in fin, that grace may the more abound in pardoning it. For how shall we who are by profellion and obligation, and, if true believers, are in fact dead to fin, live any longer therein? This would be a flat contradiction to our baptifmal engagement, and to all that was fignified by it, and is answerable to it; would be abfolutely incodifient with our character, privilege, and duty as members of Chrift, who have communion with him in his death and refurrection, and with all realizing views by faith of deliverance from fin and wrath, and of an advancement to eternal glory through him.-How excellent is the effect of regenerating grace ! it includes both a mortification of fin, that the old man may be deftroyed, and fpiritual quickenings to a holy and heavenly life, that we may walk before God with new principles and ends, and according to a new rule in imitation of Chrift, and by virtue derived from his death and refurrection to the glory of God. How certainly may we judge whether fin or holinefs has the afcendancy in our hearts and lives! Whichever of these we willingly yield ourselves up unto, that is the lord who rules over us. We all once were the fervants of iniquity, as appeared by our choosing its works, obeying its dictates, and taking pleafure in violating every bond to holinefs : but, bleffed be God, true believers are moulded into the spirit of the Gospel, which, under divine influence, has a transforming efficacy upon them; they are fet at liberty from the power of fin; they hate and abhor it, and by no means approve of it in any instance whatsoever; and they are become, in their very hearts, fervants to God and righteoufnets. How concerned then should they be to live under a constant fense of what belongs to their flate as Chriftians! They flould reckon themfelves to be intirely dead to fin, as those who have nothing more to do with it; but alive to God through Jefus Chrift our Lord. And how great are their inducements and affiftances to quit the fervice of fin for the fervice of God! Though they are still under the law as a law of life, they are not under it as a fevere and impracticable covenant, nor under its curse; but are taken under the covenant of grace, which contains the strongest encouragements against fin's recovering its dominion over them; and they are freed from the dreadful lordfhip of fin. What fruit has any one ever found worth having, in its ways and works, even while he was employed in them ? They are matter of the greateft fname, and their juft wages are all miferies unto cternal death. But there is a prefent pleafure in the ways of holinefs; and its happy iffue is everlafting life, not indeed as the wages of righteoufnefs, but as the mere gift of God's free grace, through Jelus Chrift our Lord.

REFLECTIONS.—The riches of the grace which he haddifplayed in the former chapter, the Apofle clearly forefiew would furnish objections against his doctrine, which he therefore states and obviates. What shall we fay then? Is this a licentious doctrine? and shall we continue in finthat

Gen. 2. 23, 24. Mal. 2. 16. Numb. 5. 29. Prov. 6. 29, 32. Mat.

From these glorious views which the Apostle fets before us of our union and communion with Christ in his death and refurrection, the Apostle proceeds to urge upon the faithful two things: (1.) That they floadd reckon themsfelves dead indeed unto fin; not only discharged from its condemning guilt, but delivered from its power and dominion, fo as henceforward to have no more followship with the unfruitful works of darkness, ceasing from them as a dead man does from the actions of life. (2.) That they should reckon themsfelves alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord; quickened by his grace, as the divine principle, to newness of life, and engaged and inclined to live to his glory as their great end.

This being then the great privilege, dignity, and duty of believers, we are most powerfully urged to walk agreeably thereunto. Let not fin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lufts thereof. We are particularly called upon to deny the cravings of bodily appetite, by which the ftrongest temptations to fin enter; that, however befet, we may not yield obedience to the former lufts, in which we walked in the days of our ignorance. Neither yield ye your members, neither those of your bodies, nor the faculties of your fouls, as inflruments of unrighteoufnefs unto fin, to war in that hateful caufe, under fo foul a captain : but yield yourfelves unto God, as thefe that are alive from the dead; and your members as infruments of rightconfnels unto God, living henceforward for his glory, and employing body, foul, and fpirit in his bleffed fervice, and to advance his kingdom and interests in the world, fighting under his banners, and faithful unto death.

But fome man might object to this, that if this be the cafe, and we are no more under the law, we may live as we lift. The Apostle prevents and refutes the objection : What then? fhall we fin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid: this would be to act in oppolition to the whole defign of the Gofpel falvation, and inconfiftently with all our professions as children of grace. For know ye not, that it is a truth obvious and incontestable, to whom ye yield yourfelves fervants to obey, his fervant ye are to whom ye obey ; whether of fin unto death, or of chedience unto righteoufnefs? No man can ferve two mafters utterly contradictory in their commands. The fervants of fin, who willingly furrender themfelves to this tyrant's will, must infallibly reap eternal death as the wages of their work; while the faithful fervants of God are fervants of obedience unto righteoufnefs, his interests being thus perfeveringly ferved and advanced, and their end is eternal life. According therefore to the fervice in which we are employed, we flew what mafter we ferve, and to whom we belong. But God be thanked, that though ye were, in times paft, the . fervants 5 that grace may abound? God forbid : the Apostle rejects the thought with abhorrence, as the vileft abufe of this moft bledd truth. How fall we that are dead to fin, live any larger therein? under its power and dominion : how inconfishent would it be with our character; how contrary to the obligations of gratitude and duty lying upon us; and how destructive of our peace and hope ! Our very byth represents our profession, and intimates to us the contribution becoming the name that we bear. Know ye not, that is many of us as were baptized into Jefus Chrift, into the fith of his name, and obedience to his authority, were into his death? that we fould refemble him, dying 10 fm, as he died for it, and corresponding with his great doin in fuffering, which was to redeem us from all iniouty. Therefore we are buried with him by baptifm into date; pattaking of the benefits of his death; and, as a copie laid in the grave, which ceases from the actions of life, to thould we fhew an abiding deadness to fin; that licas Chrift was raifed up from the dead by the glory of the ister, by his almighty power, even so we also should walk in namefs of life, quickened by virtue derived from him, cur head of vital influence; and having received a new nature, new principles, and new hearts from him, we are bound to shew forth to his praise, in all holy conversation and godlinefs, the real and univerfal happy change which s pathed upon us to the praife of the glory of his grace. Er if we lave been planted together in the likenefs of his death ; maraited into him, and one with him as the members of hisbody myilical, fharing in the bleffed effects of his death, and experiencing its efficacy in feparating our fouls from ha, is death suparated his body and foul; we shall be also Find in the litenefs of his refurrection ; quickened by his ante power, and enabled to walk before God in holinefs : Rem. 5 this, that our old man, that fallen nature derived tion Adom and coeval with our very being, is crucified with ba; lo that in every genuine believer its condomning guilt is blidd, and its tyrannizing power is at least broken : for we know that Chrift died, that the body of fin might be hinged, that henceforth we flould not ferse fin ; thould no kager of the flives of corruption as before; and that Genery its very being in us might be at an end. For he that used is freed from fin : as a man that is dead can have no futer claims laid against him, fo if we are crucified with Galit, we are freed from the power and dominion of our former malter. Now if we be thus dead with Chrift, through an union with this crucified Saviour, and virtue thence defined ; we believe and hope that we fhall alfo live with him, wiekened to a life of grace here, and fhortly to be raifed barie of eternal bleffedincis and glory to reign with him in heaven.

fervants of fin, ye do not continue to; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of desiring which was delivered unto yow; both in heart and conduct now caft into the mould of the glorious Gospel, and bearing all its amiable lineaments, in the most blessed and happy conformity to him who is the great Author of it, Jefus Christ.

Being then made free from fin, by the power of the eternal Spirit through the Gospel effectually operating to deftroy the dominion, tyranny, and love of fin, ye became the fervants of righteoufnefs; discharged from the hateful fervitude of iniquity, and entered into the fervice of a better Mafter, which is perfect freedom, the willing fubjects of the holy Jefus, your rightful Lord and Sovereign. I fpeak after the manner of men, representing this matter under the familiar images of mafters and fervants, becaufe of the infirmity of your flifb, the understanding being still dark, and most easily r ceiving spiritual ideas, when communicated under the veil of fenfible objects. For as, in time paft, ge yielded your members, both body and foul, fervants to uncleannefs and to iniquity unto iniquity, willing flaves to every vile affection, going from evil to worfe, and fulfilling all the corrupt defires of the flefh and of the mind; even for now yield your members fervants to righteoufnefs unto bolinefs; let every member of your body and faculty of your foul be as freely, delightfully, conftantly, and univerfally employed in the fervice of the bleffed Jefus your Master, and in the practice of rightcoufnels and true holinels, as by nature they were before engaged in the fervice of fin.

And furely the strongest obligations now lie upon you thus to walk in holinels: for when ye were the fervants of fin, wholly devoted to its fervice, ye were free from righteoufnefs; not from the obligations to it, which are immutable and eternal; but ye caft off all reftraint, were utterly averfe to the rule of righteoufnefs, and boafted of liberty, when the most wretched flaves of corruption. And a moment's reflection will now convince you of the milery of that fate in which you lay; for what fruit had ye then in thefe things, whereof ye are now afhamed? did not the curle of fin follow you close as your shadow? did not the sting of it at times torment and make you miferable in the midit of your enjoyments? did not the very pursuits in which you were engaged involve you in trouble, difappointment, vexation ? and were you not always unfatisfied ; and did you not feel an aching void, which nothing that you possessed could fill ? and with what shame, horror, and remorie, do you now reflect upon your past conduct ! for, careless and thoughtless as you then were, you now know, that the end of those things is death eternal, which must have been your miserable lot, if you had not been plucked through divine grace as brands from the burning. But now being made free from fin, and become fervants to God, fince this bleffed exchange of masters, ye have your fruit unto holinefs, walking in that good converfation and godlinefs which brings glory to God, and is most comfortable to your own fouls and the bleffed end and iffue of which to the faithful foul will be everlasting life : For the wages of fin, the accurfed mafter whom ye formerly ferved, is death, including all miferies, both here and hereafter, of foul and body, and that to eternity : but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jefus Chrift our Lord. Let us then examine ourfelves, whether we be in the faith, and with deepeft felf-application confider what the Apoltle has here advanced. Our everlafting hopes depend on our experience of these things. We most fatally deceive ourfelves, if we talk of grace, and promise ourfelves heaven, and live and die the fervants of corruption.

CHAP. VII.

THE Apostle, having in the preceding chapter confuted the flanderous report mentioned chap. iii. 8. that he and his brethren taught their disciples to fin, that grace might abound, judged it necessary in this chapter to repel the objection which the Jewish feribes and heathen philosophers urged against his doctrine of justification without works of law, chap. iii. 31. that it made law useles. This objection the Apostle now examined the more carefully, not only becaufe it gave him an opportunity of explaining to the Jews the nature and obligation of the law of Mofes; but because he forefaw that, in after-times, the fame objection would be urged by infidels against the doctrine of juttification without works of law, to difcredit the Gofpel. His discourse he begins with observing, that the law of Mofes, as the law of God's visible kingdom and church among the Jews, had dominion over a man, that is, was obligatory, only while he lived, ver. 1.-1 his affertion he proved, by likening the law of Mofes to the law of marriage, which binds the wife to the hufband, only while the hufband liveth. But if he die, fhe is loofed, and may marry another, ver. 2, 3.-Wherefore, as the death of either party diffolves their marriage, the Jews, having been put to death by the curfe of the law in the perfon of Chrift, were now loofed from their marriage with God as their king, and from the law of Mofes by which God's kingdom among them was governed, that they might be married to Chrift by entering into the Gospel church, and, in that new marriage, bring forth fruit unto God, ver. 4.-It is true, this argument, at first fight, may perhaps feem inept. But if we confider it attentively, it will appear ftrong and in point, being founded on those passages of Scripture where God reprefents his connection with the Jews as their king, under the idea of a marriage folemnized at Sinai, when he gave them his law, Ezek. xvi. 8, 38-Jer. ii. 2. iii. 14. For by that fimilitude, God intimated to the Jews, that as marriages are diffolved by the death of either of the parties, his connection with their nation as their king, was to end at the time when they, with the rest of mankind, should be put to death in the person of Chrift. The Apostle therefore argued justly, from the Jews being put to death in the perfon of Chrift, that their marriage or connection with God as their king was dilfolved, and that they were loofed from the law of Moles, as the law of God's temporal kingdom. Befides, it was fit adulterefs, though the be married to another man.

4 Wherefore, my brethren, 'ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; fit that that kingdom and its law fhould end at the death of Chrift. For the temporal kingdom having been erected among the Jews, for the fake of publifhing, in the law of Moles, the curfe of the law of works originally given to man in Paradile (fee Gal. iii. 10.), that they might be fenfiele of the grace of the Gofpel, it is evident that, when Chrift removed the curfe of the law of works, by fuffering it for all mankind, and opened the Gofpel difpenfation, the kingdom of God among the Jews, and the law of Moles, were no longer of ufe, but were fet afide, that the Jews might be at liberty to enter into the Gofpel church, and ther bring forth fruit to God.

<sup>1</sup> Ch. 6. 14. & 9. 2. Gal. 2. 19, 20. & 5. 18. Col. 2. 14. Gal. 3. 13. & 4. 4, 5. 1 Peter, 2. 24. Titus, 2. 14.

Nut, to fnew them the true nature of the law of Mofes, nd to convince them that it was not intended as a rule of julification, the Apostle told the Jews, that while, by their Eddir descent from Abraham, they were placed under the law of Moles as the law of God's temporal kingdom, their fuful pollions wrought effectually in their members, to make them do fuch actions as, by the curfe of that law, fubjected them to death. For this, in effect, was to tell them, that the law of Mofes was a mere law of works, which required perfect obedience under the penalty of tesh, and granted pardon to no finner. Confequently, neither that law, nor any other law of works, could be a rek of justification to finners, ver. 5 .- And therefore at the fall, though Chrift had not died, yet because he was to die, to buy off all mankind from the curfe of the law, Gal. in. 13. God was pleased, in the prospect of his death, mmediately to loofe Adam and his posterity from the law of works as a rule of justification, and to place them under a new law, in which not immaculate obedience, but the obedience of faith, was required in order to life. And to hew this, he told them, that as foon as Christ died, the lews were not only loofed from the law of Mofes (which, combildered merely as a law, to every transgreffion of which the curle was annexed, appears to have been fimilar to that w of works under which Adam fell); but as perfons kindled from the law of works, by their dying with Unit in the nature in which they were tied to that law, ther were admitted into the Christian church, that they Fight thenceforth ferve God according to the new manner of the law under which mankind were placed at the fall, and not any longer according to the old manner of the law of works, ver. 6.

But left, from the Apoftle's telling the Jews, ver. 5. that heir finful paffions under the law had put them to death, and from his affirming, ver. 6. that they were beled from the law on that account, they might fulped that he thought the law of Mofes a bad inflitution, he affund them that be entertained no fuch opinion. That hav, though it could not juitify the Jews, was of excellent alw, though it could not juitify the Jews, was of excellent the same of duty. By its prohibitions, it made them knible of their fins; and by its curfe it fhewed them what their fins deferved. As an inflance, he mentioned this not being able to know that the ftrong defire of things forbidden is fin, unleis the law had faid, Thou fhalt not covet, ver. 7 .- Wherefore when he told them, that their finful paffions under the law had wrought in their members to put them to death, his meaning was, that their finful passions, and not the law, had wrought in them strong defires of things forbidden, which, by the curfe of the law, fubjected them to death : for without law, fin is dead ; it has no power to kill the finner, ver. 8.-Farther, to thew the excellent nature of law, as it makes men fenfible both of their fins, and of the demerit of their fins, he observed, that while men are ignorant of law, they fancy theinfelves without fin, and entitled to life: but when, by the operation of law upon their confeience, they come to the true knowledge of their own character, they are fenfible that fin lives in them, and that they are dead by the curfe, ver. 9.- Thus it has come to pafs, that the law of works, which was originally intended to give life to mankind, has occasioned their death, ver. 10 .- Because the finiul paffions of the unrighteous, which law cannot fubdue. deceive them into the commission of evil actions, which, according to the tenor of the law of works, fubjects them to death, ver. 11.-From all which it appears, that inftead of being a finful thing, the law of works, as published in: the law of Mofes, is holy, even in its curfe, and all its commandments are boly, and juft, and good, ver. 12.

'To this, however, a Jew is introduced replying; the good law, which you fo highly praife, notwithitanding its. goodnefs, has been, by your own acknowledgment, the occasion of my death. This objection the Apoltle introduced, that he might have an opportunity of mewing more fully the excellent nature of law. For he allirmed a third time, that it is not the law, but fin, which kills the finner, through the curfe of the law : and that it was fit the finner fhould be fo punifhed, to fnew all the fubjects of God's government the exceeding malignity of fin, in deftroying the peace and order of the world, ver. 13 .- Farther, to difplay the excellency of law ftill more clearly, the Apoflie observes, that through the grace of God awakened finners know the law to be fpiritual or hely, and that, by comparing themfelves with the holy law, the unregenerated by the Spirit of God become fenfible that they are carnal, and fold under fin, ver. 14. - The fpirituality or holinefs of the law, every awakened finner muft know by this, that when he does the things which the law forbids, he does not approve of them. On the other hand, the corruption of his own nature, and his inability to do good, the penitent feels, first, by his habitually neglecting to practile what the law enjoins, notwithitanding he has fome feeble inclinations to comply with its good injunctions; and next, by his habitually doing what the law forbids, notwithstanding he has some faint hatred of these evil actions, ver. 15 .- Now these feeble volitions and ineffectual averfions demonstrate that the reason and confeience of an awakened finner affent to all the precepts of the law as good, ver. 16 .- But reafon and confcience being the higher part of our nature, and the principal part of ourfelves, the evil actions which we do in opposition to their dictates, are not fo much our work, the work of our higher part, as the work of the finful passions, which predominate in the animal or lower part of our nature, ver. 17.- Thus by the law, applied by the Spirit of God, men are made fenfible that in their flesh, or animal part, no good thing dwells: and that being by nature wholly governed by that part, though the penitent has fome inclination to what is good, he finds it extremely difficult to practife it. This inability, even in the awakened finner, to do the good to which he inclines, the Apoftle infifted on, not to drive him to despair, but to make him put a just value on the Gospel, which, as he afterwards observes, is alone able to deliver us from the flavery of fin, and to raife the higher part of our nature to its proper superiority, ver. 18 .- Next he tells us, that the extreme difficulty of the thing, is the true reason that the awakened, but yet unregenerate, do not the good they incline to, but the evil to which they do not incline, ver. 19.-And from this he infers, that fin is not the work of the higher part of their nature, which is in a fense their real felves, but the work of their carnal part. This he had faid before, ver. 17. but he repeats it here, not with any view to excufe the awakened finner, by laying the blame of his evil actions on the prevalence of his paffions, but to fnew that all the credit which finful actions derive, whether from the general practice of the world, or from the station and abilities of the individuals who are guilty of them, is entirely deftroyed by this confideration, that they are contrary to the reason and confcience of mankind, and, in the end, that there can be no justification before God but through the alone merits of his only begotten Son, and no holinefs but by the infpiration of his Holy Spirit.

To this account of the difcovery which law makes, of the flate wherein men are by nature, the Apostle fubioins a defcription of the struggle between reason and passion, which arifes in the mind of the finner when awakened through the Divine Spirit by the operation of law on his confcience. Such a perfon finds, that when he is most ftrongly inclined by his better part to do what is excellent, evil prefents itfelf to him as a defirable object, and that fo conftantly, and with fuch alluring influence, that it may be termed a law, ver. 21.-So that, notwithstanding he is pleafed with the law of God in his inward man, or fpiritual part, ver. 22. he feels an opposite law in his members, or carnal part, warring strongly against the law of his mind, and bringing him into captivity to the law of fin, which is in his members, ver. 23 - And as mere law fupplies neither ftrength nor hope to the awakened finner, but, after fhewing him fin and death in all their frightful colours, leaves him under the power of fin, and under the condemnation of the curfe, the Apostle introduces him crying out, terrified lest being overcome in the conflict he be fubject to eternal death, O wretched man that I am, subs fall deliver me from the body of this death? ver. 24 .- Then, to fnew whence his deliverance cometh, he makes the awakened and now believing finner thank God, who graciously delivers him from the flavery of fin, and from the curfe of the law, through Jefus Chrift, whole Gofpel offers the affiftance of God's Spirit, and promifes eternal life to the penitent and faithful foul. The effect of this happy deliverance the Apoftle fets forth, by making the delivered finner declare with joy, that he does not now, as formerly, ferve God only with the ineffectual approbations and volitions of his mind, and, with his flefb or animal part, the law of fin; but as one delivered from that law, he habitually ferves God, both with his mind and with his flefb, ver. 25.

Although the Apoftle, in this chapter, has fpoken more immediately of the Jews, as placed under the law of Mofes; yet, as the arguments by which he leas proved their freedom from that law as a rule of juffification, are equally forcible for proving the freedom of mankind from the law of nature, as a rule of justification, I have not in this illustration departed from the truth, in supposing that the Apostle designed this passage for both .- Farther, as the moral precepts and curfe of the law of Mofes are in effect the precepts and curfe of the law of nature; what the Apostle has written to shew the excellent nature and operation of the law of Moles, in making the Jews fensible of their fins and of their inability to deliver themselves either from the power or from the punishment of their fins, confequently in leading them to feek pardon and fanctification from the grace of God published in the Gospel, is equally applicable to the law of nature written on the hearts of men : for when enforced by the Spirit of God (who must operate on the finner's heart in both cafes to produce any genuine effect), it has the fame operation and influence, in making finners fenfible both of their fins and of their danger, and in leading them to Chrift. We may therefore believe that the Apostle had both laws in his eye, when he wrote this excellent passage.-His principal defign, however, was, to wean the Jews from their extreme attachment to the law of Moles, and to make them fenfible of the abfurdity of preffing that law upon the Gentiles; becaufe, however excellent it might be in itfelf, or however useful for certain purposes, it was, through the corruption of human nature, as ineffectual for the fanctification of mankind, as for their justification.

Ver. 1. Know ye not, &c.] In the foregoing chapter, the Apostle shews the converted Christians the obligations that they were under to a life of holinefs, and the advantages which they enjoyed for that purpose, now that they were taken into the kingdom of God. From this verfe to chap. viii. 11. he addresses himself upon the same subject to both Jews and Gentiles, but particularly to the Jew. The Gentile had nothing to oppose to the Gospel: a man just emerged from the darkness and impurity of an idolatrous state, wanted no arguments to convince him of the necessity of a farther difpensation for his instruction, justification, and fanctification; and as for what any of the philosophers had taught, he found all that, and indeed every moral truth which human reafon can difcover, transcribed and incorporated into the Gospel, with the addition of a furpriling pring degree of light, utterly beyond the unaffifted reach of human reason. But the Jewifb Christian, either from hisom prejudices, or the fuggettions of his unbelieving countrymen, might be diverted from the due improvement of the Go pel. It might be suggested, " You cannot own " the Goipel as a rule of life and fanctification, or put your-"ielf under it, without renouncing the law; which is in " did to renounce your allegiance to God, whofe autho-"righah established it, and obliges you to adhere to it. The Jews reflect in their law, as fufficient both for maintain and fanctification .- That it was infufficient fer julification, St. Paul has already fhewn : that it is infolicient for fanctification, he proves in this place; and introduces his difcourfe by fhewing that the Jew is now difthated from his obligations to the law, as peculiar to limitif, and at liberty to come under another and much happer conflitution, even that of the Gospel in Christ Jus; thap. vii. 1-4. In the 5th verfe he gives a general description of the state of a Jew in servitude to fin, con-Edesed as under mere law. In ver. 6. he gives a fummary account of the flate of a Christian or believing Jew, and the advantages that he enjoys under the Gofpel. Upon the th rette he comments from ver. 7. to the end of the thagter; and upon ver. 6. in chap. viii. 1-11. I. Commenting upon ver. 5, he flews, First, that the law reached to all the branches and latent principles of fin; ver. 7 .-South, that it subjected the finner to death (ver. 8-12.) without the benefit of pardon .- Thirdly, the reason why it: lew was put under it, ver. 13 .- Fourthly, he proves the law, confidered as a rule of action, though it was binal, hely, just, and good in itself, and though the 1-orred and approved it as fuch, yet was infull-cient filiation, or for freeing a man from the power of hi mi fin; because the prevalency of sensure appetite does not wholly extinguish reason, or filence conficience; and to refere a man's reafon and confeience might own and approve the law as good, juil, and holy, and yet his Patiens might reign within him, and keep him in fervitude to them, while the law supplied no power to deliver him freathem; ver. 14-24. It is only the grace and favour d'Gain Chrift, which fupplies that power; ver. 25. pofed, that this fanctifying principle, the Spirit of God, would work without any care or thought on their part; or whereas it might be objected, that notwith/fanding this life-giving Spirit, many who profelled the Gofpel were wicked men; either to prevent this miftake, or to obviate this objection, the Apofule fhews, that no conflictation would fave those from the power of fin, or from condemnation, who wilfully choose to remain under its dominion.—According to the immutable nature of things, fuch muft perifh, as well under the Gofpel, as under the law itfelf; chap. viii. ver. 4—11. The reader fhould carefully remember, that it is the flate of a Jew in the fleft (ver. 5.) enflaved to fin by the force of fenfual appetite, and yet fenfible of his unhappy condition, upon which the Apoftle difcourfes, and by which he proves the infusificiency of mere law for fanctification in the chepter before us.

The law hath dominion, &c.] The law is to be underflood as the nominative cafe to liveth. The law hath dominion over a man fo long as it lives or fubfilts. So Amos, viii. 14. The manner [the idolatrous inititutions] of Beerfbeba liveth. Antigone, in her noble fpeech to king Creon, comparing laws made at pleafure by men, with the eternal obligations of truth and right, fays,

Not now, nor yefferday, but evermore, the laws Unwritten live, and none when published first can tell. Sophoel. Antig. 1. 4/5.

When the laws are duly executed, they are faid vigere, to be in a healthy flourifieling flate; when not executed, to fleep.—Thus Juvenal, Ubi nuncles Julia?—Dormis. Where is now the Julian law?—Thou fleepeft. The Apolle, Heb. viii. 13. deferibes the first covenant or conflictution as labouring under the infirmities and decays of old age, and ready to vanish away, or die, as men do; James, iv. 14.

Ver. 2. For the sceness, &c.] St. Paul goes on to explain his meaning by a familiar inflarce. He choofes to fet the Jew in a more honourable light while under the law, then he does the Gentiles while under their heathen flate. The Gentiles are compared to flaves, in a flate of the lowest and vileft fervitude; chep. vi. 16. &e :-- the fleves to a soife, in a flate of fubilition indeed, but far more honourable than that of a flow. See Doddridge.

Ver. 3. If—jbs be mirried to another man] If—fbe become the property of another; or become another man's. The Apoltle here (peaks in the general, not entering exactly into every excepted cole which might be imagined. To infer therefore, contrary to our Lord's express decision elsewhere, that adultery is not a fulficient foundation for divorce, feems very unreafonable.

Ver. 4. Wherefore, my brethren] The original word  $\Omega_{SG}$ , rendered wherefore, is used in comparison for  $u_i$ , fr, as, fo.—You are become dead to the law, means, "b caute the "law is become dead to you;" an hypothage, like that of L date.

date claffibus auftros, "give the winds to the fleet." By this manner of expression, the prejudice of the lew is favoured; who might have been difgusted, had the Apostle faid, that the law, for which the Jew had fo great a veneration, was dead; and yet the fense is the fame, because the relation is diffolved, whichever of the parties be dead; as it is all one, whether the fleet be given to the winds, or the winds to the fleet. The Apoftle adds, By the body of Christ-who is raifed from the dead. The refurrection of the dead, which is the gift of God to the obedience of Chrift, is a direct and full abolition of the law, which condemns the tranfgreffor to death without hope of a revival: and Chrift's refurrection, as an earnest of the general refurrection, confirmed the abolition of the damnatory fentence of the law, as it flood in the old original covenant with Adam, and in the law of Mofes. St. Paul, in the laft-claufe of this verfe, alludes to the wife's bringing forth the fruits of the womb to her husband, which is one way of engaging his affections : fee Gen. xxx. 20. The low was an impotent hufband, the Gospel is fruitful. St. Paul vifibly in these words refers to chap. vi. 10. where he fays, that Chrift, in that he liveth, liveth unto God: and therefore he mentions here his being raifed from the dead, as a reason for their bringing forth fruits unto God; that is, living to the fervice of God;-obeying his will to the utmost of their power; which is the fame with what is faid chap. viii. 11. Mr. Locke observes, that one thing which made the Jews fo tenacious of the law was, that they looked upon it as a reward or bleffing from God; and as a difloyalty to him, their king, if they retained not the law that he had given them. St. Paul endeavours to correct this miftake by the inftance of a woman marrying a fecond husband, the former being dead. It may be worth our notice, that St. Paul having all along, from the beginning of the chapter, and even in this very fentence, faid ye; here on a fudden changes ye into we; - that we juculd bring forth; -- probably to prefs the argument the ftronger, by fhewing himfelf to be in the fame circumstances and concern with them; he being a Jew, as well as those to whom he fpake. See Locke.

Ver. 5. For when we were in the flefth, &c.] The defign of this chapter is, to convince the Jews how unfavourable the law, in its rigour, is to the recovery and fanctification of a finner; as it affords neither hope of pardon, nor power to conquer fin. And in this verfe St. Paul gives a general defeription of the ftate of a Jew in fervitude to fin, while under the law, which ftate he comments upon from ver. 7. to the end of the chapter. The words rendered motions of fins, are literally paffions of fins;  $-\Pi a \vartheta \pi \mu a' a \tau \tilde{\omega} v$  $a \mu a \beta l \tilde{\omega} v$ , that is, finful paffions or lufts; for in the Scripture Greek, the genitive cafe of the lubftantive is often put for the adjective. To bring forth fruit unto death, is oppoled to bringing forth fruit unto God, the only author of life, ver. 4. And therefore, the fruit which the Gofpel produces is living fruit; but the fruit of fin under the law, is, as we may fay, fill-born,—is fruit unto death. Members, in this claufe, does not barely fignify the flefby parts of the body, in a reftrained fenfe, but the animal faculties and powers; all in us that is employed as an inftrument in those works of the flefb which are reckoned up, Gal. v. 19-21. fome of which do not require the members of our body, taken in a ftrict fenfe for the outward grofs parts, but only the faculties of our minds, for their performance. See Locke, Pyle, and Vigerus.

Ver. 6. But now we are delivered, &c.] But now,-that is, under the Golpel. Now is frequently used in this fenfe ;---which fhould be well obferved, as it may prove a key to many texts. However, here, as the Apostle had given in the foregoing verfe a fuminary account of the flate of the finner under the law, he gives us in this verfe a fummary defcription of the nature and defign of the Gofpel: and this he refumes and comments upon, chap. viii. 1-12. The Jews, who had not a living faith in the true Messiah, were held in obedience to the whole letter of the law, without regarding the fpiritual meaning which pointed at Christ. This the Apostle calls here ferving in the oldness of the letter; and this he tells them they should leave, as being freed from it by the death of Chrift, who was the end of the law for the attaining of rightcoufness (chap. x. 4.); that is, in the fpiritual fense of it, which in 2 Cor. iii. 6. he calls fpirit. That chapter and the prefent verfe give light to one another. Serving in the newnefs of fpirit, oppofed as it is to the oldness of the letter, mult fignify, following the law fo far as it is revised, and as it is explained in the Gofpel for the attaining of evangelical righteoufnefs. But for the farther elucidation of this matter, it may be worth while to inquire, how far the law is abolifhed, and how far not? I. The law is abolifhed only in three refpects. 1st, As it was a polity. God was the king of the Jewish nation, as much as any men are the kings and governors of other nations: and as the king of the Jewifu nation, God delivered the law to them. By this means religion was incorporated into their civil government, and their polity was religious, and their religion political. But in this respect, the law to us Christians is quite abolished; religion under the Gofpel, is fet upon its original bottom; ftands entirely independent of all civil government, and is quite exempt from the authority and jurifdiction of the civil magifirate. 2dly, The law is alfo abolifhed, as it was a difpenfation of types and figures, wherein, under earthly emblems, external rites or ccremonies, the good things which were to come under the Gofpel were fhadowed and reprefented; the divine wifdom judging this in those times a proper means of instruction. But now this will is done arway, and we all with open face, as in a glafs, behild the glory of the Lord. 3dly, The law, as it was the minifiration of death, and fubjected the transgressors of it to the curfe, and to condemnation, without affording any hope or remedy, is also happily abolished. II. But on the other hand, the law of Mofes is not abolifhed; first, as it contains the moral law; as fuch it must stand under every dispensationthe Gofpel, as well as any other, - in its full force and extent; tent; that is, requiring and obliging us, fo far as our capacities reach, to perfect obedience : for God can never require imperfect obedience, or by his holy law allow us to be guilty of any one fin, how fmall foever: and if the hw, as a rule of duty, were in any refpect abolished, then we might in some respects transgress the law, and yet not be guilty of fin. The moral law is truth, everlafting and unchangeable, and therefore, as fuch, can never be abrogated. On the contrary, our Lord Jefus Christ has promulgated this law anew under the Gofpel, and having added to its precepts the fanction of his own divine authority, and the powerful and attractive motives of the law of God, and of his own love to mankind, with the brighteft hopes and prospects of eternal life, he has hereby enforced and fecured the observance of it, infinitely beyond any thing that the wifeft philosophers ever could find in the hw of nature, and far beyond any thing plainly and expressly offered in the Mofaical conflictution. See Ephef. ii. 15. Secondly, Nor is the law, as it is the ministration of death, fo abolished as never more to be in force. It is indeed to far abolished, through the mercy of the Lawgiver, that although a man does tranfgrefs, yet he is not at prefent irrecoverably subjected for his transgressions to final wrath and condemnation, though he may at prefent be fo far involved in guilt, as to be nigh unto curfing (Heb. vi. 8.); but is allowed the favour of repentance and pardon; and if he continues fincerely obedient, is fure of eternal life, and shall never come into condemnation, or under the power of the law, for any of his past transgreffions. This demonstrates that no man in this world is under law, the covenant of works, or the broken law of works, for if we were now at any time under the broken hw of works, then should we be in a state of final and ternal dainnation, without hope or remedy, becaufe there nu remains no more facrifice for fins, Heb. x. 26-29.

Sur 2 Cor. vi. 2. Heb. ii. 3. xii. 25. 1 Cor. xvi. 22. Fu. 7. Is the law fin ?] Unrighteoufnefs?—as giving any 2 wince, or contributing any thing to fin. See ver. 12. The fail which St. Paul uses in dexterously avoiding, as much as pollible, the giving offence to the Jews, is very mible in the word I, in this verse. In the beginning of the chipter, where he mentions their knowledge in the law, he lays ye; in the 4th verfe, he joins himfelf with them and fays we, but here, and fo on to the end of the chapter, where he reprefents the power of fin among the Jews, and the inclusivy of their law to fubdue it, he leaves them out, 28 it were, and fpeaks altogether in the first perfon; though it is plain, he means all those who were under the law. So chap. iii. 7. he uses the fingular pronoun I, when he tridently means the whole body of the unbelieving Jews. We may also obferve here another maiterly ftroke of honeft att; namely, his demonstrating the infufficiency of the hw, under colour of vindicating it. He knew the Jew would take fire at the least reflection upon the law, which he held in the higheft veneration; and therefore he very naturally introduces him catching at that expression, ver. 5. the motions of fins, &c. "What!" fays he, "do you vilify "the law, by charging it with favouring fin?"—"By no "means," answers the Apostle. "I am very far from "charging the law with favouring fin; the law is holy, "and the commandment is holy, and just, and good;" ver. 12. Thus he writes in vindication of the law, and yet at the fame time fets forth its deficiency. See the note on the first verse of this chapter. We have another instance of the fame ingenious turn of writing, chap. xiii. 1—7. Some read the fecond claufe of the verfe, By no means, but I should not have known fin, had it not been for the law, &c. Ver. 8. Sin, taking occafion, &c. ] Taking advantage. This is the proper fignification of the Greek word 'A copur. Observe, that in this and the three following verses, the Apofile comments upon, or at leaft explains those words, 1 Cor. xv. 56. The fing of death is fin, and the firength of fin is the law; and those also of this Epistle, chap. v. 13. Sin is not imputed when there is no law. Death, in a figurative way of speaking, is represented as armed with a dreadful fting; that fting is fin; but death would have no power to thrust that sting into the finner's heart, were it not for the law of God condemning him to death: for did not the law, or conftitution of the law giver, condemn him to death, he might, notwithstanding his fin, live for ever, because his fin might from time to time be passed over. Therefore the law is the force, by which the terrible fling is plunged into the finner's vitals : for without the law, fin, the fting of death, is itfelf dead, and quite unable to flay the finner. Hence it is that the Jew (ver. 9.) was alive without law once; xwois voue, when law was fet afide: namely, before the giving of the law from mount Sinai; for before the giving of the law, or the Sinai covenant, he was for the space of 430 years under the Abrahamic covenant, or the covenant of grace by itfelf (Gal. iii. 16, 17.) without having the law fubfifting at the fame time : for from the time Adam finned and broke the law, the law was not re-enacted till it was given by Moles, as appears from chap. v. 13, 14. The Jew was then alive, because he was not under the law fubjecting him to death for every transgression; but when the commandment came, with the penalty of death annexed, fin revived, and the Jew died. Then the fting of death acquired life, and the Jew, upon the first transgression, was dead in law. Thus fin, the fting of death, received force or advantage to deftroy by the commandment, (ver. 8, 11.); and whereas fin works concupifcence in all men, and deceives all men, it wrought concupifcence in the Jew, and deceived him under this fingular and extraordinary circumstance of having received a destructive power from the law, and fo rendered him a dead man in law; which was not the cafe of the reft of mankind, who then were, as they had always been from the time of the promise (Gen. iii. 15.), under the general covenant of grace, given given first to Adam, and afterwards to Noah. The reader will observe, that the stress of the Apostle's affirmation lies in these words, having received frees because he adds, for without law fin is dead, which is multifently giving the reason of fin's receiving a destructive force by the commundment of the law. In me, is empirical: "In me distinguished "from other men who were not under the tww." See Doddridge, and Dunlop's Sermons, vol. ii. p. 46.

Ver. 10. Ordained to life] Intended for life. 'The law, which was juft, and fuch as it ought to be, in having the penalty of death annexed to every transgreation of it. (Gal. iii. 10.) came to produce death, by not being able to remove the depravity of human nature, and fubdue carnal apparties, and keep men free from trefpaffes against it, the least whereof by the law brought death. See chap. viii. 3. Gal. iii. 21.

Ver. 11. For fin, taking occafion] "Sin, taking the op-"portunity of my being under the law, flew me." See the note on ver. 5. Inflead of deceived me, N'r. Locke reads, invuigled me; and observes, that St. Paul here feems to allude to what Eve faid in a like cafe, Gen. iii. 13.; and he uses the word rendered deceived, in the fame fense as she did; that is, drew me in.

Ver. 12. Wherefore the law is hely] In ver. 7. the Apoftle laid down this polition, "that the law was not fin." In ver. 8. to (1. he proves it, by flowing that the law was very flrich in forbidding of fin, fo far as to reach the very mind, and the internal acts of concupifeence; and that it was fin remaining under the bow (which annexed death to every tranfgreffion) that brought death on the Ifraelites.— He here infers, that the law was not finful, but righteous, juft, and good; juft fuch as by the eternal rule of right it ought to be.

Ver. 13. Was then that which is good, &c.] This is an exact translation of the text, according to the order of the words in the Greek. It may be thus paraphrafed: Jew. - "And yet you fay, we were made fubject to "death by the commandment. --Could that which is good "be made deadly to us?" Apoftle. -- "No, take me "right: it was not the commandment itfelf which flow "us, but fin. It was fin which fubjected us to death, by "the law juftly threatening fin with death :--which law "was given us, that fin might appear, might be fet forth " in its proper colours, when we faw it fubjected us to " death by a law perfectly holy, just, and good; that fin, " by the commandment, or by the law might be repre-" fonted, what it really is, an exceeding great and deadly " evil." Hence it is manifest, that the Apostle here affigns the reafon why the law was given to the Jaws, not only as a rule of action, but also with a penalty of death annexed. The reafon was, not to deftroy the Jew, but to different the true demerit of fin, that it might appear to the finner's conficience as an exceeding hateful and deftructive evil. And indeed the law fhould answer the fame end to us now : though we are not under it, yet we fhould thence learn the heinous nature of guilt, that we may dread iniquity, and be thankful to God for grace, and the benefit of pardon. Elfner reads the verfe, Was then &c.? No, by no means; but fin was; and fo fin wrought death in me by that which is good; for that fin by the commandment would become exceeding funful.

Ver. 14 But I am carnal] The Apoffle is here demonftrating the infufficiency of the law, in oppolition to the Gofpel; but if by I he meant himfelf, or any other perfon who had embraced the Golpel, then his argument would prove the infufficiency of the Godpel, as well as of the law. The verfe may be paraphraid thus: "For we all " are agreed that the law is spiritual, requiring actives " pure and rational, and quite opposite to most which our " carnal affections dictate. But I, the finner, am carnal, " under the dominion of fenfual appetite and the habits of " fin, and for that re fon condemned by the law : the fault " is not in the law, but in me the finner, as appears " hence ;- that which I do, I allow not," &c. Sold under fin, implies a willing flavery, as Alab had fold himfelf to work evil, I Kings, xxi. 20. and the J. ws, Ifai. 1. 1. Ye have fold yourfelves to your iniquities : he does not mean that the finner is forced to fin. Buying and felling are often 1 ufed metaphorically in Scripture; where we are faid to buy, when we diligently use the proper means to gain. knowledge and good habits; and to fell, when we neglect and abandon ourfelves to ignorance and vice. See Ifai. lv. 1, 3. Prov. xxini. 23. Matt. xiii. 45, .16. Rev. iii. 13. Deut. xxxii. 30.

Ver. 15. Ibat which I do, I allow not, &c.] From ver. 7. to the prefent, the Apostle denotes the Jew in the fligh by a 8 fingle

16 If then I do that which I would not, 'I confent unto the law that it is good.

17 Now then <sup>d</sup> it is no more 1 that do it, but fin that dwelleth in me.

18 For I know that in me (that is, in my fleth) dwelleth no good thing : for to will is prefent with me; but bow to perform that which is good I find not.

19 For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do.

20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but fin that dwelleth in me.

21 I find then a <sup>h</sup> law, that when I would do good, evil is prefent with me.

22 For 1 delight in the law of God after * the inward man :

23 But I fee 'another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of finwhich is in my members.

hack I. Here he divides that I into two I's, or figurative peners, reprefering two different and opposite principles which were in him. The one I, or principle, affents to the have god, and wills and chooses what the other does not pradide, ver. 16. This principle, he expressly tells us, ver. 22. is the inward man,-the law of the mind, ver. 23.; the mind, ver. 25. or rational faculty : for he could find no other inward man, or law of the mind, but the rational ficulty, in a perion who was in the flefb, and fold under fin, or in fervitude to fin. The other I, or principle, tranfgreffes the law, ver. 23. and does those things which the fermer principle allows not. This principle he expressly till us, ver. 15. is the fleft, the law in the members, or fenfual applie, ver. 23.; and he concludes in the laft verse, that the two principles were confiftent with each other. Therefore it is evident that thefe two principles refiding and counteracting each other in the fame perion, are reafon, and inl, or in that dwells in us; and it is easy to diffinguith the two I's or principles in every part of this elegant dehtiption of iniquity; or the habits of luft domincering that the light in the foul which is only awakened to a tele of fin. For inflance, ver. 17. Now then it is no more It at do it, but fin that clwells or reigns in me. The I he was of here is opposed to indwelling or governing fin, matherefore plainty denotes the principle of reason; the in it man, or law of the mind. These two different principles he calls, the one the flesh, the other the spirit, Gd.v. 16, 17. where he speaks of their contrariety in the fame manner as he does here. And we may give a probable reason why the Apostle dwells fo long upon the truccle and opposition between those two principles; it is molt likely, to aufwer a tacit but very obvious objection. The lew would allege, " But the law is holy and fpiritual; "and I affent to it as good, as a right rule of action, "which ought to be observed : yea, 1 citeem it highly; I "glory and reft in it, convinced of its truth and ex-"cluce: and is not this enough to conflitute the law a " tuffcient principle of fanclification ?" The Apofile anfvers, "No; wickednets is confittent with a fenfe of truth. "A man may affent to the best rule of action, and yet be-" under the dominion of luft and fin : from which nothing " en deliver him eff dually, but a principle and power "conmunicated from the Fountain of life."-A heathen poet gives us a d-feription of the combat between reaforr and pafiion, fimilar to this of St. Paul's before us:

My reafon this, my paffion that perfuades; I fee the right, and I approve it too, Condemn the wrong, and yet the wrong purfue. Hor.

Ver. 17. Sin that dwelleth in me] That is, reigneth inme. So God is faid to dwell among the Ifraelites, as their king and governor; Exod. xxv. 8. xxix. 45. Numb. xxxv. 34. Dwell, here and ver. 20. has the fame fenfe in the language of the Jew, as reign or have dominion over, in the language of the Gentile; chap. vi. 12, 13, 14.

Ver. 20. I would not] I, in the Greek, is very emphatical, and denotes the man in that part, which is chiefly to be counted himfelf; and therefore with the like emphasis, ver. 15. it is called arr's ind, I my If; "I, the "man, with all my ful resolution of mind." The two words addies and in might nave both of them been spared, if nothing more had been meant here than the nominative cafe to the verb docheow, ferve. This verfe feems no more than a repetition of ver. 17.: but it is a graceful and expreflive repetition, and fnews how near the affair lay tothe heart of the perfon thus complaining; and in what fad and frequent fucceffions the complaints were renewed. The beautiful paffage in the 6th book of Xenophon's Cyropædia, where Arafpas complains of two fouls contending within him, (a paffage which it is very poffible St. Paul might have read,) contains an agreeable illustration of this portion of Scripture. See Locke, Doddridge, and Wetttein.

Ver. 23. Another law in my members] St. Paul having in the foregoing verfe fpoken of the law of God, he have fpeaks of natural inclination as of a law; —as of a law in the members, and a law of fin in the members; to flow that it is a principle of operation in men even und r the law, as fleady and conftant in its direction, and impulse to fin as the law of God flould be to obedience, and failed not to prevail in the unregenerate foul. The Apostle here, as, in the former chapter, uses the word members for the lower faculties and affections of the animal man, which are as it were the influments of action. Plato uses the phrafe to inter chapter = for the rational part of our nature.See ver. 22.

Ver. 24. Who fhall deliver me? &c.] It has been thought by fome, that in this phrafe there is an allufion to a crucity, which is faid to have been practified by fome tyrants, on miferable captives who fell into their hands; and whom they compelled to drag along with them, wherever they went, a dead carcafe fastened to their bodies.

Ver. 25. I thank God, &c.] The Clermont and other Greek MSS. which are followed by the Vulgate, read, The grace, or favour of God. Thus ftands the argumentthe law cannot deliver from the body of death; that is, from those carnal appetites, which produce fin, and fo bring death; but the grace of God, through Jefus Chrift, [which not only gives ftrength to conquer, but] which pardons laples where there is genuine repentance and faith, delivers us from this body, fo that it does not deftroy us. Whence naturally refults this conclusion, There is therefore now no condemnation, &c. chap. viii. 1. a chapter which thould by no means have been leparated from the prefent, as it is in fuch immediate connection with it. St. Paul fays, I ferve, or I make myfelf a vaffal, Souriew, "I intend, " and devote my whole obcdience." The terms of life to those under grace, he tells us at large, chap. vi. are, "to " become vaflals to righteoufnefs and to God ;" confonantly whereto, he fays here "I myfelf, I the man, being now a " Chriftian, and fo no longer under the law, but under " grace, do what is required of me in that state. I become " a vaffal to the law of God; that is, dedicate myfelf to " the fervice of it, in fincere endeavours of obedience ; and " fo I, the man, shall be delivered from death;" for he, who, being under grace, makes himfelf a vafial to God, in a fleady perfevering purpose of fincere obedience, shall from him receive the gift of eternal life through Jefus Chrift our Lord (see chap. vi. 18, 22.). And thus St. Paul, having shewn here in this chapter, that the being under grace alone, without being under the law, is neceffary to the Jews,-as in the foregoing chapter he had flown it to be to the Gentiles,-hereby demonstratively confirms the Gentile converts in their freedom from the law; which is the fcope of the Epifile thus far. I would just add, that the words, I myfelf ferve the law of God, but with the fligh the law of fin, is not to be underflood of St. Paul or any other Christian believer; because aca in fhews it is the grand inference from the whole preceding difcourfe, as if he had faid, "'The fame perfon may find in himfelf " two oppolite principles; the one fubfcribing to and ap-" proving the law of God; and the other, notwithstanding, " bringing him into captivity to fin." Serving the law of God, is not a ftronger expression than hating fin, ver. 15. and delighting in the law of God, vcr. 22. But those expreflions are applied to the Jew in the fleft, or enflaved by fin; confequently, fo may ferving the law of God. But ferving with the flish the law of fin, cannot be applied to a true Christian, or fuch a one as St. Paul was, because he walked not after the fleft, but after the Spirit, and was made free from the law of fin in his members, and from death, the consequent of fin : chap. viii. 1, 2. See also ver. 8, 9.

of that chapter, where it is faid, that they who are in the flesh cannot please God; and it is pronounced of true Christians, that they are not in the flefb. The truth is, that the I, of whom the Apostle here says, duro's irw, the fame I, is manifestly the iyw, the I, spoken of in his preceding argumentation : and here, after a very lively touch upon the grace of redemption, he fums up what he had proved, thus: "You are delivered from the dominion of finful "lufts, and the curfe of the law; and obtain falvation, " not by any ftrength or favour which the law fupplies, " but by the grace of God in our Lord Jefus Chrift; for " which we are bound to be ever thankful to him. To " conclude: the fum of what I have advanced, concerning " the power of fin in the fenfual man, or even in the merely " awakened man, is this; namely, that the fame perfon, in " his inward man, his mind and reafon, may affent to and " approve the law of God; and yet, notwithftanding, by " his flefhly appetites, may be brought under fervitude to " fin." See on chap. viii. I.

Inferences .- There are few chapters in facred Scripture which have been more misrepresented or misunderstood, than that before us. We have endeavoured, by the affiftance of the most able and impartial commentators that we could meet with, to give its true and genuine meaning : and we observe farther, in the words of one of them, that, should we be mistaken in the fense of any single period in the chapter, yet furely the fubject and drift of the Apoftle's argument are evident beyond a doubt : certainly he runs a comparison between the law and the Gospel, with regard to the Jew in the flefb. He here infallibly fpeaks of the law, and of the flate of the law, and of the flate of a finner under the law, which leaves him enflaved to fin without help, and fubjected to death without pardon. Then in chap. viii. he undeniably turns to the Gespel, and fhews what provision is there made for recovery from the bondage of fin, to fanctity and happinefs. Confequently he cannot be fuppofed, by the wretched character above given, to defcribe the ftate of a Chriftian, unlefs he can be fupposed to represent the Gospel as weak and defective as the law itfelf. For if, after faith in Christ, and fuch obedience to him as we can now perform, the Christian ftill remains under the dominion of fin and the condemnation of the law, (which is the true flate defcribed in the above chapter,) then the grace of God is of no use to us, nor are we any nearer to life, by being in Christ and walking after his Spirit according to our prefent abilities; but still we want a new redemption, and ought to cry out, O wretched man !- who fhall deliver me? &c.

But here it may be objected,—" Are not even good and "holy men attended with fuch fenfual appetites and af-"fections; and therefore may we not very juftly apply to " them the Apoftle's defcription of a Jew in the flefb?"— To this we answer, it is undoubtedly true, that even good and holy men are attended with various appetites and affections, and fuch as will exercise vigilance, felf-denial, faith, faith, and patience, while they are in the body. For this caule St. Paul kept his body under, and brought it into fubjettion, left that by any means, when be had preached to others, be himself should be a cast-away. But full this will not juftify us in applying what the Apostle fays here of the Jew in the flefh, to true Christians, - to good and holy men : becaule though fuch have, and while in this world will have, fleth and blood, as well as principalities and powers and fpinitual wickedness in high places, to struggle with, yet they are not fuch as prevail, and bring them into capunity to in; for then they would lofe their character, and cesse to be good and holy men. They are not fuch appetites and affections as conquer them, but fuch as they equile, conquer, and mortify, at leaft. And therefore it is falle and injurious to true religion, to fet them upon a level with the Jew here in the fle/b, who is supposed to be conquered, and brought into captivity to the law of fin and des b.

But it may be faid, "We find in Scripture, that fome-"times good men have fallen foully into fin."-And what then? Does it thence follow that all good men are in the flib, carnal, and fold under fin,-that they are brought into copilivity to the law of fin and death?-Surely no. Good men have fallen into fin; but their falling does not denominute them good men, but their recovering themfelves again to repentance. For had they remained under the power of fin,-carnal, and fold under it, they would for erer have lost the character of good men. All that we can kain from the faults of good men in Scripture is, that they are obnoxious to temptation, and may be overcome, if they be negligent and fecure : and farther, that through the mercy of God it is possible, that he who has finned may lee the error of his way, and return to the obedience d the juft. But we cannot from the faults of good men mir, that there is no difference between them and wicked men, who live habitually in fin; or that David, when, in whomence of his crimes, he humbled himfelf before God, uncenced and forfook them, was not a whit better as to the principle in his heart, but the fame man as when he committed adultery and murder.

But the prophet fays, The heart is deceitful above all things, and defperately wicked ; who can know it ? Jer. xvii. 9. То which we may answer, that Christians, too generally neglutting the fludy of Scripture, content themfelves with a lew scraps, which, though wrongly understood, they make the tell of truth, and the ground of their principles, in contradiction to the whole tenor of revelation. Thus this text of Jeremiah has been milapplied, to prove that every man's heart is fo defperately wicked, that no man can know how wicked his heart is; whereas the Spirit of God is flewing the wretched error of trusting in man, ver. 5. 6.; and the bleffedness of trust in God, ver. 7, 8. And then in ver. 9. he subjoins a reason which demonstrates the ettor of trufting in man; The heart is deceitful, &c. "We "cannot look into the hearts of those we trust : under "great pretences of kindness, they may cover the blackest " defigns. But God, the universal Judge, knows what is " in every man, and can preferve thole who trust in him " from the latent mischievous counsels of the wicked and " treacherous." Ver. 10. I the Lord fearch the heart, &c. This text, therefore, does not relate to the difficulty which any man has to know his own heart, but the hearts of those in whom he may confide.

It may be farther urged, "Do we not experience that "we have corrupt and wicked hearts? and that the "Apofile's defeription above given but too well fuits what "we find in ourfelves?"—We answer, every man can beft judge what he finds in himfelf: but if any man really finds that his heart is corrupt and wicked, it is the duty of a minister of the Gospel to exhort him earnestly to use those means, which the grace of God has provided, for cleansing ourfelves from all filthiness of the fless and spirit, and for perfecting boliness in the fear of God (2 Cor. vii. 1.). Let fuch a corrupt person, as he values the falvation of his foul, hear and learn the truth as it is in Jesus, Ephel. iv. 22, 23. whereby he will be taught to put off the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful luss, and to be renewed in the spirit of his mind.

To hear fome perfons talk, one would imagine that they thought it their duty, and a mark of fincerity and goodnefs. to be always complaining of corrupt and desperately wicked hearts; and, confequently, that they ought to have, or in fact should always have, fuch hearts to complain of. But let no man deceive himfelf: a wicked heart is too dangerous a thing to be trifled with .-- I would not here be thought to difcourage the humble fentiments that every man should have of himself under our present infirmities: but we may greatly wrong ourfelves by a falfe bumility; and whoever carefully perufes the New Teftament will find, that however we are obliged to repent of fin, a fpirit of complaining and bevailing is not the fpirit of the Gofpel; neither is it a rule of true religion, nor any mark of fincerity, to have a corrupt heart, or to be always complaining of fuch a heart. On the contrary, the Gofpel is intended to deliver us from all iniquity, and to purify us into a peculiar people zealous of good works, and to fanctify us throughout in body, foul, and spirit, that we may now be faints,-may now have peace and joy in the Holy Ghoft. and at length be prefented without spot or blemish, before the prefence of God. This is the invariable fenfe of revelation : neverthelefs, it is manifeftly true, that while we are in the body, we shall be excreifed with the infirmities and paffions thereof : but then this is not our corruption and wickedness, but the trial of our virtue and holinefs; and it is the real character of every true Christian, that he crucifieth the fligh with the affections and lufts, and ardently labours to perfect holinefs in the fear of God. Whatever is evil and corrupt in us we ought to condemn; not fo as that it shall flill remain in us, and that we may always be condemning it, but that we may speedily reform, and be effectually delivered from it.

jection taken from the chapter before us, we may thence gather, that we are very apt, in a world full of temptation, to be deceived and drawn into fin by bodily appetites :that when once we are under the government of these appetites, it is impracticable to recover ourfelves by the mere force of reaf n; confequently, that we ftand in need of that life-giving Spirit whom the Apollle mentions, chap. That the cafe of those who are under a law viii. 2. threatening death to every fin, must be quite deplorable, if they have not relief from the mercy of the Lawgiver: which fad cafe the Jews, who adhered to the law, and rejected the Gospel, chose for themselves. Of course, we can by no means infer, that the Apoftle is deferibing his own cafe at the time when he wrote, or the cafe of any genuine Christian believer; though it be true, that he had and that all upright Christians, while in the body, have paffions to refift and mortify. But then, as they are in Chrift, it is their real character, that they do refift and mortify, not that they are overcome and brought into captivity by them,-which is the fad cafe and character defcribed in the above chapter, and which character, if it be finally our own, we fhall undoubtedly perifh.

We have been more copious in our Inferences from this paffage of Scripture, in order to free Christians from a dangerous flote into which, it is to be feared, many have fallen, who heace have concluded, that they might by their luits be hindered from doing that good which they are convinced is their duty, and by the law in their members might be brought into f rvitude by the law of fin ;--and yet, as to their piritual thate, be in as good a condition as St. Paul himfelf, a perfusion which manifettly tends to give us too favourable an opinion of the workings of criminal affections, to make us remifs in mortifying them, to encourage us to ven use too far in fenfual indulgencies, and to hull confeience alloop, when we are fallen under their 'dominion; or, if a better mind preferves a man from these work confequences of this millike, yet, fo long as it remains, he must rob himself of due encourageneut to pions industry, and a cheerful progress in the Chriftian courfe. For after all his upright endeavours in fole dependence on divine grace, he will imagine that he makes very fmall or no advances in a religious life :---ftill he is but where he was, fill carnal and fold under fin ;-It und r the worft of habits, and in the most wretched con ition.

To make this good, common infirmities are magnified.

into the blackeft crimes; and fuch untoward fentiments cannot fail to enfeeble hope, love, and joy. The Gospel is glad tidings of great joy, which introduce a bleffed, glorious, lively hope, give us the most pleasing fentiments of the divine love, infpire a comfort and peace far fuperior to all temporal enjoyments, and expressly require us to rejsice in the Lord, and to hold fast the confidence of hope. But what room can there be in our breafts for fpiritual joy and hope, if we still conceive ourfelves to be in a state which the Scripture every where condemns?-If we are ftill carnal and fold under fin, how can we lift up a cheerful face towards heaven ?-In fhort, we must be destitute of every comfort refulting from a heart purified by the faith of Jefus, and remain under gloomy doubts and fears, which no marks or evidences of grace and fanctification can diffipate or remove.

REFLECTIONS.—If, The Apofile had afferted, that we pre not under the law; and in what fenfe he here explains. He was addreffing himfelf to them who knew the law, and would admit it as the most obvious truth, that the law can no longer be binding than the perfon lives under it. As for inftance: The woman which hath an hifband, is bound by the law to her hifband for long as he livet b: but if the kufband be dead, the bond of wedlock is diffolved, and the is logical from the law of her hufband. So then if while her hufband liveth, the be married to another man, the fhall be called an adulterefs; but the cafe is quite different if her hufband be dead, for then the is free from that law; fo that the is no adulterefs, though the be married to another man.

Now fuch was our cafe.

1. Our first marriage was to the law; we were under it as a covenant of works, and the fruits of that in tridge were dreadful. For when we, Jews as well as (a ntiles, where in the flefb, in our natural, corrupt, and unregenerate flate, the motions of fin, the pathons and vile affections of our fallen hearts, which were by the Liw confidered as a covenant of works, that demanded an immaculate perfection which we could not pay, and denounced a curfe we could not endure; our corruptions, I fay, were but the more irritated by the firstness of the prohibition, and the feverity of the fanction, and did work in our members with fuch mighty and irrefiftible energy, as to bring firth fruit unto death, producing all those actual transgrettions which spring from the original root of bitternels in cur nature; and, unlefs we are delivered from the guilt and dominion of them, them, must issue in eternal death : and, as long as any foul is under the law as a covenant, this must be his miferabie cafe. But,

2. We are married to another, even to Chrift Jefus. Our first husband, the law, being dead, wherein we were held, sue are delivered from its obligations as a covenant, and from the curfe that it denounced on the transgreffors. We are no more in these respects under it, than a wife is subject to her departed hufband. We are become dead to the law, and the law unto us, by the body of Chrift; for he hath fatisfied all the demands of that perfect law of innocence : and we are thus discharged from all connection with and obligation to our former hufband, that we might be married to andber, even to him who is raifed from the dead, the rifen and exalted Saviour, to whom we now pledge our fidelity, and by ties of love are drawn to a willing fubjection whis pleasing yoke, that we should bring forth fruit unto Gid, the fruits of grace and holine's produced through the quickening influences of his Spirit, which, till this union with Chritt commences, never can be brought forth,-and unding to advance the divine glory, acceptable also to God through Jefus Christ; and that we should serve in newness of junt, and not in the oldness of the letter : `though made free from the law as a covenant of life, yet under the law to Chill, receiving from him the new heart, walking before him under the influence of new principles, and enabled to hew forth a very different conversation, in righteousness and true holinefs, from what we ever did or could practile, when under the power of the old man; and regarding the law as a covenant of life, which only provoked, instead of restraining, the corruption of our hearts.

2dly, An objection might be raifed from what the Apollie had faid, as if he had most dishonourably refected on the law. What fhall we fay then? is the law fn? With indignation he replies, God forbid : the law is good, the evil is all in ourfelves.

1. The law is in itself most holy, just, and good; it contansa transcript of God's purity, inculcates the most perha obedience, demands nothing but what effentially flows from the very relation of Creator and creature, and in its nature is, like its Author, excellent. .

2. The advantages of the law are great, as it convinces the conficience, and humbles the foul under a fense of fin. I bad not known fin, but by the law; fo far is the law from kiding to fin, or approving it, that it discovers and condemns the most fecret workings of evil. For I had not tream luft, the linfulness of the first motions of corrupt defire, except the law had faid, Thou fhalt not covet ; the law therefore is not finful; but, as the bright mirror discovers that deformity which would otherwife have been overlected, to does the law discover the deformity of fin. The tril is all in ourfelves, where fin, taking occasion by the commandment, raged even the more violently because of the prohibition, and wrought in me all manner of concupifcence. for willout the law, whilft in my Pharifaical flate I knew Fol. II.

not its spirituality and extensive demands, fin was dead, · did not terrify my conficence, and to my apprehension was entirely fubdued; fo that I counted myfelf, as touching the righteousness which is by the law, blameless. For I was alive without the law once; in those days of my vanity, when Pharifaical pride fwelled my bosom, I counted my title to life clear on the footing of my own obedience, being a perfect stranger to the spiritual nature and extent of the law: but when the commandment came, laid open to my confcience by the Spirit in its purity and fpirituality, conviction flashed on my mind; fin revived, and brought unnumbered charges against me, which I had overlooked; and I felt its living power in my heart, when I thought it had been utterly destroyed, and, in consequence thereof, I died; I faw myfelf a condemned criminal, most justly obnoxious to the divine displeasure, and in the eye of the law under the fearful sentence of eternal death. And the commandment which, if perfectly obeyed, was ordained to be a covenant of life to man in innocence, I found to be unte death, and through the corruption of my nature rendering me incapable of keeping it, I perceived that the only thing it could do for me was, to confign me over to the wrath of God as a tranfgreffor. For fin, that native principle of corruption in my heart, taking occasion by the commandment to rebel against the law, as if it was unreasonably fevere, deceived me with hopes of pleafure and impunity, and by it flew me, like an affaffin that, having milled the traveller, plunges his dagger into his heart. Wherefore all these dire confequences are to be afcribed wholly to our defperate corruption, while the law is holy, and no blame to be laid against it, and the commandment is hely, just, and good.

3dly, A new objection is flarted from the title he gives to the law as good. Was then that which is good made death unto me? might one fuggeft; can that which is fo good in its nature be in its effects fo deadly? and is the law of God the caufe of all human miferies? God forbid. It is not the law, but the crime committed against it, which caufes the death of the malefactor. Thus fin, the concupiscence of my corrupted nature, that it might appear fin, and be difcovered to my confcience in its true malignity, working death in me by that which is good, and taking occafion to rebel from the very purity and perfection of the holy law of God, brought the fentence of death upon me; that fin by the commandment, fo clearly forbidden, yet rifing in wilful opposition thereto, might appear exceeding finful; and that this corruption of my nature, the fource of all my actual transgressions, might be seen in the blackest colours that words can express, or thought conceive (xar' un specify apaglards.).

The Apoftle farther proceeds to defcribe the flate of an awakened finner, drawn from his own experience during the interval between his miraculous conviction, and his conversion at Damascus, or from his general and perfect acquaintance with the experience of mourners in that М awakened awakened state. For we know that the law is (piritual, reaching to the thoughts and intents of the heart, and requiring inward as well as outward obedience; but I ass carnal, feel myself a poor fallen creature, fold under fin ; by the first man's transgression delivered into the tyrant's hands, and born the flave of corruption, the dire effects of which I daily feel, and groan under. For that which I do, I allow not; when in thought, word, or deed, my wretched heart yields to the tempter's wiles, my judgment difapproves the evil that I commit; and, far from a deliberate choice, my foul rifes against it, and I loath both the fin and myfelf. For what I would, and in my better part approve and defire, that do I not ; I defire always with the most intense application, that my foul should be fixed on God, and engaged in his bleffed work and fervice : yet how fhort do I come of that fpirituality of temper and conduct which I wish to exercise ! But what I hate, that do I; infenfably, through infirmity, furprife, or temptation, betrayed into things that habitually I abhor. If then I do that which I would not, whilit I feel a fettled aversion to this hateful fervice, I confent unto the law (Tumphan), give my full approbation to it, that it is good, most excellent in itfelf, molt becoming God to enjoin, and me to obey; and even if its fearful penalty were levied upon me, I mult own the fentence righteous, just, and good. Now then it is no more I that do it; but fin, my native corruption, that dwelleth in me, which overpowers me, and is most burthenfome to me. For I know, by fad experience, that in me, (that is in my fleft), in my carnal felf, there dwelleth no good thing, but evil only : for to will is prefent with me, and my judgment approves the things that are excellent, and my choice determines me to walk with and pleafe God; but how to perform that which is good I find not; the ftorms of temptation and the power and current of corruption carry me out of the course I mean to steer; so that I cannot keep in the ftraight way of holinefs, nor proceed with that fteadiness and speed I wish for and purpole. For the good that I would, even to be found in the will of God, I do not, cannot attain unto; but the evil which I would net, but condemn, difapprove, and difallow, that I do, feeling myfelf weak as an infant, and unable to make refiltance. Now if I do that I would not, as I faid beforc, it is no more I that do it; fin is in my eyes an abominable thing, and I feel an averfion to it, and a hearty approbation of the holy law of God; but all the evil proceeds from fin, that corrupted principle, which dwelleth in me, and overcomes me. I find then a law, my fallen nature acting in me with fuch mighty influence, that when I would do good, evil is prefent with me; fome discouragement is fuggested to deter me, some snare to allure me, or some evil defire rifes up, quenches the gracious purpoles that I had formed, and turns me alide from the path of righteoulnefs. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man :

my inmost foul does not only approve the law in all its fpirituality as good, but feels a most earnest defire to obtain that revelation of Jefus Chrift in my heart, and that principle of divine love implanted in my foul, which may give me constant dominion over fin. But (which is the bitterest burthen under which I groan) I fee another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of fin, which is in my members; while overpowered, reluctantly I am drawn alide, not a willing flave, but an unhappy captive. O wretched man that I am ! thus tied and bound with the chain of my fins, who foull deliver me from the body of this death? from this fallen nature, which, like a body confifting of various members, works to powerfully, and muft, for any thing I can do to help myscif, bring me under the fentence of eternal death. But, though I feel my helplessien, and lie down under felf-despair, I thank God through Jefus Chrift our Lord. By his grace I am delivered from condemnation; and by his Spirit I am faved from the power of evil. So then the fum of my whole argumentation above, in the character of a penitent finner, is fortly this: with the mind, in my fettled judgment and choice, I wisfelf ferve the law of God with the full conferm of my judgment; but with the floth the law of fin, feeling its. workings in me, though difallowed and condemned, and reluctantly brought under its hateful power.

CHAP. VIII.

IN farther answer to the objection mentioned chaps iii. 31. the Apostle, in this chapter, with great feeling and energy, difplays the many powerful motives which the doctrines of the Gofpel, explained in the preceding chapters, fuggest for engaging both the understanding and the affections of believers, to a continued pursuit of holinefs.

The first motive which he mentions is, That under the new covenant, there is no condemnation to believers, who walk not according to the fleft, but according to the Spirit, ver. 1.-This greateft of all confiderations the Apostle begins with, after having pathetically described the terror of the awakened finner, arifing from his confcioufnels of guilt, becaufe, if mercy were not with God, he could never be loved nor obeyed by men.

The fecond motive is, That under the new covenant, fufficient allistance being given to all, to free them from the law of fin and death, they cannot excuse their evil actions by pleading the ftrength of their finful paffons, ver. 2.-This deliverance from the law of fin and death, God has accomplished by fending his Son in the flesh, to die as a fin-offering, to procure pardon for finners, and to deftroy the power of fin in their fleth by his word and Spirit, that they may attain the righteoufness which the law of faith, the new covenant, requires, ver. 4 .- And, to hew thew the nature and extent of that righteoufuels, the Apolle explains what it is to walk after the fleft, and what to walk after the Spirit, ver. 5.

The third motive to holinefs is, That, according to the new covenant, all who live a wicked fenfual life, thall die eternally; but every one who lives in a holy fpiritual manner thall be rewarded with life eternal, ver. 6–8.

The fourth motive is, That the Spirit of God dwells with beliens, whereby the lufts of their body are mortified, and their mional powers are habitually ftrengthened, ver. 10. -And even the animal part of their nature, after being fublued, is made fubfervient to righteoufnefs, by the inwelling of the fame Spirit, ver. 11.-Such being the efteds of the gracious affiftances promifed in the Golpel, no perfon under the new covenant is irrefiftibly forced, either by the corruptions of his nature, or by outward temptations, to live according to the field, ver. 12.;-and therefore God has justly decreed, that all who live actording to the flefh, fhall die eternally, ver. 13 .- This declatation concerning future retributions under the new forenant, the Apostle had made before, ver. 6.; but he repeats it here, to shew that, although the curse of the law, in fo far as it allows no mercy to the penitent finner, does not take place under the new covenant, men's obligations to holinels are not weakened. The fanctions of law are fill continued under the Gospel, but in a different form, and with a more happy efficacy .- Farther to correct the error of the Jews, who contended that no Gentile could obtain eternal life, who did not obey the law of Mofes, and to comfort the believing Gentiles, whom the Jews thus excluded from the favour of God, the Apostle declared, that, according to the tenor of the new covenant, all who are kd by the Spirit of God to mortify the deeds of the body, ne the ions of God, whether they be Jews or Gentiles. And, to fliew the excellent disposition of the fons of God, heblerves that, notwithstanding under the new covenant the levereft punifhment is threatened against finners, the has of God do not obey him from that flavish fear ot prohiment which was bred in the minds of the Jews by the curle of the law, but from the filial difpolitions of statitude and love to their Father, ver. 15 .- This excellent temper the Apofile terms the witness of cur fairit that we are claidren of God, and observes, that the Spirit of God allo confirms that wirnefs.

Having thus flown, that all who obey God fincerely from a principle of faith, are his fons, the Apoftle, as the fill matter to holine is furnified by the Gofpel, gives a puticular account of the konsurs, privileges, and p feffions of twisns of God. They are keins of God. And to flow what an heir of God is, he adds, and joint-keins with Chrift; I that the whole felicity of that immortal life, which Caith new enjoys in the human nature, really belongs to the other fons of God in their measure, whether they be Jews or Gentiles; and they shall be put in possession thereof, if, when called to it, they fuffer, as Chrift did, for righteoufnefs' fake, ver. 17. This remark, concerning fuffering, the Apostle introduced, to teach the Romans, that their being the fons of God would not fecure them against, but rather expose them to fufferings. And to prevent the Jews, who confidered prosperity as a token of God's favour, from being fcandalized at the Gospel, on account of the sufferings which accompanied it, and even to encourage them to fuffer, he observed that that glorious refurrection, by which the fons of God are to be diftinguished, is a bleffing fo great, that the pious Gentiles supported the miscrics of life, by earnestly looking for it, ver. 18, 19.-Nor was their expectation without foundation, inalmuch as not for their own fin, but for the fin of the first man, the human race was subjected to death by God, ver. 20.-in the firm resolution that he would deliver all mankind from the grave, through the obedience of Chrift, ver. 21 .- By infinuating that the expectation which the Gentiles entertained of a future life in the body, was derived from God's resolution to raife all mankind from the dead, the Apostle, I suppole, meant God's refolution made known at the fall, that the Seed of the woman should bruife the head of the ferpent. For that promife, being in fome effective fense preferved among the Gentiles by tradition, was the foundation of the hope which many of them, in different parts of the world, entertained of the refurrection of the body, and of a future flate.-Then, by a beautiful rhetorical figure, the Apostle introduces the whole Gentile world as suffering extreme pain under the mileries of life, and earneftly withing for deliverance, ver. 22 .- Believers allo groan within themfelves, while they wait for the redemption of their body from the bondage of corruption, ver. 23 .- But they wait patiently, and thereby fnew the ftrength of their faith, ver. 24, 25.-And to this exercise of patience they are helped by the Spirit of God, who produces in them fuch a disposition of the mind, as is an effectual complaint to God, ver. 26.-and, being wrought in them by the Spirit, is justly termed the Spirit's complaining for the faints, ver. 27.

The fixth motive to holinefs, furnished by the difcoveries made in the Gofpel, is this : God having determined to fave perfevering believers, they know that every providence, whether profperous or adverfe, fhall work together for that end. The reason is, God has called or denominated believers the feed of Abraham, and the fons of God, I John, iii, I. and heirs of immortality, ver. 28.-And whom he foreknew that they would be his fons,-that they would yield to be faved by grace, them he alfo predeftinated to be conformed to the image of his Son Chrift, both in their body and mind, ver. 20 .- Moreover, whom he predefinated to be conformed to the image of Chrift, them he alio called or denominated the feed of Abraham, and gave them a right to all the bleffings promifed to Abraham's 11 2 feed ; Spirit, if fo be that the Spirit of God dwell of Christ, he is none of his.

10 And if Christ be "in you, "the body in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit is dead because of fin; " but the Spirit is life because of righteousnes.

feed; and whom he fo called, them he alfo justified, ver. 30. -And having thus defcribed the falvation of the faithful faints of God, in its origin, its intermediate fleps, and its iffue, the Apostle, strongly impressed with his subject, asks, What fhall we fay to these things? Since God is for us believing Jews and Gentiles, no perfon can hinder our being accounted the feed of Abraham, and the fons of God, ver. 31.-For he who delivered his own Son to death for us all, for the Gentiles as well as for the Jews, will with him also freely give us all the bleffings promifed to the feed of Abraham, that is, to all the faithful fons of God, ver. 32.-Then, as enraptured with the view which he had taken of those grand subjects, and to shew that there is no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jefus, he cries out, Who shall dare to bring any accusation against God's elect,-against his faithful people,-fince God has declared that he will justify fuch by faith? ver. 33. -Who is he that will pretend to condemn them, fince Chrift hath died to procure their pardon, and now governs the world for their benefit, and makes intercoffion with the Father in their behalf ? ver. 34 .- Then perfonating the whole body of the faithful, ftrongly affected with the goodnefs of God fhewn in their falvation, and highly elated with the view of their privileges fo unanfwerably established, he, in their name, professes their firm resolution of adhering to the Gofpel, that they may continue the objects of Chrift's love, however many or ftrong the temptations may be with which they are affaulted, ver. 35. to the end of the chapter.

The latter part of this chapter, beginning at ver. 31. if compared with the most shining passages of the fo much admired writings of the Greeks and Romans, will be found not inferior to any of them in fublimity of thought, variety of figures, and beauty of language. It contains a defcription, in most forcible and glowing expressions, of the privileges, the hopes, and the temper of a true Christian; and fhews what magnanimity and what greatnefs of fentiment the Gofpel is able to infuse into them who understand and believe its doctrines. It is therefore a most proper conclusion of a discourse, in which, by the strongest reafoning, practices are recommended, which ennoble the human mind, yield the greatest and the most permanent joys, and prepare men for becoming the companions of angels, and for living with God himfelf through all eternity.

On reviewing the encouragements to holinefs propofed by the Apostle in this and the three foregoing chapters, the reader must be sensible that the scheme of falvation revealed in the Gofpel fuggefts motives to perfuade men to forfake fin and follow holinefs, and even to fuffer for welldoing, more in number and of infinitely greater efficacy than any preacher either of the law of nature (which can do nothing but condemn) or of Moles ever proposed, or indeed had it in his power to propole. And therefore the calumny of the Jewish scribes and heathen philosophers, mentioned chap. iii 31. that by teaching the justification of finners, through faith without works of law, the Apoftles of Chrift made void the obligations of morality, and encouraged men to fin, was altogether without foundation. That doctrine, inftead of weakening the obligation of law, ftrengthens it in the higheit degree .- Farther, because in the chapters above mentioned, the Apolile has fhewn that God's counting men's faith to them for rightcoufnefs, on account of the death of his Son, furnishes such a variety of powerful motives for perfuading finners to repent and return to God, these chapters do in effect demonstrate the natural efficacy of the death of Chrift, in delivering believers from the power of fin. Whence it follows, that the Gofpel method of pardoning finners through the death of Chrift, is an exercife of mercy, which, inftead of weakening, has greatly ftrengthened the authority of the law of God; confequently, it is perfectly fuitable to his character, and fubfervient to the ends of his moral government. The efficacy, therefore, of Chrift's death, in delivering us from the power of fin, being thus evident, we cannot doubt of its efficacy, as an atonement in delivering us from the. punishment of sin, notwithstanding we are in some meafure ignorant of the manner in which it operates for that end.

Ver. 1. There is therefore now ] "Aga vov. The word "Aga here, is not illative, but ftrongly affirmative ,-nempe utique, certainly, verily; (fce Matt. xii. 28. Luke, xi. 48. xviii. 8. in the original). Now, is "under the Gofpel." This carries our thoughts back to ver. 6. of the foregoing chapter; which verfe the Apostle comments upon in the eleven first verses of this chapter; and these verses shew the Christian Jew how he is obliged under the Gospel to fanctity of life, and correspond to the first eleven verses of the fixth chapter, where he flews the fame thing to the Gentile Christian. Ilveuµa, Spirit, certainly is not used in the fame fense throughout this chapter. In ver. 10, 16. it fignifies the spirit of our mind (as Acts, vii. 59. xvii. 16. xviii. 5, 25. Rom. i. 9. xii. 11. Gal. v. 17.); the fupreme part of our constitution, or the principle of reason, by which we differe, approve, and choose the truth; and thus it answers to vous, mind, in the foregoing chapter, ver. 25. But in ver. 9, 11, 16, 26, 27. it fignifies that heavenly Perfon, whom we call the Holy Ghoft, given to the Apofiles and others in his miraculous power, and fent to enlighten and fanchify all these who submit to the rightcousness of God which is by faith, and defire to live foberly, righteoufly, and godly. The verfe before us may be paraphrafed thus : " Under the weak and lifelefs dispensation " of the law, the finner remains, as we have flewn above, " in a deplorable state, without help or hope, enflaved to " fin, and fentenced to death. But now, under the Gofpel, " the most encouraging hopes finile upon us, and we have " the highest affurance that all genuine believers, notwith-" ftanding former transgreffions, are quite discharged from " the penalty of the law, and difengaged from the fervitude " of Ver. 2. For the law of the Spirit of life] That it is the Spintoflife and grace,-the Spirit of Chrift,-who delivers from he law in the members, that law of death, is evident from chap. vii. 23-25. Why it is called a law, may be found in the antithefis to the law of fin and death; grace being as certain a law to give life to Christians, who live not after the flesh, as the influence of finiul appetites is to bing death on those who are not under grace. The reason why it is called the law of the Spirit of life is, that the Go:pel which contains this doctrine of grace is dicated by the fame Spirit that railed up Chrift from the dead; that quickens us to newnets of life, and has for its end the conferring of eternal life. By the law of fin and death is meant, that which he calls the law in his members, chap. vii. 23. where it is termed the law of fin; and ver. 24. the body glack, from which grace delivers. This is certain, that no one who confiders what St. Paul has faid, ver. 7 and 13. of the foregoing chapter, can think that he can call the by of Moles the law of fin, or the law of death. See Locke.

Var. 3. For what the law could not do, &c.] For this the In nit being able to effect, &c. The weakness, and as he there also calls it, the unprofitablenels of the law, is again then notice of by the Apostle, Heb. vis. 18, 19. There ven two defects in the law, whereby it became in this limited feuse unprofitable, so as to make nothing perfect; (for t is profitable to drive us to Chrift;) the one was its inkrible rigour, against which it provided no allay, or subgation. It left no place for atonement; the leaft flip ranortal; death was the inevitable punishment of transmbn, by the fentence of the law. St. Paul's Epiftles metall of this; and he shews, Heb. x. 5, 10. how we are direred from it by the body of Christ. The other weakness or defect of the law was, that it could not enable those who were under it to get the mastery over their fiesh, or anal propenfities : the law exacted complete obedience, but afforded men no help against their vicious inclinations. & Paul flows here how believers are delivered from this dominion of fin in their mortal bodies, by the Spirit of Carift enabling them, upon their fincere endeavours after nghtcoulnels, to keep fin under in their mortal bodies; in conformity to Chrift, in whole flefs it was condemned, exe-(med, and perfectly extinct, having never indeed had there my life or being, -as we fhall observe more fully by-and-The provision made in the new covenant against both thek defects of the law, is in the Epistle to the Hebrews uprefied thus: Firft, he will write his law in their hearts; kcaule, facandly, he will be merciful to their iniquities; Heb.

viii. 7-12. And for fin, weet auaprias, fignifies an offering for fin. See 2 Cor. v. 21. Heb. x. 5-10. So that the plain import is, " God fending bis own Son in the likenefs of " finful flefb,-[like unto our frail finful flefh in all things " except fin, Heb. iv. 15.],-and fending him to be an of-" fering for fin, hath condemned fin," &c. Thus the manner and end of his fending are joined. The profopopœia. whereby fin was confidered as a perfon through the foregoing chapter being continued here, the condemning of fin in the fle/b, cannot mean, as fome would have it, that Christ was condemned for fin, or in the place of fin; for that would be to fave fin, and leave that alive which Christ came to deftroy. But the plain meaning is, that fin itfelf was condemned, or put to death, in his flefh; that is, was fuffered to have no life or being in the flesh of our Saviour : he was in all points tempted as we are, yet without fin. This farther appears to be the fenfe by the following words. The antithefis between condemnation, ver. 1. and condemned here, will also shew why that word is used to express the death or non-existence of fin in our Saviour; 1 Pet. ii. 22. That St. Paul fometimes uses condemnation for putting to death, see chap. v. 16-18. To what has been advanced in this note, it may be urged, " Had not the Jews, before " Chrift came, the affiftances of the Spirit, and fufficient " means and motives to deliver them from the power of " fin ?" To which we reply, certainly they had, as appears particularly from the Pfalms and prophetic writings; yea all mankind, fince the promife, Gen. iii. 15. in all ages and parts of the world, have been, and still are, under grace; grace founded upon the redemption which is in-Chrift; and therefore always had, and ftill have, the benefit of divine affiftance, however they might have neglected or abused it. But the Apostle is here considering the affiftances enjoyed, under the then newly-crected difpenfation. of the Gofpel, (which in means and motives far exceedsall others,) and with particular regard to the Jew; and upon a comparison with the law, in which he rested for every thing, to shew the infinite preference of the Gospelto mere law;-as appears from the foregoing chapter: where he at large flews the Jew the infufficiency of mere law, or a rule of duty, to deliver a man from fin and corruption; though the instructions here given to the Jewconcerning the fuperior advantages of the Gospel for fanctification, would be of use to the Gentile convert; as his discourse to the Gentile, chap. vi. concerning our obligation to holineis, would be of fervice to the Jew, fo far as either fhould need instruction upon those heads. See Locke and Whitby.

, Ver. 4. That the righteoufness of the law, Scc.] Amaiwna, righteoufnefs, here feems to be used in the most extensive fense, and may fignify both moral righteousness, and the confequence of it, falvation, (fee chap. v. 16. in the original). The Gospel frees those from fin who choose to be free, which was more than the law could do. Law neither meither grants pardon, nor supplies help : but yet the Gospel does not free those from fin, who wickedly choose to remain under the dominion of it; for a willing flave, determined to continue in fervitude, who can free? The Apostle demonstrates, in the four next verses, that under any difpendation, fuch as continue impenitently in a fenfual life, must perish; and he infists to particularly upon this, probably either to prevent a miltake,---for fome might be to weak as to imagine, that a mere profession of Christianity would fecure them from the power of fin ;-or to obviate an objection which the Jew might be ready to make. He might allege; "But there are wicked men under the Gofpel, " as well as under the law." The Apoftle anfwers, " Men " who choose to continue under the power of fin and lust, " according to the true nature of things, mult perifh under " every difpenfation. God provides proper means under " the Golpel to deliver them from a wicked life, and to " bring them to true holinefs; but he cannot, confiftently " with his perfections, either force them to be holy, or " love them if they are wicked." As Chrift in the flefh was wholly exempt from all taint of fin, fo we, by that Spirit who was in him, fhall be exempt from the dominion of our carnal lufts, if we make it our choice and endeavour to live after the Spirit, ver. 9-11. For one thing which we are to perform by that Spirit, is the mortification of the body. See ver. 13. Gal. v. 16-26. Locke, and Peters on Job, p. 281.

Ver. 6. For to be carnally-minded is deatb] For joins what follows to ver. 1. as the reafon of what is here laid down; namely, that deliverance from condemnation is experienced only by fuch Christian converts, as walk not after the flefth, but after the Spirit:—for, &c. See Locke.

Ver. 7. The carnal mind] Desvnua The sage B flould have been translated here to be carnally-minded, as it is in the foregoing verse; which is justified by opposite ta the onex, do mind the things of the fleft, ver. 5. which fignifies the employing the bent of their minds, or fubjecting their mind entirely to the fulfilling the lufts of the fleth : fee 1 Cor. ii. 14. The Apostle, in the next clause, gives the reason why even those who have received the Gospel,-for to fuch he is here fpeaking,-are not faved unless they ceafe to walk after the flefh; becaufe that runs directly counter to the law of God, and can never be brought into conformity and fubjection to his commands. Such a fettled contradiction to his precepts cannot be fuffered by the fupreme Lord and Governor of the world in any of his creatures, without foregoing his fovereignty, and giving up the eternal immutable rule of right, to the fubverting the very foundations of all order and moral rectitude in the intellectual world. This, even in the judgment of men themfelves, will be always thought a necessary piece of justice for the keeping out of anarchy, diforder, and confusion; that those refractory subjects, who fet up their own inclinations for their rule against the law, which was made to reftrain those very inclinations, flould feel the feverity of the law, without which the authority of the law and the law-maker cannot be preferved. See Locke.

Ver. 8. So then they that are in the flifb, &c.] This is the conclution drawn from what went before; and in the flifb here, mult mean the fame as to be carnally-minded, &c. above;—to be under the government of fentual appetites. See Gal. iv. 3—6.

Ver. 9. But ye are not in the fleft, &c.] The word "Eurree, rendered if  $f_2$  be, may here fland for the word  $\epsilon \pi \epsilon_i \partial n \epsilon_2$ , as it does 2 Theff. i. 6. Have, in the last clause, is emphatical, and fignifies to retain, to fix in the mind at a principle,—duly to improve. Compare 1 John, v. 12. 2 John, 9.

Ver. 10, 11. And if Chrift be in you] And if Chrift, &c. -with respect to fin, - with respect to righteousness. In these verfes the Apolile deferibes the happy advantages of those who embrace the faith of the Gofpel, and live according to it. The phrase di auartian may be properly rendered in respect of, or with reference to fin. This determines what fort of death he is fpeaking of, namely, a moral death; as if he had faid, "The body, or the members thereof, are " mortified, as the power of luft is deftroyed." Shall quicken your mortal bodies, ver. 11. means, " shall raife them " to eternal life." The glorified faints are the fons of the refurrection, Luke, xx. 36. as it introduces them into eternal life. It feems to me clear that this refers to the refurrection of the faithful faints of God at the laft day, for thefe reafons: First, Becaufe the refurrection of Christ is twice mentioned in this verfe, as a pledge of their being made to live. Secondly, Becaufe their being made to live is affigned to God as his act, on account of their being faithfully under the government of his Holy Spirit. If the Spirit of God druell, or govern, in you, God will quicken your mortal bodies, on account, or by the agency, of his Spirit, that dwelleth in you. And therefore, the quickening of our mortal bidies, or making them to live, cannot mean (as Mr. Locke fuppofes in his long note upon this verse) our being quickened to newnefs of life, or to a fpiritual life of righteoufnefs; which life it pre-fuppofes, and which the Apoftle has spoken of in the foregoing verse. The revival or refurrection of the body is frequently put for our advancement to eternal life. See Doddridge. Mr. Locke would read, Shall quicken even your mortal bodies; and though the foregoing interpretation of this verfe is in my judgment the true one, yet it feems but juffice to the reader, and to that learned commentator, to fubioin what he has advanced in defence of a different exposition : " To lead us," fays he, "into the true sense of this 11th verse, we need only " observe, that St. Paul having in the sour first chapters " of this Epifile flewn that neither Jew nor Gentile could " be justified by the law; and in the 5th chapter, how fm " entered into the world by Adam, and reigned by death, " from which it was grace, and not the law, that delivered "men; in the 6th chapter he sheweth the convert Gen-" tiles, that though they were not under the law, but " under grace, yet they could not be faved, unless they " caft

"he declares to the Jews the weakness of the law, which "they to much flood upon; and fnews that the law could " not deliver them from the dominion of fin; that deli-"rerance was only by the grace of God, through Jefus "Chrift: from whence he draws the confequence which "begins this 8th chapter, and fo goes on with it here in "two branches, relating to his difcourfe in the foregoing " chapter, which complete it in this. The one is to flew, "that the law of the spirit of life, that is to say, the new " covenant in the Gospel, required that those that are in "Chilt Jefus should live not after the flesh, but after the "Spirit. The other is to fhew how, and by whom,-fince "the law was weak, and could not enable those under the "law to do it,-they are enabled to keep fin from reigning "in their mortal bodies. And here he flews, that Chrif-"tians are delivered from the dominion of their carnal "Inful lufts by the Spirit of God that is given to them, "and dwells in them, as a new quickening principle and "power, by which they are put into the state of a spiritual "lie, wherein their members are made capable of being "the inftruments of righteousness; if they please, as living "men alive now to righteoufnefs, fo to employ them. There it was fin that dwelleth in me, which " was the active and over-ruling principle : here it is the "Spirit of God that dwelleth in you, which is the principle " of ipintual life. Ver. 12. Therefore, brethren, &c.] After the Apostle has feparately and diffinctly shewn how the affair of fanctification or obligation to piety and holinefs ftands under the Gospel, both with regard to Jews and Gentiles, he feems here to address himself to both conjointly. And, I. He draws the general conclusion from all his arguments upon this fubject, ver. 12. where the phrase aga er, appears to be the grand inference from all that he has been arguing, in relation to fanctity of life. II. He fliews the ground on: which they may hope for eternal life, ver. 14-17. III. And whereas the affair of fuffering perfecution was a great stumbling-block to the Jew, and might very much difcourage the Gentile, he introduces it to the best advantage, ver. 17. and advances feveral arguments to fortify their minds under all trials; as, First, that they fuffered with Christ: Secondly, in order to be crucified with him, in a manner which will infinitely compensate any prefent furfferings, ver. 17, 18. Thirdly, All mankind are under various pressures, longing for a better state, ver. 10-22. Fourthly, The most eminent Christians, diftinguished by the choiceft gifts of heaven, were in the fame diffreffed condition, ver. 23. Fifthly, According to the plan of the Gospel, we are to be faved after a course of patience, exercifed in a variety of trials, ver. 24, 25. Sixthly, The Spirit of God will fupply patience to every upright foul under perfecution and fuffering : which will put them into a state highly pleasing to God, ver. 26, 27. Seventhly, All things, even the fevereft trials, fhall operate together to accomplish the falvation of those who love God, ver. 28. This he proves by giving us a view of the feveral ftens which the wifdom and goodnefs of God have fettled, in order to perfect the falvation of the faithful, ver. 29, 30. Hence, IV. He concludes from the whole of his preceding arguments, arguments, that, as we are brought into a flate of spardon by the free grace of God, founded upon the death of Chrift, who is now our glorious Agent and Interceffor in heaven, no poffible caufe,—fuppofing we perfeveringly love God, (for to fuch only the Apoftle's obfervations are applicable,)—will be able to pervert our minds; ver. 31. to the end.

Ver. 13. Ye fball die]  $M(\lambda)$  ette d = 0.00 whore is, ye fball die bereafter; namely, the fecond death at the last day. The wicked Christian professor is nigh unto the curfe; whose end is, to be burned. See Heb. vi. 8.

Ver. 14. They are the fons of God] Ifaac, by his fupernatural birth, being in a peculiar manner the fon of God, the Ifraelites his children were called by God himfelf bis fon, Exod. iv. 22. But they were God's fon only in an inferior fenfe: for by that relation they were entitled to nothing but the earthly inheritance. Whereas believers are in a higher fenfe the fons of God. Being fpiritually begotten of God, they partake of his nature, are heirs of the heavenly country, and, if faithful unto death, by the redemption of their body may become immortal like God they are capable of enjoying the everlatting inheritance. Perhaps alfo the high title of the fons of God is given to believers, to convey an affecting idea of their dignity and felicity; becaufe, of all the things in which worldly men glory, noble birth is the chief.

Ver. 15. The fpirit of bondage] What this is, the Apolle has plainly declared, Heb. ii. 15. Again, means, "Now "again, under Chrift; as the Jews did from Moles under "the law." The word abba fignifies father in the Jewifh language, and the infertion of it beautifully reprefents the union of Jewifh and Chriftian believers, in those devotions which were dictated by a filial fpirit, as well as the genuine experience of a child of God. See Locke, Doddridge, and Evant's Chriftian Temper, vol. i. ferm. 17, 18.

Ver. 16. The Spirit itfelf beareth witnefs, &c.7 It may be proper to inquire, on this much controverted verfe, Ift, How many and who are the witneffes here fpoken of? and 2dly, What is the kind of evidence given by them? I. Sugaretyeer, rendered bearing witness with, fignifies to be a fellow withofs, or to withels the fame thing that another doth. This is the conftant meaning of the word in Scripture, nor is it ever used but where there is a concurrent evidence of two witneffes (fee chap. ii. 15. ix. 1. Rev. xxii. 16.). There can be no reafon given therefore why it should not be taken in the fame fense here, and rendered the Spirit beareth withefs with, or together with, our fpirit. Here then are two witheffes, and who they are we muft next inquire Who the first Spirit is, must be learnt from what goes before. In ver. 2. we read of the Spirit of life in Chaift I fus, which bath made us free from the law of fin and of death. In ver. 9. he is called, the Spirit of God and of Chrift. In ver. 11. the Spirit of him that raifed up Jefus from the dead. In ver. 15. the Spirit of adoption, by which we cry, Abba, Father .-- In the prefent verie, reference is had to this Spirit :-- " The Spirit itfelf; that is, the Spirit " which has made us free in Chrift Jefus,-the Spirit by " whom we have received adoption, does himfelf bear " witnefs with our fpirit, that we are the children of God." But then the queftion is, whether fpirit in all thefe places be the name of a perfon, or whether it denotes only a quality or temper belonging to Christians; fo that the Spirit of Chrift thall fignify no more than the mind of Chrift does, Philip. ii. 5.; that is, the fame temper and disposition. This fense Creatius maintains, and oth rs after him, explaining the paffage thus: "Our evangelical fpirit (that is, " as he explains himfelf in another place, -our evangelical " temper) is a fufficient argument to our own minds, that "we are the children of God." To dispute this point with Crellius, and his brothren the Sociaians, would be to run into a great controverfy. But fince the Spirit of Chrift may and does fignify both fenfes, it may be proper to point out, to fuch as have no private prejudices to be maintained, which fenfe is here to be followed. First, then, this Spirit is the Spirit of life, by which we are made free; that is, by which we are regenerated in Chrift Jefus, and fet at liberty from the heavy yoke of fin, which the Apoftle had been deferibing in the foregoing chapter. Now an evangelical temper is not the caufe, but the confequent of this freedom : the Spirit of God is the efficient caufe, of whom we are faid for that reafon to be born. Secondly, It is the Spirit of him who raifed up Chrift; that is to fay, the Spirit by which he wrought that great wonder and miracle, as is evident by taking the whole 11th verie together :the Spirit of him who raifed Chrift from the dead, is the Spirit by which he fo raifed him, that is, the Holy Spirit, mighty in works and wonders. Lafly, It is the Spirit of adoption, by which we are made fons. The Spirit of adoption is the Spirit of which we are born in Chrift; of which birth an evangelical temper is not the caufe, but the effect. So that by the whole tenor of the Apoftle's arguing it must appear most evidently to every candid mind, that the Spirit which beareth witnefs with our spirit is the Holy Spirit of God, who works together with our spirit, to enable us to perform the will of God.-As to the fecond witnefs,-our own spirit,-it needs not much time to shew what it is, fince most are agreed that is our own mind. Who kneweth the things of a man, fave the spirit of a man which is in him? that is, fave his mind and conficience? Thus then the faithful Christian has two witness of his being the fon of God ;- the Holy Spirit of God, and his own mind and confcience.

II. Let us therefore fee, in the next place, what evidence each of them gives in this cafe. In order to this, we mult look back to the latter part of the former chapter, to which the prefent verfe relates. Our crying, Abba, Father, ver. 15. is very improperly pitched upon by fome as the ceidence proceeding from our own raind, fince it is faid exprefsly, that we fo cry, by the first of adoption; fo that our crying, Abba, Father, is an evidence coming not from our minds but from the Holy Spirit.—The evidence of our own fpirit is, that it loves and delights in the law of God.

God, and is reftlefs to obey the law it loves. The Apoftie's words, chap. vii. 25. are strong to this purpose; With the mind I ferve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of in-words which we should bear in memory while we are confidering the evidence of the Spirit of God. In the prefent chapter St. Paul tells us, that the redemption by Chail Jefus has put an end to the wretched captivity under which we lived. The law of the Spirit, &c. fee ver. 2. Law here lignifies power, for power is a law to those who live uder it: now then, the power of the Spirit has destroyed the power of fin. The power of fin was opposite to the mind and reason of man, fo that man, while he lived under that power, was a flave; but the power of the Spirit is on ration's fide, and works together with it; fo that to be under this power is a state of liberty and freedom, and therefore it is justly faid, that the law of the Spirit of life but made free. The confequence of our being under the power of the Spirit is, that we walk not after the fleft, but ofin the Spirit, ver. 4.; that we mind the things of the Spirit, M. 5.; that we mortify the deeds of the body, ver. 13.; that We are the fons of God, ver. 14.; that we cry, Abba, Father ! RT. 15. Thefe are the fruits of the Spirit. Now, to walk ofter the Spirit, and to do the deeds of the Spirit, is to walk according to our own mind and reason; for reason approres the things of God, and the things of the Spirit are the things of God. To cry, Abba, Father, proceeds from a lettled and undifturbed mind,-from filial duty and reretence. This therefore we owe to the Spirit; for before, bowever our minds consented to his laws, yet still we were tenners, and confcience stood between us and our Father; but we could not approach without fear and trembling, on minds still representing him to us rather as an injured Lord, than as a tender Father. But fince the power of the Spirit has stilled the horrid contest that was within us between reason and fin, and that we both love and obey hm,-we now no longer fear his prefence; but like childen longing for the return of a kind Father, we run out to embrace him, with words of friendship and affection in our mouths, crying, Abba, Father. - With the mind, he had hid before, I ferve the law of God, chap. vii. 25. "And "now," fays he, " by the fame Spirit you obey the fame "law; and the Spirit of God, and your spirit, agree to give " sou the utmost affurance of being the children of God. "You are no longer in the fad condition before described; " the mind leaning one way, and the fleft another; fo that "You defired to do one thing, yet did the contrary, and Was always reftlefs and uncafy; rebuked within, and "confirained without : for the Spirit by which you are "now ruled, confents to your mind, and is bent to perform Vol. II,

"the fame things which the mind approves; whence you "may have the greateft confidence towards God: for "what plainer figns can you have of a good fon and fer-"vant, than to know that he loves the law of his Father, and obcys it? Love the law, indeed, you did before in "your awakened ftate; but cbey it you could not: but "now by the Spirit you obey it, and have the greateft "fatisfaction, both from within and without, that you are the children of God." This may fuffice to fhew the Apoftle's meaning, and to explain "the nature of the "evidence which each Spirit gives." See Bifhop Sherlocke, Archbifhop Sharpe, the Inferences, and the RE-FLECTIONS.

Ver. 17. If so be that we suffer, &c.] Observe how prudently the Apostle advances to the harsh affair of suffering; he does not mention it, till he had raised their thoughts to the highest object of joy and pleasure;—the happiness and glory of a joint-inheritance with the ever-blessed Son of God:—we are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if we suffer with him, &c. This, with the additional consideration that we suffer with Christ, or as he himself suffered, and that our suffering patiently is the way to be glorified with him, would greatly qualify the transitory afflictions of this world, and dispose them to attend to the other arguments that he had to offer. See 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12. and Locke.

Ver. 18. Revealed] St. Paul fpeaks of this glory here as what needs to be revealed, to give us a right conception of it. It is impossible to have a clear and full comprehension of it, till we taste it.

Ver. 19-23.] I must think, that it was quite to the Apostle's purpose in this place to point at the common calamities of mankind. Christians ought not to be uneafy if they are exposed to fufferings on account of religion; for this world is a ftate of fuffering and diftrefs, and all mankind are groaning under various preffures. That the Apostle in these verses does not mean only the Christian world or creation, feems evident ; because first, that even the creature itfelf, or even the very creature fball be delivered, ver. 21. plainly points at fomething different from the body of Christians. Secondly, the children of God are diffinguished from the creature, or the creation, ver. 21. but the children of God are real Chriftians, ver. 16. therefore the creature cannot mean real Christians. Thirdly, he fays ver. 20. that the creature was made subject to vanity, not wilfully, but through him who hath fubjected the fame in hope. Now we know of no other fubjecting the creature to vanity, than that Gen. iii. 19. which includes all mankind. Fourthly, Ilaoa n xliois, (ver. 22.) the whole creation, must furely furely comprehend all mankind, as it does Mark, xvi. 15. Col. i. 23. and that we have no fufficient ground to extend it farther than mankind,-namely, to the brute creation, -will appear, if we confider, first, that the fame phrafe is used to fignify all mankind in the two places just referred to; fecondly, no creature in this world, but man, could be fubject to vanity, wilfully or not wilfully; thirdly, whether we understand the 23d verse of Christians in general, or of the Apostles only, we cannot well suppose that St. Paul would bring either into a comparison with brutes; -and not only they, but we alfo, &c. We may properly render show throughout this paffage by creation, as it is 'Aπonagadonía, rendered earnest expectation, figver. 22. nifies a folicitous, anxious waiting for a thing, and fo includes a vehement desire. But it may be asked, How can all mankind defire and wait for the revelation of the fons of God, or the glory that shall be revealed in them, when but a fmall part of mankind know any thing of it? To this it may be answered, We know, as the Apostle observes, ver. 22. that all mankind do groan under the afflictions and pressures of this present world, sensible of its imperfection and vanity, and confequently must defire fomething better; and although they may not know what that better thing is, yet the Apostle knew it. And he speaks according to his own knowledge, and not theirs. He affirms of his own knowledge, what their expectation would iffue in: their earnest waiting was in fact, however they might be ignorant of it, waiting for the manifestation of the fons of God: and he proves this, ver. 20, 21. as supposing the Christians to whom he wrote might be ignorant of it. Which flews that when he affirms that the earnest desires of mankind, after a release from the fufferings of this life, are a waiting for the manifestation of the fons of God, he speaks, not of what heathens, or even Christians, understood or believed, but of what he kimfelf knew and believed to be true. Dr. Whitby upon this place justly observes, that in the facred dialect, desire and expectation are ascribed to creatures, in reference to things that they want, and which tend to their advantage, though they explicitly knew nothing of them. Thus the Meffiah, before he came, is called, The defire of all nations, Hag. ii. 7. Mr. Locke remarks, that 'Αποκάλυψιν Two viw, is revelation of the fons, that is, to the fons : the genitive cafe in the New Testament often denotes the object. The word 'Aπona λυψις, fhould certainly be rendered revelation, as the word a monahup Sival is rendered revealed in the foregoing verfe. See Locke, Whitby, Doddridge, and Grove.

Ver. 20. Not willingly] That is, "Not by any wilful \* act of their own." The word Exist feems here to have the fame fignification as insignals, wilfully, Heb. x. 26. or as the word  $\Im interaction 2$ , 2 Pet. iii. 5.—This they are wilfully ignorant of. What we render lie not in wait, Exod. xxi. 13. the LXX render vx  $ix \tilde{u}v$ , not wilfully, in oppoficion to prefumptuoufly in the next verfe. Thus the word ix coradenotes a criminal choice, and in a high fenfe too;namely a transforeffion fubjecting to wrath: "The crea-" ture was made fubject to vanity, not by its own crimi-" nal choice,—not by finning after the fimilitude of"Adam's transforeffion, ch. v. 14.,—but by reafon of, or" through bim who fubjected the fame in hope."

Ver. 21. Because the creature itself, &c.] The creature, or creation itself, is all mankind, whether Christians or not. But this mult be understood of mankind as well as of Christians, only so far as by answering the ends of their creation by the fecret influences of the Spirit of God, they are prepared for immortality. The creature means mankind, considered as what they ought to be, according to the laws of their creation or rather according to the covenant of grace. See Gal. vi. 8.

Ver. 22. The whole creation groaneth ] How David groaned under the vanity of this life, may be feen Pf. lxxxix. 47, 48. which complaint may be met with in fome fenfe and in fome degree in every man's mouth : fo that even those who have not the first fruits of the Spirit, have uneafy longings after immortality, or of fomething to make them happy, which this world cannot afford them. It is true, that to be in pangs like a woman in travail, the metaphor here used, fometimes only fignifies being in great diffrefs, where there is no reference to any expected birth; but it feems very probable, that the Apostle, in these metaphors, here alludes to what he had been before faying, ver. 14, 17, 19, 21. In all which places he defcribes real believers as the children of God; beautifully reprefenting at the fame time the fad condition of those, who, while they had faculties capable through divine grace for flanding in fuch a relation to God as his children, were loft in darknefs and vanity, while ignorant of God, and the way of falvation; during which time they were even pained by the capability of their nature, it having no fuitable object to act upon. The reader may observe a well-adjusted gradation from ver. 19. The world feems to wait and call, and groan for the fpreading of the Gospel; and those among whom it prevails, are still in travail, as it were, with the hope and defire of a yet more exalted state after the refurrection, ver. 23. See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 23. And not only they, but ourfelves also] That this is meant of the Apostles, appears plain from the following reasons: First, But ourfelves also,—even we ourfelves,—are very for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

24 'For we are faved by hope: but hope that is feen is not hope: for what a man feeth, why doth he yet hope for ?

25 But if we hope for that we fee not, then do we with patience wait for it.

26 Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for "we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but "the Spirit itfelf maketh interceffion for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

ren emphatical expressions, and direct our thoughts to home perfons of diffinction and eminence. Secondly, there will be little or no argument in this verse, if it be underfixed of the whole body of Christians: it will be only telling them what is fupposed to be already known,---that they were in a flate of affliction, waiting for the future glory. Built is a good argument, if understood of the Apostles, and properly enough advanced after a general furvey of the futerings of mankind : " Look at the world in common, "-you fee all labouring under forrows, and in afflictions: " look at us Apostles, who are most fignally diftinguished "brite pledges of God's love, the miraculous gifts of the "Spirit; even we are not exempted from fufferings; but "it is the will of God that we too should remain under " the preffures of life, and in a state of expectation." Set 2 Cor. iv. 17. v. 2. There is an allusion, in the latter part of this verfe, to the two kinds of adoption among the Romans; the first of which was private; the second public, in the forum, when the adopted perfon was foknnly declared and avowed to be the fon of the adopter. Compare Luke xx. 36. The redemption of our bodies means, their final deliverance from the power of the grave at the general refurrection. See Luke xxi. 28. Ephef. i. 14. Hed. ii. 35. For 25. But if we hope for that we fee not, &c.] What the Apolle fays here of hope, is to thew them, that the graning of the children of God, before fpoken of, was not the training of impatience, but fuch as that wherewith the Spirit of God maketh intercetion for us.

Ver. 26. Likewije the Spirit, &c.] 'Ωσαύτως, likewije, always in the New Teftament fignifies in like manner, or agreeably to what is mentioned juft before. Here it may be rendered, agreeably to this, namely, to our being faved h here [or in a courfe of patient expectation, mentioned in the former verfe]. Dr. Doddridge renders συναντιλαμfanca, lendeth his helping hand. It literally fignifies " the "action of one who helps another to raife or bear a bur-"den, by taking hold of it on one fide, and lifting it or " bearing it with him :" and 10 it feems to intimate the obligation on us, to exert our little strength, feeble as it is, in concurrence with this Almighty aid.

Ver. 27. Knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit] That is, " has a particular regard to, approves, favours, and is " pleafed with." The phrase here, Opovyua tou wieuwar (;), the mind of the Spirit, is the very fame that is used ver. 6. and expresses not merely the meaning, but the temper and disposition of the mind, as under the influence of the divine Spirit, purfuing and breathing after fuch bleffings as fuit its rational and immortal nature. The word ivruy X2vw is also used ver. 34. Christ maketh intercession for us; and again ch. xi. 2. Heb. vii. 25. and in Acts, xxv. 24. where it is rendered have dealt with me. These are all the places where we find it in the New Testament. The proper import of the word feems to be, to meet and treat with a perfon, either for or against another; and so it may fignify in general to negociate, manage, or transact an affair on the behalf of others, not only by intercefficn, entreaty, or fupplication in their favour, but in any other way as the cafe may require. So our Lord έντυγχάνει υπίε ήμων, maketh intercession for us, by negociating and managing, as the friend and agent of his faithful people, all the affairs pertaining to their falvation; and he is able to fave us to the uttermost, because he ever liveth, and has all power given him in heaven and earth, as our great Agent, to fecure to his faithful faints all the glorious things promifed in the Gofpel. And the Spirit of God makes interceffion for the Taints, not by offering Jupplications to God in their behalf, but by directing and qualifying their fupplications in a proper manner by his agony and influences upon their hearts; which is the peculiar work and office of the Holy Spirit. How the Spirit qualifies the fecret groanings of true Christians, under the preflures of life, may be seen 2 Cor. v. 2-5. The Spirit directs and qualifies the secret defires of the faints after immortality, nara Oedu, according or agreeably to the will of God; therefore God approves the mind of the Spirit, or the dispositions which we gain through the influence and infpiration of the Spirit; and thus the love of God is fled abroad in our hearts, and affured to our hearts by the Holy Spirit; 2 Cor. i. 21, 22. feventh argument advanced by the Apostle to reconcile Chriftians to fufferings : "Whatever befals us, fuppofing " we love God, certainly concurs and tends to complete " our falvation." The Apostle never once uses the word xAntois, called or invited, in his arguments, ch. ii. iii. iv. v. It is a metaphor taken from inviting guefts, or making them welcome to a feaft; and the word and fentiment would be well underftood, if we rendered it invite, rather than call: for to call is never, in English, applied peculiarly to the affair of acquainting a perfon that his company is defired at an entertainment; but either to bid or invite. The verb naltew is translated by bid, Matth. xxii. 3, 4. Luke, xiv. 7, 8, 10. Bid, however, feems to be almost antiquated, and invite is the common mode of expression; though as the word call has been fo long in use, one cannot well lay it afide. They are here faid to be called or invited of God, according to his purpole, which the Apostle gives as a proof that all things in our prefent fituation are either appointed, or fhall be overruled for the happiness of them that love God: thus the claufe is to be underftood, and thus it is an argument to prove, that all things, how afflictive foever, shall work together for our welfare; but then it must be taken in connection with our loving of God and obedience to him. The Apoftle does not pretend to prove that all things shall concur to the everlasting happines of all that are called or invited; (for many are called, who at last shall not be among the chosen, Matth. xx. 16) but only those of the called who perfeveringly love God. Our calling or invitation, thus qualified, is the ground of his argument, which he profecutes and completes in the two next verfes; and this calling he takes for granted, as a thing evident and unqueflionable among all professed Christians. But it may be asked, "How is it thus evident that we are " called ?"-The answer is,-" From our being in the " visible church, and professing the faith of the Gospel:" for always, in the apottolic writings, all that are in this visible church and profellion, are numbered among the called or invited. As for effectual calling, it is a diffinction which divines have invented, without any warrant from Scripture. Our calling therefore is confidered by the Apostle in the nature of a felf-evident proposition, which nobody doubts or denies, and which indeed no Chriftian ought to doubt, or call in question. See Ephef. iii. 1-11.

Ver. 29. For whom he did foreknow] The particle öri is connective; and, this verfe giving the reafon or confirmation of what was fpoken in the former, it feems neceffury to interpret it thus: Whom he foreknew to be perfons called according to his purpofe, and therefore qualified for this adoption. It therefore is to be obferved, that the words know and foreknow, in the Scripture language, import an affectionate knowledge joined with approbation and affection. So Matt. vii. 23. John, x. 14. 1 Cor. viii. 3. If any man love God, the fame is known of him. Gal. iv. 8. But now after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God. 2 Tim. ii. 19. The Lord knoweth them that are his.

He also did predestinate] Or, rather, He before appointed, to be conformed to the image of his Son, that, as they had borne the image of the earthly Adam, they might also bear the image of the heavenly, I Cor. xv. 49. having glorious bodies like to his, fays Theodoret: and this agrees well with the fcope and fubject-matter of this chapter, and with the following words, That he might be the first-born, or chief, among many brethren; for as here these brethren are faid to be co-heirs with him, the Elder-brother, ver. 17. fo elsewhere he is ftyled, The First-born from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-cminence, or that they might be changed into his image by the participation of the fame Spirit.

Ver. 30. Them he alfo glorified ] Thefe words fhould be rendered, Them he hath alfo glorified, by giving them that Spirit who is the earnest of the glory of the faithful, they being bleffed with all fpiritual bleffings in heavenly places in Chrift, Ephel. i. 3. they being quickened together with Chrift, and raifed up together, and made to fit t gether in heavenly places in Chrift Jefus, Eph. ii. 5, 6. And by reafon of this Holy Spirit given, with the preaching of the Gofpel, the miniftration of justification is faid to be in glory, as being the ministration of the Spirit of God, 2 Cor. iii. 8-11. and we, by participation of this Spirit of the Lord, are faid, not only to behold the glory of the Lord, but also to be changed into the fame image from glory to glory, ver. 18. of the same chapter. In favour of this interpretation let it be noted, that when the Apofile speaks of our final glorification, he still speaks of it as of a thing future, ver. 17, 18, 21. whereas he here fpeaks of glorification as of a thing past, faying ushom he hath justified, them he bath alfo glorified. So when a miracle was wrought in Christ's name,

Va. 33, 34. Who fball lay any thing to the charge, &c.7 Here it is well observed by Mr. Lowth, that these words being read by way of interrogation, as is ver. 35. carry a ful and clear fense thus: Who shall plead against God's ekd? Shall the God who juftifies them do it? Who is he that condemns them ? Can it be that Christ who died for them ?

Ver. 35-38. Who shall separate us from the love of (hifi &c.] 'To answer the argument hence urged, to thew that man cannot fall from grace, because if once they trey loved God, they cannot cease to do so in principle, ktit be noted : Finft, That this inquiry is not, who shall figurate us from the love with which we love God; but, who shall separate us who truly love God, and testify that love by our obedience to his commands, John, xv. 10. and by our patient fufferings for his fake, ver. 36, 37. from his affections towards us.

The Apostle therefore only intimates, that fuch perfons continuing in the love of God, shall be preferved by him from, or be enabled to overcome, the temptations here mentioned; and be fo supported by his grace and Holy Spirit as to be able to triumph over them. But he does not fay, that the love of no believer shall was cold, Matt. skiv. 12. Were there no fear of this, why does Chilt exhort his disciples to continue in his love, John,  $\mathbf{x}$  9? and his Apoftles exhort others to keep them felves intelive of God, Jude, 21. to continue in the grace of God, Ady in. 43. to look diligently to it, that they fail not of, or that they fall not from (for fo it may be rendered) the graut God, Heb. xii. 15. Note.

Security, That the Apostle does not fay, that nothing hall leparate true believers from the love of God or Chrift ; but only fays winesopan, I am perfuaded that nothing will doit; nor have I any caufe to fear, that any of thefe temporal fufferings, or enjoyments, will shake their steadhinels, in expectation of those eternal and incltimable bleffings, which God has promifed, and Chrift has purchaled for his church; these light afflictions being not worthy Whe compared with the glory that Mall be revealed, ver. 18. and all co-operating for the good of them that love God, ver. 28. -that as to the weakness of the flesh, which rendered these temptations fo dreadful, and gave ftrength to them, they lived in hopes of a glorious rederuption of the body from them, ter. 23.; and while they groan under them, they have the allilance of the Spirit of God, to strengthen them, and to help them to bear their infirmities; a powerful and loving Father to be with them, a Saviour exalted to the right hand of God to intercede for them, vor. 33, 34. Upon all which accounts he might well fay, I am perfuaded that none of these things shall separate you from the love of God which is in Chrift Jefus. The Apoftle does not by thefe words intend to teach believers, that they could not be fhaken by thefe things; for this would have contradicted the drift of his Epiftles, in which he offers fo many arguments and motives to prevent the effect of those temptations, and does fo often express his fears, left they should be shaken with them; and be fo far tempted by them, as to be moved away from the hope of the Gofpel, Col. i. 23. and render his labour vain, t Theff. iii. 5. He only intends to fay, that upon thefe confiderations, they had fuch great inducements to perfevere, and continue in the love of God, as made him ftrongly perfuaded that they would do fo.

Ver. 37. We are more than conquerors] For we not only bear, but glory in tribulations, Rom. v. 3. We are in deaths often, but still delivered from death, 2 Cor. i. 10. And as the fufferings of Christ abound toward us, fo doth our confolation, under them, abound through Chrift.

Inferences .- The matter fet before us in this chapter calls for and deferves very ferious examination. Inquiry fhould determine us, whether we do on the whole walk after the flefb or the fpirit, ver. 1. If we are fincere in this inquiry, it will make us guard at the fame time more and more against that carnal mind, which is enmity against God; and cannot be fubject to his law, nor leave room for us to please God, while it prefides and governs in us, ver. 7. We ihall often reflect upon that death, which would be the confequence of our living after the fligh, ver. 13.; and never conceive of ourfelves upon any occasion as perfons who, in confequence of fomething that has already paffed, have found out a way to break the connection here established. and in the nature of things effentially eftablished, between a carnal mind and death. May our fpirits be more and more enlivened by that vital union with a Redcemer, which may give us a part in his merits, and in the life it has fecured for all faithful fouls! and may the efficacy of his Spirit to raife our fouls from a death of fin to a life of holinefs, be in us a bleffed earneft, that he will complete the work, and at length quicken our mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in us !

Well may we rejoice in privileges like these before us, (ver. 1.4-17.) and fland aftonished to think that they should be bestowed on any of the children of men !- That any any of them should be beirs of God, and joint beirs with Chrift;-the adopted children of a heavenly Father, and prepared by the communications of his Spirit for an inheritance fo glorious and fo dearly purchased !-That any flould be fitted and enabled to approach him with that endearing appellation, Abba, Father, in their mouths ! о. that every one of us may know by experience, which alone can teach us, how fweet it is to the foul! If we would fecure this witnefs, let us fee to it, that we be obediently led by the Spirit of God; for that Spirit is not, where he does not effectually govern; and if any man have not that Spirit of Christ, he is none of Christ's disciples. All the children of God are in a flate of grace; and the evidence of the Spirit of God, and our own spirit, may make us certain, where they concur as they ought to do, that we are the children of God. If our hearts condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God, is St. John's rule; and it comprehends both the evidences before explained : (fee on ver. 16.)

For ever adored be the divine goodnefs in fending down his Spirit on fuch finful creatures, to help our infirmities in the profecution of this great falvation, to implant and excite graces in our hearts, to be a fource of prefent delights, and of eternal happinefs! May we continually feel him helping those infirmities, and fo improving our joy in the Lord, that all our devotions may be animated facrifices!

When we confider the flate of those parts of the world, in which Chriftianity is unknown, or of those among whom it is in general a mere empty form; when we confider the vanity to which that thare of God's creation is fubject, let it move our compassion, and excite our prayers, that the state of glorious liberty, into which God has already brought fuch as by faith in Chrift are his children, may become more cover the earth, as the waters cover the channel of the feas! May his divine grace give a birth to that grand event, in the expectation whereof nature feems in pangs; fuch a birth, that nations might be born in a day : and where it has taken effect, may it produce a more abundant growth, and more happy increase !.

REFLECTIONS .- ift, This chapter opens with a most reviving view of the privileges and experience of every Christian believer, as a contrast to the state of the merely awakened foul, defcribed in the former chapter. There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Chrift Jelus; being united to him by faith, as their furety and head, the fentence of the law is reverfed. They have fled for refuge to the blood of a Redeemer, and enjoy the ineffimable bleffing of his pardoning love. And they are to be known by their daily conversation, as those who walk not after the flesh, under the dominion of their fallen nature and corrupt affections; but after the Spirit, directed by God's word as their rule, and under the teachings, guidance, and influence of the Holy Ghoft, who has implanted a new and divine nature in them. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jefus, even that Gospel which, where truly embraced, operates most powerfully in constraining the conficience by love unto obedience through the quickening influence of the divine Spirit; bath made me free from the law of fin and death, delivering me from the condemning fentence of that law which discovered fin to my confcience, and denounced wrath as the wages due to it; and from the power of corruption, through the grace purchased by the Redeemer's blood. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the fligh ; because of the corruption of our nature it was impossible that, as a covenant of works, any fallen creature could obtain life and falvation by the law, and it neither provided nor admitted any atonement or explation for guilt; Ged fending his own Son in the likenefs of finful flefb, and for fin, condemned fin in the flefb; refcuing the faithful in his infinite grace from the ruin which a broken law, never to be repaired, threatened; and this in a way fo transcendantly glorious, even by the incarnation of his cooqual Son, who took the human nature, with all its finlefs infirmities, and ftood in the finner's ftead; and laying upon him the iniquities of us all, God teftified, in the fufferings of his own Son for the fin we had committed, the abhorrence that he had of fin, and exacted the punifhment due to it from the incarnate Saviour; that the righteoufnefs of the law might be fulfilled in us, who, in virtue of our union with Jefus as our head, walk not after the flefb, but after the Spirit : for the Christian believers are not only brought into a new state, but are made partakers of a new and divine nature, which now influences and actuates them in all their conversation. For they that are after the flefb, under the dominion of their native corruption, do mind the things of the fleft; relifh, delight in, and purfue the things that are pleafing only to the carnal mind and fenfual appetite: but they that are after the Spirit, partakers of his grace, through union with Jefus the living head of vital influence to true believers; they peoveous, understand, are attached to, delight in, and follow the things of the Spirit; both the doctrines that he reveals, the bleffings-that he beftows, and the fervices which he enjoins, and for which he enables them. For to be carnally minded, to live under the dominion of the fallen fpirit, governed by lawlefs paffions and fenfual appetites, is death; is a prefent state of spiritual death, and must.end in death eternal; but to be spiritually minded, renewed by the Holy Ghost, under the habitual influence of his grace, and fupremely and abidingly attached to and engaged in the purfuit of fpiritual objects; this is life and peace; it is the proof of the divine life begun in the foul; peace of confeience is the prefent happy fruit which it produces, and in the faithful foul will iffue in eternal peace and bleffednefs. Becaufe the carnal mind is enmity against God, and stands in direct opposition to his perfections and authority, abhorring the government of his providence, and hating the reftraints and fanctions of his law: for it is not subject to the law of G.d., neither indeed can be. There is an absolute impossibility of fuch a nature's being brought into conformity to the holy will of

of God; and till a new heart and right fpirit be given from above, the enmity must remain inveterate and unfublued. So then they that are in the flefb cannot pleafe God; will they continue in this flate, every thing that they do is defield. So defperate is our condition by nature, till the almighty grace of Cod works the bleffed change in the proving and believing foul, enabling fuch to walk with and picate God.

adly, With comfort the Apoftle addresses the believers at Rome, confident of their intereft in the bleffed Spirit of all grace. But ye are not in the fleft, under the dominion and influence of the carnal mind; but in the Spirit, being regenerate and born again ; if fo be, or feeing that, the Spint of God dwelleth in you, as in his peculiar temple, ning up his abode in your hearts, manifesting there his prefence and love, and thewing his powerful agency. But in, if any man have not the Spirit of Chrift, who is the very God from whom, as from the Father, that one Spirit proceeds, and not be renewed by his grace, and under his guidance and influence, be is none of his: whatever his protefions may be, he does not belong to Chrift as a member of his body mystical; he is not a child of his family, nor a fubject of his kingdom, and must be eternally difowned by him and feparated from him, if he die in this unregenerate state. And, on the other hand, if Urif kein you, by his Spirit dwelling in your hearts, the keyindeed is dead becaufe of fin, and must lie down in the dult; but the fpirit, the immortal part, is life, becaufe of nghteufnifi, raifed from spiritual death in virtue of the Redeemer's infinite merit. But if the Spirit of him that wid up Jefus from the dead, being one in clience and cooperation with the Father and the Son, (compare 1 Cor. 114 John, v. 28, 29.) and concurring in the work of ring the body of Jesus, dwell in yeu as his temple, he that railed up Christ from the dead, as the pledge of our mutection, and the first-fruits of them that slept, shall taim your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you: ne beins of the faints shall, by the fame indwelling almility power which raifed him, be ranfomed from the gras, and become immortal and glorious, fashioned like W their exalted Head. Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, at to the flefb, to live after the flefb; we have neither obligation nor inducement to follow the cravings of corrupt nature; but, on the contrary, are under every bond of bre and duty to live for God, in the daily and habitual montification of every vile affection: for if ye live after the fift, the flaves of corruption, ye fhall die eternally; but if justrough the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, denying four corrupt affections and fenfual appetites, and through the power of the Spirit be conformed to your crucified Lord, ye fhall live with him in glory everlasting. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, under his conduct, enlightened, directed, and supported by him, they are the fons f G:d, made his children by adoption and grace, and baring in their renewed minds his image and likenefs.

For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, are not under that legal difpensation which brought the conscience into diftress and darkness, exacting an obedience that could not be paid; nor under those horrors which on the first discoveries of your danger in a state of unregeneracy, feized on your fouls: but ye have received the Spirit of adoption: being admitted by God's grace into that high relation of children, he has fent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, producing every childlike disposition of filial love, confidence, and delight in him, whereby we are emboldened to approach him with faith and joy, and to cry, Abba, Father, before him. The Spirit itfelf beareth witnefs with our spirit, fhining upon his own work in our fouls, and fatisfying our confciences that we are the children of God and may take the comfort of that bleffed and honourable relation : and, if children by adoption and grace, then are we heirs, interested in all the bleflings of the new covenant; and heirs of Gid, made fo by his Spirit, and receiving from him conftant divine influences; and joint*heirs with Chrift*, who is the first-born of many brethren; if so be, that we suffer with him, as we must expect to do in his fervice, this being more or lefs the infeparable attendant of it, that all who will live godly in Chrift Jefus must fuffer perfecution; but the iffue will be highly to our advantage, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be alfo glorified together at the great day of his appearing, when he shall bestow the promised crown upon his faithful faints, and before men and angels acknowledge them as his brethren. And fuch a prospect makes all our trials light and easy. For I reckon, xoligoual, on fumming up the account of our lofs and gain, that the fufferings of this prefent time, however acute or continued, are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us ; but, when placed against the glories of eternity, they appear trivial and momentary, and fink unnoticed as the drop into the boundlefs ocean. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the fons of God ; which fome understand of the Gentile world, and particularly the righteous among them, who, in a comparative point of view, had been made fubject to vanity; but now being ourfelves refcued from the bondage of corruption, they earneftly expected, as a woman in travail, the happy time, when, by the more abundant outpouring of the Spirit, a more general conversion should be wrought in the earth, and far greater multitudes of loft fouls be refcued from the dominion of the wicked one, and brought into the glorious liberty of the fons of God. Others suppose that the creature, even the whole creation, wara i show, in general, animate or inanimate, is here by a noble profopopœia introduced, as waiting with eager impatience for that bleffed alteration which the Gofpel will make, when the creatures of God shall be no more abused as they have been, but shall be recovered from their present difordered state, and employed by the tons of God, according to their original defign, to exalt their Maker's glory. For the creature was made made subject to vanity; the very ground being curfed for man's fin, and all the creatures perverted, through the corruption which is in the human nature, from their original defign and use; not willingly, by any choice or tendency of their own, or any fin in them. But by reafon of him who bath subjected the same, and by that fin to which Adam was infligated through the malice of the devil, they were involved in the miferies of his fall: not that they fhould always remain under the dreadful abufes which they fuffer; but they reft in hope that the creature itfelf alfo shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, under which they lie at prefent, into the glorious liberty of the fons of God, restored by them to answer the great end for which they were created. For we know that the whole creation grouneth and travaileth in pain together until now, under the grievous burden of abufes which the creatures fuffer, and longing for deliverance. And not only they, but ourfelves alfo which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, in his prefent fealing, fanctifying, and comforting operations, the earnests of the eternal felicity provided for the faithful in a better world; even we ourfelves, notwithstanding the riches of the grace of which we have been made partakers, yet, groan within ourselves, under the afflictions which still lie heavy upon us till death; waiting for the adoption, when Chrift will publicly own the relation that he bears to his faints before men and angels at the great day; to wir, the redemption of our body, when, triumphant over the grave, the faithful shall reach the fummit of heavenly felicity; their fouls perfected in holinefs, their bodies fashioned like to Christ's glorious body, and their whole man shall together be blest with the fruition of God himself as their everlasling portion. For we are faved by hope; though we are not yet in posseffion of the purchased glory, we hold our title by a strong and divine hope : but hope that is feen is not hope ; when the object is possessed, hope ceases : for what a man feeth, why doth he yet hope for ? But if we hope for that we fee not, expecting fhortly perfect deliverance from all our afflictions; then do we with patience wait for it, perfuaded that the Lord, in his own good time, will fulfil his promifes to all his faithful people, and bring them at last, through all their trials, to the inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, which fadeth not away, referved for them in the heavens. And bleffed and happy are all they who thus wait for him.

the Spirit of our God, quickening, comforting, ftrengthening us, helpeth our infirmities, that we may not fink under our burdens, or be difcouraged by our trials : having implanted in us the graces of hope and patience, he ftill fupports us in the exercise of them, and particularly in our approaches to God in prayer, if we continue to wait upon him; for we know not what to pray for as we ought; ignorant, and knowing not what is best for us; weak, and unable to express our wants aright : but the Spirit itfelf, by his gracious fuggestions, maketh interceffion for us, pouring out a spirit of prayer and fupplication upon our hearts, giving us fuch a fenfe of our wants, and exciting defires after God fo intenfe and affecting, as words cannot express, which can only be breathed forth with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that fearcheth the hearts, the all-feeing God, knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit; though at times our tongue may not form an articulate found in prayer, God regards and will answer these gracious workings of his Spirit in our hearts, becaufe he maketh interreffion for the faints according to the will of God, inclining us always to ask according to the mind and will of God, and engaging us humbly to refign ourfelves, for an anfwer to our prayers, in time, manner, and measure, to his good pleasure. And we know, by the affured promifes of his word, by the experience of all his faints, and by our own, when thus unrefervedly cafting our care upon him, that all things work together for good to them that love God; and however dark, and for the time grievous to flesh and blood, the difpensations of Providence may appear, we are now assured, and the faithful faints of God shall hereafter prove, that the circumstances which feemed most afflictive they could not have done without; and that they efpecially conduced to promote their fpiritual and eternal welfare.

4thly, In the view of what God has done, and he himfelf experienced, the Apostle defies all accusers. What fhall we then fay to thefe things? shall we start back from fufferings when the iffue to the faithful foul is fo glorious? what can we wish or defire more transcendently glorious than these great and precious promises. If God be for us, with infinite wifdom to guide, almighty power to protect, and boundless love to comfort us, who can be against us? what have we to fear from men or devils ? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, of his own good pleafure freely gave him to become incarnate, and laid upon him our iniquities; how shall be not with him alfe

CHAP. IX.

THE Apostle having infinuated, chap. iii. 3. that God would caft off the Jews, becaufe they refused to believe on Jefus, a Jew was there introduced replying, that their rejection would defire the faithfulness of God. To this the Apostle answered, that the faithfuiness of God would be eftablifted, rather than deftroyed, by the rejection of the Jews for their unbelief; becaufe God had expressly declared, Gen. xviii. 19. that Abraham's children were to keep the way of the Lord, in order to their obtaining the promifed bleflings; and thereby infinuated, that if they did not keep the way of the Lord, they would lofe these bleffings, of which their being made the visible church of God was one. This was all the answer the Apostle thought proper to make, in that part of his letter. But the objection being specious, and much infifted on by the unbelieving Jews, he introduced it a fecond time in this place, that he might reply to it more fully.

His anfwer the Apoftle introduced with a folemn affeveration, that he felt the bittereft grief when he confidered the induration and rejection of the Jewish nation, and the many miferies that were coming on them, ver. 1, 2... Infomuch that he could have willed to be cut off from the visible church of Chrift on earth, by excommunication and even by death, if it could have prevented thefe evils, ver. 3....For he loved the Jews as his kinfmen, refpected them as the ancient people of God, and thought highly of their privileges, which he enumerated on this occation as just matter of glorying to them, ver. 4, 5..... Having therefore fuch a love and respect for his brethren, they could not fuspect that, in speaking of their rejection, he was moved either by ill-will or envy.

Having thus endeavoured to gain the good opinion of the Jews, the Apostle proceeded to give a full answer to the objection above mentioned. He told them, that the promifes in the covenant would not fall to the ground, though the whole natural feed of Abraham fhould be caft off. For, faid he, all who are defeended of lirael according to the flefh, meaning the twelve tribes, thefe are not the whole Ifrael of God. There is a fpiritual Ifrael, to whom likewife the promifes belong, ver. 6 .- To thew this, he observed, that because perfons are the feed of Abraham according to the flefh, it does not follow that they are the children of Abraham, to whom the promities in their first and literal meaning were made. His children according to the flefh, who are heirs of the promifes in their first meaning, were limited to Jiane, by the declaration, In Ijaac

Ifaac shall thy feed be called, ver. 7 .- That is, Abraham's children according to the flesh are not all of them heirs of Canaan; but only those who were given to him by promile, are counted to him for feed, ver. 8.-Now the promife by which they were given to Abraham for feed, was this, Lo, Sarah fball have a fun, ver. 9.

The limitation of the natural feed to the children of promise the Apostle has mentioned, without applying it to the fpiritual feed, as his argument feemed to require. The reason was, that his readers could easily make the application in the following manner: Since, in the covenant with Abraham, those only of his natural progeny are counted to him for feed, and made heirs of Canaan, who were given to him by promife, namely, Ifaac and his defcendants by Jacob, and fince by this limitation all his other children according to the flesh were excluded from being the children of God, and heirs of the promifes in their first and literal meaning, it follows by parity of reason that none of the children of Abraham, not even his descendants by Isaac, are the children of God, and heirs of the promifes, in their fecondary, fpiritual, and higheft meaning, but those who were given to Abraham by the promise, A father of many nations I have constituted thee. These are believers of all nations and ages; as is plain from what the Apoftle told the Galatians, chap. iv. 28. We, brethren, as Ifaac was, are the children of promife. And because believers are counted to Abraham for seed, in respect of their faith, they are called his feed by faith, Rom. iv. 16. For by partaking of his difpolitions, they are more really bis children, than those whose only relation to him is by natural defcent.-Thus it appears, that Abraham's natural descendants by Isaac are not the whole of his seed, who are the heirs of the promifes. He has a feed also by faith, who are far more numerous than his natural feed by Isaac. And, they being the feed principally fpoken of in the covenant, if the promifes are fulfilled to them, the faithfulnefs of God will not be deftroyed, though the whole of the natural feed should be rejected for their unbelief.

These things the Jews might easily have understood. Nevertheless, privileges conferred on them by a covenant with their progenitor, and which were folemnly confirmed to them at Sinai, they perfuaded themfelves could not be taken from them, and given to the Gentiles, without deftroying God's veracity. But, to fhew them their error, the Apostle put them in mind, that as Isaac was chosen to be the root of the people of God, in preference to Ishmael, by mere favour; so afterwards Jacob had that honour conferred on him, in preference to Efau, by a gratuitous election before Jacob and Elau were born. As therefore the Jews, Jacob's posterity, were the church of God by mere favour, God might, without any injustice to them, or violation of his covenant with Abraham, admit the Gentiles into his church at any time he pleafed, ver. 10-13.

To enforce this argument, the Apostle observed, that in preferring Jacob the younger brother, to Elau the elder. God neither acted unjustly towards Esau, nor violated his promise to Abraham, because he might bestow his favours on whom he pleased, ver. 14. ;—as appears from what he faid to Mofes, when he forgave the Ifraelites their fin refpecting the golden calf: I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, &c. : for this implies, that, as in pardoning national fins, fo alfo in conferring national favours, God acts according to his own good pleafure, ver. 15 .- So then, it did not depend on Ifaac, who willed, to make Efau the heir of the promifes, by giving him the bleffing; nor on Efau, who ran to bring venifon, that his father might eat and blefs him; but on the good pleafure of God, who willed to confer that honour on Jacob, preferably to Efau, ver. 16.—He might therefore, without any injustice, admit 7.1 the believing Gentiles to fhare with the Jews, in those privileges which he had gratuitoufly bestowed on the Χ. descendants of Jacob, in preference to those of Esau. 15.0

But the Apostle, in his discourses to the Jews, had on different occasions carried this matter farther, and had declared to them that they were to be deprived of their privileges, and driven out of Canaan, for their fin in crucifying Jelus of Nazareth. To this it feems they replied, 222 that the unbelief, and even the rebellion of their fathers, had not been to punished; and inferred that, although the 777 ( present generation, in crucifying Jefus, had really disobeyed È .... God, it was not to be thought that he would now caft off and destroy his people on that account. In answer, the Apostle told them that, in punishing nations, God exercises the fame fovereignty as in conferring favours. Of the wicked nations which deferve to be punished, he chooses 2.2 fuch as it pleafes him to make examples of; and he defers punishing them, until the measure of their iniquity is full, that their punifhment may be the more confpicuous. This appears from God's words to Pharaoh : I have upheld thee and thy people hitherto, that, the measure of your iniquity, as a nation, becoming full, I might fhew my power and justice in punishing you the more severely, ver. 18.-If so, God's upholding the Jews fo long was no proof that he would not at length cast them away, and drive them out of Canaan, for their fin in crucifying the Christ.-But thou wilt reply, fince God hath determined to deftroy the Jewish nation for its wickedness, why has he not done it ere now, and thereby put an end to his still finding fault with them, on account of their repeated rebellions, to which his fparing them to long has given occasion: for who hath relifted his will? ver. 19.-To this the Apostle answers, Who art thou that presumest to find fault with God's government of the world ? Shall the thing formed fay to him that formed it, Why haft thou made me thus? ver. 20.—Hath not the potter power over the clay? &c. ver. 21.—But, faid he, not to reft my answer wholly on the fovereignty of God, what can be faid against God's forbearing for so long a time to destroy the Jewish nation, if it was done to shew more fully his displeasure against the

CHAP. IX.

I hall finish this illustration with two remarks. The in is, that in discoursing of the election of the Jews to be the people of God, and of their degradation from that high honour, the Apostle has established such general principles, us afford a complete answer to all the objections which deals have raifed against revelation, on account of its want of universality. They affirm, that if the ancient metations, of which the Jews are faid to have been the teepers, had been from God, the knowledge of them would not have been confined to an inconfiderable nation, pent mina corner of the earth, but would have been univerfally spread. In like manner they affert, that if the Chriftim religion were from God, it would long ago have been bellowed on all mankind. To thefe, and every objection of the like nature, the Apostle has taught us to reply, that God has an indifputable right to bestow his favours on whom he pleases. And therefore, without unrighteousness, he may withhold the benefit of revelation from whom he will, fince he was under no obligation to bestow it on any; just 25, in the distribution of his temporal favours, he beflows on fome a more happy country and climate, or a better bodily constitution, or greater natural talents, or a better education, than on others. And if deifts aik, Why God, in the distribution of his fpiritual favours, has preterred one nation or perfon before another, the Apostle bids us answer, Shall the thing formed fay to him that formed t, Why haft thou made me thus ? Hath not the potter power and another to diffeonour? 'The very fame right which entitled God to make fome of his creatures angels, and fome of them men, entitled him to place men in the endlefsly various fituations in which we fee them. Nor can those who feem to be most unkindly treated, complain of the want of revelation or of any other advantage, which God has thought fit to withhold from them; fince at the laft day none shall be condemned for the want of these things : and in judging men, due regard will be had to the circumstances of each; fo that the fentences passed, will all be according to truth, as the Apostle has taught in the fecond chapter. Wherefore fince men may be faved, who have not enjoyed revelation, the giving or the withholding of that benefit is to be confidered, not as an appointing of men either to falvation or damnation, but merely as a placing them in more or lefs advantageous circumstances of trial.-To conclude, God has been pleafed, in many inftances, to make the reasons of his conduct incomprehenfible to us, on purpose to teach us humility. At the fame time, from what we know, we may believe, that however unfearchable God's judgments are, and his ways past finding out, they are full of wildom and goodness. We ought therefore to change our doubts into adoration, and fhould join the Apostle in crying out, O the depth of the riches, both of the wifdom and of the knowledge of God ! chap. xi. 33.

Ver. 1. I fay the truth in Christ, &c.] The Apostle has proved by three special arguments, that the grace or favour of God in the Gospel extends to the Gentiles, as well as the Jews: this he has done in the first five chapters; in the three next, he has fhewn the obligations which the Gospel lays upon Christians, both Gentile and Jewish, to a life of virtue and holines; and lastly, the certainty of their falvation, in cafe they love God, and live not after the flefb, but after the Spirit. Now let it be well observed, that hitherto the Apoftle has confidered our being taken into the kingdom of God, and interested in the bleffings of the covenant of grace, abfolutely, or in itfelf, as it is the effect of grace, free to all who believe, whether Jews or Gentiles, in oppolition to the merit of any works, or of conformity to any law whatever; and therefore hitherto he has pleaded and proved, that the Gentiles, by faith, have a good title to the bleffings of God's covenant; and that the Jews themfelves can have an interest in those blessings no other way than by faith. He has not yet confidered the Jews as fet alide, or rejected from the Messiah's kingdom, (except in a glance, and only by-the-bye,) but as having the fame way opened to them to the Christian church under the kingdom of the Meffiah, as the believing Gentiles, and as under a poffibility of continuing still in the visible church; and therefore he has only argued, that they ought not to exclude the Gentiles, but allow them to be fharers in the mercies of God under the reign of the Meffiah. Hitherto his language has been, "Why may not they be admitted "as well as you?" And therefore he has hitherto treated the fubject (the reception of the Gentiles into the church) without mentioning their admiffion under the name and notion of CALLING or inviting; which, in the fense of all 02 mankind,

g For this is the word of promile, 'At this but the children of the promife are counted time will I come, and Sarah shall have a fon.

. Gen. 18. 10, 14. Heb. 11. 11, 12.

mankind, is understood to be a relative term; for whenever we hear of inviting to a feaft, wedding, &c. it immediately gives us this idea, —that only fome are admitted to it, while others are paifed by, or left. Nor has he hitherto made any mention of cleat or election, chafen or choice, which also supposes that fome are taken, while others are left or rejected, in respect to the new dispensation.

But now in this chapter, and the two following, the Apostle writes in a different style, and confiders our reception into the kingdom of the Meffiah, under the relative notion of calling or invitation, and of election or choice; which fhews, that he now views the two parties, Jews and Gentiles, in a light different from that in which he had hitherto placed them, Now he regards the Gentiles as invited into the peculiar kingdom of the Meflinh, as chofen to be his peculiar people, and the Jews as left out, and rejected from this glorious privilege : for though the Jews were free to embrace the Golpel, as well as the Gentiles, yet he knew, by the Spirit of prophefy, that as the main body of them in fact rejected Chrift and the Gofpel, fo they would in fact be quite unchurched and cast out of the visible kingdom of God,-not only by their own unbelief, but allo by the just judgment of God; in the total overthrow of their polity, the destruction of their temple, their expulsion out of the land of Canaan, and difperfion over the face of the whole earth. Thus he knew they would be accurfed, or anathematized from Chrift in this national fenfe, and reduced to a level with the common or heathen nations of the world; and the event has proved him to be a true prophet. It is observable, that agreeably to his delicate manner of writing, and to his nice and tender treatment of his countrymen, he never mentions their rejection,-a fubject extremely painful to his thoughts,-otherwife than in a with that he himfelf were accurfed from Chrift for them, or to prevent their being accuried from Chritt ;---till he comes to the eleventh chapter, where he has much to fay in their favour; even confidered as at present rejected. But it is very evident that his arguments in this chapter fland upon a fuppofition, that the main body of the Jewish nation would be cast out of the vilible kingdom of God. For which reafon, in this and the two following chapters he confiders the reception of any people into the kingdom of the Melliah, under the relative notion of inviting and choosing.

From the latter part of the foregoing chapter we may observe, that St. Paul thought our calling or being invited into the kingdom of the Mcfligh a matter of great importance. For the unbelieving Jews levelled all their artillery against our being called or invited into the pecu-Ear church or family of God, and Laboured every argument to unhinge the believing Gentiles, and to perfuade them that they were not duly taken into the church : alleging particularly that the Jews are, and for ever were to be, the only rrue church and people of God; that they could not be cut off, fo long as God was true to his word and promife to Abraham : confequently, the Gentiles were miferably deceived, by fuppoling that they had a place and interest in God's kingdom by faith in Christ Jesus; when in fact, and as fure as God was true, there was no other way of entering into the kingdom of God, or of gaining a right to its privileges, than by fubmitting to the law of Moles. To prove therefore that the Jews, by rejecting Chrift and the Gospel, were themselves cast out of the visible church, confistently with the truth of God's promife to Abraham, was a matter of great moment for the effablishment of the Gentile believers. , The Apollle had touched upon this point at the beginning of chap. iii.; but an enlargement upon it there would have broken in too much upon the argument he was then purfuing; for which reafon he fuspended the particular confideration of it to this place : and accordingly, he first folemnly declares his tenderest affection for his countrymen, and his real grief of heart for their infidelity and rejection, ver. 1-5.; and this, most probably, to wipe off an afperfion which had been caft upon him, that he was fo zealous for the Gofpel out of a natural hatred and rancour against his own nation; or, however, it might be intended at least to guard against fuch an invidious construction. Secondly, he answers objections against the rejection of the Jews, ver. 6-23. Thirdly, proves from Scripture the calling of the Gentiles, ver. 24-30. Fourthly, gives the true flate and reafons of the rejection of the unbelieving Jews and calling of the Gentiles, ver. 30.-chap. x. 14. Fifthly, vindicates the million of the Apoltles, as expedient and neceilary to the calling or invitation of the Jews, chap. x. 14. to the end : and all this was intended at once to vindicate the divine difpenfations; to convince the infidel Jew; to fatisfy the believing Gentile, that his invitation into the church was well grounded, juft, and valid; to are him against the cavils and objections of the unbelieving Jews, and to difpofe the Christian Jew to receive and own him as a member of the family and kingdom of God by a divine right, in all refpects as good as he himfelf could pretend to. See Locke.

The word rendered accurfed is 'Ava Sepa, by which the LXX translate the Hebrew word nrc cherem, which fightlies " perfous " or things devoted to deftruction and extermination." Ver. 4. Who are Ifraelites] The Apostle with great address enumerates these privileges of the Jews, both that he might thew how honourably he thought of them, and but he might awaken their folicitude not to facrifice that drine favour by which they had been to eminently and follow diffinguished. In the word adoption he alludes to the Horeb covenant, whereby the Ifraelites became the peculiar people of God, and he their fupreme ruler and protector. See Exod. iv. 22. Deut. xiv. 1. Jer. xxxi. 9. Hola, xi. 1. The glory means the Schechinah, which refiled visibly among them on the mercy-feat. Hence the atkwas called the glory. Compare I'fal. 1xxviii. 61. 1 Sam. iv. 21, 22. See Locke, and Doddridge.

[1.5. Whife are the fathers, &c.] See Exod. iii. 6-16. Allyvii. 32. How ingenious foever the conjecture of Dr. Taylor may be thought, by which he would read BiOsis o ini warrow, to answer to wo ci watiges, while me the Fathers, and whofe is the God over all, it would doubtlefs be extremely dangerous to follow this, or any ther reading of the like kind, unsupported by any critical whority of manufcripts or ancient quotations; nor does there appear any authority whatever for rendering the laft tanie, God be blefid for ever. We must therefore confider this text as a proof of Christ's proper divisity, which the melus of that doctrine have never been able to answer. Proclus (de Fide, p. 53.) efficement the verfe before us fo der a proof of the divinity of Chrift, that he fays, " It "flats and walls up every avenue of columny or reproach ;" and Theophylact confiders it as a passage which mult put Arius to thame, as St. Paul expreisivy declares Chrift to be Gal over all. This will appear still more plainly, if we recoiled that it was a Jewith cuttom, whenever the pricht mentioned the name of God in the fanctuary, for the people to fay, "Bleffed be the name and glory of his king-"dom for ever and ever." The words ufed chap. i. 25. are an abridgment of this form. Similar to it is the doxology at the end of the Lord's prayer, and chap. xi. 36. of this Epittle. In all thefe and in other places, the giving glory being an acknowledgment of the eternal God, and in feveral of them being applied peculiarly to Chrift, is a convincing proof of his Godhead. See Hammond, Doddridge, and Locke.

Ver. 6. The word of God] The word of promife. See ver. 9. and chap. iii. 3. St. Paul urges, that they are not all Ifrael which are of Ifrael, as a reason to prove that the promife of God failed not to have its effect, though the body of the Jewish nation had rejected the Lord Jefus Chrift, and therefore were naturally rejected by God from being any longer his people. The reafoning flands thus: " The posterity of Jacob, or Israel, were not those alone " who were to make that I/rael, or that chosen people of "God, who were intended in the promife made to Abra-"ham, Gen. xvii. 7, 8. Others, befides the descendants " of Jacob, were to be taken into this Ifrael, to conflitute " the people of God under the Gofpel; and therefore the " calling and coming-in of the Gentiles was a completion " of that promife :" and then he adds in the next verfe, " Neither were all the posterity of Abraham comprehended " in that promife; nor were those who were taken-in in " the time of the Meffiah to make the Ifrael of God, " taken-in becaufe they were the natural defeendants from " Abraham; nor did the Jews claim it for all his race :" and this he proves by the limitation of the promite to Abraham's feed by Ifaac only. He does all this to thew the right of the Gentiles to that promife, if they believed; fince that promife did not concern only the natural defeendants either of Abraham or Jacob, but those only reha were of the faith of their father Abraham, of whomlosver defcended. See chop. iv. 11-17. and Locke. We may read the laft claufe of this verie, For not all they that are of Ifrael, are Ifrael.

Ver. 7. But, In Ifaa: fault thy feed be called] It fhould be confidered, and well noted, that the Apofile, in this and the following quotations, does not give us the whole of the text which he intends flould be taken into his argument, but only a hint or reference to the paffages to which they belong; directing us to recollect or perufe the whole paffage, and there view and judge of the force of his argument. That he is fo to be underflood, appears from the conclusion he draws, ver. 16. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of kim that runneth, but of Ged that fleeweth mercy. In his arguments, ver. 7, 8, See, he flys not one word of Abraham's willing Ifom iel to be the feed in whom the promife might be fulfilled, nor of Hase's weilding Efau, nor of Moles's willing and interceding thas the Heachites might be fighted, nor of Efau's running for venifen; but by introducing thele particulars into his conclusion,.

elution, he gives us to understand, that his quotations are to be taken in connection with the whole hiftory of which they are a part. The fame thing may be faid concerning his conclusion, ver. 18. Whom he will, he hardeneth.-Hardeneth is not in his argument, but it is in the conclusion ; therefore, &c. The generality of the Jews were well veried in the Scriptures, and a hint was fufficient to revive the memory of a whole paffage.

Ver. 11. Neither having done any good or evil ] These words may poffibly have been added by St. Paul, the more expressly to obviate an objection of the Jews, who might be ready to fay, that Efau was rejected because he was wicked; as they did of Ishmael, that he was rejected, becaufe he was the fon of a bond-woman.

The principal thing which requires to be fettled in this chapter is, what kind of election and reprobation the Apostle is here difcourfing about? whether election, by the absolute decree and purpose of God to eternal life, and reprobation, by a like absolute decree, to eternal mifery; or only election to the prefent privileges and external advantages of the kingdom of God in this world; and reprobation, or rejection, as it fignifies the not being favoured with those privileges and advantages ? And it appears demonstrably, that the Apostle is discoursing of the latter election and rejection, and not the former : for, I. The fubject of his argument is manifestly the privileges enumerated ver. 4, 5. from which he supposes the Jews were fallen or would fall; or that for a long time they would be deprived of the benefit of them: for it is with regard to the lofs of those privileges that he is so much concerned for his brethren, and kinfmen according to the flefb, ver. 2, 3.; and it is with reference to their being stripped of those privileges, that he vindicates the word and righteouineis of God, ver. 6-24. Not as though the word of God had taken no effect, or failed, &c. proving that God, according to his purpofe of election, was free to confer them upon any branch of Abraham's feed. Confequently those privileges were the fingular bleffings which, by the purpose of God, according to election, not of works, but of him that calleth, were conferred upon Jacob's posterity. But those privileges were only fuch as the whole body of the Israelites enjoyed in this world while they were the church and people of God, and fuch privileges as they might afterwards lofe, or be deprived of; therefore the election of Jacob's posterity to those privileges was not absolute election to eternal life. II. Agreeably to the purpose of God according to election, it was faid to Rebecca, The elder shall ferve the younger; meaning, the posterity of the elder and the younger. For, Gen. xxx. 23. the Lord faid unto her, two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels; and the one people shall be stronger than the other people, and the elder Shall ferve the younger. These are the words which fignify the purpose of God according to election. Therefore the election refers to Jacob's posterity, or the whole nation of Ifrael; but the whole nation of Ifrael were not absolutely elected to eternal life: therefore, &c .---

That as touching the [origin1] election, they were still belowed for the fake of the fabor, the patriarchs, ver. 28.; that in their case, the gifts :...lallings of God are without repentance, ver. 29.; and that mgh our, the believing Gentiles', mercy, they shall at high obtain mercy, ver. 31. All these things are spoken of that Ifrael or body of people, concerning whose rejection the Apostle argues in the oth chapter; and therefore the riction about which he here argues cannot be absolute reprodution to eternal damnation, but their being, as a mion, firipped of those honours and privileges of God's peculiar church and kingdom in this world, to which, at a artin period, they should again be restored. But once non, VII. Whoever carefully peruses those three chapun will find, that the people, who in times paft believed not Gd, but have now obtained mercy, through the unbelief of the Jow, (chap. xi. 30.) are the whole body of the believing Geniles; the fame who were cut out of the olive-tree which is wild by nature, and were grafted, contrary to nature, into the and slive-tree, chap. xi. 24, 17.; the fame to whom God had shewn goodness, chap. xi. 22.; the world that was Reconciled, chap. xi. 15.; the Gentiles, who were enriched by the diminishing of the Jews, chap. xi. 12.; to whom finition came through their fall, chap. xi. 11.; who had attained to righteousness, or justification, chap. ix. 30.; who wist been God's people, nor beloved; but now are bis people, d, and the children of the living God; ver. 25, 26. See W. 24, 23, 21. He speaks of the same body of men in a those places, namely, of the believing Gentiles prinmy, but not excluding a small remnant of the believing his, who were incorporated with them. And it is this boy of men, whole calling and election he is proving; in whole case the purpose of God according to election stands sood; and who are the children of the promise counted for seed, M. 8.- They are the election, or the elect. Now concerning this called, or elect body of the people, or any particular perfon belonging to this body, the Apostle writes thus, in dap. zi. 20-22 .: " Well, because of unbelief, they, the Jews, " were broken off, reprobated, rejected, and thou flandeft, in "the church, among God's called or elect, by faith. Be " mt bigh minded, but fear ; for if God spared not the natural "manches, take beed, left be also spare not thee. Behold there-"for the goodness and severity of God, on them, the Jews, "which fell, severity; but towards thee, goodness; if thou con-"time in bis goodnefs: other wife thou also shalt be cut off, "rejected and reprobated." This proves, that the calling and definen, which the Apostle is here urging, is not abfolute election to eternal life, but to the prefent privileges of the church;—the honours and advantages of God's peculiar people: which election, through unbelief and misimprovement, may be rendered void, and come to nothing.

Ver. 12, 13. The elder shall ferve the younger] Thee words, the elder shall ferve the younger, in Gen. xxv. 23. are uled only in a national fense, and not perfonally; for in this fense the proposition is not true : which makes it plain that the words, Jacob have I loved, but Elau have I hated, ver. 13. are to be taken also in a national sense, for the preference which God gave to the posterity of one of them to be his people, and posses the promised land. See Deut. vii. 6-8. The word hated is often ufed in facred Scripture comparatively, fignifying only "to postpone in our esteem or " kindnefs." I have loved Jacob, and bated Efau, therefore,. can only mean, "I have greatly preferred the former to "the latter." See Gen. xxix. 31. Luke, xiv. 26. John, xii. 25. From the 7th to the 13th verse the Apostle proves to the Jews, that though the promife was made to Abraham and his feed, yet it was not to all Abraham's posterity, but God's first choice, Isaac and his posterity. And then again when Rebecca had conceived twins by Isaac, who was but one of the fons of Abraham, God, of his bleffed pleafure, chofe Jacob the younger, and his posterity, to be his peculiar people. See Locke and the preceding note. Dr. Doddridge upon the 13th verse observes, that the words there, in connection with the preceding and following, do indeed prove, that God acts with a fovereignfreedom, accountable to none in the dispensation of his favours; and confequentially prove that it was not upon the forefight of the obedience and piety of Jacob on the one hand, or the profaneness of Esau on the other, that this preference was given; for then the argument taken from the having actually done neither good nor evil, would be very weak. The Doctor afterwards adds, Neverthelefs. it is certain, that the Apostle does not here speak of the eternal state of Jacob and Efau, (whatever fome may fuppose deducible from what he fays,) nor does he indeed to much speak of the perfons, as of their posterity, fince it is plainly to that posterity that both the prophesies which he quotes in support of his argument refer; Gen. xxv. 23. Mal. i. 2, 3. His laying wafte the heritage of the Edomites for the dragons of the wildernefs, is to different a thing from his appointing the perfon of Elau to eternal milery by a mere act of fovereignty,-without regard to any thing done, or to be done, by him to deferve it,-that I will rather fubmit (fays the Doctor) to any cenfure from my fellow-fervants, than deal to freely with my Maker, as to conclude the one from the other.

Ver. 14, 15. What fball we fay then?] So far the Apoftle, in this chapter, has confidered God's choosing or refusing any body of men in general, without supposing them 16 'So then it is not of him that willeth, theweth metry.

to be corrupt, or to have forfeited the divine favour; but it is evident from the Scripture quotations, that from ver. 15. to 23. he confiders them in another light; namely, as corrupt, and deferving of deftruction, which brings his argument to the cafe of the rejected Jews: and it is observable, fhat the Apostle arguing here with the Jews, to vindicate the justice of God in rejecting them, uses three forts of arguments. The first is, the testimony of Moscs, concerning God's afferting this to himfelf by the right of his fovereignty, which was enough to stop the mouths of the Jews; the fecond, from reason, ver. 19-24.; and the third, from his predictions of it to the Jews, and the warning that he gave them of it beforehand, ver. 25-29. See Locke, and Exod. xxxiii. 19.

Ver. 16. God that [beweth mercy] Shewing mercy, and obtaining mercy, are applied to the donation of extraordinary favours and privileges upon a people, chap. xi. 30. I Pet. ii. 10.; and that it is to be fo understood here, appears from the context. One would imagine that this verfe should have come in immediately after the 13th; but the reafon why the Apoltle inferted it here, most probably was, that he might take the affair of Mofes's interceffion for the Ifraelites into his conclusion, as well as the two foregoing inftances relating to the fons of Abraham and Ifaac; for, the inftance of Mofes's interceffion, first, with respect to his will and earnest defire, has relation to the preceding cafes of Abraham and Ifaac; and fo it comes into the conclusion in this verse; and fecondly, with respect to the fovereign will and pleafure of God, in continuing to the Ifraelites the favour of being his peculiar people, it has alfo relation by way of contrast to the fubsequent cafe of Pharaoh, ver. 17.; and fo comes also into the conclusion, ver. 18. This is an example of the Apoftle's confulting brevity in arranging and wording his arguments. The paffage from ver. 14. may be paraphaled thus : " And now, " what fhall we fay to thefe things ? Shall we fuggeft that "God's beftowing religious privileges in this unequal " manner, upon those who otherwise are in equal circum-" flances, is inconfiltent with equity and juffice ?- By no "means; ver. 15. I gave a general anfwer to this ob-" jection, chap. iii. 6. which I now confirm by the words 45 of God himfelf to Moles, Exod. xxxiii. 19. after he had " declared that he would fpare the Jews of old, and con-"tinue them in the relation of his peculiar people, when they had deferved to be cut off for their idolatry. I ". will, fays he, make all my goodnefs pafs before thee, &c. as " if he had faid, "I will make fuch a difplay of my perse fections as fhall convince you I am of a kind and benes ficent nature : but know, that I am a debtor to none of " my creatures; my benefits and bleffings are merely from se my own good-will; nor can any people, much lefs a rebellious people, challenge them as their due in justice

" or equity; and therefore I now spare the Jews, not be-" caufe either you who intercede for them, or they them-" felves have any claim upon my favour; but of my own " free and fovereign grace I choole to fhew them mercy " and compassion ?" ver. 16. I conclude therefore, from " thefe three feveral inftances foregoing, that the making " or continuing any body of men the peculiar people of "God, in respect to spiritual or national privileges, is " righteoully determined, not by the judgment, hopes, or " wifhes of men, but by the will and wifdoin of God alone. " For Abraham judged that the blefling ought, and defired " it might be given to his eldeft fon Ithmael; and Haac " alfo defigned it for first-born Efau : and Efau, withing " and hoping it would be his, readily went a hunting for " venifon, that he might receive it. But they were all " fruftrated; Abraham and Haac who reilied, and Efau " who ran; for the bleffing of being a great nation, and his " peculiar people, God, of his mere good pleafure, ori-" ginally intended first for Ifaac, and then for Jacob and " his polterity; and to them it was given. And when by " their apoltacy they had forfeited this privilege, it was not " Mofes's willing, nor any prior obligation that God was " under, but his own fovereign mercy, which continued " the enjoyment of it." See Locke, and Whitby.

Ver. 17. For the Scripture faith, &c.] Moreover, &c. Doddridge. It is plain that this is no proof of what immediately goes before; and therefore yzg is properly rendered by moreover, which is confiftent with making it introductory to what proves fomething afferted at a diftance, if it come in as a co-ordinate proof. The reader will obferve, that the Apostle does not produce an instance of an innocent perfon being made and treated as an object of divine difpleafure out of mere fovereignty; but one of the most hardened and notorious finners the world ever knew. Inftead of I have raifed thee up, fome would render the original, I have made thee fland, or held thre up : that is, " I have supported thee during the former plagues, that I " might make thee a more remarkable example of venge-" ance." But though that may agree with the original Hebrew and with the veriion of the LXX, yet it does not feem to answer to the Greek word used by St. Paul. If, as fome writers Tuppofe, the Pharaoh here spoken of was an Egyptian king, who made his way to the throne by treason, incest, and murder, the words have a singular weight confidered as referring thereto: " I have raifed thee " up to that height of eminence in which thou proudly " glorieft, that I may more confpicuoufly flow forth any reprover in thee; and that my name, in confequence of dif-"tinguifhed judgments to be rightcoufly inflicted upon " thee, may be celebrated through all the earth, in the most "diftant nations and remotelt ages." For this end, he is "bountiful to whom he will be bountiful, and whom he "will he permits to make fuch an ufe of his forbearance "towards them, as to perfift obdurately in their provocation "of him, and draw on themfelves exemplary deftruction." Set Locke, Whitby, and particularly the note on Exod. W. 34, 35.

Vo. 19. Why doth he yet find fault ?] This objection is put a little differently, ch. iii. 7. There it is, "If God's "faithfulnefs is glorified by my wickednefs, why am I "condemned as a finner?" Here it is, "If God for his "own glory determines to fuffer us to go on in hardnefs "and infidelity, why does he find fault with us?" See the reply in the next verfe.

Ver. 20. Nay but, O man, &c.] St. Paul fnews here, that the nations of the world, who are by a better right in the hands and disposal of God, than the clay in the power if the fatter, may, without calling his justice in question, "he made great and glorious, or be pulled down or brought intecontempt, as he pleafes. That he here fpeaks of men nationally, and not perfonally, in reference to their eternal flat, is evident not only from the beginning of this chapter, where he expresses his concern for the rejection of the leves, and from the inftances that he brings of Isaac, Jacob, Eiu, and Pharaoh : but it appears also very clearly from the verfes immediately following ; where, by the verfels of wrath fitted to defiruction, (keeping up the metaphor of the pater,) he manifestly means the nation of the Jews; who were now grown ripe for the destruction which God would bring upon them; and by veffels of mercy, the chriftha church, confifting of a small number of converted Jews, and the reft made up of Gentiles; who, together, wtre thenceforwards to be the people of God in this general sense, instead of the Jewish nation, ver. 24. The lente therefore of this and the following verfes is this: "How darest thou, O man, to call God to account, and "queftion his justice, in casting off his ancient people the "]ews? See Locke.

Ver. 21. Hath not the potter power, &c.] See Jer. xviii. and Eccl'us, xxxiii. 13. It is observable, that Plutarch uses the very fame fimilitude with this before us; and Ariftophanes, among other contemptuous expressions, by which he defcribes the frailty of human creatures, calls them what wat a write, veffels of clay. A veffel unto honour, or to diffeonour, fignifies a thing defigned by the maker to an honourable or difhonourable use: nor can any reason be given why it may not defign nations, as well as perfons; and honour and prosperity in this world, as well as eternal happinels and glory, or milery and punishment, in the world to come. In common realon this figurative expression ought to follow the fenfe of the context. But Jeremiah, xviii. 6, 7. whence this inftance of a potter is taken, fnews the word veffel to have a temporal fense, and to relate to the nation of the Jews. See the preceding note, Locke, and Bos.

Ver. 22. What if God, willing, &c.7 See on ch. i. 18. Immediately after the inftance of Pharaoh, whom God declared that he raifed up to fhew his power in him, ver. 17. it is subjoined, ver. 18., And whom he will he bardeneth; plainly with reference to the hiftory of Pharaoh. who is faid to harden himfelf, and whom God is faid to barden, as may be feen in the parallel places of Exodus. What God's part in bardening is, we find in the words, Endured with much long-fuffering. God fends Mofes to Pharaoh with figns; Pharaoh's magicians do the like; and fo he is not prevailed with. God fends a plague: while the plague is upon him, Pharaoh is mollified, and promises to let the people go: but as foon as God takes off the plague, he returns to his obstinacy, and refuse; and this repeatedly. God's being intreated by him to withdraw the feverity of his hand, and his gracious compliance with Pharaoh's defire, was what God did in the Gale L.

cafe; and this was all goodness and bounty. But Pharaoh and his people made fuch ill use of his forbearance and long-fuffering, as still to harden themselves the more for God's goodnefs and gentlenefs to them ;-till they brought on themfelves exemplary destruction, from the visible power and hand of God employed in it. This behaviour of theirs God forefaw, and fo made use of their obstinate temper for his own glory, as he himfelf declares, Exod. vii. 3-5. viii. 18, &c. The Apostle, by the instance of a potter's power over his clay, having demonstrated that God, by his dominion and fovereignty, had a right to fet up or pull down what nation he pleafed, and might, without any injustice, take one race into his favour to be his peculiar people, or reject them, as he thought fit, in this general fense of privileges.-In this verse he applies it to the subject in hand; namely, the rejection of the Jewish nation; whereof he fpeaks here in terms, which plainly make a parallel between this and his dealing with the Egyptians, mentioned ver. 17.: and therefore that hiftory will beft explain this verse, which will thence receive its full light. For it feems, at first fight, a somewhat strange fort of reasoning to fay that God, to show his wrath, endured with much long-fuffering those who deferved his wrath, and were fit for destruction. But he who will read in Exodus God's dealings with Pharaoh and the Egyptians,-and how he paffed over provocation upon provocation, and patiently endured those who by their first refusal, nay, by their former cruelty and oppression of the Israelites, deserved his wrath, and were fitted for destruction, that by a more fignal vengeance on the Egyptians, and glorious deliverance of the Israelites, he might make his power and his goodness known,-will easily see the strong and natural fense of this and the following verse. See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 23. And that he might make known] Mr. Locke thinks the fense of the place requires, that the and should be left out, as it is in fome manufcripts : but the and feems effential to the text, and to the Apostle's meaning; as it connects the fecond reason, why God delayed the destruction of the Jewish nation, with the first reason given, ver. 22. thus; - God endured with much long-fuffering the veffels of wrath, first, to shew his wrath, and to make his power known; and alfo, 2dly, that he might make known the riches of his glory on the veffels of mercy. It is added, which he had before prepared unto glory. See Col. i. and particularly ver. 27. The Jews were fitted for definition long before; but the fittest time to destroy them was, after he had prepared many of the faithful among the Gentiles unto glory. For the rod of the Meffiah's firength was to be fent out of Sion, Pf. cx. 2. The Jewish nation was to supply the first preachers of the Gospel; and from Jerufalem their found was to go forth into all the earth. Therefore the Jewish state, under all its corruptions, was to be preferved till the Meffiah came, and, even till the Gospel, propagated by the Apostles, had taken deep root in the Gentile world. Another thing which rendered the time when the Jewish polity was overthrown the most proper, was this; because then the immediate occasion of it was the extensiveness of the divine grace. The extensivenefs of God's grace occasioned that infidelity of the Jews, which filled up the measure of their iniquity; ver. 33. ch. xi. 11, 12, 15, 28, 30. Thus they were diminished by that abundance which has enriched us; and fo the grave of God was illustrated; or fo God made known the riche. his glory on the veffels of mercy. See Locke.

Ver. 25, 26. As he faith alfo in Ofce] Here are two quotations out of the prophet Holea,-first, ch. i. 10. where, immediately after God had rejected the ten tribes, ver. 9. (Ye are not my people, and I will not be your God,) it is added, Yet the number of the children of Ifrael shall be as the fand of the fea, which cannot be meafured nor numbered : And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was faid unto them, Ye are not my people ; there it shall be faid unto them, Ye are the fons of the living God. As if he had faid, " The " decrease of numbers in the visible church, by God's " utterly taking away the ten tribes, ver. 6. shall be well " fupplied by what shall afterwards come to pass by call-" ing the Gentiles into it. They who had been the people " of God fhould become Lo-ammi, --not my people : on the " contrary, they who had been Lo-ammi, ---not my people, " fhould become the children of the living God." Again, Hofea, ii. 23. I will fow her [the ]ewish church] unto me in the earth; alluding, probably, to the dispersion of the Jews over all the Roman empire; which proved a fruitful will the Lord make upon the earth.

20 And as Efaias faid before, "Except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a feed, we had been as Sodoma, and been made like unto Gomorrha.

30 What shall we fay then? That the Gentiles, which ' followed not after righteoufnefs, have attained to righteoufnefs, even the righteousnels which is of faith.

11 But Ifrael, which <sup>2</sup> followed after the law it hort in righteousness: because a short work of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteoufnefs.

32 Wherefore ? Because they fought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law. For they b fumbled at that fumblingftone :

33 As it is written, 'Behold, I lay in Sion a flumbling-flone and rock of offence: and <sup>d</sup> whofoever believeth on him shall not be * ashamed.

Ver. 27, 28. A remnant fball be faved] That is, Only a remnant. So ch. xiv. 2. Eats only herbs, John, xviii. 8. If ge fack me, (that is, only me,) let thefe go their way. Mr. Locke would translate the next verse, For the Lord, finishing and contracting the account, in righteoufnefs, fhall make a floort tr finall remainder in the earth.—A metaphor taken from an account, wherein the matter is fo ordered, that the overplus or remainder, ftanding still upon the account, is very little. Compare If. xxviii. 22. and Dan. ix. 27.

Ver. 19. Except the Lord of Sabaoth, &c. ] Lord of Hefts, &c. Initead of a feed, the words in Ifaiah are, a very finall remnant.

Var. 30, 31. The Gentiles, which followed not, &c.] Righteoufnefs or justification, is to be understood here, as ch. iv. 3, 5. Gen. xv. 6. It is the justification by faith, to which the Apostle from the beginning of the Epistle has been arguing and proving that the believing Gentiles have anght, and which they have attained ; but which the unbelieving Jews have not attained, because they fought it not by faith, but by the works of the law, ver. 32. Therefor what is meant by attaining to this justification, will be clearly understood, if we confider that the Apostle is here giving the reason why the Jews were cast off from being God's people, and the Gentiles admitted to that privilege. See Locke and Whitby.

Ver. 33. A flumbling flone] What the unbelieving Jews fumbled at, St. Peter informs us, I Epist. ii. 8. They fumbled at the word : they were difguited at the Gospel : the word which Chrift and his Apostles preached, did not please them. It contradicted all their preconceived opitions; and, instead of continuing them to be the only tible church of God in all the world, and their law and religious ceremonies the only rule of a place and interest in the peculiar kingdom of God upon earth, it entirely abilished the law in this respect; and freely took men of any nation into the peculiar kingdom of God, without any regard to the law of Moles, only upon faith in Chrift. This was the word, - the word of universal grace, at which the Jews stumbled. See Ifai. viii. 14. ch. xxviii. 16. 1 Cor. i. 23. and Whitby.

Inferences .- Let the affection which the Apostle exprefies for the Jews, his countrymen and brethven according to the fleft, and the tender and pathetic representation that he makes of the privileges which they once enjoyed, awaken in our hearts an earnest folicitude, that they may by divine grace be brought back; that they may again be adopted into the family from which they have been cut off, again clothed with the glory which is departed from them : that, through him who was given for a covenant to the people, they may receive the law of life and grace, be formed to that fpiritual fervice which it introduces, initead of their pompous ritual, and embrace the promifes on which the faith and hope of their illustrious fathers were fixed.

Let it likewife teach us fpiritual compassion for our kindred. who are ftrangers to Chrift, and let us be willing to fubmit to the greatest difficulties, and think nothing too much to be done or borne for their recovery.

Let our fouls pay a humble homage to him who is, in fuch an incommunicable and fublime fente, the Son of God, as to be himfelf over all, God bleffed for evermore. With proftrate reverence let us adore him, as our Lord, and our God, and repose that unbounded confidence in him which fuch an affemblage of divine perfections will warrant, putting our most hearty amen to every afcription of glory, to every anthem of praife, addreffed to him.

And fince we fee that many of the children of Abraham, and of Ifaac, failed of any thare in the special promites of God, let us learn to depend on no privilege of birth, on no relation to the greatest and best of men. May we feek to be inferted into the family of God, by his adopting love in Chrift Jefus, and to maintain the lively exercise of faith; without which no child of Abraham was ever acceptable to God, and with which none of the children of ftrangers have ever failed of a fhare in his mercy and favour. The fcripture sheweth the difference betwixt the righteousness of the law, and that of faith : that none, whether Jew or Gentile, who believe, shall be confounded ; and that the Gentiles shall receive the word, and believe. Is rack was not ignorant of these things.

holinefs of God, in all the moft amazing difplays of his fovereignty, which we are fure are always confiftent with it. Let us own his right to confer on whom he pleafes, those favours which none of us can pretend to have deferved. He has of his mere goodness given us those privileges, as Chrissians, and as Protoflants, which he has withheld from most nations under heaven. Let us adore his diffinguishing favour to us, and arrogate nothing to ourfelves.

Long did his patience wait on us; and let that patience be for ever adored ! It shall be glorified even in those that perifh : for he is fo far from deftroying innocent creatures by a mere arbitrary act of power and terror, that he endureth with much long-fuffering, those who by their own incorrigible wickedness prove veffels of wrath, and whom the whole affembled world shall confess fitted for the defiruction to which they shall finally be configued. That after long abufe of mercy they are hardened, and perhaps after long hardness are at length destroyed : yea, that fome of the vileft of men are exalted by Providence to a flation that makes their crimes confpicuous, as those of Pharach, till at length he lbews forth his power the more awefully, and makes his name the more illustrious by their ruin, is certainly confistent with that justice which the Judge of the whole earth will never violate.

But if, in tracing fubjects of this kind, difficulties arife beyond the firetch of our feeble thought, let us remember that we are men, and let us not dare to reply against God. Retiring into our own ignorance and weaknefs, as those that are less than nothing, and vanity, before him, let us dread by any arrogant cenfure to offend him who has fo uncontrollable a power over us. As clay in the hand of the potter, fo are we in the hand of the Lord our God. Let us acquiesce in the form that he has given us, in the rank that he has affigned us; and, inftead of perplexing ourfelves about those fecrets of his counfels which it is impossible for us to penetrate, let us endeavour to purify ourfelves from whatever would displease him; that so we may, in our respective stations, be vessels of honour, fit for the use of our Master now, and entitled to the promise of being acknowledged as his, in that glorious day when he shall make up bis jewels.

How can we finners of the Gentiles ever fufficiently acknowledge the goodness of God to us, in calling us to that 2 For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, 'but not according to knowledge.

3 For they being ignorant of "God's righteoufnefs, and "going about to establish their own righteoufnefs, "have not fubmitted themfelves unto the righteoufnefs of God.

4 For Chrift is the end of the law for righteoufnels to every one that believeth.

full participation of Gofpel-bleffings which we enjoy! That in our native lands, where the name of the true Contains was follong unknown, we fhould have the honour to being called bis children! Oh, that we may indeed be fo, not only by an external profession, but by regenerating grace!

Bleffed be God that there is a feed remaining! It is the prefervation of the people among which it is found; and, had it not been found among us, we had probably long fince been made a feat of defolation. May it increase in the rifing age, that the pledges of our continued peace and, prosperity may be more assured, till our peace be like a river, and our falvation like the waves of the fea.

It will be fo, if we be awakened ferioufly to inquire how we may be juftified before God, and feek that invaluable bleffing in the way here pointed out; if we feck it, not as by the works of the law, but by faith in Chrift. He has, in this refpect, been to many a flone of flumbling and a rock of offence. May divine grace teach us the neceflity of building upon him, of refting upon him the whole ftrefs of our eternal hopes! Then fhall they not fink into difappointment and ruin; then fhall we not flee away a flamed in that aweful day, when the bail fball fweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters of that final deluge of divine wrathfball overflow every biding-place, but that which God has. prepared for us in his own Son.

REFLECTIONS.—1ft, The Jewish bigots looked upon St. Paul as a fignal apostate, and perfecuted him with peculiar virulence and enmity. He wished therefore to soften their exasperated spirits, while he makes profession of his own tender concern for their welfare and falvation. And there is a peculiar propriety in his introduction, when we confider the offensive truths which he was about to advance.

1. He makes a folemn proteftation of the very fervent regard that he bore towards them. I fay the truth in Chrift, folemnly appealing to him who is the Searcher of hearts, and knoweth that I lie not, my conficience alfo bearing me witnefs in the Holy Ghoft to the fimplicity and fincerity of what I am going to fay, that, far from entertaining the least prejudice or ill-will against my countrymen, I have great heavinefs and continual forrow in my heart, feeling the acutest pangs of grief, when I think of their fearful condition, and what must be the inevitable confequences of their unbelief. For

For I could wife that myfelf were accurfed from Christ, (&valeµa,) content to be cut off from all my privileges as an Apostle, and to be separated from the society of the faithful with thame and difgrace, yea, to undergo the most ignominious and tormenting death, for my brethren, my kinfmen, according to the flefb.

2. He mentions the diftinguished privileges with which they had been favoured of God, which could not but make their rejection peculiarly grievous to him : who are Ifraclites, bearing the name of their eminent progenitor Jacob; to when pertaineth the adoption, taken into that covenant of cculiarity in which God regarded the whole nation as his ifible church, Exod. iv. 22. and the glory, the ark, the Shechinah, the mercy-feat, the tokens and emblems of the divine prefence in the midft of them; and the covenants, the covenant of circumcifion made with Abraham, and renewed with Ifaac and Jacob, and that of Sinai with the whole body of Ifrael; and the giving of the law, containing God's ordinances, moral, judicial, and coremonial; and the fervice of God, in what manner his worthip thould be performed; and the promifes, of temporal prosperity, and of the Meffiah and his great falvation ; whose are the fathers, the descendants of the famed patriarchs; and of whom, as coneerning the flefb, Chrift came, the promifed feed of Abraham, in his human nature; but who, in his divine, is over all, Ged Heffed for ever. Amen ! Note; The divinity of our incannate Saviour is a chief article of our creed. Thereon depends the perfection of his Atonement on our behalf.

2dly, Grief for his unhappy countrymen filled the Apofthe's heart : but, though the generality of them perifhed, the promife made to Abraham would not be frustrated. He would not therefore have them fuppofe as though the wird of God had taken none effect, and failed of its accomithment, because they believed not. For they are not all fail, true Ifraelites, and favingly interefted in the fpiritual bleffings of the covenant, which are of Ifrael, the offspring of Jscob; neither, becaufe they are the feed of Abraham, are they all children of God, as they flattered themfelves. But I have enlarged to fully on these points in my Critical Notes, that I shall refer my readers to them, rather than run the hazard of being tedious. I will only just observe,

3dly, That the Apostle, having proved the rejection of the lews and the calling of the Gentiles, fuggefts also the reason. What shall we say then, farther in vindication of God's justice and free grace in these dispensations? It is evident, that the Gentiles, which followed not after righteoufness, have notwithstanding attained to righteoufness, even the righteousness which is of faith, being accepted of God through faith in Christ Jefus : but Ifrael, which followed after the law of righteousness, and fought justification before God by their own obedience, hath not attained to the law of rightesufnefs, not being capable of performing that immaculate righteousness which the law demands, and therefore being left under the curfe as transgreffors. Wherefore have they not attained? Becaufe they fought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law, placing their dependence upon their own doings and duties, either in part, or in the whole, for their acceptance with God : for they flumbled at that flumbling-flone, the crucified Galilean, whofe lowly appearance offended them, and they could not think of embracing him as their Meffiah: As it is written in Ifaiah, Behold, I lay in Sion a flumbling-flone, and rock of offence, that Meffiah who should be the tried stone and fure foundation to those who believed, and would to those who rejected him be as the rock which dashes those to pieces who fall thercon: and whofoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed; though the generality perifh in their impenitence and unbelief, yet those who dare perfeveringly trust him for pardon, life, and falvation, shall never be disappointed of their hopes, but find him a Saviour to the uttermost. Note; Nothing is fo fatal to the foul as dependence upon our own rightcoufnefs, either in the whole or in part, for acceptance with God; while those who, felf-despairing, fly to the righteoufnefs of faith revealed in the Gofpel, are fure to be justified from all things, and, if they continue in this faith, which always works by love, fhall be faved with an everlafting falvation.

CHAP. X.

IN what follows, the Apoftle lays open the caufes of the unbelief of the Jews, and answers the two chief objections whereby they juftified their opposition to the Gospel. The first objection was, that by teaching the justification of the Jews by faith without the works of law, the expiations of the law of Mofes were rendered of no use in their justification. The fecond was, that by admitting the Gentiles into the church and covenant of God without circumcifion, the covenant with Abraham was made void.

His answer to the first of these objections, the Apostle began with telling the Jews, that his defire and prayer to God was, that they might be faved, ver. 1 .- Becaufe he knew they had a great zeal in matters of religion, though it was not directed by knowledge, ver. 2 .- Wherefore being ignorant of the kind of righteoufnefs which God requires from finners for their juftification, even the rightcoulnels of faith, and miltaking the nature of the law of Mofes, they fought to become rightcous by observing its precepts, and, where they failed, by having recourse to its expiations. So that vainly endeavouring to effablish a righteousness of their own for their justification, they had not fubmitted to the righteousnels of God's appointment, now fully revealed in the Gospel, ver. 3 .- But in all this they counteracted the true end of the law of Moles, which. though a political law, being given by God, and requiring a perfect obedience to all its precepts under the penalty of death, was in fact a republication of the original law of works, made, not for the purpose of justifying the Jews, but to fhew them the impoflibility of their being justified by law, that they might be obliged to go to Chrift for that bleffing, who was exhibited in the types of the law, ver. 4. -That

-That the law required perfect obedience to all its precepts, the Apostle proved from Moses's description of the righteoufnefs which it enjoined, and the reward which it promifed. The former confifted in doing all the flatutes and judgments of God, delivered in the law : the latter in a long and happy life in Canaan. But an immaculate obedience of this kind is impossible, and its reward of no great value, ver. 5 .- Whereas the righteoufnefs enjoined by the Gofpel, and the reward which it promifes, are very different. It enjoins a righteousness of faith, which through grace is eafy to be attained; and promifes eternal life, a reward no where promifed in the law, as a law of works. For, fays the Apostle, the Gospel which requires the rightcoufnels of faith, to thew that that rightcoufnels may eafily be attained, thus fpeaketh to all mankind to whom it is now preached :- Do not object to the method of juftification revealed in the Gofpel, that Chrift the object of thy faith is removed far from thee, and there is no perfon to bring him down from heaven fince his refurrection and afcenfion, that thou mayeft fee and believe on him, ver. 6. -Neither object to his being the promifed Seed, in whom all the families of the earth are to be bleffed, that he was put to death, and there is no perfon to bring him up from the grave, that thou mayeft fee him crowned with glory and honour by the miracle of his refurrection, ver. 7.-For the Gospel tells thee, the object as well as the duty of faith is brought nigh thee; it is explained and proved to thee in the clearest manner, and is easy to be performed, as it has its feat in the mouth and in the heart, being the doctrine concerning Chrift, which we preach by infpiration, and confirm by miracles, ver. 8.-namely, that if thou wilt confess with thy mouth before the world, that Jefus is Lord and Chrift, and wilt believe in thine heart, that God raifed him from the dead, and thereby declared him to be both Lord and Chrift, thou shalt be faved : a reward which the law does not promife to any one, ver. 9. -For with the heart we believe, fo as to obtain righteousness, and with the mouth confession of our faith is made, fo as to have affurance of our falvation, ver. 10. The righteoulnels of faith, therefore, enjoined in the Golpel, is in its nature and in its reward entirely different from the righteoufnefs enjoined in the law.

To the fecond objection, that the admiffion of the Gentiles into the church and peculiar covenant of God without circumcifion is contrary to the covenant with Abraham; the Apofle replied, that the prophets have taught the falvation of the Gentiles by faith; particularly Ifaiah, in thefe words; Whofever believeth on him, fhall not be afhamed, ver. 11.—And to flew that the expression whofever, does not mean whofever of the Jews only, but whofever, does not mean whofever of the Jews only, but whofever of the Gentiles also, the Apostle observed, that in bestowing falvation, God makes no diffinction between Jew and Greek; but, being equally related to all, is rich in goodnets towards all who call upon him, ver. 12.—Bestides, Joel has expressly declared, chap. ii. 32.—That whofever fball call on the name of the Lord, fball be faved, ver. 13.—But perhaps you will reply, that Joel does not speak of the Gentiles, because it cannot be faid, that they believe on the true God, and worfhip him, fince he was never preached to them by any meffengers divinely commissioned, ver. 14 --- although fuch meffengers ought to have been fent to them long ago, according to Isaiah, who infinuates, that they would have been received with joy, namely, in that passage, where he fays, How beautiful are the feet of them, &c. ver. 15 .- But to this I answer, that in the passage last mentioned, Isaiah declares what ought to have happened, and not what would have happened, if the true God had been preached to the Gentiles. For he forefaw, that even the Jews, who fhould have been acquainted with the true God, would not believe the report of the preachers of the Gofpel, concerning the Chrift, (who is the true God and eternal life, I John, v. 20.) notwithstanding it ought to have been as acceptable to them, as the preaching of the true God to the Gentiles, ver. 16.-However, granting that faith in the true God cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God preached, it will not follow, that the Gentiles could not believe on the true God, ver. 17 .- For though you fay, they have not heard concerning him, fo as to be able to believe on him and worfhip him, I must tell you, yes verily they have heard; for from the beginning of the world, God has preached to all men his own being, perfections, and worthip, by that grand exhibition of himfelf which he has made in the works of creation, as is plain from Pfalm xix. 4. Their found hath gone through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. All mankind, therefore, may through the fecret influences of divine grace (which must be always underftood) know and worfhip the true God, and be faved, agreeably to Joel's declaration above mentioned, ver. 18.-But you will fay, is it not a great objection to this doctrine, that Ifrael, to whom the oracles of God were intrusted, is ignorant of the falvation of the Gentiles through faith, and of their reception into the church and covenant of God equally with the Jews? I answer, if the Jews are ignorant of these things, it is their own fault. For Mofes foretold them in the law, ver. 19 .--and Ifaiah yet more plainly, ver. 20.-who infinuated that the calling of the Gentiles to be the people of God, by the preaching of the Golpel, would provoke the Jews exceedingly and harden them in their infidelity; infomuch, that though Chrift in perfon, and by his Apoitles, fhould long and earneftly endeavour to perfuade them, they would not believe on him, ver. 21.

In this manner did the Apoftle lay open the true caufes of the unbelief of his countrymen. They rejected the Gofpel, becaufe it reprobated that meritorious righteoufnets, which they endeavoured to attain by performing the facrifices and ceremonies of the law of Mofes; and becaute it required them to feek falvation by believing on Jefus, as Lord and Chrift, and offered falvation to all the Gentiles who believed. To conclude; the fame prophets having expressly foretold, that the Jews, by the calling of the Gentiles, would be provoked to reject the Gofpel, and for that that in hould themfelves be caft off, the Apostle reprefented these things to them, in the hope that fuch among them as were candid, when they observed the events to correspond with the predictions, would acquiesce in the appointment of God concerning the Gentiles; fenfible, that it was proper to preach bim to all the nations of the earth, in whom all nations were to be bleffed.

Ver. 2. That they have a zeal of God] See this zeal of theirs for God described, Acts xxi. 27-31. and xxii. 3. ". o. God's righteou/nefs] That is, the method of fal-ich is provided for mankind by the mercy and wildom of God.

Ver. 4. Chrift is the end of the law, &c.] Here the lew's argument is supposed. St. Paul, who was well acquainted with the notions of the Jews, and had often diputed with them, knowing well what the Jew would allege, for the fake of brevity puts in his answer, without formally stating the Jew's argument; and yet from the Apostle we may probably collect what was the Jew's argument. He infifted that Chrift was the end or defign of the law in the following fenfe: that is to fay, that the eltablishment of the Messiah's kingdom, and an interest in the privileges of it, depended upon, or was the refult of their lubmission to or observance of, the law of Moses. Against this the Apostle argues, that by obedience to the law the Jews could never have procured the coming and kingdom of Chrift, or redemption by him. In that way, (ver. 6, 7.) they could never have brought down Christ from heaven, or have raifed him from the dead; it is the grace and power of God alone must do that; which they have done; and in order to an interest in the privileges and bleffings of his kingdom, have left nothing on our part to be done, but faith in the heart by the operation of the Spirit of God (which the Divine Spirit is willing to accomplish), and a practice and profession suitable to it. Compare ver. 9. and Gal. iii. 23-25. This and the following verfes may be paraphrafed thus: "Thus far indeed "the Jews think justly, that the end and defign of the law " is to introduce the kingdom and difpenfation of Chrift "the Mefliah : not, as they suppose, to procure the blef-" fings of his kingdom by the observance of the law; but " Chrift is the end of the law, as the law leads and obliges us "to fly to that justification, or way of life and falvation, "which is open and free to all who believe ; ver. 5. For the " way of gaining a title to life and falvation by the law, as "Mofes describes it, is perfect immaculate obedience; a "way in which no people in the world, not the Jews "themselves, can hope to procure the bleffings of the "kingdom of the Messiah. But the way of falvation, "which is by faith in Christ, runs in a quite different " ftrain; ver. 6, 7. It forbids the fupposition of procuring "the grace of redemption by any works of righteoufnels " which we can do : for, in order to our redemption, Chrift " was first to come down from heaven, and to be raifed

" from the dead after he was crucified, otherwife he could " be no Saviour to us. And what man, through the per-" fection of his obedience to the law, could acquire either " power or interest enough to bring Christ down from the " heavenly manfions to this earth; or to loofe the bands " of death, reftore him again to life, and exalt him to "God's right hand, to be the author and captain of our " falvation? Such mighty effects are not to be accom-" plifhed by our works; and therefore the way of falvation " by faith very rightly teaches us to disclaim such vain " impracticable fchemes. On the contrary, it instructs " us, ver. 8. that the mercy and kindnefs of God our Sa-" viour has cleared all difficulties on his part, and reduced " the affair to the loweft and eafieft conditions on ours, " by leaving nothing for us to do, but what through the " infpiration of the Spirit of God may be performed by " our heart and mouth :--- I mean, that faith which I preach " among the Gentiles, and which is fet forth, ver. 9." It may be proper to obferve here, that the Apostle does not quote Moles, Deut. xxx. 12-14. by way of proving the point, but only alludes to the manner of expression; as what might with no lefs, if not with greater propriety, be applied to the Gospel than the law. This appears from the explication he inferts, as, that is, to bring down Chrift from heaven; --- that is, to bring up Chrift again from the dead; -that is, the word of faith which we preach. Which explication he adds, to fliew that, though he uses the words of Mofes, yet he does not fuppole that Mofes is difcourfing upon the fame fubject with himfelf. See Locke, who gives a different exposition of these verses, which, for the latiffaction of the reader, shall be mentioned on ver. 9.

Ver. 8. The word is nigh thee] The original 'Pnuz', often fignifies word, but fometimes affair, bufinefs; and fo does Teler in the Hebrew,-the word used by Mofes, Deut. xxx. 14. In this place the meaning feems to be, the affair is nigh thee, (that is, is rendered cafy and feafible,) even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the affair of faith, which we preach. See Matt. xviii. 16. Luke, i. 37. ii. 15. 2 Cor. xii. 4. xiii. 1.

Ver. 9. That if thou (halt confess, &c.] St. Paul had told them, ver. 4. (fays Mr. Locke) that the end of the law was to bring them to life by faith in Chrift, that they might be justified, and fo be faved. To convince them of this, he brings three verfes out of the book of the law itfelf, declaring that the way to life was by hearkening to that word, which was ready in their mouth, and in their heart ; and that therefore they had no reason to reject Jefus. the Chrift, becaufe he died, was removed into heaven, and remote from them. Their very law proposed life to them by fomething nigh them, which might lead them to their Deliverer; namely, by words and doctrines, which might always be at hand, in their mouths, and in their hearts, and fo lead them to Chrift; that is, to that faith in him which the Apostle preached. We may observe farther from this place, place, that the expectation of the Jews was, that the promifed Melliah should be their deliverer; in which they were right : but that which they expected to be delivered from at his appearing, was the power and dominion of temporal, not fpiritual enemies. When our Saviour came, the time predicted for his coming was completed, and the miracles which he did concurred to perfuade that he was their Meffiah; but his obfcure birth and mean appearance did not correspond with those ideas which they had formed of his fplendour. This, with his prediction of the deftruction of their temple and flate, fet the rulers against him, and held the body of the Jews in fuspense till his crucifixion, which made them wholly averle to him. They gave up all thoughts of being delivered by him; he was gone; they faw him no more; --- and it was past a doubt with them, that a dead man could not be the Meffiah or deliverer even of those who believed in him. It is against thefe prejudices that this and the preceding verfes feem directed; wherein St. Paul teaches them, that there was no need to bring the Meffiah from heaven or the grave, and introduce him perforally among them; for the deliverance that he was to work for them, and the falvation he was to procure, was falvation from fin and its condemnation; and that was to be had by believing and openly avowing him to be Meffiah their king, and that he was raifed from the dead; for by this they would be faved, without his perfonal prefence among them.

Ver. 11. For the Scripture faith, &c.] In this and the two preceding verfes, the Apothe intends to fhew the nature and efficacy of the gofpel faith and profeffion, in opposition to the mean opinion which the Jew might have of them, in comparison with the feveral branches of his dependence; and which, in his eye, appeared much more honourable and magnificent. It is not neceffary to fpend time in fettling the precise difference between believing with the heart, and confefing or professing with the mouth. Thereby the whole of true religion, both in principle and practice, is denoted;—the root in the heart, and the fruit in the life: only, professing with the mouth may be particularly mentioned, because that gives a right to the prefent privileges of Christ's kingdom:—none but professed believers have right to a place and ftanding in the church of God. Nor need we be curious to inquire into the diftinction between righteoufnefs or justification, and falvation. The Apostle's defign, it feems evidently, is to express all the bleffings which God will beftow in this and the future world : that the one or the other of these comprehends the prefent bleffings and privileges of the kingdom of God, none perhaps will queftion : and that the one or the other takes in the final and eternal falvation of the faithful faints of God will appear, if we confider that the 11th verfe, Whofpever believeth, &c. certainly refers to final falvation, or the full accomplishment of Christian faith and hope. But this quotation in the 11th verse is intended to confirm at leaft one of the claufes in the foregoing verfe, and therefore one of these clauses must refer to the final issue of faith in everlafting life to the perfevering Christian. Faith is the grand principle of the Gofpel; a profeffed faith intitles us to present privileges; and faith, as a principle in the heart, difcerning, valuing, and improving the grace of God in the Redeemer, and enabling us to refift temptation, to be ftedfast and unmoveable in adhering to truth and duty is that which conftitutes the Christian, the life of fobriety, righteoufnefs, and godlinefs, and fuch as, if perfevered in (the power and bleffing of God fuppofed) will carry us fafe to eternal life. And as we are to be faved, not by mere power confidered abstractedly, but in a moral way, nothing lefs than this faith can be appointed, or be effectual to our falvation.

Ver. 13. Whosever shall call, &c.] Believing in Chrift, or God, ver. 11. and calling upon him, ver. 12, 13, 14. are in effect the fame thing, as calling upon God necellarily fuppoles faith in him; and he who duly believes in Chrift, has fuch a fense of his dependence upon divine grace, that he looks unto and truths in the power and goodness of his God alone for happines; which is the true religion of the Gospel. Bithop Pearson argues at large from this verse, that if Chrift be not here called Jehevah, the Apossil's argument is quite inconclusive. The reader cannot fail to observe and admire the fine climax in the next verse. See Benson, and Pearson on the Creed, p. 149.

Paul is careful every where to preferve the effeem of his brethren the Jews. May not therefore this, with the two forgoing verses, be understood as an apology to them for profelling himfelf an Apostle of the Gentiles, as he does by the tenor of this epiftle, and in the next chapter expressly? ver. 13. In this chapter (ver. 12.) he had shewn, that both Jews and Greeks, or Gentiles, were to be faved by receiving the Gospel of Christ; and if so, it was necessary that fomebody should be fent to teach it to them; and therefore the Jews had no reason to be offended with any one feat on that employment. Feet are variously used in Scripture, and fometimes have respect to things internal and spiritual: for as the life of man and the practice of piety are compared to walking, Pfalm i. 1.; fo his feet may fignify the principles upon which he acts, and the difpolition of his mind, as Eccles. v. 1. Keep thy foot, when then grift to the house of God. Agreeably to this, the feet of the meffengers in Isaiah, and of the apostles in this verfe, may fignify the validity of their miffion, the authority upon which they acted, and any character or qualifications with which they were invested. Bos observes that, in Sophocles, the hands and feet of those who came upon a kind defign are represented as beautiful to fuch as receive benefit by their arrival. See Locke, and Ifai. 1ii. 7.

Per. 16. But they have not all obeyed] This feems an objection of the Jews to what St. Paul had faid, which he mivers in this and the following verfe. The objection and answer may stand thus: " You tell us, that you are " fent from God to preach the Gospel. If it be fo, how " comes it that all who have heard, have not received and " obeyed; especially if, as you would infinuate, the mef-" fengers of good tidings were fo welcome to them ?" To this he answers, out of Isaiah, That the meffengers fent from God were not believed by all. And from those fame words he draws an inference to confirm the argument he was upon, namely, " That falvation cometh by " hearing and believing the word of God." He had laid I down, ver. 8. that it was by their having grua wireus, the word of faith, nigh them, or prefent with them, and not by the bodily prefence of their Deliverer among them, that they were to be faved. This word he tells them, ver. 17. is by preaching brought to be actually prefent with them and the Gentiles; fo that it was their own fault, if they believed it not to falvation. See Locke and Bos.

Ver. 18. Their found went into all the earth] As the puffages in the Golpels and Epiftles relating to the extenlive spreading of religion during the dispensation or reign of the Meffiah, have a reference to the ancient prophelies, this may be the full and proper import of them;that, as the Golpel is a scheme of instruction commensurate to all the wants and circumstances of all, both Jews and Gentiles, it feems to have been the grand object of the Vol. II.

grace and providence of God in this conflication, that a gradual conveyance of these falutary benefits should be vouchfafed in different ages and nations; fo that, before the kingdom of the Methah fhould terminate, effectual means fhould be used for the most extensive propagation of its light and truth : and that all knowledge of Chrift is not confined within fuch narrow bounds as infidels imagine, will appear from the following observations: The Mohammedan, Turk, or Persian, acknowledges the miraculous birth of Chrift; and the Jew, before he is permitted to embrace Mohammedanism, must profet's his belief in Chrift. The Mohammedan expects a fecond appearance of our Lord from heaven, and believes that all men will then unite in one religion. The opinion of other people in the Eaftern world, who have long been confidered as pagans only, may be known for certainty from their writings and religious ceremonies. Porphyry, a Grecian philosopher who wrote against Christianity, assures us, that the Indians believed that God created the world by his Son; and in their facred book called VEDAM, whatever may be the practice of the Indians, nothing is to be found that encourages idolatry. We will now confider those opinions and practices of these people, which will shew that they are not entirely ftrangers to the hiftory and doctrines of our Lord, though intermixed with pagan notions, and grossly corrupted. The Indians have applied to their god XACA, almost every circumstance in the life of Jefus. " He was born of a virgin, washed with the dew of hea-" ven; the whole world fhines with unufual fplendour at " his birth; the earth trembles; chofen hymns are fung; " the infant is adored, and gifts are offered to him. " fhakes with dreadful concussions! a thick darkness ob-" foures the fky! After the death of Xaca, his difciples " commit all the actions of their mafter to writing."-If any difficulty arifes in afcribing the actions of Chrift to Xaca, from the change of names only, we shall find that these eastern people are not absolutely strangers to the name of Chrift and other perfons recorded in the Gofpel. -They fpeak of CHRIST, whom they expressly call Krifnu, as one whole conception was miraculous, born under the conftellation of the Virgin in the Agiodia, or Judea, of whom it was foretold by Aggr, an angel, - " He shall fave " his nation Judah, of the race of shepherds." Sridoroh, or Herod, feigning a defire to fee the infant, commands the flaughter of the innocents. This KRISNU of the Indians performed many miracles exactly the fame with those recorded of Jesus. The transfiguration upon mount Tabor is related in their histories, and John in particular is faid to have been one of those who were present.-KRISNU, before his death, fups with his disciples, and they are washed : after this, near Gethfemané, a tumult arifes; he is embraced by Judas, whom they call Giudiflira, and he recommends the women to the care of ARGIUN, or John.-XACA (Sefac), BISNU, the Chinefe Fo, and KRIS, or KRISTNU, is Chrift; who is crucified in every mind; the first man; the first offspring; only Son; lawgiver; deliverer; Saviour ! The many croffes erected by the Indians of Nepal, feem originally to have been in commemoration of the crucifixion of our Lord. These Indians of Nepal erect erucifixes, with nails through the hands and feet; and the grand lama celebrates a facrifice with bread, and what he is permitted to drink, (wine being forbidden,) of which he takes a fmall portion himfelf, and diffributes the reft to the lamas who affift at that ceremony. Hence it is evident, that these nations, though Persians, Indians, Tartars, and Chinefe, have fome knowledge of Chrift, his hiftory, doctrines, and inflitutions; and there Christianity has been more universal than many imagine. It is faid that the patriarch of Moulul had under him one of the most numerous fees of the world; for he had under his jurifdiction all the north of Afia, the ancient churches of China, Ceylon, Malabar, and other Christian nations among the Indians, exclusive of the churches of Persia, Zocotora, Chaldea, Syria, Arabia, and perhaps other provinces which are unknown. We have a more particular account by Cosmas Indicopleustes, an author who lived in the middle of the fixth century. " The Chriftians," fays he, " having been " at first feverely perfecuted by Greeks and Jews, con-" quered and converted those who perfecuted them; thus " the church is not overthrown but multiplied; fo that the " whole earth is filled with the doctrine of the Lord " Chrift, and yet it increases; and the Gospel is preached " throughout the world, which in many places, when " prefent, I have feen, and, having learned, I therefore " declare the truth. In the island of Taphrobane [Cey-" lon] in the interior India, furrounded by the Indian fea,

" is a church of Chriftians. In like manner, in the country " called Male [Malabar], and in Kalliana [Calecut], is a " bifhop, who is confecrated in Perfia. Alfo in the ifland. called Diofcorides [Zocotora] are clergy ordained in Per-" " fia, and fent from thence into this island. Alfo among " the Bactrians, Hunns, Perhans, and other Indians, Pers-" Armenians, Medes, Elamites, throughout all the region. " of Perfia are churches innumerable, and bifhops, and " many martyrs: likewife, in Ethiopia, in Axomi, and in. " all that country. Among the inhabitants of Arabia-" Felix, now called the Homeritæ, throughout all Arabia, " Palestine, Phœnicia, and all Syria, and Antiochia, to: " Mefopotamia, among the Nobatæ and Garamantæ in " Egypt, Lybia, Pentapolis, Africa, and Mauritania, as " far as Gades to the fouth, are Christian churches wherein. " the Gofpel of Chrift is preached : again alfo, in Cilicia, " Afia, Cappadocia, Lazica, Pontus, and the northern " parts of Scythia, among the Hyrcani, Heruli, Bulgarians, "Helladici, Illyrians, Dalmatians, Goths, Spaniards, " Romans, Franks, and other nations, as far as Gades " in the South-fea, all believing and preaching the Gofpel " of Chrift. And thus we fee the prophefies accom-" plifhed in the whole world !" Upon the whole, the amazing progrefs that Christianity made in the world, when first promulgated, is a very strong argument in its favour. It was not propagated, at its commencement, during its grand increase, and while in its glory, by the fword, nor by tumult; nor enforced by the arts of vain philosophy, or the enticing words of man's wildom: it derived all its force and evidence from the power of God exerted in the performing of miracles; from the veracity of God in accomplishing the ancient prophefies; from the Spirit of God; from the voice of reason and truth, the blameles lives and heroic martyrdom of its professions, its own superior excellence, and the fuitableness of it to the exigencies of mankind. When we confider the number and characters of the Apostles,-how few ! how unqualified by education for the conversion of the world! when we know that some few fishermen, and others of the lower class, undertook and fucceeded in the eftablishing of a new religion in the world; we cannot deny them to have had the gift of tongues, and the power of working miracles. It is credulity unworthy of the most superstitious to believe, that such men as the apostles were, without those extraordinary powers which the Jews and Pagans, and more particularly such an artful impostor as Simon Magus, confessed them to have had, flould be able, in a fhort time, to propagate Christianity throughout the world. What have other men of superior parts and education been able to perform without miracles or force? See Raverette, Sharpe's Difcourse on Want of Universality, Matth. xxiv. 14. Acts, ii. 5. xiii. 47.

Ver. 19. Did not Ifrael know?] In this and the next verles, St. Paul feems to introduce the Jews as arguing, that they did not deferve to be caft off, becaufe they did not know that the Gentiles were to be admitted; and fo might 20 But Elaias is very bold, and faith, "I was made manifest unto them that asked not was found of them that fought me not; I after me.

might be excaled if they did not embrace a religion wherein they were to mix with the Gentiles: to which he anivers in this and the following verfes ; First, Moses faith, I will provoke you to jealoufy. Jealoufy is an affection of the mind excited by another's being our rival, or tharing in the honours or enjoyments which we highly efteem, which we account our own property, and which we are greatly defirous of fecuring to ourfelves. Thus the Jews moved God to jealoufy, by giving to idols the honour and worthip due to him alone, or by acting towards God in such a manner as usually creates jealousy in a man. For which reason it is predicted, Deut. xxxii. 21. that they fould be repaid in their own coin, and be moved to jealoufy :- How ?- By transferring from them the honours and privileges in which they gloried, to those whom they despiled;-to a lo-am, a no-people; that is, to the Gentiles. Lo-am, a no-people, or not a people, is the character of the heathen world, as not interested in the peculiar covenant of God. Therefore this text, as it lies in Deuteronomy, is full to the Apostle's purpose; and does not relate to their being conquered by heathen nations, but to their being firipped of boafted honours, and feeing them conferred upon those whom they contemned as the vilest people. How much the Jews were irritated at the preaching of the Gospel to the Gentiles is well known. See Matt. 11: 43, &c. Acts, 11: 21, 22. 1 Theff. ii. 15, 16.

Inferences.-It is certain, that we ought not to infer from the two last chapters, that God is a despotic, arbiwary fovereign, whole mere will, without the most perfect coincidence of all his moral perfections, is the only rule of all his actions. The great God, though he be fupreme and accountable to none, always governs himfelf by the eternal and unalterable rules of wildom, equity, and goodnels. His will is not itfelf, abstractedly confidered, the standard and measure of the divine conduct; but there is an intrinfic neceffary difference, in the nature of things, between just and unjust, beneficence and cruelty, which cannot be altered. Indeed, what God wills is always right and fit; always, upon the whole, fittest and best. But why? not merely because he wills it, but because he is neceffarily wife, just, and good. For can any man imagine, that if he should will to deceive, to vex and torment his innocent creatures, and employ his infinite power only to make them miferable, (which is a very possible supposition, if his will alone, in this abstract fense, be the rule of his proceedings,) fuch a conduct would be justifiable? Nay,-for ever this must be maintained, as a necessary confequence from fuch principles, that it would be better, and more praiseworthy, than righteousness, truth, and mercy ?

There cannot be a more diffonourable reflection on God, than to suppose that he acts without a reason, merely from humour, and arbitrary pleasure. It represents him as a tyrant, not as a wife and righteous governor. It renders him frightful to our contemplation, the object of aversion and horror, and destroys all rational effeem and love of him, and confidence in him. All reafonable expectations of favour from him must fink and vanish at once: for who knows how fuch a capricious being, who is not determined by reason and justice, but makes his mere will his only law,-who can know in what manner he will act ? What possible affurance can there be, that he will not refolve on the mifery and ruin of his rational creatures at all events and without any reafon? Nay, if he has promifed the contrary, can we have any certainty that the fame arbitrary will that made, will not alfo break the promife? Mere will and humour are fickle, uncertain, changeable things; but truth and goodness are steady principles, and a folid foundation for our truft and hope. We may add, that the reprefenting of God in this manner, renders him infinitely more formidable than any earthly tyrants ever were or can be; even those who have been the greateft fcourges and plagues of mankind; because he is poffeffed of almighty and uncontrollable power; and the thought of almighty power, that is not directed by wifdom and goodnefs, must fill the confiderate mind with the utmost aftonishment and terror. Shall we then give fuch a reproachful character of the most perfect, the most amiable of all Beings? Shall we picture the very beft of Beings as the very worft ? And reprefent Him, in whole unerring wifdom, flriet impartial juffice, and univerfal unchangeable goodnefs, the whole rational world have the higheft reafon to rejoice, as one whom every wife man must with not to exist?

We may next confider to what cafes the words of ch. ix. 20. may be properly applied : we hope it appears fufficiently from what has been faid in the course of the foregoing notes, that the paffages before us, which have been fo confounded and darkened by many expolitors, relate only to God's dealings with national and collective bodies of men; and not to his favour or displeasure towards particular perfons, and determining abfolutely, without any regard to their actions, their eternal state hereafter. The argument which St. Paul purfues is only this: " That God might difpenfe his extraordinary favours as " he faw fit; and confequently eminently diffinguish one " nation, and pafs by others, without the least lajuflice; " and to centure fuch a way of proceeding, in the Pro-" prietor and fovereign Disposer of all things, was arrogant " and prefumptuous." And hence we learn to what queftions the words in ch. ix. 20. may be properly and justly applied; namely, to fuch as these - Why God vouchfates a revelation of his will to fome nations and not to others? Why, for example, he has not made the Chriftian revelation univerfal ?- Why does he permit moral and natural evil ?---Why has he not made all creatures of the highest order, and communicated to all equal degrees of perfection and happines?-Nothing of this can be fhewn to be contrary to justice, because they are all favours. which his creatures have no right to claim. And therefore in these, and all other cases of a like nature, it is very per-L 2 tinent tinent to fay to an objector, Nay but, O man, who art thou that replieft against God?

Hence then we learn, 1ft, How neceffary it is that we confider the ufes to which paffages of Scripture are applied, —without arguing generally from what is only adapted to a particular cafe. This is one reafon why texts are fo perverted, and ftrained to fuch abfurd and unnatural fenfes, as are not only contrary to their true defign, and the general fcope and tenor of the revelation, but ftrike at the foundation of all religion.

2dly, Let us cultivate in our minds the highest reverence of God, especially the most honourable apprehensions of his moral character; and being perfuaded that all his counfels are the refult of infinite wildom, and that his will is ever determined by the highest reason, let us humbly acquiesce in all the methods of his grace and providence. Survey the works of God, the exquisite beauty and harmony of the whole, the admirable connection and fubferviency of the feveral parts; nay, furvey thy own frame, -the curious and altonishing ftructure of thy body,-the noble faculties and capacities of thy mind ;---and, from the furprising marks of wisdom and goodness, which thou canft not diffinctly perceive, in thine own make, and in the whole conftitution of things, draw the just and natural inference : that the great Author and Governor of the universe is possessed of these perfections, in the most absolute and complete manner; and confequently, that all things are contrived and ordered with the fame wife and benevolent view; though in particulars it does not appear equally, and in fome, perhaps, not at all, to thy limited understanding.

The improving conftantly in our minds worthy notions of God, as a Being fupremely wife, and immutably just and good, will be attended with very great advantages. It will reftrain that impertinent humour of fcepticifm and cavilling, which makes men oppose their ignorance and prejudices to his infinite wildom: we fhall always confider the great God as the most amiable and delightful object of our contemplation; neither as a weak, capricious being, whom we cannot reverence; nor as a rigid, tyrannical being, whom we cannot love. In fhort, our religion, built on the love of God in Christ Jefus our Lord, and embracing and coinciding with the whole round of his divine perfections, will be wife and rational, just and good, and holy; and there can be no foundation for any of those fuperflitions mixtures which expose the most excellent, most good and most useful thing in the universe, to the contempt and ridicule of the infidel and profane.

REFLECTIONS.—Ift, The Apoftle here,

1. Expresses his fervent defire for the falvation of his countrymen. Brethren, my heart's defire and prayer to God for Ifrael is, that they might be faved. Netwithstanding what he was, in the discharge of his office, compelled to fay concerning the general rejection of the Jews, he was yet affectionately defirous of their falvation, and ceaselefs in fupplications at a throne of grace that they might yet be convinced and converted, and thereby plucked as brands from the burning. Note; (1.) Thofe we preach to, we must fervently pray for, that God may give them repentance to the acknowledgement of the truth. (2.) They who know the value of immortal fouls, will feel their eternal interests warm upon their hearts.

2. He fpeaks most respectfully of them, For I bear them record, that they have a zeal of God, a fixed averfion to idolatry, a ftrong attachment to his law and divinely inflituted ordinances, and in their perfecutions of Christianity really think they do God fervice : but they are mifguided, and do not act according to knowledge; they understand not the nature and defign of the law, and have imbibed the ftrongest prejudices against the true Messiah, and the way of falvation which he has brought to light by the Gofpel. For they being ignorant of God's righteoufnefs, and going about to effablish their own righteousness, refting their acceptance before God on the footing of their own moral and ceremonial fervices, have not fubmitted to the righteousness of God, which he has provided and accepted in his dear Son, and which, embraced by faith, is, and can be, the only ground of the finner's justification before God. For Chrift is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. He alone immaculately fulfilled the moral law, and in his life and death fully fatisfied the demands of divine juffice; and he hath abolifhed the ceremonial law, being himfelf the fubstance of which that was the shadow. He alone therefore, being embraced by faith, can justify the finner before God. Note; Nothing is more fatally dangerous to the foul, than ignorance of the fpirituality of God's law, and of our own inability to answer its demands.

2dly, There are two methods of justification.

T. By the law; and that juftification is thus defcribed by Mofes, The man that doeth thefe things, all that is written in the book of the law, perfectly, univerfally, abidingly, without failure, flaw, or infirmity, fhall live by them, and be entitled to life eternal. But no fallen creature ever did, or ever can do this; therefore juftification and falvation are not this way attainable.

2. By the Redeemer's fubstitution in our stead, accompanied with faith in him. The law of works, in our prefent condition, only preaches despair; but the righteousness which is of faith, which God has provided and accepted, and faith embraces, speaketh on this wife, to the confcience burdened with fin and guilt; Say not in thine heart, as if despairing of justification before God, Who shall ascend into heaven, that is, to bring Christ down from above to make atonement for fin: it is needlefs, feeing that by one oblation, once offered, he has completed the great atonement. Or who fhall defcend into the deep? that is, to bring up Chrift again from the dead. This is already done, and God, by the refurrection of Jesus, has testified the full fatisfaction which has been made to his law and justice; fo that the bar to our acceptance before God is now removed. Instead, therefore, of the impoffibilities which guilty fear and unbelief belief would fuggelt, the Gofpel opens a door of hope to the milerable and the desperate. But what faith it ? Why, all that we can with and defire, to filence our terrors, and retire our drooping hearts. The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart ; brought near in the Gospel revelation, acknowledged, and made effectual by the Spirit to the believing heart; that is the word of faith which we preach, holding up Chrift as the glorious object, whom faith embraces: the tenor of our declarations, as authorized of God to speak, is this, that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jefus, as the true Meffiah, and fhalt behere in thine heart that God hath raifed him from the dead, the fail be faved. No works of the law, nor other title whatever, is needful to justification, but this; and all who, mouncing themselves, repose their whole confidence upon Jesus, as delivered for their offences, and railed for their jultification, are built on the only true foundation. For with the heart man believeth unto righteoufnefs; faith is not a mere notion entertained in the head, but the cordial fubmillion of the heart; and with the mouth confession is made of our faith before God and men unto falvation, there being an inleparable connection between true faith and real internal falvation; for the Scripture faith, whefeever believeth on him fall not be ashamed; whatever his condition has been, he will not now be ashamed of Christ; and howerer great his guilt has been, no condemnation now lies against him. Lord, in this faith may I be found, living and dying !

adly, Under the Gofpel dispensation, mankind are in fonc lense on a level, without respect to any people or nation. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Grat; both have finned, and come short of the glory of God; both muit be faved freely by grace, through the redemption which is in Jesus Christ, or perish everlastingly: fr the fame Redeemer, who is Lord over all, is rich in grace, and boundles in mercy unto all that call upon him, as perishing and helples without him. For, so it was foretold, Joel ii. 32. Whofoever (without exception) fball call upon the name of the Lord Jesus, depending faithfully upon his atonement, fball be faved, from guilt and fin. But if the Gentiles are included in the dispensation of the Gospel, then,

1. It was needful that the Gofpel should be preached to them; and St. Paul's brethren had no just ground for their enmity against him, because he was appointed the Apostle of the Gentiles. For bow then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? Faith is effential to the very being of prayer, and without it the service of the lip and the knee is vain and unprofitable; and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not beard? They must hear of Jefus in his faving offices, before they can poffibly truft in him: and how fhall they hear without a preacher, to make known to them the revelation of God's will? and how fhall they preach, except they be fent with a divine commillion? Note; Before any prefume to preach, let it be clear that they have a miffion from God. To run unfent is infolent prefumption.

2. The Gospel contains the best news that ever reached mortal ears, and should be matter of joy wherever it is carried; as it is written (Ifai. lii. 7.), How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! Which prophely terminated not in the joyful messages of Israel's deliverance from Babylon, but looked forward to the great redemption of Jesus, and that Gospel which his ministers should publish, a Gospel of peace, where God was, in Christ, reconciling finners to himself, and proclaiming the glad news of pardon and falvation to guilty and perishing fouls; and they who feel the comfort of the message, cannot but, for its fake, delight in and honour the messages.

3. Though the Gofpel in itfelf contained fuch a welcome meffage, yet in general both among Jews and Gentiles, it has been rejected. But they have not all obeyed the Gofpel, and yielded themfelves up to the Saviour. No; contrariwife, the generality of those to whom it is preached harden their hearts. For Efaias faith, forefeeing the little comparative fuccess which the ministers of Christ should meet with, Who hath believed our report? How few are found faithful among the many called? Yet the Gospel report is the favour of life unto life in them who are faved. So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, this being the ordinary means, and made effectual by the Spirit's power, that arm of the Lord which reveals Christ to the hearts of all that will believe.

4. But I fay, have they not heard, both Jews and Gentiles,, the Gofpel word? Yes, verily, their found went into all ther earth, and their words unto the ends of the world. And this extensive fpread of the Gofpel, by those preachers whom. God fent forth, however the multitude rejected the counfel of God, was a token of his good will to the Gentiles.

5. But I fay, did not Ifrael know that God defigned to fhew mercy to the Gentiles? Had they attended to their own prophets, they would have feen how groundlefs their imaginations were, that the bleffings of the Meffiah's kingdom fhould be confined to them, and the Gentiles excluded. For first Meses faith, for whom they profess peculiar veneration, I will provoke you to jealoufy by them that are no people, and by a fooligh nation I will anger you. The Gentiles were long excluded from the peculiar privileges.

of God's people, and, amidst all their wisdom, were in general entirely ignorant of spiritual things : to have them therefore now brought into the peculiar kingdom of the Meiliah, fhould have provoked a holy emulation in the Jewish nation; but it wrought a contrary effect, exciting the greatest bitterness and enmity against the converted Gentiles. He produces another Scripture, ftrongly proving the divine determination with regard to the calling of the Gentiles and the rejection of the Jews. Mofes had intimated it, but Efsias is very bold, and, with great plainnefs and freedom, foretels to his countrymen this mortifying event, and fuith, I was found of them that fought me not, I was made manifelt unto them that afked not after me, preventing the Gentiles with the bleffings of his goodnefs, and the calls of his grace, when they were in general without one thought of the true God, worfhipping their idols. But to Ifrael he faith, now to be rejected for their impenitence and obstinacy, All day long I have firetched forth my hands unto a difobedient and gainfaying people ; his patience therefore being wearied out, especially by their opposition to the Gospel, he abandons them to ruin. Note; (1.) If God had not first fought us, we should never have inquired after him. (2.) When the Lord has waited long to be gracious, and used the most powerful means to work upon the finner's heart,-if he ftill rejects the counfel of God against his own foul, justly does God decree, " My Spirit " fhall not always firive," and leaves him to the definetion which he has chosen.

CHAP. XI.

OUR Lord having declared to the clife priefts and elders of the Jews, that the kingdom of God was to be taken from the Jews and given to the Gentiles, Matt. axi. 43. also having foretold to the fame perfons the burning of Jerufalem, Matt. xxii. 7. and to his difciples the demolition of the temple, and the difperfion of the nation, on account of their unbelief, Luke, xxi. 24. we cannot think that the Christian preachers would conceal thefe things from their unbelieving brethren. Stephen feems to have spoken of them, Acts, v. 13. and St. Paul often. For the objection which he puts in the mouth of a Jew, Rom. iii. 3. Will not their unbelief deftroy the faithfulnels of God? is founded on his having affirmed that the nation was to be caft off, and driven out of Canaan. Farther, the fame Apostle, in chap. ix. of this epistle, has shewn, that without injuffice God might take away from the Jews privileges which he had conferred on them gratuitoufly; and even punish them by expelling them from Canaan for their difobedience. Wherefore that the foreknowledge of the evils which were coming on their brethren, might not affect the Jewish Christians too much, the Apostle, in this chapter, coniforted them, by affuring them that the rejection of the nation was not to be total, ver. 1-10.-Neither is it to be final, but for a limited time only, to make way for the entering of the Gentiles into the church, by whofe reception the Jews at last will be provoked to emulate them, and will receive the Gofpel; ver.  $r_1-i\delta$ . —On this occafion the Apoftle exhorted the Gentiles, now become the vifible church of God, not to fpeak with contempt of the Jews who were rejected, because if they themfelves became disobedient to God, they should in like manner be cast off; ver. 17-24.—Then, for the confolation of the Jewish converts, he affured them that, after the fulnels of the Gentiles is come into the church, the whole nation will be converted to the Christian faith, as was predicted by Ifaiah; ver. 25-27.

The great events in the divine difpenfations difplayed in this chapter; namely, the rejection and dispersion of the Jewish nation, the abrogation of the law of Moses, the general conversion of the Gentiles, and the future conversion and reftoration of the Jews, St. Paul was anxious to place in a proper light; becaufe the Jews, believing that no p.rfon could be faved out of their church, interpreted the prophefics concerning the calking of the Gentiles, of their conversion to Judaism. What impression his declarations concerning these events made on the unbelieving Jews of his own time, is not known. This only is certain, that in a few years after the Epiftle to the Romans was written, the Apostle's prediction concerning the rejection of the Jews, and the destruction of their religious and political conftitution, received a fignal accomplishment. Jerufalem was deftroyed by the Romans, the temple was thrown down to the foundation, and fuch of the Jews as furvived the war were fold into foreign countries for flaves. The Levitical worfhip, by this means, being rendered impracticable, and the union of the Jews as a nation being disfolved, God declared, in a visible manner, that he cast off the Jews from being his peculiar people, and that he had put an end to the law of Moles, and to the Jewish peculiarity. Wherefore, after the pride of the Jews was thus humbled, and their power to perfecute the Christians was broken, any opposition which, in their dispersed state, they could make to the Gospel was of little avail; and any attempts of the judaizing teachers to corrupt its doctrines, on the old pretence of the universal and perpetual obligation of the law of Mofes, must have appeared ridiculous. And this is what the Apostle meant, when he told the Romans, chap. xvi. 20. That the God of peace would bruife Satan under their feet forthy.-Farther, in regard that the Apoffle's predictions concerning the rejection of the Jews have long ago been accomplished, we have good reason to believe that the other events foretold by him will be accomplished likewife in their scalon; namely, the general coming of the Gentiles into the Christian church, and the conversion of the Jews in a body to the Christian faith, and their reftoration to the privileges of the people of God.

His difcourfe on these important subjects the Apostle concluded with remarking, that Jews and Gentiles, in their turn, having been disobedient to God, he has locked them all up as condemned criminals, that he might in one and the same manner have mercy on all, by bestowing on them, from mere favour, the blessings promised in the covenant with him? 'I have referved to myself feven thoufand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.

with Abraham, ver. 30-32. And being deeply affected with the furvey which he had taken of God's dealings with mankind, he cried out, as ravifued with the grandeur of the view, 0 the rickes, both of the wifdom and of the knowhdge of God! How unfearchable are his judgments, and his. way half finding out ! ver. 33, 34, 35.—Then he afcribed to God, the glory of having created the univerfe, and of preferving and governing it, fo as to make all things iffue in the accomplithment of those benevolent purposes, which his wildom had planned from the beginning, for making all his believing creatures happy, ver. 36.

In this fublime manner has the Apostle finished his difcourse concerning the difpensations of religion which have taken place in the different ages of the world. And, from his account, it appears, that thefe difpensations were adapted. whethen circumstances of mankind; that they are parts of a grand defign, formed by God, for delivering all that will believe of the human race from the evil confequences of in, and for exalting the faithful to the highest perfecton of which their nature is capable: and that both in is progress, and its accomplishment, the scheme of man's Alvation contributes to the effablishment of God's moral government, and to the displaying of his perfections in all their lustre to the whole intelligent creation. This grand Icheme, therefore, being highly worthy of God its author, the Epiftle to the Romans, in which it is fo beautifully diplayed in its feveral parts, is certainly one of the most ticial books of Scripture, and merits to be read with atuntion, not by Chriftians only, but by unbelievers, if they wilh to know the real doctrines of revelation, and what the infpired writers them felves have advanced, for fhewing the propriety of the plan of our redemption, and for confuting the objections which have been raifed, either against revelation in general, or any part thereof in paracular.

Va. 1, &c. I fay then, &c.] This chapter is of the prophetic kind. It was by the spirit of prophety that the Apolle forelaw the rejection of the Jews, which he fuppoles in the two foregoing chapters; for when he wrote this Epifile, they were not in fact rejected, feeing that their church and polity were then ftanding: but the event has proved that he was a true prophet; for we know that in about ten or eleven years after the writing of this letter, the temple was destroyed; the Jewish polity overthrown; and the Jews expelled the promifed land, which they have never been able to recover to this day. This, first, contime the arguments which the Apostle has advanced to elablish the calling of the Gentiles; for the Jews are in hat rejected; confequently our calling is in fact not invalidued by any thing which they have fuggested, relating to the perpetuity of the Molaical dispensation; but that dispenlation being wholly fubverted, our title to the privileges of God's church and people stands clear and strong. The with constitution alone could furnish objections against our claim; and the event has filenced every objection from: that quarter. Secondly, The actual rejection of the Jews: proves St. Paul to be a true Apostle of Jesus Christ, whofpake by the Spirit of God; otherwife, he could not have argued to fully upon a cafe which was yet to come, and of which there was no appearance in the ftate of things, when he wrote this Epiftle. This flould dispose us to pay great regard to the prefent chapter, in which he difcourfes concerning the extent and duration of the rejection of his countrymen, to prevent their being infulted and defpifed by the Gentile Christians. First, As to the extent of this rejection : it is not abfolutely universal; fome of the Jews have embraced the Golpel, and are incorporated into the church of God with the believing Gentiles. Upon the cafe of those believing Jews he comments, ver. 1-7. Secondly, As to the duration of it; it is not final and perpetual; for all Ifrael, or the nation of the Jews, who are now blinded, shall one day be faved, or brought again into the peculiar kingdom and covenant of God. Upon the ftate of those blinded Jews he comments, ver. 7. to the end of the chapter. His defign in difcourfing upon this fubject was not only to make the thing itself known, but partly to engage the attention of the unbelieving Jew; to conciliate his favour; and, if possible, to induce him to come into the Gospel scheme; and partly to dispose the Gentile Christians not to treat the Jews with contempt; (confidering that they derived all their prefent bleffings from the patriarchs, the anceftors of the Jewish nation, and were ingrafted into the good olive-tree, whence they were broken) and to admonish them to take warning by the fall of the Jews, that they improved their religious privileges, lest through unbelief any of them should relapse into heathenism, or perish finally at the last day. The thread of his difcourfe leads him into a general furvey and comparison of the feveral dispensations of God towards the Gentiles and Jews; which he concludes with adoration of the depths of the divine knowledge and wildom, exercifed in the various conflitutions crected in the world : ver. 30, &c.

This first verse is a question in the person of a Jew, who made the objections in the foregoing chapter, and continues to object here. The word 'Anúscato, rendered caft away, is very strong and emphatical. "Hath God abso-"lutely, universally, and for ever thrust his people away "from him?" See Acts, vii. 27. 31., xiii. 46., I Tim. i. 19. Instead of Wot,—Wot ye not,—and maketh interceffion; fome read, Know ye not—maketh complaint.

Ver. 3. Digged down thine altars] It hence feems, that though, according to the law there was only one altar for facrifice, and that in the place where God had fixed his peculiar refidence; yet, by fome fpecial difpenfation, pious perfons in the ten tribes built altars elfewhere. It is well known, at leaft, that Samuel and Elijah had done it; and perhaps they were either kept up, or others raifed on the fame frots of ground. Baal, or Baalim, (fee ver. 4.) was a general

Ver. 6. And if by grace] Here the Apostle has his cye upon the remnant of the Jews who had embraced the Gofpel, mentioned in the foregoing verfe; and he throws in this verfe to fhew them, that their flanding in the Christian church had no relation to or dependence upon their past or present observance of the law of Moses. Their standing in the church and covenant of God was according to the election of grace; grace, received by faith, was the only ground upon which they flood, and had a title to the privileges of God's people. The election of grace is not a particular act of fovereign grace, which fingled out fome few of the Jews, who deferved to have been caft off as well as the reft; but it is that general fcheme of grace, according to which God purposed to take into his church and kingdom any, among either Jews or Gentiles, who believed in Chrift; and the remnant of the Jews were taken in, not becaufe God fingled them out from the reft of their countrymen, by fuch a special act of favour as might have taken in all the Jews, had he fo pleased; but because they believed, and so came into the fcheme of election which God had appointed : out of which election they, as well as others, would have been excluded, had they, like the reft, remained in unbelief, and into which election all the Jews, to a man, notwithitanding they were all finners, would have been taken, had they all believed in Chrift. This, and the preceding verfe, may be paraphrafed thus: "So it is at this very time : " there is a remnant of the Jews, a confiderable numse ber, who have accepted of the grace of the Gospel, " and are the people of God, after the only true way of " choosing his people, which is by grace; and here, by " the way, (ver. 6.) let me put this remnant of the Jews, " who have embraced the Gofpel, in mind, that if their " ftanding in the church is of grace and favour, it is " wholly fo, and in no part or respect dependent upon " their observance of the law of Moles; for if it were, " grace would lofe its proper nature and ceafe to be " what it is; a free undeferved gift. On the other hand,

10 <sup>P</sup> Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not fee, and bow down their back alway.

II I fay then, <sup>a</sup> Have they flumbled that they fhould fall? God forbid: but rather through their fall falvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealoufy.

12 Now 'if the fall of them be the richés of the world, and the † diminishing of them

" were it true that they are invefted in the privileges of " the kingdom of Chrift by the observance of the law of " Mofes, then grace would be quite fet alide; for if it " were not, work, or the merit of obedience, would lofe " its proper nature, which excludes favour and free gift." See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 7. That which he feeketh for] Namely, that righteoufnefs, whereby he was to continue the people of God. See ch. ix. 31. It may be obferved, that St. Paul's difcourfe being concerning the national privilege of continuing the people of God, he fpeaks here, and all along, of the Jews in the collective term Ifrael; and fo likewife he calls by the name of election the remnant, which would remain his people, and incorporate with the converted Gentiles into one body of Chriftians; owning the dominion of the one true God in the kingdom that he had fet up under his Son, and owned by God for his people. See the preceding note. How the reft were blinded, fee 2 Cor. iii. 13, &c.

Ver. 3—10. According as it is written] We need not fuppole that the Apolle quotes these passages of Scripture as if they predicted the blindnefs and obduracy of the Jews in his time. It is fufficient for his purpole, if the cafe of wicked Jews in former ages thews the true reafon of the infidelity, obftinacy, and wretchednefs of the Jews who rejected the Gospel: for that is the point in view; not to prove that the infidel Jews were blinded, which was but too evident from their bitter opposition to the Gospel, and for wanted no proof; but to shew them the malignant cause and direful effects of their unbelief.

Ver. 11, 12. Have they flumbled—? &c.] The English reader may imagine that as the fame word fall is used in the translation, to it is in the fame word in the Greek. But their fall, and the fall of them, is  $\varpi_{2} \alpha \pi^{2} \omega \mu \alpha$ , the fame word which we render offence, ch. v. 15, 17, 18. whereas that they fould fall, is  $iv_{2} \ \varpi^{i} \sigma \omega \sigma i$ . Now  $\varpi_{1} \ \pi^{2} \omega$ , to fall, is used fometimes in a fense to very emphatical as to fignify being flain; and it is in this fense that St. Paul uses it here; when he fays, that they floudd fall, he means a fall quite destructive and ruinous: whereas by their fall, and the fall of them, he means no more than such a lapse as was recoverable; as in the case of Adam's offence. fave fome of them.

Through their fall, must imply only, " Through that which " occasioned their fall :" for it should be well observed, that the fall of the Jews was not in itself the cause or reason of the calling of the Gentiles, or of their obtaining falvation: for, whether the Jews had ftood or fallen, whether they had embraced or rejected the Gospel, it was the original purpose of God to take the Gentiles into the church; and that purpose, which he purposed when he made the covenant with Abraham, was the reason why the Gentiles were taken into the church,-and not the fall of the Jews. Nor, for the same reason, was their fall the necessary means of falvation to the Gentiles; for the unbelief of the Jews could be no caufe of the faith of the Gentiles. Therefore their fall must not be here understood imply, but under its proper circumstances, or in connecnon with its cause; or as connecting the dispensation which occasioned it. The extensiveness of the divine grace, which threw down the boundaries of their pecuharity, occasioned their fall; and thus through their fall falvation came to the Gentiles; or that which made them fall, brought falvation to us. Their fall is put for the caufe of their fall, by a metonymy of the effect; nor is this mode of speech objectionable, any more than that, 1 Cor. xi. 10. For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head, because of the angels; where power is put for a veil, the token of man's superiority, and the woman's subjection. And fo the glory of God, Rom. iii. 23. is put for that whereby God is glorified; and the enmity, Ephef. ii. 15. is put for the caufe of their enmity. Though the fame word is uled here and ver. 14. that is used ch. x. 19. which is there well enough rendered provoked to jealoufy ; yet in this place it is improperly translated in that manner : for it is to be understood here, in the good and laudable fense; namely, being excited to emulate the good and virtuous; and therefore should be rendered, to excite them to emulation. The extensiveness of the divine grace occasioned the fall of the Jews; which extensive grace brought falvation to the Gentiles. And the Jews feeing the Gentiles enriched with the honours of God's people, appearing illustriously in the gifts of the Spirit conferred upon them, ought to have been thereby convinced of their miltake, and excited by repentance and faith to have recovered the degree of. dignity whence they were fallen. Thus the Jews were fo far from being fallen beyond a possibility of recovering themselves through grace, that their full was so circumfanced, as to afford them a motive to be zealous in attempting to gain what they faw they had loft. See Locke.

Ver. 13, 14. For I fpeak, &c.] Some read these verses in a parenthefis, thus: (I fay to you, Gentiles, fo far as I am VOL II.

Magnify, unless when applied to the Most High, who never can be too highly exalted, in our language carries in it the idea of ftretching beyond the bounds of truth, or making a thing feem greater than it really is. The word is both 200. I glorify,-bonour : fo we render it, I Cor. xii. 26. and fo it should be translated here ;- I benour my ministry : for the word Sianonia, in the like cafe, is always rendered ministry. See Acts, xxi. 19., 1 Tim. i. 12, &c. St. Paul honour d his miniflry, by speaking magnificently of the state of the Gentiles, whom he had converted to the faith, in comparison of the poor and low condition to which the unbelieving Jews were reduced. His fenfe will appear, if in reading, ver. 12, 13. we lay the emphasis upon the RICHES of the world, the RICHES of the Gentiles. St. Peter fets the honours of the believing Gentiles, and the degraded state of the infidel Jews, in a still more striking contrast, I Pet. ii. 8, 9. They flumbled at the word, and are fallen ; but ye are raifed to the honour of being a chofen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people. Ver. 14. If by any means, &c.] The Apostle has generally very extensive and complicated views in writing; and it feems very evident, that he had not only intended to excite the Jews to emulation by turning their thoughts to the confideration of the privileges they had loft, but alfo that it was his aim to infinuate himfelf, and the Gofpel he preached, into the good opinion of the lews: for he cautions the Gentile against infulting the Jew; labours to give him an honourable opinion of the Jew; and fo explains the cafe of the Jew's present rejection, and future reception, as to difpose him to think favourably of the Gofpel difpenfation; which allowed him the opportunity of recovering himfelf through divine grace immediately, would he immediately repent and believe ; and which concurred with the prophets in afferting, that one day the whole nation would be glorioufly reftored. The Apoftle's affirming and arguing upon this event with fo much affurance and pleafure, had a natural tendency to foften the Jew, and incline him to think.

Ver. 15. The reconciling of the wor'd] See ch. v. 11. But life from the dead, means " to the world; to us Gentile "Chriftians; the world, reconciled and enriched by the caffing off of the Jews." When we were at first reconciled by being converted to the power of Chriftianity, we were raifed from the dead to a new life, ch. vi. 13. and the approaching glorious difpensation which the Apostle here speaks of, will again be to us as life from the dead.

23 And they alfo, if they abide not in unbelief, thall be graffed in : for God is able to graff them in again.

By which we may understand, that the future glory of the church, when this great event of the reftoration of the Jews shall take place, will be fo much more florious than its prefent state, as to appear to the people of God like a life from the dead. Numberlefs prophefies of the Old Testament evidently refer to this event; and the wonderful prefervation of the Jews, as a diffinct people, not only leaves a poffibility, but encourages our ftrong hope of it. When it shall be accomplished, it will be fo unparalleled, as neceffarily to excite a general attention, and to fix upon men's minds fuch an almost irrefiftible demonstration both of the Old and New Teftament revelation, as will probably captivate the minds of many thoufands of deifts, in countries profeffedly Chriftian; of whom, under fuch corrupt establishments as generally prevail, there will of course be increasing multitudes. Nor will this only captivate their understanding, but will have the greatest tendency through grace to awaken a fense of true religion in their hearts; and this will be a means of propagating the Gospel with an amazing velocity in pagan and Mahometan countries; which, probably, had been evangelized long ago, had genuine Christianity prevailed in those who have made a profession, and God knows, for the most part, a very fcandalous profession of its forms. See Doddridge, Hartley's Observations, vol. ii. p. 373. and Lardner's Dif-courses on "The Circumstances of the Jewish People, an " Argument for the 'Truth of the Christian Religion."

Ver. 16. For if the first-fruit be hely, &c.] Now if, &c. The Apostle makes use of these allufions to show that the patriarchs, the root of the Jewish nation, being accepted by God, and the few Jewish converts who at first entered into the Christian church, being also accepted of God, are as it were first-fruits, or pledges, that God will in due time admit the whole nation of the Jews into his visible church, to be together with the Gentile Christians his peculiar people again. By kely here is meant that relative holines, whereby any thing has an appropriation to God. See Locke. Instead of lump, Dr. Heylin reads, the whole product.

Ver. 17. Thou, being a wild olive-tree, &c. 7 This is another way of expressing the justification and election of us Gentiles; and it is also an incontestable proof, that we Gentile Chriftians are taken into the Abrahamic covenant, (for the Sinai covenant is abolifhed) as truly and fully as ever the nation of the Jews were. Confequently, any argument relating to our church privileges, taken from the nature of the Abrahamic covenant, must be just and valid; for we are grafted into the church, which fprung from that root, and are partakers of its fatnefs. It is to very little purpose to object, that it is unnatural to suppose an ignoble branch grafted on a rich ftock; for it was not neceffary that the fimile from inoculation flould hold in all its particulars; and the engagement to humility, arifes in a confiderable degree from the circumstance objected against. Had the scion been nobler than the stock, yet its dependence on it for life and nourifhment would render it unfit that it fhould boaft against it : how much more, when the cafe was the reverfe of what in human ulage is practifed; and the wild olive is ingrafted on the good! See Doddridge and Calmet.

Ver. 18. Boaft not against the branches] Though the great fault which most difordered the church, and principally exercised the Apostle's care in this Epittle, was from the Jews prefling the necessity of legal observances, and not brooking that the Gentiles, though converts to Christianity, should be admitted into their communion without being circumcised; yet it is plain from this verse, as well as from ch. xiv. 3. 10. that the convert Gentiles were not wholly without fault on their fide, in treating the Jews with diffeteem and contempt. To this also, as it comes in his way, he applies fit remedies, particularly in this chapter, and in ch. xiv. See Locke.

Ver. 20. Be not high-minded, &c.] Dr. Heylin connects this with the next verfe, thus: Be not prefumptuous, but fear, left God should not spare you, fince he did not spare even the natural branches.

Ver. 22. Behold therefore the goodness, &c.] What is here meant by goodness to the believing Gentile, as it stands opposed :

24 For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert graffed contrary to nature into a good olive-tree: how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be graffed into their own olive tree ?

25 For I would not, brethren, that 'ye should be ignorant of this mystery, left ye fhould be "wife in your own conceits; that *blindness in part is happened to Israel, " until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in.

26 And fo <sup>9</sup> all lfrael fhall be faved : as it is written, <sup>a</sup> There shall come out of Sion the through their unbelief;

Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodlines from Iacob:

27 'For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their fins.

23 As concerning the gofpel, 'they are enemies for your fakes: but as touching the election, they are beloved for 'the fathers' fakes.

poled to feverity against the rejected Jew, is very evident. It is the fame with falvation being come to them, ver. 11. with their being enriched, ver. 12. with their being grafted into the good olive-tree, ver. 17. with their having obtained mercy, ver. 30. with their being called and chofen, ch. ix. 24. It is, in short, the fame with their being justified by the grace of God, upon their faith.

Ver. 24. The olive-tree, which is wild by nature-which be the natural branches] The original in both these places is mata Quew, and therefore our translators should either have rendered it in the first claufe, The natural wild-olive tree, or in the latter, Which are branches by nature. See Heylin.

Ver. 25. The fulnefs of the Gentiles] The fulnefs of the Jour, ver. 12. is the whole body of the Jewilh nation proteding Christianity, and therefore the fulnefs of the Genills here must be the whole body of the Gentiles profesting Chtillianity. It is well remarked by Dr. Harris, that as this Epifile was written about the year 57, that is, long there the most remarkable conversion of the Jews by the fift preaching of the Apofiles, and after St. Paul had been about thirty years engaged in his work, it appears that the prophefies relating to the calling of the Jews were not accomplifhed then, and confequently are not yet accomplified. Dr. Whitby very juilly observes, that there is a double harvest of the Gentiles spoken of by St. Paul, in this chapter; the first called their riches, ver. 12. as confilling in the preaching the Gospel to all nations; whereby indeed they were happily enriched with divine knowledge and grace; the fecond, the bringing in their fulnefs, in the htter age of the world. See Locke, Whitby, Harris's Discourse on the Messiah, p. 91. Limb. Collat. p. 94. and Doddridge.

Ver. 26, 27. And fo] That is, by that means: fo the word worw; fignifies, John, viii. 59. The reference in this and the next verse to the Old Testament, is commonly supposed to point at Isai. lix. 20. But whether the Apostle directs to any particular prophesy, or to the curtent lense of all the prophets, is uncertain; though the latter opinion feems most probable. The restoration of the Jewish commonwealth, in a higher degree than seems to be yet accomplifhed, is, as we have before obferved, frequently fpoken of in the prophetic writings. See Locke and Whitby.

Ver. 28. They are enemies for your fakes ] Enemies fignify frangers, or aliens; that is to fay, fuch as are no longer to be the peculiar people of God: for they are called enemies. in opposition to beloved in this verse; and the reason given why they are enemies, makes it plain that this is the fenfe; namely, for the Gentiles' fake : that is, " they are rejected " from being the peculiar people of God, that you Gen-" tiles may be taken in to be the people of God in their " room," ver. 30. Enemies has the fame fignification. ch. v. 10. As concerning the Gofpel, enemies : that is, all those who not embracing the Gofpel, not receiving Chrift for their king and Lord, are aliens from the kingdom of God; -and all fuch aliens are called enemies : and fo indeed were the Jews now; yet they were, as touching the election, beloved; that is, not actually within the kingdom of the Meffiah, his people, but within the election which God had made of Abraham, Idaac, and Jacob, and their pofterity, to be his people; and fo God had ftill intentions of kinduels to them, for their fathers' lakes, to make them again his people. The cheftion is the fame with that mentioned ver. 5. and ch. ix. 11. Therefore the unbelieving Jews were not to caft off, as to be intirely deprived of the favour of God in a national fenfe; agreeably to what he had long before declared, Lev. xxvi. 44, 45., Deut. iv. 31. This clearly flews the nature of that election, concerning which the Apostle discourses in this and the two foregoing chapters. See Locke, and on ch. v. 11.

Ver. 29. For the gifts and calling of God, &c.] " For " the favours which God fhewed to those their fathers " in calling them and their posterity to be his people, he " does not repent of; but his promife, that they shall be " his people, shall stand good." So God's repenting is explained, Numb. xxiii. 19. See Elfner. K 2

Ver. 30, 31. For as ye in times paft, &c.] When the promife was made to Abraham, the calling of the Gentiles was not a fecondary defign, to take effect in cafe the Jew rejected the Gofpel, but an absolute purpose, to be accomplifhed whether the Jews complied or refufed. The refufal of the Jew was no way necessary to the calling of the Gentile; nor did the Apoltles preach to the Gentiles only because the Jews had refused to accept the Gospel. Had the Jews embraced the faith of Chrift, the Apolites would ftill have preached to the Gentiles. Their unbelief is evidently to be underftood, as their fall, and the caffing them off, ver. 11, 12. not fimply and absolutely, but considered under its proper circumstances, or in its cause; namely, that extensive grace, which threw down their peculiarity, in order to make room for the Gentiles, and to occasioned their unbelief. These verses may be paraphrafed thus : " For as you Gentiles, for many ages paft, " were in a state of alienation from God, yet not so as to " be totally and for ever excluded,-for you are now " taken into his peculiar kingdom by that method which " has occasioned the unbelief of the Jews;-fo in like " manner (ver. 11.) the Jews, in their turn, are through " infidelity that out of the prefent peculiar kingdom of " God; not to their utter exclusion, but to open a new • f cene, when, through the farther difplays of God's mercy " to you, they shall be taken into his kingdom again." See Locke, and on ver. 11.

Ver. 32. For God hath concluded them all, &c.] Them is not in the original, and fhould not be in the translation. Concluded is no English word in this place; the fense of the Greek verb ouverseis, be hath locked, or fbut up together, which may be properly rendered by the Latin word concludo; but we never in English use the word conclude to fignify to lock or fout up. The word in the original is found but in three places besides this, viz. Luke, v. 6. where it is well rendered inclosed ; and Gal. iii. 22, and 23. where in one verfe it is rendered very improperly concluded, and in the other fout up. All were locked up under fin, and the Jews in particular were locked up under the law; fo here God has locked up all together in unbelief. Now, as all Jews and Gentiles, before Chrift came, were locked up under fin, and the Jews were locked up under the law, condemning them to death ;---(not as if none of them could be faved, or be in a state of acceptance with God, but only fo far, and in this fense, as the ground of their pardon and redemption was not laid, or the price of their redemption was not paid, till Christ, by the facrifice of himfelf, took away the fin of the world;) fo here first the Gentiles, afterwards the Jews are locked up in unbelief; not as if they were therefore locked out of the favour of God, and excluded from eternal life; for unbelief is here to be understood, not in the absolute, but in the relative fense; -not in the abfolute fenfe, as it is a principle which renders a man wicked, but with reference to the kingdom of God in this world, or as it difqualifies a perfon from being a fharer in the honours and privileges of that kingdom.-It is unbelief in profession, which stands opposed, not to a life of holinefs and virtue, or of eternal happinefs in the world to come, but only to faith in profession. That the Apostle here means unbelief in this general relative fenfe, and only fo far as it excludes a perfon out of the prefent kingdom of God, is evident; for this verse stands in immediate connection with the two foregoing; and ALL here includes the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles in those verfes. But the unbelieving Gentiles are those (ver. 30.) who in times past had not believed God; but now, upon their conversion to Christianity, had obtained mercy ; confequently, they were the whole body of Gentiles, who, from the time when the covenant was made with Abraham, to the time when they embraced the faith of the Gofpel, had not believed God; that is, had not been numbered among the fubjects of his visible kingdom, as the Jews were during that period. And the unbelieving Jews are those (ver. 31.) who now do not believe God; but at last shall upon their conversion to Christianity, obtain mercy; confequently, they are the whole body of Jews, who, from the time of their rejecting the kingdom of God under the Meffiah, have not believed God; that is, have not been numbered among the fubjects of his visible kingdom, as the believing Gentiles now are. All this is clear; and therefore we may conclude, first, that the unbelief which the Apostle here. fpeaks of is not the faulty character of particular perfons, but the general profession of whole nations through a long tract of time : neither, fecondly, is it that unbelief which fubjects perfons to final condemnation; for that unbelief will not terminate in their obtaining mercy : but the unbelief under which the Gentiles were locked up, terminated in their obtaining mercy, and fo will the unbelief of the Jews alfo. Thirdly, the whole body of Gentiles, who embraced the Christian religion, obtained mercy; and fowill the whole body of the Jews, at the future period whereof the Apostle speaks; but evidently this relates to their being admitted to the privileges of God's kingdom in. this world; confequently their unbelief, which stands opposed to their obtaining mercy, relates only to their being excluded from those privileges. In fhort, the Apostle confiders the unbelieving Gentiles, during the Jewish peculiarity, as one body of men; which body of men afterwards obtained mercy, when they were taken into the visible church of God: and he likewife confiders the unbelieving Jews, from the time of their rejecting Chrift, to the future time of their conversion, as one body of men, who fhall then alfo obtain mercy, or be brought again into the peculiar kingdom of God. Therefore, as this obtaining of mercy is no other than the election about which he argues in this Epistle, it is certain he does not therefore mean that election only of particular perfons; but he means fuch an election as may be applied to bodies of men, with respect to their being taken into the kingdom of God in this world. very excellent, and fets the whole of this important fubject in a very clear light. " The unbelief," fays he, " here " charged nationally on Jews and Gentiles in their turns, " in this and the two preceding verfes, whereby they " ceafed to be the people of God, was evidently the dif-" owning of his dominion; whereby they put themfelves " out of the kingdom which he had and ought to have " in the world, and fo were no longer in the ftate of fub-" jetts, but aliens and rebels. A general view of man-"kind will lead us into an eafler conception of St. Paul's " doctrine, who through this whole Epittle confiders the " Gentiles, Jews, and Christians, as three distinct bodics " of men. God, by creation, had no doubt an unquef-" tionable fovereignty over mankind, and this was at first " acknowledged in their facrifices and worfhip of him. " Afterwards they withdrew themfelves from their fub-" million to him, and found out other Gods, whom they " worshipped and ferved. This revolt from God, and the " confequence of it, God's abandoning them, St. Paul " describes, ch. i. 18-32. In this state of revolt from " God were the nations of the earth in the time of Abra-" ham. And then Abraham, Ifaac, and Jacob, and their " posterity the Israelites, upon God's gracious call, re-" turned to their allegiance to their ancient and rightful "King and Sovereign; owned the one invisible God, " creator of heaven and earth, for their God, and fo be-" came his people again, to whom he, as to his peculiar " people, gave law. And thus remained the diffinction " between Jews and Gentiles, that is to fay, the nations, " as the word fignifies, till the time of the Meffiah; and " then the Jews ceased to be the people of God, not by a " direct renouncing the God of Ifracl, and taking to them-" felves other falfe gods whom they worfhipped ; but by " opposing and rejecting the kingdom of God, which he " proposed at that time to set up with new laws and infti-" tutions, and to a more glorious and spiritual purpose, " under his Son Jefus Chrift ; him God fent to them, and " him the nation of the Jews refused to receive as their " Lord and Ruler, though he was their promifed King " and Deliverer, anfwering all the prophetics and types of " him, and evidencing his miffion by his miracles. By " this rebellion against him, into whose hand God had " committed the rule of his kingdom, and whom he had " appointed Lord over all things, (and who himself is God " over all, bleffed for ever,) the Jews turned themfelves " out of the kingdom of God, and ceased to be his people, " who had now no other people but those who received and " obeyed his Son as their Lord and Ruler. This was the " artifua, unbelief, here spoken of. And I would be " glad to know any other fense of believing or unbelief,

" wherein it can be nationally attributed to a people (as " vifibly here it is), whereby they fhall ceafe, or come to " be the people of God, or vifible fubjects of his kingdom " here on earth. Indeed, to enjoy life and eftate in this, " as well as other kingdoms, not only the owning of the " prince, and the authority of his laws, but alfo obedience " to them is required: for a Jew might own the autho-" rity of God, and his law given by Mofes, and fo be a " true fubject, and as much a member of the common-" wealth of Ifrael as any one in it, and yet forfeit his life " by difobedience to the law. And a Chriftian may own " the authority of Jefus Chrift, and of the Gofpel, and " yet forfeit eternal life by his difobedience to the precepts " of it; as may be feen, ch. vii. viii. and ix."

Ver. 33. O the depth, &c.] 'This emphatical conclution feems in an efpecial manner to regard the Jews, whom the Apoftle would hereby teach modefty and fubmiffion to the over-ruling hand of the all-wife God, unfit as they are to call him to account for his dealing fo favourably with the Gentiles. "His wifdom and ways are infinitely above "their comprehension; and will they take upon them to "advife him what to do? Or is God in their debt?—Let "them fay for what, and he shall repay it to them." This is a strong rebuke to the Jews, but delivered, as we fee, in a way very gentle and inotfensive: a method which the Apostle endcavours every where to observe towards his nation. See Locke.

Ver. 35. Or who hath first given to him, &c.] This has a manifelt respect to the Jews, who claimed a right to be the people of God fo far, that St. Paul (chap. ix. 14.) finds it neceflary to vindicate the justice of God in the cafe; and here also, in this question, he exposes and filences the folly of any such presence. See Locke.

Ver. 36. For of him, &c.] Of him, as the original author; through him, as the gracious preferver; and to or : for him, as the ultimate end, -are all things : For his plea-fure all things were created ; by his providence all things. are preferved; to his glory all things terminate. Antoninus, speaking of nature (by which he evidently means God), has an expression which one would imagine he had borrowed from this of St. Paul, Et ou warra, ev con warra, EIS OF WAVTA, -" All things are of thee, in thee, and to thee." Thus, fays Mr. Locke, St. Paul concludes, with a very. folemn epiphonema, that admirable evangelical difcourfe to the church at Rome, which had taken up the eleven foregoing chapters. It was addreffed to the two forts of converts, viz. Gentiles and Jews; into which, as into two distinct bodies, he all along through this Epistle divides. all mankind, and confiders them as fo divided into two separate corporations. 1. vours to fatisfy them, that though they for their apoftacy from God to idolatry, and the worthip of falfe gods, had been abandoned by God, had lived in fin and blindnefs, without God in the world, ftrangers from the knowledge and acknowledgment of him, yet that the mercy of God through Jefus Chrift was extended to them, whereby there was a way now opened to them to become the people of God. For fince no man could be faved by his own rightrousness, no, not the Jews themselves, by the deeds of the law, the only way to falvation, both for Jews and Gentiles, was by faith in Jefus Chrift. Nor had the Jews any other way now to continue themselves the people of God, than by receiving the Gofpel; which way was opened alfo to the Gentiles, and they were as freely admitted into the visible kingdom of God, now erected under Jesus Chrift, as the Jews, and upon the fole terms of believing. So that there was no need at all for the Gentiles to be circumcifed to become Jews, that they might be partakers of the benefits of the Gospel. 2. As to the Jews, the Apoltle's other great aim in the foregoing difcourse is, to remove the offence which the Jews took at the Gofpel, becaufe the Gentiles were received into the church as the people of God, and were allowed to be fubjects of the kingdom of the Meiliah. To bring them to a better temper, he flews them, from the facred fcripture, that they could not be faved by the deeds of the law, and therefore the doctrine of righteoufnefs by faith ought not to be fo ftrange a thing to them. And as to their being for their unbelief rejected from being the people of God, and the Gentiles taken-in in their room, he fhews plainly, that this was foretold them in the Old Teftament; and that herein God did them no injuffice. He was Sovereign over all mankind, and might choofe whom he would to be his peculiar people, with the faith : be not high-minded, but fear, &c. ver. 20. For if we fame freedom that he chofe the potterity of Abraham among all the nations of the earth, and of that race choie the descendants of Jacob before those of his elder brother Efau, and that before they had a being, or were capable of doing good or evil. In all which difcourfe of his, it is plainthe election fpoken of has for its object only nations or collective bodies politic in this world, and not particular perfons, in reference to their eternal state in the world to come.

Inferences .- It appears from this prophetic chapter, as well as from many striking predictions in other parts of Scripture, that the Jews will hereafter be reftored to the favour and protection of their God, and will become with the Gentiles one fold, under one shepherd, Jesus Christ. For this purpose they are remarkably preferved a diffinct and feparate people from all the nations of the earth; and nothing can afford a more ftriking proof of the truth of the Christian religion, than their present subsistence as a people, together with all the peculiar circumstances of their state and difpersion. With a view to them we may observe, that fome evidences of the truth of our holy faith are not weakened, but rather gain force by length of time. Jefus often fpoke of many coming from the east and the west, and from the north and the fouth, to fit down with Abraham, and I/aac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven ; that is, to partake of the privileges of the Gofpel, and the bleffings of the Melliah's kingdom: fo long therefore as there are Gentiles in the world, who thankfully embrace the Gofpel, this declaration is fulfilled; and the longer it is fince thefe words were fpoken, the more are they verified; and every accession to the church of Christ from among ignorant and darkened Gentiles, is a fresh confirmation of the truth of his doctrine. The difperfion of the Jews, the longer it lafts, still more and more strengthens the evidences of the Christian religion; it is the more remarkable; it is a plainer and more affecting token of divine difpleasure against them; it affords greater assurance that the Messiah. is already come; and it is rendered the more impoffible for any man to prove himfelf of the tribe of Judah, and the family of David, whence the Meiliah was to arife. For these reasons their present dispersion is prolonged, and may it be duly attended to by all to whom the confideration of it may be of use!

St. Paul directs us to confider thefe things as warnings; Becaufe of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standeft by improve not our privileges, the glory may depart from us alio. The feven churches of Afia in the book of Revelation were warned, and most of them threatened with the removal of their candlestick, unless they speedily repented, and did their first works. Many Christian churches, planted by. the apostles of Jesus, and watered by their fellow-labourers, have fallen to decay and ruin: the name and title of Christian will not fave particular perfons in the day of judgment; nor will the name of Jesus or Christian alone focure churches and societies in this world. There should be not only the leaves of a fair profession, but also fruits of love and peace, and all the branches of righteousness and true holinefs. Christians should have heavenly minds, and and their lives thould be adorned with acts of meeknefs, patience, felf-denial, and zeal for each other's welfare. Chrift will dwell with fuch. They honour him, and he will honour them with a diftinguished care and protection.

We learn from the Apostle's arguments, that as in past ages the Jews had been of great fervice in upholding religion in the world, and from them at length it was brought to the Gentiles; fo when in the end the Jews are conrerted to the faith of Christ, it will be perhaps in some measure through the Gentiles; and probably upon fome more general conversion of the latter than has yet been. See ver. 30, 31. But whenever this general conversion of the Jews to the faith of Jefus takes place, they will become Christians indeed, and their fondness for the rites of the Molaic law will ceafe, that they and the Gentiles may become one people and one flock.

We have good reafon to with and pray for that great event,—that the fulnefs of the Gentiles may be brought in. In the mean time, we thould both labour for the conversion of ignorant Gentiles, and do what lies in our power to excite the people of the Jews to emulation, by the fimplicity of our worship, the purity of our faith, and the holinels of our lives.

From the ftate of things represented to us in this chapter, we cannot fail to admire the exceeding riches of the wildom and goodnefs of God, who has graciously afforded mankind in all ages helps, more or lefs, for knowing the great truths of religion. God ever fpoke to all by the ferret infpiration of his Holy Spirit : when that was not duly attended to, and the danger of universal ignorance became great, he separated a family, that of Abraham, from the reft of the world; and of a part of it he made a great nation, to whom he gave a law; and who thereby were fet up as a lamp upon a hill, to lighten the world around them. Among them, by his grace and by frequent interpolitions of his wile and powerful providence, religion was maintained, and they were kept a diftinct nation, enjoying many privileges until the Meffiah came, and religion was spread far and wide in the nations of the earth, according to promifes made long before: and then the Jews generally rejecting that bleffing, God caft them off from being his people, as they had been, and poured down upon them dreadful tokens of his displeasure; yet not destroying them utterly, but making use of them, even under afflictions, to support the truth of the mission and authority of his only-begotten Son, whom they had crucified.

Nor is there herein any injustice, or unkindnes; for still they are provoked to jealoufy by those who are taken in their room: and in this respect they now enjoy an advantage with regard to religion, beyond what the Gentiles had formerly. For then it was the nation of the Jews only, to whom God was known; and many of the nations of the earth were remote from them. But the unbelieving Jews, for the most part, live among or near the followers of Jefus, and have better opportunities to inform themfelves of the principles of their religion, than the Gentiles had of old to know that of the Ifraelites.

And the wifdom of divine Providence in the former and the latter difpenfation is admirable, as the Apostle observes at the end of this chapter, ver. 30-36. on addreffing himfelf to Gentile Christians; a passage, whence we may conclude with St. James at the council at Jerufalem, that known unto God are all his works from the beginning. Acts, xv. 18.

It may moreover be reafonably fuppofed, that it will be highly delightful in the heavenly flate to know and obferve the various methods of divine Providence, relating to his creatures in the world where we have lived; particularly to obferve the manifold defigns of wildom and goodness, with regard to the concerns of religion.

A wife, pious, and difcerning perfon has now great delight and profitable entertainment in reviewing thefe works of divine Grace and Providence, as recorded in the Scriptures of the Old and New Teftament; but the difcoveries in a future state must be incomparably more full and complete, and confequently more delightful. We shall then fee the overfpreading deluge of ignorance in fome places and ages, the wonderful fteps by which light was reftored, and all the virtue of the inftruments raifed up and employed by God; the faithful and difinterested zeal with which they ferved God, and promoted the welfare of their fellow-creatures; and how even afflictive events fubferved beneficial defigns. And though fuch extensive knowledge fhould not be the portion of those who are finally feparated from God, yet there will be a remembrance of things paft; what men have done and neglected to do; what means of knowledge were offered them in this world; what convictions they had of duty; what helps they enjoyed for fecuring a holy and virtuous life and conduct, and ftrengthening them against temptations; in short, to bring them to Chrift and eternal falvation,-and how they failed to improve those many advantages !

How piercing must it be, in the place of torment, for a descendant of Abraham, who lived in the time of our Lord, to recollect the gracious words he heard from his mouth ! That though Jefus taught in the freets of his city, and in the most winning manner promised everlasting life to fuch as believed in and obeyed him; and though he performed numerous miracles, healing and beneficial, fuited to the goodness of his doctrine, and tokens of inexpressible mildnefs and benevolence,-yet he despifed and abused this amiable Perfon! And though he knew that the prophets had spoken of a great Deliverer to arise among them, and it was the prevailing opinion that that was the very time prefixed for his coming ; he would not hearken to him, nor regard him, because of some groundless prejudices, and too ftrong an affection for worldly possefions and enjoyments.

body, and all members have not the fame office:

5 So we, being many, are one body in Chrift, and every one members one of another.

* Ver. 4. 1 Cor. 10. 17. & 12. 12-28. Eph. 1. 23. & 4. 4, 25. & 5. 21, 23, 30. Col. 1. 24. & 2. 19.

In like manner, to how many others also will not-the recollection of religious, of Chriflian privileges, not improved, but rejected and abused, be matter of torment and vexation !--- For instance, Children of pious parents, who fet at nought all their counfel, and will have none of their reproofs ! Servants, who are averse to the order and restraint of religious families, and offended at daily devotions and frequent readings of the Scripture, or other books of picty; who choose the habitations of the wicked, where there is not fo much as a form of godlinefs, or an appearance of religion, and prefer the company and manners of the diffolute, who are a reproach to human nature !- A Chriftian, partaking in all the ordinances of the Gofpel, yet acting contrary to the obligations he is under !- A minister in God's house, shewing to others the way to falvation, but not walking in it himfelf !---

How grievous must the recollection of fuch advantages be hereafter, if finally abufed and difregarded! What confolation can then be given to the trembling fouls of men?—Alas, the fad reflection on their own folly will be unavoidable, and for ever incurable!

May we therefore be wife to know and mind the things of our peace, now in this our day !—Securing time, while we have it, for ferious reflections on our conduct and our advantages, and comparing our light and knowledge with our actions and purpofes! For between thefe there ought, there must be an agreement, or miferable will be the confequence. Where much is given, much may and will be expected: and the fervant who knew his Lord's will, and did it not, fhall be beaten with many firipes. Luke, xii. 47.

These are certain truths :- these are things which will fome time afford either a pleafing and comfortable, or an afflictive and forrowful recollection to the foul. It is an aweful and awakening observation of our Lord :- This is the condemnation, That light is come into the world, and men loved darknefs rather than light, becaufe their deeds were evil, John, iii. 19. If any of us thould perifh, have we not reafon to dread this aggravated condemnation ?--- For we must be fenfible that we have had fufficient instruction to affure us, that things above are preferable to things on this earth; that nothing therefore ought fo to divert and engage us, as to prevent our laying up to ourfelves treafures in heaven ; and that we ought to order our prefent concerns, and the whole of our conversation, in such a manner as may best promote our most important interests,-the everlasting falvation and happinels of our fouls. See Lardner, and on ver. 11.

REFLECTIONS.—If, Nothing could be more grating to the Jews than this fubject of their rejection; and fome one might fay, Hath God ccfl away bis people? God forbid.

1. Though some are cast off through unbelief, yet all are not unbelievers.

2. If the nation of Jews in general be at prefent abandoned through their rejection of the Gospel, the Gentiles are called into the Melliah's kingdom.

3. The time will come when the Jews shall be brought back, and admitted into the peculiar church of the Mefsiah.

[1.] Though fome are cast off through unbelief, yet all are not unbelievers: of this St. Paul was himself an instance. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin; and though none shewed greater bitternels against the Gospel, yet have I obtained mercy; and multitudes befides, of the Jewish people, share the fame bleffing, for God hath not caft away his people, which he foreknew would believe, and be faithful to his grace: and these were more than might be at first imagined, as was the cafe in the days of Elias, when, on account of their general defection to idolatry, and perfecution of God's prophets, that zealous reformer complained to God as if he was left alone, and his life daily in jeopardy; and, from the melancholy appearances could not but conclude that the people were ripe for ruin. But God informs him that, bad as things were, he had ftill feven thousand faithful worshippers, who had not bowed to Baal; even fo then at this prefent time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace,-who accede to the election of grace by believing. Note ; (1.) There are many more faithful fouls, than we, looking round on the general apoftacy, are ready to fuppofe. (2.) When religion is out of countenance, it is a great thing to dare to be fingular, and not bow the knee to Baal.

What then is the cafe? Why the fact is evident, Ifrael hath not attained that which he feeketh for; the reafon of which is given, chap. ix. 31, 32. but the election hath attained it, through faith in Jefus, and the rest were blinded, left to their impenitence and unbelief, and perifing by the fentence of that law, for their obedience to which they expected juftification before God. Note; (1.) They who trust in whole or in part on their works for juftification, make Chrift to have died in vain, and the grace of God of no effect. (2.) They who trust on their own rightcoufnefs, are ever most hardened against the Gospel method of falvation.

In proof of what he had alleged, terrible as it might appear to fome, he appeals to the Scriptures, according as it is written, God hath given them the fpirit of flumber, eyes that they fould not fee, and ears that they fould not bear unto this day. They are funk into flupidity and infenfibility, and in juft judgment for their rejection of all the means, mercies, and corrections vouchfafed to them, especially for their wilful unbelief of the Gospel, God has abandoned them to a reprobate mind. And, to the fame effect, David faith, when speaking of the enemies of the Meffiah, Let their table be made a fnare, and a trap, and a flumbling-block; and a recompence unto them. The altar, and all the ritual fervice on which they depended, would prove the means of their ruin; or those bounties of Providence, which they abufed abufed to pride and luxury, fhould intoxicate them, and, like drunken men, for the punifhment of their infidelity, they fhould flumble into perdition. Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not fee; fince they hate the light, they fhall be left in blindnefs; and bow down their back alway, under perpetual bondage and fervitude, enflaved by the powers of the earth, and more enflaved by worldly-mindedneis, by fin and Satan. N.te; (1.) Of all judgments, fpiritual ones are most to be dreaded, and yet are usually least perceived. (2.) They who mind earthly things, cannot but walk in darknefs.

[2.] Though the Jews were cash off for a while from the peculiar kingdom of the Methah, the Gentiles were called into the church.

I fay then, have they flumbled that they flould fall, utterly and irrecoverably? God farbid : but rather, fo hath God ordered it in his providence, that through their fall falvation is come unto the Gentiles (fee Acts, xiii. 46, 47.), for to pro-whe them to jealoufy; that, ashamed to be outdone by the Gentiles, they may be stirred up to a noble emulation. Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminifying of them the riches of the Gentiles, God in his infinite wildom and mysterious defigns, making the apostacy and obflinacy of the Jews the occasion of spreading his Gospel the sooner among the Gentiles, whom he is pleased to earich with the abundance of his grace ; how much more will the Gentiles be confirmed in the faith, and the multitude of converts increase when they shall see their fulnes, the reftoration of the difperfed Jews to their forfeited privileges, when at the last they shall be turned to the Lord ? For I freak to you Gentiles, for your comfort and caution, inafmuch as I am the apofile of the Gentiles, particularly appointed of God to preach the Gospel to you; I magnify mine office, I glory in my employment, and blefs God for having honoured me fo far as to appoint me thereunto. And this I lay, If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my fligh, to outfirip the Gentiles, ashamed to be exteeded by them in faith and holinefs, and might thus fave fime of them, by leading them to Christ for pardon, grace, and eternal life; for, as I faid, if the caffing away of them be the recinciling of the world, the Gospel, through their infidelity, being fent unto the Gentiles, what shall the re-uring of them be, but life from the dead? How furprising and delightful will that great event be, when the Jews in general shall be converted to Christ, and restored to the church as men raifed from the dead; and their conversion inspire the Gentiles with fresh life and vigour ! For if the ful-fruit be holy, and fome few converts of the Jewish people now appear the pledges and earnest of what God will do for the nation hereafter, the lump is alfo holy, and they thall at last be confectated as a nation to God: and if the tet be hely, Abraham and the patriarchs, from whom the Jews descended, confidered as their federal head, to whom and his feed the promifes were made, fo are the branches ; they have a relative holinefs in virtue of their defeent; and, though at present their unbelief cuts them off from all Yoz, 11.

the privileges of the covenant, yet for the fathers' fake, in future ages God's love to them, as a nation, shall appear, and they fhall again be received into the bofom of his church. And if some of the branches be broken off, for their unbelief, and thou, a Gentile, being a wild olive-tree, by birth an alien from the commonwealth of Ifrael, and a ftranger to the covenants of promife, wert graffed in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatnefs of the olive-tree, admitted in common with Abraham's natural descendants, who believe, to fhare in all the bloffings and privileges of the peculiar covenant of the Melliah, boast not against the branches, looking down with form on the Jews, who for their infidelity are broken off; but if thou beaff, and grow proud of thy advancement, remember thou bearoft not the root, but the root thee, and all the mercies thou enjoyeft are from the Jews; from them, according to the flefh, Chrift defcended; the first preachers of the Gospel were of their nation; and all thy church privileges are derived from Abraham, the great father of the faithful: therefore this people, though now fallen, mult not be trampled upon. Thou wilt fay, then, perhaps, The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in; I was preferred to them, and have reason to effect myself above them. Well; because of unbelief they were broken off; it was not on account of any goodneis in you, but becaufe of their own infidelity; and theu flandest by faith, not holding your privileges on account of any defcent, but through God's free grace in Chrift Jefus: and therefore all boafting is excluded. Be . Cons not then high-minded : but fear, left you also i the fame example of unbelief. For if God , natural branches, take heed left he alfo fpare not thee; if the Gentiles imitated their pride and unbelief, they might much more apprehend he would deal with them in the fame manner, and deprive them of all the privileges to which he had admitted them. Behold therefore, and admire, the goodnefs and feverity of God : on them which fell, he hath exercised just feverity, cutting them off from his visible church, and depriving them of all the privileges of his peculiar people; but toward thee, unworthy as thou art, he hath fhewn the most transcendant goodness, admitting thee, a despited idolatrous Gentile, into his kingdom, and will continue to blets thee, if thou continue in his goodness, and do not abuse the merciful dispensation, under which you at prefent stand, by pride and infidelity: otherwise thou also shall be cut off: and no nominal protection of Christianity, if the heart prove apostate, will fecure any man from the wrath of God.

[3.] There is full hope in the end, that all liracl, as a nation, notwith/tanding their prefent rejection, fliall at laft be converted and faved. And they alfo, if they abide not ftill in unbelief, fhall be graffed in : and when they receive the Gofpel, and believe in Jefus as the Meffiah, fhall be readmitted into the vifible church, for God is able to graff them in again, as the children of believing Abraham. Nor is this at all inconceivable or improbable; for if they neer cut out of the clive-tree, which is wild by nature, fprung from the Gentile flock, which was out of the peculiar covenant, and wert graffed contrary to nature into a good olive-tree, which is like grafting a wild fcion on a good tree, how much more shall these which be the natural branches, and defcendants of Abraham, be graffed into their own olive-tree, and be received into the Gofpel church, which was once wholly confined to their people and nation, —if they be-lieve? For I would not, brethren, that ye fould be ignorant of this mystery, (left ye should be wife in your own conceits ; puffed up with an opinion of your own excellence, and fancying that the favour of God is henceforth to be confined to you alone,) that blindnefs in part is happened to Ifrael, and they are left to their unbelief for a while, until the fulnefs of the Gentiles be come in, when in the latter days the nations of the earth shall, in a more general manner than ever become obedient to the faith. And fo all Ifrael fhall be faved; in general they shall be brought into the Gospelchurch, and converted to the Lord: as it is written, There fball come out of Sion the Deliverer, and fball turn away ungodlinefs from Jacob; the adored Meffiah in the last days shall go forth in the power of his Gospel, and by the efficacy of his word and Spirit fhall bring the fons of Jacob, the Jews at large, into his Gospel-church. For this is my covenant unto them; and he will fulfil his promifes, as will be feen in the latter day; when I fhall take away their fins, freely pardoning, for his name's fake, all that is paft, and receiving into the arms of his love all that fhall embrace in faith the true Melliah.

Upon the whole, then, the state of the case stands thus : As concerning the Gospel, they are at prefent enemies to it, and permitted fo to be for your fakes, that the Gospel might be the fooner and farther diffused through the Gentile world (Acts, xiii. 46, 47.). But as touching the election of them as a nation to be his peculiar people, they are belowed for the Fathers' fakes ; and though for the prefent abandoned, yet there is full mercy in flore for the nation. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance ; God having made his promifes to Ifrael, as a chofen nation, they shall affuredly be called again into his church. For as ye in times paft have not believed God, but lived without him in the world, ferving flocks and flones, yet have now obtained mercy, through God's boundless grace admitted into the fellowship and privileges of the Gospel, through their unbelief, who put that Gospel from them : even fo have thefe alfo now not believed, have been left to their infidelity, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy; provoked to emulation by you, and led by faith to embrace the fame Redeemer, through whom the Gentiles have found acceptance with God. And this conversion of the Jews is at leaft as likely, and will be as fure, as the conversion of the idulatious Gentiles. For God bath concluded them all in unbelief; both Jews and Gentiles have been left by turns out of the visible church; that he might glorify the riches of his grace towards both, and bave mercy upon all; upon the body of Jews and Gentiles in general, making them at laft one fold under one Shepherd.

2dly, Having evidently reconciled the rejection of the Jews with the justice and goodness of God, and shewn that there was mercy yet in store for them; in the view of this aftonishing dispensation the Apostle breaks out, O the depth of the riches both of the wifdom and knowledge of God ! how unfearchable are his judgments, and his ways paft finding out ! Farther the Apostle dares not pry into the divine counfels, but stands admiring on the ocean's brink, and cries, O the depth of the riches of that grace, which both Jews and Gentiles experience, unworthy as they are of the leaft of it! What wildom and knowledge appear in the contrivance of this admirable fcheme, planned in the divine mind, to make even the rejection of the Jews fubfervient to the calling of the Gentiles; and their converfion, the means at last of restoring the Jews as a nation to the divine favour. These counfels are too deep for us to fathom; and the methods which in his providence he takes to effect his own purpofes, are beyond our ken; we are loft in the labyrinth, of which he who is infinite in wildom only holds the clue. For who hath known the mind of the Lord? what creature ever pried into the deep things of God, or could fathom his infinite wildom? Or who hath been his counfellor? nor man nor angel was confulted in planning his defigns of grace. Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompeused unto him again? Who can claim any thing by right from him? He is debtor neither to Jew nor Gentile; and how then dare any arraign his. procedure, or fay unto him, What doeft thou? For of him, and through him, and to him are all things; all things in nature and providence own him their former and upholder, their efficient caufe and ultimate end; to whom therefore it is most fit, that the faints upon carth, and the exalted fpirits in heaven, fhould afcribe glory for ever ! and all who have tafted of his grace, will and their joyful Amen! Note; Though we have the deepest infight into the mysteries of grace, the wifest must own, that they know but a part of God's ways. There are many things which our thort line cannot fathom. Our bufinefs therefore is to acquiesce in the divine determinations; not to cavil, but to admire and adore !

CHAP. XII.

THE Apostle, having now finished the doctrinal part of his Epistle, judged it fit, in this and in the following chapters, to give the Roman brethren a variety of precepts respecting their behaviour, both as members of the church, and as subjects of the state. Some of these precepts are of universal and perpetual obligation, and others of them were fuited to the circumstances of the brethren at the time they were written; such as the precepts concerning meats and holy days, which, though they may feem less necessfary now that the disputes which gave rife to them no longer substit, are nevertheless of great use fitll, as they may be applied for directing our conduct in other points of equal in-portance to fociety and to the church.

The Apostle begins with observing, that as the Jewish church church was diffolved, and the facrifices of beafts were no longer a part of the worship of God, it was highly proper that Jews and Gentiles should offer their bodies a facrifice to God, not by flaying them, but by putting the lufts thereof to death; ver. 1 -And that both should take care not to conform themfelves to the heathen world, either in its principles or practices; ver. 2.-And because the brethren at Rome, and more particularly the flated minifters of religion, there, who possessed fpiritual gifts, had from vanity fallen, or were in danger of falling into fome inegularities in the exercise of their gifts, he defired them not to think too highly of themselves on account of their endowments, whatever they might be; ver. 3.-but to remember, that they were all joint-members of one body; ver. 4, 5.-and had spiritual gifts as well as natural talents beflowed on them, fuitable to their office in that body, which they were to exercise for the good of the whole; ver. 6, 7, 8.—Next the Apostle inculcated on the Roman brethren, the practice of those moral graces and virtues, which were the glory of the Christian name; fuch as zeal in the fervice of Christ, patience in afflictions, love to mankind, even to enemies, forgiveness of injuries, and the overcoming of evil with good; ver. 9-21.

Ver. 1. The Apostle has now finished his proofs and explications relating to the justification, calling, and election of the believing Gentiles, or to their being admitted into the kingdom and covenant of God, and interested in all the privileges and honours of his children and peculiar people,-in all the bleffings and hopes of the Gospel. This our happy flate he has well established by folid and substantial arguments, and guarded it against every attack of the unbelieving Jew. He has demonstrated that it stands right in the nature of things; ch. i. ii. iii. That it is fet upon the fame footing with Abraham's title to the bleffings of the covenant; ch. iv. That it gives us a title to privileges and bleffings as great as any of the Jews could glory in, by virtue of that covenant; ch. v. 1-12. He goes still higher, and shews, that our being interested in the gift and grace of God in Christ Jefus, is perfectly agreeable to the grace which he has confessed befowed upon all mankind in Christ Jeius, in delivering them from that death which came upon them by Adam's offence; ch.v. 12. to the end. He has clearly explained, both with regard to Gentiles and Jews, the nature of the Gofpel conflitution, in respect to its obligations to virtue and holinefs; and the advantages that it gives for encouraging our obedience, and supporting us under the severest trials; ch. vi. vii. viii. Farther; as the Jews' pretences, that God was bound by express promise to continue them, and such as come into their peculiarity, to be his only people for ever, were directly inconfiftent with the calling and election of the Gentiles, upon the foot of faith alone. The Apolle demonstrates, that the rejection of the Jews is confistent with the truth of God's word, and with hisrighteoufnefs. He shews the true cause and reason of their rejection; and concludes with an admirable difcourse upon the extent and duration of it, which he closes with adoration of the divine wildom in its various dispensations; ch. ix. x. xi.—Thus having cleared this important subject with furprising judgment, and the nicest art and skill in writing, he now proceeds, after his usual method in his Epistles, and the apostolic manner of preaching, to inculcate various Christian duties; and to exhort to that temper of mind and conduct of life, which are agreeable to Gospel privileges and profession.

Mercies of God] He means all the bleffings and privileges given us freely in the Gospel by the mercy of God. There feem to be two reasons why St. Paul's first exhortation to them is, to prefent their bodies undefiled to God, 1. Becaufe he had before, especially in ch. vii. fo much infifted on this, That the body was the great fource whence fin arofe. 2. Becaufe the heathen world, and particularly the Romans, were guilty of those vile affections which he mentions, ch. i. 24-27. The bidy is here, by a usual figure, put for the whole person; nor can the soul be now prefented to God, otherwife than as dwelling in the body, or truly confectated to him, unlefs the body be employed in his fervice. Nor, on the other hand, can the body be prefented as a living facrifice, otherwife than as acted and animated by the foul. The word wagarnous rendered prefent, properly fignifies " placing the victim " before the altar." It feems probable that the Apoftle, in this first verfe, had his thoughts principally upon the Jewish, and in the fecond verse upon the Gentile Chriftians; for in ver. 1. he opposes moral duty to the offering up of facrifices, which must be the facrifices prefented by the Jews in the temple, and calls moral duty a reafonable fervice, or rational worthip, as it feems, in oppolition to ritual. In ver. 2. he dehorts from conformity to the world, which generally means the heathen world; and perfuades them to be transformed by the renewing of their mind, which is the phrafe that he uses to Gentile converts, Ephcf. iv. 22, 23.-, hefe verfes may be paraphrafed thus : " Having clear your title to the bleffings and " privileges of God's peculiar kingdom in this world, I " now earnefly exhort you, Christian brethren, from a " confideration of the goodness of God, in revealing his " Gofpel, and admitting you all to an equal intereft in " the grace therein declared and promifed, that, as a " holy priesthood, instead of brutal dead facrifices, you " confectate and offer your bodies, a living factifice, by " mortifying the deeds of the flefth; that being free from " every blemish of sensual impurity, you may practife holi-" nefs, and the things that are pleafing to God, which is the " most rational worship and fervice that you can perform, " and infinitely preferable to the ritual observances of the $ 2 " law.

We may just remark, that fome commentators confider the three words good, acceptable, and perfect, as opposed to the Jewish ritual: this Christian facrifice being more excellent in itfelf (Ezek. xx. 25.), more pleafing to God (Pf. xl. 7, 8.), and tending more to make us perfect, Heb. vii. 19. But perhaps they refer more generally to all the preceptive parts of Christianity, the excellency of which they will beft understand, who endeavour to practife it most exactly. See Locke, and Elfner.

Ver. 3. For I fay, &c.] "I fay and give it in charge:" So  $\lambda \epsilon_{\gamma \epsilon i\nu}$  fignifies, Acts, xv. 24. Inftead of Not to think of himfelf more highly, Doddridge reads, after Raphelius, Not to arrogate to himfelf above what, &c. Inftead of measure of faith, fome copies have it of grace; but either of them expresses the fame thing; that is, gifts of the Spirit. See the next note.

Ver. 6. According to the proportion of faith] This proportion of faith, and the measure of faith, ver. 3. feem not to relate to the degree of any gift confidered in itfelf, but rather to the relation and proportion which it bore to the gifts of others : for it is plain, that the Apofile is here exhorting every man to keep foberly within his own fphere. It is natural to fuppole that the new converts might be puffed up with the feveral gifts which were bestowed upon them, and every one might be forward to magnify his own, to the disparagement of others; which would be attended with bad confequences. Therefore the Apostle advises them to keep every man within his proper fphere; to know and observe the just measure and proportion of his gift, intrusted with him not to gratify his own pride, but to edify the church. Prophely originally implied the foretelling of the future events relating to the church, to the comfort and edification of the affembly; and these effects generally attending the act of prophely, in a little time affumed its name : but the proper fense of prophely is the foretelling of things to come; the import, the interpretation of facred Scripture; and the explaining of prophefies already delivered. See 1 Cor. xiv. 29-32. and for an account of the fpiritual gifts and offices in the primitive church, Lord Barrington's Mifcell. Sacr. Effay i.; Benfon's Hiftory of the first Planting of Christianity, ch. i. fect. 4, 5. and I Cor. xii. 28.; Castalio, Erasmus, Bengelius, and others, connect this with the preceding verse: We are members one of another; but, having gifts differing, &c.

Ver. 8. He that ruleth, with diligence Lord Barrington thinks this claufe relates to the receiving and fuccouring of strangers; most probably, perfecuted strangers; or, however, fuch as travelled for the propagation of the Gofpel; and that for thefe reafons: Firff, becaufe the Apoltle has admonifhed them to use well all the gifts of the Spirit for the good of men's minds, ver. 6, 7. and in the first claufe of the prefent verfe. It feems, therefore, moit natural to fuppofe, that he should in the three last clauses of this verfe direct them how to use other gifts of God's providence for the good of men's morals and religion; and that he fhould lay the feveral inftances of the kindnefs of others together in the fame manner, as in Heb. xiii. 2, 3. Secondly, Neosúris, a feminine word of the fame original and fignification with o weoisaus Gr, is used in this fenfe, ch. xvi. 2. She hath been a fuccourer of many, and of myfelf allo: the word weoirauar fignifies, among other things, to defend, patronize; and fo it might be rendered, Titus, iii. 8, 14. To patronize good works ; meaning to encourage and affift in them. In this fenfe the claufe here should be rendered, He that gives fuccour, or relief, let him do it with care and application. See Lord Barrington's Mifcel. Sacr. Effay i. p. 76.

Ver. 10. Be kindly affectioned, &c.] Perhaps the extremely expressive words of the original might justly be rendered, Delight in the tenderess fraternal affection to each other. The word  $\Phi_{i\lambda\sigma\sigma\rho\gamma\sigma}$ , not only fignifies a firing affection, like that of parent animals to their offspring, but a delight in it. The words of the latter clause might literally be rendered, Leading on each other with respect; or, In giving honour, going before each other. Some render it, Mutually prevent one another with honour. See Balguy's Sermons, and Leighton's Exposit. Works, vol. ii. p. 429.

Ver. 11. Serving the Lord] Some copies read water, inftead of word, ferving the time; that is, hufbanding your opportunities: but though admitted by Dr. Mills, it appears an unnatural and inclegant expression in that fense, and very much finks the noble meaning of the commonlyreceived reading; which contains a lively exhortation to Christians, to be always ferving Christ, and to cultivate the temper which the Apostle expresses when he fays, To me to live is Christ, Phillip. i. 21. See Doddridge, Mill, and Wetstein.

· Ver. 13. Given to hospitality] It was the more proper for for the Apolles frequently to enforce this duty, as the want of public inns rendered it difficult for ftrangers to get accommodations; and as many Christians might be banished their native country for religion, and perhaps laid under a kind of excommunication, both among Jews and heathens; which would make it a high crime for any of their brethren to receive them into their houses. See Blackwall's Sacred Classics, vol. i. p. 232.

Var. 16. Be of the fame mind, &c.] Be entirely united in your regards for each other. Doddridge. Whitby paraphrales it, "Defire the fame things for others, that you "do for yourfelves, and would have them defire for you." Dr. Heylin unites this with the preceding verfe, and renders them as follows: Live in a mutual fympathy, fo as to ripice with those who are in joy, and compassion to the volo are in grief. Do not afpire to high things, but be contented with mean things.

Ver. 17. Provide things honeft, &c.] " Take care that " your behaviour be fuch, as may be approved by all men." Dr. Wells reads,—In the fight of God, and in the fight of men.

Ver. 19. Avenge not yoursclves] The emperor Claudius, br his decree, banished all Jews from Rome, Acts, xviii. 2. Upon this occasion Aquila and Priscilla removed to Coninth, where St. Paul found them, and dwelt with them a confiderable time. No doubt they gave him a full account of the flate of the Christian church at Rome, and every thing relating to the late perfecution under Claudius. That emperor's edict died with him in about two years time. Then the Jews and Christians [if the Christians vere expelled] returned again to Rome; for Aquila and Phicilla were there, when St. Paul wrote this Epistle, (ch. In. 3.), which was about the fourth year of Nero, fucceffor to Claudius. Hence it appears more than probable, that the Apoflie, in this and the following verfes, has his eve upon the indignities and injuries done to the Christian Jews, if not to the Christians in general, in the foremennonca perfecution. See Benfon's "First Planting of the "Chrittian Religion," vol. ii. p. 106. and Eccl'us, xix. 17. Ver. 20. Theu fledt heap, &c.] The fenfe cannot be, theu flat confume him and bring judgments upon him; for that would be applying to revenge, and building upon it, while it is most expressly forbidden. It must therefore intimate, in how tender a manner mankind in general are affected with favours received from one who has been confidered as an enemy. See Doddridge.

Inferences.—How should a confideration of the endearing mercies of God engage us to yield up ourfelves as a living facrifice, holy and acceptable to him! This is every way a most reasonable fervice. And how should our hearts be loofened from this world, and from all its finful fashions, cuftoms, and practices; and how defirous of fuch a renovation of our minds, by the bleffed Spirit, as shall transform us into the image of God, and give us an experimental, practical, and approving acquaintance with every thing that is good in itfelf, pleafing to him, through Jefus Chrift, and agreeable to his holy will ! But, be our gifts, graces. and fervices ever fo great, we fhould keep up modest and humble thoughts of ourfelves, and not be wile in our own conceit, or defpife others; fince all that we receive is according to the measure of the gift of Christ to us, as his members, for the good of the whole body. Wonderful is the grace and care of the great Head of the church, in providing for it. He has furnished it with fuch gifts and officers, as are neceffary for its fpiritual edification, and for managing its temporal concerns; and has ordered all his fervants to attend to their charge with integrity, diligence, and cheerfulnefs, according to the grace given them, and the rule of his word .- And, as to the duties of private Chriftians, they are called to the fincereft love, the most affectionate deportment, and honourable regards, one towards another; to deteft every thing that is finful, and cleave to all that is good; to be vigoroufly active in the bufinefs of their civil and religious flations, and ferveut in every fervice, as doing it to the Lord; to rejoice in hope of eternal life, and to be patient and refigned to the will of God under all their trials and afflictions, and perfevering in earnest prayer. How amiable are the Christian morals, founded in evangelical love! and how far furpaffing all that was ever practifed or taught by the most refined heathens! This love, which has fuch an influence upon and gives fuch a beautiful turn to all morality, is without diffimulation : it is liberal to the necessations, effectally to the poor that bear the characters of holinefs; and is holpitable to good and honeft ftrangers, efpecially those that fuffer fuffer for righteoufnefs' fake: it infpires us with fuch a fellow-feeling with others, as makes us rejoice with the happy and mourn with the afflicted: it is humble and condefeending to men of the loweft degree, and benevolent to our very enemies: it implores bleffings upon the heads of those that perfecute, abufe, and curie us: it chooses to refer an injured cause to the righteous judgment of God, rather than render evil for evil, or feek private revenge: it endeavours to live peaceably with all men, and behave with honour toward them: and it takes pleasure in giving food and drink to poor necessfitous enemies, in melting them with kindnefs, and overcoming evil with good.

REFLECTIONS.—The doctrines of grace are fo far from leading to licentiousness, that nothing but these can effectually engage the heart to walk in holiness as Christ also walked.

1. The Apoftle exhorts them to yield themfelves wholly to God. I befeech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God; by the confideration of that boundlefs, undeferved grace, which you have tafted; that, conftrained by a fenfe of fuch aftonishing love, ye, as spiritual priests, prefent your bodies, not the carcafe of a dead animal, but a nobler oblation than any which were offered under the law, even a living fact fice; your whole felves to be employed for God's glory, holy, without allowed guile; in fpirit, temper, and conduct, conformed to his will; and acceptable to God through Jefus Chrift, in whom your perfons and fervices are regarded as a facrifice of a fweet fmell; all which is your reasonable fervice, to be performed with all the powers of your rational fouls, and most fit and right, confidering the infinite obligations lying upon you. And, in order hereunto, be not conformed to this world, to its temper, maxims, fashions, manners; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, after the image of God in righteoufnels and true holinefs, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God; difcerning what is the mind of God in his word; commending to others the excellence and importance of the revelation he has made; and caft into the very mould of the Gospel, the best proof of your approbation of it. Note; (1.) No argument is fo powerful to engage the ingenuous heart, as a lense of the mercies of God. [ (2.) The most acceptable facrifice to God is the furrender of our whole felves to him at the foot of the crofs of Jefus, the altar which fanctifies the gift. (3.) They who yield themselves to God, must prove their fimplicity in all holy conversation and godliness. (4.) Religion is indeed a reasonable service; the more we confider what we owe to God, the more shall we be bound to acknowledge, that he deferves to be ferved with every faculty of our foul, and every member of our body. (5.) They who partake of the true grace of God, and experience its transforming efficacy upon their tempers and conduct, they die unto the world, and live only for God.

2. He enforces upon them humility and lowlinefs of mind, that great ornament of the Christian character. Far

I fay, through the grace given unto me, in virtue of the office with which I am invefted, to every man that is among you, whatever his rank or attainments may be, not to think of himfelf more highly than he ought to think; affecting a superiority over others, or pretending to be wife above what is written, and to intrude into things that are too high for him; but to think foberly and lowly, of his gifts, graces, and attainments, according as God bath dealt to every man the measure of faith; and acknowledging, that whatever meafure of faith he poffesses, or however diffinguished his endowments by nature or grace may be, yet he has nothing which he hath not received, and therefore all boafting is excluded. And as our talents are merely lent us for the good of our own fouls, and the edification of others, it will become us to fee that our profiting appears. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the fame office, but each discharges his separate function, and all are alike needful in their .place, and contribute to the good of the whole; fo we being many are one body in Chrift, and every one members one of another ; united under our adored Head, each occupying his respective place according to the measure of the gift of Christ; and, therefore, inftead of being puffed up in pride, and defpifing one another, we fhould give diligence to difcharge the feveral fervices allotted to every member, acknowledging the mutual obligation which one has to the other, and contributing heartily to the profperity of the whole. Having then gifts, differing according to the grace that is given unto us, as the Lord has been pleafed to difpenfe to every man, let it be our care to improve them, according to our refpective offices and flation, for the glory of God, and the good of our fellow members :-- Whether prophely, let us prophefy according to the proportion of faith. They who are put in truft with the Gospel, must preach it with all fidelity and diligence, according to the measure of light, faith, and experience which they have received : or, according to the analogy of faith; in exact confiftence with the grand principles laid down in the word of God, in Scripturelanguage, and with attention to the context :-- Or minifiry, let us wait on our minisfering, in the inferior departments of the church, where attention, care, and conftancy are required :- Or be that teacheth, on teaching ; opening, explaining, and defending the doctrines of the Scripture :--- Or be that exhorteth, on exhortation; with warmth applying the word to the confcience, warning the unruly, fupporting the feeble-minded, reproving the guilty, comforting the dejected, and, according to the different flate of the people's fouls, fuiting his discourse for their edification and confolation. He that giveth, and is entruited with the diffribution of the public flock appropriated to charitable ules, let him do it with fimpl.city; without fraud, favour, or affection, according to the real wants of the church's poor. He that ruleth, and has the management of affairs, mult do it with diligence, careful that proper discipline be observed. He that sheweth mercy, with cheerfulness ; ready to every work and labour of love; not dragged reluctantly

(3.) Ministers have different gifts, all excellent in their place. One is bleffed with a clearer judgment, another with a warmer flow of eloquence, and all for the edification of the body of Chrift.

3. The Apostle proceeds to urge Christians in general to walk before God and man in fuch a way, as may most eminently adorn the doctrine which they profess, and glorify their divine Master.

Let lace be notificant diffimulation. Let your love to God in Christ be fupreme, and your love to your brethren unfrigned and hearty; the living principle of every good word and work, and without which all our doings are nothing worth.

Abber that which is evil. Turn away with abhorrence from all manner of iniquity, harbouring no allowed fin in yourfelf, and teflifying your hatred of it wherever it appears, though in those who are nearest and dearest to you. And, on the contrary, cleave to that which is good; to God, his people, his word, his worship, will, and ways; never deterred by any danger, or feduced by any allurements, from the path of duty.

Be kindly affectioned one to another; tenderly defiring to promote each other's happine's; delighting in each other's prolparity; bearing each other's burdens; and ready to every word and work which fervent charity dictates: awith in therly love in honour, preferring one another; cafting the veil of oblivion over the faults of others, and humbly achowd dging your own; thinking and fpeaking honourably of the gifts, graces, and attainments of your brethren, and entertaining lowly thoughts of yourfelves.

Nat flathful in bufinefs. In the bufinefs of your flation be rigorous and active, and what thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; but especially in all the work of God be lively, fervent in fpirit, animated with burning love and holy zeal for his glory; ferving the Lord in prayer, and praife, and all ordinances; in perfevering obedience to his will, and fubmiffion to his providences, approving your fidelity unfhaken to the adored Jefus.

Rejoicing in hope; believing the faithfulnefs of God to his promites, and going forward with cheerfulnefs and delight in his work and ways, knowing that your labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.

Patient in tribulation; refigned to the divine Providence; calm under every provocation; with holy courage fuftaining the rudeft flocks of opposition and perfecution; and, under the longeft afflictions, quietly waiting to fee the falvation of God.

Continuing inflant in prayer; fervently and frequently approaching a throne of grace; feeking help and firength for all the work and fervice to which you are called, deeply confcious of your own infufficiency, without continual fupplies of power from on high, to do any thing aright before God.

Diffributing to the neceffity of faints; cheerfully, liberally, according to their wants, and your abilities. Given to helpitality; welcoming to your house and tables those who for the fake of Christ are destitute, and giving them that warm and cordial reception which true charity dictates.

Blefs them which perfecute you: blefs, and curfe not: fpeaking of them and to them refpectfully; commending what is praifeworthy in them; never returning railing for railing; never harbouring a thought of refentment againft your most malignant revilers; forgiving them, and praving to God that he would forgive them also, and turn their hearts.

Rejoice with them that do rejoice; fharing their joys, and, inflead of envying, fincerely partaking of their profperity: and weep with them that weep; feeling the tendereit fympathy with them in their fufferings, and, by prayer, advice, and every affiltance, defirous to alleviate or remove the forrows of the miferable.

Be of the fame mind one towards another; united as much as may be in fentiment; and where any leffer difference. in judgment fubfilts, fliil preferving the fame warm affection towards each other; withing all good to your brethren, and feeking to promote each other's happinels.

Mind not high things; affect not pre-eminence; afpire not after the honours and dignities of the world; nor court the company of the great; but condifiend to men of low effate; treating your inferiors with kindnefs; and to whatever eminence or affluence you may arrive, be courteous, affable, and free to the loweft; ready to floop to every proper office of love for the fervice and comfort of the meanent faint of God. Or, condefcend to low things, as the words may be rendered; let your mind be humbled to your condition, and cheerfully acquiefce in every difpenfation of Providence, however firait and neceflitous your circumftances may be.

Be not wife in your own conceits. Beware of entertaining a high imagination of your own abilities, gifts, or graces; treating the advice and admonitions of others with fcorn, as if you were above all teaching, and fatisfied in your own felf-fufficiency.

Recompense to no man evil for evil, neither in looks, words, nor works.

Provide things honeft in the fight of all men; not only taking care of your families and worldly concerns, but fo ordering the general courfe of your conduct and converfation, that the unprejudiced part of mankind, at leaft, may bear you an honourable testimony; and that none may be able to reproach you with any thing mean, or unbecoming your Christian character.

If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men; fludioufly avoiding whatever may bring on difputes or uncafinefs; and as far as is confistent with truth, charity, and the glory of God, cultivating a fpirit of love and peace; that at least, if through the perverteness of others it be not possible to avoid contentions, you may have the fatisfaction of your own conficience in the reflection, that, as much as lieth in you, it has been your endeayour to please all men for their good to edification.

Dearly belowed, avenge not yourfelves, but rather give place unto wrath : forgive the injuries that you receive ; take no private revenge; fupprefs the angry pathons which may attempt to rife within you; give the foft anfwer which turneth away wrath; nor, by oppofing, irritate; but, however unreafonable others may appear, yield, or go away till the florm has fubfided : and if, after all, you meet with implacable refentment, refer the matter to God; for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, faith the Lord. This is his prerogative, and not to be invaded by us. As magistracy is his ordinance, in fome cafes for the good of focicty we are bound to have recourfe thereto; in others, where ourfelves only are concerned, we must wait the great decifive day, when every man shall receive according as his work is. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirfl, give him drink : for in fo doing thou fhalt heap coals of fire on his head; either by fuch inftances of kindnefs you will melt him down (as the refiners do their metals) into repentance, and gain his heart to love you; or if he continue obflinate in hatred, it will exceedingly aggravate his condomnation, to add bafe ingratitude to his unprovoked ennity.

Finally, Be not overcome of evil; let no ill ufage, however aggravated, repeated, or perfifted in, difcompose your fpirit, weary out your patience, or quench your love; fo as that you thould give way to anger, be enflaved by fin, and afford the enemy an occasion to triumph over you. But overcome evil with good, which is the most glorious conquest, the proof of the noblest fpirit, and the affured evidence that you are born of him who causeth his fun to rife upon the evil and the good, and fendeth his rain upon the just and upon the unjust. Lord Jesus, give me such a heart, and stamp this thy image on my foul!

CHAP. XIII.

BECAUSE God had chofen the Jews for his fubjects, and as their king had dictated to them a fystem of laws, and had governed them anciently in perfon, and afterwards by princes of his own nomination, they reckoned it impicty to fubmit to heathen laws and rulers. In the fame light, they viewed the paying of taxes for the fupport of the heathen governments, Mat. xxii. 17. In flort, the zealots of that nation laid it down as a principle, that they would obey God alone, as their king and governor, in opposition to Caefar, and all kings whatever who were not of their religion, and who did not govern them by the laws of Mofes.

This turbulent difposition, fome of the Jews who embraced the Gofpel did not immediately lay afide: and even of the believing Gentiles, there were a few, who, on pretence that they had a fufficient rule of conduct in the fpiritual gifts with which they were endowed, affirmed that they were under no obligation to obey ordinances imposed by idolaters, nor to pay taxes for the support of idolatrous governments. In that perfuasion, they also refufed to the heathen magistrates that honour and obedience, to which, by their office, they were entitled from all who lived under their government. But these principles and practices occafioning the Gofpel to be evil fpoken of, the Apoflle judged it neceffary, in his letter to the Romans, to inculcate the duties which fubjects owe to magistrates; and to teffify to them, that the difciples of Chrift were not exempted from obedience to the wholefome laws, even of the heathen countries where they lived, nor from contributing to the fupport of the government by which they were protected, although it was administered by idolaters. Withal, having inferibed this letter to the unbelieving as well as to the believing inhabitants of Rome, the brethren were thereby directed, for the vindication of their religion, to flew the copies which they took of it to fuch of the heathens as were willing to read it.

This admirable part of his letter, the Apoftle began with exhorting every one to obey the government of the country where he lives, whether it be established by the express confent of the people, or by their acquietcence, or by long ufage; founding his exhortation on the following principle: That God having formed mankind for living in fociety, and fome government being abfolutely neceflary for maintaining order and peace among the associated, whatever form of government happens to be established in any country, is authorized of God, and is fubordinate to his general government of the world, ver. I.—Civil government,

ment, therefore, being authorized of God, he who refifts the established exercise of it in any country, on pretence that the perfons holding the reins of government have no just title to do fo, or on pretence that they profefs a falfe religion, and exercise their power in supporting error, really refults the ordinance of God; and all who do fo, bring on themselves just condemnation, both from God and men, ver. 2, 3 .- On the other hand, magistrates, being lavants of God, for good to the people, ought, agreeably to the end of their office, to exercise their power for the welfare of their fubjects, by punishing none but evil-doers, and by protecting and encouraging all who obey the wholeione laws of the state, whatever religion they may profes, rer. 4.-It was therefore necessary for the brethren to obey the heathen magistrates, in all things confishent with their duty to God; not only to avoid punishment, but from a principle of confcience, ver. 5.-And that the rulers might be honourably maintained, and the government effedually supported; the Apostle ordered tax, and custom, and tribute, to be paid, as well as that fear or respect, which is due to rulers, on account of their office, ver. 6, 7. -In this, I suppose the Apostle had the Jews in his eye, who held it unlawful to pay tribute to Cafar; yet what he fays being general, and applicable to all who enjoy the protection of government, it could give the Jews no just offence. Lastly, The disciples of Christ, as members of fociety, are to owe no man any thing, except to love one another, because love leads to the performance of every focial duty, and prevents all manner of injuries and crimes, VET. 8-10.

It deferves both notice and praife, that in explaining to the inhabitants of Rome their duty as citizens, the Apostle has thewn the fineft address. For while he feemed only to plead the caufe of the magistrate with the people, he tacitly conveyed the most wholesome instruction to the heathen rulers, who he knew were too proud to receive advice from teachers of his character and nation. For, by telling rulers that they are the fervants of God for good to the pipe, he taught them the purpose of their office, and thewed them, that their fole aim in executing it ought to be, to promote the happine's of their people; and that as foon as they lose fight of this, their government degenerates into tyranny. Moreover, by establishing the office and power of magistrates on their proper foundation, and by teaching the people to obey their rulers from confcience, he made fuch of the heathens as read his letter, fenfible that the Gospel nourishes no rebellious principles in its dicipies; that it does not meddle with the political conflitution of any state, on pretence of mending it; and that " enjoins subjects, in things not finful, to obey their rukts, whatever the form of government is, under which they act. Such a discourse concerning obedience to laws and magistrates, was addressed to the Roman brethresi with peculiar propriety, because they had been banished fom Rome with the Jews, by the emperor Claudius, under the pretence of tumultuous behaviour, and were but lately teurned.-The Apostle, however, gave the fame directions to other churches, Titus, iii. 1. as did St. Peter likewife, VOL. II.

t Pet. ii. 13-17.; from which we may learn how turbulent the Jews were in all the heathen countries, and how anxious the Christian teachers were, to have their difciples free from blame in every respect.

In what follows, the Apolle earneftly recommended to the Romans the duties of temperance and chaftity, becaule, in their heathen flate, they had been extremely deficient in thefe virtues. And that his exhortation might make the deeper impression, he compared their former ignorance, from which their lewdness and intemperance had proceeded, to the darkness of night; and opposed thereto the knowledge which the Gospel had imparted to them, likening it to the light of day, fpringing up after a long dark night, and gradually advancing to meridian brightness. And the heathens lying in that ignorance, he compared to performing the rational functions of men, as perfons are who sleep in the intoxication of drunkenness, Ver. 11-14.

The precepts in this and the preceding chapter do great honour to the Gofpel, and to its ministers. They show us, that instead of contracting men's affections, and limiting them to their own pale, the Gospel enlarges their hearts, so as to embrace the whole human race, not excluding their very enemies : that it cheriss no rebellious principles in its disciples, but enjoins obedience to superiors from a regard to conficience; and that it allures no profelytes, by the prospect of criminal fensual pleasures of any kind.

Ver. 1. This epiftle was written about the fourth year of the emperor Nero, about fix years after Claudius had expelled the Jews from Rome. It is not improbable, that, as Suetonius relates in the Life of Claudius, this was occafioned by the tumultuous disposition of the Jews, in one shape or other; whether upon a civil or religious ac-count, is not easy to determine. However, we know that they had notions relating to government favourable to none but their own; and it was with great reluctance that they fubmitted to a foreign jurifdiction. The Christians, under a notion of their being the people of God, and the fubjects of his kingdom, might be in danger of being infected by those unruly and rebellious fentiments: therefore the Apostle here points out their duty to the civil magistrate. To understand him right, we must confider these two things: Firft, That these rules are given to Christians, who were members of the heathen commonwealth,---to fhew them that, by being made Chriftians, and fubjects of Chrift's kingdom, they were not, through the freedom of the Gofpel, exempt from any ties of duty or fubjection which by the laws of the country wherein they lived they were bound to obferve,-from paying all due obedience to the government and magiltrates, though heathens, in the fame manner as was done by their heathen subjects. But on the other fide, thefe rules did not tie them up, more than any of their fellow-citizens who were not Christians, from any of those due rights which by the law of nature, or the conftitution of their country, belonged to them. Whatever any other of their fellow-fubjects, being in a like ftation.

fation with them, might do without finning, of that they were not abridged, but might still do the fame, being Christians; the rule here being the fame with that given by St. Paul, I Cor. vii. 17. As the Lord hath called every one, fo let him walk. The rules of civil right and wrong, whereby he is to walk, are to him the fame that they were before. Secondly, We must confider, that St. Paul, in this direction to the Romans, does not fo much defcribe the magistrates who were then in Rome, as relate whence they, and all magistrates every where, derive their authority; and for what end they have, and fhould use it : and this he does as becomes his prudence, to avoid bringing any imputation on the Christians from heathen magistrates; especially those infolent and vicious ones of Rome, who could not brook any thing to be told them as their duty, and fo might be apt to interpret fuch plain truths, laid down in a dogmatical way, into fedition or treason;-a fcandal cautiously to be kept off from the Christian doctrine. Nor does he, in what he fays, in the least flatter the Roman emperor: for he fpeaks here of the higher powers, that is, the fupreme civil power, which is in every commonwealth derived from God, and is of the fame extent every where; that is, is abfolute and unlimited by any thing, but the end for which God gave it; namely, the good of the people, fincerely purfued according to the best skill of those who share that power; and so is not to be refisted. But how men come by a rightful title to this power, or who has that title, the Apostle is wholly filent : to have meddled with that, would have been to decide of civil rights, contrary to the defign and bufinefs of the Gofpel, and the example of our Saviour. If the reader is attentive, he must be pleafed to fee in how fmall a compass, and with how much dexterity, truth, and gravity, the Apoftle affirms and explains the foundation, the nature, ends, and just limits of the magistrate's authority, while he is pleading his cause, and teaching the fubject the duty and obedience due to governors. See Locke.

Let every foul] " Every one, however endowed with " miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoft, or advanced to any " dignity in the church of Chrift:" for that these things were apt to make men overvalue themfelves, is obvious from what St. Paul fays to the Corinthians, I Ep. xii. and to the Romans, xii. 3, 4. But, above all others, the Jews were apt to have an inward reluctancy and indignation against the power of any heathen over them, taking it to be an unjust and tyrannical usurpation upon them, who were the people of God, and their betters. These the Apoftle thought it neceffary to reftrain, and therefore fays, " Every foul, that is, every perfon among you, whether " Jew or Gentile, must live in fubjection to the civil ma-" " giftrate.' We fee by what St. Peter fays on the like occalion, that there was great need that Christians should have this duty inculcated upon them, left any among them thould use their liberty for a cloke of maliciousness, or misbehaviour, 1 Pet. ii. 13-16. The doctrine of Christianity was a doctrine of liberty. Hence miftaken men, especially Jewish converts, impatient, as we have observed, of any heathen dominion, might be ready to infer, that Christians were exempt from fubjection to the laws of heathen governments. This he obviates by telling them, that all other governments derived the power they had from God, as well as that of the Jews, though they had not the whole frame of their government immediately from him, as the Jews had. Whether we take the powers here, in the abstract, for political authority, or in the concrete for the perfons de facto exercifing political power and jurifdiction, the fenfe will be the fame; viz. that Christians, by virtue of being Christians, are not any way exempt from obedience to the civil magistrates, nor ought by any means to refift them; though by what is faid, ver. 3. it feems that St. Paul meant here magifirates having and exercifing a lawful power. But whether the magistrates in being were or were not fuch, and confequently were or were not to be obeyed, that Christianity gave them no peculiar power to examine. They had the common right of others their fellow-citizens, but had no diftinct privilege as Christians; and therefore we fee, ver. 7. that where he enjoins the paying of tribute, cuftom, &c. it is in these words : Render to all their dues, tribute to whom tribute, honour to whom honour, &c. But who it was to whom any of thefe, or any other dues of right belonged, he decides not; for that he leaves them to be determined by the laws and conftitutions of their country. Instead of ordained of God, we may render the original reraquévas, by disposed, or established. See Acts, xiii. 48. Divine Providence ranges, and in fome fense establishes, the various governments of the world; they are therefore under the character of governments in the general to be revered : but this cannot make what is wrong and pernicious in any peculiar forms, facred, divine, and immutable; any more than the hand of God in a famine or peftilence, is an argument against feeking proper means to remove it. See Locke, Doddridge, and Mintert.

Ver. 2. Resisteth the power] The word o a'vritagoouses, KEELELLE KEEL HEELE in the most direct import of it, fignifies " one who fets " himfelf as it were in array against," and may possibly allude to the word tetayuivas, ranged or marshalled by God, used in the former verse. The word rendered damnation, is xeiua, and would be more properly rendered condemnation, as it is particularly applied to the fentence passed when punishment is denounced by a judge; though here it may fignify not only the condemnation of the civil power, but likewife that of the Sovereign of the univerfe.

Ver. 3. Rulers are not a terror to good works] To the welldoer, τω αγαθοέργω. See Junius in Wetstein. Heylin renders the paffage, to those who do well, but to those who do ill. If circumstances arife to which the argument in this verfe is not applicable, it is reafonably to be taken for granted, that the Apostle did not intend here to pronounce concerning fuch cafes. Nothing can be faid for interpreting interpreting these passages in favour of unlimited passive obedience, which will not prove any refiftance of a private injury unlawful, by the limited authority of our Lord's decifion, Matt. v. 39, 40. This would fubvert the great foundation of magiltracy itfelf, which is appointed to ward off and prevent by force, or to avenge fuch injuries; but it was very prudent in the Apostle not to enter into any question relating to the right of refiftance in fome extraordinary cales; as those cafes are comparatively few, and as the just decisions which could have been given on that fubject might pollibly have been milreprefented to his own detri-ment, and that of the Gospel. The general laws of benevolence to the whole, fo itrongly afferted in this context, are in particular cases to determine; and all particular precepts, in whatever univerfal terms they are delivered, are always to give way to them. See Doddridge, and Bithop Hoadley's " Measures of Submission."

Vir. 4. For he beareth not the fword in vain] This ftrongly intimates the lawfulnefs of inflicting capital punifhments; to deny which, is in effect fubverting the chief ufe of magiftates; though fanguinary laws thould be as much as polible avoided. Bengelius reads the first claufe of this verfe, For he is the minister of God, for good to thee; and the last claufe, For he is God's vindictive minister, for a terror to the evil-d.er. See Heinflus and Wetstein.

Ver. 7. Tribute to whom tribute] The Jews had a fatourite notion among them, that, as the peculiar people of God, they were exempted from obligations to pay tribute to Gentiles; againft which notion this paffage is directly levelled, though without pointing them out in any inridious manner. The word  $\Phi_0 Gov$ , rendered fear, may be more properly rendered reverence; for it expresses the inward disposition; as  $\tau_{11}\mu'v$ , honour, expresses the conduct and external behaviour proceeding from it. See Doddridge, Heylin, and Ephes. v. 33.

Ver. 11. Nearer than when we believed] Than when we declared our belief. Markland. Than when we declared the fuith. Heylin. It feems by this and the following verfe, fays Mr. Locke, as if St. Paul looked upon Chrift's coming as not far off; to which there are feveral other concurrent paffages in his Epiftles : fee I Cor. i. 7. But with all due refpect to Mr. Locke, Grotius, and other learned men who favour this fentiment, I am fully fatisfied that they have been mistaken, misunderstanding the particular passages of Scripture which they have adduced, and the true state of things in the prefent inftance. That St. Paul did " not " look upon Christ's coming as not far off," or as if it might happen while he and the men of that generation were living, is incontestably evident from 2 Theff. ii. 1. &c. where he profeffedly refutes this erroneous opinion. The . cafe was this: the Theffalonians had miftaken fome expressions in his first letter; just in the fame manner, probably, as Mr. Locke and others have miftaken the like passages. He had told them, I Theff. v. 2-4. That the day of the Lord fo fuddenly cometh, as a thief in the night; and that their only fecurity against being furprised, or overtaken unawares, by that day, was their not being in darknefs, but enjoying the light of the Gofpel : ver. 4, 5. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should over-take you as a thief. You are all children of the light. This, their being forewarned of it, and furnished with all proper means to prepare for it, was their only fecurity against being furprifed by the coming of our Lord to judgment. Now taking this in connection with what he had faid just before (I Theff. iv. 15.), We which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord .- They concluded, as Mr. Locke does in respect to the fentiment of the Apostle, that the Lord would come while they were alive, and hereby were much alarmed and difturbed. But this notion was not only falfe, but of very bad tendency; and therefore the Apolile, with much earnestnefs, corrects the mistake in a fecond Epistle, ch. ii. 1, &c. where he plainly declares that he did not believe the coming of the Lord was at hand; and that he knew by the fpirit of prophefy, that before the coming of the Lord, there would be a falling away, or great apoftacy in the Christian church, and that the man of fin would appear, and erect a fpiritual Anti-Christian tyranny in the temple, or church of God. Most certainly the Apostle knew that the coming of Chrift would not be till feveral ages after the time in which he lived: and no doubt all the apostles knew this as well as he. And yet he, and the other apostles, always speak as if the coming of Christ, and the day of the Lord, the day of judgment, were near at hand; and accordingly exhort Christians to watch, and to keep themfelves in readinefs, that they may not be fur= prifed by it; as in the prefent paffage, Phil. iv. 5., 1 Theff. T 2 Y. 26

v. 2., Heb. x. 37., James, v. 7-9., 1 Pet. iv. 7., 2 Pet. iii. 10, 11, 12. Our bleffed Lord alfo knew very well that he should not come while that generation to whom he preached, was alive : and yet he exhorts that generation to watch and have all things in readinefs, that they might not be furprifed by his coming; Matt. xxiv. 42, &c. xxv. 13, Mark, xini. 33, &c. Luke, xxi. 34, &c. and after his afcension, Rev. xxii. 7, 12, 20. This is the current language and fenfe of our Lord and his apoftles. They reprefent his coming as at hand,—as drawing nigh, and admonish their hearers to watch, left his coming fhould find them unprepared; though they knew his coming would not be till many ages after these perfons whom they fo exhorted, were dead, and in their graves. But how shall we reconcile this feeming inconfiltency ?- Thus :-- " The time of " our Lord's coming coincides, or happens at the fame " time with the time of our death; how near to, or how " far foever from his coming we happen to die." To confirm this propefition, we need advance but one argument, out of more that might be produced; it is this: certainly our Christian course [of proparatory duties, sufferings, watchings, patience, &c.] ends when we die: but Chrift comes when our Chriftian course ends; or, our Christian course in this life terminates in the coming of Chrift. This is evident from the following texts: 1 Cor. i. 8., Philip. i. 6, 10., 1 Theff. iii. 13., v. 23., 2 Theff. i. 7., 1 Tim. vi. 11-15., 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8., James, v. 7., 1 Pet. i. 5, 13., 2 Pet. iii. 11, 12., and Rev. ii. 25., iii. 11. In fhort, throughout the New Testament, we are never exhorted to prepare for death, but always for the coming of our Lord, &c. From all which it appears, that the end of our Christian course, and consequently of our present life, is the coming of our Lord; when the faithful shall receive the falvation, the crown of righteoufness, which he will give to them that love his appearing .- An aweful, important, awakening truth ! of great weight and force in religion; infinitely worthy of our most ferious confideration every day and hour of our life! That which is here called our falvation, is in Jude, ver. 3. termed the common falvation; that is, that falvation, or reft, which we have all a promife left of obtaining, as all the Ifraelites had a promife left of entering into the land of Canaan, even they who fell short through unbelief, Heb. iv. 1, 2. The beautiful and lively metaphor in ver. 11, 12. is very obfervable. This present impersect state of trial, he compares to the night; and the falvation and glory we have in prospect, to the day: he supposes Christians in name may be asleep, negligent of their most important concerns, or immerfed in fenfuality: as the Apostle therefore of Christ, and a preacher of the Gospel, he knocks at the chamber-door, and calls to them, " It is high time to " awake out of fleep; the day appears, the glorious day " of your everlasting falvation. Awake, awake ! throw " off the loofe clothes which cover you in the night, and " in which it is unfeemly to appear before men; and put " on that comely drefs, which is agreeable to the day, " and gives a decent and honourable appearance in the " world :" meaning that disposition and conversation which are agreeable to the Gospel, lovely in the eyes of good men, and which fits us to appear among the bleffed in the realms of light.

Ver. 12. The armour of light] Beza observes very justly, that the fense of  $o\pi\lambda\alpha$ , armour, is very extensive, and comprehends any accourtements of the body. Hence it evidently fignifies drefs: and the Apostle's meaning will be obscured, if it be not so translated. "Put on the drefs and " ornaments of that virtue and holincis, which is fuitable " to the heavenly light of the Gospel." See Locke.

Ver. 13. Let us walk honefly] 'Eugynuóvzs, honeurab'y, or gracefully. Dr. Milner renders the paffage, Let us walk with a grace. The word for chambering is notrais, which Leigh explains of lying long in bed. It implies effeminacy and luxury of that kind. The word  $\dot{\alpha}_{i}$  is  $\gamma_{i}$  a, rendered wantonnefs, properly fignifies a foft and diffolute manner of life, attended with an affected delicacy, very detrimental to that refolution which is fo neceffary an ingredient in the character of one who would approve himfelf a good foldier of Jefus Chrift. The general meaning may be, "Do " not indulge any intemperate lewd converfation among " your heathen acquaintance, nor any firife or envy " againft your Chriftian brethren." See Doddridge, Stockius, and Milner's "Fading Flowers of Life," p. 38.

Ver. 14. Put ye on the Lord Jefus Christ] A firong expression for endeavouring to be clothed, through divine grace, with all the virtues and graces which compose his character. It is observable, that the Apostle does not fay, "Put on purity, sobriety, benevolence, &c." But he in effect fays all at once, in faying, Put ye on the Lord Jefus Christ. Plutarch tells us concerning the kings of Persia, that on the coronation-day they put on a robe which the first Cyrus wore before he was king, to remind them of imitating his exemplary temper and behaviour. Dr. Hammond renders the last clause of this verse very well, "Take "care

Inferences.-What a wife and important appointment of Providence is civil government, for the 'good of mankind; for a terror to evil doers, and a praise to them that do well! And what a friend is the Christian religion to its happines, peace, and order ! It directs rulers how to answer the valuable ends of the high truft which God has committed to them; and teaches fubjects to yield all dutiful obedience to them, for confcience-fake as well as for efcaping the rengeance of the fword of justice, and reaping the benefits of government. While magistrates rule for the general good of the community, according to the laws and conftitution of the flate, we ought to reverence and honour them in their public character, as the ministers and ordinance of God for good, and to pay the cultoms and tributes that are their due, as an equitable and grateful return for their care, trouble, and expence in protecting us, and our rights and properties : public as well as private debts, ought to be faithfully discharged; only we are never to think that we have so fully paid the debt of love one to another, as to be under no farther obligations to it. What an amiable and constraining principle is true Christian love ! It inclines and engages us to fulfil all the duties of momity towards our neighbour; it reftrains us from adultery, murder, theft, falsehood, and lying, and from all covetous defires of any man's goods and enjoyments; and it obliges and disposes us to a performance of all the contrary duties, yea, of every thing contained in the Second Table of the Law. But, alas! how imperfect is the prefent state of things! The best that can be faid of it is, that the night is far spent, and the day is at hand; and that complete falvation is continually approaching nearer and nearer to every true and perfevering believer. How should these thoughts excite Christians to shake off sloth, and renounce all works of darkness; fuch as rioting and drunkenness, uncleannels and wantonnels, ftrife and envy; and to walk bonourably, as becomes children of the light and of the day, and as those that put on Christ, and the illustrious armour with which he has furnished them, to guard against all evil; and that are careful never to do any thing to indulge the flefh, and fulfil its finful defires!

REFLECTIONS.—Ift, From the duties they owed to each other, as members of civil fociety, the Apostle proceeds to enforce submission in all lawful things to the authority of 2 For bone believeth that he may eat all things: another, who is weak, cateth herbs.

the civil government under which they lived. The Chriftian doctrine makes no alteration in the natural and civil rights of mankind. Dominion is not founded in grace; therefore Let every foul be fubject unto the higher powers; respectful and obedient to all lawful magistrates, from the higheft to the loweft, and willingly observant of the laws with the execution of which they are entrusted. For there is no power, but of God; he is the fource of all authority, dignity, and honour; by him kings reign. The powers that be are ordained of God; whatever be the mode of government, whether the ruling power be lodged in the hands of one perfon or many, fubmiffion is our duty; and though the men who are invefted with the authority be never fo vile and wicked, their lawful commands are neverthelefs to be obeyed; and the magistrate is to be honoured, however despicable the man may appear. Whofoever therefore resisteth the power, and refuse the bedience to the lawful orders of the established government, refisteth the ordinance of God ; and they that refift shall receive to themselves damnation, xpijua, the punifhment due to their offence, according to the laws, from the fword of the magistrate, and judgment allo from God for the tranfgreffion against his ordinance. For rulers are not a terror to good works : they who behave quiet and fubmillive have nothing to fear, for fuch fubjects the magiltrates are bound to protect and cherifh; but they are appointed to reftrain the evil actions of men. which tend to diffurbathe peace of fociety, to diffonour God, or injure their neighbour. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power ? do that which is good, be peaceable and obedient to the laws, and theu shalt have praise of the same, in every well-ordered government fuch fubjects will be protected and encouraged. For he is the minister of God, appointed to preferve the peace of the state, to redrefs injuries, administer justice, suppress vice, profaneness, and immorality; to punish offenders, and promote the general welfare : and therefore if thou be found obedient, the office of magistracy will be to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, and violate the established laws, be afraid; for he beareth not the fword in vain ; being obliged by his very office impartially to inflict the penalty due to every offence ; for he is the minister of God, who puts the fword of judgment into his hands, as a revenger to execute wrath upon him that docth evil ; not out of any private perfonal refentment, but coolly as God's vicegerent, without partiality or favour, according to the dictates of justice. Wherefore ye must needs be fubject, not only for wrath, merely through fear of punishment and penalties, but alfo for conficiencefake; from a principle of duty towards God, whole ordinance is binding; and obedience for his fake is due to human human laws, though no pains or penalties were annexed. For, for this caufe pay ye tribute alfo; the taxes and duties neceffary for the support of the government whole protection you enjoy: for they are God's miniflers, attending continually upon this very thing. Render therefore to all their dues, according to the laws human or divine; tribute to whom tribute is due, suftom to whom cuflom; all fubfidies, taxes, &c. imposed by lawful authority; fear, to whom fear and reverence should be paid; bonour, to whom bonour is due, according to the fuperior rank and relation in which by the providence of God they are placed.

Owe no man any thing; never run in debt where you have no immediate prospect of paying; nor continue in debt when you have ability to difcharge it; and in every relation of life be ready to fulfil the duty which you owe. One debt there is, however, and but one, where, though ever paying, you neither with nor defire that it flould be lefs, and that is, to love one another as men, and efpecially as Christians, feeking to promote each other's present and eternal welfare; and this, as the great and reigning principle in all your conduct : for he that loveth another, and, from a fense of the love of God in Christ, experiences this godlike charity, hath fulfilled the law; if his love be perfect, he will be complete in all the will of God. Yet fo far as love is in vigorous exercife, fo far will his fpiritual obedience advance towards perfection. For this, thou falt not commit adultery, thou falt not kill, thou falt not Steal, thou fhalt not bear falle witness, thou shalt not covet ; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprebended in this faying, namely, Thou fhalt love thy neighbour as thy/elf, and act confcientiously towards him, as, were our circumstances reversed, we might reasonably expect he fhould behave towards us; for then, were there no human reltraints or punifhments, love would effectually prevent every violation of our neighbour's perfon, goods, or fame: we cannot hurt the body which we love; we cannot defraud those whom we love; we cannot speak evil of those whom we love; we cannot defile those whom we love, though lawlefs luft (which is real hatred) often covers its horrid features with the falle vizor of this facred name. Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, neither in act nor intention; the serve love is the fulfilling of the law.

3dly. The Apofile enforces what he had been recommending to their practice, by a very aweful confideration. And this duty of love I prefs upon you, knowing the time, the day of Gofpel grace and light having broke in upon us; fo that now it is high time to awake out of fleep; and thake off all fpiritual floth and carnal fecurity: for now is our falt ation nearer than when we believed ; and as our journey's end draws nearer, we fhould mend our pace, not loiter, when the manfions of eternal reft are, as it were, in view. The night is far (pent, the night of trials, and afflictions, and remaining ignorance, is drawing to an end; the day of the complete redemption of the faithful from darkness. trouble, and fuffering, is at hand, when in eternal glory their fun shall rife, to set no more : let us therefore cast off the works of darknefs; as perfons riling from their beds remove the clothes, fo must we reject and put far away all those finful tempers and practices, which are opposite to the light of truth, are usually done in fecret, and for which the blacknefs of darknefs is the referved punifhment : and let us put on the armour of light, all those bright and fhining graces of the Spirit, which adorn our holy profeffion, and enable us to ftand against the affaults of fin, the world, and Satan, till triumphantly we fhall appear in all the luftre of eternal glory. Therefore let us walk honefly as in the day, thewing a conversation fuch as becometh godlinefs in the eyes of men; guided by the light of truth, and the Spirit of purity; and able to bear the strictest ferutiny of our Observer; not in rioting and drunkennes, indulging to excefs in meat and drink our fenfual appetites; not in chambering and wantonnefs, for which fenfuality fupplies the fuel; but reftraining every lafeivious thought, immodeft word, indecent action, as well as abstaining from the groffer pollutions which are in the world through luft; not in strife and envying, contentious, quarrelfome, and grieved, initead of rejoicing in the profperity of our neighbours. But put ye on the Lord Jefus Chrift, that you may be complete in him; put on his image, that, being like him, you may come to be with him; put on his holy profession, owning your entire dependence upon him, as your Prophet, Prieft, and King; that all who fee you may take knowledge of you that you indeed belong to him; and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof; let your foul, and your eternal interests, be your great concern, without anxiety about a worldly provision; and, especially, mortify your feufual appetites in whatever would tend to inflame the passions; and to as many as walk after this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and on the Ifrael of God.

CHAP. XIV.

SOME of the Jewish converts at Rome, fancying that the meats forbidden by Mofes were unclean in themfelves, ver. 14. and that the days which he ordered to be kept holy, were still to be fanctified, looked on their Gentile brethren as profane perfons, becaufe they ate all kinds of meat without diffinction, and regarded every day alike. On the other hand, the Gentiles defpifed the Jews as ignorant bigots, for making any diffinctions of meats and days, and refused to admit them into their company. To remedy these diforders, the Apostle, in this chapter, commanded the Gentile converts who were well instructed, to be in friendship with such of their Jewish brethren as were weak in the faith, and to converse familiarly with them; not however for the purpole of difputing about their particular opinions, but for knowing each other's good qualities and graces, that mutual love might be promoted, ver. 1.-He acknowledged that it was natural for the Jews and and Gentiles to differ in opinion concerning meats, ver. 2. —But the Gentile brother, who ate all kinds indifferently, was not to defpife the Jew as a weak bigot, becaufe he ate fuch meats only as were allowed by the law of Mofes. On the other hand, the Jew was not to condemn the Gentile as a profane perfon, for eating meats forbidden by Mofes; for God had received him into his church, notwithstanding he did not obey the law, ver. 3.

Having thus advised the Gentile and Jewish Christians to forbear despising and condemning each other, for not following the fame rule respecting meats, the Apostle aked them what title they had to condemn one another for their conduct in that matter, feeing they were all Chrift's fervants, employed by him in his family or church, alone, whole prerogative it is to acquit or condemn his own fervants. Farther, he affured them that, notwithflanding they condemned one another on account of meats, Christ, at the judgment, will acquit his fincere fervants, although they may have erred in that matter, provided they have acted therein according to confcience, ver. 4. -Next, with respect to the days which Moses ordered to be hallowed, the Apolitle likewife acknowledged, that it was natural for the Jews and Gentiles to have different opinions. But whether they observed these days, or did not observe them, their duty was, to be fully persuaded in their own mind concerning the lawfulness of what they did, ver. 5.-And therefore, though they differed in their practice concerning meats and days, the Apostle charitably hoped they all acted in these matters from a regard to the will of Christ, ver. 6 .- This regard, he told them, it became them to maintain habitually, because none of them was his own lord : none of them was at liberty in religious matters to act according to his own pleafure, ver. 7, 8 .- For Christ both died and rofe again that he might acquire a right to rule the dead and the living, ver. 9.-Chrift then king their only ruler, the Apostle asked them, how they dared to intrude themfelves into his place, the Jews by condemning the Gentiles, and the Gentiles by infolently defpiling the Jews? Instead of having a right to judge one another, they were all to ftand before the judgment-feat of Chrift, ver. 10. as Isaiah foretold ;---and to give an account to him, not of their neighbour's actions, but of their own, ver. 11, 12.

Chrift then being the only Lord of the conficience of his fervants, and the judge of their actions, the Apoftle commanded the Romans no longer to judge one another, but to judge this rather to be a fit measure, not to lay, either by their fevere judgments, or by their example, any temptation in one another's way, which might occasion their falling into fin, ver. 13.—And, to fhew them what he meant by this advice, he told them, that though nomeat be unclean in itfelf, every kind is unclean to him whothinketh it unclean; becaufe, while he entertains that opimion, be cannot eat it without fin, ver. 14.—And therefore, faid the Apostle, if thy weak brother be tempted, either by thy fevere cenfures, or by thy example, to eat meats which he thinks unclean, thou actest not according to the love which thou shouldst bear to thy brother, if thou continuest to tempt him in that manner. I befeech thee, do not deftroy him with thy meat, for whom Chrift died, ver. 15.; -nor occasion the good liberty which belongs to the disciples of Christ, to be evil spoken of by the Jews, ver. 16.-Belides, there is no reason for using your liberty on every occafion; especially as the religion of Christ does not confift in the use of meats and drinks, but in a righteous and peaceable behaviour towards all men; neither are the pleafures which his religion promifes, the pleafures of fense, but those joys which result from the possession and exercise of the graces ... d virtues which the Holy Ghost infuses into men's minds, ver. 17 .- Farther, the perfon who by righteoufnefs, peace, and joy, in the Holy Ghost, ferves Christ, is acceptable to God, and approved by all his faints, ver. 18.

Upon these principles, the Apostle exhorted his brethren, in things about which they might entertain different opinions with a good confcience, to follow fuch a courfe as would promote their mutual peace and edification, ver. 19.;-and by no means, for the trifling pleafure of eating this or that kind of meat, to incur the hazard of destroying one another's grace or virtue, which is the work of God. For although all meats are clean, that meat is bad to him who eateth it contrary to his confcience, through the flumbling-block, or temptation of another's example, ver. 20.-Every one's duty therefore is, to avoid all those things which have any tendency to lead others into fin, or to weaken their grace, ver. 21.-For the direction, however, of the well-instructed, the Apostle toldthem, that, having a right faith concerning meats and days, they were under no obligation to difplay that faith at all times. It was fufficient, if they held it fast in the prefence of God, for the regulation of their own conduct : and that it would be happy for them, if they never fubjected. themfelves to condomnation, by doing that which they knew to be lawful, ver. 22 .- Yet condemnation they would affuredly bring on themfelves, if by eating meats which they knew to be lawful, they tempted others to fin by eating them contrary to their confcience. For he who believes certain meats to be unlawful, fins if he eats them ; because he eateth not of faith, that is, from a belief that they are lawful; but in eating them violates his confcience. And in general, whatever a man does without believing it to be lawful, being a violation of his confcience, is fin : which is the true meaning of the famed aphorism, Whatever is not of faith, is fin, ver. 23.

Here the xivth chapter of the Epiftle to the Romans ends, according to the common division. But as the Apostle continues the subject treated of in that chapter, through the first seven verses of the xvth chapter, it will be

He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for "he to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, thanks.

* 1 Cor. 10. 26, 28. Mat. 14. 19. & 15. 36. & 26. 26. 1 Tim. 4. 3, 4.

be proper to add an account of these verses also, that the reader may have the whole of the Apostle's difcourse under his eye at once.

To proceed then. The Apostle having declared in the xivth chapter, that the weak Jewish Christians, in the affair of meats and days, were bound to act according to their own confcience, notwithstanding it might be erroneous, he, in the beginning of the xvth chapter, told the wellinstructed Roman brethren, that they ought to bear or carry the weakneffes of the ignorant and prejudiced, that is, they ought to do what they could to prevent their weakneffes from being hurtful to them. In particular, they were not to pleafe themfelves with the eating of meats, which their weak brethren reckoned unclean, if they had reafon to think that any who entertained that belief would by their example be tempted to eat fuch meats contrary to their conficience, ver. 1.—He therefore exhorted every one to pleafe his neighbour for his good, by abstaining from fuch meats as were offensive to him, in order that the body of Chrift might be edified, ver. 2.-To this they were called by, the example of Christ, who pleafed not himfelf by fenfual gratifications; but subjected himfelf to all manner of hardships and reproaches for the glory of God, and the good of men, as was foretold concerning him, ver. 3.-Here the Apostle took occasion to inform the Romans, that whatever things were anciently written in the Scriptures, were written for our instruction; that by what is recorded concerning the patience and confolation granted to the faints in their trials, we might have hope of receiving the like patience and confolation in our trials, ver. 4.—And being exceedingly defirous to promote the purity and peace of the Roman church, he prayed God to beftow on its members the good difpositions which he had been recommending; that, laying afide their difputes, they might cordially join in worfhipping God publicly, and in praifing him for his goodnefs to men, ver. 5, 6.- This admirable difcourfe, the Apostle concluded with an exhortation to the Jewish and Gentile brethren to receive one another, that is, to live in peace and friendship with one another, even as Chrift had received them all into his friendship and church, to the great glory of God the Father, ver. 7.

It is proper now to obferve, that although the controverfy concerning the holy days, and the diffinction of meats enjoined by the law of Mofes, which led the Apoftle to give the Roman brethren the rules contained in the xivth and in the beginning of the xvth chapter of this Epiftle, has no place in the prefent flate of the church, thefe chapters muft not be confidered as ufelefs. The general principles of morality explained in them, are of unalterable obligation, and may be applied with great advantage for preventing us, both from lording it over the conficience of our brethren, and from fubmitting to their unrighteous impofitions in matters of religion. For what can be more ufeful to Chriftians in every age, than to be affured by an infpired Apoftle, that Chrift is the only Lord of the confcience of his fervants, and the judge of their hearts?-That he has not delegated this great prerogative to any man or body of men whatever-That to him alone, and not to one another, they are accountable for their religious opinions and actions-That in all cafes where difference of opinion in religious matters takes place, every man fhould guide himfelf by his own perfuation, and not by the opinion of others-That no man or body of men has any right to force the conficence of others by perfecuting them, or punishing them for their opinions-That all who do fo, usurp the prerogative of Christ, and therefore, inftead of hating them, either for their opinions, or for their mode of worthipping God, we ought to live in prace and friendship with them, notwithstanding these unessential differences .--- That, as the kingdom of God does not confift . in meat and drink, but in righteoufnefs and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, the teachers who make holinefs to confift in abilaining from this or that kind of meat, miferably corrupt their disciples, by leading them to believe that they can render themfelves holy and acceptable to God without experiencing and practifing holinefs .-Laftly, in the above-mentioned chapters, the Apoftle has laid it down as an indifpenfable rule, that no one, even by doing things innocent, fhould, by his example, tempt a weak brother to follow him, contrary to his confcience; becaufe, while the weak brother thinks the thing finful, his doing it is a fin, although in itfelf it may really be innocent.

The foregoing principles and rules being the ftrongeft barrier against all usurpations on the rights of conscience, whether by the ecclefiaftical or the civil powers, this paffage of the Epiftle to the Romans, in which they are laid down by the infpiration of God, fhould be regarded as the great charter of Christian liberty; and as fuch, it is highly to be valued, frequently read, deeply meditated on, and carefully observed by Christians of all denominations. If thefe liberal principles and excellent rules had been fufficiently underflood and duly refpected from the beginning, innumerable mifchiefs would have been prevented, which miferably wafted the church in former times; and there would have been at this day more of the genuiue fpirit of the Gofpel among the difciples of Chrift, than in any period of Christianity fince the first ages. But, alas! it was the misforune of the church, very early, to fall under the teaching and direction of a number of proud, ignorant, ambitious men, who, being actuated by an immoderate love of power and wealth, impioufly ufurped the prerogative of Chrift, and imposed on the people, not only doctrines not taught by Chrift and his Apostles, but doctrines directly contrary to theirs, together with a variety of ulages in the worship of God, of their own invention, many of them downright fuperstitions, and all of them finful, when imposed as terms of Christian communion. Nay, which is worfe ftill, thefe ungodly fpiritual guides, vainly puffed up in their fleshly minds, obtruded on mankind kind their own definitions of doctrines confessedly above human comprehension, as the infallible dictates of the Spirit of God, by whom they pretended to be guided in their decisions. And, having deluded ignorant superstitious princes with that falle pretence, they excited them to persecute all who refifted their unrighteous usurpations, and who rejected that corrupt form of religion which they had established. For these deluded princes, to stop the mouths of those who stood up for the truth, made use of the diabolical arguments of fire and fword, racks and gibbets, and every cruelty which furious bigotry could devile. So that during many ages, the faints were worn out, and genuine Christianity was well nigh banished from the earth. May God preferve his church in the prefent, and in all fucceeding times, from the like evils, that the religion of Jesus may never again be made the instrument of gratifying the evil paffions of covetous and ambitious men!

Ver. 1, &c. Him that is weak, &c.] By Aquila and Phifcilla, who were come from Rome, and with whom St. Paul was familiar for a confiderable time (Acts, xviii. 2, 3.), ot by fome other hand, the Apostle had a particular account of the flate of the Christian church at Rome, and was informed that there was no good agreement between the Jewish and Gentile converts about meats and days. The Jewish Christian retaining a veneration for the laws of Moles, abstained from certain meats, and was observant of certain days; while the Gentile, understanding that the Christian religion laid him under no obligations to fuch ceremonial points, had no regard to either. The Jew ccnsured the Gentile as a latitudinarian, little better than a mere heathen, and likely to relapfe into idolatry. The Gentile cenfured the Jew, as a man of narrow, fuperflitious principles, and defective in the faith of the Gospel. The Apofile exhorts, that in fuch things as are not effential to teligion, and in which both parties, in their different way of thinking, might have an honeft meaning and ferious regard to God, difference of fentiments might not hinder Chriftian fellowship and love ; but that they would mutually forbear each other, make candid allowances, and efpecially not carry any Gospel liberties so far, as to difgust a weak brother or Jewish Christian against the Gospel itself, and tempt him to renounce Christianity. His rules and exhortations are still of great use, and happy would the Chriftian world be, if they were more generally practifed. By him that is weak in the faith, is meant the Jew, who the Apolle knew affuredly was in the wrong ; yet he uses him very tenderly, and avoids faying any thing of him that was hirth and overbearing, and only reprefents him as weak in the faith. The reception here spoken of is, " the receiving " into familiar and ordinary conversation," as is evident from ch. xv. 7. where the Apoille, directing them to reenve one another mutually, uses the fame word woodaubanote. " Live together in a free and friendly manner, the " weak with the strong, and the strong with the weak, " without any regard to the differences among you about " the lawfulnefs of any indifferent thing." Doubifu! difputations imply " debates and diftinctions about matters in " doubt between you." Dr. Whitby explains the word Sianeious of diferiminating perfons, according to their inward thoughts and reafonings on thefe heads. Dr. Doddridge, remarking upon this verfe the ftrength of the Apofile's reafoning in favour of candour and mutual condefcention, observes with the true spirit of that candour which he has fo ftrongly enforced, " that when it shall pleafe God to " awaken in the governors of eftablished protestant " churches fuch a fpirit of moderation and goodnefs, " joined with a true zeal for religion, as to leave certain " things in that natural flate of indifference, in which . " almost all fensible men confess it is best they should. " be left, many feparations will ceafe of courfe, and " the healers of fuch breaches will do a noble fervice " to their country, be honoured by all who love Chrif-" flianity, and amply rewarded by the great Head of the " church."

Ver. 2. Eateth herbs ] Some of the Jews used to eat no flefh at all, and others looked upon it as a very high pitch of virtue to abstain from it in Gentile countries, and to fubfift entirely on vegetables, from an apprelention, that the flefh fold in the fhambles might have been offered to idols, or at least have contracted fome ceremonial pollution. Poffibly fome of these Jewish converts might have been of the fect of the Effenes, who were peculiarly ftrict on this head, infomuch that they abstained not only from flesh, but from fruit. See Whitby and Doddridge.

Ver. 3. Let not him that eateth, defpife, &c.] By him that eateth, St. Paul feems to mean the Gentiles, who were lefs fcrupulous in the use of indifferent things; and by bim that eateth not, the Jews, who made great diffinction of meats, and days, and placed in them a great and, as they thought, neceffary part of the worthip of the true God. To the Gentiles the Apostle gives this caution, that they should not contemn the Jews as weak, narrow-minded men, who laid fo much stress on matters of fuch finall moment, and thought religion fo much concerned in those indifferent things. On the other fide, he exhorts the Jews not to judge that those who neglected the Jewish observances of meats and days, were still heathens, or would foon apostatize to heathenism again; for he reasons, that God had received them into his family, and that they had no authority to judge whether they were of that family, or would continue fo, on account of these unessential points: " That," fays he, " belongs only to the mafter of the " family; but notwithstanding your censure or hard " thoughts of them, God is able and willing to continue " them in his family, if they cleave to him in faith ; not-"withstanding you suspect, from their free use of things " indifferent, that they incline too much, or approach too " near to Gentilifm." See Locke.

Ver. 4. Standeth or falleth, &c.] Falleth is here used in the destructive fense, and signifies being totally cast off. Comp. ch. xi. 11, 12. Dr. Whitby explains the last clause, of God's convincing Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we I are the Lord's.

9 "For to this end Chrift both died, and role, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.

convincing the Jewish converts in general of the indifference of the Mosaic ritual, by putting a speedy period to the very possibility of observing it, in the destruction at Jerufalem; which would have a peculiar efficacy to wean men's minds from an attachment to it, when confidered in connection with Christ's predictions of that event. But a more extensive interpretation of the passing is both more obvious, and lefs liable to objection.—" Let me tell you, " he shall be continued in God's favour, and established as " a true member of his family, if he continue to cleave " to him by faith; for it is not only confistent with the " should be continued and established, notwithstanding " his neglect of the ritual law; if he perfevere in walk-" ing with him by faith. See Whitby, and Doddridge.

Ver. 5. One man effeemeth one day, &c.] The Apoftle having, in the foregoing verfe, ufed the phrafe  $x_{PLWW} a^{\lambda} \lambda^{\lambda_{2}}$ - $\tau_{PLW}$  oixé $\tau_{WV}$ , for judging any one to be or not to be another man's fervant,—feems here to continue the ufe of the word  $\tau_{PlWW}$  in the fame fignification; that is, for judging a day to be more particularly God's. Critics have obferved, that the word  $\varpi \lambda n p o p o p (i o f \omega)$ , rendered fully perfuaded, is moft properly applied to a fhip, which is carried on by the wind and tide with all its fails fpread to forward it, and nothing to obftruct its courfe. So that the meaning is, "Let him " go on in his own way, without impediment :—let every " man enjoy his own fentiments freely in thefe things." See Raphelius, Doddridge, and Bennet's Appendix to his Irenicum, p. 120, &c.

Ver. 7-9. For none of us liveth to himfelf, &c.] None of us, that is, "none of us Chriftians, ought to live," &c. The Apoftle's argument ftands thus: "According to the "principles of true religion, and of the Chriftian religion "in particular, we are not our own; neither are we to "live to ourfelves, as if we were our own lords and pro-"prietors, and had no other rule but our own will and "pleafure. No; we are all Chrift's, we are his difciples and fubjects; and His will fhould be the rule of our confciences and conduct. As therefore we fhould not make our own wills or fentiments a rule to ourfelves, much "lefs fhould we make them a rule to others; as if they were to live to us, or, like fervants, pay us obedience. "At the time of death we do not fall into our own hands, "as if we had power to raife ourfelves to life again at the " laft day; but we die into the hands of Chrift, and it is " he alone, to whom God has given power to bring us to " life again." Confequently, it is the duty of every one of us to approve ourfelves to our Lord Jefus Chrift; and therefore we may, refpecting those things of which we are now treating, fafely leave every one to do what he fincerely thinks is most pleasing to him, without endangering our own falvation, or that of a Chriftian brother. For affuredly all is well, both with him and us, in life and death, if both feriously endeavour to live internally to, and to regulate their actions by, the will of Christ. See Locke.

Ver. 8. We are the Lord's] Thefe words give an eafy interpretation to the phrafes of eating and living, &c. to the Lord; for they make them plainly to refer to what the Apoftle had faid at the latter end of ver. 3. for God hath received him; fignifying, that God had received all thofe who profefied and possefield the power of the Gospel, and had given their names up to Jefus Christ, into his family, and thus made them his domestics; and therefore we should not judge of or censure one another, for that every Christian was the Lord's domestic, appropriated to him as his fervant; fo that all he did in that state and in that secounted for to any one elfe. See Locke.

Ver. 9. Might be Lord] This muft be fo underftood here as to agree with the foregoing verfe: there it was, "We, that is, we Chriftians, whether we live or die, " are the Lord's property: for the Lord died, and rofe " again, that we, whether living or dying, flould be his." See Locke.

Ver. 10. But why doft thou judge thy brother, &c.] The fuperfititious are prone to judge, and those who are not fuperfititious are prone to defpife. Heylin.

Ver. 13. Let us not therefore judge] He had before reproved the weak for centuring the ftrong in the ufe of their liberty: he comes now to reftrain the ftrong from offending the weak, by a too free ufe of their liberty, in not forbearing the ufe of it, where it might give offence to the weak. The word rendered judge, has two different fenfes, and feems to be ufed in both in this verte. In the first place, it fignifies to centure and condemn; in the other, to determine, as a matter of importance. See Hammond, Locke, and Raphelius. Some fay that oncodarow fignifies 2 18 'For he that in these things ferveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men.

19 'Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another.

20 <sup>d</sup> For meat, destroy not <sup>c</sup> the work of God. All things indeed are pure; but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence.

22 Haft thou <sup>g</sup> faith? have it to thyfelf before God. <sup>h</sup> Happy is he that condemneth not himfelf in that thing which he alloweth.

23 And he that 'doubteth is damined if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for whatfoever is not of faith is fin.

hgnifies properly "a piece of wood that fupports a trap, "which falls on its being moved;" and fo may with peculiar propriety fignify whatever may be the occasion of enfnaring another, and drawing him into fin and mitchief.

Ver. 15. But if thy brother be grieved, &cc.] If then thy brother be offended with thy meat, thou walkest no longer charitably. It hence appears, that grieving a person does not signify merely putting him out of humour, but leading him into fin. The grief therefore is that which arises from a confcious of having acted amils, in conformity to the example of a person confidered as superior, whether in tank or genius, knowledge or piety. See Hammond, Locke, and Doddridge.

Ver. 16. Let not then your good be evil fpoken of ] " Let "not your liberty, which is a good that you enjoy under "the Golpel, be evil fpoken of." See I Cor. x. 29, 30.

Ver. 17. For the kingdom of God is not meat, &c.] "The "kingdom of God neither prohibits nor enjoins fuch "things as thefe, nor is it taken up with fuch little mat-"ters; but the great defign of it is to regulate the temper "of its profeffors, and in the most effectual manner to "cultivate and promote righteoufnefs, and peace, and "joy in the Holy Ghoft; that is, a ferene temper and a "holy joy, fupported by a confcioufnefs of ftrict inte-"grity, eftablished on principles of universal love, and "infpired by the bleffed Spirit of God." See Scott's Chriftian Life, vol. i. p. 28t.

Christian Life, vol. i. p. 285. Ver. 20. The work of God] That is, a Christian. See 1 Cor. iz. 1., Ephef. ii. 10., Philip. i. 6. Defiroying him here, and in ver. 15., is causing him to apostatize, or renounce the Christian faith. Some read, for the fake of meat, &c. and instead of pure,—clean.

Ver. 21. Is offended, or is made weak ] That is, drawn to the doing of any thing, of the lawfulness of which not being fully perfuaded, it becomes a fin to him. See Locke.

Ver. 22. Haft thou faith ?] There is no necessity for reading the first clause interrogatively; and it feems more agreeable to the structure of the Greek ;- Thou hast faith : as if he had faid, " I own you have a right perfuation." Farther, there is an anadiplofis in the words ixes and ixe: the first fignifies fimply have, the latter hold fast. "You " have a right perfuasion concerning your Christian liberty, " and I advise you to hold your profession steadfastly, " with respect to yourself in the fight of God."  $E_{\chi\omega}$ , have, has frequently this emphatical fignification. See Matt. xxv. 29. Inftead of to thy/elf, the Greek would be more properly rendered with respect to, -as pertaining to; that is, " fo far as it concerns yourfelf, hold it in the fight " of God." It is an exhortation,-not to keep it private to himself, not to suppres his sentiments,-but to retain them fleadily, and never do or fay any thing inconfiftent with them : as it follows, " Happy is the man who con-" demns not himfelf, by doing or profeffing any thing " inconfistent with what he is affured in his own con-fcience is right." The Apostle puts this in, that the Christian Gentile might not mistake his meaning, or imagine that he was perfuading him to be indifferent to the truth, to diffemble it, to give it up, or act contrary to it upon fome occasions: this was far from the Apostle's intention, who only exhorts him to think charitably of a weak brother, and to abstain from any indifferent actions which might difguft him, or prove a fnare or temptation to him. Without this caution, his difcourse would have been imperfect, and not well guarded.

Ver. 23. And he that doubteth, is damned, &c.] Is convicted [of fin] if he eat, becaufe it is not according to his be-U 2 lief:

CHAP. XV.

The firong must bear with the weak. We may not pleafe ourfelves, for Chrift did not fo; but receive one the other, as Chrift did us all, both Jews and Gentiles. Paul excufcth his writing, promifeth to fee them, and requesteth their prayers.

[Anno Domini 58.]

W E ' then that are ftrong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to pleafe ourfelves. 2 <sup>b</sup> Let every one of us please bis neighbour for bis good to edification.

3 <sup>c</sup> For even Christ pleafed not himfelf; but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me.

lief: for whatfoever [a man doeth] not according to his perfuafion, is fin. The word rendered doubteth, is translated flaggered, ch. iv. 20. and is there opposed to frong in the faith, and being fully perfuaded, as it follows in the next verse. In reading this verse, the emphasis should be laid upon is. Ver. 22. Happy is he that condemns not himself in that thing which he allows. Vcr. 23. But he that doubts is condemned; " He that really in his confcience makes a dif-" ference between one fort of food and another, is con-" demned by God as a finner, if he eat out of unbridled " appetite, vain complaifance, or weak shame. It must " in fuch a cafe be criminal, because he eateh not with " faith : that is to fay, with a full fatisfaction in his own " mind, that God allows and approves the action:" for it may be laid down as a general maxim in all thefe cafes, that what foever is not of faith is fin; fince the divine authority ought to be fo facred with every man, as to engage him not only to avoid what is plainly and directly contrary to it, but what he apprehends or even fuspects to be fo, though that apprehension or fuspicion should be founded on his own ignorance or mistake. See Locke, Doddridge, Mill, Wetstein, Calmet, and " The Cafe of a " doubting Confcience," p. 169,

Inferences.-How ready should Christians be to hold communion one with another, notwithstanding little differences between them, like those that relate to ceremonial days and meats, which are fet afide by the Gofpel difpenfation, and do not affect the vitals of religion ! They fould take heed of an uncharitable, difdaining, and cenforious spirit; but the fincere believer may comfort himfelf in this, that God has received him, and is able to make him ftand, though others may defpife, or judge him. How much better therefore is it to approve ourfelves. to God and our own conferences, than to be approved of men! For we must all appear before the judgment-feat of Chrift. And, oh ! what awful thoughts flouid we have of the Lord Jefus, as the great God, as well as Judge of all; who has fworn by himfelf, that every knee thall bow to him; and to whom every one nucl give an account of himfelf! And in the view of an impartial and decifive judgment to come, how tender and condefcending fhould. we be to our brothren that are apt to be offended, on every little occasion, for want of better light! It is a high aggrayation of guilt to do any thing that, in its own nature, tends to the difcomfort and ruin of the weakest believers, and to the difconcerting or deftroying of the work of God in them. The weak believer fhould not judge the ftrong, nor the firong despife the weak; each remembering that what is not of faith is fin: nor fhould either of them behave fo imprudently as to give occasion for their good to be evil spoken of; but happy is he, who condemns not himself in that which he allows himself to do. How concerned should Christians of all ranks and denominations be, to act upon principles of faith, and a good confcience in all things, and to promote each other's edification and peace | Oh, how excellent are the bleffings of Chrift's kingdom, which confifts not in external ritual things, like meats and drinks, but in righteousness, peace, and joy in. the Holy Ghoft! And how preferable is his fervice to all others! It is acceptable to God, and approved of all good men; and, in the performance of this, we are called to live and die, not to ourfelves, but to Chrift, whofe we are, and whom we ought to ferve, in confideration of his having died and rifen, and now living in heaven, that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living.

REFLECTIONS.—1ft, As many of the Jewish converts ftill retained a high veneration for the Mosaical inflitutions, and were for pulsus in observing a diffinction of meats and days, from which the Gentile Christians just y apprehended. themselves entirely at liberty; the Apostle therefore recommends a kind condescension towards the Jewish brethren in regard to the prejudices of education; and that there should be no coolness or distance between them on account of these different matters. Him that is weak in, the faith receive ye, heartily embracing and welcoming him, but not to doubtful disputations, nor perplexing him with uselefs disputes about things of a trivial nature.

1. Refpecting meats. One believeth that he may eat all things; and, fatisfied about the abolition of the ceremonial law, counts nothing any longer common or unclean, eating, without feruple, whatever kind of wholefome food is fet before him. Another who is weak, through the prejudice of education, or want of light, fearful of using any meat but what is permitted by the law of Moses, and killed according to the manner there preferibed (Lev. xvii. 10-14.), when he is invited to eat with Gentiles, left he should incur ceremonial defilement, abstains from their victuals, and eateth only herbs. Let not him that eatsth, defaile foile him that eateth not, as weak and fuperstitious, priding himfelf on his fuperior knowledge and clearer views of his Christian liberty: and, on the other hand, let not him which tateth not, judge him that eateth; and being prejudiced and narrow in his own conceptions, dare uncharitably to cenfure his brother as a loofe liver, and irreligious professor, because he has no fuch scruples about indifferent matters; for God hath received him into his favour, and therefore, whom he accepts, none should condemn. Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he flandeth or falleth. It is the highest arrogance to usurp God's throne, and fit in judgment on our brother, who is responsible to God alone, and uses only that liberty which he is in confcience fatisfied God allows. Yea, and whatever rath centures the weak and fuperflitious may caft upon him, he shall be holden up ; the Lord will strengthen and preferve the faithful foul unto falvation, for God is able to make him fland, is able and willing to preferve the beherer that continues to cleave to him, till he appear with boldness in the day of judgment. Note ; (1.) Nothing is more contrary to the fpirit of charity than rafh and hafty cenfures. (2.) We are to leave every main to the great Judge, nor should pretend to decide upon his everlasting state without the clearest warrant of God's word.

2. Respecting days. One man esteemeth one day above another, as the Jewish converts did, who paid a particular regard to the paffover, pentecost, new-moons, and other stall and fast days of the law, as more facred than others : another effeemeth every day alike, counting all these Jewish difinctions as abolished. Let every man be fully perfuaded in his own mind ; and, being fatisfied in his own confcience, be content that others fhould judge for themfelves, allowing them the fame liberty that we claim ourfelves; charitably concluding, that he that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord, intending therein to glorify the Lord Jufus, who on mount Sinai at first enjoined the ceremonial law; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it, from the fame principle, and with a view to the Redeemer's glory, by whole authority he supposes the Molaical inflitutions are laid afide. He that eateth, as the converted Gentile, every kind of meat without feruple, utab to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks, and is perfuaded that all the creatures of God are good, when fanctified by the word of God, and by prayer : and he that eateth not, supposing that the prohibition of a variety of meats enjoined by Moles is still in force, to the Lord he eateth not, perfuaded in confcience that he ought to abitain, and giveth God thanks for the food which he is allowed under the law. In these points, therefore, we should bear and forbear; and not, for fuch trifles, dispute, and break the bands of Christian love.

3. Our grand end and aim in these things, and all others, hould be the glory of God. For none of us liveth to himself; we are not our own, and must not live as self-seekers, or selfpleafers; we are bought with a price, that we fhould glorify God in our bodies and in our fpirits, which are his: and no man dieth to himfelf, withing to get rid of his troubles, or to gain a name; or felfifhly defiring his crown before the time when God shall appoint him an end to his warfare; for whether we, who are truly the fervants of Jefus, live, we live unto the Lord, defirous to be, and do, and fuffer according to his holy will and pleafure; and whether we die a natural, lingering, sudden, or violent death, we die unto the Lord, refigned to his will, committing all our concerns into his hands, and with our departing breath defiring to exalt his great and glorious name, and to commend the goodness of our God : whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's; belong to him as his devoted fervants; as his infeparable property depending on him, and fingly aiming at his glory. For to this end Chrift both died, and role, and revived, having made the great atonement, . and being raifed in token of God's approbation of his undertaking, and feated on the mediatorial throne, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living, as head over all things to his church; invefted with univerfal dominion: and authority; to rule the living, to revive the dead; and when, in the day of his appearing and glory, the dead shall rife, and the living be changed, he will be the object of the everlasting praifes of his faints. Since then we are. Chrift's, and he alone has dominion over us, it becomes us never to usurp authority over the confeiences of our brethren, or to pais centures on the dead or the living. We have one Mafter only, whofe approbation we need be fo. licitous to fecure.

4. We mult each, shortly, answer for ourfalves before God; and therefore to his judgment all thould be referred. But why doft theu judge thy brother, as lax and latitudinarian. because thou art rigid and ferupulous? or why, on the other hand, doft thou fet at nought thy brother, as an ignorant, weak, and defpicable bigot, becaufe he thinks that evil, which you know to be innocent? This is to take the matter out of God's hands, and to erect an unhallowed tribunal; for we fhall all flund before the judgment-feat of Chrift, and by his fentence, and no other, must stand or fall for ever. For it is written, As I live, faith the Lord, every knee fhall bru to me, and every tongue Jhall confifs to God ; owning me the eternal Jehovah, acknowledging my eternal glory and Godhead, and bowing before the fceptre of my judgment, as accountable to me alone, and expecting from my lips the decision of their eternal flate for happiness or misery : fo then every one of us shall give account of himself to God, to Chrift, to whom all judgment is committed, and who is effentially very God. Let us not therefore judge one another any more with any rafh and precipitate centures; but judge this rather, that no man put a flumbling-block, or an. occasion to fall, in his brother's way : and whatever knowledge he may have of Christian liberty, let him be careful' fo to use it, as not willingly to grieve or enfnare his brother, ther, by tempting him to fin, by giving a handle for cenfure, or emboldening him to do what his confcience may not be fatisfied is right. Note; Our great concern is, to prepare for a judgment-day, and the beft means to be ready for it is, to keep it often in our view, and to bring ourfelves thither in felf-examination, before the Lord fhall cite us to his bar.

<sup>h</sup> Ch. 14. 15. Eph. 3. 6. John, 13. 34. & 6. 37. <sup>1</sup> Ver. 8, 9. 1 Cor. 10. 31. 1 Pet. 4. 11. <sup>k</sup> Mat. 15. 34. John, 1. 11. Acts, 3. 25, 26. & 13. 46. Ch. 3. 3. & 9. 4. 2 Cor. 1. 20. Acts, 10. 43.

2dly, The Apostle had just intimated, that they should defire mutual edification, and not abuse their Christian liberty to the detriment of others.

1. As to his own fenfe of thefe ceremonial things, he fays, J know, and am perfuaded by the Lord Jefus, that there is nothing unclean of it/elf; the ceremonial law concerning meats being wholly abrogated, and that thefe communicate no moral defilement to the conficience: but to him that efteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean, as he would act against his conficience if he should eat; and though his conficience be erroneous, he would do evil.

But, 2. Whatever conviction any man may have of the lawfulnefs of all kinds of food, yet, if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, through the prejudices of education, and you unkindly perfift in the ufe of your liberty, and eat before him what he efteems forbidden, now walkeft thou not charitably; deftroy not him with thy meat, for whom Chriff died; deftroy not the peace of his mind, by giving him unneceffary offence; or, at leaft, be not the means of flumbling fuch as, in the judgment of charity, we may reckon among true believers.

3. Another reason why you should abridge yourfelf of fomething of your Christian liberty, is this: Let not your good be evil spoken of; do not provoke those who are misinformed to speak evil of you, for that which is itself lawful; nor do any thing, as far as is confistent with conficience, which may less far as essentiated and prevent your usefulnels; or give occasion to the enemy, by needless contentions, to speak evil of Christianity itself.

4. As the greatest points of Christianity stand distinct from all these trivial matters, no stress should be laid upon them. For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; confifts not in using or abstaining from the ceremonial inftitutions which the law prefcribed concerning these things; but it is righteoufnefs, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoft. These are the grand effential matters : Righteousness, genuine holinefs, the image of God, or the love of God and man; peace with God through Jefus Chrift, and the fenfe of his love kindling ours, and engaging us to live peaceably with all men; and joy in the Holy Ghoft, which this divine Spirit communicates to our fouls, making us happy in God and his holy ways. For he that in thefe things ferveth Chrift; faithful to his cause, and in fimplicity defigning his honour, whatever his practice or fentiments may be in uneffential matters, is acceptable to God; his perfon and fervices are accepted in the Beloved, and he is approved of men, as a fincere convert, at least by all those of found judgment and folid experience.

He therefore exhorts, 5. Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, laying alide all uncharitable, contentions ; - and things where with one may edify another, not feeking our own pleafure merely, but others' good. For fo trivial a confideration as this or that kind of meat, destroy not the work of God, nor disturb the peace, and love, and harmony, which should subsist between fellow-Christians, and which it is the great defign of God in his Gofpel to produce in the hearts of believers. All things indeed are pure, I will admit, to those who have knowledge; but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence ; and the liberty of using any meat, which in itself is lawful, becomes practically criminal, when we choose rather to offend a weak brother, than forego the gratification of our appetite for his fake. In fuch a case, it is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother fumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak. It would be right and prudent to abitain from any of these creatures, however good in themfelves, and lawful to be used, rather than be a hindrance to the weak, grieve or difcourage the lefs enlightened, or tempt our brother rashly to censure us, or with a doubting conficence to follow our example. Haft thou faith, and art fatisfied concerning the abrogation of the ceremonial inftitutions; have it to thyself before God, and use thy liberty to God's glory on proper occasions. Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth, and never exposes himself to the just reproaches of his confcience by warping his better judgment to gratify his covetousness, his pleasure, or his pride. And, on the other hand, he that doubteth about the propriety of what he is going to do, and fuppofes that there may be a difference between meats lawful and unlawful, and therefore hefitates whether he shall eat or not, is damned if he eat; his confcience will condemn him, beeaufe he is not fure that he has God's warrant for what he does, and eateth not of faith; for whatfoever is not of faith, is fin. The word of God must be our rule; we must ever from that divine code receive our directions; and, where our minds are not fully fatisfied concerning his will, nothing must tempt us to take one step farther. We are fase, though miftaken, when we through jealoufy abridge ourfelves of our liberty; but where we prefumptuously act, though doubts, remain, we shew an evident difregard to God's authority, and violate the facred dictates of confcience.

C H A P. XV.

THE Apostle, in the 7th verse of this chapter, having exhorted the Jewish and Gentile Christians at Rome to a cordial union, from the confideration that Christ had received both into his church, naturally turned his thoughts to an objection which might be made to this doctrine; namely, that if Christ had meant to receive the Gentiles, he would have preached to them himself. To this the Apostle replied, that the Lord Jesus Christ was born among the Jews, and preached to the Jews only; because thereby, fathers :

God, to confirm the promifes made unto the for bis mercy; as it is written, "For this caule I will confers to thee among the Gentiles, and 9 'And that the Gentiles might glorify God fing unto thy name.

thereby, in the end, he most effectually accomplished God's promises to the fathers, concerning the bleffing of the nations in Abraham's feed, ver. 8, 9.-Farther, becaufe the Jews were unwilling to be united with the Gentiles in one church, the Apostle quoted various passages from their own prophets, foretelling that the Gentiles, in future times, would be Meffiah's subjects, and join the Jews in worthipping the true God, ver. 9, 10, 11, 12.-Wherefore, God having determined from the beginning to make the Gentiles his people, the Jewish believers were bound to acknowledge fuch of them as were converted, for their brethren and fellow-heirs of the promises of God, notwithstanding they did not obey the law of Moses. And, having thus established the title of the Gentiles to all the privileges of the people of God under the Gofpel difpenfation, the Apoftle prayed that God would fill them with all joy and peace, through the firm belief of their title to these great bleffings, ver. 13.

Both the doctrinal and practical part of this Epiftle being now finished, the Apostle makes a very handsome apology to the believing Romans, for writing fo long a letter to perfons with whom he was not perfonally acquainted. He told them, that, having a good opinion of their grace and knowledge, ver. 14 .- he had, on that account, written to them with the more freedom, to bring things to their remembrance : and that he had done this likewife, becaufe he was both qualified and authorifed to teach them by virtue of the apostolical office which God had conferred on him, for the purpose of converting the Gentiles, ver. 15, 16 .- Then, to prove his apostleship to the Romans, he told them that he had good reason to boaft of his fuccefs in converting the Gentiles, and in prelenting them to God as an acceptable offering, ver. 17. -But that, in this his boafting, he would speak, not of the things which Christ had wrought by others, to make the Gentiles obedient, but of the fuccefs which he himfelf had had in converting them through divine grace by his own preaching and miracles, ver. 18, 19.-Moreover, to give the Romans a just idea of his character and fuccefs as an Apostle, he informed them, that he had always made it a rule, not to preach the Gospel where it had been preached before, left he might have appeared an inferior workman, who built on a foundation laid by another: but that he had gone to the most ignorant and barbarous nations, that the propheties concerning the convertion of the Gentiles might be fulfilled, ver. 20, 21.-And that his telolution of not preaching where the Gofpel had been preached before, was the reason of his not visiting Rome hitherto, ver. 22 .- But now having no more opportunity of that fort in the parts from Jerusalem to Illyricum, and having long had a defire to fee the Romans, he would tertainly come to them in his way to Spain, ver. 23, 24.-At present he was going to Jerusalem with the collections which he had made for the poor of the brethren in Judea, ver. 25, 26, 27.—But when that fervice was finished, he would come to Rome, ver. 28, 29.-In the mean time, he earneftly begged their prayers, that he might be delivered from the difobedient in Judea; and that the fervice he was performing to the brethren in Jerufalem might be acceptable to them, ver. 30 .- Lastly, because there had been great diffensions among the Romans about the method of justification, and about the obligation of the law of Moses, he wished the God of peace to be with them all, ver. 33.; thus adapting his apostolical benediction to their particular circumstances.

Ver. 1. We then that are strong, &c.] According to our translation, one would suppose that this verse is an inference from the latter part of the foregoing chapter :---as if it were, We therefore who are firong, &c. whereas it is in the Greek, But we who are ftrong : and it stands in immediate connection with the last verse of the former chapter, by way of opposition; thus: " The weak brother, who puts " a difference between meats, is condemned, if he eateth " without obferving a diffinction : But we who are ftrong, "-meaning the Gentile Christians,-are fo far from " being condemned, if we bear the infirmities of the " weak, that we are bound in duty to do it." Therefore these two verses cannot be separated without destroying the fenfe. To pleafe ourfelves, fignifies, to follow our own humours. See Locke, Heylin, and the last note.

Ver. 3. As it is written] In Pf. lxix. 9. That this pfalm was undoubtedly fpoken of the Meffiah, we learn from ver. 22. applied to Christ, John xix. 28, 29. and from the former part of the verse here cited; namely, The zeal of thine house hath consumed me, applied to Christ, John ii. 17. And the Jews themselves confess that the things contained in this pfalm shall be accomplished in the days of the Mefliah. The paffage may be paraphrafed respecting our Saviour, " I have placed myfelf in a world, where I " have been afflicted with the wickedness of mankind; " which I have continually feen and heard about me, and " which has been, through the whole course of my life, " my continual grief and burden." See Whitby, and on Pf. lxix. 9.

Ver. 5. Grant you to be like-minded ] The original properly fignifies, " To agree in an harmonious and affectionate " manner;" and might be read, Grant you or give you the fame mutual affection, according to the example of Jefus Chrift. See Raphelius, and Gal. iv. 28., 1 Pet. i. 15., Ephef. iv. 24.

Ver. 6. That ye may with one mind, &c.] It does not appear how this can be otherwife underftood than of public worship; and it shews, that glorifying or praising . God for his grace in Christ Jesus, is a principal part of Christian worship, in which all should join with one mind and one mouth.

Ver. 7. Wherefore receive ye one another] This cannot mean, " Receive one another into church communion ;" for there is no appearance that the convert Jews and Gentiles feparated communion in Rome, on account of differences ferences about meats and drinks, and days. We should have heard more of it from St. Paul, if there had been two feparate congregations; that is, two churches of Chriftians in Rome divided about these indifferent things. Befides, directions cannot be given to private Christians to receive one another in that fenfe; therefore the receiving here, must be understood of receiving, as a man does another into his company, converse, and familiarity. He would have them, Jews and Gentiles, lay afide all diffinetion, coldnefs, and referve, in their conversation one with another; and, as domeftics of the fame family, live friendly and familiar, notwithstanding their different judgments about those ritual observances. Hence, ver. 5. he exhorts them, " Be united in friendship one to another; " that, with one heart and one voice, ye may conjointly " glorify God; and receive one another with the fame " good-will that Chrift has received us, the Jews,-eig " dotav vš Gen, to the glorifying God for his truth, in " fulfilling the promifes he made to the patriarchs;—and " has received the Gentiles, to glorify God for his mercy " to them : fo that we have reafon, both Jews and Gen-" tiles, laying afide these little differences about things " indifferent, to join together heartily in glorifying God." The phrase, glory of God, for glorifying God, is of the same kind with that used ch. iii. 22, and 26. where he uses the faith of Jefus, for believing in Jefus. The thing to which St. Paul here exhorts them, is, to the glorifying of God with one accord, as is evident from the words immediately preceding; and what follows, ver. 9, 10, 11. is to the fame purpose: fo that there is no room to doubt that his meaning in these words is, " Christ received or took us, be-" lieving Jews, to himfelf, that we might magnify the " truth of God; and took the Gentiles that believe, to " himfelf, that they might magnify his mercy." See Locke.

Ver. 8. Now I fay that Jefus Chrift, &c.] The connection of this and the next verfe is evident, by only repeating in our own minds the words, I fay, at the beginning of the 9th, Now I fay that Jefus Chrift was a minister of the circumcifion, on account of the truth of God, to confirm, or make good the promifes given to the fathers : ver. 9. And I fay that the Gentiles, on account of mercy, should glorify God; meaning in union with the Chriftian Jews. The Gentile must allow the Jew a primary and eminent right to all the glory and privileges of the Golpel; because the truth of God was engaged, by the promifes to Abraham, &c. to fend the Meffiah to the Jewish nation, to make his appearance, and to exercise his ministry among them for their falvation: therefore the believing Gentile had undeniable reafon to own and receive the believing Jew, and to join with him in the divine praise; ver. 5, 6. And as God had extended his mercy in Chrift Jefus to the believing Gentiles, how could the Jews refuse the Gentiles a share in solemn thankigivings to God for fo great a favour? Could the Jews fint or deny the mercy of God to the Gentile world? And if he allowed God's mercy to them in the Redeemer, must he not allow them to bear a part in folemn acknowledgments of his goodnefs; especially, confidering that the Scriptures do expressly foretel, that the Gentiles should have their fhare in this joyful work ?-Accordingly, as it would be more difficult to perfuade the Jew, he lays before him feveral quotations from Scripture to that purpole. What it was that Chrift miniflered to the Jews, we may fee by the like expression of St. Paul applied to himself, ver. 16. where he calls himself a minifler of Jefus Chrift to the Gentiles, miniflering the Gofpel of God. See Matt. xv. 24. What is faid, ver. 9, 10, 11. confirms what we have observed upon ver. 6. namely, that praise and thanksgiving to God for his mercy in Jelus Chrift is a principal part of Christian worship. See Heb. xiii. 15. Locke.

Ver. 10. And again he faith, Rejcice, &c.] It would have been better to have rendered thefe words imperfonally; Again it is faid: for according to our version, it seems as if the words quoted in this verse written by the same perfon as those in the preceding verse; whereas the former are from the book of Pfalms, the latter from Deuteronomy.

Ver. 12. In bim fball the Gentiles truff] Rather bope, fays Mr. Locke : not that there is any material difference in the fignification of truff and hope, but the better to exprefs and answer St. Paul's way of writing ; with whom it is familiar, when he has been speaking of any virtue or grace, whereof God is the author, to call God thereupon the God of that virtue or grace. So, ver. 13., he calls God the God of hope. See also ver. 4. and 5.

Ver. 14. And I myfelf alfo am perfuaded, &c.] In this part of the chapter, the Apoftle, with much complaifance, and to open the way still farther for a candid reception of the facred truths which he had delivered, apologizes for writing this letter, and for the freedom that he had used, particularly with the Gentile part of the Christians; which freedom he hoped they would place to the account of the Gentiles, ver.

15 Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you, in some fort, as putting you in mind, because of "the grace that is given to me of God,

16 That I should be * the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the gospel of God, ' that the * offering-up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being fanctified by the Holy Ghost.

17 I have therefore whereof I may glory through Jefus Chrift in those things which pertain to God. 18 * For I will not dare to fpeak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought by me, * to make the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed,

He gives a general idea of the fuccels and course of his ministry, ver. 18-21. fignifies his great defire to make them a visit at Rome, ver. 22-24. acquaints them with the journey that he was going to take from Corinth to Jerusalem, to carry a charitable collection made among the Geatile converts for the relief of the poor Christians there; and defires their prayers, that he might be delivered from the malice of the infidel Jews; and that his charable defign might be kindly accepted, and have its intended effect among the Christian Jews, ver. 24-33.

Ver. 15. In fome fort] 'And wices. The word  $\mu i \notin \mathfrak{G}$  is a part of any thing, or company of men; and may lignify part of or a party among the people to whom the Apoltle writes, or of whom he fpeaks; ch. xi. 25., 2 Cor. i. 14., ii 5. That it has this fenfe here, and fignifies the Genule part of the church at Rome, is the more probable, because the Apoltle affigns his committion as the Apoltle of the Gentiles, for the reason of his boldnefs in writing. I have written more boldly unto you, because, or on account of the grace that is given to me of God, that I should be the minifor of Jesus Chrift to the Gentiles. 'Now this would be an apology only to the Gentile part of the fociety; and therefore, to preferve the propriety of the Apoltle's reasoning, we ought in this view to render and piges with respect to part of you. See the note on ch. i. 5.

Ver. 16. That the offering-up of the Gentiles, &cc.] This featurent feems to be taken from Ifai. 1xvi. 20. The meaning is, "That the offering of the Gentiles to God, as "a holy factifice, by my hands, may be acceptable to him; "being fanctified and fet apart by the Holy Spirit to plen-"tifully communicated to them, in a rich variety of gifts " and graces."

Ver. 17. Things which pertain to God] We have the fame phrafe, Heb. v. 1. where it fignifies the things that were offered to God in the temple ministration. St. Paul, by way of allufion, fpeaks of the Gentiles in the foregoing verk, as an offering to be made to God; and then here he tells them, that he had matter of glorying in this offering; that is, that he had had fuccefs in converting the Gen-Vol. II. tiles, and bringing them to be a living, holy, and acceptable facrifice to God; an account whereof he gives them in the four following verfes. See Locke, and Raphelius.

Ver. 19. Unto Illgricum] Though it is evident from this passage, that St. Paul, before the date of this Epistle, which was about the year 58, had preached the Gospel in thefe regions, it is observable that St. Luke takes no notice hereof in the history of the Acts; where he also omits to mention the journey which the Apostle took to Arabia on his first conversion, and several other remarkable facts referred to in the 11th chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, and elsewhere. And it is very possible, that the visit to Crete, when Titus was left behind to ordain elders, (Titus, i. 5.) might be of this number. See Doddridge, Wall, and Calmet.

Ver. 20. So have I strived to preach the Gospel, &c.] So have I been ambitious, &c. The Apostle could not mean that he fcorned to come after any other Christian minister, especially after what we read of his going to preach the Gospel at Damascus, Antioch, and Jerusalem. It may fignify, that, far from declining dangers and oppofitions, which might be expected from his first planting the Gofpel in any country, he rather felt a fublime ambition, as the Greek word fignifies, in making the first proclamation of the Goipel in places where it had before been quite unheard of. And probably he might glance at those falle Apostles, who crept into the churches which he had planted, and endeavoured to establish their own reputation and influence by alienating the affections of his own converts, while they built on his grand and noble foundation an edifice of wood, hay, and flubble. This is likewife a proof in favour of the Apostle's own fincerity, and of the miraculousness of his conversion. If his conversion, and the part he acted in consequence of it, was an imposture, it was such an imposture as could not be carried on by one man alone. The faith he professed, and of which he became an Apostle, was not his own invention. With Jefus, who was the author of it, he had never any communication, except when going to Damafcus; nor with his Apostles, except X

'as their perfecutor. As he took on himfelf the office of an apostle, it was absolutely necessary for him to have a precise and perfect knowledge of all the facts contained in the Gospels, several of which had only passed between Jesus himfelf and his twelve Apostles, and others more privately fill, fo that they could be known to very few : and as the testimony they bore, would have been different in point of fact, and many of their doctrines repugnant to his, either they must have been forced to ruin his credit, or Be would have ruined theirs. It was therefore impossible for him to act this part but in confederacy at least with the Apostles. Such a confederacy was still the more neceffary for him, as the undertaking to preach the Golpel did not only require an exact and particular knowledge of all that it contained, but an apparent power of working miracles; for to fuch a power all the Apostles appealed in proof of their mission, and of the doctrines they preached. He was therefore to learn of them by what fecret arts they imposed on the fenses of men, if this power was a cheat. But how could he gain these men to become his confedederates? Was it by furiously perfecuting them and their brethren, as we find that he did to the moment of his conversion? Would they venture to trust their capital enemy with all the fecrets of their imposture? Would they put in his power to take away not only their lives, but the honour of their fect, which they preferred to their lives, by fo ill-timed a confidence? Would men, fo fecret as not to be drawn by the most fevere perfecutions to fay one word which could tend to prove them impoftors, confets themfelves fuch to their profecutor, in hopes of his being their accomplice? This is still more impossible, than that he should attempt to engage in the fraud without their confent and affistance. Had he not availed himself of a confederacy with the Apostles to get at their fecret doctrines, he might have gained a knowledge of them by pretending to preach among fuch perfons as they had already converted : but by going to places where the Gofpel was entirely unknown, he loft every opportunity of this kind; and though he loft all these opportunities, we find no one of the Apostles objecting to the doctrine which he planted, as inconfistent with what they had received from Christ, and the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. His very fuccels among fuch people was another proof of the reality of his conversion, and his divine mission. For among the Gentiles, who had not heard of the Gofpel, he could find no disposition, no aptness, no bias to aid his imposture. It is evident, that there was not any confederacy between him and them, ftrong enough to impose either his doctrines or his miracles upon them, if they had been falle. He was in no combination with their priefts or their magistrates; no sect or party among them gave him any help; all eyes were open and watchful to detect his impostures; all hands ready to punish him, as soon as he was detected. Had he remained in Judea, he might at leaft have had many confederates, all the Apostles, all the disciples of Christ, at that time pretty numerous; but in preaching to the Gentiles he was often alone, feldom or never with more than two or three companions. Was this a confederacy powerful enough to carry on fuch a cheat in fo many different parts of the world, against the united opposition of the magistrates, priests, philosophers, people, all combined to detect and expose their frauds? Let it be also confidered, that those to whom the Apostle addressed himfelf, were not a groß or ignorant people, apt to miltake any uncommon operations of nature, or jugghing tricks, for miraculous acts. The churches planted by St. Paul, were in the most enlightened parts of the world, among the Greeks of Afia and Europe, among the Romans, in the midst of science, philosophy, freedom of thought, and in an age more inquisitively curious into the powers of nature, and lefs inclined to credit religious frauds, than any before it. Nor were they only the lowest of the people whom he converted. Sergius Paulus the proconful of Paphos, Erastus chamberlain of Corinth, and Dionyfius the Areopagite, were his profelytes. Upon the whole, it appears beyond contradiction, that his pretention to miracles was not affifted by the disposition of those whom he defigned to convert, nor by any power and confederacy to carry on and abet the cheat : what lefs, then, than a divine concurrence could have rendered him fuccefsful in converting nations, which had not heard of the Gofpel till he preached it to them? See Doddridge, and Lyttelton's Observations on the Conversion of St. Paul.

Ver. 24. Into Spain] It hence appears probable, confidering the principle by which St. Paul chofe to govern himfelf, of not building on another man's foundation, that no Apostle had as yet planted any church in Spain; which very ill agrees with the "Legend of St. James;" for, according to that, be had now been fisteen years in Spain; and had erected feveral bishopricks there. See Geddes's Miscell. vol. ii. p. 221.

Ver. 25. But now I go unto Jerusalem] He means (as appears trom ver. 26, 27.) to carry the money which he had collected among the Gentile Christians in Macedonia and 1

CHAP. XV.

27 It hath pleafed them verily; and their debtors they are. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their fpiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things.

and Achaia, for the relief of the poor Christians at Jerufalem. This was an affair which lay near his heart, and about which he had taken much pains. See I Cor. xvi. I -4, 2 Cor. viii. and ix. His defign in the bufinefs is preus evident from 2 Cor. ix. 12, 13. where he fays, The administration of this service not only supplieth the wants of the faints, but is abundant alfo by many thankfgivings unto God. While by the experience of this ministration, they [the Jews] glorify God for your profeffed subjection unto the Gospel of Jesus Chrift, and for your liberal distribution unto them, and unto all men. The Jews were generally treated as objects of contempt and infult throughout the Roman empire. The Apostle was in hopes that this liberal contribution, fent by the Gentile Christians converted by St. Paul's ministry, would engage the affections of the Jewish Christians at Jerusalem, on their part much prejudiced against the reeeption of the Gentiles into the church and covenant of God, without fubmitting to their law. Most gladly would he have established a folid coalition between the Jewish and Gentile converts; being fensible that it was of great importance to the spreading of the Gospel. And this was "one laudable device to accomplish the good end; namely, to procure a handsome present from the Gentiles to the poor faints at Jerusalem; which was a probable expedient to conciliate their affection and effeem, by affording them a pleasing talte of the good fruits of St. Paul's ministry, and giving them reason to believe, that their nation would be regarded and honoured in proportion as the Gospel fpread in the world. I make no doubt, that this is an instance of St. Paul's zeal and prudent endeavours to eflablish a good harmony between Christian Jews and Gentiles; and this shews, why he so earnessly requests the prayers of the Christians at Rome, that his fervice, which be had for Jernfalem, might be accepted of the faints, ver. 31, 32. It is no objection to this, that St. James, Peter, and John, had defired St. Paul to remember the poor, or to make a collection among the Gentile converts for the poor brethren at Jerusalem, Gal. ii. 10. for he there tells us, that it was what he had intended to do, before they proposed it : and probably he first mentioned it to the Apostles of the circumcifion.

Ver. 28. When-I have performed this, &c.] Difpatched this affair, and have fecured to them this collection. See Doddridge.

Ver. 29. I fball come in the fulnefs of the bleffing] He may be underitood to mean here, that he fhould be able to fatisfy them, that the forgivenefs of fins was to be obtained by the Golpel; for that he fhews, ch. iv. 6---9. And they had as much title to it by the Golpel, as the Jews themfelves; which was the thing that he had been proving to them in this Epiftle. See Locke; whole paraphrafe is, "I "fhall bring to you full fatisfaction, concerning the blef-"fednefs which you receive by the Golpel of Chrift."

Ver. 30. And for the love of the Spirit] "By that love, "which is the genuine fruit of the Spirit." Some would explain this of the love which the Spirit of God bears to us, or the affection which we owe to that gracious Perfon. The words rendered firive together with me, fignify, "That "you join your utmost firength and fervency with mine; "as those who fight and firuggle together in the public "games, or in the field of battle." See Elfner's Obfervat. vol. ii. p. 65.

Ver. 31. That I may be delivered, &c.] How extreme their bigotry and rage were, appears from their behaviour to him at the very time here referred to, Acts xxi-xxir. It was from a fenie of the great importance of his life to the caufe of Christianity, that he is thus urgent; elfe we may be affured, that he would gladly have given it up. See Phil. i. 21.

Inferences .- With what tenderness and felf-denial fliould we behave towards our brethren in Chrift ! We should bear with the infirmities of the weak; ftudy to pleafe every one for his edification; receive into our affection and communion all whom Chrift has received, to the glory of God; and unite in glorifying him, as with one heart and voice. What a noble pattern has our Lord tet us of this excellent spirit, in denying himself; in the reproaches that he fultained for his Father's honour, and the good of his church; and in his condescending to all the part of a minister, to confirm the promifes made to the fathers, that the Gentiles might glorify God, rejoice in him, and praise him, for making them equal heirs of all privileges and bleffings with the Jeros. in the Holy Scriptures, which were written for our instruction and comfort, patience and hope! And how fhould we strive together in prayer, that the God of patience and confolation would enable us to make fuch use of them, according to the mind of Chrift, as may fill us with all joy and peace in believing, and caufe us to abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghoft ! Bleffed be God for his mercy to us Gentile Sinners! We, by the Gofpel dispensation, are brought under the Messiah's reign; and he is proposed as an object of faith to us, who were utter ftrangers to him before, that we might truft in him; and .that Gentile believers, and their fervices, might be acceptvable to God through Jefus Christ, as a pure offering, which is fanctified by the Holy Ghost. And, oh, what an bonour does our great Lord confer upon his fervants ! He puts them into the ministry of the Gospel; and makes them his inftruments for the conversion of finners, and for farther helping them that have believed through grace. And, oh, how delightful and advantageous is it to have the Gospel with the fulness of its bleflings! And what a -wide and glorious fpread does it take; and what wonderful happy effects does it produce, when attended with the power of the Spirit, which refides in Chrift, and is exerted by him ! This gives the fervants of Chrift great occasion of glorying in the Lord : they afcribe all honour to him, and would take none to themselves; nor would they boast . of any thing that he has not wrought by them; nor invade the province of their brethren: they are defirous to go and work wherever God calls them; and they fubmit all their own purpofes and motions for his fervice to his will; they cheerfully encourage all forts of benevolence, by the love of Chrift and of his Spirit; they take pleafure in converting with fellow-Christians, and recommend themfelves, and all their labours, to their prayers; and they pour out their own hearts to God, with fervent defire that love and unity may abound among them, and that the God of peace may be with them. Amen.

REFLECTIONS.—1ft, The Apostle infers from what he had advanced in the foregoing chapter,

1. That, We that are firong ought to bear the infirmities of the week, and not to pleafe curfelves; having compation towards them; making every kind allowance for their prejudices and fcruples; not provoked by their rafh cenfures, and defirous to prevent them by foregoing our own pleafure for their profit. Let every one of us therefore pleafe his neighbour for his good to edification; not complying with him in any thing that is finful, but in all indifferent matters ready to yield to him, in order to infinuate into his confidence, for the advantage of his foul.

2. He enforces his exhartation by the ftrongeft motive of Chrift's example. For even Chrift pleafed not himfelf; when he was under no obligations to us, he freely fubmitted to all hardfhips and fufferings for our fakes; as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee, fell on me; he willingly bore the contradiction of finners against himfelf. ' And in this Scripture, as well as others, we are not to suppose that David speaks of himself, but of Christ, and with a view to the edification of his people. For what soever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning ; that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope; animated by the examples there fet forth, to fhew the fame meeknefs, patience, and forbearance ; revived by the views of the great and precious promifes, and comforted in the hope of eternal life therein revealed to us. Note; (1.) Chrift's pattern fhould be ever in our view. " Would the Lord Jefus in our fituation have thus thought, " fpoke, and acted ?" fhould be our inquiry. (2.) They are the truly wife who are learned in the Scriptures, and know the way to everlafting life. (3.) The Scriptures afford us the most powerful arguments for patience under all our trials and provocations, and furnish us with the most substantial comforts under our discouragements, both in the precious promife of prefent divine support, and in the profpect of the glory which shall be revealed.

3. He feconds his exhortations with his prayers: we can only speak to the ear; God must make our words effectual to the heart. Now the God of patience and confolation, who is fo long-fuffering towards us, and ready to comfort the afflicted, and is the fource and author of all patience, and the giver of all confolation, grant you to be like-minded one towards another; united in fentiment and affection, according to Christ Jefus ; copying his example, and obedient to his holy will; that ye may with one mind and one mouth, as if animated by one foul, in your religious, affemblies, and in focial converse, glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jefus Chrift; in spirit and conversation defirous to exalt his great and glorious name, and fhew: forth his praises. Note; (1.) Christians should, as far as poffible, be united in one mind, and join in the fame worship. (2.) Our prayers must follow our preaching, that God may give the bleffing.

2dly, The Apoftle returns to enforce his former exhortation, Wherefore receive ye one another, with brotherly affection, in friendly intercourfe, and holy communion, as Chrift also received us, whether Jews or Gentiles, notwithftanding all our infirmities, to the glory of God; as this was the end that he had in view, the fame must we propose to ourfelves.

I. Chrift had received the Jewift converts. Now I fay, that Jefus Chrift was a minifler of the circumcifion; fubmitted himfelf to that bloody rite, and perfonally miniftered to the loft fheep of the house of Israel, for the truth of God, to difplay his faithfulnefs to his covenant, and to confirm the promifes made unto the fathers. Now as this put a peculiar honour upon the Jews, their Gentile brethren should not defpife despile them, because of any weak attachment to the ceremonial inflitutions.

2. Chrift had also received the Gentiles to the participation of the fame privileges, and therefore this fhould engage the brotherly regards of their Jewish brethren, fince the falvation that J fus obtained was to extend to them, that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy, who now at last looked with peculiar compassion upon them, and had called them into his visible church : as it is written, For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and fing unto thy name. Because thou hast given me the heathen for my inheritance, I will declare thy word among them, and call upon them to offer their thankfgivings for the ineftimable bleffings of which in the Gospel they are made partakers. And again, in another prophefy, he faith, Rejuice, ye Gentiles, with his people ; incorporated with them, tharing their privileges, and therefore happy in the experience of the fame Gospel grace. And again, it is faid, Praise the Lord, all ye Gentiles, and laud him, all ye people ; joining your voices together in the great congr gation, the partition-wall being taken down. And again, Efaias fuith, There fhall be a rost of Jeffe, the divine Melliah, and he that fall rife to reign over the Gentiles, exalted to the mediatorial throne, and extending his conquests over the fouls of finners to the ends of the earth; in him fball the Gentiles truft; placing their dependence upon him as their only Lord and . Saviour. All which prophefies clearly flew, that the time fould come, when the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the fame body; and therefore the Jewith converts fould with hearty affection embrace their Gentile brethren, as all one in Christ Jesus.

3. The Apostle adds his affectionate prayer for them both. Now the God of hope, who in Christ Jefus is the ground and author of our hope of all fpiritual and eternal bleffings, fill you with all joy and peace in believing ; enabling you to lay hold of the promifes, and giving you the abundance of divine confolations, and of that peace which paffeth all understanding; that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghift ; posseling both the camefts and foretaftes which the Spirit gives, in the light, ftrength, and comfort which he now communicates. Note; (1.) When faith is in exercise, then our fouls will be happy, even here below. (2.) The Christian's hope never makes him ashamed. (3.) They who would abound in hope, peace, and joy, should be much in prayer to him who is the giver of every good gift, and whole face none leek in vain.

3dly, St. Paul,

1. Expresses the high estimation in which he held them. And I myself also am perfuaded of you, my brethren, from the gracious testimony borne to you by those who are acquainted with your state, that ye also are full of goodness; enriched with every gracious fruit of the Spirit, with tender benevolence and sympathy, willing to bear and forbear, and united in love and peace, notwithstanding any lesser differences of opinion, filled with all knowledge, in the great effectual points of the Gospel revelation; able also to admonish one another, and to communicate your gifts for mutual edification.

2. He elegantly apologizes for the freedom that he had taken in reproving, advising, and exhorting them, who were themselves to eminent in gifts and graces. Nevertheles, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you, in fome fort, as putting you in mind; rather as your monitor to refresh your memory, than fetting up myfelf for your instructor, as if you were ignorant. The liberty that he used with them, was what his office obliged him to: because of the grace that is given to me of God; honoured by him with the apottleship; that I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the G-spel of God, dilcharging the office of a Christian minister with unwearied diligence, fidelity, and zeal; that the offering-up of the Gentiles, their spiritual facrifices of prayer and prase, might be acceptable through Jesus Christ, being fanctified by the Holy Gbost, and thereby infinitely more excellent than any of the obliations that were ever made at the temple.

4thly, Having mentioned his office as the apoftle of the Gentiles, he glories therein. I have therefore whereof I may glory through Jefus Chrift, by whole grace I have been fo Supported, and who has given fuch eminent fuccefs to my labours, in these things which pertain to God, wherein his glory is to greatly concerned, and in the conversion of the Gentiles to highly exalted. Or the words may be rendered, I have therefore a rejuicing in Chrift concerning the things of God ; that is, the Gentiles, who are offered up to him as living facrifices, in which he felt the most unfeigned fatisfaction. For I will not dare to Speak of any of those things which Chrift hath not wrought by me; far be all arrogant boafts from me; nor would I afcribe the leaft honour to myfelf, but only to him whole mighty grace, under my preaching, has wrought powerfully, to make the Gentiles obedient by word and deed ; thewing forth by an open confession, and a becoming conversation, the reality of their conversion to God, through mighty figns and wonders, which were were wrought in confirmation of my divine million, by the power of the Spirit of God; whole mighty influence gives energy and demonstration to the word preached; fo that from Jerufalem and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the Gofpel of Chrift; diffuting with indefatigable labours the light of truth through Syria, Leffer Afia, and Greece; and keeping back nothing of the whole counfel of God concerning the free and perfect falvation of finners through the great Redcomer. Yea, fo have I firived to preach the Gofpels not where Chrift was named; but with a holy ambition I went rather to the places where he was wholly unknown; left I foculd build upon another man's foundation, and be thought to be inferior to those who went before, and to have borrowed my knowledge from them, and fo fhould have wanted a fignal proof of my doctrine and office, as immediately received from Chrift himfelf. But as it is veritten (Ifa. lii. 15.), fo has it been fulfilled by my minifly; To whom he was not speken of, they shall fee : and they that have not heard, shall understand : the Gentiles, who lay in darknefs, utterly ignorant of the Meffiah and his kingdom, shall fee the light of life, and be made wife unto faivation. Note; Whatever fuccels attends our labours, God muit have all the glory, who alone giveth the increase.

5thly, St. Paul had travelled far, but he intended still to extend his labours to a wider circle, and vifit Rome alfo, and the regions beyond it.

1. He had long proposed to visit them, but his many avocations had hitherto prevented him. For which caufe allo I have been much hindered from coming to you; but now having no more place in thefe parts, the Gospel being fully preached, and Christian churches planted throughout the country between Jerufalem and Italy, and having a great defire thefe many years to come unto you, that I might impart to you fome fpiritual gift, and be comforted by you; whenfoever I take my journey into Spain, where I purpole, God willing, to erect the Gofpel standard, I will come to you, and take you in my way; for I trust to fee you in my journey, and, according to the kind reception I have met with in other churches, to be brought on my way thitherward by you, fome of you going with me, and giving me fuch directions and necessaries as may conduce to the fuccefs of the expedition; if first I be fomewhat, or in part, filled with your company; enjoying the fatisfaction of their converfation, rejoicing in their fleadfaftnefs, and tafting a little of the fweetnefs of that communion of faints, which he hoped in the utmost perfection to enjoy with them in heaven. Note; (1.) When duty detains us from those whose company we most delight in, we are ever cheerfully to forego our own pleafure, for the fake of our Mafter's fervice. (2.) All our purpofes floud be formed in fubordination to divine Providence. (3.) Christian fellowship is one of the greatest joys on earth, and a little foretaste of what we expect, when we shall join the spirits of the just -made perfect.

2. He at prefent was obliged to return to Jerufalem with the collections of the feveral churches for their poor brethren in Judea, who by perfecution and the famine were in great diffrels. But now I go unto Jerufalem to minister unto the faints, to distribute among them the generous contributions of their Gentile brethren; For it hath pleafed them of Macedonia and Achaia, to make a certain contribution for the poor faints which are at Jerufalem. It hath pleafed them verily, thus freely and liberally to contribute of their fubitance, and afford a noble example of Christian benevolence: and their debtors they are; gratitude as well as charity required this at their hands. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things, and have been called to fhare in those privileges that were long peculiar to the church of Ifrael, their duty is alfo, in return, to minifler unto them in carnal things, Aurzeyroan honouring God by a confcientious and liberal fupply of their wants.

3. When he had finished this work, he expresses his confidence that he should come to them. When therefore I have performed my prefent journey and fervice, and have fealed to them this fruit, careful that it be rendered up to them undiminished, I will come by you into Spain. And I am fure that when I come unto you, I fhall come in the fulnefs of the bleffing of the Gofpel of Chrift ; as a merchant veffel ; richly fraught, bringing with me the ineftimable treasures of the Golpel-word for your most abundant edification and comfort. Note; It is a happy meeting between a minister and his people, when he thus comes to them in the fulness of the bleffing of the Gofpel of Chrift.

6thly, Having declared to them his purpose, he intreats their prayers, that he may be able to accomplish it.

Now I befeech you, brethren, for the Lord Jefus Chrift's fake, by every powerful argument which can be drawn from the grace which is in Him, whole I am, and whom I ferve; and for the love of the Spirit, who visited your souls with his bleffed influence; and as a proof of your being possessed of this divine principle, that ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me; fervently and importunately joining me in my carneft cries to God, that I may be delivered from them that do not believe in Judea, those most envenomed foes, his own infidel and wicked countrymen; and that my fervice which I have for Jerufalem, may be accepted of the faints; that all their prejudices against him and the Gentile converts might be removed, and this benevolence thankfully and cheerfully received, to the cementing of a nearer union between them. And also that I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, having found fuccels in this miniftry, if the Lord to pleased; and may with you be refreshed, in the enjoyment of your company, and the communication of our mutual happy experience. And now, may the God of peace be with you all, uniting your hearts in love to his bleffed Self, and to one another; and filling you with all peace and prosperity in your souls. Amen. I pray that this may, and trust that it will, be your happy cafe. Note; (1.) We are bound to defire each other's prayers, and fhould count thefe among the greatest obligations which can be conferred upon us. (2.) Our applications to a throne of grace mult be fervent and agonizing,

CHAP. XVI.

PHEBE, a deaconefs of the church of Cenchrea, having oscalion to go to Rome about fome important affairs, the Apoftle earneftly recommended her to the good offices of the Roman brethren, ver. 1, 2.—To this recommendation, he fubjoined falutations to a number of perfons by name, members of the church at Rome, with whom it feens be was acquainted, ver. 3—16.

The names of the perfons faluted, fnew them to have been Greeks, or of Greek extraction. We may therefore conjecture, that they had fettled themselves in Rome for the fake of commerce, or of exercifing their particular trades. But being afterwards banished by the emperor Claudius, under the denomination of Jews, they had retired, fome of them into Greece, others into the Leffer Alia, and others into Judea, where it is fupposed they became known to the Apostle Paul, in the course of his travels through these countries. Some of the faluted are called by the Apostle his kinsmen, either because they were his relations, or because they were of the fame nation with himfelf; and who, during their banifhment from Rome, or perhaps before it, had been converted to Christianity. These, with many others, returned to Rome on the death of Claudius, and re-established the church there in its former lustre.

The Papifts affirm, that at the time when the Apostle wrote this letter, St. Peter was in Rome exercifing the office of bishop in the church there. But if St. Peter had been in Rome when this Epiftle was written, St. Paul would certainly have known it: in which cafe, he would not have omitted him in the falutations, and have mentioned fo many others of inferior note.-The Apostle's faluting fo many members of the church at Rome, could not displease the reft who were not perfonally known to him. By faluting all his acquaintance in Rome, the Apostle proposed to make himself known to the Roman brethren, through the accounts which he knew his acquaintance would give of his apostolical character and gifts, and of his fuccess in converting the Gentiles. The truth is, he wished the Roman brethren to be well informed concerning these matters, because the knowledge of them was necessary to give his ktter its full effect with those who might read it .- From the characters which the Apostle has given of the persons whom he faluted, we learn that fome of them were remarkable for their station and education, and all of them for their graces and virtues. Wherefore, the accounts which they gave of the Apostle's character and endowment, and fuccefs in preaching, must have had great weight in establishing his authority among the brethren at Rome, and in drawing their attention to the things written in shis Epiftle.

Concerning the falutations in the apostolic Episitles, it is proper to remark, in general, that they were of great beneit to the perfons faluted. For being fent to individuals, in letters addreffed to the churches of which they were members, fuch public testimonies of the Apossile's esteem not only gave the faluted much pleasure, but tended to confirm them in the faith, and to encourage them to bear with patience the evils attending the profession of the Gofpel. And to us, these falutations are an example of that love which we owe to the fincere disciples of Christ, on account of their character. Farther, the Apossile, by naming fo many perfons in his Epistles, has not only transmitted to posterity an honourable character of them, but has furnished an additional proof of the truth and authenticity of his own epistles. For all the perfons named in them, were appealed to as witnesses of the things which he has written.

After finishing his falutations, the Apostle gave the Romans a few more practical advices fuited to their circumftances, ver. 17—20.—Then fent them falutations from his affistants, ver. 21, 22, 23.—To which he added his own apostolical benedictions ver. 24.—And concluded this letter, in which he had confidered the dispensarions of God to mankind, from the beginning of the world to the end of time, with a sublime doxology to God the Father, ver. 25, 26, 27.

Ver. 1. I commend unto you, &c.] This chapter confifts chiefly of falutations. Throughout the whole Epiftle the Apostle has demonstrated his affectionate regards to the whole fociety of Christians at Rome. But it was still more engaging to take a friendly notice of the principal perfons by name, adding to feveral of them the honourable character which they deferved, or fome special mark of his esteem. In the midft of these expressions of his love, the great defign of writing the Epiftle, and establishing their happines, recurs to his thoughts. The Jewish converts were exceeding zealous to reduce all professors of Christianity to a fubmission to the law of Moses; and on this account not only propagated bad principles of religion, but almost every where broke in upon the peace and unity of the Gentile churches. This was the cafe of the churches in Galatia; but was not yet the unhappy cafe of the church at Rome. But the Apoltle fearing it might, after all that he has done in this Epistle to settle them upon the principles of pure Gofpel, throws in here a very pathetic caution against fuch authors and somenters of divisions, ver. 17-20. He concludes, after repeated benedictions, (like one who with his whole foul withed their highest felicity,) with a doxology to the only-wife God.

I commend Phebe--which is a fervant, &c.] It might be tranflated, who is a deaconefs of the church at Cenchrea, a port belonging to the city of Corinth, whence St. Paul wrote this letter. It is agreed that the deacons were officers employed in diftributing the church's flock among the neceffitous. They were to be perfons of an eminent character, 1 Tim. iii. 8-11. and therefore their fervice in the church might not confift only in relieving the poor, but in visiting the fick, in exhorting, comforting, and teaching, as occasion required. Corinth was a city of Greece, and, according according to the cultoms of that country, men could not well be allowed to perform those good offices to the women: for men to have visited and conversed with women, would have been counted a very great indecency, and must have brought a scandal upon the Christian profession; as in Greece the women were treated in a manner very different from the ufages of the western parts of Europe. This appears from Cornelius Nepos, who observes in his preface, "A great many things in our cuftoms are • decent, which are thought fcandalous among them: " for which of the Romans thinks it a fhame to take his " fpouse to a feast? Or whose wife keeps not in the first " room of the house, and converses with company ? Which " is quite otherwife in Greece, where the is never ad-" mitted to a feaft, unlefs of relations, and always keeps " in a retired part of the house, which is called the wo-" man's apartment, whither nobody comes, unlefs allied to " her by near relation." This being the cafe, it is not improbable that some women of probity and good underftanding might be chosen to attend as deaconesses upon their own fex. And this cuftom of keeping the women in a state of separation might occasion, in Greece, other allowable peculiarities in religious affairs. It is certain that they fometimes exercifed their devotions apart from their hufbands (1 Cor. vii. 5.); and that they had feplarate affemblies for religious worfhip will appear probable, if we confider that the Apostle, when he is giving rules about prophefying, abfolutely enjoins filence to the women in the church, or public affembly; 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35. They were not allowed to speak or prophety there, by the commandment of the Lord, ver. 37. or fo much as to ask any question in the public affembly about what was taught, but directed to confult their bufbands at home: much lefs were they allowed to teach or usurp authority over the men, but are expressly ordered to learn in filence, with all fubjection, I Tim. ii. 11, 12. And yet the Apostle supposes, 1 Cor. xi. 3-16. without any mark of dilapprobation, that the woman might pray and prophefy, that is, fpeak unto others to edification, exhortation, and comfort; for that is here the meaning of prophefying, as the Apostle informs us, I Cor. xiv. 3. therefore prophefying is an address to others, or to a company of perfons. Here then the Apostle gives directions about the woman's praying and prophefying in an affembly, or where cothers were present, and yet, in the above-quoted places, the expressly enjoins filence, and forbids her speaking, and confequently prophefying, in the churches .- How shall we bring these things to a confistency ?- Thus: the prohibitions and injunctions, 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35., 1 Tim. ii. 11, 12. expressly relate to those affemblies, in which the whole church, men and women, met for the worship of God. In fuch affemblies the women were to be in filence; confequently (unlefs the Apostle contradicted himself in the fame Epiftle, and in a matter upon which he discourses largely and expressly) those affemblies in which women are supposed and allowed to pray and prophesy, were feparate meetings, which confifted of none but women. one word of the church ;---of praying or prophefying in the church ;-for he did not confider those assemblies of women as proper churches. Then at ver. 17. he begins to correct diforders in their proper affemblies, when they came together in the church, men and women (ver. 28.); and difcourses upon this fubje I to the end of ch. xiv. In favour of this opinion, Grotius, on the verse before us, remarks, " that in Greece " there were Aper Evrides, female presbyters, as well as deacons, " for the inftruction of their own fex; which female pref-" byters were ordained by the laying on of hands, till the " council of Laodicea;" and for this he appeals to the eleventh canon of that council. This order of priesteffes must grow out of the custom of women's holding separate affemblies for their mutual instruction and edification. In those affemblies they supposed that they might lay aside the veil, the token of inferiority and fubjection, and perform their religious exercifes uncovered, as if they were upon a par with the men. This the Apostle opposes, and gives his reasons, 1 Cor. xi. 3-9. "But,-the women " object,-we have no men among us; why mould with " wear the badge of fubjection, when we are among " felves, and therefore are to be confidered or " to ourfelves ?" The Apoftle anfwers, ve to have power (that is, a veil, the fign of the or authority) upon your head, because or on account of the MESSENGERS; for so the word Agyerse, which we translate Angels, most naturally and properly fignifies; and fo it is rendered, Matth. xi. 10., Luke, vii. 24, 27., ix. 52., James, ii. 25. This furnishes a hint of what the reason of the cafe plainly fuggests, that the men, upon fundry occasions, especially to inspect their conduct, sent meffengers to those female affemblies. If we duly reflect upon the general cuftom of confining and reftraining the women, even at home, in their own houses, we need not doubt but those meetings were under particular regulations; and that care would be taken to fend proper perfons to fee how they behaved in them; not to mention that a woman might be wanted at home, and a meffenger might be fent to require her attendance. However, it is very probable, that accels to meffengers was one of the conditions upon which the women held these religious affemblies; and these meffengers, coming in the name of their husbands, brought, in a fenfe, their authority along with them; on which account the women ought to observe a just decorum, as if their hufbands were prefent, feeing that they were in effect still under their eye :- The woman ought to have power upon her head, on account of the meffengers. Mr. Locke, in his note on I Cor. xi. 3. fuppofes women were allowed to prophely in public affemblies, where men were prefent; not indeed as ordinary doctors and teachers, but when their " prophe-" fying was a fpiritual gift, performed by the immediate " and extraordinary motion and impulse of the Holy "Ghoft." But this great commentator did not observe, «that women are expressly and absolutely enjoined filence in

in the churches, by the commandment of the Lord, among the rules relative to fpeaking in this very kind of prophefying, by revelation. See 1 Cor. xiv. 29-37. Whence, particularly from ver. 32, 33. we may conclude, that a revelation given by the Spirit of God was not, at least in general, attended with any fuch extraordinary motion or impulje, as constrained the perfon to speak to whom it was given. With regard to the time of speaking, he might use his diferences, when he thought proper, he might begin to fpeak; and when he pleafed might hold his fpeech, as decency and good order uld require. Therefore, though the Spirit of proplic, might be poured out upon a Chrittian woman in the church; or though fome truth might be revealed to her, yet fhe might keep it to herfelf, and was obliged to keep it to herfelf, among the Chriftian men, and to confer only with her hufband about it, who, it feems likely, might communicate it to the church, if he thought fit.

Ver. 3. Greet Prifcilla and Aquila] This excellent couple appear by this paffage to have returned to Rome on the cafing of that edich against the Jews, which had driven them thence in the reign of Claudius; Acts, xviii. 2. Prifcilla feems to have been a woman of great note, and probably of diffinguished genius and influence; which appears, not only from the manner in which the is here named, but also from the edification which the eloquent Apollos received from her instructions, in concurrence with those of her hufband. See Doddridge, and Calmet.

Ver. 5. Who is the first-fruits of Achaia] It is probable that Epenetus might be converted at the fame time with Stephanas, called also the first-fruits of Achaia; I Cor. xvi. 15. for there is no manner of necessity to understand by that expression the very first Christian convert. Epenetus possibly might be one of that happy family, to whom this appellation is given.

Ver. 7. Andronicus and Junia] Or, Junias. Diodati Vol. II. thinks that by apples in this verfe are meant the evangelifts; and that the meaning is, that thefe perfons were noted meffengers of the churches; but it is more probable that they were fome early converts, who had been known and much effeemed by the apoftles before the difperfion occafioned by the death of Stephen: and if fo, St. Paul perhaps might once have been active in perfecuting them, and have learned their names at first with an holdle intent of hunting them down to deftruction. See Craddock's Apoftol. Hift. Diodati, and Doddridge.

Ver. 10. Them—of Arifbolus' houjehold] There is no certain evidence that either Arif bolus, or Narciffus, ver. 14. were Chrittians. It feems most probable that they were perfons of high rank, who had each a large family of flaves or domeftics; fome of whom being Christian converts, the Apoftle would not forget them, low as their rank was in life, when he was faluting his brethren in fo particular a manner. We may obferve what a regard the Apoftle had for foreign churches, when he informed himfelf of the names, circumflances, and abode of 65 many of them in Rome. See Doddridge.

Ver. 11. In the Lord] From this and the following verfewe may obferve, that when the whole family was converted, the Apolle writes to the church in fach a house; when not, the falutation is directed to as many as were in the Lord in that family.

Ver. 13. And his mother and mine] Hence fome have thought, that Rufus was at least half-brother to St. Paul; but perhaps he might in this expression refer to the maternal care which this good woman had taken of him.

Ver. 15. And all the faints, &c.] Dr. Calvin and many others observe, as before hinted, that had St. Peter been now at Rome, he would undoubtedly have been named, fince no one in this numerous catalogue was of a diguity and eminence by any means comparable to him 3-and yet if he were not there at this time, the whole tradition of  $\Upsilon$  the the Romish bishops, as that church delivers it, fails in the most fundamental article of all.

Ver. 18. And fair fpeeches] 'Europias, flattering forms of addrefs. We hence learn what were the weapons which these false apostles opposed to the miracles of the true. See Tit. i. 10, 11.

Ver. 20. Shall bruife Satan, &c.] Satan is here put for bis infiruments ;---the troublers of the church's peace. See 2 Cor. xi. 15. "God fhall break the force and attempts "of Satan upon your peace, by those his infiruments, "who would engage you in quarrels and discords." See Locke. At the fame time, the words may be taken in the most fpiritual fense, as implying that all the fpiritual enemies of every faithful foul among them should foon be destroyed.

Ver. 22. I Tertius, who wrote this Epifile, &c.] It was the general cultom of those times to dictate to an amanuensis;—especially with men of learning and business. An anonymous critic would read this verse, I Tertius, who wrote this Epifile, for the glory of the Lord, falute you. It seems that Tertius, who was St. Paul's secretary or amanuensis, was well known to the Roman brethren. From his name he may be supposed to have heen a Roman. Others think that this is Silas, because his name is of the fame fignification with Tertius.

Ver. 24—27. The grace of our Lord, &c.] All the other epiftles of St. Paul end with a fimilar benediction. When St. Paul fays my Goffel, ver. 25. he cannot be fuppofed, fays Mr. Locke, to have ufed fuch an expression, unlefs he knew that what he preached had fomething in it which diffinguished it from what was preached by others: which was plainly the mystery, as he every where calls it, of God's purpose of taking in the Gentiles to be his people under the Mefliah, and that without fubjecting them to circumcifion, or the law of Moles. This is that myslery which he is fo much concerned that the Ephefians fhould underftand and adhere to firmly, and which was revealed to him according to that Gofpel whereof he was made the minister, as may be seen at large in that Epistle. The fame thing he declares to the Coloffians, particularly ch. i. 27-29. and ii. 6-8. For that he preached this doctrine in a fuller manner than any of the other apoftles did, may be feen Acts xxi. 18-25. For though the other apoftles and elders of the church at Jerufalem had determined that the Gentiles flould only keep themfelves from things offered to idols, and from blood, &c. &c. yet it is plain enough from what they fay, Acts xxi. 20-24. that they taught not fully, what St. Paul openly declares to the Ephefians,-that the law of Mofes was abolifhed by the death of Christ: (Ephef. ii. 15.) fo that St. Paul might in an eminent degree be termed the Apostle of the Gentiles. And in all this may be feen the goodnefs of God both to Jews and Gentiles. See Ephef. ii. 15. A commentator observes, that the Apostle calls it his Gospel, because he was the man efpecially fingled out and commissioned to preach it. He might also call it his Gospel, to diffinguith it from that which was preached by fome others, who mixed law and gofpel together. But I cannot think, with Mr. Locke, that the Apostle intended to diffinguish it from that which St. Peter and St. James taught; who, though they were apofiles of the circumcifion, do not appear from either of their epiftles, to have held any fentiments inconfistent with what St. Paul taught. St. Peter particularly wrote his epiftles to Gentile converts; and is 25 as clear in giving them a full place in the church, and all the honours of the people of God, upon their faith in Chrift, as St. Paul himfelf : nor can we form any argument as to his fentiments, from his blamcable conduct, Gal. ii. 12. for that was an error of infirmity, not of judgment. By the revelation of the mysicry, the Apostle means the calling of the Gentiles, as appears from the next verfe; Now is made known to all nations, or, to all the nations,fir the obedience of faith. The original, rendered fince the scald began, is xplices a coview; that is, in the fecular times, or the times under the law. Why the times under the law were called zeivoi aiwvioi, we may find a reason in their jubilees, which were actives, facula, or ages ; by which all the time under the law was measured; and to xpivoi eispiel, are used, 2 Tim. i. 9., Titus, i. 2. And cieves are put for the times of the law, or the jubilees, Luke, i. 70., Aûs, iii. 21., 1 Cor. ii. 7., and x. 11., Ephef. iii. 9., Col. i. 26., Heb. ix. 26. So Exod. xxi. 6. EIS TOV alova, fignifies not as we translate it, for ever, but " to the jubilee :" which will appear, if we compare Lev. xxv. 39-41. and Exod. xxi. 2. Now that the times of the law, were the times here spoken of by St. Paul, seems plain from that which he declares to have continued a myslery during all those times; namely, God's purpose of taking in the Gentiles to be his people under the Messiah: for this could not be faid to be myltery at any other time than that, when the Jews were separated to be the peculiar people of God: before that time there was no fuch name or idea of diftinction as Gentiles; before the days of Abraham, Ifaac, and Jacob, the calling of the Ifraclites to be God's peculiar people was as much a mystery, as the calling of the Gentiles was a mystery afterwards. All that St. Paul infifts upon here, and in all the places where he mentions this nyilery, is to flew, that, though God had declared this his purpole to the Jews, by the predictions of his prophets among them, yet it lay concealed from their knowledge; It was a mystery to them; they understood no fuch thing: there was not any where the leaft fulpicion or thought of it; till, the Meffiah being come, it was openly declared by St. Paul to the Jews and Gentiles, and made out by the writings of the prophets, which were now understood. See Lo ke, and Burthogge's excellent pamphlet, intitled,

"Chriftianity a revealed Mystery." Written to the Romans, &c.] The first verse of this chepter justifies part of this note; but as the most ancient manuferipts have not these notes, and some of them are plainly contrary to passinges in the epistles to which they are affixed, they are not to be esteemed of any authority. See Wetstein.

Inferences.-....What an advantage is the Christian religion to friendlhip and good manners ! It teaches us to pay tivil refpect to all ranks and degrees of perfons, in fuch chafte and decent modes of falutation, as are cuftomary in grateful for benefits, and to make the beit returns of love and kindnefs that we are capable of ; it gives a holy turn to civility and genteel behaviour, and makes us fincere in withing the fpiritual and eternal, as well as temporal profperity of our friends; and it disposes one Gospel church to receive the members of another, when duly recommended to their holy fellowship. How concerned should Christians, whether men or women, be to excel in piety, to enter into Chriftian communion, and to be ferviceable in their refpective fpheres, to the whole body ! How amiable are those families which refemble a church of Chrift in their worfhip, order, and converfation! And, Oh! what an honour is it to be first and eminent in the faith and profession of the Gospel! How careful should private Chriftians, as well as others, be, to judge for themfelves in matters of religion, according to the doctrine which they have learnt from Chrift and his apoftles; and to guard against and avoid those who would cause divisions and offences, by broaching errors among them ! Whatever may be the plaufible pretences, fair flews, and flattering fpeeches of feducers, they are fecretly carrying on fome felfifh and carnal views to deceive weak, though fincere fouls. But it behoves us to be fo wife as to know the truth, and not to be imposed upon by others; and fo haneft as to act up to our knowledge, and not impose upon them. What a bufy adverfary is the devil in promoting pernicious principles and practices, to the diffurbance and corruption of the church ! But it is the comfort and encouragement of all the faithful faints, that the God of peace will entirely fubdue him under their feet flortly. How excellent is the Gospel of the grace of God! It is of ancient date, and of divine original; it harmonizes with the Old Teftament Scriptures; and is now made known in all its light and glory, according to the commandment of the cternal God : the great subject of this Gospel is Jesus Christ, and falvation through him; it extends its bleffings to finners of all nations; and wherever it is fent by an overruling Providence, it ought to be received with a divine faith, that we may fubject our confeiences to the authority of God in it, and yield all holy obedience to him, from a principle of faith in Chrift, according to it; and that we may aferibe all possible honour to the only-wife God, who is able to establifh us in it; to whom be glory, through Jefus Chrift, both now and for ever. Amen.

REFLECTIONS.—Ift, The Apofile now takes his leave of them:

1. With commending to them the bearer. I commend unto you Phebe our filter 3-1 the Lord, which is a ferwant, or a deaconnels, of the church which is at Combrest, in the neighbourhood of Corinth. She was one of those who devoted her time and substance to the fervice of the cause of Christ: probably her house ferved for the assemblies of the church,  $T_2$  and and the entertained thole who came to preach the Golpel among them. Therefore he defires, That they would receive her in the Lord, with all holy affection, in the Redeemer's name and for his take, as becometh faints, tuch as ye profets yourfelves to be; and that ye affift her in what/sever bufinefs fibe hath need of you, thewing her every mark of kindnefs and refpect: for fibe hath been a fuccourer of many, and has most holpitably received and entertained them; and of myfiff alfo; and with gratitude therefore I defire to acknowledge her kindnefs and generofity. Note; The leaft return that we can make for favours, is to testify our gratitude to our kind benefactors.

2. He fends his affectionate falutations to many at Rome.

[1.] To Prifeilla and Aquila, of whom he fpeaks with the deepeft regard as his belpers in Chrift Jefus, who had been particularly affiftant to him in labours at Corinth, and had for his life laid down their own necks, and, when he was in danger, refcued him at the hazard of their lives, ACls, xviii. 12-17. For which noble inflance of generous love, tays he, net only I give thanks, but alfo all the churches of the Gentiles, who owe the continuance of my ministry to their zeal and interposition. Likewife greet the church that is in their houfe; either their family, who were all professions of the faith; or the faints who ufually asserted there for public worfhip.

[2.] To Epenetus, whom he entitles his well-beloved. So tenderly affectionate was the Apofile's heart towards his fpiritual children, and effectially to Epenetus, as being the firfl-fruits of his ministry in Achaia unto Chrift and the earnest of that plenteous harvest which followed.

[3.] To Mary, whom he diftinguishes as having beforeed much labour on us, peculiarly affiduous in every kind office of love towards me and my fellow-labourers.

[4.] To Andronicus and Junia, whom fome fuppole to be hufband and wife, but others more probably to be brothers. They were Jews, near kinfmen probably to the Apoftle, had been endeared to him by confinement in the fame prifon for Chrift, were perfons eminent for their gifts, graces, fufferings, and fervices; and he adds to their honour, who were in Chrift before me, called among the earlieft converts, and preaching the faith while he deftroyed it.

[5.] To divers others, the most of whom he mentions with fome note of diffinction. Greet Amplias, my beloved in the Lord, who bears his image, and is most amiable in the relation wherein he ftands to the fame divine Mafter. Salute Urbane, our helper in Chrift, and fellow-labourer in the glorious Gospel; and Stachys my beloved. Salute Apelles, approved in Chrift, whole conflancy and fidelity have appeared in many trials. Salute them which are of Ariftobulus' boufeheld. Sa'ute Herodion, my kinfman both in the flesh and in the Spirit. Greet them that be of the household of Narciffus, which are in the Lord, vitally united by faith unto him. Salute Tryphena and Tryphefa, those excellent women who labour in the Lord, in their place and flation indefatigable to ferve the interests of the Gospel. Salute the beloved Perfis, which laboured much in the Lord, remarkably diligent in her fphere to advance the caufe of God. Sa-Jute Rufus, chofen in the Lord, eminent for gifts and graces ; and bis mother and mine, whole kindnels to me lays me under fuch obligations of filial love as if I were by birth her fon. Salute Afyneritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them, and belong to their families, from the higheft to the loweft. Salute Philologus and Julia, Nereus, and his fifter, and Olympas, and all the faints which are with them, of their respective households. Salute one another with an holy kifs, loving one another out of a pure heart fervently. The churches of Christ falute you, joining me in the most affectionate remembrances, prayers, and good wishes.

2dly, Having teftified his own warm affection towards them, and fought to unite them in mutual love, he adds,

1. A folemn caution. Now I befeech you, brethren, mark them which caufe divisions and offences, fo opposite to the fpirit of vital Chiftianity, and fo contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned. Mark with holy jealouty those deceivers, who, under plausible pretences of greater purity of worship, rend the peace of the church, and avoid them, join not with them in communion, and shun, as the greatest evil, whatever would introduce or perpetuate needlefs divisions.

2. He discovers to them the true character of these pretenders, as the ftrongest argument to avoid them. For they that are fuch ferve not our Lord Jefus Chrift; whatever plaufible pretences and professions they make, they have not really his glory and interest at heart, but their own belly, defigning fome mean, felfish, finister, worldly advantage; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the fimple, who creduloully follow them in their destructive ways. Of you I know better things; for your obedience is come abroad unto all men, and, to your honour, mention is made through all the churches of your profeffed and exemplary fubjection to the Gofpel of Chrift. I am glad therefore on your behalf, that you are fo well established, and have not been beguiled by these false teachers: but yet, knowing the weakness of human nature, and the fubtilty of deceivers, I warn you to watch against their first efforts; for I would have you wife unto that which is good, and fimple concerning evil, cautious to difcern truth from error, and joining the wildom of the ferpent to the harmleffnefs of the dove.

3. He expression is confidence in the Lord's prefervation of them from all their enemies and feducers. Now the God of peace, to whole bleffing and protection I have recommended you, fball bruife Satan under your feet fbortly, and all his inftruments, though never fo crafty. The grace of our Lord Jefus Christ be with you, to ftrengthen, ftablifh, fettle you, and make you more than conquerors. Amen! Note; (1.) None do the devil's work more effectually than those who foment needles divisions among the people of God. (2.) The time is fhort; if faith and patience hold out, we fhall be placed for ever out of the reach of fin and Satan, and reign triumphant with Him who fhall make our foes become our footitool.

3dly, As the Apoille had before faluted many of the faints by name, he adds,

1. The affectionate remembrances of fome of those who were at present his companions, Timotheus my work-fellow, as a fon with a father, ferving with me in the Gospel, and Lucius, and Jason, and Sossipater, my kinsmen, falute you. # PREFACE.

AS there was no country in the world, perhaps, where superstition and idolatry were more deeply rooted, or had more able defenders, than in Greece (the centre, as it were, of eloquence and of philofophy), St. Paul, who was particularly defined to the conversion of infidels, thought that he could not better fugue his duty than by attacking idolatry in its flrong-hold. For this purpofe, he travelled through all the Afiatic provinces of Greece; and, paffing thence into Europe, there was fcarcely a city, how fmall foever, throughout Greece, in which he did not preach the Gofpel, and establish churches. The city of Corinth (by its antiquity, greatness, and opulance, become one of the most celebrated and powerful cities in the world, and the capital of Achana in the Peloponnefus) was not forgotten upon this occasion. St. Paul went thither to preach the Cospel, and remained there a year and a half. Having then quitted it, to follow the duties of his ministry elfewhere, he received at Ephefus a letter which the Corinthians had written to him in order to confult him on fome important matters; and this Epifile is in anfaver to that letter But, \ previous to anfwering their questions, he begins by centuring those contests and divisions which he heard had broken out among them, as to the different miniflers of the Gofpel; Jome fuying, I am of Paul; others, and I of Apollos; others, and I of Cephas, ch. i. which was extremely culpable, and threatened no lefs than in a foort time to defirey their church entirely. He next reproves their unbounded partiality for eloquence and philosophy, to the prejudice of that simplicity with which the Gifpel was preached. And, as this arefe from a falle delicacy, and too high an opinion of human wifdom, he flews them that the Gofpel is not to be grounded in the heart by fuch methods, but only by the light of the Holy Ghalt, and the immediate operation of grace, ch. ii. He continues the fame fubject in ch. iii a part of rebich tends to render God all the glory of the conversion of sinners, while the mass excellent ministers of the Gospel are merely infruments in the forwarding of that most bleffed work. The rest of the chapter shows that Christ is the only foundation of the church, and that the preachers of the Goffel must never feek for any other. In the inthe chapter the Apofile defends the dignity of his office against those envious perfons who laboured to contemn it. In the with he llames the church of Corinth for not cutting off from their community a man who had committed inceft.

In the with chapter he reproves the Corinthians for having lavefuits among them; and, inflead of fettling their diffutes quietly among themfelves, that they carried them into the courts, which at that time were filled with pagans. The reft of the chapter is against impurities of the flesh; and, and, by fome of the firongest reasons that were ever alleged upon the subject, the Aposile endeavours to turn the Corinthians from practising or encouraging such impurities.

He then comes to the questions which had been proposed to him by the Corinthians; and for this purpose, in chap. vii. be speaks of marriages, wherein one of the parties professible Christian religion, while the other remained in error and unbelief. In the visith he examines the question of meuts offered to iduls, whether it were lawful for a believer to eat of them or not. The ixth chapter respects the privileges of ministers, and their condescension upon certain accalions. The xth begins with a recital of the most memorable things which happened to the children of Ifraci in the wildernefs ; then he speaks of the feasts which idolaters made to their idols, and of the liberty, under the Gofpel difpensation, of eating, with a safe conficence, whatloever is fold in the thambles. The xith chapter treats, first, of the dignity of the man, and of the fubordination of the woman; and afterwards, of the ayary, or love-fiast, and of the facrament of the Lord's Supper. The with chapter contains an enumeration of the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit, of which the church of Corinth had rewived a plentiful fhare. The xivith is entirely in praise of charity, or love. The xivth contains a cenfure of the abufe which fome perfons made in public of the gift of speaking with tongues. The xyth is very firong against those who denied the refurrection of the body, or who had but a wavering belief on that grand article of the faith. The xvith, and last, begins with fome infructions relative to the collections which were making in the churches of Greece for the poor at Jerufalem; and concludes with proffing exhortations to perfeverance in the faith, and in the love of Christ. It appears moreover, from the 8th verse of this chapter, that it was from Epheius, where St. Paul abode three months, Asts, xix. 8. that he wrote this Epifile; and not from Philippi, as fome injudicious perfon has added at the end of it. Lofly, it appears from the first verse of this last chapter, where the collections are spoken of, that this Epistle was written fome time before the Epifle to the Romans ; fince, when St. Paul wrote the latter, the collections were finished, and he was himself on his way to Jerusalem with the money. Rom. xv. 25, 26.

C H A P. 1.

After bis falutation and thankfoiving, he exhorteth them to unity, and reprove th their diffensions. God desiroyeth the wischm of the wife, by the foolighness of preaching; and callthe nut the wife, mighty, and noble, but the fooligh, weak, and men of no account.

CHAP. I.

THE teacher who came to Corinth after the Apostle's departure, with a view to leffen his authority among the Coninthians, boldly affirmed that he was no apostle. Wherefore, to shew the falsehood of that calumny, St. Paul, after afferting his own apostletship, and giving the Corinthians his apostolical benediction, mentioned a fact well known to them all, by which his title to the apostleship was established in the clearest manner. Having commucated to the Corinthians a variety of spiritual gifts immediately after their conversion, he thanked God for having enriched them with every spiritual gift, at the time when his preaching concerning Christ was confirmed among them, ver. 4-7. By making the spiritual gifts with which the Corinthians

* 2 Cor. 8. 7. Eph. 1. 3. Col. 1. 9. Ch. 4. 8, 10. & 10. 15. & 12. 8. & 14. 26.

Corinthians were enriched immediately on their believing, a fubject of thankfgiving to God, the Apoftle, in a delicate manner, put them in mind, that they had received thefe gifts long before the falfe teacher came among them; confequently, that they had received none of their fpiritual gifts from him, but were indebted to the Apoftle himfelf for the whole of them; alfo that they were much to blame for attaching themfelves to a teacher, who had given them no proof at all either of his doctrine or of his million.

St. Paul, by thus appealing to the fpiritual gifts which he had imparted to the Corinthians, having established his authority as an apostle, exhorted them in the name of the Lord Jefus Chrift, to live in union and peace, ver. 10.-For he had heard that, after the example of the disciples of the Greek philosophers, each of them claimed peculiar respect, on account of the supposed eminence of the perfon who had taught him, and attached himfelf to that teacher, as if he, rather than Christ, had been the author of his faith, ver. 11, 12.-But to make them fenfible that Chrift was their only mafter, the Apofile alked them, Whether Chrift, that is, the church of Chrift, was divided into different fects, under different masters, like the Grecian fchools of philosophy? and whether any one of their teachers was crucified for them? and whether they had been baptized in the name of any of them? ver. 13.-He then thanked God, fince they made fuch a bad ufe of the reputation of the perfons who baptized them, that he had baptized but a few of them, ver. 1.1, 15, 16. -And, to fhew that they derived no advantage from the dignity of the teachers who baptized them, he told them, that he and his brethren Apottles, who, in respect of their infpiration, were the chief teachers in the church, were fent by Chrift, not fo much to baptize, as to preach the Gospel, ver. 17.

The falfe teacher, by introducing the Grecian philofophy and rhetoric into his difcourfes, had endeavoured to render them acceptable to the Corinthians, and had preferred himfelf to St. Paul, who, he faid, was unskilful in thefe matters. Left, therefore, the Corinthians should think meanly of his doctrine and manner of preaching, the Apoftle told them, that Chrift had fent bin to preach the Gofpel, not with wifdom of speech, that is, with philofophical arguments expressed in flowery harmonious language, fuch as the Greeks used in their schools; because in that method, the Gospel becoming a subject of philosophical disputation, would have lost its efficacy as a revelation from God, ver. 17.- That, though the preaching of falvation through the crofs, appeared mere foolifhnefs to the wilfully-deftroyed among the heathen philosophers and Jewish scribes, yet to the faved from heathenism and Judaism, it was found by experience to be the powerful means of their falvation, ver. 18 .- That God foretold he would remove both philosophy and Judaism on account of their inefficacy, ver. 19 .- and make the Greek philofophers and Jewish scribes ashamed to shew themselves, because they had darkened and corrupted them, rather than enlightened and reformed the world, ver. 20.-That, having thus experimentally fnewn the inefficacy of philofophy, it pleafed God by the preaching of doctrines which, to the philosophers, appeared foolithness, to fave them who believed, ver. 21.-And therefore, notwithftanding the Jews required a fign from heaven, in confirmation of the doctrines propoled to them, and the Greeks expected every doctrine to be conformable to their philosophical principles, the Apostle preached falvation through Chrift crucified, which he knew was to the Jews a ftumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolifhnefs, ver. 22, 23.-but to them who were called or perfunded to believe the Gofpel, both Jews and Greeks, that doctrine was the powerful and wife means which God made use of for their falvation, ver. 24 .- Therefore, faid he, it is evident that the foolith doctrines of God have more wildom in them than the wifeit doctrines of men; and the weak inftruments ufed by God for accomplithing his purpofes, are more effectual than the greatest exertions of human genius, ver. 25.

Having thus defended both the doctrines of the Golpel, and the manner in which they were preached, the Apolle very properly proceeded to fhew the Corinthians the folly of glorying in their teachers on account of their learning, their eloquence, their high birth, or their power. Look, faid he, at the perions who have called you to the belief of the Goipel; not many philosophers, not many warriors, not many noble men, have been employed to call you, ver. 26.—But God hath chosen, for that purpose, unlearned perfons, to put to fhame the learned, ver. 27. - by their fucces in enlightening and reforming the world, ver. 28. -that no flefh might take any honour to himfelf in the matter of converting and faving mankind, ver. 29 .- the whole glory being due to God, ver. 30, 31. In this light, the mean birth and low-station of the first preachers of the Gofpel, together with their want of literature and eloquence, instead of being objections to the Gospel, are ftrong proofs of its divine original.

Ver. 1. Concerning the city of Corinth, fee Acts, xviii. 1, 2.- a city no lefs famous for its luxury and vice, than for its wildom and elegance: but notwithstanding the luxury of the rich, and the profligacy of the poor, notwithstanding the pride of its wife men, and the prejudices of its priefts, St. Paul, without using the charms of eloquence, the advantages of philosophy, the splendour of riches, the favour or concurrence of the great, planted a church among them, and won them to embrace a crucified Saviour. So great was his fuccefs, that he abode near two years in this place; but about three years after his departure, the church was overrun with great diforders, and fplit into various fects and factions. This occasioned the following Epistle, which was written by St. Paul just before his departure from Ephelus, about Easter, (see ch. xvi. 7, 8.) in the year of Christ 57, and the third of the emperor Nero. It was intended partly to correct fome corruptions and abuses among the Corinthians, and partly to answer certain questions which they had proposed to him. In the introduction he expreffes prefles his fatisfaction at all the good that he knew of them, particularly at their having the gift of the Holy Ghoft for the confirmation of the Gospel; ch. i. 1-9. After which, he first corrects their corruptions and abufes; first, rebuking the fectaries among them, and defending himfelf against one or more false teachers, who had alientated most of the Corinthians from him; ch. i. 10. to ch. v. Secondly, confidering the cafe of a notorious offender, who had married his father's wife, that is, his own flep mother; ordering them to excommunicate this perfon, and to acknowledge no public fornicator as a brother; ch. v. Thirdly, reproving them for their covetous and litigious temper, which caufed them to profecute their Christian brethren before heathen courts of judicature; ch. vi. 1-9. Fourthly, cautioning them against fornication, a vice to which they had been extremely addiaed before they were converted, (ch. vi. 10. to the end,) and which fome of them still reckoned among the things indifferent; or which might be practifed or let alone, without breach of morality. And we can fearcely wonder at this inveterate prejudice, when informed that Corinth was fo notorious for fornication and lasciviousnefs, that a Corinthian woman among the ancients, was a fynonimous term for " a proflitute." The natives made the increale of proftitutes one part of their prayers to their gods, and the bringing of proflitutes into the city a part of their vows. In the next place, he answers certain quellions which they had proposed; and, first, he determines fome questions relating to the marriage-state, ch. vii. Secondly, he instructs them how to act with respect to idolelferings; ch. viii-ix. 1. It could not be unlawful in nielf to eat the meat which had been offered to idols; for the confectation of flesh or wine to an idol did not make it the property of an idol, an idol being nothing, and therefore incapable of property; but fome Corinthians thought it lawful to go to a feast in the idol-temples, which at the fame time were places of refort for lewdnefs, and to eat the facrifices, while praifes were fung to the idols: this was publicly joining in idolatry. St. Paul adviles to abitain even from such participation as was lawful, rather than give offence to a weak brother; which he enforces by his own example, who had abitained from many lawful things rather than create offence to the Golpel. Third's, he answers a third question concerning the manner in which women should deliver any thing in public, when called to it by divine impulse : ch. xi. 2-17. And here he cenfures the unufual drefs of both fexes in prophelying, which exposed them to the contempt of the VOL. II.

Greeks, among whom the men ufually went uncovered, and the women veiled. He also takes occasion here to censure the irregularities committed at their love-feasts, &c. and in the exercise of the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost; ch. xi. 18.—ch. xv. Fourtbly, he afferts the refurrection of the dead, which fome among the Corinthians doubted, and others denied, ch. xv. He then concludes with fome directions to the Corinthian church concerning the manner of collecting alms, promises them a visit, and falutes fome of the members, ch. xvi. See Michaelis, Locke, Whitby, Lardner, and Calmet.

Ver. 1, 2. Paul, called, &c.] Paul, a called Apofile of Jefus Chrift, by the will of God, and Silbenes the brother, ver. 2. Unto, &c.—to them that have been familified in Chrift Jefus, called to be faints, with all that invoke the name of Jefus Chrift our Lord, in every place both theirs and ours. There is great propriety in every claufe of the falutation prefixed to this Epiftle, and particularly in St. Paul's afferting his high call to the office of an apofile, as there were those in the church of Corinth who affected to queftion the authority of his mission. See on Rom. i. 1. Softhenes was a Corinthian minister who attended St. Paul in his travels; compare Acts, xviii. 17. It was both humility and prudence in the Apofile thus to join his name with his own, in an Epiftle in which it was necessfury to deal fo plainly with them, and to remonstrate against fo many irregularities. See Locke, Doddridge, and Calmet.

Ver. 2. To them that are fandlified, &c.] Nothing could better fuit the candid and catholic views which St. Paul was fo much concerned to promote in this Epiftle, than the declaration of his good wiftles in this verte for every true Chriftian upon earth, whether Jew or Gentile, learned or unlearned, Greek or barbarian. The original, which we render call upon the name of Jefus Chrift, -- rois imuzazpisons to books, Mr. Locke renders, all that are called by the name of Jefus Chrift, -- the Greek words being a periphrafis for Chriftians, as is plain from the defign of this verie, and from a variety of proofs given by Dr. Hammond on the place. See on ch. viii. 6.

Ver. 5. That in every thing ye are enriched] Thefe refpectful congratulations and acknowledgments of the things in which they did really excel, had a most happy tendency to fosten their minds, and to dispose them the better to receive the plain represent that he was going to give them, and which, in their circumstances, faithful love extorted from him.

Ver. 9. God is faithful] 'That is, " If we continue "obedient, God for his part will certainly perform his " promife faithfully."

Ver. 10.] There were great diforders in the church of Corinth, caufed chiefly by a faction railed there against St. Paul; the partifans of the faction mightily cried up and gloried in their leader, and did all they could to difparage St. Paul, and to leffen him in the efteem of the Corinthians. The Apostle makes it his business in the first part of this Epifile, to take off the Corinthians from fiding with, and glorying in this pretended apoftle, whole followers and fcholars they profefied themfelves to be; and to reduce them into one body as the fcholars of Christ; united in a belief of the Gofpel, which he had preached to them, and in an obedience to it, without any fuch distinction of masters and leaders, from whom they denominated themfelves. He alfo here and there intermixes a juftification of himfelf against the afperfions which were caft upon him by his oppofers. See 2 Cor. xi. 13-15. Many are the arguments ufed by St. Paul to break the opposite faction, and put an end to all divisions. The first before us, from this to ver. 16. is, that in Christianity they all had but one Master, namely, Christ; and therefore were not to fall into parties denominated from diffinct teachers, as they did in their fchools of philosophy. Locke.

By the name of our Lord Jefus  $Ckrifl_{j}$ —Of whom the whole family in beaven and earth is, and ought to be named. If any one has thought St. Paul a loofe writer, it is only beeaufe he was a loofe reader. He who takes notice of the Apolle's defign will find, that there is fearcely a word or an exprefion which he ufes, but with relation and tendency to his immediate fubject :—as here, intending to abolifh the names of leaders, by which they diftinguithed themfelves, he befeeches them by the name of Chrifl,—a form which we do not remember that he ufes any where eife. Inflead of in the fame judgment, fome read, in the fame fentiment. It was morally impofible, confidering the diverfity of their educations and capacities, that they fhound all agree in opinion; nor could the Apolle intend this, becaufe he does not ufe any argument to reduce them to fuch an faith, * I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Chrift.

13 'Is Chrift divided ? was Paul crucified for you ? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul ?

agreement, nor fo much as declare what that one opinion was, in which he would have them agree. The words must therefore express that peaceful and unanimous temper which Christians of different opinions may and ought to maintain towards each other; which will do a much greater honour to the Gospel and to Christian churches, than the most perfect uniformity that can be imagined. See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 11. Which are of the house of Chloe] Grotius supposes Fortunatus and Achaicus mentioned ch. xvi. 17. to have been her fons. We may observe, that St. Paul uses twice, in the compass of this and the preceding verse, the word brethren, as a term of union and friendship, in order to put an end to their divisions.

Ver. 12. Now this I fuy, &c.] I mean that one or other of you fuys, &c. Chryfoftom and Augustin place a full stop at Cephas.—But the next clause may stand in opposition to all the others. "Some or other of you faith, I am of Paul, I "of Apillos, and I of Cephas:—but I am of Christ; ver. 13. " and is Christ divided?" See Beza and Bengelius.

Ver. 13. Was Paul crucified for you?] As if he had faid, "Are your obligations to me equal or comparable to. " thofe which you are under to our common Mafter? " To him who died for us upon the crofs?" He mentions himfelf, as it was leaft invitious to do fo; though the application was equally juft as to every other inftance. See ch. iii. 6. the word his, rendered in, properly fignifies into: fo the French tranflate it here. The phrafe Carlie fixed into folemnly by that ceremony to enter himfelf a difciple of him into whofe name he was baptized; with profection to receive his doctrine and rules, and fubmit to his authority: a very good argument here, why they fhould be called by no one's name but Chrift's. See Locke.

Ver. 15. Left any flouid fay, &c.] If any one fhould object that others might do it for him, it may be anfwered that St. Paul's attendants, who feem to have been Timothy and Silas, (Acls, xviii, 5., 2 Cor. i. 19.) were perfons of an established character, fo as to be above fufpicion; and that the Apostle herein, as it were, appealed to the baptized perfons themfelves; challenging any one of them to fay that the ordinance was administered to him in Paul's name. uncertainty as to such a fact, is by no means inconfistent with that infpiration wherewith the Apofiles of our Lord were endued; which certainly was neither continual, nor reached to every accident and circumstance in life. The office of baptifm was probably in general affigned to inferiors, as requiring no extraordinary abilities. The proper office of an apofile was not fo much to perform the ceremony of baptifm with his own hands, as to attend constantly to the work of preaching the Gofpel. See the next verie, and Burnet on the 27th Article.

Ver. 17. Should be made of none effect] If the doctrine of the crucifixion of the Son of God for the fins of men be indeed true, it is undoubtedly a truth of the highest importance; and it might reafonably be expected that a perfon who had been inftructed in it by fuch extraordinary methods, should appear to lay the main stress of his preaching upon it. The defign of this wonderful dispensation might therefore have been in a great measure frustrated, if it had been the care of the first preachers of it, and particularly of St. Paul, to study a vain parade of words, and to let off their discourses with those glittering ornaments which the Grecian orators fo often fought, and which the Corinthians were fo ready to affect. But amidit all the beautiful fimplicity which a deep conviction of the Gospel tended to produce, there was room left for the most manly and noble kind of eloquence; which therefore the Christian preacher should labour to make habitual to himfelf, and of which this Apostle himfelf is a most illusttious example. From this verse to ver. 31. St. Paul uses another argument to stop their followers from glorying in these falle apostles; observing, that neither any advantage of extraction, nor skill in the learning of the Jews, nor in the philosophy and eloquence of the Greeks, was that for which God chose men to be preachers of the Gospel. Those whom he had made choice of for overturning the mighty and the learned, were mean, plain, and illiterate men. See Doddridge and Locke.

Ver. 18. For the preaching of the crofs, &c.] " The " doctrine of the crofs is a doctrine of fuch a nature as " could not recommend itfelf by human eloquence to the " imaginations of vicious and vain disputants, such as " were most of the heathen philosophers; but to those who " are faved,---to ferious and well-disposed persons, who " embrace truth wherever they find evidence of it, and

" who are more pleafed with what improves their minds, " than with the vain eloquence of the heathen oratory; " to fuch perfons the Gofpel, in its greatest plainness and " original fimplicity, is, by the influence of the Holy Spirit, " the power of God,-not to amule men's understandings " with needlefs fpeculations, but to convert their wills to " righteoufnefs and true holinefs." See Calmet.

Ver. 19, 20. For it is written, I will deftroy, &c.] See Ifai. xxix. 11, &c. and xxxiii. 17, 18. By the words wife, fcribe, difputer, the Apostle probably meant perfons molt eminent for their learning and fagacity, whether among Jews or Gentiles. The fages of the latter, and the fcribes of the former, are well known : and the di/puter of the age may include fuch of both, as, proud of their natural fagacity, were fond of engaging in controverfies, and fancied that they could confute every adversary. If, according to Mr. Locke's supposition, the false apostle, or chief leader of the faction against St. Paul, called himself a fcribe, there will be a peculiar propriety in the use of the word here. But without that fuppolition it might eafly be underftood by the Corinthians, who had fo confiderable a fynagogue of Jews among them : fee Doddridge, Locke, and Godwin's Heb. Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 6.

Ver. 21. For after that, in the wildom of God ] There is fome difficulty in afcertaining the precife meaning of thefe words. Some understand it to be, " That fince the world, " in the wifdom of God, that is to fay, by contemplating the " works of the creation, had not by wifdom, that is, by the " exercise of their reason, arrived to the true knowledge " of God, it pleafed God to take another method, and by " the foolifbnefs of preaching to fave them that believe." It may feem strange, that the preaching of the Gospel should be called the foslifhnefs of preaching, by an Apoftle of Chrift. But the meaning and language of St. Paul will be accounted for, by confidering what led him to this kind of expression. The doctrine of the cross, and of the redemp. tion of the world by the death and paffion of Chrift, was received by the great pretenders to wifdom and reafon with fcorn and contempt; The Greeks, fays the Apostle, feek after wildom, -and Cbrift crucified is to the Greeks feelifbnefs. The pride of learning and philosophy had to possetted the polite parts of the heathen world, that they could not fubmit to a method of falvation which was above the reach of their philosophy, and which refused to be tried by the 2 2 difputes difputes and fubtilities of the schools. The Apostle fays, ver. 17. Chrift fent him to preach the Gospel, not with the wildom of words. The wildom of the world, thus difcarded, took its revenge of the Gospel in return, and called it the foolifhnefs of preaching. "Be it fo (fays the Apostle); yet " by this foli/bnefs of preaching, God intends to fave those " who believe: for this method is of God, and not of " man; and the foolifhnefs of God is wifer than man." Thus we fee what led St. Paul to use this expression, and to call the preaching of the Gospel the foolifhne's of preaching. The great and learned fo effeemed it, and fo called it : the Apostle speaks to them in their own language, and calls upon them in the text to compare their much-boafted wildom with his foolifhnefs of preaching, and to judge of them by their effects : The world by wifdom knew not God ; but the foolifbnefs of preaching is falvation to every believer. The religion common to the heathen was idolatry; the knowledge of the Deity taught in the schools of the philofophers was fuch as deprived him of his nobleft attributes, justice and mercy; and these very philosophers themselves tan down with the stream, and not only taught that the deities of their country should be worshipped, but likewife enforced their doctrine by their own examples, by worfhipping them themselves. Such was the state of religion before the coming of Chrift; philosophy had been tried; but instead of holding out a light to those that were in the gloom, it put out the little glimmering of light which remained. See Sherlock's Dif. vol. i. Difc. iv. p. 139, &c. and Acts, vii. 18.

Ver. 22-24. For the Jews, &c.] Whereas the Jews require figns, and the Gentiles feek after wifdom; vor. 23. We, neverthelefs, preach Chrift crucified,-and unto the Gentiles foolifbnefs : ver. 24. But unto them that are called, both Fews and Gentiles, &c. When we confider how many miracles were continually wrought by and upon the first preachers and converts of Christianity, it may feem an aftonishing demand which the Jews are faid here to make. From a memorable paffage in Josephus,-in which he fpeaks of an impostor promising his followers to shew them a fign of their being fet at liberty from the Roman yoke,-compared with their requiring from Chrift, amid the full torrent of his miracles, a fign from heaven, it feems probable that the meaning here is, " The Jews demand a " fign from heaven to introduce a Meffiah victorious over " all their enemies." See Matth. xii. 38., xvi. 1. The Apostle, ver. 23. fays, that Chrift crucified was to the Jews a flumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolifbuefs. Now, I. The Jews were offended at Chrift, because he was not received and followed by those of the most learning and authority among them. They were offended at him becaufe he was not a temporal prince, and a conqueror. They were all perfuaded that the Meffiah would be a great king, under whom they flould rule over the Gentiles, and live in wealth and pleafure. When, therefore, they found Chrift was poor and despifed, and died an ignominious death, and his kingdom was a fpiritual kingdom, the crofs of Chrift proved a ftumbling-block to them, and they were difpleafed with a doctrine that fuited neither with their prejudices nor with their inclinations. It is well known that nothing exposed Christianity more to the contempt of the Jews than the doctrine of the crofs; they therefore called Chrift in derifion Tolvi,-the man that was hanged, that is, on the crofs; and Christians Abde Tolvi, " the disciples of the crucified malefactor;" and by a malignant diffortion of the Greek word 'Evayyerior, they called it Aven Gelon, or " a revelation of vanity." Yet it is eafy to fhew that these objections against the perfon of our Saviour were not fufficient to excuse their unbelief. For though the law promifed temporal bleffings to the good, yet the Jews knew by long experience, that those promifes had not been fulfilled at all times, nor to all perfons. Extraordinary interpolitions in behalf of the righteous were grown less frequent. They therefore had no reafon to judge of the characters of men by their station and circumstances in this life, or to imagine that fortunate and virtuous were fynonimous terms, which implied the fame thing. They might have found examples of good men, who had undergone much trouble, and had received here below no recompence of their faith and obedience. They might have learned from the prophets, that the Mefliah, to whom fo much power, prosperity, and splendour was promifed, was also to be a man of forrows and acquainted with grief; that his foul was to be an offering for fin; and they might have feen, in the fufferings of Chrift, and his refurrection, the accomplithment of those otherwife irreconcileable predictions. II. The caufes of the unbelief of the Greeks and Gentiles were fome of them the fame as those which occasioned the unbelief of the Jews ;--- a great corruption of manners, the purity of the precepts of the Golpel, the temporal inconveniences which attended the profellion of Christianity, and advantages which might be fecured by rejecting or oppofing it; the poor appearance which Chrift had made in the world, and his ignominious death. But yet they ought not to have flighted and rejected the Gospel upon account of the low eftate and fufferings of Chrift and his apoftles. The little light they had, yea, and fome of their most approved authors, might have taught them not to value perfons according to their greatnets and riches; nor to measure the favour of God by temporal happinefs, but to love and honour oppreffed innocence. They might have remembered, that the beft man and the wifeft philosopher mentioned in their hiftories lived all his days in poverty, was exposed to flander and calumny, and at last was accused by falfe witneffes, and condemned to die by unjust judges. They knew that virtue feldom obtains the respect which it it deferves. They knew that virtue, though it be fo amiable in itself, has a lustre offensive to the vicious, who will join to obscure and misrepresent it, and to make it contemptible. They knew that he beft deferved the name of a wife man, who lived up to the rules of morality which he had prefcribed to others; and they ought to have admired the man, who, at the fame time that he recommended humility to his followers, was a perfect example of all that he taught. The Gentiles could not conceive how one who feemed forfaken of God, fhould reftore men to the favour of God; and how his fufferings flould be ferviceable to that end. It is reasonable that the divine mercy foould conftantly difplay itfelf in cafes within the reach of compassion, confistently with his moral attributes. Such was the cafe of mankind : who, though finful, are weak; though offenders, are within the reach of his almighty grace. It is also reasonable that God should also be displeased at rebellion and tranfgreffion, and that he should fo grant his pardon, as at the fame time to vindicate the honour of his laws. Now this he has accomplified in a most illustrious manner in the death of his Son, fhewing thereby his hatred to fin and finners, in refufing to hear them in their own name, and in bestowing his favours only through the mediation of one who suffered for our offences. The paternal and tutelary deities worfhipped by the Gentiles were dead heroes and kings; they were confequently loth to deify one who appeared in the low circumstances of a carpenter's fon, and was at last executed like the meanest fare. Yet they should have recollected that the inventors of arts, however low, were worfhipped by them as gods; and that the hufbandman, the gardener, the vintner, and the lowest mechanic, were enrolled among their deities. The Gentiles thought it strange to afcribe fuch power and authority to a crucified man. But the greatest power that any one can fhew, confifts in performing fuch things as no one elle can do, unless God affist him. To destroy the peace of mankind, and carry ruin and defolation through populous countries, is no more than what human ftrength and policy can affect. Many have done this, who have not possibiled one commendable quality. To be honoured, admired, reverenced, are advantages which may be attained without any fupernatural aid; but no man by his tiches, or the eminence of his station, can deliver his brother from death. Therefore he who can heal all ficknetles by speaking a word; who can restore the dead to life; who can confer the fame power on others; who can deliver himself from the grave; is as much fuperior to the rulers and heroes of this world, as the heavens are above the earth. And fuch was our Saviour, though he was crucified; who was the author of falvation to thole who believed his doctrine with the heart unto righteoufnel's, though the Greeks foolifhly imagined that the doctrine itfelf was nothing but foolifhnefs. See Jortin's Dircourfes, p. 9, &c. Leigh's Critica Sacra, and Archbifhop Tillotion's Works, vol. 2.

Ver. 24. Chrift, the power of God, and the wildom of God] St. Paul in the 21ft verfe argues thus in general : " Since " the world, by their natural parts and improvements, did " did not attain to a right and faving knowledge of God, " God by the preaching of the Gofpel, which feems " foolifbuefs to the world, was pleafed to communicate that " knowledge to those who believed." In the three following verfes, he repeats the fame reafoning, a little more exprefsly applied to the people whom he had here in view,--namely, Jews and Gentiles : and his fenfe feems to be this : " Since the Jews, to make any doctrine palateable to them, " require extraordinary figns of the power of God to ac-" company it, and nothing will pleafe the nice palates of " the learned Greeks but wildom; and though our preach-" ing of a crucified Meffiah be a foundal to the Jew, and " foolifhnefs to the Greek, yet we have what they both " feek; for both Jew and Gentile, when they embrace " the Gofpel, find the Meffiah whom we preach, to be " the power of God, and the wifdom of God."

Ver. 25. The follighness of God is wifer than men] As it is abfolutely impollible that there flould be either folly or weakness in God, fo it is certain that the world did not in general believe there was; and confequently these ftrong phrases must be used in a very peculiar fense, and must mean that scheme which was really his, though the world, for want of understanding it, represented it as weakness and folly, unworthy of God. See Doddridge.

Ver. 26. Are called ] Call you : which words I would fupply from the first clause of the verse. Our translators have supplied the words are called, for which there are no correspondent words in the original, and which convey a fentiment neither true nor fuitable to the Apostle's defign. It is not true: for even in Judea among the chief rulers, many believed on him, John, xii. 42. particularly Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea. Other Jews likewile of rank and learning were called; fuch as the nobleman whofe fick fon Jefus cured, John, iv. 53. and Manaen, Herod's fofter-brother, and Cornelius, and Gamaliel, and that great company of priefts mentioned Acts, vi. 7. Acts, xix. 19. And in fuch numerous churches as those of Antioch, Theffalonica, Corinth, and Rome, it can hardly be doubted, that there were difciples in the higher ranks of life. There were brethren even in the emperor's family, Philip. iv. 22. In fnort, the precepts in the Epifiles, to masters to treat their flaves with humanity, and to women concerning their not adorning themfelves with gold and filver and coftly raiment, flew that many wealthy perfons had embraced the Gofpel.-On the other hand, though it were true, That not many wife men, &c. were called, it did not fuit the Apostle's argument to mention it here. For furely God's not calling many of the wife, &c. joined with his calling the foolifh ones of the world to believe, did not put to shame the wife and strong, &c. Whereas, if the difcourfe be underftood of the preachers of the Golpel, who were employed to convert the world, all is clear and pertinent. God chofe not the learned, the mighty, and the noble ones of this world to preach the Golpel, but illiterate and weak men, and men of low birth: and by making them fuccefsful in reforming and converting mankind, he put to fhame the legiflators, flatefmen, and philosophers among the heathens, and the learned scribes and doctors among the Jews, who never had done any thing to purpose in that matter. See Macknight.

Ver. 28. And bafe things And mean things. In this and the preceding verfe, though the Apostle makes use of the neuter gender, which occasioned our translators to infert the word things, yet it is evident from the context, that he means perfons; and if the word things were omitted, the fende would be more plain. By the things which are not, may be understood the Gentiles, who were not the vifible people of God, and were counted as nothing by the Jews. By the foolifb and weak things, that is, by fimple, illiterate, and mean men, God would make ashamed the learned philosophers and great men of the age; and by the things which are not, he would aboligh the things that are, as in effect he did abolish the Jewish church by the Christian; taking in the Gentiles to be his visible people, in the place of the rejected Jews, who till then were his visible people. St. Paul mentions this here, not by chance, but pursuant to his main defign, to ftop their glorying in their falfe apostle, who was a Jew; by shewing that whatever that head of the faction might claim under that pretence, as it is plain he did stand upon it, (see 2 Cor. xi. 21, 22.) he had not the leaft title to any efteem or respect upon that account; fince the Jewish nation were laid afide, and God had chofen the Gentiles to take their place, and to be his church and people instead of them. See on ch. ii. 6., Deut. xxxii. 21., Ifai. xl. 17. and Whitby.

Ver. 20. But of him are ye in Chrift 'fefus] "For, on "the whole, all that we have that is worth mentioning "we receive from Chrift; and we receive it from him as "the gift of God, fince it is of him, and his free mercy and " grace, that ye are called to fhare in the bleffings given " by Chrift Jefus his Son. He exhibits this bleffed Saviour " to us, and difpofes our hearts to accept of him; Whe, " amidit our ignorance and folly, is made of God unto us " a fource of wifdem; and through him, guilty as we are, " we receive rightecufnefs or jufification; polluted as we " are, we obtain fancification, and, enflaved as we naturally " are, to the power of lufts, and the dominion of Satan, " the faithful obtain by him complete redemption." See Doddridge. As the conversion of the Corinthians, to whom this and the following Epistle are addreffed, is a fact of a peculiar nature, and one which affords a ftriking teitimony to the truth of our holy religion, we shall here fubjoin an Efay instead of Inferences.

Effig.—A very mafterly writer has proved, that the conversion and the apothefhip of St. Paul, alone, is of itfelf a fufficient demonstration to prove Christianity to be a divine revelation. And I cannot but think, that the conversion of the Corintkians is another fitrong proof of the truth of our religion. We have the greatest reason to believe that God did perform the promife which he made to this great Apostle, when he faid, I am with thee. For if we duly confider the condition of St. Paul, the nature of the doctrine which he taught, and the manner in which he delivered it, we shall be ready to conclude, that the fuccess which he had in preaching the Gospel at Corinth must be aferibed to the divine power.

Without fuppofing St. Paul to be mad, (a fuppofition too grofs for a man of fenfe to make) we cannot conceive how he could hope, without God's extraordinary affiftance, to convince the people of Corinth that they were in error. He went a stranger thither, unknown to any perfon there, unlefs he was before acquainted with Aquila and Prifcilla. With these two banished Jews, who were of the same occupation with himfelf, he worked for his livelihood. His bodily prefence was no recommendation of him; for he himfelf acknowledges, that he was with them in weaknefs of body, and in much fear and trembling. And he has informed us, that the Corinthians did in fact object to him, that his bodily prefence was weak, and his speech contemptible. What they faid of his perfon was true, if we may believe the ancients, who inform us that his stature was low, his body crooked, and his head bald. And it is not improbably conjectured by Dr. Whitby, that a ftammering in his fpeech, or a fqueaking fhrillnefs in his voice, or fome other infirmity in his fpeech in teaching, rendered him contemptible in the eyes of fome of the Corinthians. He was a bafe and contemptible perfon, they faid, and one who lived by his labour. Nay, fome affirmed that he was mad or befide himfelf. He himfelf has declared, that he was made a spectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men ; that he was laughed at for Chrift's fake; that he was weak, despised ; that he both hungered and thirfied, was was noted, buffeted, and had no certain dwelling place ; that he worked with his own hands, labouring unto wearinefs; that he was reviled, perfecuted, defamed, made as the filth of the world, and the efficienting of all things : was a man of St. Paul's character a likely perforn to convert the richeft and molt flourifhing city in Greece, a city filled with orators, philosophers, and banished Jews; a city above all others infamous for lewdnefs? Every unprejudiced perfon, I thould think, will grant, that nothing can be more improbable; effecially if it be confidered what kind of doftrine he taught the Corinthians.

Without having the fulleft affurance that God was with him, he could never hope to perfuade the proud and vain philosophers, who depended wholly upon human reason, and would admit nothing for truth but what was demonstrable by it, to give their assent to the articles of our most holy faith. He was fure to meet with the utmost opposition when he endeavoured to perfuade these wife men to admit for certain truths things above their reafon. They were fo fully perfuaded of the fufficiency of that reason as to think that they could account for every thing. Apoor obicure mechanic, therefore, a perfon who was of a nation which the reft of mankind defpifed and hated, could never hope to perfuade them in a natural way by reasoning and disputation, to embrace for certain truths many points which were above the reach of human underflanding,-feveral things which they had not fo much as thought or dreamed of. When this Jewith tent-maker informed them, that when all mankind were concluded under fin, and knew not how to be abfolved from the guilt of it, our Lord Jefus Christ, the only-begotten Son of God, begotten of his Father before all worlds, came down from heaven, for us men, and for our falvation; was mineuloufly conceived, was incarnate by the Holy Ghoft of the Virgin Mary, and was made man,-he delivered tothem nothing but the truth. But these wife men knew nothing of Jelus Christ, nor of the Holy Ghost; neither could they conceive how a man could be born of a pure virgin. St. Paul, therefore, could not have perfuaded them by any human means that all this was true; for these wile men of the world, these wife men according to the 1th, (as the Apostle styles them) admitted of no higher principle to judge of things by, but philosophy, and demenilitation from the principles of natural reason. And therefore he must needs think it an impossible thing, without God's special assistance, to persuade them to believe bin to be God, who was born of a pure virgin; to adore him, whole mother was a poor Jewish woman espoused to a carpenter; to pay divine honour to him who was fuppoied to be a carpenter by trade; to believe him who died, and was buried, to be God bleffed for ever; by whom all things were created that are in beaven and earth, visible and invifible, whether they be thrones and dominions, or principlates and powers; in a word, to acknowledge him for their Lord and Master, who was crucified under Pontius Pilate between two thieves. Not only in St. Paul's days, but for a long time after, the doctrine of Christ's crucifixion was foolifhness. In the days of Lactantius, Chriftians were reckoned a filly and contemptible people for following a crucified Mafter and Leader. Arnobius acquaints us, that the heathens faid, the gods were not angry with Christians because they worshipped the Omnipotent Deity, but becaufe in their daily prayers they adored a man that was born, and fuffered the infamous death of the crofs; and because they contended that he was God, and believed him to be yet alive. In another place he informs us, that they alked these questions: If Christ was God, why did he die as a man ? Who was it that was feen hanging upon the crofs? Who was it that died ?-- " The " wife men of the world infult over us," fays St. Auftin, " and alk, where is your understanding, who worship him " for a god, who was crucified ?" And in the days of Athanafius, when the Gentiles were told by the Chriftians, that their images were but filver and gold, the work of men's hands; in opposition to this reproach they answered, that the doctrine of the crofs was foolifhnefs. " The " Greeks laugh at this mystery as foolishness," fays Theophylact, " becaufe by faith alone, and not by fyllogifms " and reafonings, it is found that God was crucified." The fame author informs us, that there were fome unbelievers at Corinth who made a jeft of the crofs, and faid, Truly it is a folly to preach a crucified God. For had he been God, he would have defended himfelf at the time of his crucifixion. But how could he rife from the dead, who could not prevent his own death? They accounted the doctrine of the refurrection of the dead as ridiculous and abfurd a tenet as was ever held, and made it matter of their fport and jeft. To raife a body that was perfecty dead, and reftore it to life again, was not in the power of any being in the world, they faid. But fuppose it was possible, yet they did not account it a thing worthy of God to raile dead bodies to be united to . the fouls of good men. Their chief objection against the refurrection of the flesh, and of the body, was this; that the body was the prifon and fepulchre of the foul, andthat it was her punifiment to be tied to it; that the body was the great hindrance to the knowledge of the truth, and that we could not be truly happy till by death we were delivered from it. It was therefore judged by them, . as Dr. Whitby informs us, not only an impollible, but even. an unjust, unworthy thing, for God to raife these bodies, to be united to those fouls whose happiness confisted in. being delivered from the body, and whole punifhment it: was to be confined to it; that being, according to their philosophy, not to make them live, but die again. And . therefore Celfus fays, The hope of the refurrection of the flesh is the hope of worms, a filthy, abominable, and impossible thing, which God neither will nor can do. He

He declareth that his preaching, though it bring not excellency of freech, or of human wijdom; yet confifteth in the power of God; and fo far excelleth the wifdom of this world, and human fenje, as that the natural man cannot underfland it.

[Anno Domini 57.]

ND I, brethren, when I came to you, 'came not with excellency of fpeech or of wildom, declaring unto you the b testimony of God.

2 For I determined ' not to know any thing among you, fave Jefus Chrift, and him crucified.

3 And I was with you din weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling.

4 'And my speech and my preaching was

And he was fure to meet with as great opposition from the magifirates, who would fuffer no innovations the theology established by law. Had he contented himfelf with confuting the Jews only, I believe he would have given no offence to the civil power: but when he attempted to demonstrate the absurdity of the religion of the heathen, he must be very fensible that they would be greatly alarmed. How furioully must they be enraged when he endeavoured to alter their religious rites, the ancient ufages, the agreeable and pleafing cuftoms of their country? What an abhorrence must they have of him, when he taught them, that the objects of their worfhip were not gods; that an idol was nothing in the world but a fenfeles piece of matter? Could any thing be more flocking to the Corinthians than to hear a poor mechanic affirm, that what they worthipped were no gods, and that they ought to admit Jefus Chrift for their Lord and their God ? When Plato was in Sicily he brought himfelf into the greatest danger by endeavouring to render virtue amiable. If a barbarian had not been more humane than the Sicilian tyrant, the philosopher would probably have fpent the remainder of his days in fervitude in a ftrange country, only for making fome innovations in political affairs. He did not fo much as attempt to deftroy the gods of Sicily, as St. Paul did thole of Corinth. Nay, the Apoftle did not only affirm that what they worfhipped were no gods, but that his countryman Jefus, who had been crucified as a malefactor, was God bleffed for ever. And must not fuch a doctrine be highly provoking to the Corinthians?

Anaxagoras, who was the first of the Greeks that taught this theology,—that not the fun, but the Creator of it, was God, was accounted an atheiß by a people who had made the utmost improvement of their parts, and was in the utmost danger of being stoned to death. The fame Athenians expelled Protagoras of Abdera from their city, and caused his works to be burnt, because he spoke, as they thought, difress feetfally of the gods. They likewise binished Diagoras, and promised a talent for a reward to him that thousid flay him, because he denied that there was a God, or rather only fet at nought the idols and falfe gods of his time. The great Socrates, prince of the philofophers, being fufpected of holding bad opinions of the gods, was condemned to die by drinking a potion of hemloek. And if a bare fufpicion of innovation brought the philofophers into fo much danger; if perfons to greatly renowned for their wifdom and underftanding could not effect what they defigned; can we account, in a natural way, for the fuccefs of our Apoftle, who was fo far from being held in admiration, as the philofophers whom I have mentioned were, that he was defpifed upon the account of his nation, his perfon, his mean occupation, and rudenefs of fpeech?

Plato was greatly admired by his countrymen, and very juftly. And yet he himfelf confeffed, that he durft not, confiftent with his own fecurity, diffeover his opinion of God to the folly of the multitude. Was it not as dangerous for St. Paul to diffeover to the Corinthians his notions, which were far more noble and exalted than those of Plato?

The philosophers and magistrates were not the only powerful adversaries whom St. Paul had to encounter at Corinth. He could not but expect to meet with a very ftrong opposition from the priests, the augurs, diviners, flatuaries, and many others whole interest it was that the fuperstitious religion of their ancestors should be continued. All thefe would undoubtedly be as full of wrath, and raife as great an uproar against St. Paul, as Demetrius the filverfmith, and the workmen of like occupation did, when they heard him perfuade the people, that they are no gods which are made with hands. In a word, a man of his good fenfe, great penetration, forefight, and experience, could not but expect to be accounted and treated as one who turned the world upfide down, a blafphemer of their gods, and confequently a fubverter of the whole frame of their religion.

As the Apotlle was fure of the greateft repugnance, when he taught the Corinthians what they were to believe; fo he mult expect to meet with the utmost opposition, when he endeavoured to perfuade them to fet about the reformation and amendment of their lives: when he commanded them to flee fornication; when he taught them, that every other fin that a man dath is without the pollution of the body; but he that committeth fornication finneth egainst and polluteth his own body; when he forbade them to eat with any brother who is a fornicator, and declared that God would pronounce the fentence of condemnation upon whoremongers and adulterers, not with * enticing words of man's wildom, power:

r 'That your faith should not + stand but in demonstration of the Spirit and of in the wildom of men, but in the power of God.

• Or perjusfible. <sup>f</sup> Ch. I. 17. & 3. 6. 2 Cor. 4. 7. & 6. 7. & 12. 9. I Pet. 1. 5. Acis, 16. 14. & 26. 18. † Gr. be.

adulterers,-He could not but foresee that the Corinthians would be averfe to his doctrine : For Corinth was above all other cities, even to a proverb, infamous for fornication and lasciviousness. How then was it possible for the Apostle, without the help of God, to convince fo debauched and lascivious a people, that fornication and unchannels ought not to be named among them, being crimes of a most destructive nature? Or how could he hope for fuccels when he informed them, that neither filthine/s, nor fooligh talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient, were to be named among them? Or when he acquainted them, that at the day of judgment men were to give an account of every idle word which they had fpoken? Or when he declared, that whofoever is angry with his brother without caufe, fall be in danger of the judgment ? Or when he told them, that whofeever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath commit-ted adultery with her already in his heart? Lastly, how could hein a natural way prevail upon a people who were proud and ambitious, debauched and intemperate, revengeful and envious, contentious and litigious, to embrace a religion which taught humility, fobriety, temperance, the forgiving of injuries, love, charity, moderation, meekness, and univerfal benevolence? We are all of us very fenfible what a difficult matter it is to p = ade men to become in lore with holinefs and virtue, who have been long accuftomed to a vicious course of life. Even perfons who know the terrors of the Lord, who are fully perfuaded and do fincerely believe, that a dreadful day will come when they must give a strict account of all their actions, are, with great difficulty, reclaimed from the error of their way, if their fins have had the growth of many years; (though nothing is too hard for grace, when fubmitted to :) and if old habitual finners, who really believe the Gospel in specuhtion, and confequently expect to be judged for their actions, are feldom, or with great difficulty, reformed; how will an unbeliever account for the Apostle's perfuading the Corinthians to lay afide fuch practices as they thought indifferent and innocent; fuch practices as were pleafant and agreeable to depraved mankind? How will he account for his convincing them that their most facred and Rigious folemnities were the greatest abominations ?

Having thewn what obstacles St. Paul must necessarily meet with at Corinth from the Gentiles; I shall now inquire what opposition he might expect from the unbelievmg Jews, who inhabited this city, when he undertook that glorious work of converting them from darkness to light, of giving knowledge of falvation to them, for the remiffion of their fins.

When he went to Corinth, the city was full of Jews, whom the emperor Claudius had expelled from Rome. They were as bitter enemies as the Gentiles to the Chriftian religion, and the preachers of it; and they hated St. Paul much more than the reft of the apostles, because all on a fudden, from being a violent perfecutor of the difciples Pol. II.

of the crucified Jefus, and making havoc of his church, he gave a convincing proof of the power of grace, by becoming one of the most zealous propagators of his religion. A people fo much prejudiced against him, must be, nay, were in fact greatly incenfed, when they heard him perfuade men to worthip God in a manner different from what their law required. What a hatred must they have of him who abolished circumcision? How could our Apostle hope for fuccess, in a natural way, when he preached fuch a doctrine to a people, who had read in one of their infpired books, that God had threatened that the foul should be cut off which neglected this rite? How, without the affiftance of God, could he, who taught fuch a doctrine, ever think of making converts of Jews, whole religion was fo much corrupted at our Saviour's coming into the world, that they held, " that circumcifion was a " fufficient virtue to render them accepted of God, and " to preferve them from eternal ruin : that no circumcifed " perion goes to hell, God having promifed to deliver " them from it, for the merit of circumcificat, and having " told Abraham that when his children fell into tranf-" greffion and did wicked works, he would remember the " merit of their circumcifion, and would be fatisfied with " their piety ?" They were prejudiced against feveral other doctrines that he taught, which they imagined derogated from the perfection and honour of their law. Such was the doctrine of making the visible church universal by receiving the Gentiles to the privileges of the true church without fubmitting to the ritual law, and not being justified by the works of the law, but by faith in the They were prejudiced in favour of their law. Meffiah. as unchangeable and eternal; or as the neceffary means of justifying a finner before God. Without the interposition of God, the Apofle could never hope to perfuade them who had been informed in their facred books that the Meffiah was to have an everlasting kingdom, a throne for ever and ever-That he should be great unto the ends of the earth, and was to abide for ever, to raife up the tribes of Jacob, and reflore the preferved of Ifrael; to have a portion divided him with the great, and to divide the spoil with the strong ; to have fominion and glory, and a kingdom; that all people, nations, and languages should ferve kim ; that his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pais away, and his kingdom that which Shall not be deglroged .- Without the divine aid, I fay, the Apostle could never hope to perfuade the Jews who expected fuch a triumphant Meffiah, in the carnal natural fense of the words, to believe that Jefus was the Chrift, who had fuffered that death which by the law was counted exectable. The crucifixion of Chrift, as the Apoftle himfelf has informed us, was unto the Jews a stumbling-, block. And in Justin Martyr, Trypho the Jew fays, " Your. " Jefus having by this fallen under the extremest curse of " the law of God, we cannot but fufficiently admire that " you fhould expect any good from God, who place your Aa "ho, cs

6 Howbeit, we fpeak wildom among them this world, nor of the princes of this world, that are perfect: yet h not the wildom of that come to nought:

<sup>4</sup> Phil. 3. 15. Heb. 5. 14. & 6. 1. Eph. 1. 13, 14. 1 John, 2. 14. Ch. 1. 5. & 14. 20. <sup>h</sup> Ch. 5. 19, 20, 28. James, 3. 15. with Pl. 2. 1-4. Ch. 15. 24.

" hope's in a man that was crucified; for our law ftyles " every one that is crucified accurfed." And Theophylact informs us, that the Jews objected; "How can he be God who did eat and drink with publicans and harlots, and was at last crucified with thieves?" See on ver. 22-24.

To all that has been faid I may ftill further add, that the danger which attended the profession of Christianity, might deter both Jew and Gentile from embracing it. A man no fooner became a Christian than he exposed himself to all the miferies that human nature is capable of fuffering. Had our Apostle therefore made use of all the eloquence he was mafter of, yet had not God been with him, he could not have perfuaded the Corinthians to become Christians. But he preached the Gospel in the most plain and simple manner, to as wicked and debauched a people as any in the world : he delivered the most pure and heavenly doctrine, the strictest and severest precepts, that had ever been 'taught mankind; and yet he confounded the mighty and the noble, and gained a victory over their orators and philosophers. I conclude, therefore, that this fucces must be attributed not to a natural, but divine cause, and, consequently, that the Gospel is the word of truth.

REFLECTIONS.—1st, The Apostle opens his Epistle,

1. With an affertion of his apostolic character; which fome among them affected to traduce and vilify, as if he had affumed an honour to which he was in no wife entitled. He affirms, therefore, the divine authority upon which he acted; not felf-constituted, but called of Jesus Christ to the high honour and important charge of apostlestilled. And Solthenes, a fellow-minister, joins him in affectionate falutations. Note; There are times when, to vindicate our real character and magnify our office is not pride, but a debt that we owe to the church of God.

2. He addreffes himfelf to the church of God at Corinth, as to them that are fanctified in Chriff Jefus, feparated by his grace from the world which lieth in wickednefs, and incorporated in his name; called to be faints, juftly fo denominated, and proving by their conduct the propriety of the name they bore; with all that in every place call upon the name of Jefus Chriff our Lord, both their's and cur's, in whom we have a joint intercft, and are all one in him. Note; (1.) All who profefs the name of Jefus, are called to prove their relation to him by the holinefs of their walk. (2.) Since Chrift is propoled to us as the object of our worfhip, he must needs be very God. (3.) The life of a Chriftian is an habitual courfe of calling upon God. To live without prayer is the fureft mark of a Chriftlefs foul.

3. He gives them his apoftolical benediction. Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jefus Chriff.—Grace, the fource of every bleffing, and peace with a reconciled God through Jefus Chrift. Note; (1.) Every mercy that a finner enjoys in time, or hopes for in eternity, flows purely from the free and boundlefs grace of God in Jefus Chrift. (2.) All folid peace of conficience can only arife from a fenie of God's favour and reconciliation through the Redeemer.

4. He thanks God on their account for the graces and gifts which were bestowed upon them. I thank my God (and bleffed and happy are they who can call him fo). always on your behalf, (fo constantly did he feel a tender concern for them upon his heart) for the grace of Gad which is given you by Jefus Chrift, as the great Head of his believing people, to whom they are united, and from whom, as the fountain of vital influence, they draw continual fupplies of strength and confolation. And as he charitably hoped the generality of them were partakers of the grace of God in truth, he had also another cause for thankfulness, because in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance. and in all knowledge, endued with clear views of that rich falvation which is in a crucified Jefus, and capable of expreffing thmfelves on the fubject with fingular fluency of fpeech and energy of diction, even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you, the Holy Ghoft giving the fullest demonstration to their conficiences of the truth of that Gospel which was preached unto them; fo that ye come behind in no gift, in nothing inferior to any church which had been planted, in these distinguished gifts of the Spirit; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jefus Christ, according to the declarations of his word, which they had heard and embraced, preparing to meet him, and with patient but joyful expectation, looking for the day of his appearing. Note ; They who are Christians indeed, cannot but rejoice in the profpect, that, when Christ who is their hope shall appear, then the faithful alfo fhall appear with him in glory.

5. The Apostle profess his confidence in them, that they will not fwerve from the hope of the Gospel: Who fkall also confirm you unto the end, in faith and holinefs, enabling you to perfevere, if you continue to cleave to him, unshaken araidst all your trials, that ye may be blamelefs in the day of our Lord Jefus Christ, being found complete in him, and then transformed wholly into his image : for, he adds, God is faithful to all his promifes, and will affuredly do his part, if we do ours : by whom ye were called unto the fellowschip of his Son Jefus Christ our Lord.

2dly, One chief end of St. Paul's writing this Epifile appears to have been, the healing of those divisions of which he had been informed. He therefore,

1. Exhorts them to union among themfelves; in fentiment and affection to have their hearts knit together, avoiding, as the most dangerous rock, those disputes and divisions which must be the bane of Christian love, and could not but end in the ruin of the church. And he urges this by the most powerful motive, even by the name of our Lord Jefus Christ, not only as one authorized to enjoin this upon them, but fuggesting that the very mention of the endearing name of Jesus should filence every jar, and fill their fouls with love to him and one another. Note; Internal divisions among the members of Christ have

7 But we fpeak ' the wifdom of God in a mystery; even the hidden wi/dom which God ordained before the world unto our glory:

8 * Which none of the princes of this world knew: for, ' had they known it, they would not have crucified <sup>in</sup> the Lord of glory.

have more wounded his caufe than all the external attacks of earth or hell.

2. Heinforms them whence he received his information of those evils which he to justly condemns; and folemnly remonstrates against their making so ill a use of his name, as well as of his brethren, to range themselves in different parties; while fome faid, I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, or Peter, depreciating the one and exalting the other; as if it mattered aught by whole instrumentality they were converted to the faith : whilft others, as if above all means and inftruments, boafted, I am of Chrift, and fo immediately under the teachings of his Spirit as to need no other instructor. But how absurd were these pretenfions, and how dangerous these discords ! Is Chrift divided ? to as to act feparately from the means of his own appointment? or can there be the least fort of division between him and those who act by his authority? and with whom he has promifed to be to the end of the world? or can his church, which is his body, and one with him, be difjointed, and his members fubfift feparately from each other, without infinite injury? Surely, no. And as for those ministers, under whose names you range yourselves, let me alk, applying it to myself, Was Paul crucified for you? Did I, or my brethren, ever pretend that we were your laviours? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul, by my authority, as my disciples, professing your faith in me, or obedience to my fervice? God forbid. Neither I, nor my fellow-labourers, ever taught you to hope for any other atonement than in a crucified Jefus, nor baptized you in any other name than his. I thank God, fince this matter has been to abuted by many of you, that I baptized none of you but Crijpus and Gaius, left any flould fuy, that I had baptized in mine own name, and fought to fet myfelf at the head of a party. I baptized alfo the household of Stephanas : besides, I know not whether I baptized any other. Note; A faithful minister of Christ rejects with abhorrence all attempts to fethim at the head of a party, folicitous only that his Mafter should be glorified, and jealous above all things never to rob him of his peculiar honours.

3dly, Having vindicated himfelf from every infinuation that he defigned to form a party by baptizing difciples, he difclaims every attempt to aggrandize himfelf by the manner in which he preached the Gofpel unto them. For, fays he, Chrift, from whom immediately I received my commiftion, font me not to baptize as my principal bufinefs, but to preach the G fpel, according to the revelation made known unto me; and he informs them,

1. Of the manner in which he preached, --not with wifdom of words, with affected flouristhes of oratory, or to gratily philosophic pride, left the crofs of Chrift should be made of none effect, the fimple truth of a crucified Jelus thould be obscured, its efficacy defeated, its honour tarnisthed, and the success be ascribed, not to the divine fimplicity and native force of the truth, but to the art and cloquence of those who preached the Gospel. Note; Though eloquence, without oftentation, is both lawful and laudable, yet, as Luther fays, he is the best preacher that can speak the most familiarly, and fuits his discourse best to the capacity and understanding of the hearer, more solicitous to be underftood than to be admired.

2. Of the effects of his preaching. For the preaching of the crofs, and the great falvation obtained by the bloodfhedding of the Redeemer on the ignominious tree, is to them that perifb, foolifbnefs. They who are puffed up in pride in their own fufficiency, or ignorant of their guilt and finfulnefs, and their need of the redemption which is in Chrift, reject the Gofpel as nonfenfe and abfurdity, and perish in their impenitence and unbelief. (1.) The doctrine of the crois was to the Jews a flumbling-block. They could not bear to receive him for their Messiah, who made fo mean an appearance in his life, and died as a malefactor on a tree. Rejecting all the amazing miracles which he wrought, they required a fign from heaven, (Mat. xii. 28.) expecting that he flould appear in all worldly pomp and grandeur, as their temporal, instead of a spiritual, Redeemer. (2.) To the Greeks this doctrine was foolifhnefs. They fought after wifdom, they received nothing but what was demonstrable on what they termed the principles of reafon; and fince their philosophic minds could perceive no connection between a man who was crucified, and the redemption of finners; nor efteemed it possible, on their principles, that he who could not, as they conceived, fave himfelf from the crofs, fhould be able to fave others from death and hell; they ftamped the declaration with folly, and rejected it as absurd. But, (3.) unto us who are faved, however proud Greeks or felf-righteous Jews may think of it, Chrift, and the doctrine of falvation through his cross, appears to be the power of God, and the wildin of God. The power of God is feen to be most glorioully difplayed in the Mediator's undertakings and fufferings; in his miracles, refurrection, afcenfion; and efpecially in the mighty efficacy with which his Gofpel is attended, through the influences of his Spirit, effectually quickening the dead in trefpaffes and fins, turning them from darkness to light. and from the power of Satan unto God. The wildin of God is aftonishingly displayed in the stupendous scheme of man's redemption, wherein the finner, confittent with the glory of every divine perfection, can be received into the bofom of mercy; and pardon, holinefs, and glory, be beflowed on him, without diffonour to God's government or law, and this through the fubflitution of the fecond Adam, the Lord from heaven, in our stead.

3. He fnews the triumph of this doctrine of a cruci and Jefus over all the inventions of the wifeft fages their fedences and fyftems could never relieve a guilty confedence, or lay a folid foundation for the figure's hep's Aa 2 9 But, as it is written, " Eye hath not feen, heart of man, the things which God hath nor ear heard, neither have entered into the prepared for them that love him.

" Pf. 64. 4. Ver. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 12. 1 Kings, 10. 7. Pf. 31. 19. Col. 3. 3.

The Lord therefore, according to his word, (Ifai. xxix. 14.) ftamps all human wildom as folly. Where is the wife philofopher ? Where is the learned fcribe, deep read in traditions? Where is the diffuter of this world, whether Jew or Gentile? Can the one or the other give the least fatiffactory account, how a guilty finner can be reconciled to an offended God? Hath not God made foolifh the wildom of this world? and left philosophers and rabbins to grope for the wall as blind ? For after that, or fince, in the wildom of God, the world by wifdom knew not God, but their most learned fages were permitted to become vain in their imaginations, (fee Rom. i. 21, 22.) ignorant of God, his worfhip, and ways; it pleafed God, in his infinite grace and love, to make a more transcendant display of his own glory, by the foolifhnefs of preaching, (for fo would a wife world call the doctrine of the erofs) to fave them that believe, making it effectual to their peace, and joy, and holinefs. This contrivance of divine wildom to fave loft fouls by the incarnation of Jefus, is deemed the greateft folly; but the foolifbnefs of God is wifer than men, infinitely excelling all their boafted refearches, and ingenious fystems; and the weaknefs of God is stronger than men, however inadequate the Gofpel method in their eyes may appear; and however weak the inftruments are, which are chiefly employed in the work, yet it was clear to demonstration, that what all the precepts of philosophy and the power of oratory never produced, the doctrine of the crofs effected, deftroying the kingdom of fin and Satan in the hearts of men, and caufing fuch an evident change in their tempers and conduct as fpoke the finger of God. Note; Wherever the Gofpel is truly preached, however weak the inftrument may be, God will bear teftimony to his own word, that the excellency of the power may appear to be of God and not of us.

4. He appeals to them for the truth of what he had advanced, as verified by experience. For ye fee your calling, brethren; bow that not many wife men after the flefb, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; (fee the Annotations;) fome few fingular inflances to the contrary may be obferved : but, in general, the proud philosopher, the felfrighteous fcribes, and the men of high birth and affluence, refuse to fubmit to the humbling and felf-denying doctrines of the crofs: and, leaving them to their folly and ruin, God bath chofen the feelift things of the world to confound the wife, that an illiterate Chriftian should shame the proud philofopher, and thew the furpaffing influence of the doctrine of Jefus, above all his learned precepts. And God bath chofin the weak things of the world, men in the meaneft outward circumstances, to confound the things which are mighty, to famp vanity on human grandeur, and to fhew that his kingdom stands without any earthly supports, nay, in defiance of all worldly power and influence; and bafe things of the world, and things which are defpifed, even the poor Gentiles, whom the felf-rightcous Jews would fcarcely deign to put among the dogs of their flock, these hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, who never had a name or place in the church of God before, to bring to nought (ualasynon), to abolif, the things that are, putting a period to the covenant of peculiarity, under which the Jewifh people formerly flood, thinking themfelves, exclusive of all others, the only favourites of heaven. But now all difference ceafes, that no flefh flould glory in his prefence, on account of any imagined fuperiority in wildom, wealth, nobility, or any external privileges; but that, as it is written, he that glorieth flould glory in the Lord, aferibing the whole of their falvation to his rich and boundlefs grace, as revealed in the Gospel of Jesus to the miserable and the penitent.

5. He reminds them of the ineftimable bleffings to which, in virtue of their interest in Christ, they were entitled. They had of themfelves nothing to glory in; but of him are ye in Christ Jesus, incorporated into the mystical body of Christ, who of God is made unto us, according to the constitution of the covenant of grace, wifdom and righteoufnefs, and fanctification and redemption. (1.) Wifdom ; we are naturally foolifh, deceived, and ignorant; but all the treafures of wifdom refide in our exalted Head : and, as the prophet of his church, it is his office to lead us into all truth, for which end he has given us his word, and promifes his Spirit, that we may be taught of God, and thereby be made wife unto falvation. (2.) Righteousness, by his fufferings and obedience unto death, he has fatisfied the law and juffice of God in our flead; and as this is accepted for us, and placed to our account, through faith in him, for the remiffion of our fins, and difcharging us from condemnation, and for our justification in the fight of God. And fince it does not become the holy God to take away the guilt of our fins, and at the fame time leave us under their power and dominion, he has also made Christ to be, (3.) Sanclification ; he is the head of vital influence, and, as a quickening Spirit, works effectually in the hearts of his believing people, mortifying and deftroying their corrupt and vile affections, and daily renewing them in the inner man, that their spirits and temper may be brought to a nearer conformity with his own, until his whole mind be established in them. Lastly, God has made Chrift to be Redemption to all his faithful faints, as he is their great and final Deliverer from all that is contemptible and miferable in this world, as well as in that to come; and as he will raise their dead bodies, and make them like unto his own glorious body, by the working of his mighty power; and, to complete their felicity: and thus Chrift will become all in all to his faints; and to him alone fight all the glory be eternally afcribed.

CHAP. II.

BECAUSE the learned Greeks had objected to the Gofpel, the foolighnefs (as they were pleafed to call it) of its doctrines, and the weaknefs of its preachers, the Apoftle made answer in the foregoing chapter, that by these foolish doctrines and weak preachers, a reformation had been wrought in the minds and mannets of multitudes, which which the boafted philosophy of the Greeks, and the eloquence of their orators, had not been able to accomplish. But this being a matter of great importance, and the faction having upbraided St. Paul in particular with his want of eloquence, he now proceeded in this chapter to tell the Corinthians, that Chrift having fent him to preach not in the wildom of words (fee chap. i. 17.), he acted agreeably to his commiffion, when he came to them not with the excellency of speech, or of wildom, declaring the testimony of God, ver. 1.-By thus difclaiming the Grecian philosophy and rhetoric, and by calling the Golpel the testimony of God, the Apostle infinuated, that the credibility of the Gospel depended neither on its conformity to the philosophy of the Greeks, nor on the eloquence of its preachers, but on the attestation of God, who confirmed it by miracles and the divine influences of his Spirit .--- And therefore, however ndiculous it might appear in their eyes, he determined to make known nothing among the Corinthiaus, either in his private conversations, or in his public discourses, but Jesus Chrift, and him crucified for the fins of men, ver. 2 .---At the fame time, knowing the opinion which the learned Greeks would form of that doctrine in particular, as well as that his discourses were neither composed nor pronounced according to the rules of the Grecian rhetoric, his first addreffes to them were in weaknefs, and in fear, and with much trembling, ver. 3.-Yet they were accompanied with the powerful demonstration of the Spirit, who enabled him to prove the things which he preached, by miracles and by his gracious influences, ver. 4.—that the faith of mankind might be founded, not in the wifdom of men, that method of reafoning and fpeaking, which human wildom dictates as best calculated to perfuade, but in the power of God, ver. 5.

However, left the things which are faid in the preceding chapter, concerning the foolifhness of the doctrines of the Gospel, and in this chapter concerning its having no telation to any of the fchemes of the Greek philotophy, might have led the Corinthians to think meanly of it, the Apoille told them that, in the Gofpel, he and his brethren made known a fcheme of doctrine, which they who were perfectly inftructed knew to be real wifdom: only it was nd the wifdom of this world; it was none of the mytteries of the idol gods worshipped by the heathens, nor of the religions established by the heathen rulers, who are all to be made nought, ver. 6 .- What they preached, was the wildom of the true God; a fcheme of religion contrived by the true God, and made known in a real mystery .- The Apostle called the Gospel a mystery, not because it contained doctrines absolutely unintelligible, but because being of divine original, and containing the most important discoveries, it was better entitled to the honourable appellation of a myslery, than any of those which were to named. This excellent fcheme of doctrine hitherto kept fecret, God determined, before the Jewish dispensation began, to publish to the world by the Apostles of his Son, to their great honour; fo that they are mystagogues of a mystery infinitely more excellent than the Eleufinian, or any other heathen myllery, vcr. 7 .--- Yet when it was publifhed, none of the rulers of this world knew it to be the wifdom of God; for if they had known it to be fo, they would not have crucified the Lord, or author of all the glcrious things discovered in the mystery of God's wildom, ver. 8.-This ignorance of the rulers, the Apostle obferved, was occasioned by the greatness of the things contained in the mystery of God's wildom. They were what human reason could neither discover, nor fully comprehend; agreeably to Ifaiah's defcription of them; eye hath nit feen, &c. ver. c.- Thefe things, however, God hath revealed to us Apollles, by his Spirit : for the Spirit of God who infpires us, fearcheth all things, even the deep counfels of God. So that we are well qualified to discover these counsels to the world, ver. 10, 11.-Farther, he told them, that the Apostles had not received the infpiration of evil spirits, by which the heathen priesteffes, and prophets, and mystagogues, were guided; but the inspiration that cometh from God, that they might know and publish the glorious things, (fee ver. 9.) which are freely beftowed by the true God on them who believe, ver. 12.-Which things, faid he, we Apostles effectually make known to the world, not in language taught by human rhetoric, but in words dictated by the Spirit of God; explaining fpiritual things in fpiritual words, ver. 13 .- Neverthelefs, the animal man, the man who is guided by his animal paffions and notions, does not receive the things revealed by the Spirit; because they appear to him foolifhnefs; neither can he understand them, becaufe they must be examined spiritually, that is, they must be examined by the light which divine revelation, and not reason, affords, ver. 14 .- But the fpiritual man, the man who is not guided by his animal paillons, and who acknowledges the authority of revelation, and is affifted by the Spirit of God, is able to examine and receive the things revealed by the Spirit. Yet he himfelf is examined and judged by no animal man : becaufe no animal man can understand the principles upon which the fpiritual man's belief is founded, ver. 15 .- For what animal man has underftood and approved the gracious purposes of the Lord Christ, respecting the falvation of the world ? or what animal is able to inftruct the fpiritual man ? But, added he, we Apofiles have the gracious purpofes of Chrift made known to us by the Spirit; fo that we are able both to know them, and to communicate them to the world, ver. 16.

Ver. 1. And I, brethren, &c.] As a further argument to keep them from glorying in their leaders, St. Paul tells the Corinthians, that, as the preachers of the Gofpel, of God's choosing, were mean and illiterate men, fo the Golpel of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

13 'Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wildom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghoft teacheth; comparing fpiritual things with fpiritual.

evangelical meaning of those puffages, by the coming of the Lord Jefus Chrift, and by the affiftance of the Spirit, world by the preachers of the Gofpel; and therefore he calls it, especially that part of it which relates to the Gentiles, almost every where uver never mystery. See particularly word rendered to know, is used according to the Hebrew idiom, to caufe to know, or to teach. St. Paul, who was himfelf a learned man, especially in the Jewish knowledge, having told them in the foregoing chapter, that neither the Jewish learning nor Grecian sciences give a man any advantage, as an infpired teacher and minister of the Golpel, he here reminds them that he made no flew or ufe of either of them, when he planted the Gofpel among them; intimating thereby that those were not the things for which their teachers were to be valued or followed.

There feems to be a peculiar emphasis in the expression among you, as if the Apostle had faid, " I did not change

" my usual method at Corinth; and you know with what glorious fuccefs it was attended." The Greek of the last clause is, xai to toy is ave where we that crucified perfon. The Jews and heathens evidently gave our Lord this name by way of contempt; but St. Paul declares, that inftead of concealing this as an infamy and fcandal, it was the main thing he infifted upon; as indeed all the most important doctrines of the Gospel stand in a close and natural connection with it : and no doubt but he took them in that connection; for he refers, in the course of these Epiftles, to feveral doctrines relating to the Father and the Holy Spirit, as what he had taught them, though not ex-prefsly included in the doctrine of the crucifixion. See fetting forth his own modest and humble behaviour among them, reflects on the contrary carriage of their false Apoi-tle; which he defcribes at length, 2 Cor. xi. 20. See alfo

There were two forts of arguments wherewith the Apolite confirmed the Gospel; the one was, the revelations made concerning our Saviour by types and figures, and prophe-fics of him under the law; the other, the miracles and miraculous gifts accompanying the first preachers of the Gospel, in the publishing and propagating of it. The latter of these St. Paul here calls power, the former he terms the Spirit; and so ver. 12 and 14. The things of the Spirit of God, and spiritual things, are things which are revealed by the Spirit of God, and not discoverable by our Gofpel was not to be propagated, nor men to be eftablifhed in the faith, by human learning and eloquence; but by the evidence that it had from the revelation contained in the Old Teftament, from the power of God accompanying and confirming it with miracles, and from the influences of the Spirit of God upon the heart, ver. 1-5.

I came not with excellency of [peech] With the pomp of language. Doddridge. This may allude to the vain affectation of fublimity and fubtility fo common among the Greeks of that age, and very remote from the true eloquence in which our Apostle did fo remarkably excel. It has been afferted, that the Apostle laboured under a great impediment in his speech, from a stammering or a squeaking shrillness in his voice. Others choose to apply the words to his defect in oratory, and want of experience in the Greek language: both which may be looked upon as wide of the mark, and not the Apoftle's meaning in this werfe; which can be no other than that affigned in the beginning of the note. It hence appears, that he was far from taking advantage of a higher education, fuperior learning, and greater use of the world; and by this conduct put himfelf upon a level with the other Apostles. But an impostor, whose aim had been power, would have acted a contrary part; he would have availed himfelf of all those advantages; he would have extolled them as highly as poffible; he would have fet himfelf up, by virtue of them, as head of the fect to which he acceded, or at leaft of the profelytes made by himfelf. This is no more than was done by every philosopher who formed a school; much more was it natural in one who propagated a new religion. But as his conduct was the reverfe, he shewed that he acted upon higher principles than any philosopher, and that fame was no motive for his profeiling himfelf a Chriftian, and for endeavouring to make others Chriftians likewife. By the testimony of God is meant, " what God " hath revealed and teftified in the Old Teftament." The Apostle declares, that, when he preached the Gospel to the Corinthians, he made use of no human science, no infinuations of eloquence, no fpeculations of philosophy, no embellishments of human learning; all his arguments were, as he tells them, ver. 4. from the revelation of the Spirit of God, the predictions of the Old Testament, and the miracles which he himfelf did among them; that their faith might be owing entirely to the Spirit of God, and not to the abilities and wildom of man. Inftead of μαετύριον, which we render testimony, feveral ancient manufcripts read pussion, myflery. There may be fomething faid in favour of this reading; for though the Apostle owns the doctrine of the Gofpel, dictated by the Spirit of God, to be contained in the Scriptures of the Old Teftament, and built upon revelation; yet he every where teaches that it remained in fome measure a fecret there, Vrr. 5. That your faith fould not fland, &c.] Their faith being built wholly on divine revelation and miracles, whereby all human abilities were thut out, there could be no raion for any of them to boast themselves of their teachers, or value themselves upon their being followers of this or that preacher, which St. Paul here obviates. See Locke.

Ver. 6. Howbeit, we fpeak wifdom, &c.] The next argument the Apostle uses, to shew them that they had no reason to glory in their teachers, is, that the knowledge of the Golpel was not attainable by our natural parts, howerer they were improved by art and philosophy, but was wholly owing to revelation, ver. 6-16. Perfect, in this. refle, is the fame with spiritual, ver. 15 .- One that is fo perfectly well apprized of the divine nature and original of the Christian religion, that he fees and acknowledges it to be all a pure revelation from God, and not in the least the product of human discovery, parts, or learning; and io, deriving it wholly from what God hath taught by his Spini in the facred Scriptures, allows not the least part of it to be afcribed to the skill or abilities of men. Thus prfect is opposed to carnal, ch. iii. 1, 3. that is, such babes in Christianity, such weak and mistaken Christians, that they thought the Gospel was to be managed as human arts and sciences among men of the world, and that those were better instructed and more in the right, who followed this master, or teacher, rather than another; and thus, glorying in being the disciples, one of Paul, another of Apollos, fell into divisions and parties about it, and vaunted one over another: whereas, in the school of Chrift, all was to be built on the authority of God alone, and the revelation of his Spirit in the facred Scriptures. Some render the clause, Howbeit, we teach wisilom in things my excellent. See Ezra, ii 63. By the wifdom of this world, is meant the knowledge, arts, and sciences attainable by man's natural parts and faculties; fuch as man's wit could find out, cultivate, and improve, and fuch as the trinees of this world approve, encourage, and endeavour to propagate.—Though by aexivtes the alwe tote, may here be understood the princes or great men of this. werld, in the ordinary fense of these words, fays. Mr. Locke; yet he that well confiders ver. 28. of the foregoing chapter, and ver. 8. of this chapter, may find reason to think, that the Apostle here principally defigns the rulers and great men of the Jewish nation. If it be objected, that there is little ground to think that St. Paul, by the wildom he difowns, should mean that of his own nation, which the Greeks of Corinth (whom he was writing to) had little acquaintance with, and had very little efteem tor,-I reply, that to understand this right, and the perthency of it, we must remember, that the great defign of St. Paul in writing to the Corinthians was, to take them off from the respect and esteem that many of them had for a falle apostle who was got in among them, and had there raifed a faction against St. Paul. This pretended apostle, it is plain from 2 Cor. xi. 22. was a Jew, and, as it seems, 2 Cor. v. 16, 17. valued himself upon that account, and poffibly boafted himfelf to be a man of note, either by birth, or alliance, or place, or learning among the people, who counted themfelves the holy and illuminated people of God; and therefore to have a right to fway among those new heathen converts. To obviate this claim of his to any authority, St. Paul here tells the Corinthians, that the wildom and learning of the Jewish nation led them. not into the knowledge of the wifdom of God, that is tofay, the Gospel revealed in the Old Testament; evident: in this, that it was their rulers and rabbies who, ftiffly adhering to the notions and prejudices of their nation, hadcrucified Jefus the Lord of glory, and were now themfelves, with their flate and religion, upon the point of being fwept away and abolished. It is to the same purpose that, 2 Cor. iv. 16-19. he tells the Corinthians, that he knows no man. after the fleft; that is to fay, that he acknowledges no dignity of birth, or descent, or outward national privileges. " The old things of the Jewish constitution are past and " gone; whoever is in Chrift, and entered into his king-" dom, is in a new creation, wherein all things are new,. " all things are from God; no right, no claim or pre-" ference derived to any one from any former inflitution; " but every one's dignity confifts folely in this, that God " hath reconciled him to himfelf, not imputing his for-" mer trefpaffes to him." Aids #7 (B), which we tranflate this world, feems to me to fignify commonly, if not confantly, in the New Teftament, that flate which, during the Mofaical conftitution, men, either Jews or Gentiles, were in, as contradiftinguished to the evangelical flate or conflitution; which is commonly called 'Aiw µéhhar, or expuert, The world to come. Who come to nought, means, who are vanishing. If the wisdom of this world, and of the princes of this world, be to be understood of the wildom and learning of the world in general, as contradiftinguished to the doctrine of the Gospel, then the words are added, to fhew what folly it is for them to glory as they do in their. teachers, when all that worldly wifdom and learning, and the great men the fupporters of it, would quickly be gone; whereas all true and lafting glory came only from Jefus Chrift, the Lord of glory. But if thefe words are to be underflood of the Jews, as feems most confonant-both to the main defign of the Epistle, and to St. Paul's expref. fions here, then his telling them that the princes of the Jewish nation are brought' to nought, is to take them off from glorying in their Judaizing falfe apostle; fince the authority of the tulers of that nation in matters of religion was now at an end, and they, with all their pretences, Ver. 7. We speak the wijdem of God] The wildom of God is used here for the doctrine of the Gospel, coming immediately from God by the revelation of his Spirit; and in this chapter it is fet in opposition to all knowledge, difcoveries, and improvements whatfoever, attainable by human industry, parts, and fludy, all which he calls the wifdom of the world, and man's wildom ;-- thus diftinguishing the knowledge of the Gofpel, which was derived wholly from revelation, and could be had no other way, from all other knowledge whatfoever. What the Spirit of God had revealed of the Gofpel during the times of the law, was fo little underftood by the Jews, in whofe facred writings it was contained, that it might well be called the wifdom of God in a myslery, that is to fay, declared in obfeure propheses, and mysterious expressions and types. Though this be undoubtedly fo, as appears by what the Jews both thought and did, when Jefus the Meffiab, exactly answering what was forecold of him, came among them, yet by the wifdom of God in a myslery, wherein it was hid, though proposed by God before the fettling of the Jewish acconomy, St. Paul feenis more particularly to mean what the Gentiles, and confequently the Corinthians, were more peculiarly concerned in; viz. God's purpole of calling the Gentiles to be his people under the Meffiah; which, though revealed in the Old Testament, yet was not in the least understood till the times of the Gospel, and the preaching of St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, which therefore he to frequently calls a myflery. The reading and comparing Rom. xvi. 25, 26., Eph. iii. 3-9., ch. vi. 19, 20., Col. i. 26, 27., ii. 1-8. and iv. 3, 4. will give light to this. To which give me leave to obferve upon the use of the word wifdom here, that St. Paul, fpeaking of God's calling the Gentiles, cannot, in mentioning it, forbear expressions of his admiration of the great and incomprehensible wildom of God therein. See Eph. iii. 8, 10., Rom. xi. 33. The term Hed Tay s'inver, fignifics properly, before the ages ; and I think it may be doubted whether thele words, before the world, do exactly render the fense of the place. That aiw, or alwers, flould not be translated the world, as in many places they are, I fhall give one convincing inftance, among many that might he brought, viz. Eph. iii. 9. compared with Col. i. 26. The words in Coloffians are, 7d puripion to anchenpupinion and alwinn, thus rendered in the English translation, which hath been hidden from ages ; but in Eph. iii. 9. a parallel place, the fame words  $\tau_{i}^{2}$   $\mu v_{5} \pi_{-}$ είε το αποκευρυμμένο από των αιώνων, are translated, The myflery which from the beginning of the world hath been hid; whereas it is plain from Col. i. 26. that ano Two al svou, does not fignify the epoch or commencement of the concealment, but those from whom it was concealed. It is plain that the Apostle, in the verse immediately preceding, and that following this which we have before us, fpeaks of the Jews; and therefore the phrase we) two and way here, may be well underftood to mean before the ages of the Jews; and fo απ' αιώνων, from the ages of the Jews, in the other two mentioned texts. Why the word αιώνες, in thefe and other places, (as Luke, i. 70., Acts, iii. 21. and elfewhere,) fhould be appropriated to the ages of the Jews, may be owing to their counting by ages, or jubilees. See Mr. Locke, and Dr. Burthogge's judicious treatife, "Chrifti-" anity a revealed Mystery," c. ii. p. 17. Ver. 8. They would not have crucified] The force of the original is, They would not by any means. Compare Luke, xxiii. 34. St. Paul, in the close of the foregoing verfe, oppofes the true glory of a Christian, to the glorying which was among the Corinthians in the eloquence, learning, or any other quality of their factious leaders: for, in all his expressions, he has an eye on his main purpole; as if he fhould have faid, " Why do you make divisions, by " glorying as you do, in your different teachers? The " glory to which God hath ordained us Christian teachers " and professions, is, to be expounders, preachers, and be-" lievers of those revealed truths and purposes of God, " which, though contained in the facred Scriptures of " the Old Teftament, were not comparatively under-flood in former ages. This is all the glory that belongs " to us, the difciples of Chrift, who is the Lord of all " power and glory, and herein has given us what far ex-" cels that, whereof Jews or Gentiles had any expecta-" tions from what they gloried in." See the next verfe. Thus St. Paul takes away all matter of glorying from the falle Apostle, and his factious followers among the Corinthians. See Locke and 2 Cor. iii. 6-11.

Ver. 11. Knoweth no man] Knoweth no one. These words must fignify the perfect acquaintance with all the divine schemes and purposes which the Holy Spirit had, and which the Apostle's argument directly proves that no creature can have: so that in this passage we have a strong proof of the divinity of the Spirit; and, accordingly it has been urged as such by all who have defended that important doctrine. See Bishop Pearson on the Creed.

Ver. 12. Now we have received] We, the true Apofiles, or rather I; for though he fpeaks in the plural number to avoid oftentation, as they might interpret it, yet he is here juftifying himfelf, and fhewing the Corinthians, that none of them had reafon to forfake and flight him, in order to follow and cry up their falfe apofile. That he fpeaks of himfelf, is plain from the next verfe, compared with ver. 1. and ch. i. 17.—As he puts "princes of the "world," ver. 6 and 8. for the rulers of the Jews, fo here he puts fpirit of the world for the nation of the Jews; that worldly fpirit wherewith they interpreted the Old Teftament, and the prophefies of the Meffiah and his kingdom. Locke.

Ver. 13. Comparing fpiritual things, &c.] Explaining, &c. Wall, Elfner. "Comparing one part of revelation with "another." It is plain, fays Mr. Locke, that the fpiritual things which he here fpeaks of, are uncharitable counfels of God, revealed by his Holy Spirit in the facred Scriptures.

Milk is fit for children. Strife and division, arguments of a flefbly mind. He that planteth, and he that watereth, is naking. The ministers are God's fellow-workmen. Christ the only foundation. Men the temples of God, which must be kept holy. The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God.

tures. This expression may ferve to convince us of the great regard which we ought always to maintain for the words of Scripture; and may especially teach miniflers, how attentively they should study its beauties, and how careful they should be to make it the support of their difcourses. See Wetstein.

Ver. 14, 15. But the natural man, &c.] The natural man and the spiritual man are opposed by St. Paul in these verses; the one fignifying a man who has no higher principles to build on, than those of natural reason; the other, a man who founds his faith and religion on divine revelation, and experiences the power thereof in his heart. This is what appears to be meant by natural, or rather animal man,-wuxurg,-and spiritual, as they stand opposed in these two verses. There are some who suppose that uyx implies fomething further; namely, the fenfual man, who continues under the influences of his appetites and pattions, and is a stranger to the noble exercises and principles of the divine life. See James, iii. 15. Jude, ver. 19. Locke, Owen, and the 2d volume of The Phænix, p. 544. Instead of judgeth all things, Bos reads judgeth of every man.

Ver. 16. That he may infiruct him.] "Him, refers here " to fpiritual man in the former verse, fays Mr. Locke ; for " St. Paul is shewing, not that a natural man, and a mere " philosopher, cannot instruct Christ ;--- this nobody, pre-" tending to be a Christian, could imagine;-but that a " man, by his bare natural parts, not knowing the mind " of the Lord, could not instruct, could not judge, could " not correct a preacher of the Gospel, who built upon " revelation, as he did." Many interpreters, however, think it more agreeable to the construction, and its connection with what follows, by Him to understand God. This part of the epiftle is very artificially conducted : the Apoffle is now aiming at the great point of establishing his authority, which had been fulpected among them; yet he does not directly propose, but obliquely infinuates, arguments against fuch fuspicions; arguments which might poffers their minds, before they were aware of what he intended to effect by them. This important remark will often prefent itfelf to the attentive reader of St. Paul's Epiftles. See Doddridge, Guyle, and Pyle.

Inferences.—It flould be the refolution of every Christian, and especially the determination of every minister, to know Voz. 11. nothing but Jefus Christ, and kim crucified; (ver. 2.) to efteem this the most important of all knowledge, to cultivate it in their own minds, and endeavour to propagate it to others. Fraught with this divine fcience, those ministers of the Gospel who know least of the excellency of speech, and the enticing words of man's wijdom, will do more important fervice for the reformation of the world, and the falvation of fouls than without it the greatest mafters of language, or adepts in philosophy, will ever be able to effect. Let the princes of this world boaft of the knowledge and refined policy, which is fo foon to perifh, (ver. 6.) by which fo many of their fubjects perifh, and fometimes themfelves before their time :---In how many inftances does it leave them to imitate the deftructive maxims of those, who, under pretence of public good, but really under the infligation of the baseft private passions, crucify Jefus, the adorable Saviour, - the Lord of glory ! ver. 8.

We fhould continually pray to God to teach us more of that bidden wifdom, which they who are truly initiated into real Chriftianity know, and which opens upon us views and hopes beyond what eye kath feen, or ear heard, or it hath particularly and fully entered into the heart of man to conceive, ver. 9. There is no need we fhould diffinctly conceive it; it is enough that we know in the general it is what God bath prepared for them who love him: a confideration, which may furely teach us to defpife that which he fo often beftows on thofe who hate him; on thofe with whom he is angry every day.

Happy will it be, if that fpirit which fearcheth all things, even the hidden things of God, give us more deeply and affectionately to know the things which are freely given us of God, and to adore that grace from which we receive them. These things we learn with the highest advantage from the holy Scriptures, where they are delivered in words which the Holy Ghost taught, ver. 12, 13. words therefore the most admirably adapted to express those spiritual and sublime ideas which they were intended to communicate; and in which, consequently, we learn to speak of the things of God with the exactest propriety, and the purest edification.

May we be enabled fpiritually to difeern them, with whatever contempt they may be treated by natural, that is animal men; by those who, though conceited of their rational powers, can relish little or nothing but what relates to this low and fenfual life! ver. 14. Confcious of that inward Bb difeerning, difcerning, which difcovers all things to us in their true light, even things of infinite importance, may we pity that undifcerning rafhnefs of blind arrogance and pride, with which fome, who think themfelves the wifeft, in proportion to the degree in which they are the moft wretched of mankind, may treat us; and not only us, but that gofpel which is our glory and our joy! ver. 15. We bave the mind of Chrift delivered to us by his holy apoftles, who were intimately and miraculoufly inftructed in it. Let us humbly receive the oracles which they deliver; and whilft others are prefuming haughtily to cenfure them, may we think ourfelves happy if, with meek fubmiffion to their unerring authority, we may fit at the feet of fuch teachers, and regulate our lives by their inftructions !

REFLECTIONS .- ift, The apoftle had before declared with what unadorned fimplicity he had preached to his Corinthian brethren the doctrines of the gofpel; they needed no varnish, and he trusted to their native weight and evidence to recommend them. And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of fpeech, or of wifdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God; he used no rhetorical arts, nor affected curious speculations, but plainly declared the meffage which he had received of the Lord, the truth of which was attefted by prophefies and miracles, and fealed to their hearts by the demonstration of the spirit. For I determined not to know any thing among you, fave Jefus Chrift, and him crucified, avoiding all fnew of Jewith or Grecian literature, and above all things infifting upon that one diftinguished point, in which all the lines of our falvation meet as in one centre, from which all the privileges of the gospel flow as from their source, and under the influence of which we can alone be engaged and inclined to all the fervice to which our Saviour calls us, conftrained by his dying love. And I was with you in weaknefs, and in fear, and in much trembling, deeply fensible of his own infufficiency for the arduous work; in his outward circumstances and appearance, poor and defpicable; exposed to innumerable difficulties from the enmity of the world without, and the envy of fome within, who wanted to make a party against him, and, above all, deeply exercised in his own foul, left his meffage fhould be defpifed and rejected by them to their eternal ruin. And my speech, and my preaching, was not with enticing words of man's wildom; these he fludiously avoided, but he taught with much more effectual evidence, in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, not only by the miracles which he wrought in confirmation of his miffion, but by the energy with which the Holy Ghoft accompanied his preaching to their confciences: that your faith fould not fland in the wildom of men, as supported by mere luman evidence, or wrought by mere moral perfuation or argument, but in the power of God, arising from a divine conviction of the truth, refting on divine teftimony, and produced by the operation of God. Note; (1.) Nothing is more contrary to the spirit of the gospel than the affectation of being admired as orators, instead of being useful preachers. (2.) Chrift, in his perfon and offices, fhould be the great fubject of all our difcourfes; nothing fo effectually reaches the confcience as the doctrine of the crofs. (3.) Faithful ministers have peculiar trials, both from without and within, trembling fometimes for themfelves, confcious of their own infirmities; and trembling for the people, left that which should be to them a favour of life unto life, should, by their unbelief and prejudices, become a favour of death unto death. (4.) The faith of God's people is not the effect of mere human perfusion, but of divine operation.

2dly, The apostle had disclaimed all affectation of human wildom. Howbeit, fays he, we speak wildom among them that are perfect, (TERESE,) and grown up to greater maturity in knowledge, understanding, and grace; demonstrating the infinite wildom and fuitableness of the divine contrivance, in the grand fcheme of man's falvation, through faith in a crucified Jefus .- Yet not the wifdom of this world, fuch fystems as philosophers have invented or will approve; nor of the princes of this world, fuch as the proud Rabbis and great men of the earth comprehend, or conceive, who, with all their boafts of fcience, come to nought, and perifh in their pride, if they be not humbled to genuine repentance. But we speak the wildow of God in a myslery, even the hidden wifdom which God ordained before the world unto our glary. The divine contrivance for the falvation of loft finners had been unknown to the Gentile world, and but dimly revealed to the Jews in mysterious types and figures; but now the fulnefs of time was come, when the myttery of grace fhould be unfolded. And this defign of the divine wildom none of the princes of this world knew, neither the Roman governor, nor the high prieft and elders of the Jews; for had they known it, they would not have crucified him, who in effential Deity is one with the Father, and juftly claims the title of the Lord of Glory. But as it is written, eye hath not feen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. Low as their apprehensions were of the crucified Redeemer, yet has he brought in a falvation for loft fouls, unutterably glorious, by a contrivance far above human conception, and has prepared for those faithful fouls, who, fensible of his amazing grace, feel the power of his divine love in their hearts, fuch ineftimable bleffings as pass man's understanding. But these glorious things God hath revealed unto us by his Spirit, by a divine illumination in the preaching of the gospel; for the Spirit, who is the great agent in the conversion of the sinner's soul, illuminating his darkness, and quickening him from his flate of death, fearcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God; and who alone, being perfectly acquainted with his counfels, is fully able to reveal them to us. For what man knoweth the things of a man, fave the (pirit of man which is in him? None but our own spirit can discover what passes in our secret thoughts; even fo the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God : none but that eternal Spirit, who is effentially God, and one with the Father and the Son, (as a man's foul is one with him, and and confcious of all that passes in his breast) can know or reveal these unto us. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, that we should be guided by its wifdom, or follow its maxims, but the Spirit which is of God, whole office it is, in the acconomy of man's falvation, to enlighten the darkened mind, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God, even all those inestimable blessings and privileges, of which, by grace through faith, we are made partakers. Which things also we speak, declaring, from happy experience, the truths which the Spirit hath revealed to us, not in the words which man's wifdom teacheth, affecting to let them off with figures of oratory, but which the Holy Glift teacheth, to add to which would be but to gild the brilliant, which fhines infinitely brighter in its native luftre; comparing fpiritual things with fpiritual, the types with the antitype, the propheties with their fulfilment, the Old Testament with the New, which ferve to cast mutual light and glory on each other, and supply us with expressions, which most forcibly and clearly convey the Spirit's meaning to the heart. But the natural man, who continues under the darkness of his fallen mind, whatever attainments in human wildom and literature he may have made, receiveth nd the things of the Spirit of God : for they are foolighness unto him, becaule he cannot reconcile them to his corrupted reason and defiled mind; neither can be know them; he is as much under a moral incapacity of ever attaining to the true underftanding of fpiritual things, as the blind man is under a natural incapacity of difcovering the brighteft objects till the faculty of vision is given him, because they are spiritually diferred, and therefore cannot be comprehended without divine illumination. But he that is spiritual, and taught of God, judgeth all things, discovering the excellency, all-fufficiency, and fuitableness of God's method of falvation, and diffinguishing truth from error. Yet he himfelf is judged of no man; no natural man, however wife or learned, discerns the principles upon which he acts; or can comprehend the truths which the fpiritual man experimentally knows; or can confute him by any reafonings, when he fees that he has the word of God for his guide, and the Spirit of God has promifed to lead him into all truth. For who bath known the mind of the Lord? What philosopher ever foared fo high as to penetrate into the fecrets of God's cternal mind, that he may instruct him who is fpiritual, in these supernatural truths? Darkness and folly are evident in all the schemes and notions of the wifest fages; but we have the mind of Chrift, are divinely led into the knowledge of his defigns of grace, and therefore can never be moved away from the hope of the gospel, by any pretenders to fcience, or by the disputations of philosophers, with whatever founding names or titles they may be dignified. Learn hence, (1.) That the wifest fage and the most illiterate pealant are on a level, respecting the knowledge which maketh wife unto falvation. (2.) If all the wifdom that ever existed in the whole fallen race was centered in one natural man, he would in this state be as incapable of communicating one tittle of divine truth to us, as the glowworm of enlightening the univerfe. (3.) It is the diffinguifhing character of genuine Chriftians, that they are all taught of God, not only by external revelation, but by the Spirit's internal illumination. (4.) The love of God, now fhed abroad in our hearts, is the earneft of that inheritance which he hath prepared for the faithful. (5.) We are not to wonder that those, who are most advanced in human literature, are usually most averse to the truths of God. The reason is evident, ver. 14. and they will not humble themselves. (6.) A spiritual understanding of the Scriptures is a better qualification for the ministry than all Roman or Grecian literature.

CHAP. III.

FROM what is faid in this chapter, it appears that the falle teacher had represented St. Paul, either as ignorant or as unfaithful, because he had not fully instructed the Corinthians before his departure. The fame teacher had alfo boafted concerning himfe'f, that he had given them complete instruction. The confutation of these calumnies the apostle with great propriety introduced, after having in the former chapter difcourfed largely concerning the perfect knowledge of the gospel, given to the apostles by the Spirit. Wherefore, having in that chapter obferved, that animal men receive not the things of the Spirit of God, he began this chapter with telling the Corinthians, that, though he was an apolle fully instructed, he could not, during his abode with them, speak to them as to spiritual, but as to flefhly or weak perfons, even as to babes in Christianity, ver. 1. This was a fevere blow to the pride of the Greeks. Notwithstanding their boasted proficiency in the sciences, they were flefbly or weak men, and babes in religious matters. It feems their admiration of their own philosophy, their confidence in human reason as the great judge of truth, and the prevalence of their animal pallions, had rendered them in a confiderable measure incapable of understanding and relishing spiritual things. He had therefore given them milk and not meat, because they were not then able to bear meat; neither were they yet able to bear it, ver. 2 .- That the Corinthians were still flefbly, was evident from the strifes and divisions which were among them, on account of the particular teachers to whom they had attached themselves, ver. 3 .- For one faid, I am of Paul, and another, I of Apollos, ver. 4. From this we learn, that there were two principal factions in the church at Corinth, the one of which adhered to St. Paul, and the other to a perfon who is here called Apollos figuratively, to avoid giving offence, chap. 4. 6. but who, in all probability, was the falfe teacher : that this teacher boafted of St. Peter, by whom he was converted and baptized, as an apostle superior to St. Paul; and he and his followers, being the disciples of St. Peter, pretended that they were much better instructed than the disciples of St. Paul; and that they possessed fuperior authority and respect on that ac-Bbz count.

count.-But in thus afcribing to one Apostle more honour than to another, and in attaching themfelves more to one than to another, the Corinthians were much to blame. For none of their teachers were mafters. They were all but fervants employed by Chrift to convert men. And their fuccefs in the work depended, not on themfelves, but on the gifts which Chrift had beftowed on each of them, and the bleffing with which he accompanied their labours, ver. 5 .-- Farther, he told them, that in converting the world, the ministers of Christ had different parts affigned them. He had planted, and Apollos had watered, but God made what they had planted and watered to grow, ver. 6.—So that the whole depended on the co-operation and bleffing of God, ver. 7.-But though the ministers of Chrift had different parts allotted to them, he affured them they were all one, in respect of the end for which they laboured; and that each shall be rewarded, according to the fincerity and diligence with which he has laboured, ver. 8.—The Apostles, therefore, and the other ministers of the word, were joint labourers employed by God; and the people were God's field, which they were to cultivate, and God's building, which they were to rear, ver. 9. The building of which the Apostle speaks, is the Christian church, called ver. 16. and in other passages, the Temple of God; because the Christian church, consisting of all who believe in Christ, was formed for preferving the knowledge and worship of God in the world, and to be an habitation of the Spirit of God, by the graces and virtues, which were to be exercifed in it.

Having mentioned God's building, or temple, the Apostle told the Corinthians, that, as a skilful architect, he had laid the foundation of that temple in a proper manner at Corinth; and that the falfe teacher had only builded thereon. But he defired every one to take heed to the materials with which he builded, that they might be fuitable to the foundation, ver. 10.-Because other foundation of the temple of God, neither Apostle nor inferior teacher could lay, than that which he had laid, namely, that Jefus is the Chrift, ver. 11.-If, therefore, any teacher built on that foundation fincere converts, metaphorically reprefented by gold, filver, and precious flones ; or if he built hypocritical profeffors thereon, reprefented by wcod, hay, and flubble, he told them, the fire of perfecution, which was ready to fall on the temple or church of God, would discover the nature of every teacher's work, ver. 12, 13.-If any teacher's converts remained steadfast in the day of perfecution, through the pains he had taken under the grace of God in inftructing them, he should be rewarded, ver. 14.-But if any teacher's converts apostatized, they should perish, but the teacher himfelf would be faved with difficulty; provided, in making fuch converts, he had preached the gospel fincerely, ver. 15 .- And, that the Corinthians might understand what the building was of which he fpake, he told them, they them elves, as a church, were the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelt in them, as a church, ver. 16.

-If, therefore, any teacher wilfully fpoils the temple of God, by building wicked men into it, that is, if by knowingly mifreprefenting the doctrines and precepts of the Gospel, and by flattering wicked men in their fins, he allures them to enter into the Chrislian church, as the false teacher at Corinth had done, him will God deftroy: for the temple of God ought to be composed of holy perfons, ver. 17.-And although the teacher, who thus builds wicked men into the church, may think himfelf wife in fo doing, he but deceives himfelf; and to become truly wife, it behoves him to follow the courfe which the world efteems foolifh: he must preach the gospel fincerely, whatever inconveniences it may occasion to himself or to others, ver. 18.—For the wildom of the world is folly in the fight of God: according to what is written, He catcheth the wife, &c., ver. 19, 20.-The work of the falfe teacher, in building the temple of God at Corinth, being of the fort here described and condemned, this passage was a severe rebuke, both to him and to his adherents. Wherefore, to lead them to apply it to themfelves, the Apostle exhorted them, not to boast in any teacher, as if he belonged to them in particular. All the teachers, and all the bleffings of the Gofpel, belong to believers in general; and believers belong all to Chrift as his disciples; which is a real ground of boafting, becaufe Christ belongs to God, ver. 21, 22, 23. Having therefore Chrift for their common Mafter, and being all equally entitled to the benefit of the labours of the ministers of Christ, and to the privileges of the Gospel, it was wrong to contend one with another, either about their teachers, or their privileges.

Ver. 1. And I, brethren, &c.] The next matter of boafting, which the faction made use of to give the pre-eminence and preference to their leader above St. Paul, feems to have been this, That their new teacher had led them farther, and given them a deeper infight into the mysteries of the Gospel than St. Paul had done. To take away their glorying on this account, St. Paul tells them, that they were carnal, and not capable of those more advanced truths, or any thing beyond the first principles of Christianity which he had taught them; and though another had come and watered what he had planted, yet neither planter nor waterer could affume to himfelf any glory thence, becaufe it was God alone that gave the increase. But whatever new doctrines they might pretend to receive from their magnified new Apostle, yet no man could lay any other foundation in a Christian church, but what he (St. Paul) had laid; viz. that Jefus is the Chrift; and therefore there was no reason to glory in their teachers, because upon this foundation they pollibly might build falle or unfound doctrines, for which they fhould receive no thanks from God, though, continuing in the faith, they might be faved. Some of the hay and flubble which this leader brought into the church at Corinth, he feems particularly to point at, ch. iii. 16, 17. viz. their defiling the church by retaining, and as it may be fuppoled patronizing, the fornicator, who fhould have been

been turned out; ch. v. 7-13. He further adds, that these extolled heads of their parties were at best but men, and none of the church ought to glory in men; for even Paul, and Apollos, and Peter, and all the other preachers of the Gospel, were for the use, and benefit, and glory of the church, as the church was for the glory of Chrift. Moreover, he shews them, that they ought not to be puffed up on account of these their new teachers, to the undervaluing of him, though it should be true, that they had learned more from them, than from himfelf,---for these reasons: 1. Because all the preachers of the Gospel are but stewards of the mysteries of God; and therefore they ought not to be some of them magnified and extolled, and others deprefied and blamed by their hearers here, till Chrift their Lord come; and then he, knowing how they have behaved themfelves in their ministry, will give them their reward. Befides, these flewards have nothing but what they have received, and therefore no glory belongs to them for it. 2. Becaule if these leaders were (as was pretended) Apostles, honour and outward affluence here would not have been their portion, the Apostles being appointed to want, contempt, and perfecution. 3. They ought not to be honoured, followed, and gloried in, as Apostles, because they had not the power of miracles, which he intended fhortly to come and shew they had not, ch. iii. 1.-iv. 20. See Locke.

As units [piritual] According to fome great commentators, spiritual is here opposed to carnal, as in ch. ii. 14. it is to natural or animal; fo that, according to them, we have here three forts of men: 1. Carnal; that is to fay, fuch as are iwayed by ficially passions and interests: 2. Animal; i.e. fuch as leek wildom, or a way to happine is, only by the ftrength. and guidance of their own natural parts, without any fupernatural light coming from the Spirit of God ;- by reason, without revelation ;- by philosophy, without Scripture : 3. Spiritual; i.e. fuch as feek their direction to happinefs, not in the dictates of natural reason and philosophy, but in the revelations of the Spirit of God in the Holy Scriptures. By babes in Chrift, are meant fuch as had not their understandings yet fully opened to the true grounds of the Christian religion, but retained a great many childish thoughts about it, as appeared by their divisions,-one being for the doctrine of his mafter Paul; another for that of his mafter Apollos; which, if they had been spiritual, that is, had looked upon the doctrine of the Gospel to have come folely from the Spirit of God, and to be had only from revelation, they could not have done: for then all human mixtures of any thing derived either from Paul or Apollos, or any other man, would have been wholly excluded. But they, in these divisions, professed to hold their religion, one from one man, and another from another; and were thereupon divided into parties. This, he tells them, was to be carnal, and to rualk as men,-to be kd by principles purely human; i.e. to found their relision upon men's natural parts and discoveries; whereas the Gospel was wholly built upon divine revelation, and the application of it by the Spirit of God, and nothing elfe; and thence alone those who were spiritual took it. See Locke.

Ver. 2. I have fed you with milk] " You being fuch " babes, fuch mere beginners in the divine life, I could " not go fo far as I defired in the great doctrines of the " Christian religion; but was obliged to content myfelf " with instructing you in the first principles, the more " obvious and easy doctrines of it. I could not apply " myfelf to you, as to fpiritual men, who could compare " fpiritual things with fpiritual,—one part of Scripture with " another." See Heb. v. 12. 14. Locke and Blackwall's Sacred Claffics, vol. i. p. 72.

Ver. 3. And walk as men ?] Speaking according to man, fignifies, speaking according to the principles of natural reason, in contradistinction to revelation. See ch. ix. 8. Gal. i. 11. and so walking according to man must here be understood. See on ver. 1.

Ver. 4. I am of Appllos] From this verse, compared with ch. iv. 6. it may be no improbable conjecture, fays Mr. Locke, that the division int his church was owing to two opposite parties, whereof the one adhered to St. Paul, the other flood up for their head, a falfe Apostle, who opposed St. Paul. For the Apollos whom St. Paul mentions here was one, as he tells us, ver. 6. who came in, and watered what he had planted; that is, when St. Paul had planted a church at Corinth, this Apostle got into it, and pretended to instruct them further, and boasted of his performances. among them, of which St. Paul takes notice again, 2 Cor. x. 15, 16. Now the Apollos whom he here speaks of, he himfelf tells us, ch. iv. 6. was another man, under that borrowed name. It is true, St. Paul in his Epiftles to the Corinthians, generally fpeaks of thefe his oppofers in the plural number; but it is to be remembered, that he fpeaks thus of himself also; which, as it was the less invidious way, with regard to himfelf, fo it was the fofter way towards his oppofer; though he feems to intimate plainly, that it was one leader, who was fet up against him. Others, differing in fentiment from Mr. Locke, think it much more probable from ch. iv. 6. that St. Paul chose to make use of the name of Apollos, that he might give no offence, and to fhew that he fhould lament and condemn any division among them, though it were in favour of himfelf, or the dearest friend he had in the world ;-and they cannot think that St. Paul would have defcribed this fuppofed falfe Apostle as watering his plantation which he rather wasfed ; or have spoken of himself, and that messenger of Satan as onc. Seever. 8.

Ver. 5. Who then is Paul, &c.] Some would read this and the following verse thus : Who is Paul, and who is Apollos, but miniflers by whom ye believed ?- And as the Lord gave to every man, I planted, Apollos watered, &c. Sec Markland on Lyfias, p. 560. Ver. 8. Are one] This is another cogent argument against division,-that though their labours were different, and their rewards proportionable, yet they had in the general one office, and were employed as workers-together by God, to plant the feeds of grace and holinefs in the fouls of men, and to bring them to perfection. St. Paul here introduces an excellent discourse of the happy confequences of faithfulnefs in the ministerial work, and the aweful account of it to be given up to God :--- a subject familiar to his own mind; and fo proper for their teachers, that if it render the cpiftle fomething lefs regular, it balances the account, by rendering it fo much more uleful. See Craddock's Apostol. Hist. p. 156.

Ver. 9. For we are labourers together with God] For we are the feilow labourers of God. Doddridge.

Ver. 12-15. Now if any man build, &c.] " Though no " man who pretends to be a preacher of the Gofpel can " build upon any other foundation than that of Jefus " Chrift, yet you ought not to cry up your new inftructor, " who has come and built upon the foundation that I " laid, for the doctrines that he builds thereon, as if there " were no other minister of the Gospel but he; for it is " pollible that a man may build upon that true foundation " wood, bay, and flubble, things which will not bear the " teft, when the trial by fire at the laft day fhall come; " (ch. iv. 5.) at that day every man's work shall be tried " and difcovered, of what fort it is. If what he taught " be found and good, and will ftand the trial, -as filver, " and gold, and precious flones abide in the fire; he fhall " be rewarded for his labour in the golpel: but if he has " introduced falle or unfound doctrines into Christianity, " he shall be like a man, whose building being of wood, " bay, and flubble, is confumed by the fire; all his « pains in building are loft, and his works deftroyed and " gone, though he himself should escape and be faved." Instead of as by fire, the Greek might be rendered more properly as through the fire. To be a brand plucked out of the burning, is well known as a proverbial expression, to fignify a narrow escape from extreme danger. See Zech. iii. 2. Amos, iv. 11. and effectially Ifai. xxxiii. 11, 12, to which fome have thought the Apostle here alludes. The phrase Aid wwg is put for paffing through the fire, as di idato;, 1 Pet. iii. 20. fignifics to be faved from the water by passing through it, as the ark did. See Jude, 23.-The most approved heathen writers use the phrase in this sense. Many divines have well fhewn how far this text is from giving any support to a popifb purgatory. See Locke, Whitby, Stillingfleet, and Elfner.

Ver. 16. Know ye not that ye are the temple, &c.] " I told " you that ye are God's building, ver. 9. I now obferve " more than that ;-Ye are the temple of God, in which his " Spirit dwells." Many of the first ancient writers reprefent a holy mind as the temple of God, and speak in the highest and strongest terms of the obligations men are under to keep his temples inviolate and unpolluted. Indeed, we cannot conceive a more forcible argument for internal purity, than this, which leads us to confider our bodies as the temple of God, inhabited by his ever-bleffed and molt holy Spirit. The word rendered defile, in the next verfe, more properly fignifies destroy, and fhould be fo read, to keep up the contrast. See Elfner, Wetstein, Calmet, and Oftervald's useful treatife " on Uncleannefs."

Ver. 17. If any man ] It is not unreafonable to think, that, by any man, St. Paul defigns one particular man;namely, the falle Apostle, who, it is probable, by the ftrength of his party, fupporting and retaining the fornicator mentioned, ch. v. in the church, had defiled it. We may look upon most of the diforders in this church as owing to the falle Apostle; which is the reason why St. Paul fets himfelf fo much against him in both these Epistles, and makes it a principal bufine is of them to draw the Corinthians off from this leader; judging, as is probable, that the church could not be reformed, fo long as that perfon was in credit and had a party among them. See Locke.

Ver. 18. Let no man deceive himfelf.] It was not necessary for St. Paul, writing to the Corinthians, who knew the matter of fact, to particularize what it was wherein the craftiness of the perfon here mentioned had appeared : therefore it was left us to guefs; and poffibly we shall not be much out, if we take it to be the keeping the fornicator from censure, so much insisted on by St. Paul, ch. v. That by soot, or wife, - [feemeth to be wife in this world] the Apolile means a cunning man in bufinefs, is plain from his quotation in the next verse, where the wife spoken of are the crafty. " If any man feemeth to himfelf or others wife "in worldly wildom, fo as to pride himfelf in his parts and "dexterity in compaffing his purpole, let him renounce "all this wildom, that he may become truly wife in em-"bracing and owning no other knowledge than the fim-"plicity of the Gospel." See Locke. Some would render the latter part of this verse, If any one be wife among you, It him be a fool in this world, that he may become wife. See Bengelius, and 1 Tim. vi. 17.

Vor. 21-23. All things are yours, &cc.] How magnifitunly are the happy privileges of Chriftians, through Chrift, fit fouth in this noble exultation ! First, here is a full and whement enumeration of particulars; and then a noble gradation, which rifes up to Heaven, and terminates in God himfelf ! See Blackwall's Sacred Classics, and Bengelius.

Inforences.—Who, that wiftes for the welfare of the chuch of Chrift, mult not lament those fad remains of connelity, (ver. 1.) which are often to be found among them who have the greatest advantages for becoming fpiritual, while the fame contentious principles, fermented, no doubt, by the fame malignant enemy of the whole body, breather in so many of its members, and diffuse a kind of poison which at once swells and torments it ? What envyings, and fifte, and factions among those, who ought to join as habren, and to know but one interest ! ver. 3. What a defire, in many instances, to increase the burdens of each other, instead of bearing them with friendly sympathy !

May Christians be cured of this difhonourable and fatal attachment to diftinguished parties, and human names I May ministers feel more of that generous and noble spirit, which this great Apostle expresses, ver. 4.—His reasoning has the same force still. Ministers are still intended to be only the inforuments of producing and establishing faith in their hearers, and fill depend as intirely as ever upon the bleffing of God, to give the increase to their labours, ver. 5-7. 'To that may they daily look; fensible that they are nothing without it; and that with it their part is fo fmall, that they hardly deferve to be mentioned. May their hands and hearts be more united; and, retaining a due fense of the honour which God does them, in employing them in his vineyard, and in his building, (ver. 8, 9.) May they faithfully labour, not as for themselves, but for the great Proprietor; till the day come, when he will remember them in full proportion to their fidelity and diligence.

With what delight may the Christian furvey this grand inventory, vcr. 21-23. and, confcious that he is Christ's, call all things his own ! With what pleafure furvey the various gifts and graces of minifters, and confider them as given by God for his edification ! With what complacency look round on things prefent, and forward on things to come, in this connection, and call the world his own ; and count not only life, but death itfelf among his treafures ! Both, in their different afpects, are made fubfervient to the happy purpose of glorifying God; and furely when by death we may do it more effectually, death should be more welcome than life. And welcome must it indeed be to every believer, as the appointed means of transmitting him to the fight and enjoyment of God, and the possession of better bleffings than Paul or Apollos could ever defcribe, or any thing prefent, or any thing to come, in this world, could ever afford.

How fhould these fublime views elevate the Christian above those occasions of contention, which, for want of ascending to such noble contemplations, are often the fource of innumerable evils! Nor let us fail to add that other confideration, ver. 16, 17. If we are the temples of the Holy Ghost; if Christians indeed, we are inhabited by God,—even by his Spirit. Let this engage us to take the strictless care, neither to defile ourselves, nor to injure our brethren; less, in either view, it should be refented and punished by the Holy Gon, as a facrilegious profanation.

What caufe have we to over-value the wifdom of this world, when we find it fo little regarded by the all-wife GoD? (ver. 19.) Let us not be greatly concerned, if fools account our wifdom folly, and our life madnefs. So cenfured they the prophets and Apoftles before us; nor did our Mafter himfelf escape the like calumny and outrage. Happy, Happy, sufficiently happy shall we be, if we approve our fidelity to Him,-if we build a wife fuperstructure on Chrift, (ver. 11.) as the great, the only foundation.

His minifters effectially fhould be folicitous, that they lofe not the labour of their lives, by choosing unhappily to employ them in that which will turn to no account in the great day of his appearing. Let fuch carefully examine their materials : ver. 10. Surely if they have fenses spiritually exercifed, it cannot be hard to diffinguish between the substantial and undoubted doctrines of Christianity, which are as gold, filver, and precious fiones,-and those fictitious, or at best dubious and intricate points, which in comparison with the former, are but wood, bay, and stubble : ver. 12-15. And if, in urging thefe, they passionately inveigh against their brethren, and endeavour to bring them into contempt or fuspicion, what do they, but cement these combustible materials with fulphur?

O let the frequent views of that last fearching fire, that grand period of all, be much in our thoughts; that day, (ver. 13.) when not only the works of ministers, but of every private person, must, as it were, pass through the flames. May we then be faved, not with difficulty, but with praife and honour! May our works, of what kind foever they are, abide, fo as to be found worthy of applause, and through divine grace receive a diffinguished reward.

REFLECTIONS.-Ift, The Apoftle proceeds,

1. To rebuke the carnality, and contentions which reigned among the members of the Corinthian church. I, brethren, (for as fuch I regard you, notwithflanding the many imperfections which I perceive among you) could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Chrift; for, greatly as many of you are enriched in gifts, (fee chap. i. 5.) yet in grace your attainments are very low, and your affections too much grovelling ftill on earth: and therefore as babes I have fed you with milk, with the fimpleft and plainest truths of the Gospel, and not with meat, the more fublime points of revelation and the deep things of God; for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able ; you would not have been edified by them, but have abused them, and made them minister to your pride

2 Moreover, it is required in flewards that <sup>c</sup> a man be found faithful.

3 But with me dit is a very fmall thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's * judgment: 'yea, I judgment mine own felf.

4 For 'I know nothing by myfelf; <sup>8</sup> yet am I not hereby justified : but he that judgeth me is the Lord.

5 <sup>b</sup> Therefore judge nothing before the

and difputatious humour. For ye are yet carnal, and shew too much of an unrenewed spirit; for whereas, or fince there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? Whilft under the power of fuch evil tempers, wherein do you differ from the world that lieth in wickedness? For while one faith, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal? Does not fuch a spirit of party prove the deep, unmortified remainders of carnality in your hearts? Affuredly. Note ; (1.) Ministers must be faithful to the souls of the people, and never flatter. (2.) There may be great attainments in knowledge, and yet little grace in the heart; and this wildom puffeth up. (3.) Among real Christians, there are great differences to be observed; some are weak as babes; others, strong as men grown to maturity. Our wildom, as ministers, is therefore to give to every man his portion in due feafon. (4.) Nothing is more contrary to the spirit of Christianity than angry difputes, and fchifmatical divisions.

2. The Apostle ascribes to the rich grace of God all the fuccefs which the Gofpel had met with among them. It became effectual, not through human instruments, but by divine energy. Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but miniflers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? The men were mere instruments; it was the Lord alone who made their ministry effectual. I have planted, by first preaching the Gospel to you; Apollos watered, fucceeding me in labouring among you: but God gave the increase, without whose operation and mighty influence, however great the natural abilities of either may have been, I must have planted and Apollos watered in vain. So then, neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth, but God that givet the increase, to whom the whole glory must be ascribed, exclusive of all the instruments that he may have been pleafed to employ. And therefore they are not to be fet up either as the authors of the Gospel, or the causes of its efficacy. Note; Ministers should ever be careful to afcribe to God the glory of all the fuccefs they meet with; we are nothing; he is all in all.

2dly, All faithful ministers are engaged in the fame bleffed cause, and have but one end in view, to glority Chrift and fave immortal fouls; and they shall not lose their reward. Now he that planteth, by first preaching the Gofpel time, until the Lord come, who both will bring make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and to light the hidden things of darkness, and will then shall every man have praise of God.

Golpel word, and he that watereth the feed ..... y coming after him, are one in affection and intention : and therefore those who are converted under their r saching should be united allo, nor think of fetting up one against another : and every man shall receive his own reward, according to his nen labour; when the great Master comes, he will give to every man according as his work is; to fecure his approbation must therefore be our great defign, and not the empty honour which cometh from man only, which fome of you affect. For we are labourers together with God, united in the fame fervice, and honoured abundantly by the very work committed to us: while ye are God's hu/bandry, your hearts the field wherein he fows the feed of spiritual life; se are God's building, the fpiritual temple which he erects, and where he is well pleafed to take up his abode; for ye are the habitation of God through the Spirit. Of this building we may obferve,

1. The foundation is Jefus Chrift. According to the grace of Gil which is given unta me, who hath appointed me to the office, and qualified me for the fervice, as a wife mafterhilder I have laid the foundation of your faith and bope in a cracified Jefus; and another buildeth thereon, fucceeding minifiers have carried on the bleffied work begun in your heatts: but, it is a needful and important caution, let every mantalehed have he buildeth thercupon. For other foundation common lay than that is laid, which is Jefus Chrift, the tock of ages, the only hope of the miferable, and out of whom there is no falvation.

2. The superstructure must correspond with the foundation. Now if any man build upon this fundation, gold, fdoor, precisus flenes, inculcating the holy doctrines of the Goipel, and exhorting men to a heavenly convertation which may adom them, fuch labourer's work will bear the fevereft fcrutiny, and fhine glorioufly; but if they build wood, hay, fubble, urging their own conceits and fancies, and zealous about things infignificant and uneffential, while the weightier matters are neglected, every man's work shall be made manifol; for the day of judgment fball flortly declare it, broufe it fball be revealed by fire; and, as the refiner tries the metal in the furnace, the fire fball try every man's work, If what fort it is ; the exact forutiny of that day shall prove whether men's opinions and practices corresponded with the Scripture flandard or not; and the confequence of the trial will be awful. (1.) If any man's work abide which he bath built thereupon, and it appears before the great Judge that he has followed his plan, and corresponded with his deagns, in building up men's fouls in the doctrines of grace and holinels, he fhall receive a reward, eminent and diffinguilhed, according to his labours and fidelity. (2.) If any man's work fhall be burnt, and his opinions and practices be tound unferiptural and erroneous, however highly he may have valued himfelf upon his abilities, he fhall fuffer lofs, and fee his fine-fpun conceits all deftroyed : but, if he has timfelf been founded upon Christ, and, though weak or mitaken, yet was not allowedly wicked or licentious, he timidif full be faved from the wrath to come, yet fo as by fre, with fuch difficulty as a man efcapes naked from his V61. 11.

house when in flames. Note; (1.) Before the great trying day comes, we should be often examining ourselves by that word of God whereby we must at last be justified or condemned. (2.) We must not be liberal of rash centures concerning the eternal states of men; but, while we condemn their opinions, must leave their hearts to the great Judge.

3dly, The Apostle,

i. Preffes the argument of holinefs upon them from the confideration fuggefted, ver. 9. Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, defigued in a more peculiar manuer for his abode than that houle which Solomon built; and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you, in his gracious prefence and mighty operations? If any man defile the temple of God, and feek, by broaching his corrupt opinions, to fubvert the foundation, or by evil practices to feduce and draw men away from the truth of the Gospel, him fball God defirey with more fearful judgment than was threatened against the defilers of the material temple : for the temple of God is holy, fet apart for himfelf; which temple ye are, and therefore are bound to be holy in all manner of conversation.

2. He warns them against the danger of vain conceit in their gifts and attainments. Let no man deceive himfelf with high imaginations of his own fuperior excellence, and in confequence propagate as truth his own erroncous opinions. If any man among you feemeth to be wife in this world, and values himfelf upon his attainments in philosophy and human literature, let him become a fool, that he may be wife, renouncing it all fo far as it would beget perverfe reafonings against the humbling truths of revelation, and content fimply to embrace the doctrine of the crofs, which the wife world counts foolifhneis; for thus only can any man become wife unto falvation : for the wifdom of this world is foolifbnefs with God, all their fystems of theology, and their learned difquifitions on religion, are mere folly compared with his glorious fcheme of falvation through a dying Redeemer : for it is written, He taketh the wife in their own craftinefs, their fine-fpun reafonings are the nets wherein they entangle and ruin themfelves : and again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wife, that they are but vain ; all their projects and defigus, however deeply concealed, are open to his eye; and compared with his thoughts, weaknels, folly, and vanity, and stamped upon them. Note ; (1.) No man can become truly wife, till, fensible of his spiritual ignorance, like a little child he comes to God's word to learn the first elements of truth. (2.) How amazingly foolifh will all the wildom of this world fhortly appear, when those who trufted on the powers of their fallen reason to lead them to happines, will find it to have been like the deceitful meteor, a light only to delude them into eternal darknefs.

3. He warns them against exalting men, even the best and wifest, or following any minister implicitly, when their faith ought to stand, not in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. Therefore let no man glory in men, as being this or that man's disciples, despising others and undervaluing their ministry: for all things are yours, appointed Gc for

CHAP. IV.

LEST, from what was faid in the preceding chapters, concerning the infpiration of the Apoftles by the Spirit, the Corinthians might have imagined that St. Paul claimed to himfelf and to his brethren, an authority not derived from Chrift, he began this chapter with telling them that they were to confider the Apolles only as fervants of Chrift, and as stewards of the mysteries of God, ver. 1.-And, that the thing required of every fuch steward is, that he be faithful in the dispensing of these mysteries according as his disciples are able to receive them, ver. 2.-Therefore, although the falfe teacher accufed St. Paul of unfaithfulnefs, becaufe he had taught the Corinthians the first principles only, and not the deepeft and most spiritual doctrines of the Gofpel, he told them, it was a very fmall matter in his eyes, to be condemned as unfaithful by them, or by any man's judgment, feeing he did not condemn himfelf, ver. 3.-For he was confcious to himfelf of no unfaithfulnefs; yet by this he was not juftified; he meant in the eyes of the faction, who could not fee his heart. At the fame time he told them, that the only perfon who had a right to condemn him, at least in respect to his heart, if he proved unfaithful, was the Lord his Master, ver. 4.-This being the cafe, he defired the faction not to condemn him, till the Lord fhould come to judgment, who will bring to light every thing most fecret, and lay open the defigns of the heart, of which they were no judges, ver. 5.

Next, to prevent the Corinthians from miftaking what he had faid, concerning their boafting in himfelf and Apollos, as the heads of the factions, (chap. i. 12. iii. 4.) he declared, that he had applied thefe things to himfelf and Apollos figuratively only, for their fakes, that by difelaiming all pretensions to be the heads of parties, the Cerinthians might learn in them, not to effcem any teacher above what he had written, chap. iii. 5. namely, that Paul and Apollos were only fervants of Chrift, by whole ministry the Corinthians had believed; and that none of them, on account of any teacher, should be puffed up with envy and anger against another, ver. 6.

In what follows, the Apoftle, turning his difcourfe to the false teacher, fays, without naming him, Who maketh thee to differ in gifts from others? Or what fpiritual gift halt thou, which thou didft not receive from fome Apollic? And if thou haft received all thy gifts from the Apoftles, why doft thou fet thyfelf above them, as if thou hadft net received thy gifts from them, but wert independent of, and fuperior to them? ver. 7. - Then to flew the Corinthians the difference between the falfe teacher and the true Apostles of Christ, he contrasted the cafe and opulence in which that impostor and the other leaders of the faction were living at Corinth, and their imperious conduct towards the church, with the afflicted and perfecuted flate of the Apoftles, ver. 8 - 13.—And affured them, that he wrote not these things to shame them, for having increased his fufferings by their calumnious speeches, and disrespectful behaviour. But his defign was, affectionately to inftruct them, that they might not be feduced by teachers, whole character and relation to them were fo different from his, ver. 14.-For he told them, though they had ten thousand instructors in the Christian doctrine, yet they had not many fathers. He was their spiritual father, ver. 15 .--And therefore he befought them to imitate him, ver. 16-17. To conclude, becaufe the falfe teacher had boafted, that Paul, being afraid to encounter fuch learned and eloquent oppofers, durft not return to Corinth, he affured the Corinthians that he would come foon, and make trial, not of the fpeech of that infolent perfon, but of his fupernatural power, ver. 18, 19. - For, faid he, the Gofpel is not eftabliffied by the boafting speeches of its preachers, but by the miraculous powers which they exercise for its confirmation, and by the Spirit of God, ver. 20.-Then, to ftrike terror into the faction, he asked them, whether they chose that he fhould come and exercife his fupernatural power in punishing them; or come in the spirit of peace on account of their amendment? ver. 21.

Ver. 1. Let a man fo account of us, &c.] The Apolle intimates, that he was to far from arrogating the title affumed by the founders of the different fects of philosophy, and from withing to have scholars denominated from him, that he would have no man think higher of him than that he was a fervant of Christ; and that the mysteries he revealed were no more his, than the money which a steward is employed to distribute in alms could be called his property. He was no master, no proprietor; but a fervant, and a steward. See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 3. I judge not mine own felf] That is, "not fo as if "my cafe were to be finally determined by my own ap-"prehensions concerning it."

Ver. 4. For I know nothing by myself ] " For, though I blefs " God

"God that I am not confeious to myfelf of any defigned ne-"gleft of my office, or unfaithfulnefs in my trutt, yet am "Inst kireby jufified." This feems a gentle, but a very affeling infinuation, that his opponents, confident as they might feem in their own integrity and fafety, would do will to take greater heed that they were not imposed upon by the descrifulnefs of their own hearts. See Locke ard Beddridge.

Ver. 5. Will bring to light, &c.] This is a lively and juft influence, that under fpecious forms his enemies concealed very dark defigns, which would not bear the difcoveries of that awful day. The next paffage alfo fuggefts a very folid argument againft magnifying one minister above are the famely, that the fecret principles of men's actions are unknown; and it is enlarged upon to very good predical perpofes: while the Apofile, at the fame time, takes an opportunity of making a very folemn profedition of his emfaithfulnefs, and thewing the boldnefs which he had towards God, and his modefty and candeur to men; all which were extremely fuitable to the general purpoles that behain view. See Doddridge and Calmet.

Fir. 6. I have in a figure transferred, &c.] Mr. Locke and fome others [fee on ch. iii, 4.] have hence inferred, that not Paul and Apollos, but fome other perfons were fet up among the Corinthians for heads of parties, for whofe mans the Apolle fublituted his own, and that of his moft itimate friend. But Withus obferves, that it is probable their numes were used, among fome others omitted, and the frace was only this, that the names of St. Paul and Apolios were used to fignify themfelves, or any others fo cooled; and when the Apolile would f.y, how little mimilits were in themfelves, he choie, out of humility and pratence, rather to take fuch freedom with biofelf, and his mail particular friend, than with any others. See Winder's Meletem, p. 104, and Elfner.

Ver. 8. Nov-ye have reigned, &c.] This is a proverbial opedies, uled to fignify the most splendid and affluent circumstances; and fome think, that when the Apostle adds I would to God ye did reign, he means, "I wish you had the "authority of princes, that you might shelter and accom-"modate us, amidst all our distresses and afslictions." But we can hardly conceive that he did wish each of them a prince, or that the civil power were in their hands. It seems much more probable, that as spiritual objects were familiar to his mind, he changes the idea, and alludes to the terms in the Jewish economy; in reference to which Christians are called priess and kings, and a royal priessed. See 1 Pet. ii. 9. Rev. i. 6. and Doddridge.

Ver. 9. That God hath fet forth us the Apofiles laft, &c.] The Apostle seems here to refer to the Roman cultom of bringing forth on the theatre, in the latter part of the day, either to fight with each other, or with wild beafts, thofe perfons who were appointed unto certain death, and who had not that chance of efcaping, which those brought forth in the morning had. Such kind of fpectacles were fo common in all the provinces, that it is no wonder we fhould find an allufion to them here. The word znedeigev, fet forth, or exhibited, and Sezizov, a speciacle on the theatre, have in this connection a beautiful propriety. The whole reprefentation is indeed wonderfully pathetic and fublime : while they confidered evil angels and men, as beholding them with all the malignant, - and good angels and men, with all the benevolent pallions, it might have a great tendency to infpire their minds with the most heroic fentiments. See Seneca's Epistles, ch. vii. Reeves's Apology, vol. i. p. 237. Locke and Elfner.

Surely we cannot imagine any more glorious triumph of the truth, than what was gained in thefe circumflances; when St. Paul, with an impediment in his fpeech, and a perfon rather contemptible than graceful, appeared in a mean drefs, before perfons of the higheft rank, and yet commanded fuch attention, and made fuch impreflions. Ver. 13. As the filth of the world The word wegena 9 deguala, rendered filth, has a force and meaning, which no one word in our language can express. It was applied to those poor wretches, who were offered up as explatory facrifices, in times of any plague or public calamity, to the infernal deities. They were brought to the place of execution with cheefe, dried figs, and a cake in their hands; and after being beaten with rods, they were burned, and their afhes were caft into the fea with the following fentence : " Be " thou an expiation; be thou a refuse or off-scouring." It fhould be observed, that the word rendered explation in that fentence, is the fame which is here rendered fith by our translators. See on Lev. xvi. 24. Henry More's Theolog. Works, p. 63. Ridley's Christian Passover, p. 22. Servius in Æneid. iii. lin. 75. Hammond, Whitby, and Bos.

Ver. 14. I write not thefe things to fhame you] Sce 2 Cor. xi. 20. St. Paul here (from ver. 8. to 17.), by giving an account of his own conduct, gently rebukes them for following men of a different character, and exhorts them to be followers of himfelf.

Ver. 16. Be ye followers of me.] This he preffes again, ch. xi. 1. and it is not likely that he would have proposed himfelf over and again to them to be followed by them, had the queftion and contest among them been only whose name they flould have borne, his, or their new teacher's. His propoling himfelf therefore thus to be followed, muft be understood in direct opposition to the false Apostle who mifled them, and who was not to be fuffered to have any credit or followers among them. See Locke.

Ver. 17. For this caufe have I fent-Timotheus] This he does to fhew that what he taught and prefied them to, was not in a pique against his opposer; but to convince them that all he did at Corinth was the very fame, and no other than what he did every where, as a faithful steward and minister of the Gospel. See Locke and Withus.

Ver. 21. Shall I come unto you with a rod?] " Using my " apostolic power for your chastifement ?" That the Apostles had often a miraculous power of inflicting death and other temporal judgments, in cafe of aggravated offence, appears from other passages of Scripture, and is more than once referred to in these Epistles to the Corinthians. See ch. v. 5. 2 Cor. i. 23. x. 6, 8. xiii. 2, 3, 10. We cannot but admire the wifdom of Providence in permitting fuch opposition to rife against St. Paul, particularly at Corinth. It gave him an opportunity of making the ftrongeft appeals to what they are fuppoied to know of his miraculous power; and had not these appeals been founded on the most certain and evident truth, instead of restoring him to their regard, as we find in fact they did, they must have been fufficient of themfelves utterly to have ruined all his reputation and interest among them, had it before been ever fo great. See Doddridge, Hammond, Locke, and the note on ver. 1. of the next chapter.

Inferences .- Nothing can be more conducive to the advantage of Chriftianity, - and by confequence, of the world, whole happinels is to much concerned in its fupport and fuccefs, than that its preachers flould confider, and their hearers remember, the nature of their office. They are not lords over God's household and heritage, but ministers of Chrift, whole business it is to promote their Master's honour; (ver. 1, 2.) stewards of his mysteries, who are to endeavour both to keep and to difpenfe them with all good fidelity. From their Mafter therefore may they take all their instructions, and to him let them refer all their administrations. Various judgments will be passed upon them; and they who will oppose the attempts of some of their brethren to introduce corruption and confusion into his family, will have many an unkind reflection thrown upon them, and experience the feverity of censure, for a conduct which merits the justest approbation. Let them, however, learn by this excellent Apostle, (ver. 3.) to be above the judgment of men, and to keep the judgment of the Lord in view; that they may not only be fupported under that petulance of their fellow fervants, but may learn to to guard against, what is much more dangerous,—the treachery of their own hearts, and the flattery of felf-love; left they fondly miltake the voice of prejudice, for that of confeience; or, in other words, the voice of an erroneous confeience, for that of a confeience well informed, ver. 4.

May we often recollect the narrow limits of our own knowledge, that fo we may learn modefty in our cenfures of each other, ver. 5. &c. He only can judge who knoweth the heart ;—and there is a day approaching which will manifyil all its feerets. While others therefore, with a pitiable mixture of arrogance and ignorance, judge one anoiher, and judge us; let us rather be concerned to feek that praife of God, which will be held and felt by the foul with the higheft rapture, and will filence every echo of human tenfure, or human applaufe.

If it has pleafed God in any refpect to diffinguifb us from others, by the gifts and graces which he has beftowed upon us, let us humbly trace thefe diftinctions to their true. hource; and initead of indulging the leaft degree of pride on their account, let us rather be the more humble: for hurdy the more we receive from God, the more we are indebted and obliged; and the more we are obliged to the divine goodnefs, the greater ought our fhame and confution to be, that we have not anfwered thofe obligations by more faithful care, and more conftant gratitude.

How adorable is the efficacy of divine grace, which bore the zealous and faithful fervants of Chrift through all their labours and fatigues, when they were made a fpeflacle with world, to angels and ment ver. 9. How glorious a fpeflacie! worthy furctly, as any thing fince that wondertal liene on Calvary, of the eye of God himfelf.

How little are we to judge of the divine favour by external circumstances, when those best of men were of all attern the mill millionable, farther than as their heavenly hope supported and animated them ! — But when that is taken into the account, who would not almost envy their lot, though hungry and thirfly, though naked and defitute, without habitation, without protection, without friends ? ver. 11-13.—When we confider their fhare in the divine friendship; when we contemplate the bleffed effects of their labours, and the glorious crown which awaits them after all their fufferings, furely they must appear happy in proportion to the degree in which they feemed miferable, and glorious in proportion to the degree in which the world held them infamous !

That illustrious perfon, whole Epiftles are now before us, knew not the pleafures of domeftic life in many of its most encearing relations: but God made him a fpiritual father to multitudes; and no doubt, as he urges the confideration upon his children in Chrift, he felt the joy arifing from it ftrong in his own foul, when he faid, (ver. 15.) I have begotten you in Chrift Jefus through the Gofpel. Surely it ought never to have been forgotten by them; and if, through the artifice of ill-defigning men, and the remaining infirmities of their own character, it was fometimes or in fome degree forgotten; yet, undoubtedly, it will be remembered by those of them who are faved, in the heavenly world for ever. And if there be any remembrance there that they once grieved him, it will be an engagement to all those offices of eternal friendship, which the exaltation of the heavenly ftate fhall allow.

In the mean time, his paternal affection for them, wrought not in a foolifh fondnefs of indulgence, which, in the language of divine wifdom, is bating a fon; but in the character of a prudent and faithful parent, who, defirous that his children may be as wife and good as poffible, will rather ufe the rod than fuffer them to be undone, ver. 21. Yet when he fpeaks of ufing it, he fpeaks with regret, as one who would rather choole to act in the fpirit of gentlenefs, and without any mixture of feverity. The whole of his fubfequent conduct to the Corinthians, as far as it may be learned from this or the following Epiftle, bears a perfect confiftency with thefe expressions, and illustrates the fincerity of them.

May God give to his miniflers more of this truly apoftolical fpirit, more of those overflowings of holy love, attempering and attempered by that ardent zeal against fin, that firm resolution in the discharge of duty, which shone fo brightly in the Apostle, and in which he fo freely and justly recommends himself to the imitation of his children and brethren !

REFLECTIONS.—Ift, The Apoftle,

1. States the true character of Gofpel ministers, and the effeem in which they should be held. Let a man fo account of us as of the ministers of Christ, (wanpellas,) fervants, under-rowers of the vessel where Christ is the pilot, and labouring with all their might to bring it to the haven of eternal reft; and stewards of the mysteries of God, dispensing to the household of faith the rich provision made in the Gospel-word for their nourisfimment and growth in grace. Moreover it is required in slewards that a man be found faithful, true to the trust committed to them, and zealous for their Master's interest and honour.

2. Whatever they might think of him, he could appeal to God for his own fimplicity and godly fincerity. But, though though fome among you in the fpirit of party are crying up one minister and censuring another, with me it is a very finall thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment; though I am defirous, for the honour of Chrift and the fuccels of my ministry, to vindicate my integrity before men, yet their cenfures are comparatively infignificant: the approbation of the Lord, in the great day, is my important concern. Yea, I judge not mine own self; for though I know nothing by myfelf, nor am at all confcious of allowed guile or unfaithfulnefs, yet am I not kereby justified, I would not on any confideration reft my justification before God on the footing of my own fincere obedience: lut, living upon his grace, and enabled to appeal to him for my fimplicity, I wait the great decifive day, knowing that he that judgeth me is the Lord, to whole Blood I have fled for acceptance, and by whole grace I am what I am. Note; (1.) It is a comfort to us, that men, even the best of men, are not our judges. (2.) Though we maintain a becoming care about our character before men, our great concern must be to approve ourfelves to God; and where we are confeious that this is our defire and labour, then we may fit loofe to every malevolent confure. (3.) The fidelity of a fleward, and the diligent labours of a fervant, characterize the real minister of the Gospel.

3. He warns them against hasty judgment. Therefore judge nothing before the time, fulpend every rath confure until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts, when every man's principles, as well as practices, will be laid naked and open: and then fivall every man, who shall be found faithful, have praife of God, and be acknowledged and commended by the great Judge of all.  $N_{i}$  (1.) The profpect of a judgment-day should make us careful how we dare judge others. They fhall then have judgment without mercy, who fluwed no mercy. (2.) However fin be now concealed, and falfe principles put on the most specious appearances, the cheat cannot be long undifcovered : the day is near, when the fecrets of all hearts shall be made known. (3.) They who can now approve themfelves to their Lord, however reviled or maligned, fhall fhortly, if faithful, be owned by the eternal Judge.

4. To avoid every offence, he tells them, Thefe things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myfelf and to Apollos for your fakes, choofing to make use of his own name, and that of Apollos, rather than to apply the matter to any of those who headed parties among them, which might but exasperate. And I do this that ye might learn in us, who, though chief in labours among you, disclaim all authority over your conferences, not to think of men above that which is written, fetting them up as the lords of your faith, and implicitly following their opinions; and that no one of you be puffed up for one against another, exalting the character of one minister upon the ruins of another; but giving God the glory of the various gifts which he has bestowed on different men, and thankful for the benefit of their ministry. 2dly, As they were puffed up with a high conceit of themfelves; and their unreafonable partiality for one minifter above another arofe from an opinion of their own fuperior tafte and judgment, the Apoftle rebukes this unchriftian fpirit.

1. He reminds them that all they poffeiled was of God's' mere grace. For who maketh thee to differ from another, admitting your attainments may be fingular? And what haft thou that thou didft not receive from above as a matter of favour? Now if thou didft receive it, why dift thou glor; as if thou hadft not received it? and as if it was not owing to his grace, but to your own defert? a claim how infolent, ungrateful, may, impious! Note; All good cometh from above, and God mult have the glory of his own work; it is the worft of facil-ge to plume outdoives on, and be proud of, the gifts or graces which he beflows.

2. He ironically reproves their vain imaginations of their own excellence. Now ye are full, now ye are rich, abounding in worldly wealth, high in fpiritual gifts, and Jattering yourfelves with the apprehension of your exalted attainments in grace; ye have reigned as kings wi hout u., priding yourfelves as if you had attained the fumn.it of profperity, without any obligations to us, or any affiltance of ours who first preached the Gofpel unto you: and I would to God ye did reign; far from envying you, I flould be happy in your advancement, and with for nothing more carnettly than that you really were as great and excellent as the glafs of felf-deceit reprefents you to be; that we also might reign with you, rejoicing in your attainments, and partaking of your glory as the inftruments who contributed fo greatly to your conversion and edification; whom you would then honour and refpect, inflead of adding to our troubles by your unbecoming conduct and ingratitude. For I think that God hath fet forth us the Apofles, who were laft called to the ministry of the word, (fee the Annotations) as it were appointed to death, ordained to fuffer peculiar afflictions, and every day exposed to danger and death : for we are, as public criminals who are exposed to beafts in the theatres, and devoted to destruction, made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men, exposed to every ignominy, reproach, and fuffering from the world which lieth in wickednefs; whilft angels and good men admire our conflancy, and pity our fufferings, and devils and wicked men infult, revile, and perfecute us. But while we are counted fools for Chriff's fake, thus to expole ourfelves for the take of our crucified Mafter, and for our preaching the doctrines of the Crofs, which the world counts foolifhnefs; ye are wife in Chrift, and, varnithing over the offenfive truths of the Gofpel, value yourfelves on your wifdom and prudence in eleaping that crofs under which we groan : we are weak, opprefied with forrows and fuff rings till our firength is ready to fail; but ye are firing, and know none of our tribulations to harafs you : ye are bonourable, and maintain a respectable character in the world, and with lukewarm protefiors of Christianity; but we are despised for our fidelity, which draws upon us the reproaches ` with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may 5 'To deliver such an one unto Satan for be faved in the day of our Lord Jesus.

reproaches and perfecutions under which we appear fo contemptible. While you enjoy eale and affluence, even unto this prefent hour, we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place, like our Master, without a fettled abode to lay our head; and labur, working with our own bands, for that maintenance, which, for the Gospel's fake, we rather choose to earn with the fweat of our brow, than demand of you : being reviled, we blefs ; being perfecuted, we fuffer it patiently ; being defamed, we intreat, return no opprobrious language, but mildly remonstrate, and humbly beg a hearing: we are made as the filth of the world, and are the off-fcouring of all things unto this day, treated as the vileft milcreants, and as wretches cholen from the dregs of the people, who, being regarded by the heathen as the authors of all their public calamities, are offered in facrifice to appeale the wrath of their fupposed offended deities. Note ; (1.) Many dangerously mistake, who judge of themselves by their gifts. It is not great knowledge, but great grace, which conftitutes the eminent Christian. (2) They who will be faithful in the ministry, should count the cost, and go forth with a readine's to fuffer, if need be, the lofs of all things. (3.) Nothing can ferve to fhew the character of the bleffed Paul in a more diffinguished light, than the account which he here gives of himfelf. May we learn to copy his difinterefied zeal, and bear our fufferings with the like meeknefs and unshaken fidelity !

3dly, The Apollie, with fingular address,

1. Infinuates the kind intentions that he had in this difcourfe. I write not thefe things to fhame or upbraid you, but as a father, tenderly concerned for my beloved fons, I warn you to beware of a conduct that is fo unbecoming you, which mult in the iffue prove fo much to your diffionour, and which it is highly incumbent on you to observe, lament, and amend. For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Chrift, who help to build you up in the faith, yet have ye not many fathers, to whole ministry ye were indebted for be-ing called to the knowledge of the truth : f.r in Chrift Jefus I have begotten you through the Gojpel; he using my instrumentality, and fending me first among you to preach his great falvation; and the most of you, through his grace, by my ministry, have been called to the knowledge of the truth, and faith in him; and therefore I have a peculiar title to your ofteem and regard. Wherefore, I befeech you, be se followers of me as dear children, not led away by those who would pervert you from the fimplicity of the Golpel, and fical your affections from me that you might idolize them. Remember my example, and, as far as I appeared to imitate my divine Master, copy after the pattern. Note; (1.) Those rebukes will be most effectual, where kindness gives weight to the admonition. (2.) They who have been our spiritual fathers, have a title to our peculiar affection. (3.) Every minister, by his example, should atom the doctrine which he preaches, that he may with some humble confidence be able to fay, " Be ye followers " of me."

2. He tells them what were his kind intentions in fending the bearer of this Epiftle. For this caufe have I fent unto you Timotheus, to fecond this letter by his exhortations and ministry, who is my beloved fon, begotten in the Gospel, and dear to me as a child; and faithful in the Lord, proved to be fo by long experience; who fhall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I teach every where in every church, preaching the fame doctrine, and walking in the fame fleps. Note; (1.) The great doctrines of the Gofpel can admit of no change : like their Author, they are the fame yesterday, to-day, and for ever. (2.) All faithful ministers of Christ bring the same message, walk after the fame rule, and mind the fame things. Novelty is a proof of error.

3. He assures them of his intention to visit them himfelf, notwithstanding the infinuations of some of their falfe teachers. Now fome are puffed up as though I would not core to you, as if I was ashamed or afraid personally to meet them; and perhaps may make the fending of Timothy an argument to support their suggestions: but I will come to you fortly, it is my firm determination to to do, if the Lord will, in whose hands are all our ways; and will know, not the speech of them which are puffed up, but the power, examining into their credentials, and not to be deluded by the glare of their eloquence or learning; but inquiring what power accompanies their ministrations, and what efficacy their discourses have on the hearts of the hearers. For the kingdom of God is not in word; the church of the Redeemer is neither erected nor fupported by human wildom, nor does mere profession constitute the Christian character; but it stands in the power of God : not by man's eloquence, but through the preaching of the Crofs, made effectual through the Spirit's energy, is this kingdom fet up and maintained in the hearts of believers.

4. He concludes with an authoritative queftion : What will ye? How would you choose I should visit you? Shall I come unto you with a rod, according to my apoftolic power, feverely to chaftife those offenders and diffurbers of your peace? This would be my grief as well as yours; or fhall I come to you, as I defire to do, in love, and in the fpirit of meckness? Rejoicing to find a thorough reformation of whatever has been amils, forgetting what is past, and affectionately embracing you as my dear children. Note: (1.) Obflinate offenders call for the rod; and though it be painful, parents, masters, ministers, must not spare. (2) Love and meeknefs are the ornaments of the Chriftian character, and in these the preachers of the Gospel should excel.

CHAP, V.

THE meffengers from Corinth, as well as the members of the family of Chloc, had informed the Apoflic, that one of the brethren was cohabiting with his father's wife, in his father's lifetime. In this chapter therefore, St. Paul reproved the whole Corinthian church, for tolerating a fpecies of fornication, which was abhorred even by the heathens, heathens, ver. 1.—And this fcandal was the greater, that they were puffed up with pride, on account of the knowledge and learning of the teacher by whole influence it was tolerated, ver. 2 .- But to make the Corinthians fenfible, that their boafting of a teacher who had patronized fuch an enormity, was criminal, as well as to correct the enormity itself, the Apostle ordered them forthwith, in a public affembly of the church called for the purpofe, to deliver the offender to Satan, for the destruction of his flesh, that his spirit being reformed, he might be faved in the day of the Lord, ver. 3, 4, 5.—Then he shewed them the neceffity of cutting off the inceftuous perfon, by comparing vice unpunished to leaven, on account of its contagious nature in corrupting a whole fociety, ver. 6.-And because this was written a little before the passover, when the Jews put away all leaven out of their houles as the fymbol of corruption or wickedness, the Apostle defired the Corinthians to cleanfe out the old leaven of lewdnefs, by caffing the inceffuous perion out of the church: for, faid he, Chrift our passover is facrificed for us. Alfo he exhorted them to keep the feaft of the Lord's fupper, which was inftituted in commemoration of Chrift's being facrificed for us, and which was to be celebrated by them, not with the leaven of malice and wickednefs, but with the unleavened bread of fincerity and truth, ver. 7, 8.

Left however the Corinthians might have underftood the Apolite's command to excommunicate the inceftuous perfon, and to cleanse out the old leaven, as an order not to have any communication with the unconverted heathens, he told them, that was not his meaning; fince in that cafe they must have gone out of the world, ver. 9, 10.-And to make his meaning plain, he now wrote more explicitly, that if any perfon who professed himself a christian, was a known fornicator, &c. they were to punish him by keeping no company with him, vcr. 11.-This diffinction in the treatment of heathen and Christian finners, the Aposle shewed them was reasonable, from the confideration, that church cenfures are not to be inflicted on perfons who are without, but on them who are within the church, ver. 12. -And therefore, while they left it to God to judge and punish the wicked heathens, it was their duty to put away the incefluous perfon from among themfelves, and to leave the woman with whom he lived, to the judgment of God, because she was a heathen, ver. 13.

The Apoftle's order to the Corinthians, to keep no company with wicked perfons, though feemingly fevere, was in the true fpirit of the gofpel. For the laws of Chrift do not, like the laws of men, correct offenders by fines and imprifonments, and corporal punifhments, or outward violence of any kind, but by earneft and affectionate reprefentations, admonitions, and reproofs, addreffed to their reafon and confcience, to make them through grace fenfible of their fault, and to induce them to amend. If this remedy proves ineffectual, their fellow-chriftians are to fhew their difapprobation of their evil courfes, by carefully avoiding their company. So Chrift has ordered, Matt. xviii. 15, 16, 17. Morcover, if thy brother shall trespass ogainst thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he fhall hear thee, thou haft gained thy brother .--16. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witheffes every word may be cliablished. 17. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church : but if he niglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man, and a publican. Earnest representation, therefore, from the injured party, followed by grave admonition and reproof from the minifters of religion, when the injured party's reprefentation is ineffectual, are means which Chrift has appointed for reclaiming an offender. But if thefe moral and religious means prove ineffectual, Chrift has ordered the fociety of which the offender is a member, to fhun his company and conversation, that he may be athauned, and that others may be preferved from the contagion of his example. This laft remedy will be uted with the greatest effect, if the refolution of the fociety, to have no intercourfe with the offender, especially in religious matters, is openly declared by a fentence deliberately and folemnly pronounced in a public affembly, (as in the cafe of the inceftuous Corinthian,) and is fleadily carried into execution.

The wholefome difcipline which Chrift inftituted in his church at the beginning, was rigoroufly and impartially exercifed by the primitive chriftians, towards their offending brethren, and with the happieft fuccefs, in preferving purity of manners among themfelves. In modern times, however, this falutary difcipline has been much neglected in the church; but it has been taken up by gaming clubs, who exclude from their fociety all who refuse to pay their game debts, and fhun their company on all occafions, as perfons abfolutely infamous. By this fort of excommunication, and by giving to game debts the appellation of debts of honour, the winners on the one hand, without the help of law, and even in contradiction to it, have rendered their unjuft claims effectual; while the lofers, on the other, are reduced to the neceffity, either of paying, or of being fhunned by their companions as infamous.—I mention this as an example, to fhew what a powerful influence the approbation or difapprobation of those with whom mankind affociate, have upon their conduct; and from that confideration, to excite the friends of religion to support her against the attempts of the wicked, by testifying on every fit occasion, their disapprobation of vice, and their contempt of its abettors; and more effectially by fhunning the company and conversation of the openly profane, however dignified their flation in life, or however great their fortune may be.

Another means which St. Paul makes use of to bring off the Corinthians from their false apoltle, and to stop their veneration of him and their glorying in him, is by reprefenting to them the fault and diforder which was committed in that church, by not judging and expelling the fornicator; which which neglect, as may be gueffed, was owing to that faction. 1. Becaule it is natural for a faction to support and protect an offender that is of their fide. 2. From the great fear St. Paul was in, whether they would obey him in cenfuring the offender, as appears by the fecond Epiftle; which he could not fear but from the opposite faction, they who had preferved their respect to him being sure to follow his orders. 3. From what he fays, ch. iv. 16. after he had told them, ver. 6. of that chapter, that they should not be putted up for any other against him, for fo the whole fcope of his difcourfe here imports, he befeeches them to be his followers, that is to fay, leaving their other guides, to follow him in punishing the offender. For that, we may conclude, from his immediately infifting on it fo earneftly, he had in his view, when he befought them to be followers of him : and confequently, that they might join with him, and take him for their leader, ch. v. 3, 4. he makes himfelf by his spirit, as his proxy, the president of their affembly, to be convened for the punishing of that criminal. 4. It may further be fuspected from what St. Paul fays, ch. vi. 1. that the opposite party, to ftop the church censure, pretended that this was a matter to be judged by the civil magistrate : nay, possibly, from what is hid ver. 6. of that chapter, it may be gathered, that they had got it brought before the heathen judge, or at least from ver. 12. that they pleaded that what he had done was lawful, and might be justified before the magistrate: for the judging spoken of ch. vi. must be understood to relate to the fame matter which it does ch. v., it being a continuation of the fame difcourfe and argument; as is eafy to be observed by any one who will read it without regarding the divisions into chapters and verses, whereby unlearned people (not to fay others) are often disturbed in reading the Hoy Scripture, and hindered from observing the true sense and coherence of it; though it must be granted that these divisions are of confiderable use. The whole 6th chapter is spent in prosecuting the business of the fornicator, begun in the 5th. That this is fo, is evident from the latter end, as well as beginning of the 6th chapter: and therefore, what St. Paul fays of lawful, ch. vi. 12. may without any violence be supposed to be faid in answer to some, who might have alleged in favour of the fornicator, that what he had done was lawful, and might be justified by the laws of the country which he was under: why elfe flould St. Paul fubjoin to many arguments (wherewith he concludes the 6th chapter, and the fubject) to prove the fornication in queltion to be, by the laws of the Gospel, an enormous in? See ch. v. 1. to vi. 20. and Locke.

Ver. 1. It is reported commonly] Whoever reads attentirely 2 Cor. i. 20.—ii. 11. will eafily perceive that the laft verle of the preceding chapter is an introduction to the just act of difcipline which St. Paul was going to exertile among them, though absent, as if he had been pretent; and therefore that verse ought properly to begin the Vol. 11.

present chapter. The writers of the New Testament seem to use the Greek word moquia, which we translate fornication, in the fame fenfe that the Hebrews do ;; zebut, which we also translate by the fame word; though it is certain both thefe words in Sacred Scripture have a larger fense; for zebut among the Hebrews, fignified unclean-nefs, or any flagitious feandalous crime. That the intermarrying of a fon-in-law and a mother-in-law was not prohibited by the laws of the Roman empire, may be feen in Tully; but yet it was looked on as to fcandalous and infamous, that it had never any countenance from practice. Tully's words in his oration, Pro Clutentio, are itrikingly agreeable to the present case, " Nubit genero focrus nullis " hofpitiis, nullis auctoribus, O scelus incredibile, et " præter hanc unam, in omni vita inauditum !" Dr. Whitby thinks that the fcandalous ftories which were generally told among the heathens of the inceftuous practices of the primitive Christians, had their original from the milrepresentation of the fact mentioned in this verse. So fatal is the allowance of open fin in any church which pleads for experimental religion. See Acts, xv. 19, &c. Locke, Hammond, Whitby, and Grotius de Jure B. et P. lib. ii. c. 5.

Ver. 2. And ye are puffed up, &c.] And yet ye are elated, inflead of mourning, as ye ought to do, in order to the expulsion of him who hath committed this. At that time the church used public humiliations, with fasting and tears, when they passed a sentence of excommunication. Heylin.

Ver. 3. But prefent in fpirit] Some think this refers to an extraordinary gift which St. Paul had of differning clearly and circumftantially what was done at a diffance. Comp. Coloff. ii. 5. 2. Kings, v. 26. and Dr. Benfon's Hift. vol. ii. p. 16.

Ver. 4, 5. In the name of our Lord Jefus Chrift] That ye, being gathered together in the name of our Lord Jefus Chrift, and my fpirit, with the power of our Lord Jefus Chrift, ver. 5. do deliver fuch a one to Satan, &c. Some think, that as Satan is confidered as the head of all who are not under Christ, as their head, (that is, in the church of Christ) every one who was cut off from the church muft of courfe be delivered over to Satan ; but it feems much more reasonable to believe, that this refers to the infliction of fome bodily pains or difeafes, in which Satan might act as the inftrument of divine justice. Comp. 1 Tim. i. 20. And this was for the destruction of the flesh ; probably for the emaciating and enfeebling of the powers of animal nature ;---" That his " body may be afflicted and brought down, and thus " through divine grace the man led to true repentance and " humiliation, that fo his foul may be faved in the laft " day." See Doddridge, Locke, and Erafmus.

Ver. 6. Your glorying is not good] Some would read this interrogatively,—Have you not a fine fubject for boahing?— Glorying or boahing is throughout the beginning of this Epithe fpoken of the preference they gave to their new D d leader, leader, in opposition to St. Paul. See Locke, and 2 Cor. xii.

Ver. 7. Purge out therefore the old leaven] The Apostle continues the figure from unleavened bread, ver. 6. with a particular view to the Jewish passover, in which it was forbidden. " As therefore it was the manner of the Jews " at their paffover, especially on the day of preparation, to " fearch diligently if the least morfel of leavened bread " were left in their houses, and carefully to remove it all, " -- in like manner do you also put away this incestuous " perfon, and every other contagious evil; commencing a " people pure and incorrupt, in order to your due cele-" bration of the Christian passover ;- for even Christ our " paffover is facrificed for us. We have a festival to keep, " as well as the Jews; a paschal Lamb was flain and fa-" crificed for our redemption, of which the lamb offered " under the law for the deliverance from Egypt was but " a type; and their flight out of that house of bondage " was but a typical representation of our hastening out of " the more cruel bondage of fin." It is probable that this Epistle was written near the festival of Easter : see ch. xvi. 8. where the Apostle fays he shall stay at Ephesus, where he then was, till Pentecoft. See Bp. Lavington's Sermon, "On the nature and use of a type," Ridley's Sermons on the Christian Passover, and Heylin.

Ver. 9. I wrote, &c.] I have written unto you in an [this] Epifile. Inftead of fornicators, in this and the following verfes, fome very properly render the original word  $\varpi c_{grou}$ , by lewd perfons, as it is plain the Apoftle intended the word fhould be taken in that extent; his argument concluding yet more ftrongly againft fome other fpecies of lewdnefs, than againft what is called fimple fornication, deteftable as that is. See on ver. 1.

Ver. 12. For what have I to do, &c.] Have I any thing to do to judge those which are without? No, judge ye them that are within; ver. 13. (But those that are without God judgeth) and ye shall take away THE EVIL from among you. See Deut. xiii. 5. xvii. 7. In the words those that are without, Dr. Whithy thinks there is an oblique reference to the motherin-law of the incefluous perfon, who was a heathen; which, from the Apostle's giving no direction concerning her, is not improbable. However, the views of the Apostle in this claufe, if they took in this particular, feem to have been still more extensive. "Those who are without the pale of "the Christian church, God judgeth; and he will find a " way fooner or later, to teftify his aweful difpleafure againft them, for crimes which they have committed " way fooner or later, to teftify his aweful difpleafure " against them, for crimes which they have committed " against the law of nature, (or rather the law of grace) " and that acquaintance with it, which he knows they " actually had or might have attained through the fecret " influences of the Spirit of God."

Inferences.—This chapter contains a very important doctrine,—the neceffity of difcipline in the church, and efpecially that part of difcipline which confifts of excommunication. St. Paul reproves the Corinthians for not removing the inceftuous perfon from among them; which teaches us, that when perfons who call themfelves Chriffians, fall into fins which difhonour the religion of the Lord Jefus Chrift, the whole church ought to mourn for it, and fhould not fuffer those perfons to remain in her communion, but chase from it fuch as are its reproach and fcandal.

St. Paul most expressly declares, that we ought not to acknowledge for brethren, for Christians, the unclean, unjust, flanderous, drunkards, or other scandalous or avowed finners; nor to have any familiar dealings with them. This is the law of Chrift; this is what the Apostles have commanded in his name; this is the rule appointed by them in all churches, for the honour of the Christian religion, and the faving of the finners themfelves, as well as to prevent their evil examples from corrupting other members of the church; and this is what the first Christians religioufly practifed : on which account, we are forced to own that the church is not now governed as it ought to be, fince this kind of excommunication is exercifed hardly any where, except in some peculiar societies. Nevertheles, the duty of all true Christians is, to avoid as far as possible all correspondence with wicked men, and to diftinguish themfelves from them by a holy and exemplary life; nor fhould we ever vainly imagine, that being joined in communion with a Christian church, can excuse the guilt of immoral and fcandalous practices, for which the wrath of God comes even upon the children of difobedience among the heathen.

God will have his time to judge them that are without; and not only "Christians at large," as fome may fondly, and perhaps profanely, be ready to call themfelves, but Mahometans and Pagans too will find articles like thefe fitting upon their fouls with a dreadful weight; and, if fincere repentance do not make way for pardon, plunging them

CHAP. VI.

The Coninthians muft not vex their brethren, in going to law with them, especially before infidels. The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Our bodies are, the members of Chriss, and temples of the Holy Ghost: they must not therefore be defiled.

[Amo Domini 57.]

DARE 'any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the faints?

2 Do ye not know that "the faints shall judge the world? and, if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?

3 Know ye not that we fhall 'judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life.

4 If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, fet them to judge who are leaft efteemed in the church.

them into the lowest abyls of milery;—into a state of everlasting separation from the bleffed God, and all his holy and acceptable servants.

REFLECTIONS.—Ift, The Apolle, after reproving their party difputes, paffes on to other groß offences which fublifted among them.

1. A most gross and fcandalous crime had been committed by one of the members of the church; that he should have his father's wife, (fee the Annotations;) a species of fornication abominable even in the eyes of civilized heathens, and bringing the greatest reproach on their profession as Christians.

2. What had been one man's fin in the commission, had become the fin of the whole by their connivance. Ye are profied up. Perhaps, their outward prosperity made them negligent of inward purity among the members of the church; and therefore, without mourning over such a scandalous offender, and calling him out of the church, as they ought to have done, he still continued to assemble with them, and they countenanced him in his wickedness. Nate; (1.) In the most flourishing churches corruptions have crept in. (2.) A Christian's heart mourns over the offences of his brethren, and cannot but fensibly feel the wounds given thereby to the Redeemer's cause.

3. The Apostle pronounces fentence upon this incestuous Corinthian, and enjoins them to put it in force against him by an immediate excommunication. I verily, as abfint in body, but prefent in spirit, having my heart ever folicitous for your welfare, and knowing by revelation the true state of this cafe, bave judged already, as though I were profent, concerning bim that hath fo done this deed, that he be without delay caft out from among you. In the name of our Lord Jefus Christ, when ye are gathered together to confult on this affair; and my Spirit is among you with the power of our Lord Jefus Chrift, who has left this authority to his church for the maintenance of holy discipline among the projecting members of it; I have determined that you are in duty bound to deliver fuch an one unto Satan for the defruition of the flefb, expelling him from the fociety of the faithful, and delivering him back into the world that lieth under the dominion of the wicked one. And perhaps fome fignal mark of wrath was fuffered to be inflicted upon his body, that, thus exposed to shame and suffering, he might It perhaps be brought to repentance, and that the spirit-may be faved in the day of the Lord Jefus. Note: It is as neceflary for the backflider as it is for the glory of God, that he fhould fmart for his unfaithfulnefs: fuch chaftifement is for his falvation, not deftruction.

4. He exhorts them to purge out the leaven of wicked-nefs from among them. Your glorying is not good, it is peculiarly unfeatonable and strange, when such offences are committed among you with impunity : know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? And that in like manner corrupt principles and practices, connived at in the least measure, may foon sp ead, and communicate universal infection to the church. Purge out therefore the old leaven, fearch out and remove all fcandalous perfons from among you, as carefully as the Jews examine their houses before the paffover, that ye may be in reality a new lump as ye are in profession unleavened, in simplicity and truth devoted to the Lord Jefus as his peculiar people, and departing from all iniquity as the evidence that you belong to him. Note; (1.) The beginnings of evil are to be watched against and checked, left, like the fpreading mortification, the whole body become infected. (2.) They who are Christ's are new creatures. If we fay we abide in him, and walk in darknefs, we lie, and do not the truth.

5. He urges his exhortation by the ftrongest argument. For even Christ our passiver, who was fignified by the paschal Lamb, is facrificed for us, that he might cleanfer us from all iniquity, this being one great end of his death. Therefore let us keep the feast which he hath inflituted inflead of the parchal supper, not with old leaven, admitting profane and fcandalous offenders to the table of the Lord ; neither with the leaven of malice and wickednefs, not harbouring allowed fin, or living under the power of corruption, defiled in body, or foured with pride and party difputes; but with the unleavened bread of fincerity and truth, with real attachment of heart to the Saviour, and unfeigned love to the brethren. Note; (1.) The facrifice of Chrift, which we commemorate, fhould be a rich feaft to our fouls; fince thereby every bleffing in time and eternity is prepared for the faithful. (2.) They who approach the Lord's table, fhould examine themfelves, whether their old leaven be purged out, and their hearts in fimplicity brought to the fpirit and temper of the Gofpel.

2dly, Some conceive that the Apoftle refers in ver. 9. to a former Epiftle which he had written to the Corinthians; others, to one he was writing when he heard from D d 2 them,

5 I speak to your shame. Is it so that there that shall be able to judge between his breis not a wife man among you? no, not one thren?

them, and began a new letter in answer to them; though perhaps what he fpeaks, may have only refpect to what he had faid before in this fame Epiftle. I wrote unto you in an Epistle, not to company with fornicators ; to be separate from all familiar intercourfe with those who bring fuch reproach on the Christian name. Yet my intention is not that you fhould be altogether feeluded from the world, and refufe all civil intercourfe with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idelaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world, fo few would be left with whom to have any commerce in fuch an evil world as this is. But now I have written unto you, not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with fuch an one, no not to eat; not only he should be excluded from eating bread with you at the Lord's table, but even all intercourse and connection with him should be cut off, and he should be shunned and avoided by you more than even the heathen themfelves; that, being put to fhame, he may yet be brought to repentance, and reflored to the bosom of the church. For what have I to do to judge them alfo that are without? As they make no profession of Christianity, they lie under none of our censures; and in civil affairs, as duty calls, may lawfully be converfed with : but do not ye judge them that are within? The profesting members of the church come under your jurifdiction, and are, when they answer any of the before-mentioned characters, to be treated with this peculiar diffance. But them that are without, who are open offenders, and live carelefsly after the fashion of the world, God judgeth; to whole judgment they must be left. Therefore, fince your power extends over your own community, put away from yourfelves that wicked perfon.

CHAP. VI.

THE Corinthians fince their conversion had fued each other, as formerly, in the heathen courts of judicature about worldly matters, often of fmall importance. This practice was the more blameable, as the Chriftians, who in the first age were not distinguished from the Jews, might as Jews, according to the law of the empire, have held courts of judicature of their own, for determining most of the controverfies about worldly matters which arole among themfelves. Wherefore, by declining the decifions of their brethren, and by bringing their caufes into the heathen courts, they flewed that they had but a mean opinion of the knowledge and integrity of their brethren. Befides, the frequency of their fuits led the heathens, before whom they were brought, to think the Chriftians not only litigious, but difpoled to injure one another. These things, of which the Apoftle was informed, bringing great diffionour on the Christian name, he rebuked the Corinthians feverely, for daring to go to law with one another before the heathens, and not before the faints, ver. 1.-Know ye not, faid he, that the faints fhall judge the world, yea, angels? And why may they not judge in things pertaining to this life? ver. 2-4-l speak it to your shame, that in your opinion, there is not fo much as one wife man among you, who is fit to judge between his brethren; but brother carrieth his brother into the heathen courts, as if he expected more justice from heathens than from Christians, ver. 5, 6.-Now it is utterly wrong in you to have any law-fuits at all in the heathen courts. Ye had much better fuffer yourfelves to be injured and defrauded, in fmall matters, than go to law before unbelievers, fince the feeking of redrefs in that manner will be attended with more trouble and lofs than if ye bear the injury patiently, ver. 7. -Next, becaufe many of the other parties, by fuffering themfelves to be fued in the heathen courts, had fhewn a difpolition to defraud their brethren, the Apostle denounced the judgment of God against all unrighteous perfons whatever: and mentioned particularly, fornicators, idolaters, adulterers, pathics, fodomites, thieves, and others, folemnly declaring that they shall be excluded from the kingdom of God, ver. 8, 9, 10.-And fuch, faid he, were some of you before your conversion to Christianity, ver. 11.

The falle teacher, it feems, with a view to gain the favour of the Greeks, had taught that luxury and fornication were allowed under the Gofpel; and had fupported that doctrine by the common arguments with which fenfualifts in all ages and countries defend their debauched manners. Wherefore, to prevent the unthinking from being feduced by thefe arguments, the Apoftle, with great propriety, confuted them in his Epiftle to the Corinthians, because, of all the Greeks, the inhabitants of Corinth were the most debauched; and because many of them who had embraced Christianity, had not yet acquired a just sense of the obligations to purity, laid on them by the Golpel. It is true, the Apostle, according to his manner, has not ftated these arguments explicitly. Nevertheless, from the things which he has written in confutation of them, we learn that they related to the pleafures of the table, and the other pleasures of sense .-- To the argument, concerning the luxuries of the table, the Apostle replied, that although all meats and drinks are made for men's ufe, and are in themfelves lawful, the luxurious use of them is criminal. Many kinds of nice meats and drinks, even when used in moderation, may be prejudicial to a man's health; and may not be fuitable to his income and ftation. Befides, the love of the pleafures of the table always creates habits injurious to the luxurious themfelves in foul and body, and troublefome to the perfons with whom they are connected, ver. 12 .- To the argument implied, that the belly is made for eating and drinking, the Apostle answered, that both the belly, and the meats by which it is gratified, are to be deftroyed: they are to have no place in the future life of the body. From which it follows, that to place our happinefs in enjoyments which are confined to the present short state of our existence, while we neglect pleafures which may be enjoyed through eternity, is extremely foolifh, ver. 13 .- To the implied argument, whereby the licentious juftify their indulgence in the other criminal pleafures of fense, the Apostle answered, by flatly denying it. The body was not made for fornication, but for the fervice of the Lord Christ, who will raife up and that before the unbelievers.

7 Now therefore there is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law one with another. Why do ye not rather take wrong ?

6 But brother goeth to law with brother, why do ye not rather fuffer yourfelves to be defrauded ?

up the bodies of the faithful at the last day fitly formed for his own fervice, ver. 14 .- To another argument implied, that the lufts of the flefh may be gratified without injury to others, the Apostle replied, first, that great injury is done to Chrift, when the members of our body, which are his members, are made the members of a harlot, ver. 15. -Secondly, by fornication, a man injures his own foul. For he becomes one perfon with his whore; he acquires the fame vicious inclinations, and the fame vicious manners with her : Nay, he makes himself her flave, ver. 16 .-Whereas he who is joined to the Lord, is one fpirit. He acquires the dispolitions and manners of Chrift, and is directed by him, ver. 17.-In the third place, he who commits fornication, fins against his own body, as well as against his foul, ver. 18 .- Lastly, by gluttony, drunkennels, and fornication, great injury is done to the Spirit of God, whole temple our body is, or should be; we injure that ever-bleffed God, to whom we belong, not only by the right of creation, but the right of redemption. We fould therefore glorify God in our body and in our spirit, which are his, by making that holy and honourable use of our body, which he has prefcribed, ver. 19, 20.

Ver. 1. Before the unjust, and not before the faints ] The heathen judges, as St. Paul here in effect declares, were generally unjust; Christians at that time were generally good, righteous, and holy men : there might be exceptions on each fide; but the Apostle's argument turns on what might commonly be fuppofed : the faints who are to judge angels, and not merely profeffing Christians. See Locke, Doddridge, and Whitby.

Ver. 3. Know ye not that we fhall judge angels ?] " Even the " fallen angels themfelves, who, notwithstanding all their " malignity and pride, shall be brought to that tribunal, " at which you, having glorioufly passed your own trial, " fhall be feated with Chrift, your victorious Lord ; when " by his righteous fentence he shall fend these rebellious " fpirits to that flaming prison, which divine justice hath " prepared for them ?" Had the Apostle, as Dr. Whitby and others suppose, referred to the power which many Chriftians had of driving out demons from those who were policifed by them, he would not have spoken of this as a future thing; nor can we fuppofe it to have been common to all Chriftians; nor would it have afforded an argument equally forcible with that which the interpretation that we have given fuggests. There seems a peculiar dignity and propriety in this determination of the great God, that when the devils, who are expressly faid to be referved in chains of darkness, to the judgment of the great day, shall be condemned; the faints, being railed to the feats of glory which these wicked spirits have forfeited and loft, should alisk in that fentence, which shall difplay the victory of Chrift over them in thefe his fervants, once their captives; and will, no doubt, render the fontence itfelf yet more intolerable to creatures of fuch malignity and pride. See Locke, Whitby, Doddridge, and Reynolds, " of angels," p. 183.

Ver. 4. If then ye have judgments] If therefore you have controverfies relating to affairs of this life, do you fet them to judge, who are of no effect in the church ;—that is to lay, the heathen magistrates? Some critics fay that the word dixasrpiz, rendered judgements, like xpiripiz, fignifies judicial courts, not caufes; and they would render the paffage thus: Appoint fecular judicatories, if you have in the church this contemptible fort of men, who are fo ready to go to law, ver. 7. But the first interpretation seems preferable. See Bp. Overall, Camerarius, Knatchbull, Limborch, and Elfner. Mr. Locke obferves, that there was among the Jews Conceffus triumviralis authenticus, an authentic court of judicature governed by three judges, who had authority, and could hear and determine causes, ex officio, - by virtue of their office : and there was also another Conceffus triumviralis, chofen by the parties. The latter court, though not authentic, in the before-mentioned fenfe, could judge and determine the caufes referred to it; and the members of this court were they whom St. Paul calls here  $\tau$ 's its 9 sumueres, judices non authenticos; that is, " Referees " chofen by the parties." That he does not mean by the original thefe who are least esteemed, is plain from the next

Ver. 5. A wife man] If St. Paul uses this word in the fense of the fynagogue, it fignifies a rabbi, or one ordained, and fo capacitated to be a judge; for fuch were called wife men. If in the fense of the Greek fchools, then it fignifies a man of learning, fludy, and parts. If it be taken in the latter fenfe, it may feem to be used with fome reflection on their pretences to wildom. See Locke.

Ver. 6. Brother goeth to law with brother] Josephus obferves, that the Romans, who were now mafters of Corinth, permitted the Jews in foreign countries to decide private affairs, where nothing capital was in queftion, among themfelves; and hence may be argued the juffice of this rebuke of St. Paul, as there is no room to doubt but Christians might have had the fame privilege, as they were looked upon as a Jewish fect. Exclusive of that, however, they might doubtlefs, by mutual confent, have chofen their brethren as referees. See Lardner's Credibil. vol. i. p. 165. and on ver. 4.

Ver. 8. Nay, ye do wrong] That the wrong here fpoken of was the fornicator's taking and keeping his father's wife, the words of St. Paul, 2 Cor. vii. 12. inftancing this very wrong, are a fufficient evidence; and it is not wholly improbable that there had been fome hearing of this matter before a hea-not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themfelves with mankind,

You do ill to let the case come before a heathen magistrate;—Are you, who are to judge the world, and angels, not worthy to judge fuch a matter as this?" See Locke.

It would be unreasonable to infift on the most rigorous interpretation of the words, Every fin that a man doth, &c. but the general fense is plain and true; and probably, on the whole, there is no other fin by which the body receives equal detriment, confidering not only its nature, but how much it has prevailed. brother !—What are these little interests of mortal life, that the beirs of falvation, by whom angels are to be judged, should wrangle about them, and for the sake of them do wrang, and that even to their brethren ! ver. I - 8. Men had need, where such a temper prevails, to examine themselves, and take heed that they be not deceived; for though good men may fall into some degrees of this evil, through negligence, missake, or the infirmities of our common nature; yet certainly it looks too much like the character of those, concerning whom the Apostle testifies that they fould not inherit the kingdom of God, ver. 9, 10.

We may obferve, that in the catalogue here given are contained, not only the most infamous and enormous offenders, but some who perhaps may be tempted, because of their freedom from flagitious crimes. to think much better of themselves than they ought. We find here the effeminate and covetous, the revilers and extortioners, ranked with adulterers and fornicators, with thieves and drunkards, with idelaters and folomites. We can never be fecure from danger of falling into the greatest fins, till we learn to guard against the least; or rather till we think no evil imall, viewing every fin in its contradiction to the nature of God, and in the fad aspect that it wears with regard to an eternal ftate.

But how firking is it to reflect, that when the Apoftle is fpeaking of perfons of fuch infamous character, he should be able to add, in his addrefs to his Christian brethren at Corinth, (ver. 11.) and fuch were fome of you! Who must not adore the riches of divine grace?—Were fuch as thefe the best of the heathen world?—Were fuch as thefe prepared by their diftinguished virtues to receive further affistance?—Let us pay our homage to the all-conquering grace of God; and let the greatest finners hence karn not to defpair of falvation, when made fincerely defrous of being washed and fanctified, as well as justified in the name of our Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

It is that Name, it is that Spirit alone, which accomplithes wonders like thefe; and, bleffed be God, all the wonders of this kind were not exhaufted in those early ages; but some have been referved for us, on whom the end of the world is come. The Gospel has had its triumphs in our own days, and they shall be renewed in those of our children: only let none hence prefume to turn the grace of God into wantonness, left, instead of being among those who are made trophies of the divine mercy, they should perish with the multitude of the ungodly world.

With what incomparable advantages does our holy religion, in this respect peculiarly excellent, enforce all the lessons of moral virtue which it teaches !—With what holy disdain should we look on the baits of fense, and the pollutions which are in the world through luft, if we feriously and often reflected on these two things,—that our bodies are the members of Chriss, and that they are the temples of the Holy Ghoss! !—It should be our unwearied care, as it will be our peculiar happines, that they may not only nominally, but really be such; that by a living faith we may be united to the Lord, fo as to become one Spirit with him, animated by that Spirit which resides in him, and dwells in all who are truly his, ver. 15-19.

Whenever we are tempted to alienate ourfelves from the fervice of God, we fhould reflect upon the price with which we are bought; ver. 20.—That great, that important price, which we fhould never think of, but with fecret fhame, as well as with love and admiration. O Lord ! haft thou paid fuch a ranfom for me, and fhall I act as if I thought even this not enough ?—as if thou hadft acquired only a partial and imperfect right to me, and I might divide myfelf between thee and ftrangers, between thee and thine enemies ?—Oh may I be entirely thine, and make it the bulinefs of the lateft day and hour of my life, to glorify thee with my body, and with my fpirit, which are, and ought to be, for ever thine !

REFLECTIONS.—Ift, The Apostle proceeds to centure another grievous abuse among them. A litigious spirit prevailed, and, to the shame of their holy profession, brother went to law against brother, and that before the unbelievers, the heathen magistrates.

1. He rebukes them for thus going to law among themfelves, and that too, as appcars, ver. 2: 7. on matters of fmall importance, which, without great detriment to themfelves or families, they might have quietly paffed by, and borne the loss of, rather than feek a litigious redrefs: and, worft of all, they chose rather to carry their caufes before the heathen tribunals, than refer them to the decision of their own members, the faints of God; thereby giving the enemy occasion to triumph in their quarrels.

2. He fuggests, as an aggravation of their fault, the honour and dignity to which the faints of God must shortly be be exalted, as affeffors with the eternal Judge on his throne, while fallen angels and a guilty world ftand at his bar, and receive from his lips their eternal doom. And if fo, how ftrange muft it be that they fhould not now be able to judge of the fmalleft matters, and determine concerning the trivial affairs of this life. (See the Annotations.)

3. With a warm expollulation on their folly and perverfenels, he points out to them a remedy for the evil. ISpeak to your flame. In what an unbecoming and unchristian manner do you act? Is it fo, that there is not a wife man among you? No, not one that fhall be able to judge between his brethren? Where they boafted of fuch high attainments in wifdom, it would be very ftrange if they could not find a better umpire of their difputes among the whole body of their church, than to have recourfe to Gentile tribunals. There was therefore, no doubt, a fault in this matter; and far better was it for them to fuffer fome wrong and lofs, than to feek redrefs in fuch a way. But, inflead of this meeknefs, patience, and forgivenefs, ye do serong, and defraud, and that your brethren, to the great difhonour of your Christian profession. Note; All differences among Chriftians flould be amicably determined by their brethren: at least, in lesser matters, it were better to quit our right than have recourse to the wrangling bar.

2dly, The Apostle, having warned them against fome particular offences, passes on to enumerate a black catalogue, of which they had formerly been guilty, and under the power of which, whoever continued to walk, he never could inherit the kingdom of God.

1. The fins mentioned are fornication, idolatry, adultery, effeminacy and lafeivioufnefs, fodomy, theft, avarice, drunkennefs, reviling, extortion, crimes which, if indulged, muft neceffarily exclude the foul from any part in the kingdom of grace, and for ever banifh it from the prefence of God in glory.

2. He warns them against all felf-delusion in this matter. There was a lie in their right hand, if they flattered themfelves with any vain imaginations that they had yet hope towards God, while walking in such abominations; which then, now, and for ever, if not forsaken and forgiven, must inevitably destroy both body and soul in hell.

3. He reminds them of the bleffed change which had pafied upon them, that they might not again return unto folly. Such were fome of you. But glory be to God's rich and boundlefs grace, ye are washed, but ye are fanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God: ye are washed in the Fountain opened for fin and uncleannefs: by the atoning Blood of the adored Redeemer your iniquities are pardoned, great and aggravated as they were; and you are not only accounted righteous, but made pure in heart by the mighty operation of the Divine Spirit, and in body, foul, and spirit renewed, that you might be made meet for the inheritance among the faints in light. Note; (1.) The greatest crimes exclude none from falvation who fly to the atoning blood of Jefus. In him there is grace abounding for the chief of finners. (2.) All who are juftified by grace, are in a bleffed meafure fanctified by the Spirit. We deceive ourfelves, if we think that we have an interest in the one, if we do not experience the effectual operation of the other. (3.) Nothing is fo strong an argument to a genuine Christian to fly from fin, as the remembrance of the mercy that he has tasted, and of the ransform which has been paid.

adly, As fome at Corinth appeared to have too light thoughts of the fin of fornication which the Apostle ranked under the damning fins, and feem to have fet it on a footing only with the meats forbidden to the Gentile converts, (Acts, xv. 29.) the Apoltle strongly fets himself to fhew their dangerous error. With regard to meats forbidden by the Levitical law, or offered to idols, all things are lawful unto me, which Christ has not forbidden, and are not in their own nature finful; but all things are not expedient; even in indifferent matters, for the fake of others, it is right to forego our Christian liberty. All things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any, fo as to have my affections enflaved by them, or to have my confeience fubjected to any human arbitrary authority. Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; all wholefome food is defigned for our use; but these are things of trivial confequence, fince God fhall thortly deftroy both it and them. In the eternal world the glorified will not need thefe bodily refreshments, for they shall hunger no more, nor thirst any more: but respecting fornication, the matter is very different; though the belly is not at all defiled by meats, the body is by fornication.

He urges this matter by various arguments.

1. Now the body is not for fornication; it was not made to be profituted to impurity; but for the Lord, to be employed for his glory, and the Lord for the body, who, as the bridegroom of his church and people, requires their bodies as well as fouls to be under his holy government. And,

2. God hath bith raifed up the Lord Jefus from the dead, that his quickened body might be the pledge and earneft of our refurrection; and will also raife up us by his own power: our bodies therefore, which, if we be faithful to his grace, fhall be fashioned like to his glorious body, ought not now to be polluted by fornication and uncleannefs.

3. Know ye not, that your badies are the members of Chrift? Through faith we are united to Chrift as our living head, and compose a part of his body mystical: fball I then take the members of Chrift, and make them the members of an barlot? How horrid the very fuggestion! and every Christian heart, with detestation of the thought, cannot but cry, God forbid! What, know ye not that he which is joined to an barlot, is one body? Such an unhallowed connection is most contrary to the union of the heart with Jefus: for two, faith he, fball be one flefb. A fornicator becomes united to a harlot, and not to Christ; but he that is joined unto the Lord, in real vital union of heart and person, is one fpirit, actuated and influenced influenced by the fame divine Spirit, which in all its fulnels dwells in our exalted head. Therefore flee fornication, as one of the highest indignities that we can offer to the Lord, of whole body we are members. Note; In temptations to lewdnefs, flight is often the only prefervative.

4. Every other fin that a man doeth, is without the body, and terminates upon an object without himfelf, not immediately defiling the body, though it brings guilt upon his foul; but he that committeth fornication finneth against his own hely; not only offending against. God and his neighbour, but immediately contaminating his own flesh by such an abomination.

5. What shall I farther urge? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghoft which is in you, which ye have of God? And, fince he hath been pleafed to take up his abode in your hearts, ye are not your own, but bound to yield yourfelves to his will and guidance, and to do nothing which should provoke the divine Inhabitant to quit his temple with abhorrence.

6. For, to finish with one argument more, ye are bought with a price, even the amazing price of a Redeemer's blood, from the curie of the law, and the bondage of corruption, that you might be reftored to the fervice and enjoyment of the bleffed God. Therefore, fince this was one great end of your redemption, glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's, nor dare to alienate your affections from him, or to difhonour your bodies by fornication, which should be employed in his bleffed work, and wholly and unrefervedly devoted to his glory.

CHAP. VII.

TO understand the precepts and advices contained in this chapter, it is necessary to know, that among the Jews, every perfon whose age and circumstances allowed him to matry, was reckoned to break the divine precept, increase and multiply, if he continued to live in a fingle state-A doctrine which the falfe teacher, who was a Jew, may be supposed to have inculcated, to ingratiate himself with the Corinthians. Some of the Grecian philosophers however affirmed, that if a man would live happily, he should not marry. Nay, of the Pythagoreans, fome reprefented the matrimonial connection as inconfistent with purity. The brethren at Corinth, therefore, on the one hand, being urged to marriage by the doctrine of the Judaizers, and on the other, being reftrained from marriage by the doctrine of the philosophers, and by the inconveniences attending marriage in the then perfecuted state of the church, they Judged it prudent to write to the Apostle the letter mentioned, ver. 1. in which they defired him to inform them, whether they might not, without fin, abstain from marriage altogether? and whether fuch as were already married might not diffolve their marriages, on account of the evils 10 which, in their perfecuted state, they were exposed ? The letter, in which the Corinthians proposed these and lome other questions to the Apostle, has long ago been loft. But had it been preserved, it would have illustrated many passages of the Epistles to the Corinthians, which are now dark, because we are ignorant of the circumfances to which the Apostle in these passages alluded.

To the question, concerning the obligation which perfons grown up and fettled in the world, were under to enter into the married state, St. Paul answered, That although, in the prefent diftress, it was better for them to have no matrimonial connections at all, yet, to avoid fornication, every one who could not live chaftely in a fingle ftate, he told them, was bound to marry; for which reafon, he explained to them the duties of married perfons, as expressly established by the commandment of God, ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.-But what he was farther to fay in answer to their question, he told them, was not an injunction, like his declaration of the duties of marriage, but only an advice fuited to their prefent condition, ver. 6 .- Namely, he wished that all of them could, like him, live continentlyunmarried, ver. 7.-Then more particularly addreffing the widowers and widows among them, he affured them that it would be good for them, if, in the then perfecuted state of the church, they could live chaftely unmarried, as he was doing, ver. 8.-But at the fame time he told them, if they found that too difficult, it was better for them to marry than to be tormented with evil defires, ver. 9.

Next, in answer to their question concerning the feparation and divorce of married perfons, the Apoltle confidered, first, the cafe of the married who were both of them Christians. To these, his command and the command of Christ was, that the wife depart not from her husband, on account of the inconveniences attending marriage, ver. 10.-However, if any wife, finding the troubles of a married flate, in those times of persecution, too great for her to bear, separated herself from her husband, she was in her state of separation to marry no other man, because her marriage still subsisted. And if, on trial, she found she could not live continently in a ftate of feparation, the was to be reconciled to her hufband. In like manner, a hufband was not, on account of the inconveniences attending a married state, to put away his wife. Or, having put her away, if he could not live chaftely without her, he was to be reconciled to her, ver. 11. But the last advice above given, respected only those times of most dreadful perfecution.

In the fecond place, with respect to such Christians as were married to heathens, he told them, that what he was going to fay was his commandment, and not the Lord's; meaning that the Lord, while on earth, had given no precept concerning fuch a cafe. These persons, the Apolile, by infpiration, ordered to live together, if the heathen party was willing fo to do; becaule difference of religion does not diffolve marriage, ver. 12, 13 .- And, to shew the propriety of continuing fuch marriages when made, he told them, that the infidel huiband was fanctified, or rendered a fit huiband to his believing wife, by the ftrength of his affection to her, notwithstanding his religion was different from her's; and that, by the fame affection, an infidel Еe wife wife was fanctified to her believing hufband, ver. 14 .-- But if the infidel party who proposed to depart, maliciously deferted his or her believing mate, notwithstanding due means of reconciliation had been ufed; the marriage was, by that defertion, diffolved with respect to the Christian party willing to adhere, and the latter was at liberty to marry another, ver. 15.-In the mean time, to induce perfons of both fexes who were married to heathens, to continue their marriages, he told them, it might be a means of converting their infidel yoke-fellows, ver. 16.

In the first age, some of the brethren, entertaining wrong notions of the privileges conferred on them by the Gospel, fancied that on their becoming Christians, they were freed from their former political as well as religious obligations. To remove that error, the Apostle, after advifing the Corinthians to continue their marriages with their unbelieving spouses, ordered every Christian to continue in the flate in which he was called to believe; becaufe the Gofpel fets no perfon free from any innocent political, and far lefs from any natural obligation, ver. 17. -The converted Jew was still to remain under the law of Moles, as the municipal law of Judea: and the converted Gentile was not to become a Jew, by receiving circumcifion, ver. 18 .- Because in the affair of men's falvation, no regard is had either to circumcifion or uncircumcifion, but to the keeping of the commandments of God, ver. 19. Every one therefore, after his conversion, was to remain in the political state in which he was converted, ver. 20. -In particular, flaves after their conversion were to continue under the power of their masters as before, unless they could lawfully obtain their freedom, ver. 21.-And a free man was not to make himfelf a flave, ver. 22.-The reafon was, becaufe being bought by Chrift with a price, if he became a flave of men, he might find it difficult to ferve Christ, his fuperior Master, ver. 23 .- And therefore the Apostle, a third time, enjoined them to remain in the condition wherein they were called, ver. 24.-This earnestnefs he shewed, for this reason among others, because if the brethren difobeyed the good laws of the countries where they lived; or, if fuch of them as were flaves ran away from their masters after their conversion, the Gospel would have been calumniated as encouraging licentioufnefs.

In the third place, the Apostle confidered the cafe of those young perfons who never had married, perhaps becaufe they were not well established in the world, or were still in their father's family. This class of perfons of both fexes, he called virgins, and declared that he had no commandment of the Lord concerning them: by which he meant, that Chrift, during his ministry on earth, had given no commandment concerning them; but the Apoltle gave his judgement on their cafe, as one who had obtained mercy from the Lord to be faithful: that is, he gave his judgement as an Apoltle, who had received infpiration to enable him faithfully to declare Christ's with, ver. 25,-Beginning therefore with the cafe of the male virgin, he declared it to be good, in the prefent diftrefs, for fuch to remain unmarried, ver. 26 .- But if they married, they were not to feek to be loofed. And if their wives happened to die, he told them, they would find it prudent not to feek a fecond wife, ver. 27.-At the fame time he declared, that if fuch perfons married again they did not The fame he declared concerning the female virgin: fin. only both the one and the other would find fecond marriages, in that time of perfecution, attended with great . bodily trouble, ver. 23.

By the way, to make the Corinthians lefs folicitous about prefent pleasures and pains, the Apostle put them in mind of the brevity of life; and from that confideration, exhorted them to beware of being too much elevated with prosperity, or too much dejected with adverfity, ver. 29, 30, 31.—And to fnew that he had good reafons for advising both fexes against marriage while the perfecution continued, he observed, that the unmarried man, being free from the cares of a family, had more time and opportunity to pleafe the Lord; whereas the married man was obliged to mind the things of the world, that he might please his wife, ver. 32, 33 .- The same things he observed concerning wives and unmarried women, ver. 34. And told them, that he gave them these advices, and pointed out to them the inconveniences of a marriage flate, together with the advantages of a fingle life, not to throw a bond upon them; but to lead them to do what was comely, and well befitting their Christian profession, without constraint, ver. 35.

Laftly, with respect to female virgins who were in their fathers' families, and under their fathers' power, the Apostle pointed out to the fathers of fuch virgins the confiderations which were to determine them, whether they would give their daughters in marriage, or keep them fingle, ver. 36-39. But see in the critical notes another view of the fubject noticed in this paragraph.

This long discourse the Apostle concluded, with declaring that all women, whether old or young, are by their marriage covenant bound to their huibands as long as their hufbands live. But if their hufbands die, they may marry a fecond time. Yet he gave it as his opinion, that they would be more happy if they remained widows, confidering the perfecution to which they were exposed. And in fo faying, he told them he was fure he spake by the Spirit of God, ver. 39, 40.

Ver. 1. Now concerning the things, &c.] The chief bufinels of the foregoing chapter we have feen to be, the leffening the credit of the falfe Apostle, and the extinguishing of that faction. What follows is in answer to some questions which they had proposed to St. Paul. This chapter contains conjugal matters; wherein he diffundes from marriage those who have the gift of continence, confidering the prefent unsettled . · ...

Common fenfe requires us thus to limit the Apostle's expression; for it would be a most flagrant abfurdity to suppose that St. Paul withed marriage might entirely cease. It shows, therefore, how unfair and improper it is in various cafes to firain the Apoftle's words to the utmoft rigour, as if he perpetually ufed the moft critical exactnets. See Doddridge and Whitby.

Ver. 10. And unto the married I command, &c.] The translation published by the English Jesuits at Bourdeaux has it, To these who are united in the facrament of marriage; which we mention as one inflance selected from a number, of the diffionesty of that translation, and of the subtility of the translators.

See on ver. 6.

Ver. 13. Let her not leave him] The Greek word being the fame both in this and the 12th verfe, though it be rendered put away in that, and leave in this, and being directed both to the man and woman, feems to intimate the fame power and fame act of difmiffing in both; and confequently it should have been rendered put away in both places. See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 14. Is fanclified] The words fanctified, boly, and unclean, are used here by the Apostle in the Jewish sense. The Jews called all that were Jews holy, and all others unclean. 'Thus proles genita extra fanctitatem, was, " a « child begotten by parents, while they were yet heathens." Genita intra sanctitatem, was, " a child begotten by parents " after they were profelytes." The meaning of this verfe is as follows: "For, in fuch a cafe as this, the unbeliev- (Quart form " ing hufband is fo fanctified to the wife, and the unbe- Definition ) « lieving wife is fo fanclified to the hufband, that their " matrimonial converse is as lawful, as if they were both ss of the fame faith, otherwife your children, in these mixed " cafes, were unclean, and muit be looked upon as unfit to « be admitted to those peculiar ordinances, by which the " feed of God's people are diffinguished : But now they " are confelledly hely, and are readily admitted to baptifm " in all our churches, as if both the parents were Christi-" ans; so that the cafe, you see, is in effect decided by E e 2 " this

" this prevailing practice." This one paffage is of great force to establish the use of infant baptism, and prove it even an apostolical practice; and this is the fense in which the ancient Christians understood and explained the text. Should those who are against infant baptism think this explication to be a modern invention, merely to fupport a fystem, the commentaries of St. Augustin, and others who lived long before the rife of the people called Baptifts, will be a fufficient refutation of fuch a fuspicion. Should it be fupposed that boly fignifies legitimate, and that unclean denotes illegitimate or bascards ;--- not to urge that this fenfe of the phrase is not warranted by Scripture,-the argument will not bear it: for it would be reafoning in a circle, and proving a thing by itfelf, to fay that the marriage of the parents was lawful or not diffolved, because the children were not baftards; whereas all who thought the marriage of the parents to be unlawful or diffolved, must of courfe efteem the children to be baftards. See Locke, Hammond, Bingham's Antiq. Wall on Infant Baptifm, part i. ch. 19. and Elfner, vol. ii. p. 94.

Ver. 15. Is not under bondage, &c.] That is, fays Hilary, "The Chriftian in this cafe is free to marry to another "Chriftian." "He is free," fays Photius, "to depart, becaufe the other has diffolved the marriage." "If he depart," fay Chryfoltom, Ecumenius, and Theophylact, becaufe thou wilt not communicate with him in his infidelity, be thou divorced, or quit the yoke, &c." But it must be remembered, that the prefent fubject refers only to marriages between Chriftians and those who were professively heathens. A brother or fister, in the cafe above mentioned, after all due means of peace and reconciliation have been in vain attempted, (for God hath called us to peace,) is not enflaved.

Ver. 16, 17. For what knoweff thou, &c.] Continue with your infidel ipoufes who are willing to dwell with you; for how knoweff thou, O Christian wife, whether thou shalt convert thy husband, (fee 1 Pet. iii. 1.) and how knoweff theu, O Christian husband, whether thou shalt convert thy wife, if thou continue with her. But, though this should not be the cafe, yet as God hath distributed to every one his lot, and in the state wherein the Lord Christ hath called every one, fo let him continue, fulfilling the duties thereof, unlefs he can change his condition lawfully. And fo in all the churches I ordain.

Ver. 18. Is any man called being circumcifed?] This is a very pertinent digreffion, as it fo directly contradicts the notion which prevailed among the Jews, that embracing the true religion diffolved all the relations which had before been contracted; whereas the Apoftle here declares, that the Gofpel left them in this refpect juft as it found them; increasing, instead of leffening, the obligations they were under to a faithful and affectionate difcharge of their correspondent duties. The word  $i \pi_{10} \omega \omega \sigma \theta \omega$  has an evident relation to attempts like those referred to 1 Maccab. i. 15. which it is not neceffary more particularly to illustrate. See Doddridge, Hammond, and Wall.

Ver. 20. Let every man abide in the fume calling, &c.] It is plain from what immediately follows, that this is not an absolute command; but only fignifies, that a man should not think himfelf difcharged by the privilege of his Chriftian ftate, and the franchifes of the kingdom of Chrift into which he was entered, from any ties or obligations that he was under as a member of the civil fociety. The thinking themfelves freed by Christianity from those ties, was a fault, it feems, which those Christians at Corinth were very apt to run into; for St. Paul thinks it neceffary to guard them against this prejudice three times in the compass of seven verses; and, in the form of a direct command, enjoins them not to change their condition or state of life: whereby he manifeftly intends that they fhould not change, upon a prefumption that Christianity gave them a new or peculiar liberty to do fo; for, notwithstanding the Apostle's positively bidding them to remain in the fame condition in which they were at their conversion, it is yet certain, that it was lawful for them, as well as others, to change, where it was lawful for them to change had they not been Chriftians. See Locke.

Ver. 21. Being a fervant] That is, a flave. Ufe it rather, implies, that if a man could obtain his freedom, he might lawfully defire it; but if he could not, he was not to look upon it as a mark of the difpleafure of God. The word 'Ameneu'Seg26, rendered freed-man, in Latin Libertus, fignifies

22 For he that is called in the Lord, being a fervant, is the Lord's  $\dagger$  freeman: likewife alfo he that is called, being free, is Christ's fervant.

23 'Ye are bought with a price; <sup>2</sup> be not ye the fervants of men.

24 Brethren, let every man, wherein he is called, therein 'abide with God.

25 <sup>b</sup>Now, concerning virgins, I have no commandment of the Lord: yet I give my judgment as one that hath <sup>c</sup> obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful.

26 I suppose therefore that " this is good for the prefent distress, I fay, that it is good for a man fo to be.

27 Art thou bound unto a wife? feek not to be loofed. Art thou loofed from a wife? feek not a wife.

28 ° But and if thou marry, thou hast not finned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not finned: nevertheles, such shall have trouble in the flesh; but I spare you.

29 But this I fay, brethren, ' the time is fhort. It remaineth that " both they that have wives be as though they had none;

fgnifies not fimply a free-man, but one who, having been a flave, has had his freedom given him by his mafter. See Locke and Clarke.

Ver. 23. Ye are bought with a price] Slaves were bought and fold in the market, as cattle are, and the laws of the Roman Empire confidered them as the property of the purchalers. This therefore is a reason for what the Apostle adviled, ver. 21. that they should not be flaves to men, that is, not make themselves the slaves of men, because Chrift had paid a price for them, and they belonged to him. But he tells them in general, in the next verse, that nothing in any man's civil estate or right is altered by his becoming a Chriftian. See Locke. According to Dr. Whitby the meaning is, " Are you redeemed from fervitude? Do not fell yourlelves for flaves again." It is indeed probable, that the Apofile does counfel Christians against becoming flaves, if it could be prevented; and with great reason; as it was a circumstance which seemed less suitable to the dignity of the Christian profession, and must expose them to many incumbrances and interruptions in duty, especially on the fabbath, and other feafons of religious affembly,-befides the danger of being present at domestic idolatrous facrihers, or being ill-treated if they refused their compliance. The interpretation, however, feems objectionable, because the advice is unneceffarily reftrained thereby to those flaves who had been redeemed ; which plainly as well fuited those who had their freedom given them; and indeed fuited all Christians, who never had been slaves at all, and who might more eafily have been prevailed upon by their poverty to bring themfelves into a condition, the evils and inconveniences of which they did not thoroughly know .--If a flate of flavery be fo inconvenient for the practice and unworthy the dignity of the Christian profession,-in how homible a light must they stand, who call themselves Chriftians, and yet carry on an infamous traffick, in order to enfive, and reduce to the most complicated distress, millions of their fellow-creatures ! See Mr. Sharp's thort account of Africa, and of the Slave-trade.

Ver. 25. Now, concerning virgins] St. Paul by virgins evidently means those of both fexes who are in a ftate of celibacy. It is probable that he had formerly diffuaded them from marriage, in the present fituation of the church. (See the next note.) It seems they were uneasy under this, (ver. 28 and 35.) and therefore sent forme questions to St. Paul about it: In answer to which, from ver. 25. to 37. he gives directions to the unmarried about their marrying or not marrying: in ver. 38. he address himself to parents about marrying their daughters; and then ver. 39, 40. speaks of widows. When he fays, I have no commandment of the Lord, he means, "I have no express or positive commandment upon this subject in any of Christ's discourses transmitted to us."

Ver. 26. For the prefent diffrefs] This must certainly refer to the prevalence of perfecution at that time; for nothing (as we have before remarked) can be more abfurd, than to imagine that an infpired Apostle would in the general difcountenance marriage; confidering that it was expressly agreeable to a divine inftitution, and of effential importance to the existence and happiness of all future generations. See Locke, and Doddridge.

Ver. 29. The time is (bort] " Is contracted within very narrow limits." The word outeraduete's properly imports this, being a metaphor taken from furling or gathering up a fail. The Apoftle probably faid this from a prophetic view of the approaching perfecution under Nero; while in its general import it may respect the flortness of our duration in this world; which should guard us against too fond au attachment to any earthly relation or possible. Some would render this clause, The time, as to what remains, is short; when both they, &cc." See Hammond, Grotius, and Heylin.

wept not; and they that rejoice as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy as though they possefied not;

31 And they that use this world as not abufing it: for the fashion of this world passet away.

32 But I would have you "without carefulnefs." He that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may pleafe the Lord:

33 But he that is married careth for the things that are of the world, how he may please bis wife.

34 There is difference al/o between a wife and a virgin. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that fhe may be holy <sup>k</sup> both in body and in fpirit : but fhe that is married careth for the things of the world, how fhe may pleafe her hufband.

35 And this I fpeak for your own profit; not that I may caft a fnare upon you, but 'for that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without diffraction.

36 But if any man think that he behaveth himfelf uncomely toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of ber age, and need so require, let him do what he will, he finneth not : let them matry.

37 Neverthelefs, he that ftandeth fteadfaft in his heart, having no neceffity, but hath power over his own will, and hath fo decreed in his heart that he will keep his virgin, doth well.

Ver. 31. As not abufing it.] The word Karaxy subset does not here fignify abufing in our fenfe of the word, but intently ufing,—not carrying the enjoyments of it to any excefs; for the whole fcheme and fashion of this world pasfes off, and is gone like a fcene in a theatre, which prefently thifts; or a pageant in fome public proceffion, which, how gaudily foever it be adorned, to ftrike the eyes of fpectators, is ftill in motion, and prefently difappears, to fhew itfelf for a few moments to others. The reader will obferve great elegance and beauty in this comparison: See1 John ii. 17. Wall, Doddridge, and Locke; the latter of whom thinks that all, from the beginning of ver. 28. to the end of the prefent verfe, fhould be looked upon as a parenthefis.

Ver. 34, 35. How file may please her husband, &c.] The Apostle in this text, and the counterpart to it, feems to declare, that fingle perfons of either fex have generally opportunities for devotion beyond those who are married, even in the most peaceful times of the church; and that a diversity of humours, both in men and women, makes it difficult for them to pleafe each other fo thoroughly as is necessary in order to make a married life perfectly delightful. So that it intimates a counfel to fingle people to value and improve their advantages; and to married people to watch against those things that would enfnare them, and injure their peace and comfort. The word Beizer, which we translate inare in the next verfe, fignifies a cord, which poffibly the Apostle might use here for binding, according to the language of the Hebrew school: and then his discourse runs thus, " Though I have declared my opinion, that it is best for a virgin to remain unmarried, in the present distres, yet I bind it not; that is to fay, I do not declare it to be unlawful to marry." In the word ivoxymov, comely, he feems to intimate, that they were now in circumstances, wherein God did as it were exact a peculiar feverity from all their thoughts; and that it was a time to think of the trials of martyrdom, rather than the endearments of human paffions. The word A  $\pi e \omega \pi a \omega s$  is rendered in our translation by the addition of feveral words. The fentence would be rendered better, for that which is comely and decent in the Lord, without violent confiraint. See Locke, Doddridge, and Knatchbull.

Ver. 36, 37. Toward his virgin.] The word Παρθένου feems here, fays Mr. Locke, used for the virgin state, and not for the perfon of a virgin. Whether there be examples of the like use of it, he adds, I know not; and therefore I propose it as my conjecture upon these grounds: First, because the resolution of mind here spoken of must be in the perfon to be married, and not in the father, who has the power over the perfon concerned. Secondly, the neceffity of marriage can only be judged of by the perfons themfelves. A father cannot feel the child's fenfations. Thirdly, hath power over his own will, ver. 37. must either fignify, "can govern his own defires, - is maîter of his own will," or "has the difpolal of himfelf;" that is, is free from the father's power of disposing of his children in marriage. But the first cannot be meant, because it is sufficiently expressed before by fleadfast in his heart; and afterwards too by decreed in his heart. I think the words fhould be translated, hath a power concerning his own will; that is to fay, concerning what he willeth : for if St. Paul meant, a power over his own will, one might think he would have expressed that thought, as he does ch. ix. 12. and Rom. ix. 21. without the word mepi, or by the preposition emi, as it is Luke ix. 1. Fourthly, because if keep his virgin had here fignified, "keep his children from marrying," the expretiion would have been more natural, had he used the word TERVA, which fignifies both fexes, rather than the word  $\pi a_0 \theta_{ivos}$ , which belongs only to the female. If therefore the word  $\pi \alpha e^{\theta i \omega s}$ be taken abstractedly for virginity, the 36th verse must be underftood thus: "But if any one think it a fhame to pais the flower of his age unmarried, and finds it neceffary to marry, let him do as he pleases, he fins not; let such marry." St. Paul feems to obviate an objection which might be made against his diffuading from marriage; namely, that as her hufband liveth : but if her hufband be the Spirit of God.

doeth well; but he that giveth ber not in marriage doth better.

28 "So then he that give h ber in marriage dead, the is at liberty to be married to whom fhe will; 'only in the Lord.

that it might be an indecency which one would be guilty of, if one should live unmarried past one's prime, and afterwards be obliged to marry: To which he answers, That no body should abstain, upon the account of being a Christian, but these who are of a steady resolution, who are at their own disposal, and have fully determined it in their own minds. The word Kanis, rendered well, ver. 37. fignifies not imply good, but preferable, as in ver. 1. 8. 26. See Locke, Heinhus, Doddridge, on ver. 25. and compare this note of Mr. Locke's with the introduction to this chapter.

Ver. 38. So then, he that giveth her in mairiage, &c.] If the word wapbing be taken in the fense proposed in the last note, it is necessary in this verse to follow those copies which read Taui Luv, marriage, for enyapi Luv, giving in marringe .- So then, he that marrieth, doth well; but he that marrith not, doth better. See Locke, Mill, and Wetstein.

Ver. 39. Only in the Lord.] " Only let her take care that the marry in the Lord; and that, retaining a fence of the importance of her Christian obligation, she do not choole a partner for life of a different religion from herfelf." See Doddridge.

Ver. 40. I think also that I have the Spirit of God. ] This kems to glance at his adversaries in the church, who might be of a different opinion. What he writes was to answer queffions proposed. It is very unreasonable for any to infer hence, that St. Paul was uncertain whether he was inspired or not: whereas this is only a modest way of speaking; and low in even, I think I have, or I appear to have, often fignifies the fame with . Zw, I have. Comp. Luke viii. 18. with Matth. xiii. 12. 1 Cor. 1. 12. xiv. 37. and fee Heylin and Doddridge.

Inferences. The decisions of the holy Apostle in the chapter before us are given with fuch gravity, feriousmis, and purity, that one would hope, delicate as the fubject of them is, they will be received without any of that unbecoming levity, which the wantonness of some minds may be ready to excite on fuch an occasion. It becomes us humbly to adore the divine wifdom and goodness manifested in the formation of the first human pair, and in keeping up the different fexes, through all fucceeding ages, in fo just <sup>2</sup> proportion, that every man might have his own wife, and very woman her own hufband; that the inftinct of nature might, fo far as it is neceffary, be gratified without guilt, and an hely feed be fought, which, being trained up under proper discipline and instruction, might supply the wastes which death is continually making, and be accounted to the ligion, for the fake of which alone it is defirable that human treatures thould fubfift, may be transmitted through every <sup>2</sup>6°, and earth become a nurfery for heaven. ver. 2-4.

With these views should marriages ever be contracted, when it is proper they should be contracted, ver. 5. Let none imagine the ftate itfelf to be impure, and let it always be preferved undefiled; all occasion of irregular defire being prudently guarded against by those who have entered into it. And let all Chriftians, in every relation, remember that the obligations of devotion are common to all, and that Chrift and his Apostles feem to take it for granted that we shall be careful to secure proper scafons for fasting, as well as for prayer, fo far as may be needful, in order that the fuperior authority of the mind over the body may be exercifed and maintained, and that our petitions to the throne of grace may be offered with greater intenfenefs, copiousness, and ardour.

From the Apostle's reasonings and exhortations, ver. 14. we may learn a becoming folicitude to contribute as much as we poffibly can to the Christian edification of each other; and especially let this be the care of the nearest relatives in What can be more defirable, than that the husband life. may be fanctified by the wife, and the wife by the husband ?-May all prudent care be taken in contracting marriages, as to the religious character of the intended partner for life; and in those already contracted, where this precaution has been neglected, or where the judgement formed feems to have been mistaken, let all confiderations of prudence, of religion, of affection, concur to animate to a mutual care of each other's foul,-that most important effort of love, that most folid expression and demonstration of friendship. Nor let the improbability of fuccess be pleaded in excuse for neglect, even where the attempt must be made by the fubordinate fex. A possibility should be sufficient encouragement; and furely there is no need to fay, How knoweff thou, O wife, but thou mayeft fave him, whole falvation, next to thine own, must be most defirable to thee ? ver. 16.

Let us all ftudy the dutics of those relations in which God hath placed us, and walk with him in our proper callings; not defiring fo much to exchange, as to improve them, vcr. 24. His wife providence hath distributed the part; it is our wifdom, it will be our happinefs, to act in humble congruity to that diffribution. Surely the Apofile could not have expressed in stronger terms his deep conviction of the fmall importance of human diffinctions than he here does, when speaking of what seems to great and generous minds the most miserable lot,-even that of a Mave, He fays, care not for it, ver. 21. If liberty itfelf, the first of all temporal bleffings, be not of fo great importance. as that a man, bleffed with the higheft hopes and glorious confolations of Christianity, should make himfelf very folicitous about it,-of how much less importance are those comparatively trifling diffinctions, on which many lay fo disproportionate, so extravagant a strefs !

CHAP. VIII.

To abflain from meats offered to idols. We must not abufe our Christian liberty to the offence of our brethren; but must bridle our knowledge with charity.

[Anno Domini, 57.]

OW, as 'touching things offered unto idols, we know that 'we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth.

2 'And, if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know.

3. But, if any man love God, the fame is known of him.

* Acts, 15. 20, 29. Rev. 2. 14. Ver. 10. Ch. 10. 19-21, 25, 27. Ver. 2, 4, 7. Rom. 14. 14, 22, 3, 10. <sup>c</sup> Ch. 13. 8, 12. Gal. 6. 3. 3 Tim. 1. 7. 6. 3, 4. <sup>d</sup> Exod. 33. 12. Num. 16. 5. Nah. 1. 7. Mat. 7. 23. Rom. 8. 29. & 11. 2. John, 10. 14. Gal. 4. 9. 2 Tim. 2. 19.

Let Christian fervants [for, bleffed be God, among us we have no flaves] remember their high privileges,—as the Lord's freed-men. Let Christian masters remember the restraint—as the Lord's fervants, ver. 22. and let the benefits of liberty, effecially when confidered in its afpect upon religion, be fo far valued, as not to be bartered away for any price which the enemies of mankind may offer in exchange.

But, above all, let us remember the infinite importance of maintaining the freedom of the mind from the bondage of corruption; and of keeping with all humble and chearful obfervance the commandments of God, ver. 19. While many express the warmest zeal for circumcifion or uncircumcifion, in defence of, or in opposition to, this or that mode or form of external worship, let our hearts be fet on what is most vital and effential in religion; and we shall find the happiest equivalent in the composure and fatisfaction of our own fpirit now, as well as in those abundant rewards which the Lord hath laid up for them that love him.

In the mean time obferve we the humility of the excellent Apoftle with pleafure. When he fpeaks of his fidelity in the miniftry, (ver. 25.) he tells us, he abtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful. Edified by fuch an example, let us afcribe to Chrift the praife, not only of our endowments, but of our virtues;---even to him, who worketh in us both to will and to do, of his own good pleafure.

Attentive to the affecting lefton which the Apostle here gives of the fbortnefs of time, (ver. 29.) let us ferioufly reflect upon the advantages and fnares of our refpective conditions in life, that fo we may improve the one, and escape, as far as poffible, all injury from the other. Those who are fingle will do well to employ their leifure for God, and to endeayour to collect fuch a flock of Christian experience as may fupport them, when the duties and difficulties, the cares and forrows of life fhall be multiplied. Those who are married, ought with mutual tender regard to endeavour to pleafe each other, and to render that relation into which Providence hath conducted them, as comfortable and agreeable as they may; (ver. 33, 34.) and whatever cares prefs upon their minds, or demand their attention, let them order their affairs with fuch difcretion, as that they may ftill fecure a due proportion of their time for the things of the Lord.

Should any in their confciences be perfuaded, that, by continuing fingle, they fhould beft answer the purposes of religion, and promote the good of their fellow-creatures, in conjunction with their own; let them do it. As for those who marry, whether a first or fecond time, let them do it in the Lord; acting in the choice of their most intimate friend and companion as the fervants of Chrift; who are defirous that their conduct may be approved by him, and that any avocations, and interruptions in his fervice, which may be occafioned, even in peaceful times, by marriage, may be in fome meafure balanced by the united prayers, prudent counfels, and edifying converse of those with whom they unite in this tender bond.

REFLECTIONS.—1st. In answer to fome cases of confcience, which the Corinthians had fent to the Apostle for his folution, he replies:

1. In the perfecuted flate of the church, and confidering the incumbrances which a married flate neceffarily produced, he fuggefts, that it would be well for those who had the gift of continence to keep themselves fingle.

2. Yet he was far from enjoining celibacy as a duty. Where the gift of continence was not poffeffed, and circumftances made it more eligible, it was advifeable that every man and woman fhould enter into the honourable eftate of marriage, with all conjugal fidelity and love cleaving alone to those with whom they are thus united. See the annotations.

3. The Apostle declares, I fpeak this by permiffion, as my advice, and not of commandment, as what is absolutely neceffary for every individual; not as if it was every man's duty to marry, who was thereto inclined; there were cafes and circumstances when perfons could beft judge for themfelves. For I would that all men were even as I myfelf, and could as contentedly continue in a flate of celibacy; but every man bath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and auother after that, according to their different difpofitions and conflitutions. I fay therefore to the unmarried and widows, it is good for them if, in these perilous times, they abide even as I, and can with fastery and fatisfaction continue fingle: otherwise, let them marry: this then becomes a duty, and it would be finful to neglect the ordinance of God.

2dly. As many who had been called in a conjugal flate, had partners who ftill continued in heathenifm, and divorces were common among the Jews, the Apostle, by immediate authority from his Lord, declares what was their duty in fuch circumstances.

1. Let not the wife depart from her husband. But if she depart voluntarily, or be dismissed through any quarrel, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband, whose regard it is her duty by all lawful means to endeavour to regain. And let not the husband put away his wife, on any consideration but the defilement of the marriage-bed. Note, Those who are married should defire and delight to make that that flate a comfort to each other : every breach involves both in mifery. Note, The voluntary departure of the wife from her hufband, intimated above, was at the beft but tolerated on account of those dreadful times of perfecution. It is certainly prohibited by our Lord, in Matt. v. 32. xix. 9. and Mark x.

4 As concerning therefore the eating of those we know that "an idel is nothing in the world, things that are offered in facrifice unto idols, and that 'there is none other God but one.

2. With regard to those who have partners that continue in heathenism, while they themselves are called to the knowledge of the truth, the following directions I give by the Spirit, the Lord having left no express command concerning the matter.

(1.) If any heathen wife or hufband choose to remain with their partner, who is converted to the faith of Chrift, the christian wife or husband must not separate themselves from the heathen on account of religion. And he fuggefts his reasons for what he enjoined : [1.] 'The flate is fanctified by the faith of either of the parties. The unbelieving byfand is fanctified by, or in, the wife, and the unbelieving wife is fandified by, or in, the hufband, they being one by vinue of the marriage union, which is therefore fanctified to the faithful perfon; elfe were your children unclean, and not entitled to the bleffings and privileges that belong to the vibble church; but now are they holy, capable of being reteived into the congregation of the faithful, and admitted to the feal of the covenant, as much as if they defcended from parents who were both Christians in profession. [2.] God bath called us to peace; and therefore, fo far as we can maintain it with our heathen relatives, we are bound to do it, and not make our different sentiments in religious matters the ground of contention and angry difpute: and though we wish they were even as we, yet should we not quarrel with them because they refuse to be of the fame mind with us, but bear with the perverseness and displeasure which they may testify against us on account of our profession. [3.] While thus walking in love, peace, and chaftity, what mowell thou, O wife, whether thou shalt fave thy husband? or bow knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt fave thy wife? and be made the inftrument of her conversion? But, whether this be the cafe or not, as God hath diffributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, in whatever state or relation, fo let him walk, as may most adorn his holy profellion; and fo ordain I in all churches, laying this down as a general rule, to be accommodated to particular cafes.

But, (2.) The cafe however is quite different, if the unbilizing depart, and, offended at their partner for embracing the gofpel, for that caufe refule any longer to dwell with them; and, all kind means being ufed, infift on a feparation; a brother or a fifter is not under bondage in fuch aifa, nor obliged to detain them, when they defire to depart. But this rule refers.only to profeffed Christians when married to profeffed Heathens. See the annotations.

3dly. The Apostle passes on to other cases.

1. Respecting circumcision. Is any man called being circuncifed, Jew or Profelyte? Let him not become uncircum-Vol. 12. cifed, or regret that he fubmitted to this rite. Is any one called in uncircumcifion? let him not become circumcifed, all these marks of peculiarity being abolished under the gospel. Jew and Gentile have now but one way to glory: Circumcifion is nothing, and uncircumcifion is nothing, of no avail at all to falvation; but the grand point is, the keeping of the commandments of God, from the divine principle of faith which worketh by love.

2. With regard to men's flations in life, Let every man abide in the fame calling wherein he was called, defiring no alteration in his circumstances, but fitisfied with the difpenfations of God's providence. Art thou called being a fervant ? care not for it ; as if because a fervant or flave, therefore the lefs acceptable to God. With him there is no respect of persons. But if thou mayest be made free, use it rather; if the Lord open a door for your liberty, thankfully accept it, in the mean time being refigned to wait his will. For he that is called in the Lord, being a fervant, is the Lord's free man, brought from the bondage of corruption to the most desirable freedom, even into the glorious liberty of the fons of God. Likewife alfo he that is called, being free, is Chrift's fervant : whatever our civil privileges may be, when we have taken the Lord for our Mafter, we are, as much as the meanest flave, bound to yield ourselves to him, obedient in all things. Ye are bought with a price, both one and the other with the fame price, even the blood of Jelus: be not ye therefore the fervants of men; but whenever their commands interfere with the will of your great Master, hesitate not a moment whom you shall obey. Upon the whole, brethren, this is my injunction; Let every man wherein he is called, whatever his station in life may be, therein abide with God, refigned to his will, aiming at his glory, maintaining communion with him, and looking up for grace to ferve him acceptably. Note, (1.) As our worldly circumstances are ordered by the divine appointment or permission, to repine is to rebel against God. (2.) No attainments in religion give us a right to any fuperiority in worldly things. Dominion is not founded in grace.

4thly. In answer to their question with regard to unmarried perfons, though our Lord had given no particular directions, yet the Apostle, under divine infpiration, delivers his judgment.

1. Confidering the troublefome times, and the prefent diftrefs that they were under, he advifes thole who with chaftity could, to continue fingle. If they were already married, they must be content in that flate, nor feek to loofe that indiffoluble bond; but if unmarried, they would do well not haftily to change their condition.

2. If any perfons found it more adviseable or necessary for them to marry, they would commit no fin in fo doing, marriage being honourable in all; only they would encumber themfelves more in the world, and in those days of perfecution expose themfelves to more dangerous trials. But he urges not the point, left he should bring them into Ff a fnare.

3. Whatever was their state, married or unmarried, he had one important charge to give them. This I fay, brethren, the time is flort, eternity is advancing fwiftly, and the days which are here allotted us draw to their end. Since therefore our great concern in this world is to prepare for a better, it remaineth that both they that have wives, be as though they had none; not fetting their affections on a dying world, or retarded from the purfuit of heavenly things by any engagements or attachments here below: and they that weep, as though they wept not ; restraining all inordinate grief for the loss of dearest relatives, or for any other afflictions, fince all prefent fufferings must fo quickly have an end : and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; confidering the transitory nature of all their worldly comforts, and therefore fitting loofe to them: and they that buy, as though they poffeffed not; not trufting in uncertain riches, nor placing their happiness in these possessions, but looking for a more enduring substance; and they that use this world, as not abufing it, to flatter their pride, or gratify their luxury : for the fashion of this world passet away; all things below are fleeting as the shadow, and will shortly vanish as the dream when one awaketh. Note, (1.) A deep fense of the vanity of time, and the importance of eternity, is needful to regulate both our joys and forrows, and to keep our affections difengaged from the objects of fense, which would otherwife enflave us. (2.) We are dying worms in a dying world : the longest life is but for a short time; every moment we are in jeopardy; and what is all the world to a dying man?

4. He fuggests the general reason on which he grounded the foregoing advice. I would have you without carefulnefs, not to lay a fnare upon you by enforcing celibacy, but that those who have the gift, may attend upon the Lord without distraction. The advantage of the unmarried state is this, that being lefs encumbered with workly cares, the fingle brother or fifter is more at leifure for the fervice of the Redecmer, and they can more entirely devote their time and talents, and employ both body and fpirit in his bleffed work : while married perfons must necessarily be more engaged in the care of a family, and the needful provision for them, and have the partners of their bosom to please in all lawful things, folicitous to promote their temporal and Note, (1.) (2) Our first defire should be to pleafe the Lord, and, whether married or fingle, to be holy both in body and fpirit.

sthly. The Apostle proceeds with farther directions -concerning marriage.

1. Concerning virgins. If any man think that he behaveth bimself uncomely towards his virgin by restraining his daughter or ward, who is disposed thereto, from marrying; if she pass the forwer of her age, and is come to years of maturity, and need fo require, and, on deliberating the matter, it feems most eligible that she should change her condition, let him do what he will, he finneth not in disposing of her; let him marry her to a proper partner. Nevertheless, he that standeth steadfast in his heart, resolved to keep his ward or daughter fingle, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath fo decreed in his heart, with her confent, that he will keep his virgin as the is, doeth well, and thews in fuch trying times a prudent care of her. So then, he that giveth her in marriage, when it becomes needful, doeth well; acts a lawful and commendable part : but he that giveth her not in marriage, doeth better ; provides more for her comfort, and keeps her more at her liberty to ferve the Lord.

Others suppose that The Eavles magheror signifies not his virgin, but the state of virginity, and give the sense, that if any man continued fingle beyond the usual time when it was thought reputable to marry, and afterwards should think that he had put an undue restraint upon himself, and fee caufe to change his condition, it would be lawful for him, even if advanced in years, to take a wife : for though it might be most commendable if he could keep his first purpofe, yet, if he find the state of wedlock needful, he is at liberty, and may marry. See the fubject handled at large in the annotations.

2. Concerning widows. The wife is bound by the law to her husband for life. But if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom the will; only in the Lord; careful not to be unequally yoked with an unbeliever, and giving her hand to no man, who has not, as far as the can judge, given his heart to Christ. But, in most cases, fue is happier if she so abide, after my judgment, and live unmarried; and, in what I here advise, I think alfo, whatever falfe teachers may fuggest, that I have the Spirit of God, and now fpeak under his immediate infpiration.

C H A P. VIII.

WHEN the heathens offered facrifices of fuch animals as were fit for food, a part of the carcafe was burnt on the altar, a part was given to the priest, and on the remainder the offerers feasted with their friends, either in the idol's temple, or at home. Sometimes also a part was fent as a prefent to fuch as they wished to oblige; and if the facrifice was large, a part of it was fold in the public market. To these idolatrous feasts, the heathens often invited the Christians of their acquaintance in Corinth; and fome of the brethren there, defirous of preferving the friendship of their neighbours, accepted these invitations; perhaps at the perfuasion of their falle teacher, who called it an innocent method of avoiding perfecution. They knew that an idel was nothing in the world : and therefore their partaking of the facrifice, even in the idol's temple, could not, they thought, be reckoned a worshipping of the idol. Belides, as they argued, fuch a feast was confidered by enlightened Christians as a common meal, which under the Gospel they were at liberty to eat; especially if they did it to thew their belief that idols have no existence as gods. i Mat. 11, 27. & 28. 18. Rom. 14. 0. John, 13. 13. Ch 12. 3. Eph. 4. 5. Phil. 2. 11. Acls, 2. 36. Eph. 1. 4-6. 1 Pet. Col. 1. 16, 17. Heb. 1. 2, 3. <sup>k</sup> Ch. 5. 11. & 10. 23 Rom. 14. 14. 23. • Or fer him. 1. 11. John, 1. 3. Col. 1. 16, 17. Heb. 1. 2, 3.

Thefe arguments, it is true, are not explicitly flated by the Apostle. But the things that he has written in this chapter and in chap. x. being direct confutations of them, we may believe that they were mentioned by the Corinthian brethren, in their letter referred to in chap. vii. 1.

Agreeably to this supposition, the Apostle begins his discourse concerning the eating of things facrificed to idols, with acknowledging that the generality of Christians had much more knowledge than the heathens. But at the fame time he told them, that knowledge often puffeth up individuals with pride, and makes them neglect the good of their neighbours. Whereas love leadeth one to edify his neighbour, ver. 1.-Next he declared, that whoever is vain of his knowledge, and makes an uncharitable use of it, knows nothing yet as he ought to know; because true knowledge always makes a man humble and charitable, ver. 2.-And that the way to attain true knowledge in religious matters, is to love God, who in time will make us know things, as we ought to know them, ver. 3 .- Having hid down these principles, the Apostle, in answer to the first argument, whereby the partaking, even in the idol's temple, of the facrifices offered there, was pretended to be julified, acknowledged that most Christians know an idol is nothing in the world; has no existence as a God, and no thare in the government of the world; and that there is no other God but one: and no other Lord but Jefus, ver. 4, 5, 6.—But at the fame time he told them, there were some weak brethren, who had not that knowledge, but believed idols to be real gods, who possessed fome thate in the government of the world; confequently, when they ate of the facrifices offered to idols, they did it with a conficience, or belief, of the existence of the idol, and of his power in human affairs. In them therefore the cating of fuch factifices was certainly an act of idolatry, whereby their confcience was defiled, ver. 7 .- Next, to the argument, that the things facrificed to idols, being meats the cating of which was lawful under the Gofpel, confequently that they might be eaten in any place, ver. 8. the Apostle replied, that in the use of their Christian liberty of eating all kinds of meats without diftinction, they were bound to take care not to lead the weak into fin, by their example, ver. 9.-This, he told them, they would certainly do, by eating the facrifices of idols. For, faid he, if a weak brother, who fancies an idol to be a real god, fee thee, who knoweft that it is no god, fitting at a feast on the factifice in the idol's temple, will not his ill-informed confcience be encouraged by the example to eat of that meat 2s facrificed to a real god ? ver. 10.-And thus, through an improper use of thy knowledge, shall thy weak brother commit idolatry, and perish, for whom Christ died, ver. 11. -Such a conduct, the Apostle termed a finning against the brethren and against Christ, ver. 12.-Then in a high itrain of Christian benevolence, he declared, that if his eating my kind of fleth occasioned his brother to fin, he would abitain from it all his life, ver. 13 .- By faying this, the Apoltle infinuated to the faction, that, whatever they might pretend, their real motives for joining the heathens in their idolatrous feasts were of a fentual kind. They loved good cheer and merriment. But, were it only for the falvation of their brethren, it was their duty willingly to have denied themfelves all fuch gratifications.

Here it is neceffary to observe, that the Apostle's defign, in this part of his letter, was, not to fnew the Corinthians the finfulnefs of fitting down with the heathens in an idol's temple, to feast on the facrifices offered there : that fubject he treats of in ch. x. But his defign was, to make them fenfible, that although it had been lawful for those who knew the truth concerning idols to partake of these feafts, they were bound to avoid them, because their weak brethren, who believed idols to have fome thare in the government of the world, would by their example be led to eat at thefe feasts as an act of worship, and so be guilty of idolatry.---The remaining arguments in vindication of the practice, together with the general question itself, concerning the lawfulnefs of eating in the temples, or elfewhere, meats that had been facrificed to idols, the Apostle confidered afterwards, chap. x.-See chap. xi. 5. note 1. where the reason of the Apostle's treating this subject hypothetically, in the part of his letter now under our confideration, is affigned, and applied for illustrating his treating hypothetically of women's praying and prophefying in the public affemblies for worship.

Ver. 1. Now as touching things, &c.] This chapter is concerning the eating of things offered to idols : wherein one may guess by St. Paul's answer, that they had written to him; that they knew their Christian liberty herein; that they knew that an idol was nothing, and therefore argued that they did well to fhew their knowledge of the nullity of the heathen gods, and their difregard of them, by eating promiscuoully, and without feruple, things offered to them. Upon which the defign of the Apostle here feems to be, to take down their opinion of their knowledge, by fhewing them, that notwithstanding all that knowledge on which they prefumed, and with which they were puffed up, yet the eating of those facrifices did not recommend them to God, ver. 8. and that they funned through want of charity, by offending their weak brother. This feems plainly, from ver. 1, to 3. and 11, 12. to be the defign of the Apoille's answer, and not to resolve the case of eating things offered to idols in its full latitude; for then he would have profecuted it more at large, and not have deferred the doing fo to ch. x. where, under another head, he treats of it more particularly. See Locke; who obferves, that to continue the thread of the Apostle's discourse, the 7th verse must be confidered as joined to the 1st, and all the rest looked on as a parenthefis. Elfner, with many other commentators, allow that there is a parenthefis here; but they think it begins in the middle of ver. 1. and ends after the  $Ff \mathbf{a}$ firft first claufe of the 4th.—We all have knowledge;—we know that an idol is nothing, &c.—We know that we all have knowledge, means, "We know that we all, as Christians, have "that general knowledge of the vanity of those fictitious "deities, of which some are ready to boast as if it were "an extraordinary matter, and which they are at some "times in danger of abusing, by making it the founda-"tion of libbyties which may be very detrimental. But "let it be remembered, that knowledge often puffeth up, and is the occasion of great felf-conceit and arrogance; "whereas it is considerate love and gentle tenderness which "edifies, and has such a happy effect in building up the "church of Christ." See Locke, Doddridge, Elsner, and Bos.

Ver. 3. The fame is known of him] That is approved by him. Such a man has attained the true knowledge of God, and will be fure of his approbation and favour. Mr. Locke would render it, is made to know, or is influcted by him; for the Apoftle, fays he, though writing in Greek, yet often ufes the Greek verbs according to the Hebrew conjugations. So ch. xiii. 12. the word  $E\pi_{ij}v\omega\sigma\sigma\sigma\alpha\alpha_i$ , which properly, in the Greek, fignifies 1 fhall be known, is ufed for 1 fhall be made to know; and thus Gal. iv. 9. The word  $\Gammav\omega\sigma\theta$  vers, is put to fignify being tanght. See Pierce's 6th Differtation, and Acts, x. 36.

Ver. 4. We know that an idol is nothing] This was a common aphorifm among the Jews, to which the word (م), alilin, which fignifies idols, and things of nothing, alluded. See Job, xiii. 4. xiv. 12. Whitby, Hammond, Elfner, and Parkhurft's Lexicon.

Ver. 5. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, &c.] This is an allufion to the famed division of the heathen gods into celeficial and terrefirial. The former, whom they called  $\Theta \epsilon a$ , gods, they fuppoled to refide generally in the heavens. The latter, whom they called  $\Delta a_{\mu\nu\nu\nu\nu}$ , they fuppoled to refide for the most part upon the earth, or in the fea, and, performing the office of mediators between the fuperior gods and men, directed terrefirial affairs. Thefe in the Old Testament are called Baalim; and by St. Paul, Lords; which is the literal translation of Baalim. They had also infernal gods and goddeffes, such as Pluto, Proferpine, Rhadamanthus, &c. who ruled in the invisible world, judged the dead immediately on their death, and appointed them habitations according to their different characters.

Ver. 6. But to us there is but one God, &c.] One God is exclusive, not of the one Lord, as though he were an inferior Deity, but only of the idols, to which the one God is oppofed: to think otherwife would be to deftroy the. Apostle's own argument for the unity of God, and make him talk as inconfiftently, as if he would prove, that there is none other God but one, because, instead of many, there are only two, one fupreme and the other fubordinate; and then would give fuch a reason for this, as overturns the diftinction itself, by adding that all those things, which are of the Father, are in their utmost latitude by the Son, as one in operation with him, just as at other times, speaking of the Father, all things are faid to be by him. Rom. xi. 36. Heb. ii. 10. In the first of these places, the Father is stiled the Lord, (Kupios,) without the article, as Chrift is here; but by the fame way of arguing, which excludes the Lord Jefus Chrift from being God, the Father would be excluded from being Lord: or if the Apostle here alludes to the cuftom of the heathens; who worfhipped one or more fovereign deities by inferior demons, called Baalim or Lords, (see the last note,) then what is faid of the one Lord Jefus Chrift, may be confidered as relating, not fo directly to what he is in his original nature, as to his office of mediation with God the Father; while he himfelf is stiled Lord, and the very fame works are afcribed to him as to the Father, to flew what a divine Mediator he is. See Mede, Locke, Guyle, Calamy's Sermons on the Trinity, p. 25, and 244. Jones's "Catholic Doctrine of " the Trinity," ch. i. fect. 3. and Waterland's Sermons on the Trinity, p. 48-53.

Ver. 7. For fone with confcience, &c.] For there are fone, who with notions flill remaining that the idol may have fone efficacy upon the wichim, eat of it as a real within, and their confcience, &c. Heylin. Dr. Doddridge reads it, But fone do, even until now, with confcioufnefs of the idol, eat the things as factificed to the idol; and fo their confcience, &c.

Ver. 8. Meat commendeth us not to God] Of waginner, fets us not before God; that is, to be taken notice of by him. It cannot be fuppofed that St. Paul, in anfwer to a letter of the Corinthians, fhould tell them, that if they ate things offered to idols, they were not the better, or if they ate not, were not the worfe, unlefs they had expressed fome opinion of good in eating. Locke.

Ver. 10. Sit at meat in the idel's temple] Entertainments among the heathens commonly confilted of what had been facrificed to their fictitious deities; from which, however, the truly pious among Christians religiously abstained, even when most rigorously imposed; and no doubt the Apostle's decision here had great weight with them. Inferences .- From this fhort, but excellent chapter, we may learn to estimate the true value of knowledge, and to fee how worthlefs and dangerous it is, when, influend of difcorering to us our own ignorance and weaknefs, it ferves only to puff up the mind. We should rather labour and pray for that love and charity which edifieth ourfelves and others; (ver. 1.) taking heed that we do not demonstrate our ignorance by a high conceit of our attainments in knowledge; for nothing can more evidently fhew how fmall those attainments are, than not to know their limits, when those limits to foon meet us on what fide foever we attempt to make an excursion. Give us, O Lord, that kne to thee, which is the best proof of our knowledge, and the fureft way to its higheft improvements !

While we remember, and fleadfaftly adhere to the grand principle of the unity of God, we must not fail with one God and Father of ali, to adore the one Lord Jefus Christ, by whom, we exist: setting him, in our estimation, far above all the powers, dignities, and glories of created nature, rer. 5, 6. Belonging to fo divine a Mafter, we shall certinly have emulation enough to learn and to practife the most generous principles of his benevolent religion. We hall not found our confidence on admitting and contending for, or despising and deriding this or that particular observance, by which, as it may happen to be circumfanced, God is neither honoured nor difhonoured, pleafed nor displeased; but we shall ever maintain the tenderest roncern for the edification and comfort of our brethren, and guard against whatever might either grieve or enfinare them.

When we remember that Chrift died for the weakeft, as well as the ftrongest, (ver. 11.) their relation to him, and tis tender and compassionate regard for them, will melt down our hearts, when feized with that cold infentibility, which, alas ! is too ready to prevail among Christians. It is Chrift that we wound, in wounding our brethren: and in finiting them, we finite Him; ver. 12.

Stay then, O man, that rash hand, which is so ready in mere wantonnefs to do mifchief; and be willing to deny hyfelf in thy defire for ever fo long a time, rather than by thy indulgence to diffionour God, and injure others. This is the excellent leffon which the candid, the benevolent St. Paul often inculcates, (fee ver. 13.) and of which he himfelf was a fhining example : but O how low are multitudes of Christians, multitudes of ministers fallen, when they cannot deny themfelves in what is unneceffary, and even unlawful, where either interest or pleasure folicits the graufication !

REFLECTIONS.-ER, The Apostle proceeds to confider

the cafe of eating the flefh of animals which had been offered in facrifice to idols. Sometimes the idolaters feafted their friends thereon in the idol temples, fometimes in their own houfes; and what they did not make use of, was fold in the flumbles.

1. He warns them against leaning upon their own understanding, and proudly abufing their Christian liberty. Now as touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all, in general, have knowledge, and are perfuaded of the vanity of idols, as well as you. Neverthelefs, knowledge, without grace, puffeth up, but charity edifieth, and will engage us not merely to confider what is lawful, but what is expedient, making us condefeending to those whose attainments are lefs, and who do not fee things as clearly as we may. And if any man think that he knoweth any thing, felfopinionated, and above attending to the Entiments or weakness of his brethren, be knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. But if any man love God, and from that bleffed principle is engaged to make a practical improvement of his knowledge for God's glory, and his neighbour's edification, the fame is known of him, and will receive his approbation. Note; (1.) That is the truly valuable knowledge, which enables us to be most uleful. (2.) Self-conceit is a fure proof of ignorance. (3.) There may be much knowledge in the head, where there is little Christian love in the heart.

2. He admits, that an idol is nothing, a mere imaginary being ; and that, abstractedly confidered, the eating of meat offered in facrifice to idols is no evil, fince there is no other God but one, whofe creatures are all good in themfelves. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many, ) multitudes of celeftial and terrestrial deities being worshipped by the deluded heathen : but to us there is but one God, in opposition to the pagan polytheifm, one in effence, who is reprefented in the Golpel revelation as the Father, of whom are all things, the Creator, Governor, and Preferver of all, and we in kim, living, moving, and having our being in him; and one Lord Jefus Chrift, not another God, like the heathen deitics, of an inferior nature, but a partaker of the fame undivided Godhead and glory, by whom are all. things, and we by him; one in operation with the Father, as Creator of all; and as Mediator in his perfonal character appointed to govern the peculiar kingdom delegated to him, to be our advocate for all bleffings, and the difpenfer of them to his believing people.

2dly, Admitting the vanity of idols, the Apoftle flews, that for the fake of a weak brother they ought, notwithftanding, to abridge themfelves of that liberty which they might otherwife take, and not offend him by eating what was offered in facrifice to these abominable deities. For,

1. Some of the new converts not having entirely loft their veneration for those idols which they used to worship, nor as yet wholly perfuaded of their vanity, ftill when they eat their facrifices, pay them fome fort of honour and

and regard; and their conficience being thus weak, through their remaining ignorance, is defiled with the guilt of idolatry.

2. We should be cautious, therefore, for others fake, though we ourfelves have knowledge, left we should become a stumbling-block to them that are weak, confidering that meat of one kind or another, used or abstained from, is no recommendation to God's favour : for neither if we eat the food, without any respect to the idol, are we the better ; neither if we eat not, prudently abstaining for others fake, are we the worfe. But though the eating of the idol facrifices be never fo innocent in itself, yet it may prove a great hurt to the confciences of the weak, who, feeing you eating in an idol temple, may be emboldened by your example, though not fatisfied of the lawfulnefs of the action, to do the like; and thus what you, who know the vanity of idols, might otherwife do innocently, may be the means of leading a weaker brother to wound his confcience with guilt, for whom Chrift died, and who, having made profession of his faith, is, in the judgment of charity, to be reckoned among his believing people. But when ye fin fo again/ the brethren, and wound their weak confcience, ye fin against Christ, whose compations toward the lambs of his flock are great; and he will refent every flight put upon them, and every offence given to them. Wherefore if meat offered to idols make my brother to offend, I will eat no flefb while the world flandeth, however innocent the thing may be in itfelf, loft I make my brother to offend. Note; It is not enough that we avoid what is finful ourfelves; Christian love will teach us even to abridge ourfelves of our liberty in lawful things for others good.

CHAP. IX.

THE falle teacher having come to Corinth to enrich himfelf, we may fuppofe he was much difconcerted when he found that all the time the Apofile had preached among the Corinthians, he had taken nothing from them on account of his maintenance, nor on any other account. Wherefore, to remove the obstruction which St. Paul's difinterestedness had laid in the way of his covetous defigns, he boldly affirmed to the Corinthians, that St. Paul was no Apofile, because he had not accompanied Christ during his minimum or earth; and that his demanding nothing from them for his maintenance, shewed he was confcious to himfelf that he was no Apostle, and had no right to maintenance from the Corinthians. For if he knew himfelf to be an Apostle, why did he not use the rights of an Apostle? Why did he not lead about a fister and wife to take care of him, as other Apostles did, and demand maintenance for her as well as for himfelf? This I suppose the falfe teacher had done. But be that as it may, it cannot be doubted, that the Corinthians in their letter to the Apostle, mentioned the particulars which his enemies objected to his character. Wherefore, after deciding fome very difficult questions which the Corinthians had proposed to him, and particularly after affirming in the end of chapter vii, that he had decided these questions by the infpiration of the Spirit; and after shewing himself a faithful Apostle of Christ, by declaring in the end of chapter viii. his refolution on all occasions to abstain from things indifferent, rather than, by using his liberty respecting them, to lead his fellow Christians into fin, he with great propriety introduced the proof of his Apostleship, and answered all the objections and calumnies whereby his enemies endeavoured to diferedit him in the eyes of the Corinthians.

The proof of his Apoftlefhip, St. Paul difcuffes in a few words, by aiking the Corinthians, whether they did not know him to be an Apoftle ? and a free man, who had a right to preach the gofpel without reward, if he thought fit to do fo ? whether they did not know, that he had feen the Lord fince his refurrection ? and whether themfelves were not his workmanfhip, as an Apoftle of Chrift ? ver. 1. —Whatever he might be to others, he was certainly an Apoftle to them. For their conversion from heathenism, followed with the spiritual gifts which he had conferred on them, was such an unquestionable proof of his Apoftleship, that they could entertain no doubt of it, ver. 2.

Next addreffing the faction, he faid, my answer to them who condemn me as no Apostle, is this: I have a right to be maintained at the charges of the perfons to whom I preach, ver. 3, 4.—I have a right allo, to lead about a wife who is a believer, to take care of me; and I am entitled to demand maintenance for her likewife, even as other Apostles do, and the brethren of the Lord, and Peter, ver. 5.—Unlefs it be pretended, that of all the ministers of the gospel, I and Barnabas only have not that right, ver. 6.—His right to maintenance, he told them, was founded on on the common fense and practice of mankind, who give maintenance to foldiers, vine-dreffers, and fhepherds, in return for their labours, ver. 7.-It was founded also on the law of Moses, which forbad the Israelites to muzzle the ox while treading out the corn, ver. 8, 9, 10.-Wherefore, having fown in the minds of the Corinthians fpiritual things, that is, having given them the first knowledge of the Gospel, it was no great return if he partook of their carnal things, ver. 11.-Especially as others (meaning the falle teacher) who had but lately come among them, had been plentifully maintained by them. But though he had a complete right to maintenance, he had never used that right, but had endured every hardship, that the Gospel might not be hindered, ver. 12.—Farther, he told them, his right was founded fill more directly on another precept of the law, which appointed those who performed facred offices, to eat from the temple, ver. 13.-Nay it was founded on the will of Chrift, who had expressly authorized those who preach the Gospel, to live by the Gospel, ver. 14.-But the Apostle being a free man, who was at liberty to do in that matter as he pleased, he had made ule of none of these precepts and rights; neither did he mention them on this occasion to induce the Corinthians to give him maintenance. For he would rather die of want, than be deprived of glorying in having preached the Golpel, without receiving any reward from his Corinthian disciples for that important service, ver. 15 .- The reason was, he had nothing to boast of in barely preaching the Gospel; because his conviction of its truth, together with the command of Christ, laid him under such a necessity of preaching, that he would be abfolutely miferable, if he did not make known things, which were of fo great importance to the world, ver. 16, &c.

But, because the faction thought the Apostle a fool for not demanding maintenance, and because the rest might be furprised at his fubjecting himfelf to fo many inconreniences and hardships while preaching the Gospel, he put them in mind of the bodily labours and hardships to which their countrymen, who contended in the games, subjected themselves, for the trifling reward of a crown of green leaves, which foon withered. Whereas; he and his brethren Apostles, in return for the bodily labours and hardfhips which they endured, expected to obtain an incorruptible crown. The greatness therefore of the reward sufficiently justified the Apostles in the pursuit, although it was attended with fo much labour and fuffering; and thewed that they had good reason to disregard every temporal advantage, while purfuing a felicity of fuch magnitude, ver. 24-27.

Ver. 1.] St. Paul had preached the Gofpel at Corinth about two years, in all which time he had taken nothing of them, 2 Cor. xi. 7-9. This, by fome of the opposite faction, and particularly, as we may suppose, by their kader, was made use of to call in question his apostless point.

For why, if he were an Apostle, should he not use the power of an Apostle, to demand maintenance where he preached ? In this chapter St. Paul vindicates his apostleship; and in answer to these inquiries gives the reafon why, though he had a right to maintenance, yet he preached gratis to the Corinthians. " My answer, " fays he, to these inquisitors, is, that though, as being " an Apostle, I know that I have a right to maintenance, " as well as Peter, or any other of the Apostles, who all " have a right, as is evident from reafon and from Scrip-" ture;-yet I neither have used, nor shall make use of " my privilege among you, for fear left, if it coft you any thing, that fhould hinder the effect of my preaching. " I would neglect nothing that might promote the Gospel. " I do not content myfelf with doing barely what is my duty, for by my extraordinary call and commission it " " is now incumbent on me to preach the Gospel; but I " endeavour to excel in my ministry, and not to exe-" cute my commission in a manner just enough to ferve the " turn. For if those who are in the Agonistic games, " aiming at victory to obtain only a corruptible crown, " deny themfelves in eating and drinking, and other ** pleafures; how much more does the eternal crown of " glory deferve that we fhould do our utmost to obtain it? " To be as careful in not indulging our bodies, in denying " our pleafures, in doing every thing that we can in order " to get it, as if there were but one that fhould have it? "Wonder not therefore, if I, having this in view, neglect " my body, and those outward conveniences which, as " an Apostle fent to preach the Gospel, I might claim, " and make use of: wonder not that I prefer the propa-" gating of the Golpel, and making of converts, to all " care and regard of myself." This feems the defign of the Apostle, and will throw light on the following chapter. See Locke.

Am I not free?] "Am I not at liberty, as much as any "other of the Apoftles, to make use of the privileges due "to that office?"—"Am I not an Apoftle?" It was neceflary, in order to St. Paul's being an Apostle, and a witness of the refurrection, that he should have seen Jefus Christ. See Acts, xxii. 14, 15. xxvi. 16. 1 Cor. xv. 8.

Ver. 2. For the feal of mine apofle [hip are ye] "Your con-"version to Christianity, is as it were a feal set to make "good the truth of my apoftleship."

Ver. 5. To lead about a fifter, a wife] It is very improbable that the Apoftle would have carried about with him, in these faceed peregrinations, a woman to whom he was not married; fo that the answer which the Papists generally make to the argument often brought from these words in favour of a married clergy, is absolutely inconclusive. The disjuncture between the Aposles and the brethren of the Lord, is a proof that James bishop of Jerusalem, and Jude, our Lord's brethren, were not of the number of the the Apostles. The last clause of this verse, And Cephas, is important; both as it declares in effect that St. Peter continued to live with his wife after he became an Apostle, and alfo that St. Peter had no rights as an Apostie, which were not common to St. Paul.-A remark utterly fubverfive of popery, if traced to its obvious confequences. See Locke, Doddridge, and Wall.

Ver. 6. Or I only, and Barnabas] From this expression one would think that the Judaizing Chriftians, who were the main caule of St. Paul's uneafinels in this respect, had a peculiar fpleen against these two Apostles of the uncircumcifion; who were fo inftrumental in procuring and publishing the Jerufalem decree, which determined the controverly to directly in favour of the believing Gentiles. It feems probable, from ver. 12., that Barnabas fupported himfelf by the labour of his hands when at Corinth, as well as St. Paul. See Wall, Whitby, and Calmet.

Ver. 9. Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox] Sce on Deut. xxv. 4. and Raphelius on the place.

Ver. 10. Altogether ] On the whole. It cannot be thought that God had no regard at all to the brute creatures, in fuch precepts as these; and therefore it is better to render may: ws, by on the whole, than entirely, or altogether; though that fense is more frequent. See Mintert, and Vigerus.

Ver. 12. Partakers of this power] It may be proper just to observe, that Matt. x. 1. John, xvii. 2. and many other places prove, that its rias view may properly be rendered a power over you. The Corinthians, confidering the low rate at which Socrates taught, might have been induced to think that St. Paul was not wholly difinterefted in his miffion, if he had claimed a maintenance for his instruction; and this very suspicion might have been prejudicial to the Gofpel in those parts. From the conduct of the Apostle here, and the other Apoftles in other places, particularly among the Mac donian churches, we may conclude, that he might fee fome circumstances which determined him to decline accepting any fubliftence from the Corinthians while he refided among them. See Locke, Doddridge, and Pyle.

Ver. 14. Should live of the Gofpel] That man might be faid to live on the Gofpel, who was maintained for preaching it; as he might be faid to live on the temple, who was fupported out of its income for ministering there. See Mede's Diatrib. on the place.

Ver. 17, 18. But if against my will, &c. ] But if I do it merely becaufe I am obliged to it, I only difcharge an office which is committed to me : ver. 18. For what then shall I be rewarded? - It is fr this, that preaching the Gifpel of Chrift, I preach it gratis; and do not infift upon [or ufe] a claim, which the Gospel itself gives me. chap. ii. 12. and vii. 31. Some read the last clause,-

Ver. 19. Servant unto all] This is very emphatical, and intimates that he acted with as felf-denying a regard to their interefts, and as much caution not to offend them, as if he were abfolutely in their power,—as a flave is in that of his mafter. See Doddridge.

Ver. 20. Unto the Jews I became as a Jew, &c.] For an illustration of this, ice Acts, xvi. 3. xxi. 21, &c. which inflances were undoubtedly a specimen of many more of the like kind. As under the law, in the next clause, can only signify that he voluntarily complied with it as an indifferent thing; but it cannot by any means imply, that he declared such observances necessary, or refused to converse with any who would not conform to them: for this was the very diffimulation which, with so generous a freedom, he condemned in St. Peter, Gal. ii. 14, &c. See Doddridge, Calmet, and Whitby. Some commentators, following many manuscripts, versions, and fathers, read,— Is they under the law, (not being myself under the law) that I might gain them that are under the law. Wetstein and Bengelius.

Ver. 21. That I might gain them that are without law] This refers to the Gentiles not yet converted to Chriftianity.

Vir. 22. I am made all things] I am become, &c.

Ver. 23. That I might be partaker, &c.] That I may fhare in its benefits. Heylin. There is nothing for with you in the original. The words feem to refer to the fatisfaction which St. Paul found, in imparting the invaluable and inexhauftible bleffings of the Gofpel to all around him; a fentiment most fuitable to his character and office.

Ver. 24. They which run in a race, &c.] The Apostle here refers to the IAbmian games, fo called from their being celebrated on the Corinthian Isthmus, or the neck of land which joins Peloponness to the continent. They are supposed to have been instituted in honour of Palæmon, or Melicertes, and Neptune. They were observed every Vol. II.

third year, or rather every fifth, and held facred and inviolable. When Corinth was facked and totally deftroyed by Mummius the Roman general, they were not discontinued; but the care of them was committed to Sicyonians, till the rebuilding of the city, and then it was reflored to the inhabitants. The fports which composed those games, were running, wreftling, boxing, and other athletic exercifes. The Apostle alludes here to the fadium, or foot-race, in which there was but one prize for the victor; though in fome of the games there were feveral prizes. Nothing can be more forcible and emphatical than the argument which the Apostle draws from this comparison; whoever would fee the full force of which, will do well to read Mr. West's excellent Differtation on the Olympic games, particularly ch. vi. and vii. and the con-clusion. We here fubjoin his translation and brief paraphrase of the passage before us: "Know ye not that they " who run in the fladium, or foot-race, run all, and yet " but one receiveth the prize ?-So run therefore, that ye " may obtain. Moreover, every one that contendeth in " the games, is temperate in all things. They, indeed, " that they may obtain a corruptible crown; but we, an " incorruptible. Wherefore I for my part fo run, as not to " pals undiffinguished; fo fight, not as beating the air " (that is to fay, practifing in a feigned combat, without " an adverfary); but I mortify my body, and bring it un-" der subjection; lest, &c."

Ver. 25. A corruptible crown] The Apostle alludes to the crowns at the Olympic games, which were formed of garlands of leaves, which foon withered and perished, and which were the only rewards of the contenders in those games. In the Olympic games, facred to Jupiter, the crown was of wild olive; in the Pythian, facred to Apollo, it was of laurel; in the Isthmian or Corinthian, it was of pine-tree; and in the Nemzan, of parsley: but concerning these particulars, as well as the remarkable temperance alluded to above, we refer to Mr. West, and to Elsner on the place.

Ver. 26. I-run, not as uncertainly] 'The fladia, or courses of the Greeks, were like the courses of our horseraces, marked with posts and other figns, that shewed the racer which way he was to run, and of which he could not be ignorant; and the word rendered uncertainly, is often used for ignorantly. It may also refer to the certainty of obtaining the prize, on condition of obferving the laws of the course; and our translation may be very well underftood in that fenfe. The word may have another fenfe, which will refer to the spectators, who would not pass by the victorious runner without distinction and notice. "I " run, not as one who is to pals undiffinguished; but, " knowing what eyes are upon me, and folicitous to gain " the approbation of my judge, and attending with dili-" gence to the boundaries which are marked out, I exert " myfelf to the utmost." In order to acquire a greater agility and dexterity, it was usual for those who intended to box in the games, to exercise themselves with the gauntlet, and to fling their arms about, as if they were engaging with a real combatant. This was called beating the air. Hence it came to be a proverbial expression for a man's miffing his blow, when he aimed at his enemy; which feems to be the meaning of the Apostle, who does not confine himfelf absolutely to a fingle branch of contest in these games. See Hammond, Doddridge, Elsner, West, and on ver. 24.

Ver. 27. But I keep under my body] 'Trwnia' Zw, rendered I keep under, fignifies properly to strike on the face, as the boxers did; and particularly on that part under the eyes which they especially aimed at. Hence it often fignifies a livid tumour on that part, and fometimes is proverbially used for a face terribly bruised, and disfigured, like that of a boxer just come from the combat. The Apostle hereby intimates, that he made use of the greatest rigour and feverity to fubject his appetites to the dominion of grace. The word Asraywyw, rendered bring into fubjection, is bortowed from another kind of competitors in the Ifthmian games, --- the wrefters; and alludes to the practice of giving their adversary a fall, fo as to fecure the victory. Hence the Apostle shews himself to be fo far from using this Christian liberty to its full extent, that he, through grace, fubdued himfelf, and abstained from many things which he might have lawfully enjoyed; and endured many hardships from which he might have been exempted, in order to acquire the crown, or reward, which can never fall to the lot of the indolent.-The word Kneuzas, rendered preached, expresses the office of a herald at the Isthmian games; who from a scaffold, or some eminence, proclaimed the conditions of the games, displayed the prizes, exhorted the combatants, awakened the emulation and refolution of those who were to contend, declared the terms of the contest, and pronounced the names of the victors. The Apostle, however, intimates, that there was this pecullar circumstance attending the Christian contest, that the perfon who proclaimed its laws and rewards to others, was also to engage himself; and that there would be a peculiar infamy and mifery in mifcarrying in fuch circumstances. Adoning rendered caft away, or rejected, fignifies one who is difapproved of by the judge of the games, as not having fairly deferved the prize. Hence the word fignifies to miscarry, and lose what is contended for. See Rom. i. 28. Hammond, Bos, Elfner, Faber's Agonist. lib. iii. c. 14. and R. Bentley, apud Wetstein.

Inferences.-To quicken us in the purfuit of our heavenly reward, it may be proper, first, to enforce the Apostle's argument, which represents the excellence of it; and, fecondly, to remember the methods which he both prefcribed and practifed for obtaining it.

The motives taken from his words before us may be two,-the value of the crown,-and the poffibility of obtaining it; and a little reflection upon each might fuffice for the answering of his purpose, did but men bring along with them a disposition to let any arguments in this cause have their full force upon them.

The comparison here brought lies between one crown and another; (ver. 25.) both looked upon as an ample recompence for the pains taken to obtain them; but with this difference, that in reality the value of the one is imaginary, and depends upon common estimation only; that of the other is intrinsic and fubstantial, and commonly rated as much lower, as the former is higher than it deferves to be; and that, as upon other accounts, fo particularly becaufe admitting (in compliance with the miltaken notions of the world) that each is a good one; yet, when taken at the very best, it is evident the one can be but short and perifhing,-whereas the other is fixed and everlafting ;--- the one a corruptible crown, the other an incorruptible.

Of the former, the corruptible fort,—are plainly all those advantages of the prefent world, for which mankind fo eagerly contend : they are fickle and fugitive; not only allayed by numberlefs abatements, which check our delights, and difturb our enjoyment, while we continue in possession of them; not only exposed to infinite accidents, perpetually confpiring to deprive us of them; but like the garlands here alluded to by St. Paul, which wither of themfelves; in their own nature transient and fading, and fuch as it is not possible for the utmost art and care to preferve.-To fpend time in proving this by defcending to particulars, is needlefs : experience and common fense have done it amply to our hands, and we may appeal to any man alive whether this be not the cafe of all the most envied temporal privileges and conveniences of human hips of long infruction and fevere education in youth, all the toil and danger of ripe and vigorous age,—laborious days and reftlefs nights, – compaffings of fea and land, the caprice of courts,—the fatigues of camps, the trial of every element and climate;—in a word, eafe, fafety, health, —peace of body, and life, and too often confcience and the immortal foul, wifely laid out and employed.—Things they are, indeed, which have their comforts, when fought and ufed in due place and proportion; but when purfued and loved inordinately, they deftroy the very purpoles that they fhould ferve; they are therefore most improper to be made the chief aim and end of living, and utterly unworthy even of a fmall part of that, which the generality of people are content to do and fuffer for them.

But there is another difcouragement behind, which, added to the former, one would imagine muft damp the rehemence of these pursuits;—It is not the difficulty only, but the great uncertainty of compassing the prize they aim at. The numberless disappointments of men's expectations sufficiently demonstrate the fact, and might be a fuitable check to their avidity, if any could avail;—nay, and thus our own reason will tell us it must be, where the advantage aimed at has so many seekers; where there is not enough in the things fought to fatisfy all; where, of those pretenders, the gain of one must, generally speaking, be the diminution of that of another; and consequently, where every candidate finds it necessary for his private interes to outfrip, or to hinder others from making good their point, in order to secure and carry his own.

Such is the condition even of the bctl of those things, to which we can suppose the corruptible crown here mentioned is capable of being applied :--the riches,--the honours,--the pleasures of this life. The happines and rewards of another, manifestly intended by the crown incorruptible, are great beyond expression, and their inconceivable excellence renders it impossible to give them a full or worthy representation. It may well suffice to observe, that the Apostle fets these in direct opposition to, and that they are in every particular just the reverse of the other :- A crown indeed ; --as that denotes the highest honour, the greatest affluence, the firmest security; the only crown, whose splendour does not deceive with false ideas, as having no weight of cares to make it burdensome, no dangers to allay its glory, but all bright, stable, and permanent.

This crown, belides its own value, is the more worth our firing for, because it is not like all others, peculiar to fome one, exclusive of the reft who contend for and aspire after it; but capable of being attained by every one who feeks it : fufficient to answer, nay, infinitely to exceed, the largest wishes and expectations of them all; and fo far from leffening the fruition to ourfelves, by having partners in the blifs; that as no fingle perfon's endeavours fhall meet difappointment, who feeks it regularly and faithfully, so the more zealously each labours to promote the happinels of his brethren, the more effectually does he eftablish and aggrandize his own. And this is a happines not only exquisite in degree, and in its nature pure, fatilfactory, and truly excellent; but for its duration, everlafting, always growing, always fresh; liable to no interruption, no abatement, no decay; a joy which no man can, a joy which God, who gives it, never will take from his glorified faints.

It is not perhaps eafy to think of a more powerful incitement to quicken our purfuits after beavenly things, than the putting us in mind how we ufually behave ourfelves when we have earthly advantages in view. For, alas I what excufe can be found for a folly, which overlooks and flights a treafure certainly attainable, real, perfect, and everduring, and lays out the whole of our time and pains upon fhadows and bubbles ;—things in comparison empty and imaginary, often fought in vain, deceitful when found, not worth our keeping when possefield, and not possible to be kept long, were we never so defirous to retain them ?

The Apossle, by comparing the Christian's duty to a race, doubtles intended to infinuate what vigour, what regularity, and what perfeverance is expected from us: and in regard that the prize is given by the Master of the race, this shews us the equity of submitting to his terms, the necessity of running in the way that he has drawn out for us, and not making to ourselves paths of our own defiring. This refemblance also teaches us the obligations that we are under to hold on our course with resolution, fince nothing lefs than coming up to the goal can crown our endeayours.

How happy would it be for us, if the importance of the metaphor before us were confidered as it ought to be! Men would not then, as Ifaiah expresses it, fpend their money for that which is not bread, and their labour for that which fatisfieth not. They would not make religion a thing by the bye, and allow it fo few even of their leisure hours; -fo many fewer than they give even to the diversions and impertinencies of the world. They would not fuffer the pains and expence which they are content to be at upon the occa-Gg 2 for a final sector of the secto fions and vanities of this life, fo greatly to exceed those fcanty droppings to hardly extorted from an over-grown treasure, to works of piety and charity. In a word, they would not appear fo extremely folicitous about trilles; fuch prudent managers in affairs of little confequence, and fo wretchedly cold and carelefs, languid and unthinking in their main, their cternal, their only concern.

Did they reflect at all, their own example would reproach them into better fense; their very pleasures would awaken a remembrance of their duty; and every temporal race would expose the absurdity of exerting all their powers to win a poor defpicable prize, and of fitting ftill with their hands folded, when engaged in a courfe, whofe end and prize is an immortal crown of glory.

From the figure used by the Apostle, we also learn, that it is the master's and judge's part to prescribe, and the runner's to fubmit and comply with the rules of the race. For want of this reflection, how is the face of the Christian world deformed with pernicious errors, wild enthufiasms, frivolous superstitions, and the religion of many compounded of monstrous absurdities, fuited to each perfon's complexion or passion, humour or interest ! How is the scripture racked and distorted to make it speak the fense of private opinions, or differing parties; and the belief and practice of many, no longer the gospel of Jefus Chrift, but the dictates of daring men, prefumptuous enough to pervert it; not building up the temple of the Lord, but crecting new schemes, and setting them upon fandy foundations of their own !

Well were it for mankind, if a remembrance of our life being a race would encourage the fteadfaftnefs, watchfulnefs, and perfeverance even of those who have in a good measure escaped the pollutions of the world; who have detected the cunning craftiness of them who lie in wait to deceive, and have begun to run well. For if St. Paul,-if he who was caught up into the third heaven,-favoured with extraordinary visions and revelations, above the power of human tongue to utter,-entrusted with the conversion of fo many nations, and indefatigably laborious in that miniftry ;- If be, notwithstanding all these advantages, found it neceflary to keep under his body, and bring it into fubjection; (ver. 27.) If he faw reason to fear, that otherwise, after baving preached to others, he should himself be a cast-away; what care can be too great for us, whole attachments and zeal are fo much lefs! How can we answer it to God, or to our own fouls, if we fo far forget our own finfulnefs and frailty, as not readily to fubmit to every method of forwarding us in the race that is fet before us, and if we make not a diligent thankful use of every advantage and defence in this spiritual contest !

REFLECTIONS .- Ift, It feems probable that the falfe teachers had raifed fome objection against St. Paul's authority as an apostle, because he had not afferted that right to a maintenance which was due to his office; and, waving his privilege, had refused to be burdensome to his Corinthian brethren.

1. He vindicates his authority : if he had not infifted on a maintenance, it was for their fakes that he had waved this right. Am I not an apostle, because I have acted thus difinterestedly? am I not free to claim a fublistence, if I choofe it? have I not feen Jefus Christ our Lord? and re-ceived my commission immediately from him? Are not ye my work in the Lord? the converts of my ministry, and the fruit of my labours in the gospel? If I be not an apofile unto others, yet doubtless I am to you, who owe to me chiefly, 28 the inftrument, all that you know and are: for the feal of mine apostlessip are ye in the Lord; the Lord attesting the truth of my miflion, by the fuccefs with which he bleffed my miniftry to your fouls. Note, (1.) The best of men and ministers may expect to meet with malignant revilers. (2.) They who have been bleft under our ministry, have in themfelves the firongest proof that we are sent of God.

2. He afferts his right to all the privileges of an apoftle. In answer to those who presumed to sit in judgment on his character, he replies, Have we not power to eat and to drink? have not Barnabas and I a claim upon you for a maintenance, though we have not excrted it ? Have we not power to lead about a fifter, a wife, and to expect a provision for our families as we are travelling from place to place, as well as other apofiles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas? Or I only and Barnabas, who were particularly fent to the Gentiles, have not we power to forbear working? or are we alone obliged to earn with our hands that maintenance which the other apoftles are entitled to for their work's fake? How abfurd and unreafonable is fuch a supposition ! Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? the foldier has his flipend and provisions. Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? the vine-dreffer is fed with the produce of his toil: or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the ficek? If these are justly entitled to eat the labour of their hands, much more have the ministers of the gospel, who suftain all these characters, a right to a competent provision. Say I thefe things as a man? merely on the footing of equity ? or faith not the law the fame alfo? let even my judaizing oppoters and maligners judge. For it is written in the law of Mofes, thou fhalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn; but while he works, he shall be permitted to cat. Doth God take care for oxen? was this precept given merely with a reference to them? or faith he it altogether for our fakes, who labour in the gospel? for our fakes, no doubt, this is written, that he that plougheth, breaketh up the fallow ground of the finner's heart, should plough in hope of a reasonable return; and that he that thresheth in hope, separating the chaff of corruption from the good feed of grace in the heart, should be partaker of his hope. And as the ploughman and thresher eat the fruit of their toils, fo much more fhould the laborious minister in God's spiritual husbandry have a just recompence of reward. If we have fown unto you spiritual things, is it a great great thing, or unreasonable for us to expect, or for you to give, that we fould reap your carnal things, and have a maintenance, when the value between the fpiritual bleffings which we communicate, and the pittance that we should receive, is to disproportionate? If others be partakers of this power over van, and are supported at your expence, to whom you never were or can be so indebted as unto us; are not we rather entitled to a provision, if we chose to claim it? Nevertheks, we have not used this power, nor infifted on what we had a right to demand; but fuffer all things, choosing to undergo any wants and hardships, left we should binder the gapil of Chrift, and raise a prejudice in your minds, that our views were mercenary. But do ye not know, that they which minifler about holy things, live of the things of the temple? end they which wait at the altar, are partakers with the altar, and receive their maintenance from their fhare in the facrifices and oblations? Even fo bath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel, should live of the gospel. So that stappears, (1.) In the very reason of the thing ; (2.) From the law of Moles; (3.) From Christ's express institution, (Luke x. 7.) that the ministers of Christ have a right to be supported becomingly by those among whom they labour.

2dly. The Apostle mentions his own difinterested condud; for nothing is more opposite to the character of a Christian minister, than the very shadow of mercenary views. Ibove used none of these things, nor ever claimed my right among you; neither have I written thefe things that it should he b dime unto me on any future occasion : for it quere better for me to die, than that any man flould make my glorying woid: I had rather wear out my body with labour to minister to my own wants, than not preach the gospel to you freely, and thereby cut off occasion from those, who, if I received any recompence, would thence take a handle to prejudice you against me. For though I preach the gospel, I have nating to glory of, for necessity is laid upon me, and I cannot but over the Maller's orders : yea, wo is unto me, if I preach at the gypel; I must be exposed to the bitterest acculations of unfaithfulnefs, and juftly fink under the heaviest vengeance. For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward; the confciousnels of difinterested zeal is a satisfaction to my own foul, and the Lord will remember and reward my labours of love : but if against my will I labour, a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me, and I am bound to be tauhful. What is my reward then ? verily, that when I treach the gospel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, thewing the difinterested fidelity with which I act, and approving myself to God, and to my own conscience, that I abuse not my power in the gospel, nor exact even what I have authority to demand, demonstrating to the people, that I feek not theirs, but them. Note, For the fake of Chrift it is prudent often to forego our rights and privileges, and to wave the claims to that reward to which our office and labours may entitle us.

denial. For though I be free from all men, and under no obligations to be fubservient to their will or humour; yet have I made myfelf fervant unto all, willing in all indifferent matters to conform to them, and deny myself, that thus engaging their affections and attention, I might gain the more, and win them over to embrace the doctrines and ways of the golpel. And for this purpole, unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; not refuling to observe those ceremonials in their worship, to which, though indifferent in themfelves, they were still attached. To them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; fubmitting to many of its ordinances, to engage the affection of my Jewish brethren, who still maintain their veneration for the divinely instituted fervice of the fanctuary. To them that are without law, as without law; not urging on them circumcifion, or any of the ceremonial inftitutions, as at all neceffary to falvation; but infifting on the necessity of faith in Christ alone, (being not without law to God, as if the moral law was abrogated, as well as the ceremonial; but under the law to Chrift, walking in faith and holinefs, according to the obligations which the gospel lays upon me) that I might gain them that are without law, and lay no needlefs obstacles in the way of the Gentiles, but, preaching the fimple gofpel, might engage their hearts to Jefus and his bleffed fervice. To the weak became I as weak, condefcending to their infirmities, and abstaining even from things innocent and lawful, where their confcience was ferupulous, that I might gain the weak, and lead them on to farther attainments of knowledge and grace. In fhort, I am made all things to all men, fludying to pleafe every man for his good to edification, that I might by all means fave fome, and, through the bleffing of the Redeemer, be made the inftrument of their conversion. And this I do for the gospel's fake, if possible to remove all preju-dice and objections, that I might be partaker thereof with you, and come to fhare with you in all its bleffings and Note, It is highly our duty to avoid every unbenefits. neceffary occasion of offence, and in all indifferent things to forego our own will and pleafure for the profit of our neighbour.

4thly. To quicken them to imitate his own example, and give all diligence to make their calling and election fure, he proposes to them the case of those who in the Ifthmian games contended for victory. Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the prize? the prize itlelf was in value trivial, though fuch pains were ufed to obtain it; and only one could there posses the honour. Here the prize is no lefs than eternal life, and all who run perfeveringly, are fure to win: fo run then with faith, patience, and perfeverance, that ye may obtain the inestimable reward. And again, every man that priveth forthe mastery, and would overcome, as wreftlers or boxers in the games, is temperate in all things, that by observing the most exact regimen, and bringing their bodies into the best order, they may be the better prepared for the conflict. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, of withering leaves and flowers; but we have an incorruptible crown of glory in view, compared with which theirs is poor and trivial; and therefore how much more are we bound to deny our appetites; with how much greater carnestness ought we to contend for victory, where we are fure, if we fight manfully, to conquer, and the reward will be fo unutterably and eternally glorious. I therefore, in this view, fo run with unwearied diligence my christian course, not as uncertainly, observing the prescribed path of duty. So fight I against the world, the slesh, and the devil, not as one that beateth the air, not merely exercifing my arms as the boxers, that they might be ready for the combat; but I keep under my body, (ὑποπιάζω,) mortify its corrupt appetites, as the boxers, who beat their antagonists black and blue; and bring it into fubjection, (deraywyw,) as the wreftlers, when their adverfary was thrown under them; left that by any means, when I have preached to others' the necessity of fuch mortification, diligence, and felf-denial, I my/elf, through negligence or unfaithfulness, should be overcome by my corrupted nature and fpiritual foes, and be a caff away at last, (zd'nimos), rejected by the great Judge, and counted unfit for the promifed reward. And this holy jealoufy which I feel for myself, I inculcate upon you, that in the use of all appointed means you may secure the glorious prize, and be approved of the Lord in the great day of his appearing. Note, (1.) In our Christian race and warfare, what diligence, constancy, and courage do we not need? bleffed be God, there is help laid on one mighty to fave; and looking to him, and perfeveringly cleaving to him, we are fure to gain the prize. (2.) Our bodies are our great fnare; and the mortification of fenfual appetite is abfolutely necessary in order to the falvation of the immortal foul. (3.) Holy jealoufy over ourfelves is the great prefervative against apostacy. (4.) Many have appeared with zeal in the caufe of Chrift, and have been the means of faving others, who have perished themselves. Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.

CHAP. X.

THE Apostle's defign in this chapter cannot be rightly understood, unless we suppose the Corinthians, in their letter, to have put three questions to him concerning meats facrificed to idols. First, Whether they might innocently go with their heathen acquaintance into the idol's temple, and partake of the feafts on the facrifices which were eaten there in honour of the idol? Secondly, Whether they might buy and eat meats fold in the markets, which had been facrificed to idols? Thirdly, Whether, when invited to the houses of the heathens, they might eat of meats facrificed to idols, which were fet before them as a common meal?-To the first of these questions, the apostle anfwered chap. viii. That their joining the heathens, in their feasts on the facrifices in the idol's temple, even on the fuppolition that it was a thing in itlelf innocent, might be a stumbling-block to their weak brethren, in which case it ought to be avoided; but whether fuch a practice were a thing innocent or finful in itself, he did not on that occafion confider. In this chapter, therefore, he refumed the fubject, that he might treat of it fully, and answer the other questions proposed to him by the Corinthians relative to that matter.

The false teacher, to free the brethren from their scruples refpecting the feasts on the facrifices in the idol's temple, had I suppose told them, that their knowledge and profession of the gospel rendered them so much the objects of the favour of God, that he would not be difpleafed with them, if, to gain the favour of the heathens, and to fave themselves from persecution, they partook of the heathen feasts in the idol's temple. He added, that whatever influence their eating of these facrifices might have to pollute them, affuredly their baptifm, but especially their eating the Lord's fupper, would have a greater influence to fanctify them.

The confutation of these fallacious arguments, the Apoltle brought from what happened to the Israelites, the an-cient visible people of God. They were led out of Egypt under the cloud, and made to pais through the red fea in a miraculous manner, ver. 1.- By being in the cloud and in the fea, they were all baptized into the belief that Mofes was commissioned by God to deliver them. ver. 2.-They all ate the fame spiritual meat, and drank the same spiritual drink, ver. 3, 4.-In fhort, they enjoyed all the external privileges belonging to the people of God in those times. And, therefore, if external privileges could have fecured those who possessed fuch advantages from displeafing God, the Israelites must always have continued the objects of his favour. Neverthelefs, they refused to go into Canaan; for which fin God was fo exceedingly difpleafed with them, that he deftroyed them all in the wilderness, except Caleb and Joshua, ver. 5. To bring these things home to the Corinthians, the apostle told them, that the fins which brought destruction on perfons fo high in favour with God in refpect to external privileges, are examples to mankind in every age, to prevent them from lufting after the pleafures of the table, as the Ifraelites lufted after the flefh-pots of Egypt, ver. 6.-and from becoming idolaters, as many of them became, when, dancing round the altar which Aaron had raifed, they worfhipped the golden calf in the frantic manner in which the heathens worfhipped their idols, ver. 7.-and from committing fornication, as many of them did with the daughters of Moab, for which twenty-three thousand of them were flain in one day, ver. 8.-and from tempting Chrift by diftrufting his care, as the Ifraelites tempted God by speaking against him and against Moses, for bringing them out of Egypt to die in the wilderness; and for that great fin were destroyed by ferpents, ver. 9 .--- and from murmuring at the reftraints laid on them by the gospel, and at the sufferings to which they were exposed in their paffage to heaven, as the Israelites murmured, on account of the difficulties they had to encounter counter in taking possession of Canaan, and were destroyed, ver. 10.—All these things, the Apostle told the Corinthians, happened to the Israelites as examples, and are written for our instruction, that we may avoid courses which proved to destructive to them, ver. 11.—The fornication of the Israelites with the daughters of Moab, was mentioned to the Corinthians on this occasion with fingular propriety, because the Moabitish women tempted the Israelites, by inviting them to partake of the facrifices of their gods; the very thing which the Apostle was exhorting the Corinthians to avoid.

As the foregoing faces, recorded in the Scriptures, were fet before the Corinthians, to fnew them how dangerous it is for perfons who enjoy great external privileges, to fancy that their fins are not difpleafing to God, the Apostle drew this conclusion from the whole : wherefore, let him who thinketh be flandeth firm in the favour of God, take heed left le fall, ver. 12 .- and by taking notice, that the Corinthians were expoled to none but common temptations, he infinuated that there was no reason for their being anxious togain the favour of the heathens; especially as God, who has promised to affist his people, is faithful, and will not fuffer them to be tempted above what they are able to bear; or with the temptation will make a paffage for them out of it, ver. 13 .- In fhort, idolatry having proved fo tuinous to the ancient Israelites, the Apostle earnestly exhorted the Corinthians to flee from it, ver. 14.

But the falle teacher, it feems, had told the Corinthians, that their partaking with the heathens in their feasts on the facifices in the idol's temple, was not idolatry in perfons who knew that an idol was nothing in the world, because to fuch it was only a common meal. In what follows, therefore, the Apostle proved, that fuch an action was a real worthipping of the idol, on whole facrifice they featted. And to draw the attention of the Corinthians to what he was going to fay, he told them he would fpeak to them on that subject as to wife men, (an appellation of which the Greeks were exceedingly fond,) and defired them to judge impartially, of what he should fay to them, ver. 15.-Do not we, faid he, who are the disciples of Christ, consider our joint drinking of the cup in the Lord's fupper, as a lymbol of our joint partaking of the benefits procured by the fledding of the blood of Christ? And our joint eating of the loaf in the Lord's supper, as a symbol of our joint partaking of the benefits belonging to the body or church of Chrift? ver. 16.—And because there is one loaf used in the Lord's supper, we the many who partake of it are thereby declared to be one body or fociety, under the goremment of one head, and to be animated by the fame principles, and to follow the same practices, ver. 17.-The Jews, likewife, entertain the fame fentiments, with ripect to those who join in their religious services. Do they not hold, that the perfons who eat of the facrifices offered to the God of Israel, are joint partakers of his altar; that is, join in the worthip performed to him on the altar, and partake of the benefits procured by that worship? ver. 18.-By parity of reason, they who in the idol's temple eat of the facrifices offered to the idol, are justly confidered by the heathens as joining in the worfhip of their gods, and as declaring their defire, jointly to fhare with them in the bleffings which their gods are fuppoled to beflow. Nay, they confider them as holding communion with them, both in their principles and practices. This application of the argument, indeed, the Apostle has not made; but in the following verse he suppoles his readers to have made it : for he adds, what then do I affirm, namely, when I fay that your eating the facrifices of idols is a joint participation in their worfhip? Do I affirm that an idol is a God? or that the facrifices offered to idols, are facrifices to beings who are gods? ver. 19.-By no means. But I affirm that the facrifices which the heathens offer, they offer to demons; that is, to the fouls of dead men and to evil fpirits, neither of which are gods; fince they have no power in the government of the universe, as the heathens fancy. And I would not have you to be joint partakers with the worfhippers of demons, either in their principles, their practices, or their expectations, ver. 20 .- Belides, the worfhip of the true God is incompatible with the worfhip of demons; for it confifts in holy difpolitions, and virtuous actions. Whereas the worfhip of demons confifts in vile affections, lewdnefs, and all manner of debauchery. Therefore, ye cannot confiftently partake of the table of the Lord, and of the table of demons, ver. 21.—Some of you pretend, that ye eat the facrifices of idols, to fnew your belief that an idol is nothing. But I reply, ye thereby provoke the Lord to jealouly, because by the heathens your eating of these facrifices is confidered as an honouring and worshipping of the idol. Now, before ye give the heathens reason to think that you pay to their idols the honour which is due to Christ, ye should know that ye are ftronger than Chrift, to defend yourselves against his wrath, ver. 22.

With respect to the questions, whether the meats facrificed to idols, which were fold in the markets, might be eaten by Christians; and whether they might eat of these meats in the houses of the heathens, when set before them as a common, not as a religious meal, the Apostle obferved, first, that although under the Gospel all meats are lawful to every perfon, all meats are not expedient for every perfon. And even in cases where they are expedient, the eating of them may not tend to the edification of others, ver. 23 .- Secondly, that in the use of meats, we ought to fludy not our own advantage only, but the advantage of our neighbour alfo, ver. 24 .- And having laid down these principles, he defired the Corinthians to eat whatever was fold in the fhambles, without inquiring whether they had been facrificed to idols or not; because they

they knew that idols have no dominion over the world, but that the earth is the Lord's, and all that it contains, ver. 25, 26.—And if a heathen invited them to his house, and they were inclined to go, they were to eat whatever was fet before them, alking no queftions for conscience fake; becaufe by no reafonable construction could that action be confidered as a worthipping of idols, even though the meat they were going to cat, had been facrificed to an idol, ver. 27.-But if, on fuch an occasion, either a heathen, or a Jew, or a weak Christian, should fay to them, this is meat facrificed to an idol, they were to abstain from it, on account of the weak confeience of him who shewed it; becaufe by fhewing it, he declared that he confidered the eating of that meat as a partaking in the worfhip of the idol to whom it had been offered, vcr. 28.—If thou reply, why fhould my liberty be governed by another's opinion? and, feeing God hath allowed me to eat all kinds of meat, why fhould I be blamed for eating any particular meat, for which I give God thanks? ver. 20, 30.-My answer is, for the very reason, that by the free gift of God all his good creatures are bestowed on thee, thou art bound in eating and drinking, as in all thy actions, to confult the glory of God, who has commanded thee, even in indifferent actions, to confider what may be good for the edification of others, ver. 31.-I therefore exhort you, in using your Christian liberty, to become no occasion of stumbling, either to the Jews, or to the Gentiles, or to the church of God, ver. 32.—This is the rule I myfelf follow; not feeking my own advantage only, but the advantage of others alfo, that they may be faved, ver. 33 .- And ye fhould become imitators of me in this difiniterestedness, even as I elfo am therein an imitator of Chrift, chap. xi. 1.-By telling the Corinthians that he followed this rule, and that in following it, he imitated the difinterestedness of Christ, he infinuated, that the behaviour of the falfe teacher was of a different kind. He regarded only his own gratification and profit, and had no regard to the advantage of others.

Ver. 1. Moreover, brethren, ] It feems, from what is faid in this chapter, as if the Corinthians had told St. Paul that the temptations and conftraints they were under, of going to their heathen neighbours' feasts upon their facrifices, were fo many and fo great, that there was no avoiding it; and therefore they might go to them without any offence to God, or danger to themfelves. To which St. Paul anfwers, that eating of things which were known and acknowledged to be offered to idols, was partaking in the idolatrous worship; and therefore they were to prefer even the danger of perfecution to fuch a compliance; for God would find a way for them to escape, ver. 1-22. See Locke.

I would not that ye, &c.] St. Paul had just before exprefied his ideas of the pollibility of becoming a castaway, even under the highest dispensations of religion: here, he endeavours to excite in the Corinthians a fense of their danger in this respect, by reminding them that the Jewish, as well as the Christian church, had received great tokens of divine favour. Such were to the Jews their paffage through the Red Sea, under the conduct of the miraculous cloud, Exod. xiii. and their fupernatural fußenance in the wildernefs. Such, and analogous to thefe, are the Christian facraments. As the former did not fecure the Yew from apoliacy, fo neither will the latter the Christian. By baptized unto Moses, the Apostle means, " initiated into " that kind of purification, which is proper to the law," here called Mofes; as the Gospel-state is often expressed by the name of Chrift, and the flate of depraved nature by the name of Adam. See Heylin, and the next note.

Ver. 2. And were all baptized unto Mojes] The Apofile is here warning the Corinthians against the commission of fome vices, from too great a dependance on their Chriftian privileges. And this he does by reminding them of the Ifraclites; many of whom, though they enjoyed fimilar privileges, yet by their fins fell under the difpleafure of God. The like expression is used by our Apostle in speaking of Christian baptism, Gal. iii. 27. where he fays, " As " many of you as have been baptized into Chrift ;" which in Acts, viii. 16. is expressed by " being baptized in the name of " the Lord Jefus," that is, into his doctrine. Mofes was a legiflator appointed by God to introduce a new inftitution of his worfhip among the Jews. And in this respect, Heb. iii. he is compared with Christ, though in a lower degree, as the Christian institution is of a more excellent and spiritual nature. Wherefore as baptism is the initiatory ordinance of the Christian profession, and the Israelites, at their paffage through the Red Sea, were entering upon their new establishment, under the conduct of Moles; the Apostle calls what then happened to them, in a similar manner, by the word baptifm. The character of legislator is given only to Chrift and Mofes, as each of them promulged a divine inflitution, though in many respects of a very different nature. And therefore perfons were never baptized in the name of any other divine instructor. Hence the Apostle puts this question to the Corinthians, ch. i. 13. "Were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" Some propole to read, All, even to Moles; that is to fay, all, not excepting Moles, were baptized. See Heinfius, Ward, &c.

Ver. 3, 4. Spiritual meat-spiritual drink] It is not necoffary to understand by the fame meat and drink, --- the fame by which genuine Chriftians are fupported; for that could not properly be faid of any Ifraclites who were not true believers: but the meaning is, that they all, good and bad, fhared the fame miraculous fupply of food and drink, which was nveuualiniv, fignifying somewhat spiritual. It is observable, that St. Paul, speaking of the Israelites, ules the word all five times in the compais of the foregoing verses; besides that, he carefully fays the fame ment, and the fame drink, which we cannot suppose to be done by chance; but emphatically to fignify to the Corinthians, (who probably prefumed too much upon their baptifm, and and eating of the Lord's supper, as if that would recommend them to God) that though the Ifraelites, all to a man, ate the very fame spiritual food, and drank the very fame spiritual drink, yet they were not all to a man preferved; but many of them, notwithstanding, finned, and fell under the avenging hand of God in the wildernefs. The Jews have a tradition, that the water which issued from the rock in Horeb, Exod. xvii. 6. followed the lfraelites through the wildernefs: it has been objected, however, that this fiream did not constantly follow them; for in that cafe they would have had no temptation to have murmured for want of water, as we know they did at Kadeth in the circumftances fo fatal to Mofes; nor would they have had any occasion to buy water of the Edomites, as they proposed to do, Deut. ii. 6. To this Mr. Mede replies, That perhaps the streams from the first rock at Rephidim failed, for a further trial of their faith; and at Kaush God renewed the like wonder : but that, likewife, might probably fail, when they came into the inhabited country of the Edonites, which was not till near the end of their wanderings. But it fhould be obferved, that the Apolle does not speak of the real, but the spiritual rock; numely, Chrift; whom that rock in the wildernefs fignified. The word was frequently bears this import; and instances of the like use of it every where abound in Scripture. This rock was indeed a striking representation of Christ, the rock of ages, the fure foundation of his people's hopes; from whom they derive those streams of bleffings, which fillow and minister to them through all this wilderness of mortal life, and will end, for every faithful foul, in rivers of pleafure at the right hand of God for ever. See Locke, Hammond, and Mede's Diatrib. on the place.

Ver. 9. Neither let us tempt Chrift] To tempt fignifies to difbelieve, after tokens fufficient to command our faith, and engage our obedience through grace. Though the word kim be not in the fecond claufe, (fome of them also tempted ) it feems plainly to be implied.

Ver. 10. Of the defiroyer] The Jews generally interpret this of him, whom they stile " The danger of death," under the name of Sammael. See Exod. xii. 23. Heb. xi. 28. Locke and Hammond.

Ver. 11. Now all thefe things happened, &c.] It is to be observed, that all these instances mentioned by the Apostle, of the deftruction which came upon the Ifraelites, who were in covenant with God, and partakers of those typical facraments, were occasioned by their luxurious appetites about meat and drink, and by fornication and idolatry; fins to which the Corinthians had a great propenfity, and against which he therefore the more carefully guards them. TEAn aswww, rendered the ends of the world, properly fignifies the ends of the ages : that is, the concluding age, or the last difpensation of God to mankind; which we must affuredly conclude that it is, if we believe the Gofpel to be true. See Locke.

Ver. 13. Common to man, &c.] 'Av9 wawg, - which may fignify, proportionable to human strength, as well as frequent to human creatures. God encourages his people to hope for his prefence and help in prefling danger. See ch. i. o. Doddridge and Mintert.

Ver. 16. The cup of bleffing, &c.] The Jews used to conclude the feast whereon the paschal lamb was eaten, with a cup of wine. This they called the cup of bleffing, and the cup of praifing, because at the time of drinking it, they fung a hymn of praise. We should likewise recoilect, that in the early ages of the world, when victims made fo great a part of the religion, not only of the Jews, but even of the Gentiles, the facrifice was followed by a religious feaffing on the thing which had been offered; the partakers whereof were supposed to become partakers of the benefits of the facrifice. Well, therefore, might the Apoftle argue against the Corinthians, who ate of the facrifices of the Gentiles, and communicated with the Chriftians, as in the verse before us; whence we may collect, that the cup of bleffing, &c. is not merely a general commemoration of Christ's death and passion; it is the spiritual com-Ηb munica

Ver. 17. For we, being many, &c.] This verse is still a further proof that the cup of bleffing, &c. is not, as fome would urge, merely a commemoration of a deceased benefactor; but a commemoration of Christ's death and passion. In this verse the Apostle alludes to the Jewish cuitom of having but one loaf at the paffover, which was not divided, till broken in order to be diffributed; he fays, therefore, that the partaking of one bread, made the receivers of many to become one body :- A just inference, according to the idea that we have affixed to this rite; for then the communion of the body and blood of Chrift helps to unite the fpiritual and fincere receivers into one body, by an equal distribution of one common benefit; or, in the elegant words of the liturgy of the church of England, "Then we " fpiritually eat the flesh of Christ, and drink his blood; " then we dwell in Chrift, and Chrift in us; we are one " with Chrift, and Chrift with us."

Ver. 21. Ye cannot drink the cup, &c.] There still remains one more fense of the Lord's supper, which is, that it was a foederal rite or covenant : this is grounded upon the Apostle's reasoning in this and the preceding verses: " Those who eat of the facrifices, fays he, are partakers of the altar: ver. 18." Now a facrifice at the altar, was a forderal rite or covenant; confequently the feast upon that facrifice, became a fœderal rite and covenant likewife. It is eafy to fhew that the demons were confidered as prefent at the heathen facrifices, and as partakers with the worshippers in the common feast; and that by these means friendthip, brotherhood, and familiarity, were imagined to be contracted between them, becaufe they all ate at one table, and fat down at one board. The Lord's table, and the table of devils, therefore, being both foederal rites or covenants, the fame perfon could not be a partaker of both; because no man can execute two foederal rites or covenants which mutually destroy each other. See Cudworth's " True notion of the Lord's fupper," ch. i. and v. Elfner and Lowman's Heb. Ritual, p. 54.

Ver. 22. Do we provoke the Lord, &c.?] This alludes to the idea under which idolatry is reprefented as a kind of fpiritual adultery, which moved the jealoufy of God; though every deliberate fin is, in effect, a daring of his omnipotent vengeance. See Doddridge and Locke.

Ver. 23 ] The Apostle here proceeds with another argument against things offered to idols, wherein he shews the danger which might be in it, from the fcandal it might give, fuppoling the thing lawful in itfelf. He had iormerly treated on this fubject, (ch. viii.) fo far as to let them fee, that there was no good or virtue in eating things offered to idols, notwithstanding they knew that idols were nothing, and they might think their free eating without fcruple flewed that they knew their liberty in the Gospel, -that idols were in reality nothing, and therefore they flighted and difregarded them and their worfhip as nothing; but the Apostle informs them, that there might be great evil in eating,-by the offence it might give to weak Chriftians, who had not that knowledge. He here takes up the argument of offence again, and extends it to Jews and Gentiles, ver. 32; shewing that it is not enough to justify us in any action, that the thing we do is in itlelf lawful, unlefs we feek in it the glory of God, and the good of others, ver. 23, to ch. xi. 1.

Ail things] The word all is here to be limited to fuch things as are the fubject of the Apoftle's difcourfe; and his meaning is,—" Suppofing all thefe things be lawful; fup-" pofing it lawful to eat things offered unto idols; yet " things that are lawful are not expedient: all things " that are lawful for me, may not tend to the edification " of others, and fo ought to be forborne." See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 24. Let no man feek his own] This precept cannot be taken in a ftrict and literal fenfe, but should be interpreted comparatively, fo as to understand the Apostle as exhorting them not to feek their own advantage entirely, or not fo much as that of others. Mr. Locke's paraphrase is, "No one must feek barely his own private particular interest " alone, but let every one feek the good of others also."

Ver. 25. Whatfoever is fold in the fhambles] Herodotus informs us, that the Egyptians, when they had cut off the head head of the victim, used to carry the carcafe to market, and fell it to the Greeks, if they could find any to purchase ; if not, they threw it into the river, judging it unlawful to eat it themfelves. Though the Grecian priefts had no fuch fcruples, yet, as they had often more flesh of the facrifices than they and their families could confume, it was natural for them to take this method of difpoling of it to advantage; and at times of extraordinary facrifice, it is probable the neighbouring markets might be chiefly supplied from their temples. See Doddridge and Raphelius.

Ver. 26. For the earth is the Lord's, &c.] For as God is the great Creator, Proprietor, and Disposer, sovereign Lord and Governor of the whole earth, and of all its fruits and products, (Pf. xxiv. 1.) fo he has given them for the fervice of men; and all their rich variety, for neceffity and chaste delight, are fanctified to the believer's use; infomuch, that he may lawfully eat of them under the Gofpel difpenfation, which has abolifhed the ceremonial diffinctions of them, that were of a typical nature under the law, (lee 1 Tim. iv. 4.) and in which Chrift, as Mediator, is Lord of all.

Ver. 29. For why is my liberty judged of ] Some think that the meaning is, "Why should I use my liberty fo, as to " offend the confcience of any ?"-Others think it is an objection in the mouth of the Corinthians, and to be thus understood: "But why should I fuffer myself to be thus " imposed upon, and receive law from any, where Christ " has left me free ?" Rather, perhaps, this and ver. 30. are to be confidered as coming in by way of parenthefis, to prevent the Corinthians from extending the former caution beyond what the Apostle defigned by it; as if he had faid, "as to what immediately lies between God and my " own foul, why is my liberty to be judged, arraigned, " and condemned at the bar of another man's confcience? "-I am not in fuch cafes to govern myfelf by the judg-"ment and apprehension of others; nor have they any " authority to judge or cenfure me for not concurring with " them in their own narrow notions and declarations." See Doddridge, Locke, and Whitby.

Ver. 30. For, if I, &c.] For, if I eat or partake with thankf. giving.

Ver. 31. Whether therefore ye eat] " Therefore on the " whole, to conclude this difcourfe, fince no one parti-" cular rule can be laid down to fuit all the diversities of " temper and apprehension which may arife; instead of " uncharitable contentions with each other, or any thing " which looks like mutual contempt, let us take all the " pains we can to meet as in the centre of real religion. " See to it then, that whether ye eat or drink, or what-" ever else ye do, in the common as well as facred actions " of life, ye do all to the glory of God; purfuing the cre-" dit of the Gospel, and the edification of the church, " that God may be honoured in the happinels of his crea-" tures, and more univerfally acknowledged as the author " of all good." See Doddridge, and more on this fubject in the Inferences.

Ver. 32. Neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles] As thefe are both opposed to the church of God, it is reasonable to conclude, that the Apostle speaks of unconverted Jews and Greeks, and refers to the danger there might be of prejudicing them against Christianity, by the indulgencies against which he cautions them. See Doddridge, Calmet, and on the next chapter, ver. 1.

Inferences .- The defign of the Apostle in this chapter is, to prefs upon Chriftians the great obligations they are under to walk worthy of their holy vocation; to be folicitous above all things to promote the glory of God, and the falvation of man; to bring over unbelievers to the acknowledgment of the truth, and to prevent, as far as poffible, those who believe from being offended and discouraged in their duty, or by any means tempted and feduced into fin. The greateft temptation in the Apoftle's days was, that of relapfing into idolatry; either directly into groß acts of this fin, through fear of perfecution; or confequentially into the fnare of a defiled confeience, by prefumptuoufly mifunderftanding the true bounds of what was lawful and innocent. Againft both thefe he exhorts the Corinthians in the chapter before us,—againft falling into direct idolatry through fear of perfecution, he cautions them, ver. 13-21. againft the next danger,—the falling confequentially into the fnare of a defiled confeience, by prefumptuoufly mifunderftanding the true bounds of what is lawful and innocent,—he cautions them in the remaining part of the chapter.

The words contained in the 31ft verfe, hold forth a doctrine of the higheft importance in religion. By the glory of God is originally meant, 1. His effence, perfon, or majefty. 2. The manifeflation of his perfections or attributes in the external exercise of them towards his creatures. And hence, 3. The return and acknowledgment which his creatures make again to God, for this manifeftation of his goodnefs to them.

To give glory to God, is to promote his honour in the world, or to contribute what we can towards the keeping up in our own and all men's minds a just fense of him, and a regard to him. And this is done particularly by worfhipping him with conftant and perpetually-returning acts of folemn public devotion :- By thanks particularly returned for special mercies or benefits received, whereby we profefs our fenfe of God's being the author of them ;--by the acknowledgment of his government and fupreme dominion in the world ;--by confession of past offences, with true humiliation, and a just fense of the unworthines and ungratefulnefs of fin;-and by actual repentance and forfaking of fin, accompanied with real, conftant, habitual amendment of heart and life. In fhort, whatever tends to the true honour of religion, and to the effablishment of holinefs, virtue, and goodnefs among men, this is one of those things which truly promote the glory of God.

Hence then we fee what is required of men to practife, in the feveral cafes and circumftances of life, in order to their fatisfying the precept in queftion.—He that will in all things promote the glory of God, must not only be conftant in acts immediately and directly religious; but he must alfo refolve, in the ftrength of divine grace, againft being at any time guilty of any action which is irreligious. Whoever is fincerely defirous of doing all things to the glory of God, as he will be heartily forry for all his own fins and offences, fo he will really endeavour, as much as in him lieth, to prevent the fins of others. He will avoid every thing which may lead them into fin. He will fet them an example of holinefs and virtue in the practice of his own life : he will recommend to them, in his difcourfe upon all fair occafions, the excellency and the reafonablenefs of religion : he will rejoice to fee virtue, righteoufnefs, and univerfal love prevail and profper in the world; will wifh, with Mofes, that all the Lard's people were prophets, and contribute all in his power towards enabling them to be fuch.

But further, in all great actions,—actions of moment in the main courfe of human life, though they may not be directly religious, he ought expressly to intend the glory of God, as his chief and main end: for whatever is therefore chosen from fincere and pure motives, because it tends to the promoting of bolines, virtue, and goodness, is in the Scripture fense done for the glory of God; and whatever is in like manner avoided, because it has a tendency to evil, is avoided for the glory of God.

Now there is no confiderable action in any man's life, no action of confequence and importance in the world, but which, even though it has not any direct relation to religion, yet fome way or other has, on the whole, a tendency to promote the caufe of virtue or of vice. Such, for inftance, is a man's chooling his profession, or manner of life in the world. Whatever profession,-though not directly unlawful,-leads men into many and ftrong temptations to fin, will always, if possible, be avoided by a man who is fincerely defirous of doing all things to the glory of God. Every innocent profeision may equally and indifferently be chosen by any good man; but yet, even in that choice, his main and ultimate end will be the exercise of right and truth. Profit, reputation, and the like, may very innocently and very justly be aimed at, by men in any business or employment whatever; but then thefe things must always be defired, with a due fubordination to the interefts of holinefs and virtue, which is the glory of God, and the only true and final happiness of men. -Who-

-Wheever, in the great lines and main courfe of his life, aims merely or principally at worldly ends,—in the attainment of those ends, be bas his peculiar, his only reward.

Once more, as in all great actions a good Chriftian ought actually, fo in all, even the [inalleft and most inconfiderable actions of life, he ought habitually to intend the glory of God. The royal prophet, in Pf. cxlviii. 2, &c. reprefents all, even the irrational, nay, the very inanimate creatures, as glerifying God by fulfilling his word, by acting regularly according to the nature that he had given them. Much more then may even the most common actions of men be justly find to be done to the glory of God, when they are done, from gracious principles, decently and foberly, regularly and innocently, as becomes Chriftians,-fuch as have upon their minds, even when they are not directly thinking of it, an babitual regard to God and religion. In a journey, to a diligent man, and one whofe mind is really bent upon his journey's end, every thing he does, as well as his adual travelling, tends truly to the fame end. His reft, and fleep, his flops and refreshments, nay, his very digresfons, still tend uniformly towards enabling him to arrive at his intended home. And thus likewife, in the courfe of a religious life, to a man fincerely virtuous and truly holy, every action of his life promotes the glory of God; every thing he does, is fanctified by a habit of piety; his woridly business and employments, by justice and charity running uniformly through all the parts of it ;- the common actions of his life by decency and inoffenfiveness, and all his relaxations by genuine fimplicity and right intention. In a word, whatever he is doing, he still always habitually remembers the end; and therefore, while in this spirit, through the grace of God, he never does amifs.

The uses naturally arising by way of reflection from what has been faid, are as follow :

1. We may learn hence, how fevere a reproof those perfons justly deferve, who, far from doing all things, as the Apoltle directs, to the glory of God, do on the contrary, by profanenels, unrighteoulnels, and debauchery, directly dithonour him whom they profess to ferve; bringing a reproach and infamy upon our most holy religion, and causing the name of God and the doctrine of Christ to be, through their means, blasphemed in the world.

2. Those deferve, in the next place, to be rebuked fharply, who, though they do not difhonour God by acts directly irreligious, yet are carelefs and negligent in matters of religion: not much regarding whether truth or error prevails in the world; not being folicitous to do honour to their religion, and to promote the foreading of the Gospel of Chrift, by shewing its reasonableness, by preferving its fimplicity and purity, and by exhibiting its beauty to all mankind.

3. After thele, fuch are the objects of centure, who have indeed a zeal for religion, but not according to knowledge; placing the main stress of religion in forms and ceremonies unworthy of God, or in opinions and notions, which either through their obscurity, or their difagreement with the everlasting Gospel and the divine perfections, hinder instead of promoting the glory of God.

4. Even the beft of men have need to be admonifhed and put in remembrance, that they fir up the gift of God which is in them, that fo they may be more and more diligent in all their actions, to do every thing to the glory of God; not with a fuperfitious anxiety, or a burdenfome precifeness in things of little moment, but with a cheerful application of every occurrence of life to the promoting of truth and right, of holiness and virtue among men :--Rejoicing in the glory of God, and in the establishment of his kingdom of righteousness, as that wherein consists the happiness of mankind, both in this world, and in that which is to come.

Latily, we may learn hence to comfort and fatisfy the minds of weak Chriftians, who, not having a right notion what the glory of God is, are not able to ailure themfelves that they are true promoters of it.—A Chriftian's duty, of doing all things to the glory of God, fignifies plainly and fimply this—" That he ought always to prefer the interefts " of religion, holinefs, and virtue, and to promote and " eftablifh them in himfelf and in the minds of his fellow-" creatures, at all times and in all places, before all worldly " confiderations whatfoever."

REFLECTIONS.—Ift, The Apostele returns to the subject of eating the factifices offered to idols.

1. He reminds the Corinthians of the diffinguished privileges, and fatal overthrow of the Ifraelites in the wildernefs. Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all paffed through the fea, led by divine protection, covered from the heat by day, and cheered by the light of fire by night; preferved amid the watery walls, and fafely traverfing the ocean's bed; and were all baptized unto Mofes in the cloud, and in the fea, fprinkled with fome drops from the cloud, or from fprays of the dashing waves; and were all brought under the Mofaical law, as we by baptifm are visibly admitted into the church of Christ, and devoted to his fervice: and did all eat the fame fpiritual meat, the manna which fell around their tents, the figure of Chrift. the true bread which came down from heaven, on whom his believing people facramentally feed to the end of time; and did all drink the fame spiritual drink ; for they drank of that fpiritual rock that followed them, and that rock was Chriff. Through all the defart the living ftreams gufhed forth to flake their thirst ; and that divine Redeemer, whom the rock, the fountain of living waters, and the ftreams from Lebanon prefigured-he, by his gracious prefence. was in the midit of them, as he is full in the hearts of all his believing people. But, though all enjoyed thefe diftinguishing privileges, with many of them God was not well pleased, for they were overthrown in the wilderness; and, for their difobedience and rebellions, were not fuffered to enter into the land of promile, the type of the heavenly Canaan; but their carcafes fell in the defart. Note; It is not outward ward privileges enjoyed, but inward grace posses which alone can bring us to the eternal inheritance, and the reft which remaineth for the people of God.

2. From their examples, the Apofle warns the Corinthins not to be fecure, no with ftanding their diffinguished privileges, left, imitating their fins, they fhould be expoled to like punifhment. (1.) He cautions them against the indulgence of their appointes. Diffatisfied with the manna, the lfraelites lufted after flefh to eat. Against fuch luxury they mult beware, and particularly avoid the idol feafts or facrifices, which could not but have the most fatal confequences. Note; To pleafe the palate, how many have plunged both body and foul into hell ! (2.) He warns them against idolatry, such as the Israelites committed, when, having offered their facrifices to the calf, they fat down to feast upon them, and, according to the heathen custom, role up to dance around the call, to do him honcur; but they feverely fuffered for their abominations, Exod. xxxii. 10. 28. (3.) He admonifies them against fornication, fuch as the Jews committed with the daughters of Moab, and to which they were led at their idol feafls; the dire confequence of which was, that in one day three-andtwenty thousand were cut off by the immediate judgement of God. With fuch an inftance of divine vengeance before them, they had need tremble for themfelves in a city fo abandoned to lewdnefs as Corinth was, knowing that none of their privileges could protect them, if they finned, but that whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. (4.) He warns them against all diffionourable diffruit of the power and grace of Chrift to carry them through their difficulties, remembering the vengeance inflicted upon those of old, who tempted and provoked God by their unbelief, Numb. xxi. 6. and were deflroyed by the fiery ferpents. N te; When unbelief prevails, then the old ferpent, the devil, refumes his dominion over the foul. (5.) He cautions them against all diffeontent under their fufferings or trials, and to beware of those who would infligate them to murmur against him, and against the other ministers of Christ for what they delivered from him. Thus murmured the Ifraelites against Moles and Aaron, on account of the difficulties which they apprehended, and were deflroyed by the angel's hand. Thefe things were all recorded for the admonition of the church; and what befel God's profelling people of old, fhould be a warning to us at prefent, who live under the last dispensation which God will ever grant, that, having their fearful punifiment in view, we might avoid the like provocations. Wherefore, let him that thinketh he flandeth fecure and immoveable, take heed left, puffed up with high imaginations of his own fufficiency, he fall, as the Ifraclites did of old. Note; (1.) The falls of others should be our warnings. (2.) Distrust of ourselves, and dependance upon the power and grace of the Redeemer, are our great stability.

3. He encourages the truly pious among them, under all their trials, to truft and not be afraid. There hath no temptation taken you, but fuch as is common to man, fuch as you might expect from the world around; or fuch as is incident to human nature; or at least, none so grievous but you may well bear up under it. But however fevere your temptations may be; God is faithful to his promifes, who will not fuffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it; and if you truft in him, he will support you while it lafts, and in his good time give you deliverance from it; fo that you shall neither be drawn into fin, nor faint under your fufferings. Note; (1.) We must not think our trials fingular, and murmur, however fevere they may be: others have felt the same before us. (2.) God's faithfuinels to his promifes should be the anchor of our (3.) Our Redcemer is mighty; we may fafely hope. truft him. (4.) God knows belt what afflictions we need, and how long we fhould be exercifed with them. To him let us always refer ourfelves, cafting our care upon him.

2dly, From the foregoing premifes the Apoftle returns to urge the neceffity of thunning idolatry, in its not diftant approaches, knowing the dreadful confequences of it on the one hand, and the divine affittance promifed on the other. He therefore, with warm affection, warns them as dearly beloved, to free from idolatry; and, as to wife men, whether really poff fI.d of fpiritual witdom, or vainly puffed up with their fancied high attainments, he appeals to them for the reafonablenefs of what he advanced.

1. He inftances in the cafe of the Lord's fupper. The cup of bleffing which we blefs, is it not the communion of the blood of Chrift? Do we not therein profess to hold communion with Chrift in all his faving bleffings? Do we not therein acknowledge our obligations to him, as bought with a price, to glorify him in our bodies and our spirits, which are his? The bread, or loaf, which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Chrift? Does not our feeding upon it fignify our communion with him who is the living bread? And do we not hereby profess our folemn devotedness to him, and union with each other ? For we, being many, are one bread, as the different corns of wheat are moulded into one loaf, and intimately united in one body, of which Chrift is the living head; for we are all partakers of that one bread, feafting together upon the facrifice of Chrift, herein shadowed forth; partakers of all the benefits obtained by his one oblation once offered; and thereby united to him in love, and to one another.

2. The cafe is the fame with regard to the Jewish facrifices. Behold Ifrael after the fleft, in their observance of the ritual fervices; are not they which eat of the facilities partakers of the altar? When they fealt upon the remainder of the peace-offerings, they profels communion with, and subjection to that God, on whole altar they offered their facrifice.

3. He applies what he had faid to the point in hand. What fay I then? that the idol is any thing, or that which is facrificed to idols is any thing? No, I have declared the contrary, chap. viii. The idol is nothing, and the meat in its nature nature not altered. But I fay, that the things which the Gentiles facrifice, they facrifice to devils, and not to God. The damons whom they worthip, are wicked and fallen fpirits, with whom, in these facrifices, they maintain communion, and to whom they pay divine honours And I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils, as by parity of reason, confidering the foregoing cafes, you mult, if you fealt with the idolaters on their facrifices. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, the fymbol of his blood, and the up of devils, the libations confectated to these dæmons; se cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils; there is an utter inconfistency in fuch a conduct; Chrift and Belial can have no communion. To feast, therefore, in idol temples, is to renounce Christianity, its facraments, and privileges. Do we provoke the Lord Jefus to jealcufy, by fuch idolatry, in direct opposition to his holy law? Exod. xx. 3-5. Are we stronger than he? and do we defy the wrath of the Almighty? Surely destruction must be the confequence. Note; When we have to do with a jealous God, how careful fhould we be that no idol in our hearts, as well as no outward object of idolatry, rob him of his peculiar honour !

3dly, The Apostle,

1. In general warns them againft every abule of their Chriftian liberty. All things are lawful for me, and theie meats offered to idols are not thereby defiled; but all things are not expedient. There are circumflances, in which it would be duty to abftain from what is in its own nature innocent and indifferent: all things are lawful for me, but all things calify not; and therefore, if eating thefe factifices gave effect to a weak brother, it would be then my duty to abitain, however clear I might be in the lawfulnefs of the thing. And this is a rule applicable to many other teles; therefore, generally, let it be your practice that no man feek kis own will, humour, or benefit; but every man another's wealth, ready to deny himfelf, in order to promote the advantage and edification of others.

2. He flews in what particular inflances the meat offered to idols might be fafely eaten. (1.) If it was exposed in the public market to be fold, then they need not make any inquines, for conficience fake, whence it came, but buy, and vie it for common food. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; and all the creatures are good, when uled to his glory. (2.) If any heathen acquaintance bid you to a feast, and you have any inducement or obligation to go, whatever the table affords may be eaten without louple; but if any person at the table suggests, this is Good in facrifice unto idols, eat not, for his fake that shewed ", and for confcience fake, bearing your teltimony thereby against all such impious honours offered to dæmons, and keeping your confcience void of offence. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulnefs thereof; and he has provided fufheiency of other food, without our diffionouring him by the least thing which might feem to countenance idolatrous worthip. Abstain for confcience fake, I fay, not thine own, but of the other, who informed you, and might be grieved or ftumbled by your example.

3. He answers an objection which might be raifed. For why is my liberty judged of another man's confinence? His conficience is not to be the rule of my conduct. For if I by grace be a partaker, why am I evil ficken of for that for which I give thanks? In answer, he replies, that the following rules must be applied to all particular circumstances. Some understand the Apostle, not as speaking in the perfon of an objector, but as declaring what he did in such a cafe; and intimating how imprudent it would be to give others occasion to pass a wrong judgement upon him; for however lawful it might be for him to eat the meat which had been offered to idols, yet he was, for the fake of his influence and usefulnels, to take care, that his good might not be evil ficken of, Rom. xiv. 16. and therefore he would abstain: two general rules he preferibes,

[1.] Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatfoever ye do, do all to the glory of God, making that the ultimate end of all your actions.

[2.] Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God. Do nothing which should grieve or stumble them; particularly, avoid the meat offered to idols, which the Jews abominated, and might prove a snare to the weaker Gentile converts. And what he recommended to them, he practifed himself: even as I please all men in all things, as far as I lawfully can, not feeking mine own profit, humour, or inclination, but the profit of many, that they may be faved; solicitous, by every means, to win fouls to the adored Redeemer, and to lead them in the ways of everlasting life.

CHAP. XI.

FROM the things written in this chapter, and in chap. xiv. ver. 34, 35, 36. it appears that fome of the Corinthian women, on pretence of being infpired, had prayed and prophefied in the Christian assemblies as teachers: and while performing these offices, had cast off their veils, after the manner of the heathen priestes in their heathen exstalies. These diforderly practices, the falle teacher, it feems, had encouraged, ver. 16. from a defire to ingratiate himfelf with the female part of the Corinthian church. But the Apostle's adherents, sensible that it did not become the women to be teachers of the men, had reftrained them. And this having occasioned disputes between the church and the faction, the church, in their letter, applied to the Apostle for his decision .- In answer, he first of all commended them for having held fast his ordinances concerning the public worfhip of God, ver. 2. Next, he explained the foundation on which his ordinances relating to the public worship were built, namely, the fubordination of all men to Chrift, the fubordination of woman to man, and the fubordination of the human nature of Chrift to God. For by this subordination, the behaviour both of men and women in the public affemblies was to be regulated, gulated, ver. 3.-Every man, fays the Apostle, who prayeth or prophefieth in public with his head veiled, diffionoureth Chrift his head; who having given man authority over woman, is diffionoured when the man renounces that authority, by appearing veiled in the prefence of the woman• as her inferior, ver. 4 .-- On the other hand, every woman who prays or propheties in public with an unveiled head, diffionours the man her lead. Becaufe the wearing of a veil, being an expression of inferiority, by appearing in public unveiled, she renounces her subjection to the man her fuperior, and fets herfelf on an equality with him. Befides, for a woman to throw off her veil in public, was the fame kind of indecency as to appear with her head shaven, ver. 5 .- Wherefore, fays the Apostle, if it be a fhame for a woman to appear in public fhorn or fhaven, let her be veiled, ver. 6 .- Farther, the different mental and bodily accomplishments of man and woman shew that, in the public affemblies for worship, men ought not to be veiled, nor women unveiled, ver. 7.-The subjection of woman to man, appears even from the man's being first made, and from the woman's being made for the man, ver. 8, &c.-For which reason, the woman ought to have a veil on her head in the church, as a mark of her fubjection.-In the mean time, that women might not be too much humbled by what he had faid, he observed that in the method of falvation, man is not regarded feparately from woman, nor woman feparately from man; but the fame way of falvation is appointed for both fexes, and the fame bleffings are promifed to both, in the Gospel, ver. 11.-Befides, as the woman fprings from the man, fo the man is born into the world of the woman; and both, by the power of God, ver. 12.-Next, to fhew the impropriety of women's praying in public unveiled, and of men's praying veiled, the Apoftle appealed to the feelings of the Corinthians, ver. 13.-and asked them whether reason and experience did not teach them, that if a man fuffers his hair to grow long for an ornament to him, as women's hair is to them, it is a difgrace to him? Becaufe men, being defigned for laborious occupations, long hair is extremely inconvenient, efpecially in warm climates, and therefore is used only by the effeminate, ver. 14.—But women being formed to fweeten the toils of men by their beauty, if they have long hair it is a glory to them; their hair being given them as a veil to heighten their charms, ver. 15.-His difcourfe on this fubject, the Apostle concluded with telling the faction, that if any teacher contentiously infifted that women might pray and prophefy in the church unveiled, he ought to know that the Apostles allowed no fuch custom, neither was it practifed in any of the churches of God, ver. 16.

8 For <sup>1</sup> the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man.

The Corinthians had likewife been guilty of great irregularities in celebrating the Lord's fupper. For the Apoftle told them, that though he praifed them for obferving his precepts in general, he did not praife them for this, that they came together in their religious meetings, not for the better, but for the worfe; making thefe meetings the occafion of ftrengthening the difford that had taken place among them, ver. 18, 19 .- For when they came together in the church to eat the Lord's fupper, they formed themfelves into feparate companies. Perhaps those who had been baptized by the fame teacher, fat down by themfelves at separate tables. Or, as violent contentions about different matters had arifen among the Corinthians, probably they were fo difpleafed with one another, that neither of the factions would allow any to join them, except their own adherents. To correct these unchristian practices, the Apostle told them, that their coming together into one place was not all that was necessary to the right eating of the Lord's fupper. They ought to have eaten it together in a body, as jointly bearing witnefs to the truth of Chrift's death and refurrection, and in teftimony of their love to one another as his difciples, ver. 20.—They had erred like-wife in another refpect. The different companies first took their own supper, of victuals which they brought into the church ready prepared; and joined thereto the Lord's fupper, making it a part of a common meal or feast. And many of them finned against the poor who had no fupper to bring, by excluding them from partaking with them, not only of the previous feaft, but of the Lord's fupper itfelf: fo that fome were hungry on these occasions, while others were plentifully fed, ver. 21.-What, faid the Apostle to them sharply, have ye not houses to eat and to drink in ? Or, by making the church of God a place of feafting, do ye mistake it for a heathen temple, and put your poor brethren to fhame who have no fupper to eat? ver. 22.-Thefe feafts, previous to the Lord's fupper, feem to have been introduced by the Jewith Chriftians, who, becaufe Chrift inftituted his fupper, after he had eaten the paffover, might think themfelves warranted to fup together, before they ate the Lord's fupper. To the previous fupper or feast, the Gentile converts had no objection, as it had fome referiblance of the feaft on the facrifice in the idol's temple, to which, in their heathen flate, they had been accultomed. And viewing it in that light, wo-may suppose they invited their heathen acquaintance to partake both of the previous featt, and of the Lord's fupper itfelf, in return for the feafts on the facrifices to which the heathens had invited them.

To remedy thefe great diforders in the celebration of the Lord's fupper, and to thew the Corinthians how much they had corrupted that holy fervice, the Apoltle repeated the account which he had formerly given them of its inflitution, according as he bad received it of the L&rd by revelation, ver. 23-26.—From his account we learn, that the Lord's fupper is not a common meal defigned for the refrefhment of the body, but a religious fervice inflituted to keep up the memory of Chrift's death till he return. Having given this view of the true nature of the inflitution, the Apoltle fhewed them the fin of performing it in an improper manner, ver. 27.—directed them to prepare themfelves for that fervice by felf-examination, ver. 28.—and declared the punithment to which they fubjected themfelves, ٢.

10 For this caufe ought the woman to angels.

11 Neverthelefs, • neither is the man withhave "power on ber head, because of the out the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord.

"That is, a covering, in taken that foe is under the power of ber hufband. Gen. 24. 65. Eccl. 5. 6. with Mat. 18. 10. Heb. 1. 14. Eph. 3. 10. 3. 13-24. & 3. 16. Ch. 13. 20-23. · Gen.

felves, by performing it unworthily, ver. 29-32.-Then concluded by ordering them to celebrate the Lord's fupper tog ther, ver. 33-and to eat at home if they werehungry. The reft of their irregularities refpecting that matter, he promifed to rectify when he came to Corinth, ver. 34.

Ver. 1. Be ye followers of me, &c.] This verie feems to belong to the preceding chapter, where the Apostle had proposed himfelf as an example, and therefore it should not be separated from it. From what St. Paul fays in this and the preceding verfe, taken together, we may collect that he makes fome reflection on the falfe Apostle; at least it is no fmall proof of St. Paul's integrity and humility, that he proposes himself to be followed no further, than as he fought the good of others, and not his own, and as he had Chrift for his pattern. See ch. iv. 16. and Rom.

Ver. 2.] St. Paul commends the Corinthians for observing the orders he had left with them, and uses arguments to justify the rule he had given them, that women should not pray or prophely in their affemblies uncovered; concerning which, it feems, there was fome contention, for the refolution whereof they had appealed to St. Paul, ver. 2-16.

Ver. 3. And the head of Christ is God ] When God is faid to be the head of Chrift, it relates to office conftitution; and we can no more infer thence, that they are not partakers of the fame divine nature, than that man and woman are not of the fame human nature, when the man is faid to be the head of the woman : but as there is a difference in order and authority between the man and the woman; fo there is between God the Father and his Son Jefus Chrift, in that confliction, by which he, in his office capacity, is both head and Lord of all.

Ver. 4. Diffeenoureth his head] It was the cuftom among the Greeks and Romans, as well as the Jews, to appear in places of worthip with their heads covered; and it is certain that the Jewish priests wore a kind of turban, when minifering in the temple : but it feems that the Corinthian men wore a veil, out of regard to a Pharifaical inftitution, and in imitation of the cultom observed in the synagogues, of which the Apostle therefore disapproves. The priests and prophetesfies of the Gentiles had their faces uncovered, when they were under a holy rapture, and delivered their oracles; and at this time the hair of the priesteffes was generally difhevelled : as the Corinthian women, when under the divine infpiration, wore their hair in the fame feshion, it made them too much refemble the pagan priefleffes; and for this reason, amongst others, the Apoltle, with great propriety, difcourages the practice. See Mede's 16th discourse, Whitby, Hammond, Elfner, and the foregoing note.

Ver. 5. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth] Becaufe they who gave thanks, and praifed the Lord with Voz. II.

mufical inftruments, are faid, I Chron. xxv. I, 2. to prophefy with harps, &c.; and becaufe the priefts of Baal, who prayed and fang hymns to that idol in the contest with Elijah, are faid, 1 Kings, xviii. 29. to have prophefied till the time of the evening facrifice, many, by the women's traying and prophefying, understand their joining in the public prayers and praifes, as a part of the congregation. Yet, as it is reasonable to think that this praying and prophelying of the women, was of the fame kind with the praying and prophefying of the men who acted as teachers, mentioned ver. 4. we may suppose that the Corinthian women affected to perform these offices in the public affemblies, on pretence of their being infpired; and though the Apostle in this place has not condemned that practice, it does not follow that he allowed it, or that it was allowed in any church. His defign here, was not to confider whether that practice was allowable, but to condemn the indecent manner in which it had been performed. For the women, when they felt; or thought they felt, themfelves moved by the Holy Spirit in the public affemblies, throwing away their veils, prayed and prophefied with their heads uncovered, and perhaps with their hair difhevelled, in imitation of the heathen priestess in their heathen raptures. See Virgil Eneid. lib. vi. 1. 48. Non compta mansére coma, &c. This indecency in the manner of their praying and prophefying the Apostle thought proper to correct before he prohibited the practice itfelf, becaufe it gave him an opportunity of inculcating due subjection to the men, which is their duty, though fome of them are unwilling to acknowledge it. Women's praying and prophefying in the public affemblies, the Apostle afterwards condemned in the most express terms, chap. xiv. 34. See the note there. We have an example of the fame method of teaching, 1. Cor. viii. where, without confidering whether it was lawful to join the heathens in their feasts on the facrifice in the idol's temple, the Apostle shewed the Corinthians, that although they thought it was lawful becaule they knew an idol was nothing, yet the weak, who had not that knowledge, but who believed the idol to be a real, though fubordinate god, might, by their example, be led to join in these feasts. and thereby be guilty of direct idolatry. This evil confequence the Apostle thought proper to point out before he determined the general question : because it afforded him an opportunity of inculcating the great Christian duty, of taking care never to lead our brethren into fin, even by our most innocent actions. See the note on Rom. xvi. 1.

Ver. 7. Glory of God] The word rendered glory fignifies both a beam or irradiation, and a likenefs. But I apprehend, that here the word must be taken in the latter fense. As a man ought not to have his head covered, as being the immediate image and glory of God, made in his likenefs, as the first copy of his kind, before woman was created; it is therefore decent that he fhould appear with the marks of that fuperiority which he bears. But the woman should Ii forbear

12 For as the woman is of the man, even fo is the man also by the woman; but <sup>a</sup> all things of God.

13 <sup>a</sup> Judge in yourfelves: is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?

14 Doth not even nature itself teach you, that if a man have long hair 'it is a shame unto him?

15 But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her: for her hair is given her for a * covering.

16 But 'if any man feem to be contentious, we have no fuch cuftom, neither the churches of God.

17 Now in this that I declare unto you 'I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse.

forbear it; and it is enough to fay of her, that the is the glory of the man, to whom God hath done no inconfiderable honour, as well as favour, in making to excellent and amiable a creature for his confort. Yet fill her flate of fubjection to him thould be remembered; and it is very expedient that the fhould appear in public with fome tacit acknowledgments of it. See Hammond, Locke, Elfner, and Calmet. Theodoret obferves, that man is here filled the image and glory of God, neither as to his body, nor as to his foul; for in refpect of the foul the woman is equally the glory of God, as to fpirituality and immortality, and fo is equally faid to be made after his image. See Gen. i. 26, 27.

Ver. 10. For this caufe ought the woman to have power, &c.7 Mr. Locke acknowledges, with a modefty which does him much honour, that he did not underftand this text,--and many feem to have darkened it by their attempts to explain it. The chief difficulty does not lie in the word power, which undoubtedly must be understood of the veil worn on their heads by married women, as a token of fubjection to their hufbands; (see Gen. xxiv. 65.) and some fuppofe that the veil was in Hebrew called Tredid, from the root Treded, which fignifies fubjection : So that the veil was as it were the habit by which the woman fnewed that the confidered herfelf as in fubjection: and Chardin observes, that the married women in Persia wear a peculiar habit to the very fame purpofe. It is more difficult to understand the meaning of the clause, because of the angels, -dià tis a yyénes. It feems neither reasonable nor decent to understand this of young miniflers, as if they were in peculiar danger of being enfnared by the beauty of women; and it is more grofsly abfurd ftill, to fuppofe with Tertullian, that there was any room to apprehend it could be a fnare to celestial spirits :-- a mistake which feemed to be grounded on the wild interpretation of Gen. vi. 2. fo generally received among the fathers. Dr. Whitby understands it of evil angels, and thinks it refers to the punishment which Eve incurred, Gen. iii. 16. for hearkening to the fuggestions of Satan. Mr. Gough, in a differtation on the place, by 'Ayyéhes understands spies, who he fuppofes came into Christian affemblies to make ill-natured remarks, and fo would be glad to blaze abroad any indecencies which they might observe there. Others suppose that the prefence of good angels is implied; and they underftand the paffage thus, [observing that the presence of angels in religious affemblies is favoured by Ecclef. v. 6.

and the figures of the cherubim in the tabernacle and temple:] " The woman ought to have upon her head a " veil, as a token of her being under the power and fub-" jection of the man; and fo much the rather ought fhe " to wear it in religious affemblies, becaufe of the angels; " who are efpecially prefent there, and before whom we " ought to be exceedingly careful that nothing pafs which " may be indecent and irregular, and unlike that perfect " order and profound humility with which they worfhip " in the divine prefence."

It is not for me to determine amid this variety of opinions; I thall therefore only add, that the reader will find in the note on Rom. xvi. 1. an explanation of this paffage, which appears to me as fatisfactory as any other; and by referring to Gough's Differtation at the end of his fermons, he will meet with copious matter for inquiry on the fubject. See on Numb. vi. 7. The word igeoia, rendered power, is ufed by Lucian, in his "Bion wears;" for a veil.

Ver. 15. But if a woman have, &c.] This fhould be read with an interrogation, connecting it with the former verfe, —But that if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her?— For, &c.

Ver. 16. But if any man feem to be, &c.] Be, or is difpofed to be, &c. " If any one, from a love of difputing, or " from his own different views of what is naturally " decent, fould controvert what I advance, I fhall not " contend further; but content myfelf with faying, that " we have here no fuch cuftom, for women to appear with " their heads uncovered; neither do I know of its prevailing " in any other of the churches of God, whether planted by " me, or any of my brethren. I think, therefore, that " it ought to be avoided, as a fingularity which may ap-" pear like affectation, and give offence, even if it be not " judged a natural indecorum." See Doddridge and Calmet.

Ver. 17.] We may observe from feveral passages in this epistle, that many Judaical customs had crept into the Corinthian church: this church being of St. Paul's own planting, who spent two years at Corinth in forming it, it is evident that these abuses had their rise from some other teacher, who came to them after St. Paul's leaving them, which was about five years before he wrote this epissile. These diforders therefore may, with reason, be ascribed to the head of the faction which opposed St. Paul, and who, as has been remarked, was a Jew, and probably judaized; and this, it is likely, was the foundation of the great opposition

polition between him and St. Paul, and the reason why St. Paul laboured fo earnestly to deftroy his credit among the Corinthians; this fort of men being very buly, very troublefome, and very dangerous to the Gospel, as may be seen in other of St. Paul's Epistles, particularly that to the Galatians .- The celebrating the paffover among the Jews, was plainly the eating of a meal diffinguished from other ordinary meals by several peculiar ceremonies. Two of theie ceremonies were, eating of bread folemnly broken, and drinking a cup of wine, called " the cup of bleffing." These two our Saviour transferred into the Christian church, to be used in their assemblies, for a commemoration of his death and fufferings. In celebrating this inititution of our Saviour, the judaizing Corinthians followed the Jewish custom of eating their passover. They ate the Lord's supper as a part of their meal, bringing their provisions into the affembly, where they ate, divided into diffinct companies, fome feafting to excefs, whilft others, ill provided, were in want. Their eating thus in the public affembly, and mixing the Lord's supper with their ordinary meal, as a part of it, with other diforders and indecencies accompanying it, is the fubject matter of what remains in this chapter. The Apostle tells them, that he blames them for these innovations as much, as in the beginning of the chapter he commends them for keeping to his directions in other particulars.

Ver. 18. For first of all, &c.] To understand this, we must observe, first, that they had meetings sometimes on purpole only for eating the Lord's fupper, ver. 33. Secondly, That to those meetings they brought their own supper, ver. 21. Thirdly, That though every one's supper was brought into the common affembly, yet it was not to eat in common, but every one fell to his own fupper apart, as loon as it was ready, without staying for the rest of the company, or communicating with them in eating, ver. 21-23. In this St. Paul blames three things effectially. Firft, That they ate their common food in the affembly, which was to be eaten at home in their houfes, ver. 22-34. Secondly, That though they ate in their common meeting-place, yet they ate separately, every one his own supper apart; so that the plenty and excess of some shamed the want and penury of others, ver. 22. Hereby also the divisions among them were kept up, ver. 18. they being as fo many feparated and divided focieties, not as one united body of Chrittians, commemorating their common Head, as ought to have been the cafe in celebrating the Lord's fupper, ch. x. 16, 17. Thirdly, That they mixed the Lord's fupper with their own, eating it as a part of their ordinary meal; where they made not that differimination between it and their common food, which they ought to have done, ver. 29.

Ver. 19. There muss be also herefies] There muss be even herefies. Hence it feems evident, that herefy is spoken of as something worse than the fchiss or divisions mentioned ver. 18. but whether it be an evil entirely of a different kind, or only of a higher degree, is not so clear from this passinge. The word Augins may probably here fignify a party of people separated from their brethren, and forming what is called a diffiner denomination; whereas there may be a fchism without separation, if the people assesses there is together have uncharitable contentions with each other; which was the case with these schematical Corinthians. See Doddridge.

Ver. 21. Every one taketh before other, &c.] This circumftance of their rapacious and indecent behaviour at their feafts is finely illustrated by a paffage from Xenophon, Memorab. lib. iii. c. 41. in which he observes, that Socrates was much offended with the Athenians for their conduct at their common fuppers, as fome prepared delicately for themfelves, while others were but flenderly provided for : he endeavoured to fhame them out of this low tafte, by offering his provisions to all the company. Socrates, the ecclefiaftical hillorian, fpeaks of fome Egyptians living near Alexandria, who partook of the facrament in a very particular manner, much, as it feems, after the Corinthian fashion; introducing it with a jovial feast, in which they regaled themfelves with all kinds of food. It may be proper just to observe, that many well-disposed Chriftians being deterred from communicating at the Lord's fupper, by paffages in this chapter, particularly ver. 27 and 29. they have no need to fear the unworthy receiving fo ftrongly condemned here by St. Paul; fince the abufes which crept into the Corinthian church are fuch, as can never be admitted in ours, upon the present mode of receiving the facrament.

Ver. 22, 23. Shall I praife you, &c.] The Apoffle plainly I i 2 refers 24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and faid, 'Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do * in remembrance of me.

27 Wherefore ' whofoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.

refers here to what he had faid ver. 2. where he praifed them for remembering him in all things, and for retaining what he had delivered to them. This commendation he now retracts; for in this matter of eating the Lord's fupper they did not retain what he had delivered to them, ver. 23. which therefore, in the immediately following words, he repeats to them again. It is very remarkable, that the inflitution of the ordinance of the Lord's fupper fhould make a part of that immediate revelation with which our Lord honoured this great Apostle; and it affords a ftrong argument for the perpetuity of it in the church : for had others of the Apolities (as Barclay prefumes to infinuate) mistaken what had happened at the last passover, and founded the observation of the Eucharit on that mittake, furely Chrift would rather have corrected this error in his new revelation to St. Paul, than have administered fuch an occafion of confirming Christians in it. See Locke, Doddridge, Barclay's Apol. prop. 13. and the notes on the parallel places.

Ver. 24, 25. And when he had given thanks, &c.] This is a remarkable inftance, among a thoufand, to prove the authenticity of St. Luke's Golpel. The Apoltle, finding it neceffary to reprove the Corinthians for their behaviour at the Lord's fupper, labours to convince them of the heinousness of their conduct, by shewing how unfuitable it was to the nature and end of that folemn inflitution : but when he comes to explain the inflitution itself, though he acquired the knowledge of it by immediate revelation, yet it is very remarkable that he expresses himfelf in the words of the Evangelift, Luke, xxii. 19, 20. intending, it should feem, by this quotation, to make them fenfible, that though they might plead the frailty of their memory, in excuse of their forgetfulnefs of what himfelf had delivered on this fubject by word of mouth, they were nevertheless extremely culpable, in not attending to the information of the Gefpel that they had then in their hands; which, if duly regarded, would have effectually reftrained them from fuch infamous proceedings. If this be allowed, and St. Paul had actually an eye to St. Luke in this passage, we have seen a pretty clear proof that his Gofpel was written before this If Epistle to the Corinthians; that is, before the year fifty-feven, and may thence conclude, that we cannot be far diflant from the truth in fixing the date of its publication to the year fifty-three. See Owen's Observations on the four Gospels, p. 47, &c. The word gag, for, ver. 26. has the force of an illative particle; accordingly we may read it therefore. Instead of teflament, fome read covenant.

Ver. 26. As often as ye eat this bread ] It is no wonder that a text, in which this element is fo plainly called bread, after confectation, fhould be urged against the popish doctrine of transfubscantiation : it fignifies little for the favourers of that opinion to plead, that the Scriptures fometimes call things changed by the name of the thing out of which they were made, (as Adam is called dust, Gen. iii 19. Aaron's ferpent a rod, Exod. vii. 12.) or call them according to their fenfible appearance (as Jofhua, v. 13. Mark, xvi. 5.); for these initances rather turn against them, by proving that where the literal interpretation is evidently abfurd, we mult have recourfe to the figurative. Nothing can be more unreasonable than to refer the last clause of this verfe, as the Quakers do, to the time when Chrift should come, by his spiritual illumination on their minds, to take them off from carnal ordinances; for, not to infift upon it, that we have at least as much need of the Lord's fupper as the primitive Christians had,-not having many advantages which they had, fuch as the miraculous gifts, &c.--it is evident that the grand coming of Chrift by the Spirit was, when it was poured out on the day of Pentecost; an event many years prior to the date of this Epistle. See Doddridge, Stillingfleet, and Tillotfon.

Ver. 27. And drink] The original is, or drink. Our Saviour, in the inftitution of the Lord's fupper, tells the Apostles, that the bread and the wine were facramentally his body and blood, and that they were to be eaten and drunk in remembrance of him; which, act St. Paul interprets it, was to shew forth his death till ke came. Whoever, therefore, ate and drank them fo as not folemnly to flew forth his death, followed not Christ's institution, but used them unworthily; that is, not to the end for which they were inflituted. This makes St. Paul tell them, ver. 20. that their coming together to eat as they did, namely, the facramental bread and wine, promifcuoufly with their own food, as a part of their meal,-and that, though in the fame place, yet not all together, in one company, -was not the eating of the Lord's supper. Shall be guilty of the body, &c. means, " shall be liable to the punishment due to one who " makes a wrong use of the facramental body and blood of " Chrift in the Lord's supper." What that punishment was, fce ver. 30.

Ver. 28. But let a man examine himself ] St. Paul, as we have observed, tells the Corinthians, ver. 20. that to eat it after the manner they did, was not to eat the Lord's supper. He tells them also, ver. 29. that to eat it without a due and direct imitating regard had to the Lord's body, (for fo he calls the facramental bread and wine, as our Saviour did in the inftitution) by feparating the bread and wine from the common use of eating and drinking for hunger and thirst, was to eat unworthily. To remedy these disorders herein, he sets before them Christ's own inflitution of this facrament, that in it they might fee the manner and end of its inftitution, and by that every one might examine his own comportment herein, whether it were conformable to that invitution, and fuited to that end. In the account that he gives of Christ's institution, we may observe, he particularly remarks to them, that this eating and drinking was no part of common eating and drinking for hunger and thirst; but was instituted in a very folemn manner, after they had fupped, and for another end, viz. to represent Christ's body and blood, and to be eaten and drunk in remembrance of him; or as St. Paul expounds it, to shew forth his death. Another thing which they might observe in the institution was, that this was done by all who were prefent, united together in one company, at the fame time. All which put together, fnews us what the examination here proposed is. For the defign of the Apostle being to reform what he found fault with in their celebrating the Lord's fupper, it is by that alone that we must understand the directions he gives them about it, if we would suppose that he talked pertinently to this captious people, whom he was very defirous to reduce from the irregularities they were running into in this matter, as well as several others. And if the account of Christ's inflitution be not in order to their examining their carriage by it, and adjusting it to it, to what purpose is it here? The examination therefore proposed was no other but an examination of their manner of eating the Lord's fupper by Christ's institution, to fee how their behaviour herein comported with the inflitution, and the end for which it was inflituted. Which further appears to be fo by the punifiments annexed to their mifcarriages herein, which were infirmities, fickness, and temporal death, with which God chaftened them, that they might not be condemned with the unbelieving world, ver. 30-32. For if the unworthinels here spoken of, were either unbelief, or any of thole fins which are ufually made the matter of examination, it is to be prefumed the Apostle would not wholly have passed them over in filence : this at least is certain, that the punifhment of these fins is infinitely greater than that which God here inflicts on unworthy receivers, whether they who are guilty of them received the facrament or not. The words Kai star, as to the letter, are rightly translated and fo; but that translation leaves generally a wrong fense of the place in the mind of an English reader. For, in ordinary speaking, these words, let a man examine bimfelf, and fo let bim eat, are understood to import the fame with thefe, let a man examine himfelf, and then let him eat; as if they fignified no more, but that examination fhould precede, and eating follow; which I take to be quite different from the meaning of the Apoftle here, whofe fense the whole defign of the context shews to be this: I here fet before you the inflitution of Chrift ; by that let a man examine his carriage; uni stus, and according to that let him eat ; let him conform the manner of his eating to that.

Ver. 29. Unworthily] See ver. 27. To receive for the purposes of intemperance or of faction, was certainly receiving very unworthily. The fenfe of the Apoftle's expreffion, however, may be extended to every manner of receiving contrary to the nature and defign of this folemn ordinance, and confequently to the cafe of doing it merely in a fecular view, which it is heartily to be wished that all concerned in it would ferioufly confider. It is perhaps one of the most unhappy mistakes in our version of the Bible, that the word xpijua is rendered damnation. It has raifed a dread in tender minds, which has greatly obstructed the comfort and edification that they might have received from this. ordinance. As the word fignifies only that the unworthy receiver is guilty of fin, and may expect fuch punifhment as is mentioned in the next verfe; fo, in conformity with the whole context, it fhould have been rendered judgment. The Apolle afterwards fays, we are judged, injuipeda, that is, " we are chaftened or corrected, that we may not be " condemned," - xataxe, Super; which plainly thews, that the judgment spoken of might be fatherly chastifement. It should likewife be observed, that St. Paul does not fay, Whofoever shall eat this bread, being not worthy of it ; but whoever eats it in fuch an unworthy or irreverent manner as he defcribes above; and therefore the text in this view certainly ought not to difcourage Christians at prefent from approaching the Lord's table. See Wall, Locke, Doddridge, and the next note.

Ver. 31. For if we would judge ourfelves, &c.] In ver. 29. the Apostle uses the word dianginan, - un dianginon, -" Not ". discriminating, or not putting a difference between the " facramental bread and wine, which St. Paul, with our " Saviour, calls Chrift's body, and other bread and wine, " in the folemn and feparate use of them." The Corinthians, as has been remarked, ate the Lord's support at and with their own ordinary fupper, whereby it came not to be fufficiently diffinguished (as became a Christian and religious observance to solemnly instituted) from common eating for bodily refreshment; nor from the Jewish patchal supper, and the bread broken, and the cup and bleffing ufed in that: nor did it in this way of eating frew fort the Lord's Lord's death, as it was defigned to do by the concurrence and communion of the whole affembly of Christians, jointly united in the partaking of bread and wine in a way peculiar to them,—with reference folely to the Lord Jefus Chrift. This is what St. Paul calls eating unworthily: to avoid which, he exhorts them to judge themfelves, or rather (in plain allusion to this not diferiminating the Lord's bedy) to distinguish or discriminate themselves; for diaxiver means the fame here as it does ver. 29. and is never used to fignify judge. He is little verfed in St. Paul's writings, who has not observed how frequently he uses the fame word that he had used before, to the same purpose, though in a different construction; as here he applies diangines to the perfons diferiminating, as in the 29th verfe, to the thing to be diferiminated; though in both places it be put to denote the fame action.

Ver. 32. We are chaftened] The word  $\Pi_{\alpha\beta} \psi_{\beta} \psi_{\beta} \varphi_{\alpha}$  properly fignifies to be corrected, as fcholars are by their matters for their good. Some render the verfe, But when we judge NOT ourfelves, we are chaftened by the Lord, &c.

Ver. 33, 34. Tarry one for another, &c.] Some would read this paffage thus, Wait one for another, (and if any man hunger, let him eat at home) THAT ye may not come together to your guilt. See Musculus and Bengelius.

Inferences.—It is the duty of Christians frequently to remember the honourable relation in which they it and to Christ, as their head; and as beyond all doubt, under his mediatorial character, he is most willingly and joyfully subject to God, we should learn to imitate him in that cheerful and entire subjection, out of love and reverence to him; guarding against whatever is unbecoming, left he be difhonoured thereby, ver. 3, 4.

When in any act of divine worship we have the happiness to approach the blessed God, let us reverence his awful prefence.

What St. Paul observes of the mutual dependance which the fexes have on each other, should dispose them to mutual candour and respect; avoiding the cruck tyranny or the vain affectation which often arms them on either fide with ungenerous reslections; and as all things are of God, it should be our concern that all things be faithfully employed for his glory. Whatever comforts we receive in relative life, (which are indeed many and important) should lead us to adore the wildom of the divine constitution, in the original formation of our nature, and the fecret influence and conduct of his providence in the regulation of our respective circumstances and affairs, ver. 11, 12.

We fee from ver. 14—16. the force of custom for determining in many respects what is decent, and what is otherwife. We ought to maintain a proper regard to this, left, through our imprudence, even our good should.

be evil fpoken of, and all our infirmities magnified into crimes.

What just matter of thankfulness to our bleffed Redeemer does that account of the inftitution of his facred fupper afford, which St. Paul affurcs us he received immediately from him ! Let us reflect, that it was in that very night in which he was betrayed, that his thoughts were fo compaffionately employed for our comfort and happinefs; -a time when it might have been imagined that his mind would be entirely possessed with his perional concerns, with the doleful icene of his approaching fufferings, ver. 23. We learn from this account the perpetuity as well as the great leading defign of the ordinance, -We flow forth the Lord's death, and we fnew it forth till he come, ver. 26. If we do, indeed, defire to preferve the memory of our dying Saviour's love in the world, if we defire to maintain it in our own fouls,-we must constantly and regularly attend this bleffed inftitution, endeavouring, by the lively exercife of faith and love, to difcern, and in a spiritual fenfe to feed upon the Lord's body. Nor let any humble and upright foul be difcouraged by thefe threatenings of judgment to those profane finners, who offered fuch gross affronts to this holy folemnity; a fronts which none of us are in danger of r peating. Their fcandalous exceffes, when they pretended to be worshipping God on this awful occasion, might justly provoke the eyes of his holinefs, might awaken the arm of his indignation; yet even these sinners were chaflifed, that they might not be finally and for ever condemned, ver. 29-32.

Let not any then be terrified, as if every foul that approached the ordinance without a proper penitential fpirit, must by necessary confequence feal its own damnation. Thus to attend the table of the Lord is indeed a fin; but, bleffed be God, not a fin too great to be forgiven. Thole therefore who, though they feel in their hearts a reverential love to Chrift, yet have hitherto refrained from attending this feast of love, should, from these considerations, be engaged to attend it ;---to attend it with repentant spirits. Then may they with the most hearty welcome from the great Lord of the feaft eat of this bread, and drink of this cup, receiving it as the memorial of Christ's body broken, and of his blood shed, for the remission of sins. Through that Blood alone may we feek this invaluable bleffing, without which, indeed, nothing can be a folid and lafting bleffing to us! May we, on every occasion, treat our brethren with a tendernefs and respect becoming those, who confider ourfelves and them as redeemed by that precious Blood, and indebted to it for the hopes of everlasting falvation !

In a word, let us never reft in the external rites or exercifes of worfhip, how decently and regularly foever performed; but look to our inward temper, and the conduct ì

REFLECTIONS.-Ift, The Apostle had proposed to his Corinthian brethren, in the conclusion of the former chapter, his own example; and he here exhorts them, be ye followers of me, even as I alfo am of Chrift. He copied after his divine Matter, and therefore could speak freely, when his own practice was so eminently a comment on his discourses.

1. To introduce with greater efficacy the reproofs which he was confirained to give, he commends them for what was praise-worthy among them. Now I praise you, brethren, that you remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances as I delivered them to you ; at leaft, the main body of the church loved, honoured, and respected him, and were observant of his instructions.

2. He lays a foundation for the rebuke which he was obliged to give, in reminding them of the fuperiority of the man over the woman. I would have you know, that the bead of every man is Chrift; he is the Creator and Governor of all, and in a peculiar manner the head of his church : and the head of the woman is the man, who has by creation and nature the fuperiority, and therefore the woman flould be in subjection : and the head of Christ is God, considered as Mediator; and, in his human nature, he is inferior to the Father; though, in his Godhead, co-equal and co-

3. The thing that he blames is, that their men prayed and prophefied covered, the women uncovered. Veiling the head, in the Eaflern countries, was regarded as a token of modely and fubjection in the woman; and having the head uncovered, betokened the fuperiority of the man: when therefore any man prayed or prophefied with a covering on his head, he diffionoured Chrift his head, who had given him the fuperiority; on the contrary, if any woman, under extraordinary inspiration, prayed or prophelied with her head uncovered, the dithonoured the man who is her head, by fuch an affectation of appearing like him; and, inflead of modest subjection, pretended to an equality with him; and the might, with equal decency, cut her hair fhort, and wear it in the form peculiar to men, as thus appear unveiled. But if fuch a fight would appear

2 Ye know that ye were 'Gentiles, carried away unto thefe dumb idols, even as ye were led.

3 Wherefore I give you to understand, 4 that no man fpeaking by the Spirit of God, calleth Jefus * accurled: and that ' no man can fay that Jefus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoft.

flocking and highly immodeft, then let her be covered. The man ought not to cover his head; it would be to debafe his dignity, forafmuch as he is the image and glory of God, invefted with the fupreme dominion; but the woman is the glory of the man, who has the honour of being placed in the rank of creation above her, and has a becoming dominion over her. For the man is not of the woman, created from her fubitance; but the woman of the man, from his Neither was the man created for the woman, feeing he rib. was in being before her, but the woman for the man, to be his helpmate; and therein was implied a reafonable fubjection to him. For this caufe ought the woman to have power on her head, and to be veiled, in token of her fubjection, becaufe of the angels, or meffengers of Christ, who should prefide in the affembly; and it would be highly arrogant to affect equality with them. Neverthelefs, neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man. in the Lord, both fexes partaking alike of that common. falvation which is in Jefus Chrift; fo that though fubjection be due, the woman is not to be tyrannized over as a flave, but to be cherished with the warmest affection and becoming respect. For as the woman is of the man, taken from his fide, even fo is the man alfo by the woman, fpringing from her; but all things of God, who hath placed each in their respective stations; which, therefore, for conscience fake, they fhould fill up. Judge in yourfelves ; is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered, affecting to be like the men, and inverting the established order of God? Doth not even nature itfelf teach you, that a diffinction should be observed in the dreis of the different fexes ? And as it is the cuftom of the country where you live, to cut the hair fhort, it is regarded as a token of great effeminacy to appear otherwife. So that if a man have long hair, it is a fhame unto him. But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her, comely, and becoming her fex; for her hair is given her for a covering, and should be managed to as to avoid all confusion of dreis between the fexes. But if any man ferm to be contentious, and disposed to vindicate fuch a preposterous practice, we have no fuch cuftom, neither the churches of God, where every appearance of a contentious spirit is condemned, and all fuch indecent affectation discountenanced.

church, fome of which the Apoftle mentions; and fharply rebukes the offenders. Though he would praife them (ver. 2.) in general, there were fome among them who were a difhonour to their holy profession; who met with them, not for the better, to receive edification, but for the worfe, growing more corrupt, even in the very use of holy ordinances.

1. When ye come together in the church, I hear that there be divisions among you, one being for Paul, and another for Apollos, and the church thus torn with factions; and I partly believe it. For there must be also herefies among you; fuch is the corruption of man's nature, and the craft of the wicked one, that tares will be fown among the wheat; and for wife purpoles God permits it flould be fo, that they which are approved, may be made manifest among you, their faith tried, and their fincerity evidenced. Note; (1.) Nothing is more fatal to the church of Chrift, than uncharitable divisions and difcords between the members. (2.) God can over rule even the wickednefs of apostates, to the furtherance of his believing people in faith and holinefs.

2. Some of them committed the most fcandalous irregularities at the Lord's table. When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's supper, the method in which you proceed being utterly fubverfive of the very intention of that holy ordinance; for in eating, every one taketh, before other, bis own supper, as if it was a mere common meal; and what is still worfe, one is hungry, the poor man goes away without any refreshment, the bread and wine being devoured by those who came first; and another is drunken, the rich indulging themfelves to excefs. What a fcandalous abuse! Have ye not houses to eat and to drink in, when you want to nourish your bodies? or despise ye the church of God, and put contempt on the poor members of it, and shame them that have not, have no houses of their own, nor ability to provide the elements for themfelves? What fhall I fay to you? Shall I praise you in this, thus to form parties even in the church, and devour the provision of which the poor fhould partake? No, affuredly, I praife you not; I blame you exceedingly.

3dly, To rectify these gross abuses which he reprehended, the Apostle sets before them,

1. The true nature of the facred inflitution, as he received it from the Lord, and had faithfully delivered it unto them. The Lord Jefus, the king of his church, the fame night in which he was betrayed, took bread; and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and faid, Take, eat; this bread is the fymbol and reprefentation of my body, which is broken for you, and offered upon the crofs in your flead; this do in remembrance of me; continue, in this ordinance, a conflant memorial of my dying love, and of the benefits which you receive thereby. After the fame manner, alfo, he took the cup, when he had fupped, faying, This cup is the New Teftament, or covenant, in my blood, which is now ratified by the blood-fhedding of the Mediator, and all the ineftimable privileges contained in it are fecured to every faithful foul. This do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me, frequently meeting to celebrate this facred feaft, remembering therein my matchlefs grace, manifeft in those precious and plenteous drops of blood fhed for your redemption; for as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do flew the Lord's death till he come, declaring your dependance thereon, as the ground of all your hope towards God, and openly profelling your faith in a crucified Redeemer, as all his people are called upon to do, until the day comes when his faithful faints fhall appear with him in glory.

2. He warns them of the danger of an irreverent use of this holy ordinance, wherefore, whofsever fall eat this bread and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, in fuch a fcandalous, factious, and fenfual manner, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord, incurring the heavy guilt of treating with contempt the Blood of the covenant. But let a man examine bimfelf, with regard to the truth of his faith, love, and convertion to God, and his knowledge of the defign of this facred inftitution; and fo let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup, to his foul's edification and comfort. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, in the flocking manner before defcribed, eateth and drinketh damnation to him/elf, provoking fome temporal judgment of God upon him; not difcerning the Lord's body, nor making a difference between the facred fymbol thereof, and common food. For this caufe many are weak and fickly among you, and many fleep, God visiting in fickness, difease, and death, your provocations. For if we would judge ourfelves, and ferioully examine into our conduct, that with real penitence we might return unto God, we should not be judged with fuch heavy providential afflictions. But when we are thus judged, we are chastened of the Lord in mercy, that we should not be condemned with the world, left to go on fecurely, and perifh in our fins. Note; None should be difcouraged from the Lord's table, who, on examining themfelves, can fay, that in fimplicity they defire to approve themfelves to him.

3. He directs them how to celebrate this facred ordinance. Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another till all are affembled, and you can eat together, as children of one family, at the table of the Lord. And if any man hunger, let him eat at home, this being not defigned as an ordinary meal; that ye come not together unto condemnation, provoking God by your irreverence, differitions, or excefs. And the reft, if there be any thing further amifs, refpecting the proper difcipline to be observed, will I fet in order when I come.

CHAP. XII.

THE fpiritual men * at Corinth having had great diffentious among themfelves about the comparative excellence of their leveral gifts, and the honour which was due to each on account of his particular gift, the Apoftle's adherents, we may believe, in their letter, had requefted his opinion and direction concerning thefe matters. In compliance, therefore, with their defire, and becaufe it was of great importance that mankind, in future ages, fhould have a jult idea of the fupernatural gifts with which the Chriftian church was at firft enriched, the Apoftle, in this and in the following xivth chapter, treated largely of thefe gifts, and of the perfons who poffeffed them.

His discourse on these subjects he introduced with telling the Corinthians, that he wished them not to be ignorant of the offices of the fpiritual men, and of the excellency of their gifts, ver. 1.- And to make them fenfible of the honour which the church derived from the gifts of the fpiritual men, he put the brethren at Corinth in mind that, before their conversion, they worshipped idols, who, being themfelves dumb, could not impart to their votaries inflantaneoully the faculty of speaking foreign languages, as Chrift had done to many of his difciples, ver. 2 .- Next, becuse there were in that age impostors, who faid they were inspired, and, because the persons who possessed the gift of differning spirits were not always at hand to examine them, the Apostle gave the Corinthians a rule, by which they might judge with certainty of every one who pretended to be inspired. No teacher, faid he, speaks by the Spirit of God, who calls Jefus accurfed, that is, who affirms that Jesus was justly punished with the accurled death of the cross. Probably some of the heathen priests and priesteffes, in their pretended fits of infpiration, had spoken in this manner of Jesus. On the other hand, every teacher speaks by the Spirit of God, who acknowledges lesus to be Lord, and endeavours to persuade men to become his disciples, ver. 3.

Having thus directed the Corinthian brethren to judge of the infpiration of the teachers who came to them, by the name and tendency of the doctrine which they taught, the Apoftle proceeded to that which he had chiefly in view, namely, to remove the differing which had taken place at Corinth among the fpiritual men. For fuch of them as poffeffed inferior gifts, envying those whole gifts were of a fuperior kind, and the latter behaving with infolence towards the former, the Apoftle, to allay their animofities, explained, in this chapter, the nature and difference of the fpiritual gifts; diffeourfed concerning their comparative excellency, and concerning the purpofes for which they were beftowed, and the different offices allotted to the perfons who pofieffed them; then gave cirections concerning the manner and order in which thefegifts were to be exercised.

And first he observed, that there were diversities of: gifts, but one Spirit from whom they all proceeded, ver. 4. -That there were diversities of ministries, or oilices, in which those who possessed the spiritual gifts were employed, but one Lord whom they all ferved, ver. 5 - And that there were differences of in-workings in the fpiritual men, but it was the fame God who wrought inwardly in them all, ver. 6 .- Next, he enumerated the fpiritual gifts in the order of their dignity; and from his account it appears, that thefe gifts were various in their nature, and were beflowed on the fpiritual men in the greatest plenty, ver. 7-10 .- Now all these, faid he, one and the fame Spirit of God worketh, diftributing to each according to his own pleafure, ver. 11.—But, however different in their nature the fpiritual gifts might be, he told them they were all fo diffributed, as to render the church one body. For as the human body, though it confifts of many members, is but one body, fo alfo is the body of Chrift, the true christian church, ver. 12 .- All the individuals of which the church is composed, whether they be Jews or Gentiles, flaves or freemen, through their being baptized into one Spirit, are formed into one body or fociety, ver. 13.

Having thus compared the church to the human body, the Apostle carried on the allegory, by observing, that fince the human body does not confit of one member, but of many, ver. 14 .- if the foot shall fay, because I am not the hand, I am no part of the body, is it for this not a member of the body, and free from doing its office in the body ? ver. 15 .- And if the ear shall fay, because I am not the eye, &cc. ver. 16 .- If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? and if the whole were hearing, where were the fmelling? ver. 17. His meaning is, that the inferior members should not decline their particular functions, because they are not the superior.-But now. fays he, God hath affigned to every one of the members its own place and office in the body, becaufe if all were one member, there would not be a body, ver. 18 .- Whereas, by the union of many members, there is one body formed. to the existence of which the service of all the members is necessary, ver. 20.-So that no one member can fay to another, I have no need of thee, ver. 21 .- Nay, the members which feem to be more teeble, are more necesfary to the prefervation of the body than even those that are more ftrong and active, ver. 22.-The fame may be faid of those members which we think feeble and lefs honourable : on which account we are at the greatest pains to protect and adorn them, ver. 23. - But our comely members, being ftrong, have no need of protection and ornament .- Befides, God hath knit the body together, by means of these weak and uncomely members on which he hath bestowed more abundant honour, through their greater efficacy in nourifh-K k

The graces of many who possible not any of the fupernatural zifts might have been far superior to the graces of time who did possible them. ing and preferving the body, ver. 24.-That there may be no mutiny in the body, but that all the members may anxioufly care for one another, ver. 25.-So that when any member is difeafed or difabled, the reft fuffer with it. Or if any member is properly cloathed, defended, and gratified, the reft partake of its joy, ver. 26.

The application of this beautiful allegory the Apostle made in a few words, by telling the believers among the Corinthians, that, in their collective capacity, they, with the other believers, were the body of Chrift; and that each of them was a particular member of that body, ver. 27. - Wherefore, from what he had faid concerning the human body and its members, three things followed, though he has not mentioned them :- First, that fuch of the Corinthians as were destitute of the spiritual gifts, or whose gifts were of the inferior fort, were not on that account to fancy themselves no members of the church, nor peevishly to decline the offices of their flation. Neither were they to envy those who were placed in higher flations, or who poffeffed the beft gifts, but were to be contented with their own place and office in the church, however humble it might be.-Secondly, that fuch of them as posselled the more excellent gifts, and were placed in fuperior stations, or who were in the vigour of life, were not to defpife those whole gifts were lefs excellent, and whole stations were inferior. Neither were they to think those useles, who, being incapacitated by difeafe, or debilitated by age, could not discharge active offices in the church as formerly. By their pullive virtues of patience and refignation, and willingnels to leave the world, they were still necessary to the perfection of the body or church, as examples and directors to the younger members of the church .--Thirdly, that real Chriftians being all members of one another, ought to have the greatest love for and care of each other, especially when in diffrefs, through poverty, fickness, or age. In a word, they were all bound to promote each other's welfare on every occasion.

With refpect to the precedence claimed by the fpiritual men, on account of the comparative excellence of their gifts, the apoftle told the Corinthians, that God hall placed the spiritual men in the church in the following order: First, apostles; fecondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers; after them, those who communicated spiritual powers to others; then those who possessed the gifts of healing difeafes; helpers; directors; last of all, those who spake foreign languages, and who interpreted what was lpoken by others in foreign languages. And by thus ranking the fpiritual men in their proper order, he fettled the precedency of each, ver. 28. - At the fame time, to extinguish in the minds of the fpiritual men all envy, and to put an end to their strifes, he told them, it was no more possible to make all the members of the church apolities, or prophets, or teachers, &c. than to make all the members of the human body an eye, or an ear, &c. ver: 29, 30 .- becaufe in either cafe there would be no body.

Ver. 1.7 The Corinthians feem to have inquired of St. Paul, what order of precedency and preference men were to have with refpect to their fpiritual gifts; nay, if we may guels by his answer, the question they feem more particularly to have proposed was, whether those who had the gift of tongues ought not to take place, and fpeak first, and be first heard in their meetings? Concerning this there appears to have been fome ftrife, maligning, and diforder among them, as may be collected from ver. 21-25. ch. xiii. 4, 5. xiv. 40. To this St. Paul answers in chapters xii. xiii. xiv. First, that they had been all heathen idolaters, and fo, being deniers of Chrift, were in that flate none of them spiritual; but that now, being Christians, and owning Jefus to be the Lord, in an experimental fenfe, (which could not be done without the Spirit of God) they were all THEOMATIKON, Spiritual, and fo there was no reason for one to undervalue another; as if he were not fpiritual as well as himfelf, ver. 1-3. Secondly, that though there be a diverfity of gifts, yet they are all by the fame Spirit; from the fame Lord, and the fame God; working them all in every one according to his good pleafure: fo that in this respect also there is no difference or precedency; no occasion for any one's being puffed up, or affecting priority, upon account of his gifts, ver. 4-11. Thirdly, That the diversity of gifts is for the use and benefit of the church, which is Chrift's body, wherein the members, as in the natural body, of meaner functions, are as much parts, and as necessary in their use to the good of the whole, and therefore to be honoured as much as any other. The union they have as members in the fame body, fhould make them all equally fhare in each other's good and evil; fhould give them a mutual effeem and concern one for another; and should leave no room for contests or divisions among them about their gifts, or the honour and place due to them on that account, ver. 12-31. Fourthly, That though gifts have their excellence and use, and these 125 who have them may be zealous in the use of them, yet the 2 true and fure way for a man to excel and be preferred above others, is, by enlarging himfelf in Christian love, and excelling in that, without which a Christian, with all his fpiritual gifts, is nothing, ch. xiii. Fifthly, In the comparison of spiritual gifts, he gives those the precedency which edify most, and in particular prefers prophefying to tongues. See ch. xiv.

Concerning fpiritual gifts.] Mr. Locke would render this, as to spiritual men, or men affilted and actuated by the Spirit; and we are warranted, he fays, in this version, by a like uie of the word in feveral places of St. Paul's epifiles; as ch. ii. 15. and xiv. 37. of this epiftle, and Gal. vi. 1. And the context obliges us fo to understand it; for if we will have it mean gifts, and not perfons, the fense and coherence of the first three verses will be very hard to make out. Befides, there is evidence enough, in leveral parts of it, that the fubject of St. Paul's discourse here is, aviunation, " perfons endowed with spiritual gifts," cont nding for precedency, precedency, in confideration of their gifts; (fee ver. 13) and to what elfe does he fay, ch. xiv. 5. Greater is be that preplefield than be that fpeaketh with tongues? Others, however, suppose, that if the second and third verses are read in a preathers, the connection of the first with the fourth verse will prove that the addition of gifts is very proper. The church of Corinth was foolifuly elated by spiritual pride, which St. Paul endeavoured to mortify and humble; and, in applying his remedy, he begins with reckoning upthose various graces, the credit of which they had abufed by their indulgence of this unhappy temper. See Locke and Doddridge.

Ver. 3. No man, speaking by the Spirit-calleth Jesus accurfed.] "No man that is infpired by the Spirit of God, " can speak evil of Jesus; and no man cometh to him, and "heartily owns him for his Lord, except God draweth him "by his Spirit," which he is willing to do for all. Some think that these words refer in general to the tests put on Christians by their perfecutors, that they should not only deny, but likewise blaspheme Christ: others think, that they rather refer to the Jews, who, while they uttered blasphemies against Christ themselves, and endeavoured to extort them from his disciples, pretended to the gifts of the Spirit, and undertook to cast out devils. Such a caution might therefore be very useful. See 1 John iv. 1-3. St. Chryfoftom well observes, that the phrase of faying that Jefus is the Lord, or the Meffiah, must be supposed to proceed from true faith in him; and the expression is used to import a man's being a true Christian, because such strong temptations lay against professing Christ under that character, that they who maintained this doctrine must have been true believers, though there might have been a few exceptions. This feems as plain a proof as could be defired, that true faith is the work of the Spirit of God upon the beart. See Owen on the Spirit, p. 3. and Doddridge's third Letter to the Author of Christianity not founded on Argument, p. 34. &c.

Ver. 5. Differences of administrations.] Diversities of offace. These offices are reckoned up, ver. 28, &c. The calling them administrations, or offices, was a gentle manner of reminding the Corinthians of the great defign of these gifts; and fo, of reproving those who perverted them to contrary purposes. See Doddridge and Benfon.

Vir. 6. Of operations.] What thefe were, we learn from tt. 8-11. They are very properly called integral, intervings, because they were above all human power. Men of themselves could do none of them at all; but it was God, as the Apostle tells us here, who, in these extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, did all that was done: it was the effect of his immediate operation, as St. Paul affures us in that parallel place, Philip. ii. 13. in which chapter, ver. 3 and 14. we find that the Philippians flood a little in need of the fame advice which St. Paul prefies here at large upon the Coninthians.

Ver. 7. But] or Noro.

Ver. 8. The word of wildom. ] Lord Barrington, Dr. Benfon, and many others, understand by the word of wifdom, that extensive plan of Christianity which was revealed to the apolitles by the Holy Spirit; and by the word of knowledge, an extraordinary ability to understand and explain the Cld Teftament, and especially its prophefies. See Mifcel. Sacr. effay i. p. 39. and Benfon's Propagation of Christianity, vol i. p. 40. &c. where the reader will find a large and minute detail of these spiritual gifts : concerning which we may obferve, with a candid expositor, that there are, perhaps, few texts in the New Teftament more difficult than fome in this and the 14th chapter, relating to the extraordinary gifts then in the church, which were at that time fo well known as to need no explication; and it is a noble inftance of the genuine fimplicity and modefly of the Apostle, that he did not expatiate on fo grand a fubjeft with any unneceffary parade.

Ver. 9. Faith by the fame Spirit.] In the following chapter, where these gifts are again mentioned, the Apostle explains the nature of the faith here reckoned among the gifts of the Spirit, by calling it a faith which could remove mountains, or fuch a faith as was attended with a power of controlling nature; alluding to that want of faith with which Jesus upbraids his disciples, where he fays, " If " ye have faith as a grain of muftard-feed, ye fhall fay unto this " mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall re-" move." Matth. xvii. 20. The two next gifts, of healing and working miracles, ver. 10. are two fpecies of the foregoing genus. By healing is meant, that falutary affistance administered to the fick, in a folemn office of the church, as directed by St. James, v. 14. Is any fick among you, let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith, that is, the faith mentioned just before, shall fave the fick, &c. By working miracles is meant, a more extemporaneous ule of the fame power, though lefs confined in its objects. The gifts of healing, xagiruala lauxtwo, properly express gifts belonging to the church as fuch; and the working of miracles every nagla divergen, implies virtue reliding in or immediately given to, the individual or particular agent. Befides, we may observe that gifts of healing was a less degree of miraculous power than the working of miracles, and is expressly intimated to to be, ver. 28.

Ver. 10. Prophefy.] This plainly fignifies, foretelling the future fortunes of the church, to the comfort and edification of the affembly, as St. Paul expresses it, ch. xiv. 3. and the effects generally attending the act of prophefy in a little time affumed its name. But the proper fense of prophefy, and that in which it is here to be underflood, is the foretelling things to come. See on Rom. xii. 6. The next gift is the difeerning of Spirits. The reputation attending the exercise of these extraordinary endowments would be a strong temptation to imposfors to mimic and bely their powers, as we fee it was in the case of Simon  $K k \cdot 2$  the Ver. 27. Now ye are the body of Chrift.] Dr. Heylin renders this, Thus ye are the body of Chrift; each being a particular member, which God has placed in the church; (ver. 28.) as, first, apolles, &c. Others read it, Ye are in fome fort the body and members of Chrift, - aliquatenus, - in part, not, as our version, in particular. See Castalio.

Ver. 28. God hath fet fame, &c. ] " As God hath placed . " fome members in more eminent stations in the body, " fo also fome Chriftians in the church. He hath placed " in the first rank Aposles, who are honoured with an " office of the highest distinction, and furnished with en-" dowments peculiar to them felves. In the 2d place are " ranked prophets, whole bufinels it is to foretel future " events, or to speak by immediate interpretation, for the " edification of the church. In the 3d, teachers of a more " ordinary kind; afterwards those who are endued, upon " fome particular occasion, with miraculous powers; then the " gifts of healing difeafes, by anointing the fick with oil, " and praying for their recovery. Befides thefe, he has " endowed fome with fuch extraordinary activity and fagacity, as may fit them to be belpers in the management " of charities : others are qualified by their prudence to " be appointed to governments, that by their advice the af-" fairs of focieties may be steered and conducted in the " fafeft and happieft manner. There are also wonderful " operations, whereby mcn are taught different kinds of " tingues, which they had never learned by any human " methods." Monfieur Amyraut is of opinion, that the perfons might poffers many of these gifts, and fustain sevenl of these characters, who did not fill stated distinct offices; and might be called belpers, in reference to their great dexterity and readiness to help those who were in diffres; and governments, in regard to that genius for bulinels, fagacity in judging the circumstances of affairs, and natural authority in the councils and refolutions of focieties, which rendered them fit to prefide on fuch ocrahons. See Doddridge, Barrington, Benfon, and Markland.

Ver. 29. Are all Appfles?] It appears that this invidious temper was not extirpated from among the Corinthians, even by this just and lively expositulation: for Clemena Romanus, writing to them many years after, complains of its continued prevalence, as leading them to neglect a due regard for those presbyters who were fixed by the divine direction among them, and to throw them out of their episcopal office. See his epistle to the Corinthians, sect. 44.

Ver. 31. But covet earnefly the best gifts.] But ye contend earnefly about the best gifts. "Ye contend one with an-" other whole particular gift is best, and most preferable; " but I will fliew you a more excellent way; namely, " mutual good-will, affection, and charity;" or, in one word, LOVE. That this is the Apostle's meaning is plain, in that there was an emulation among them, and a ftrife for precedency, on account of the feveral gifts they had, which made them in their affemblies defire to be heard first. This was the fault which the Apostle was here correcting, and it is not likely he fhould exhort them all promifcuoully to feek the principal and most eminent gifts, at the end of a difcourse whercin he had been demonstrating to them, by the example of the human body, that there ought to be diversities of gifts and functions in the church; but that there ought to be no fchifm, emulation, or contest among them upon account of the exercises of those gifts; that they were all useful in their places, and nomember was at all to be the lefs honoured or valued for the gift he had, though it were not one of the first rank. And in this fense the word Znaw is taken in the next chapter, ver. 4. where St. Paul, purfuing the fame argument, exhorts them to mutual love, good will, affection, and charity, which he affures them is preferable to any gifts whatever. Besides, to what purpose should he exhort them to covet earnefly the best gifts, when the obtaining of this or that gift did not at all lie in their defires or endeavours, the Apostle having just before told them, ver. 11. that the Spirit divides those gifts to every man severally, as he will, and those to whom he wrote had their allotment already ?- He might as reasonably, according to his own doctrine in this very chapter, bid the foot covet to be the hand, or the ear to be the eye. Let it be remembered, therefore, to rectify this, that St. Paul fays, ver. 17. of this chapter, If the whole body were the eye, where were the hear-ing, &c. This great writer is not uled to crofs his own design, or contradict his own reasoning.

Inferences.—We thankfully acknowledge thy goodnefs, Sovereign Difpofer of all Events, that we have not been led on, after the example of our Pagan anceftors, to the vain worfhip of dumb, of flupid idols; but have been taught from our infancy to adore the living Jehovah. May we, in the moft folemn and confiftent manner, fuy, that Jefus is the Lord; and while our actions fpeak our regard to him as fuch, may it appear that all our hearts are under the

CHAP. XIII.

All gifts, how excellent foever, are nothing worth without love; the praifes thereof, and preference to faith and hope.

[Anno Domini 57.]

HCUGH I fpeak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, the influences of the Spirit of God, by which alone men are brought to that divine temper, ver. 2, 3.

We fhould frequently reflect upon those glorious attelfations, which were given to the truth of our holy religion, by that diversity of gifts and operations, with which its first teachers were furnished and adorned; thankfully receiving their testimony, and thereby fetting to our feal that God is true. A view to that great defign, in which all these wonderful things centre, should engage us to fludy more and more an union of heart with all, who in every place call on the name of the Lord Jefus Christ. In bim Greeks and barbarians, bond and free, are united; all therefore should unanimously feek his glory; and while his name is blafphemed by the ignorant and malicious, who cannot bear the purity of that religion which he teaches, may it be fo defended by us, as at the fame time to be exemplified and adorned, ver. 4 - 14.

The wildom and goodnels of God, as difplayed in the formation of the human body, is a fubject which well deferves our, attentive reflection, and humble acknowledgment. All its feveral parts are ufeful to the whole, and the most noble cannot upbraid the meanest as an incumbrance. Each has reason to rejoice in its own fituation, as well as in the addition of all the reft; and were the lowest place made higher than it is, it would become ufelefs and burdensome. The fame divine wisdom is visible, and ought to be acknowledged, in the fubordination appointed in civil tocieties, and in the Church of Christ.

Let no man, there fore, be difcouraged at the low flation wherein he is fixed ! but rather let all acquiefce in the wife and gracious difpofal of the fupreme Lord, and apply themfelves to their proper functions. Let each member confider all the reft with pleafure, and rejoice with thankfulnefs in the health and vigour of the other parts, making the proper ufe of them, and communicating in return its proper fervices; or, if any be weak, let all ftrengthen it. And, upon the whole, fo far as we can prevent it, let there be no febifm in the body: Alas ! that there flould be fo many breaches and contentions. While we fincerely lament them, we fhould each, in his place, endeavour to heal them, and unite in a fympathizing care one of another. So fhall we, in the remoteit confequences, beft confult our. own intereft and honour, ver. 15-25.

Bleffed be God, that he hath in his church given not only Apofles and prophets, but also pattors and teachers. Adored be that bounty with which he has fcattered down his gifts, whether ordinary or extraordinary, on the children of men. May we use them, not to the purposes of oftentation, but of edification; and may we be truly defirous of those whereby we may bear most of the image of Clrift, and best promote the great design for which he visited our world, and was pleased to unite his church unto himfelf, and its feveral members to each other, in such dear and invaluable bonds.

REFLECTIONS.—1ft, The church of Corinth was greatly enriched in fpiritual gifts, and thefe had been fadly abufed, and made the occasion of much pride and contention. The Apostle therefore leads them to confider the author, nature, defign, and use of the extraordinary powers which were given them.

1. He reminds them, for their humiliation, of their former state. Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto thefe dumb idols, even as ye were led, hurried on blindfold to worfhip these sentences itocks and stones. Wherefore I give you to understand, now that God hath brought you out of darknefs into his marvellous light, that no man (peaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jefus accurfed, it being a fure proof that both the Jewish exorcists and the heathen diviners who pretend to fuch infipiration, blafpheme him from whom the Spirit proceeds, are lyars, and of their father the devil; and, on the other hand, no man can fay that Jefus is the Chrift, but by the Spirit of God: to discover his all-fufficiency for the work of redemption, and his fuitablenefs to every neceffity of our fouls, we need a divine illumination: and though we may confess him to be the Christ with our lips, ye we can never experimentally know him to be our anointed Saviour, till it pleafe God to reveal his Son in us. And all the miracles which are wrought in confirmation of this truth, are by the power of the Holy Ghost, who intends thereby to glorify Chrift. Let a man pretend to what he will; if he does not know and love the Lord Jelus, he must be destitute of the Spirit; but if he does, then, however low his gifts may be, he has an affured interest in the Saviour.

2. He directs them in the proper use of the fpiritual gifts which they enjoyed. Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit, who befows them in all their variety on private Christians, or ministers; and there are differences of administrations, of offices and services, fome superior to others; but the same Lord appoints to each his employment, and they act under his authority. And there are diversities of operations, and micaculous powers; but it is the same Lord which worketh all in all, by whole mighty energy alone they are performed. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal; whatever gifts or powers that that manifest the prefence and energy of the Holy Ghost, he is endowed with, they are defigned to promote the edification of the body of Chrift, and to advance his glory. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wildom, a clear understanding of the great doctrines of the Gospel, and ability to express them with judgment and cloquence; to another the word of knowledge by the fame Spirit, an infight into the types and propheties of the Old Tettament, and a readine's to explain and apply them. To another, faith by the fame Spirit, that fupernatural courage which Chrift promised to infuse into his disciples, Mat. x. 19, 20. Luke, xxi. 15. for the purpole of enabling them to preach the Gofpel, not only in the prefence of kings and magiftrates, but before the most enraged enemics; and also that firm perfuation of the power and veracity of God, which led many of the fpiritual men, without hefitation, to attempt the working of miracles, when they felt an inward impulse to do fo. See Mat. xvii. 20. I Cor. xiii. 2. To another the gifts of healing, by the fame Spirit, all manner of bodily difeafes, by a word or touch instantaneously. To another the working of miracles, in mercy or judgment, (See Acts, v. 5. 10.) To another, prophely, or the power of foretelling future events; to another, the difcerning of Spirits, under what influence, divine or diabolical, men act, what are their real defigns and qualifications, and who are fit to be publicly employed in the church; to another, divers kinds of tongues, fo as to understand and speak fluently languages which he had never learnt; to another, the interpretation of tongues, the ability of rendering with exactness and propriety a foreign tongue, which the congregation may not understand, into their own native language. But all thefe worketh that one and the felf-fame Spirit, dividing to every man feverally, as he will. Note; (1.) The Holy Ghoft is a divine perfon; he acted with fovereignty in the diffribution of his fupernatural gifts; and in energy and operation is one with the Father and the Son. (2.) All our gifts are bestowed for fervice, not to advance our own honour and interest, but the glory of God and the falvation of men's fouls.

2dly, The Apostle represents the union fubfisting between genuine believers, who partake of the feveral gifts and graces of the Spirit, under the fimilitude of a human body confifting of many members : it is but one, though compoled of various parts, which have each their particular function for the good of the whole. So also is the myllical body of Chrift : though confifting of different perfons, with different gifts, and appointed to different stations, yet all who are vitally united to him compose but one spiritual body, into which all, whether Jews or Gentiles, who have been baptized with water and the Holy Ghoft, are by faith incorporated, and are nourished by that one divine Spirit which refides in all his fulnefs in Chrift, and is from him diffused through the feveral members, who thereby maintain communion with the exalted Head. Now in the natural body, (1.) Each member con-flitutes a part of the whole, and the meaneft are needful: the foot and the ear, though lefs uleful perhaps than the hand and eye, are yet equally parts of the body. The meanest believer is dear to the Saviour, and regarded by him as a member of his body. (2.) There is a beauty in the variety of the different members: if the body were all eye or all ear, it would be defective and monftrous. Thus the diversity of offices and gifts in the church difplays a beautiful fymmetry. (3.) As in the body natural God gives, as he pleafes, to every member its proper office; fo, in the body myftical, the Lord appoints to each his flation, and furnifies him with gifts, which he is bound to receive with thankfulnefs, to use with diligence, and neither to murmur against the Giver, nor envy the superiority of others. (4) Every member of the body contributes to the good of the whole. The eye wants the hand, the head the feet,-even the feebleft members are neceffary. Thus do those who are in the most exalted stations in the church need the inferior members, and mult not despife them as infignificant or ufelefs. (5.) In the body we thew peculiar regard to our uncomely parts, covering them with proper cloathing, which our comely parts do not need; and thus hath God ordered it, that we fhould give more abundant honour to the part which lacketh. In like manner ought the more eminent in gifts and abilities in the church to hide the infirmities of their weaker brethren; not to reproach or defpife them, but treat them with kindnefs and regard, and defire to make them appear in the most refpectable manner. (6.) In the body the fuffering of one member gives pain to the whole, and all the members thare in the honour conferred on any particular part : fuch a mutual fympathy prevents all fchilm in the body, and obliges the members to have the fame care one for another. The like fellow-feeling should every Christian have for his brother: we flould tenderly fympathize with the afflicted in body or foul; and their temporal or fpiritual profperity. far from being the occasion of our envy, should be matter of our fincerest joy. All coldness and distance is as unnatural as a fchilm between the members, and flould be fhunned as the most dangerous evil.

adly, The Apostle particularly applies the cafe in hand. Now ye are the mystical body of Chrift, and members in particular, each being a part of the whole. And God, in infinite wifdom and with admirable propriety, hath fet fome in the church in one office, and fome in another, appointing . one to a higher, another to a lower station. In the first rank ftand the Apofiles, who received their commission immediately from Chrift himfelf : fecondly, prophets, who are endued with the gift of foretelling future events : thirdly, teachers, who labour in the word and doctrine, and are the ordinary ministers of the Gospel : after that, miracles, which fome are endued with the power of working : then gifts of healing the fick : helps, fuch as are adultant to the superior ministers : governments, those who prefide over the affairs of the church : others are endued with diversities of tangues, the the ability to speak or interpret them. Are all Apofiles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers? Are all workers of mira-cles? Have all the yifts of healing? Do all fpeak with tongues? Do all interpret ? No. Each has his appointed station and peculiar gifts; wherein the higheft are not to be envied, nor the lowest to be despised. But covet earnesily the best gifts. It may be regarded as his advice; or it may be read as an affertion, ye do covet the best gifts, and blameably defire to excel in these extrordinary endowments; or as an interrogation, Do ye covet earneftly the best gifts? and envy each other's superior attainments? Yet shew I unto you a more excellent way: a fpirit of love, which prompts to every good word and work for the glory of God and the profit of men's fouls, is far better and more defirable than the most fluining gifts. Note; (1.) Gifts, when valued becaufe of the efteem which they procure us, more than for their ule to the fouls of men, prove the most fatal fnares to the foul. (2.) One spark of Godlike charity, or genuine love, is infinitely preferable to all the glare of the most eminent titles or abilities.

CHAP. XIII.

THAT the Corinthians might be perfuaded to lay afide their emulations and strifes, and be contented each with his own gifts and office in the church, the Apostle, after discouring concerning the spiritual men and their gifts, told the brethren, that no doubt they all earnestly defired to poffes the best gifts. Yet he would shew them a more excellent way of attaining eminence in the church ; namely, by acquiring a greater measure of that love, which ought to fublift among the members of Chrift's body, ch. xii. 31. -That verse, therefore, being an introduction to the Apostle's beautiful discourse concerning love, contained in the prefent chapter, it ought to have been placed at the beginning of it.

The more excellent way of attaining eminence in the church being that of love, the Apoftle, by perfonifying this divine virtue, and by afcribing to it the qualities and actions of a perfon, has fet forth its beauties and excellencies in the brightest colours, that the contentious among the Corinthians, by comparing themfelves with his defcription, might be fenfible of the deformity of their own temper, as it appeared in their divisions, emulations, and strifes.-His account of love he began with affirming that it is a quality more excellent than the faculty of fpeaking all kinds of languages, of foretelling future events, of underflanding the mysteries contained in the ancient revelations, and of working miracles; in fhort, more excellent than all the endowments which men covet most. The reason is, none of these endowments are of any value, if love be wanting in the perfons who poffers them, to direct them in the ufe of them. It is a more excellent virtue, than even the giving of all onc's goods to feed the poor; nay, than the giving of one's body to be burned for his religion, if thefe things are done not from love to God and man, but from vain-glory; or, rather, alms-giving and zeal, without this principle of love, are no virtues at all: for, however beneficial thefe actions may be to mankind, they will be of no real advantage to the vain-glorious hypocrite himfelf, ver. 1, 2, 3.

Farther, still more effectually to display the excellence of this noble grace, the Apostle described its influence upon the temper and conduct of the perion who poffeiles it, ver. 4-7.-and by comparing it with the gifts of tongues, of prophefy, and of knowledge, and even with its fifter graces, faith and hope, he has flewn it to be more excellent than them all; chiefly becaufe their exiftence and ufefulnefs take place in the prefent life only, whereas love will fublift in Heaven, ver. 8-13.

In this culogium, it is obfervable that all the properties of love mentioned by the Apostle, belong more especially to the love of our neighbour; unless we suppose, with some, that the three properties mentioned, ver. 7. belong alfo to the love of God. However, although the whole were confined to the love of our neighbour, it would not follow, that the Apostle has excluded the love of God from his idea of love: on the contrary, all the excreifes of love which he has fo beautifully defcribed, pre-fuppofe the love of God as their true principle; for it is well known, that we cannot love man aright, unlefs we love God alfo, 1 John, iv. 20.

Ver. 1. Though I fpeak, &c ] St. Paul having told the Corinthians, in the last words of the preceding chapter, that he would flew them a more excellent way than the emulous producing of their gifts in the affembly, he informs them in the prefent admirable chapter, that this more excellent way is love, which he explains at large. The word 'Ayan is certainly rendered charity very improperly; for being in our language almost confined to the lense of almsgiving, it has led many into grofs errors on this fubject. The original must here be taken in the noblest sense, for " fuch a love to the whole church, and the whole world, " as arises from principles of true piety, and ultimately " centres in that God who is love." See ver. 3. As a cymbal was made of two pieces of hollow brafs, which being ftruck together made a tinkling with very little variety of found, St. Paul chofe to inftance in this, rather than a harp or flute, or any other more harmonious inftrument. It appears from many passages, both of Josephus and ot the Jewish rabbies, that each of the things which St. Paul fpeaks of in this and the following veries as abfolutely of no avail without love, was regarded in the higheft degree by the Jews.

Ver. 2. All mysteries, and all knowledge] Any predictions relating to our Saviour or his doctrine, or the times of the Gospel contained in the Old Testament, in types, or figurative figurative and obscure expressions, not understood before his coming, and being then revealed to the world, St. Paul calls mysteries, fays Mr. Locke, as may be seen all through his writings; so that mystery and knowledge are terms here used to fignify truths concerning Christ to come, contained in the Old Testament; and prophessy, the understanding of the types and propheses containing those truths so as to be able to explain them to others. See on chap. xii. 8. By faith to remove mountains, or to do that which is imposfible, except by a miracle, must be meant the miraculous faith foken of ch. xii. 9. and as it is here supposed that this faith might in fact be separated from love, it cannot fignify the same as in the Epistle to the Romans, where it is " tuch an allent to a divine declaration, as produces a " fuitable temper and conduct."

Ver. 4. Charity [uffereth long] The Apostle here proceeds to give us fixteen characters of divine love ; - upon which, if the compais of our work allowed, it would be well worth time to expatiate. Ift, Love fuffereth long,-is long-fuffering or patient towards all men : it fuffers all the weaknefs, ignorance, errors, infirmities, all the forwardnefs and littlenefs of faith in the children of God; all the malice and wickednefs of the children of the world ; - feeding our many when he bungers; if he thirft, ftill giving him drink: thus continually heaping coals of fire, of melting love, upon his head; and in every ftep endeavouring to overcome evil with good. 2dly, It is kind, -- x enseveral, -- a word not eafily translated :---It is foft, mild, benign; it stands at the utmost distance from moroseness, from all harthnels, or fournels of spirit; and inspires the sufferer at once with the most amiable sweetness, and the most fervent ard tender affection. Confequently, love ; 3dly, Envieth not :- It is impossible it should; it is directly oppolite to that baneful temper; it cannot be that he who has this tender affection to all, who earneftly withes all temporal and spiritual bleffings, all good things in this world and the world to come, to every foul that God has made, should be pained at his bestowing any good gift on any child of man. If he has himfelf received the fame, he does not grieve, but rejoice, that another partakes the common benefit. If he has not, he bleffes God that his brother, at least, has, and is therein happier than himfelf : and the greater his love, the more does he rejoice in the bleffings of all mankind; the more is he removed from every kind and degree of envy towards any creature. Athly, Love vaunteth not itfelf ; - du weenepeverai, - is not raf or hafty in judging: it will not haftily condemn any one; it does not pals a severe sentence upon a slight or sudden view of things; it first weighs all the evidence, particularly that which is brought in favour of the acculed. A true lover of his neighbour is not like the generality of men, who see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion. No: he proceeds with wariness and circumspection, taking heed to every ftep, willingly fubftribing to that rule of the ancient heathen, " I am fo far VOL. II.

" from lightly believing what one man fays againft ano-" ther, that I will not easily believe what a man fays " againft himfelf; I will always allow him fecond " thoughts, and many times counfel too." 5thly, Love is not puffed up; it does not incline or fuffer any man to think more highly of himfelf than he ought to think, but rather to think foberly; yea, it humbles the foul into the duft; it deftroys all high conceits engendering pride, and makes us rejoice to be as nothing. They who are kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love, cannot but in honour prefer one another. Those who, having the fame love, are of one accord, do in lowlines of mind each elteem others better than themselves. See Wesley, Stanhope, Clarke, and Bengelius.

Ver. 5. Doth not behave it felf unfeemly ] This is the fixth character, and implies that love is not rude, or willingly offenfive to any. It renders to all their due; fear to whom fear, honour to whom honour ; courtefy, civility, humanity, to all the world, in their feveral degrees honouring all men. Good breeding, nay, the higheft degree of it, politeness, is defined to be " a continual defire to please, ap-" pearing in all the behaviour;" If fo, there is none fo well-bred as the Christian,-a lover of all mankind; for he cannot but defire to pleafe all men for their good to edification : and these defires cannot be hid ; they will neceffarily appear in all his intercourfe with man; for his love is without diffimulation: it will fhew itself in his whole conversation and actions; yea, and will constrain him, though without guile, to become all things to all men. if by any means he may fave fome. And in the becoming all things to all men, love, 7thly, Seeketh not its orun : In striving to please all men, the lover of mankind has no immediate eye to his own temporal advantage: he covets no man's filver, or gold, or apparel; he defires nothing but the falvation of their fouls; nay, he may be faid not to feek his own spiritual any more than temporal advantage; for while he is on the full ftretch to fave their fouls from death, he, as it were, forgets himfelf, he does not think of himfelf, fo long as that zeal for the glory of God swallows him up. See Exod. xxxii. 31, 32. Rom. ix. 3. No wonder that such love, 8thly, is not provoked ;- i waçoziveras,- The word eafily is not in the original. St. Paul's words are absolute, love is not provoked; it is not provoked to unkindness towards any one. Occasions indeed will frequently occur, outward provocations of various kinds; but love does not yield to provocation; it triumphs over all, never exafperated and thrown into bitter and implacable refentments : in all trials it looks unto Jesus, its great exemplar, and is more than conqueror And it prevents a thousand provocations, in his love. which would otherwife arife, becaufe, 9thly, it thinketh no evil. Indeed the merciful man cannot avoid knowing many things that are evil; he cannot but fee them with his own eyes, and hear them with his own ears; for love does not put out his eyes, fo that it is impossible for him not to see that such things are done; neither does it take LI away away his understanding any more than his fenses; but ShoyiZeras to xandu, it does not infer evil, where it does not appear; or reafon out, or fuppofe what it has neither feen nor heard. This is what true love abfolutely deftroys; it tears up root and branch,-all imagining of what we have not known; it cafts out all jealoufies, all evil furmifes, all readiness to believe evil; it is frank, open, unfuspicious; and as it cannot defign, fo neither does it fear evil.

Ver. 6. Rejoiceth not in iniquity] This is the 10th character of love, that it rejoiceth not in iniquity-common as it is even for these to do so who bear the name of Christ. The true Christian, however, is fo far from this, that he laments over either the fin or folly of an enemy; takes no pleasure in hearing or repeating it; but rather defires that it may be forgotten for ever. Nay, 11thly, He rejoiceth in the truth, wherever it is found; in the truth which is after godlinefs, bringing forth its proper fruit, holinefs of heart and conversation. He rejoices to find, that even those who differ from or oppose him, whether with regard to opinions, or fome points of practice, are neverthelefs lovers of God, and in other respects irreproachable. He is glad to hear good of them, and to fpeak all the good he can of them confistently with truth and justice. Indeed, good in general is his glory and joy, wherever diffufed through the race of mankind. As a citizen of the world, he claims a fhare in the happinels of all the inhabitants of Because he is a man, he is not unconcerned in it. the welfare of any man; but enjoys whatever brings glory to God, and promotes peace and good-will among men

Ver. 7. Beareth all things, &c.] The twelfth character of love is, that  $\pi \alpha' v a$  sign, it coveteth all things, as the word should undoubtedly be translated; for otherwife this character would be the very fame with the last in this verse, maila i wouleves, endureth all things. See I Pet. iv. 8. -Becaufe the merciful man rejoiceth not in iniquity, neither does he willingly make mention of it. Whatever evil he fees, hears, or knows, he neverthelefs conceals, fo far as he can, without making himfelf partaker of other men's fins. Wherever, or with whomfoever he is, if he fee any thing which he approves not, it goes not out of his lips unless to the perfon concerned, except where the interests of the church of Chrift effentially require it, -- if haply he may gain his brother. So far is he from making the faults or failings of others the matter of his cenfure or conversation, that of the absent he will fay nothing at all, if he can fay nothing good. A tale-bearer, a backbiter, a whifperer, an evil-speaker, is to him like a murderer. He would just as foon take away his neighbour's life as thus murder his reputation : just as foon would he think of diverting himfelf with fetting fire to his neighbour's houfe, as of thus fcattering abroad arrows, fire-brands, and death, and faying, Am I not in fport? He makes only one exception. Sometimes he is convinced, that it is for the glory of God, or, which comes to the fame, the good of his neighbour, that an evil fhould not be covered. In this cafe, for the benefit of the innocent, he is constrained to declare the guilty; but he always in this inftance acts with the greatest care and caution, left he should transgress the law of love by fpeaking too much, more than he would have done by not speaking at all. 13thly, Love believeth all things. It is always willing to think the beft; to put the most favourable construction on every thing : it is ever ready to believe whatever may tend to the advantage of any one's character: it is eafily convinced of what it earneftly defires,-the innocence or integrity of any man; or at least of the fincerity of his repentance, if he has once erred from the way. It is glad to excufe whatever is amifs; to condemn the offender as little as poffible; and to make all the allowance for human weaknefs which can be done, without betraying the truth of God: and when it can no longer believe, then, 14thly, love hopeth all things. Is any evil related of any man? Love hopes that the relation is not true; that the thing related was never done. Is it certain that it was ?-But perhaps it was not done with fuch circumstances as are related; fo that, allowing the fact, there is room to hope it was not fo bad as it is reprefented. Was the action, apparently, undeniably evil ?--Love hopes the intention was not fo. Is it clear the defign was evil too ?-Yet it might not fpring from the fettled temper of the heart, but from a ftart of passion, or from fome vehement temptation, which hurried the man beyond himfelf; and even when it cannot be doubted that all the actions, defigns, and tempers, are equally evil; ftill love hopes that God will at last make bare his arm, and get himfelf the victory; and that there fhall be joy in Heaven over this one finner that repenteth. Mean time, 15thly, it endureth all things; whatever the injustice, the malice, the cruelty of men can inflict, love is able to endure. It calls nothing intolerable; and never fays of any thing, "This " is not to be borne." A true believer can not only do, but fuffer all things, through Chrift that ftrengtheneth him.

Ver. 8. Charity never faileth] 'This is the fixteenth and last character of love : It never faileth. It accompanies and adorns the faithful to all eternity, and makes a very effential part of their preparation for the heavenly world: in which it has an apparent advantage over many of those gifts which fome are fo ready to emulate and purfue, to the neglect and injury of this all-important love. But whether men admire prophefies, it is fit they fhould know, that thefe shall be abolished, when the faith of God's people shall no longer need to be encouraged, nor their devotion to be affisted by fuch exhortations and instructions as are necelfary now: or, whether they boast themselves of the variety of tongues, they fball ceafe in those celestial regions. One fpeech and one language shall prevail among all the bleffed inhabitants, and the languages of earth be forgotten, as too low and imperfect : yea, a great deal of that knowledge which we now purfue with the utmost eagerness, and which is very conducive to our prefent ufefulnefs among mankind, skall then be abolished and fuperseded, as referring to

Ver. 9, 10. For we know in part, &c.] The wifeft of men have here but fhort, narrow, imperfect conceptions even of the things round about them; and much more of the deep things of God: and even the prophefies which men deliver from God, are far from taking in the whole of future events, or of that wifdom and knowledge of God, which is treafured up in the Scripture revelation. But when we are arrived at that perfect and heavenly ftate beth that poor, low, and glimmering light, which is all the knowledge we can now attain to, and all the prefent flow and unfatisfactory methods of obtaining it, fhall be exthanged for the more extensive views of whatever it can be defirable to know; opening upon the mind in the moft cafy, clear, and delightful manner.

Ver. 11. When I was a child] "The future shall indeed be like a state of adult age, when compared with that of feeble infancy; just as when I was a child, I spake as a child would naturally do, a few imperfect words, badly at first articulate and intelligible, and often in themfelves unmeaning. I was affected as a child; thrown into transports of joy or grief upon trifling occasions, which manly reason foon taught me to despise. I reasoned as a child, in a weak, inconclusive, and fometimes ridiculous manner; but when my faculties ripened, and I became a man, I put away the things of the child, and set fentiments, and engaged in pursuits, correspondent to such advancements of age and reason. Such shall be the improvements of the heavenly state, in comparison with those which the most eminent Christian can attain here."

The LXX. ufe this word for the women's locking-glaffes, or mirrors of metal, out of which Mofes made the laver, Exod. xxxviii. 8. Ver. 13. And now abideth faith, &cc.] "There are, then, "only these three things which last, in opposition to the "fpiritual gifts before spoken of, which were to be of "short continuance in the church. Inferences.—How ambitious fhould we be of abounding in every exercise of so amiable a grace, as brotherly Chriftian love, which refults from faith in Chrift, and from love to him, and to God through him! What are all miraculous gifts of tongues, of prophely, of immediate revelations, of working wonders, and of a firm affent to the great truths of the Gospel, whereby we might be fitted for fervice in the church? And what are all external acts of the most generous liberality to the poor, and fuffering martyrdom itfelf for our proteffion of Chrift's name, without a principle of grace in the heart, and particularly the grace of love, to animate, spiritualize, and improve them for the glory of God, and our own and other's good? appear with specious and noify pomp; but, without love, will be of no faving advantage to us, and will leave us miferable creatures for ever. How admirable is evangelical love in its benevolent temper and behaviour, meeknefs, patience, humility, and forbearance; in its candour, and willingnefs to believe and hope the beft; in its fympathy, difinterestedness, and generosity; and in its tender, touching, and friendly care, for the welfare of others ! And of how much longer duration is this excellent grace in the faithful faints of God, than all fpiritual gifts, which may be loft, even here below, and will have their period with this world at farthest, and be useles in the next; and which at best leave us very imperfect in our knowledge, like children in understanding, while we are here! And though faith and hope may abide with us, and are as neceffary as love, during our continuance in this world; yet love is the most eminent of these graces, as on many other accounts, fo especially, because it will abide, and be confummately perfected in the faints, together with their knowledge of divine things, in Heaven; where, not only all spiritual gifts, but faith and hope themselves, in their present use and exercise, as well as several other graces, that are fuited to this flate of warfare, shall cease; and they shall have no further occasion for them, to all eternity.

REFLECTIONS.-- ift, The more excellent way, which the Apostle had been recommending, he here describes; and that is love, which is the greatest of graces, shall endure for ever, when gifts are vanished away; and without which they are nothing worth.

1. Though I speak with the tongues of men, in all the various languages of the globe, or even of angels, and have not love, I am become as founding brafs, or a tinkling cymbal (fo inharmonious), and a mere empty noife. Little reafon, therefore, had the Corinthians to value themfelves upon the gift of tongues, when, through their abufe of that excellent gift, it afforded them too much occasion for pride and contention. And,

2. Though I have the gift of prophely, can foretcl future events, and understand all mysteries, through divine illumination discovering the meaning of the most abstrufe prophefies and figures; and have all knowledge, fuch as never mortal man attained before, and have not love, it fignifies nothing to my falvation. Such light would only be fufficient to lead me into eternal darknefs.

3. And though I had all faith, to work the most stupendous miracles, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing in God's account, and utterly defitute of the fpirit of vital Christianity.

4. And though I beflow all my goods to feed the poor, it would be utterly unprofitable to myfelf, if divine love was not the principle from which my alms-giving proceeded. Note ; Many give largely to the poor, who never did a truly charitable act in their lives.

5. And though I give my body to be burned for my profesfion of the Gospel, and have not love to God, and to men for his fake, it profiteth me nothing. The affectation of leaving a great name, or the conceit of the meritorioulnefs of fuch a facrifice, may even lead a man to a stake. He may burn for Chrift, and yet be difowned by him, if this genuine mark of discipleship be wanting.

2dly, We have the true properties of that most excellent of graces, love.

1. It fuffereth long, patiently enduring provocation, unrufiled with affronts, paffing by offences, and fuppreifing every motion of refentment which would rife within the foul.

2. It is kind, courteous, affable, benevolent, and opens the lips, the hand, and heart, to every good word and work.

3. Love envieth not the fuperior gifts, graces, attainments, honours, or affluence, which others enjoy; but takes due pleafure in them as if they were her own.

4. Love vaunteth not itfelf, is not oftentatious of any excellencies or fuperior advantages; does not treat inferiors with contempt and infolence, nor rashly or perversely utter any thing to a brother's difadvantage.

5. It is not puffed up, does not fill the mind with vain conceits of man's importance, nor suffer us to think more highly of ourfelves than we ought to think.

6. It doth not behave itfelf unfeemly, admits of no conduct unfuitable to the age, flation, or circumstances, of the perfon; fuffers nothing mean, indecent, or difhonourable, to enter the mind, or be carried into act.

7. Seeketh not her awn, is influenced by no mercenary motives, nor pursues any private ends, inordinately craving honour, gain, or applause; but is generous, noble, and and difinterested, facrificing her own advantage for the good of others.

8. It is not provoked; but, under the most exasperating infults, can preferve a holy serenity; and even be angry, and not fin; displeased at the fin, yet pitying the finner; always restraining just referentment within bounds, and ready to be reconciled.

9. It thinketh no evil, never feeking to pry into the conduct of others to difcover faults, but ever ready to put the beft confiruction on their words and actions; entertains no undue fufpicions; and is willing to forget as well as forgive every injury.

10. It rejoicet not in iniquity, looks not, but with grief and forrow, on the fins, perverseness, and infirmities of others. But,

11. Rejniceth in the truth, glad of the fuccefs of the Gospel; pleafed with beholding its influence, wherever it appears; and ever delighting to bear testimony to the truth, and speaking from the heart.

12. It beareth all things; covers men's faults with the mantle of love; pities their weaknefs, and fuffers without the thought of retaliating their perversences.

13. It believeth all things; willing to entertain the most favourable opinion of all, averfe to every ungrounded fuspicion, and candidly disposed to receive the excuse and explanation where any thing may have been mistaken.

14. It bopeth all things; where matters appear dark, and cannot but raife doubts, ftill Chriftian love will not defpair but that they can yet be cleared up fatisfactorily, or, where the evil is evident, that the fault will be repented of and amended:

15. It endureth all things, with unfhaken fortitude bearing up under every affliction, temptation, and perfecution, and for the fake of Chrift and his people ready to undergo any fufferings.

Such is the transcendant grace of love: in the glass of which we should often look, compare our features with this perfect pattern, and daily feck that we may grow more like him whose nature and name is Love.

3dly, The Apostle proceeds in his commendation of lore, not only as superior to all gifts, but as the chief of all graces.

1. Love never faileth. All gifts muft quickly have an end; whether there be prophysics, the gift of foretelling future events, or interpreting the Scriptures, they fball fail, and be of no farther use in the eternal world; whether there be tangues, they fball cease, when they have answered their prefent use of fpreading the Gofpel through the world; and in Heaven the faithful fhall have but one language; whether there be knowledge, the extraordinary infight into divine turth, it schall vanish away; in glory this knowledge will be no longer needed; all will be intuitively clear.

2. All gifts are fuited only to a flate of imperfection; when we arrive to maturity in glory we shall be above them. For we know in part, and prophely in part, our greatest attainments are at present defective; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away; and the nature of the faints of God being exalted to the highest pitch of which it is capable, all imperfection will be fwallowed up in the utmost perfection of knowledge and holinefs, abfolute and everlafting. Our prefent and future state differ as much as manhood does from infancy. When I was a child, I fpake as a child, I underflood as a child, I thought as a child; and fuch he infinuates were all their highest present attainments, no better than the poor conceptions and lifping of babes: but when I became a man, I put away childiffs things; and in the heavenly state fo low thoughts shall we entertain of all our present most esteemed acquisitions; we shall despise what in the days of childifh folly we valued, and view every thing, with a diftinctness of spiritual vision as much above our prefent state, as the thoughts of manhood are superior to the fancies of infancy : for now we fee through a glafs darkly, the mirror reflecting the object indiffinctly, and, like a riddle, the truth is enveloped with obfcurity; but then face to face, clearly and fully, by intuition, without any darkening medium. Now know I in part, with all my fingular gifts I know but in part ; but then fhall I know even as alfo I am known, comprehending heavenly objects with the most diftinct knowledge, and in the fame way that God who is a Spirit, and his angels, know me.

3. Love is the most excellent of graces, as well as above all gifts. And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three cardinal graces, infeparable from the Christian character, and which till death must be in constant exercise, if we be finally faved; but the greatest of these is love, the others being as means to this as the end. And when faith is swallowed up in fight, and hope in the fruition of eternal bleffedness, love, the bright image of the Deity, shall glow towards the eternal Three, and towards the celessian hosts, in every bosom of the faithful, and continue to burn, with unextinguished ardour throughout the countless ages of eternity.

CHAP. XIV.

FROM the things written in this chapter, it appears that the brethren at Corinth had erred in their opinion of the comparative excellence of the fpiritual gifts, and had been guilty of great irregularities in the exercise of these gifts. In particular, they preferred the gift of fpeaking foreign languages to all the reft, because it made them respectable in the eyes of the unbelieving Greeks, who were great admirers of eloquence. Farther, posseffing that gift in the manner of a habit, which they could exercise at pleasure, they were exceedingly fond of shewing it in the public assemblies, by speaking often and long in foreign. languages, without regarding whether their hearers understood them or not. And fancying themsfelves the most honour-except I shall speak to you either by revelation, doctrine?

fpeaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, or by knowledge, or by prophelying, or by honourable of all the fpiritual men, becaufe their gift was habitual, they claimed the privilege of fpeaking in the public affemblies preferably to others; whereby fome who were better qualified to edify the church, were often obliged to be filent. Nay, to fuch a pitch did they carry their paffion for speaking foreign languages, that on some occasions a number of them who pollessed that gift, spake in the church all at once; whereby great confusion was occationed in their meetings.

The Counthians, by this improper ule of their ability to fpeak foreign languages, having brought a bad report upon the Christian assemblies, St. Paul, in this chapter, endeavoured to leffen their admiration of the gift of tongues, by flowing that it was inferior to most of the other fpiritual gifts, and that its value depended on its being ufed for the edification of others. Wherefore, as an introduction to his difcourfe on the fubject, he began with exhorting them to make Lve the object of their constant pursuit, but spiritual gifts the object only of their eanneft with : and of the fpiritual gifts, to defire the gift of prophely, rather than the gift of speaking foreign languages, ver. 1.-Becaufe he who, in the public affemblies, ipake in an unknown language, fpake to God only, and did no good to others, however fublime and excellent the things which he spake might be, ver. 2 .- Whereas he who prophefied spake to men, in a known language, things for their edification, exhortation, and comfort, ver. 3.-In fhort, he who fpake in an unknown language, edified none but himfelf; whereas he who prophefied edified the church, ver. 4.—This being the cafe, though the Apostle would have been glad that all the infpired men at Corinth had fpoken foreign languages, he rather withed them to prophely, ver. 5 .- Next, he advanced various arguments to fnew the unprofitablenefs of fpeaking foreign languages in the church, effectially when all the congregation underflood the language of the country, ver. 6-11.-Then exhorted fuch of them as earneftly withed to pofiels fpiritual gifts, to feek those which would make them abound to edification, ver. 12 .- and directed the perfons who prayed in an unknown tongue, to pray in fuch a manner, that what they prayed might be interpreted, ver. 13, because, if any one prayed in an unknown tongue, without having his prayer interpreted, his fpirit prayed, but his meaning did not profit his hearers, ver. 14 .- The duty, therefore, of every infpired perfon, who prayed or fang pfalms in the public affemblies, was to perform those offices in an intelligible manner, ver. 15 .- otherwife, when he returned thanks to God, his hearers could not fay Amen; that is, could not join in his thankfgiving, not understanding what he faid, ver. 16. 17.-He then told them, that he could thank God in more foreign languages than all of them taken together, yet he would rather speak five fentences, in a known language, for the edification of others, than ten thoufand fentences in an unknown language, which could profit nobody but himfelf, ver. 18. 19.

Next, to thew the Corint'dans the foolifhnefs of a number of them fpeaking in the church unknown languages all at once, he told them it was acling like children. In bad dispositions, indeed, he wished them to be children. but in understanding to be men, ver. 20.-Then he put them in mind of Ifaiah's prophely, in which it was foretold, that God would fpeak to the unbelieving Ifraelites in foreign languages; but that even fo they would not believe, ver. 21.-From which he inferred, that foreign languages were intended for a fign, not to believers but unbelievers, to convince them of the divine origin of the gofpel. Whereas prophefy was efpecially intended for the edification of believers, ver. 22. - Farther, when the whole church is met in one place, if all of you, faid he, who have the gift of tongues, speak at once, and there come in an unlearned perfon, or an unbeliever, will they not fay, ye are mad ? ver. 23 .- Whereas if all infpired men prophe/y, that is, fpeak in a known language, and in an orderly manner, to the edification, exhortation, and comfort of the affembly, and there shall come in an unlearned perfon, or an unbeliever, perhaps with a bad intention, fuch a one, understanding what is spoken by all, will probably be made fenfible, through grace, of the evil of his idolatry and wickedness, ver. 24.-and the secrets of his heart will be difcovered, fo that falling proftrate, he will wcrfhip God, and carry away word that God is actually among the Chriftians, ver. 25.

In the remaining part of this chapter, the Apoftle gave the Corinthians particular directions concerning the manner in which they were to exercise their spiritual gifts, ver. 26-33 .- and prohibited women from speaking in the church on any pretence whatever, founding his prohibition on the will of God, and on the law of Mofes, which commanded women to be fubject to men, and even on the cullom of nations, ver. 34, 35, 36.-Then he required the prophets, and other spiritual perfons at Corinth, to acknowledge that all the things he had written were the commandments of the Lord. For St. Paul, though one of the greatest apostles, willingly submitted his doctrines and writings to be tried by those who had the gift of difcerning fpirits; being abfolutely certain of his own infpiration, ver. 37. - He added, if, after the attestation borne to my precepts by the fpiritual men, any teacher among you is ignorant that they are the precepts of the Lord, let him remain in his ignorance, ver. 38.-And, as the conclusion of the whole, he exhorted the Corinthians to defire carneftly to prophefy; but, at the fame time, not to forbid any perfon to fpeak in an unknown language, if there was an interpreter prefent to interpret what he faid, ver. 39.-And in general to do all things, in their public affemblies, decently and in order, ver. 40.

Before this illustration is finished, it may be proper to remark, first, that this and the two preceding chapters of St. Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians, more than any other parts of the facred volume, are ufeful for demonftrating the reality, and for making us acquainted with the nature, of that most fingular and astonithing proof of the divine original of the gospel, which was set before the world in the fupernatural gitts, wherewith multitudes of the

the first Christians were endowed. For, from the account given of these gifts in the chapters mentioned, and of the perfons who possessed them, and of the manner of their communication and operation, and of the uses for which they were intended, we understand, that they all proceeded from the Spirit of God, and were most astonishing in their operation : that, in every church, great numbers of perfons poffeffed thefe gifts, having received them, either by an immediate illapse of the Holy Ghost, or by the impolition of the Apoltles' hands : that the fpiritual men exercifed these gifts openly before all the world, for the confirmation of the gofpel; and, in their public affemblies, for their own edification : that, in the absence of the apoftles, the fpiritual men, by thefe gifts, but effectially by the gifts of miracles and tongues, through divine grace, converted numbers : and that the heathens who came into the Christian assemblies, (as many of them did, 1 Cor. xiv. 24.) had thereby an opportunity to know, and to report to others, that God was really among them. Thus, notwithstanding the gospel in the first age met with great opposition every where, from the flatesmen, the priefls, the craftimen, the bigots, and even from the philosophets and rhetoricians, yet in all countries, by means of the influence of the fpiritual gifts, and of the miraculous powers which abounded among the Christians, accompanied with divine grace, it overcame all opposition, and, through the bleffing of God, fpread itfelf fo effectually, that at length it put an end to the heathen religions in the best peopled and most civilized provinces of the Roman empire.

My fecond remark is: That although the irregularities which the Corinthian brethren were guilty of in the exercile of their fpiritual gifts, occafioned at first abundance of trouble to the Apostle Paul, these irregularities are not now to be regretted. By the direction of God, they have been the occasion of our receiving certain and full information concerning the existence of the spiritual gifts which made a part of the primitive glory of our religion, and concerning the way in which they were exercised by the Apossles, and other spiritual men, for the overturning of the heathen idolatry, the establishment of the gospel throughout the world, and the edification of the church isles.

Ver. 1. Follow after charity, and defire spiritual gifts, Ec.] Or, pursue, &c. St. Paul, in this chapter, concludes his aniwer to the Corinthians concerning fpiritual men and their gifts; and having told them that those were most to be preferred which tended most to edification, and particularly thewn that prophefy was to be preferred to tongues, he gave them directions for the decent, orderly, and profitable exercise of their gifts in their assemblies. The word durite, rendered follow after, properly fignifies, " To pur-" fue, with an eagerness like that with which hunters fol-" low their game;" and it may be intended to intimate how hard it is to obtain and preferve fuch a truly benevolent spirit, in the main series of life; considering, on the one hand, how many provocations we are likely to meet with; and, on the other, the force of felf-love, which will, in fo many inftances, be ready to break in upon it. But to true evangelical faith nothing is impossible. Inflead of follow, we may read, purfue.

"He that fpeaks in Ver. 2. For he that speaketh, &c.] " a tongue unknown in the auditory which he addreffes, " fpeaks in effect not to men, but to God; and as God " alone knows the truth and importance of what he fays, " it is all loft on the audience, though he fpeaks in the " Spirit the most sublime mysteries." Dr. Whitby thinks that the gifts of languages and prophely were always to be found in the fame perfon, but that the first was permanent, the other transient; yet furely it is very conceivable that either might be without the other. The miraculous instamping, as it were, in a man's mind a new language, would, indeed, enable him to fpeak all he knew in it; but his fitnefs to difcourfe in public, as well as his capacity of predicting future events, were matters quite of another nature. He who attentively reads this chapter, fays Mr. Locke, about fpiritual men, and their gifts, may find reafon to imagine that it was those who had the gift of tongues that caufed the diforder in the church of Corinth, by their forwardness to speak, and striving to be heard first; and so taking up too much of their time in the affemblies. For remedying this diforder, and better regulating this matter, amongst other things, they had re-course to St. Paul. This opinion will be confirmed, if we confider, 1st, that the first gift which St. Paul compares with love, ch. xiii. and extremely undervalues in comparison of that divine virtue, is the gift of tongues; as if that were the gift which they most affected to thew, and most valued themselves upon; as indeed it was in itself most fitted for oftentation, in their affemblies, of any other, if any one were inclined that way; and that the Corinthians, in their prefent state, were not exempt from emulation and vanity, is very evident. 2dly, If we confider, that when in this chapter St. Paul compares their fpiritual gifts one with another, the first, may, the only one which he depreciates, in comparison of others, is the gift of tongues; of which he difcourfes for above twenty verfes together, in a way proper to abate a too high effeem, and a too exceflive use of it in their affemblies; which we cannot fuppofe he would have done had they not been guilty of fome fuch milcarriage in the cafe as feems to be intimated in ver. 24. 3dly, When he comes to give directions about the exercise of their gifts in their meetings, that of tongues is the only one which he reftrains and limits, ver. 27, 28.

Ver. 3. But he that prophetieth, &c.] That is, "Where-" as he that prophetieth, in the fenfe in which I now " ufe the word, i. e. difcourfes of divine things in a " known language, fpeaketh to men, and affords them edifi-" cation, and exhortation and comfort, according to the " particular tenor and contents of what he fays."

Ver. 4. In an unknown tongus.] By yrodson tongue, Dr. Lightfoot, in this chapter, understands the Hebrew tongue; which, he observes, was used in the fynagogue in reading the scripture, in praying, and in preaching. "If that be "the meaning of tongue here, fays Mr. Locke, it fuits "well

But it appears to me more likely that the word  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma n$ , here signifies any known tongue, in the general.

Ver. 5. I would that ye all fpake with tongues.] How happily does the Apoftle teach us to effimate the value of gifts and talents, not by their brilliancy, but ufefulnefs. Speaking with tongues was, indeed, very ferviceable for fpreading the gofpel abroad; but for thofe who ftaid at home, it was much more defirable to be able to difcourfe well on ufeful fubjects in their own language; which might ferve for the improvement of the fociety to which they belonged, and the conviction of fuch of their unbelieving neighbours as might vifit their affemblics. See ver. 23-25.

23-25. Ver. 6. By revelation, or by knowledge, &c.] It is not to be doubted that the four diftinct terms here used by the Apostle had each its distinct fignification in his mind and intention. Whether what may be collected from these epiftles will fufficiently warrant us to understand them in the following fignifications, must be left to the judgment of others. First, Revelation ;- fomething revealed by God immediately to the perfon; fee ver. 30. Secondly, Knowledge ;- the understanding of the mystical and evangelical sense of passages in the Old Testament, relating to our Saviour and the gospel. Thirdly, prophefy; an inspired bymn, ver. 26, or the prediction of some future event. Fourthly, doctrine; --- any truth of the gospel concerning faith, experience, or manners. But whether this, or any other precise meaning of these words, can be certainly made out now, it is perhaps of no great necessity to be over curious; it being enough, for the understanding the fenfe and argument of the Apostle here, to know that these terms stand for some intelligible discourse, tending to the edification of the church; though of what kind each of them was in particular we know not certainly.

Ver. 10-12. There are, it may be, &c.] There are, for example, many different languages in the world, and all are fignificant, vcr. 11. But if I do not understand the language,

I shall be, with regard to him that uses it, as a foreigner, and he will be so to me, vcr. 12. Since then there is among you such an emulation about spiritual gifts, seek to excel in these which most contribute to edify the congregation. Heylin.

Ver. 13. Wherefore let him that fpeaketh, &c.] If therefore any of you be fond of fpeaking languages, by a miraculous power, which he himfelf was before a ftranger to, and which thole who have not learnt it can make nothing of; let him beg of God, that, when he comes among fuch people, he may alfo be enabled to interpret what he fays in their vulgar tongue, that it may not be a heap of unintelligible words to them; but that they may be profited by the difcourfe.

Ver. 14. But my understanding is unfruitful.] "My "meaning is unprofitable to others, who understand not my words." See ver. 4.

Ver. 15. I will pray with the understanding alfo.] That is, according to Mr. Locke, "When moved to it by the " Spirit, I will pray in an unknown tongue; but fo that " my meaning may be underftood by others;" that is to fay, "I will not do it but when there is fome one by to " interpret."-I will not pretend, fays Mr. Locke, to justify this interpretation of the term  $\tau_{\psi}$  vol by the exact rules of the Greek idiom; but the fenfe of the place will, I think, bear me out in it; and he must be little conversant with the writings of St. Paul who does not observe, that when he has used a term, he is apt to repeat it again in the fame difcourfe, in a way peculiar to himfelf, and fomewhat varied from its ordinary fignification. So, having here in the foregoing verse used the word vis, for the fentiment of his own mind, which was unprofitable for others when he prayed in a tongue unknown to them,-and opposed it to the word musima, which he used there for his orun sense, accompanying his own words, intelligible to himfelf, when by the impulse of the spirit he prayed in a foreign tongue; he continues in this verse to use praying with the Spirit, and with the understanding in the fame oppolition, the one for praying in a strange tongue, which alone his own mind understood and accompanied; the other, for praying fo, as that the meaning of his mind in those words which he uttered was made known to others, fo that they they were also benefited. Dr. Doddridge, however, is of opinion, that the fense and high spirit of the Apostle in this clause is lost by the above interpretation. I apprehend, lays he, it is designed further to intimate what a want of manly fense and right understanding it must betray, to talk in a language which the hearers could not comprehend, how sublime foever the difcourse may be. This the 20th verse, and especially the use of the word  $\tau_{2,2,1,0,1}$ , there strongly suggests. Instead of, I will pray with the understanding, and I will fing with the understanding, Dr. Heylin reads, But my prayer shall be intelligible ;—but my bymn shall be intuligible.

See ver. 4.

Ver. 20. Be not children in underflanding :] This is an admirable flroke of true oratory, adapted to bumble their fpints, by reprefenting those things in which they were most ready to pride themselves, as comparatively little. The word verta's ere refers to infants, and is not fulficiently expressed by the word children; for they are sometimes win, and sometimes malicious too; the old Adam more or less discovers itself in them : it should rather be rendered, be little infants in malice,—namia, - by which is Vor. 11. to be underflood all forts of evil tempers of mind which are contrary to the gentlenefs of childhood; and in particular their emulation and strife about the exercise of their gifts in their assemblies. The word  $\tau\epsilon\lambda\dot{\epsilon}\omega$  fignifies fullgrown men; intimating, that it was a kind of puerility to emulate, and to quarrel with one another.

Ver. 21. In the law it is written, I In the law, here. means the Old Teftament, Ifai. xxviii. 11. where God has been complaining of the unteachable disposition of the Jews. Instead of, with men of other lips, fome read, furely in foreign language, and with foreign lips, &c. Most critics refer the words, as they ft and in Ifaiah, to the Babylonians, who fhould come and fpeak to them in a language unintelligible to them; in which fense the phrase is used elsewhere, Deut. xxviii. 49. Jer. v. 15. Diodati thinks the meaning is, " Becaufe they would not attend to plain " meffages, God would fpeak to them by fuch as they " could not understand :" and then the Apoftle's argument will be, "Since God threatens this as a curfe, do not vo-" luntarily bring it upon the church, merely to make " oftentation of your own gifts." 26 How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, <sup>2</sup> every one of you hath a pfalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. <sup>a</sup> Let all things be done unto edifying.

figns which had brought them into the affembly, when they came only as fpics : and this was well fuited to the purpofe of producing, through grace, ftrong convictions of the prefence of God with Chriftians. The paffage, however, may be fo underftood, as to include any remarkable correspondence between what was fpoken and the thoughts and ftate of mind whereof fuch a ftranger might be confcious. Many memorable inftances of which ftill happen, where ministers preach in an experimental manner, and lafting effects are often produced in confequence of fuch impreflions.

Ver. 26. Every one of you hath a pfalm,] Is ready with a pfalm, with a doctrine, &c. Locke. It feems probable, that fome of these Christians were so full of themselves, and so desirous of exercising their respective gifts, that, without waiting for the permission and direction of him who presided in the assembly (which in the synagogues the Apostles themselves seem to have done, see Acts, xiii. 15.), several began speaking or singing in the same minute, and fome began while others were speaking. The manner in which discourses were carried on in the schools of the philosophers, (where several little knots of disputants seem to have been engaged at the same time,) and what happened frequently in the Jewish synagogues after worship was concluded, might possibly have given occasion to this irregularity.

Ver. 27. If any man fpeak, &c.] St. Paul has faid in this chapter as much as conveniently could be faid, to reftrain their fpeaking in an unknowntongue in their affemblies; which feems to be that particular wherein the vanity and oftentation of the Corinthians was most forward to shew themfelves. "It is not," fays he, "a gift intended for the edifi-"cation of believers; however, fince you will be exercising "it in your meetings, let it always be fo ordered that it "may be for edification." The original word size should be rendered although, fince it is no where used simply for if, as in our translation: nor will the fense here bear whether, which is the common fignification of the word size. Therefore, fays Mr. Locke, I take the Apostle's meaning to be, "You "muss do nothing but to edification, ver. 26; and al-"though you speak in an unknown tongue, even an un-"known tongue muss be made use of in your affemblies

" only to edification." The rule of the fynagogue was, " In the law, let one read, and one interpret; in the pro-" phets, let one read, and two interpret."—In Efther, " ten may read, and ten interpret."—Some learned critics would connect this and the 26th verse together, thus: Hath every one a psalm? Hath he a doctrine? &cc.—Let all be done to edifying; or if any one speak in an unknown tongue, let it be, &cc. See Luke, xi. 11.

Ver. 28. But, if there be no interpreter,] The miracle which conferred the gift of tongues, feems to have been the inftantaneous impressing on the mind the familiar and perfect knowledge of a language, with which the perfon was before unacquainted; yet fo that from that time the perfon receiving it fhould be able, without any new miracle, to use it as he thought fit ; in the same manner as the members of the body are freely and perfectly used, after having been reftored by miracle to the exercise of their natural functions. It was as much in the course of nature for an Apostle, whom the Holy Spirit had enabled to speak a strange language, ever afterwards to have the use of that language, as it was for the cripple whom Jefus reftored to the use of his limbs, ever afterwards to walk, run, and perform all the functions of a man perfectly found and whole. This is the only hypothesis upon which the abuse of this gift can be accounted for.

Ver. 30. Let the first hold his peace.] Some think that the word  $\sigma_{k}\gamma\alpha'\tau\omega$  here fhould be rendered, have done speaking; for if the direction had been, "Let him that was " speaking immediately hold his peace, as soon as another " intimates that he has a revelation," it would have introduced a confusion which this advice was intended to prevent.—" If any thing be revealed to another, &c. let him " not immediately arise and interrupt the first, but let him " fit ftill till he have done speaking." See ver. 32, 33.

Ver. 31. That all may learn, ] Yet fo as all may learn.

Ver. 32. The fpirits of the prophets are fubject, &c.] Thofe who were actuated by the Holy Spirit, in the very moment of infpiration, ftill retained the free use of themselves, and continued masters of their rational and persuasive faculties. But it was just the contrary with the heathen oracles. The Delphic prophetes was a mere organ, her prophesies being delivered in a fit of extacy, when the presence of the god or devil was fupposed to obliterate all the impressions of human ideas.

Ver. 34, 35. Let your women keep filence] "As to your "women, let them keep filence in your affemblies: for it "is not permitted them to difcourse there, or pretend to "teach: that no way fuits the state of subjection appointed them in the law. See Gen. iii. 16. But if "they have a mind to have any thing explained to them "which paffes in the church, let them, for their informa-"tion, alk their husbands at home; for it is a shame for "women to speak in the congregation."

Ver. 37. Or fpiritual,] The fpiritual man, in St. Paul's fenfe, in this place, is one who founds his knowledge in what is revealed by the Spirit of God, and not in the bare difcoveries of his natural reason and parts. See ch. ii. 15.

Ver. 38. If any man be ignorant,] By the any man, mentioned in this and the foregoing verfe, St. Paul feems particularly to intimate the falfe apoftle, who pretended to give laws among them, and may well be fuppofed to be the author of these diforders; whom therefore St. Paul censures, and presses in these three verses. The word 'Apositro, which we render, "Let him be ignorant," Dr. Whitby would render, "Let him not be acknowledged to be " a true prophet." See his note.

Ver. 39. Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophely, &c.] "Therefore, to conclude all that I have been faying on "thefe points, my advice to you, brethren, is, that you be "eamefuly defirous of obtaining and exercifing the gift of "prophely, as the most excellent in itfelf, and most pro-"fulle to the church, of all others; (ver. 1-5.) and yet "that ye would not utterly difcountenance and prevent "the exercise of the gift of tongues, which may also be of "good use in its place, if it be managed according to the "foregoing rules concerning it."

Ver. 40. Let all things be done decently] "Efpecially re-"member this great comprehensive rule, to be applied to a "thousand varieties which may arise, Let all things be done "decently, and according to order; let all be conducted in a "regular manner, to prevent such disturbances, disputes, "and scandals for the suture, as have already arisen in your "fociety, and will proceed to greater evils, if you do not "immediately fet about reforming them." Inferences.—How weak and poor a thing is pride and oftentation, and how wife and honourable humility and love! Who that has a right differnment would not rather be the obfcureft Chriftian that now almost unfeen joins our affemblies, and, in heart at least, humbly puts his amen to the petitions prefented there, than the most fluent talker in Corinth, abusing the special gifts of the Spirit, and triffing away, in an unfeasonable display of his then unprofitable endowments, the moments defined to the highest purposes of religious edification? Who must not lament to fee pride and vain-glory fo early infinuating themselves into Chriftian focieties? Who must not, from fo fad an instance, learn to be greatly watchful over their own hearts, on a fide where they are subject to such dangerous attacks? ver. 2—12.

Had the most able and zealous protestant divine endeavoured to expose the absurdity of praying in an unknown tongue, as practifed in the church of Rome, it is difficult to imagine what he could have written more full to the purpose than the Apostle has here done : and when it is confidered how perverfely the papifts retain the ufage of fuch prayers, it will feem no wonder that they fhould keep the fcriptures also in an unknown tongue. But they proclaim, at the fame time, their fuperstition and idolatry in fo universal a language, that even a barbarian might perceive and learn it in their affemblies. May God give their prejudiced minds a juster and happier turn, and teach us to avoid a blind and unreasonable adherence to custom, merely as fuch; always directing ourfelves by what the reafon of the things, and the authority of fcripture, concur to dictate, ver. 13-16.

We should learn of this wife and benevolent Apostle, to estimate the value of gifts by their usefulnes, and to seek, above all things, the edification of our brethren, efpecially if we are providentially called to minister in public, ver. 18, 19. There is, perhaps, a manner of fpeaking in an unknown tongue, even when the language of our own country is used,—a height of composition, an abstruss of thought, an obscurity of phrase, which common Christians cannot understand. Let not the ministers of the humble Jesus feek such high things, but, in this important fense of the exhortation, condescend to men of low estate. If the ignorant may be instructed, if the careless may be M m 2 convinced, convinced, if the vicious may be reformed; if the devotion of our Christian brethren may be excited, their love to each other cherished, and their holy resolutions confirmed, - the great ends of divine ordinances are answered ; and that plainnefs of fpeech which may be most likely to promote them, is rather the glory than the reproach of the Chriftian orator.

How fondly do men flatter themfelves with empty appearances, and often how justly do fuch deferve the imputation of childish folly, the height of whose temper will least allow them to bear it ! Let us dare to examine ourfelves impartially; folicitous that we may not be *children in un*derstanding; but, forming our minds on the maxims of fcripture, and our lives on the example of Chrift, may we grow up in him to the measure and stature of a perfect man :- but let us be children in malice, endeavouring to be as free from every gloomy, malignant, felfishpathon, as newborn infants are, ver. 20. In fhort, it is this happy and amiable character, which we flould diligently follow after; ... remembering that there is a fense in which we must become as little children, or we cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

Those extraordinary gifts, which fuited the first planting of Christianity in the world, are now ceased; but we have great reason to bless God that they were given, and that we have fuch an incontestable evidence of the truth of the gospel as this chapter affords. Such endowments must certainly argue a divine power fetting its feal to the gofpel; and the reality of fuch endowments can never be questioned, when we reflect on the manner in which the Apostle here reproves the abuse of them, and that in a fociety where fo many were alienated from him and his ministry, and confequently where fuch appeals, if not founded on the strictest and most apparent truth, must have exposed him to a contempt never to have been removed. Though these miraculous gifts are now withdrawn, still the Divine Presence is with the church; of which we have this happy proof, that there are those who find the fecrets of their hearts made manifest by the faithful and fkilful administration of Christian ordinances; adoring the Lord God in their hearts, and acknowledging that he is of a truth with his church. May inftances of this kind be more frequent, and may the spirituality and fervour with which divine ordinances shall be administered be fuch, as may afford more reafon to expect them, ver. 24,

We should always regard God as the author, not of confusion, but of peace; making it our concern to behave in his fanctuary in a manner agreeable to this view; with fuch folemn decorum, and with fuch a tender regard to the edification and comfort of each other, as he may approve. May the God of peace deliver Christians of every denomination and rank from that fpiritual pride which has thrown fo many religious focieties into diforder : and, to advance in a flate to happy as that of humility and love must neceffarily be, may what the Apostles have written be acknowledged as the commandments of the Lord, and Chriftian worship and practice be more regulated by their truly authentic canons; which would render many that have fince been devised, relating to indifferent matters, as unneceffary as fome others are burdenfome, fuperititious, and absurd, ver. 33-40.

REFLECTIONS .- If, Having recommended charity, or love, in the first place, he proceeds to shew what spiritual gifts were most desirable.

1. Follow after love, pursue it with the greatest eagerness, and defire spiritual gifts for the glory of God and the good of the church; but rather, or chiefly, that ye may prophely, fo as by divine illumination to be enabled most profitably to open and apply the Scriptures to the confciences of men for their comfort and edification.

2. He affigns this reason for his exhortation, He that speaketh in an unknown tongue speaketh not unto men, who cannot understand him, but unto God; for no man understandeth him, howbeit in the spirit he speaketh mysteries, and advances the most glorious and important truths: but he that prophefeth, explaining and opening the Scriptures to the underflanding and capacity of the hearers, speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort, and his ministry and gifts are made useful to their souls. He that speaketh. in an unknown tongue, edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth, edifieth the church, and communicates an extensive benefit to others as well as to his own heart. I would that ge all Spake with tongues, and were furnished with this great gift; but rather that ye prophesied : for greater is he that prophesieth, than role again the third day, according to the fcrip-

than he that fpeaketh with tongues, he is a more uleful and therefore a more excellent man, and to be more highly effected by the hearers; except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying. Note; Our difcourfes fhould be adapted to the capacity of our hearers: high flights of eloquence, or affectation of learning, are abfurd where the audience is illiterate. Our ambition muft be to ftoop; and we fhould ever be more folicitous to be underftood than to be admired.

2dly, The Apostle goes on to shew the absurdity of making an oftentatious show of gifts, and speaks in his own perfon to infinuate the reproof which they deferved for their vanity in this respect. Now brethren, if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you, interpreting what is made known unto me in, an intelligible manner, either by revelation, if it be a new with; or by knowledge, or by prophessing, or by doctrine? Opening the Scriptures, and enforcing them on the concience. He illustrates this,

1. By a pipe or harp. Unlefs thefe inftruments give a difficient of founds to excite the different pathons which mufic raifes, they will be ufelefs and inharmonious: and just fo must fpeaking in an unknown tongue be abfurd to one who is a ftranger to the language.

2. By a trumpet; which, if it give an uncertain found, who fhall prepare himself to the battle? And as the foldier in such a case must be utterly at a loss, fo must the congregation be where the discourse is in an unknown tongue, or above their capacities; and such preaching is to them no better than the whistling of the wind.

3. A perfon fpeaking in fuch an unknown tongue appears as a barbarian to the hearers. Various as the languages are in the world, each ferves to convey the ideas of the mind to thofe who are acquainted with it, but to no others: therefore, if I know not the meaning of the language, it will appear mere gibberifh; the fpeaker will appear a barbarian to me, and I to him.

Now this being evidently the cafe, the Apoftle exhorts them, fince they to eagerly coveted fpiritual gifts, to defire thefe that were of the most useful tendency; and if they toke with tongues, to pray that they might be able to interpret them for the edifying of the church. For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my fpirit prayeth, and my own foul may be engaged in devotion; but my understanding is un-fruitful, and my prayers of no use to the hearer.

3dly, The Apossile fums up what he had been faying. What is it then that is proper to be done? I will pray with the Spirit, and on proper occasions with any of the tongues which he has given; and I will pray with the understanding als, in fuch manner as that others may be edified: I avill fing with the Spirit, in whatever language he is pleased to enable me to utter his praises; and I will, in public, fing with the understanding also, that the church may join in my alciptions of praise to God. Else, when the falt blefs with the Spirit, though under his immediate infpiration, if it be in an unknown tongue, how shall be that occupieth the room of the unlearned (ay Amen at thy giving of thanks, feeing he understandeth not what thou fayell, and therefore cannot join in the fervice ? For thou verily givest thanks well; but the other, who knows not the meaning of the words, is not edified. I thank my God (and happy is it when we can call him mine), I (peak with tongues more than you all; he did not depreciate the gift, therefore, becaufe he possefied it not, but because they made to evil a use of it: yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others alfo, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue, from which none of the hearers could receive the least benefit. Therefore, brethren, be not children in understanding, and foolifhly boatt yourfelves on the fhowy gift of tongues : howbeit in malice be ye children, free from the malignant paffions of envy, malice, and pride; but in understanding be men, and prove yourselves to be Chriftians grown to riper years, by knowing how to value things according to their intrinsic worth, and to prefer godlike love to the most astonithing gifts. Note; (1.) That church must be erroneous, where ignorance is regarded as the mother of devotion, and the prayers are offered in an unknown tongue. (2.) The least good done to the meanest foul is an unfpeakably greater acquifition than the highest applause gained to ourselves. (3.) A malicious envious spirit is directly contrary to true Christianity. Among the first lessons of that school, we must learn to become as little children.

4thly, The Apostle further enforces what he had advanced, by observing,

1. That it had been threatened to the Jews, as the punifhment of their infidelity; that with men of other tongues, and other lips, will I fpeak unto this people; and yet for all that they will not hear me, faith the Lord: which was primarily fulfilled when they were fent into captivity to Babylon, where they heard the ftrange language of their conquerors; and fecondarily, when, on the day of Pentecoft, they heard the Apotlles fpeak with tongues, yet rejected the evidence which the Holy Ghoft bore thereby to the doctrine which they preached; deaf to the warnings of Providence and the calls of grace. The Corinthians fhould not therefore be fo inordinately fond of what God had before ufed in a way of judgment upon Ifrael, or what the Jews in general, by their wilful obftinacy, had abufed to their eternal condemnation.

2. Tangues are for a fign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not, to carry the Golpel into the lands of infidclity, and bear a teftimony to the truth of it, which those who believe do not so much need; but prophefying ferveth not for them that believe not merely, but is also for them which believe, that they may be built up on the true foundation. So that to speak with tongues in a Christian assessed, where none could be prosited thereby, was useles.

3. The credit of their profession should restrain them from an oftentation of their gift of tongues. If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with with tongues, it will appear a fecond Babel: and if there come in those that are unlearned, either private Christians or other common people, and unbelievers, will they not fay that ye are mad, and, inftead of being converted, ridicule you as a parcel of frantic enthuliafts? But if all prophely, in their turn preaching, praying, or praifing, in an intelligible manner, and there come in one that believeth not, out of curiofity or by accident; or one unlearned, or ignorant; he is convinced of all, he is judged of all; his confcience is affected under the word, his fins are brought to his remembrance, and the just wrath of God due thereunto is fet before him : and thus are the fecrets of his heart made manifeft, as if the preacher had known his very foul, and defcribed his cafe particularly; and fo, falling down on his face, he will worship God, convinced, by what he hears, that this is his work; and report that God is in you of a truth, fince none could fo discover the inmost foul, and fpeak with fuch power and energy, unless God's Spirit instructed them and accompanied their ministrations. Note; The word of truth, when rightly difpenfed, is a difcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart : and many who have heard it, have felt by experience, that God's ministers often describe their case as particularly as if they knew the fecrets of their fouls; and fometimes they wonder who has told them.

5thly, The Apostle reproves their ill behaviour, and gives them rules for their conduct.

1. He blames their irregularities in the church. How is it then, brethren, that you behave fo unfeemly in the houfe of God? For, when ye come together, every one of you kath a pfalm, hath a docIrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, bath an interpretation; and, whilft every one is forward to exercise his own gift, the whole is a scene of disorder and confusion. Let all things be done unto edifying, and no such unfeasionable and unprofitable exercise of these divinely communicated gifts be permitted.

2. He orders how they fhould proceed in the congregation. (1.) If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three; no more than these should at one meeting speak in foreign languages, and that by courfe, in their proper turn; and let one interpret, that the audience may receive instruction: but, if there be no interpreter, let him that speaks in an unknown tongue keep filence in the church, and not interrupt what is to the use of edifying; and let him (peak to himself and to God in private prayer. (2.) Let the prophets speak two or three, at one affembly, and after each other, and let the other judge whether those who profefs to be prophets really are fo, and examine what they fay by the word of truth. (3.) If any thing of peculiar importance be revealed to another prophet that fitteth by, let the first who was speaking hasten to conclude his discourse, and hold his peace : for ye may all prophefy one by one, at proper opportunities, that all may learn and all may be comforted; this being the great end for which the gift of prophefy is bestowed. (See the Annotations.) And the spirits of the prophets are fubject to the prophets; these who are truly infpired, are not like those under diabolical possession; but have the due government of themselves, and need not be hurried into any indecency or impropriety, as to the matter, time, or manner of their speaking.

3. He enforces his difcourse with this argument, For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace; fuch diforderly proceedings as these here remarked cannot arise from him; but as in all the other churches of the faints, fo among you, it is his pleasure, and for his glory, that due order should be observed.

6thly, We have filence imposed on women in the church: for it is not permitted unto them to fpeak as public teachers; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as alfo faith the law, and to fhew it by fuch a modelt filence. And if they will learn any thing, and defire that what they have heard may be farther explained, let them afk their hufbands at home: for it is a fhame for women to fpeak in the church, and thereby renounce that due fubordination which God has enjoined. Note; (1.) If it be the woman's duty to learn in fubjection, it is the hufband's duty equally to maintain his fuperiority by flowing himfelf able to inform her. (2.) Modefty is a woman's greateft ornament; and in that fex effectally all boldnefs is peculiarly fhocking.

7thly, The Apostle closes his difcourse with holy warmth on the preceding points. What mean you by your irregular behaviour? Came the word of God out from you? or came it unto you only? Are you the mother church ? ought you to fet up yourfelves as oracles ? and are you to pay no respect to the usages of other churches, as if your own was infallible? How intolerably assuming is fuch behaviour? If any man think himfelf a prophet, or spiritual, let bim prove the truth of the infpiration which he challenges by fubscribing to these truths, and acknowledge that the things that I write unto you, are the commandments of the Lord, fince no man, truly under the influence of the Spirit, can possibly contradict what that Spirit, speaking in his Apostles, dictates: but if any man be ignorant, and obstinately refuse to submit to these commands, let him be ignorant, treated with deferved contempt, and left to follow the wilful blindnefs and perversenefs of his own heart. Wherefore, brethren, on the whole, covet to prophefy, as the most excellent gift; and forbid not to speak with tongues, which are uleful when managed according to the manner above prefcribed. And for a general rule in all things pertaining to the public worfhip, let all things be done decently and in order; and let every indecency and irregularity be banished from the house of God. Note; (1.) They who continue wilfully ignorant of, or obstinately reject the commandments of the Lord, evidently shew by whole fpirit they are led. (2.) When a man hates the light, he is justly abandoned to the darkness that he has chosen. (3.) In the public worship of God, all the service should be rational, orderly, and edifying.

CHAP. XV.

FROM Acts, xvii. 32. it appears, that the refurrection of the dead was a fubject of laughter to the learned Greeks, who, regarding the body as the prifon of the foul, placed their happinels in being freed from it for ever by death. The falle teacher therefore, to render the Gofpel acceptable to the Greeks, denied the refurrection of the body; contending that the only refurrection promifed by Chrift to his disciples, was the resurrection of the foul from the death of fin, and affirming that that refurrection was already paffed, 2 Tim. ii. 18. But the refurrection of the body, being one of the great objects of the faith and hope of Christians, the Apostle, in this xvth chapter, fet before the Corinthians, and all mankind, the proof by which that joyful event is rendered indubitable : it is a neceffary confequence of the refurrection of Christ. Wherefore, to lay the foundation of this proof deep and ftrong, the Apolle, before he shewed the connection which sublists between the refurrection of Chrift and the refurrection of the dead, recalled to the remembrance of the Corinthians, the arguments by which he had proved to them the truth of Christ's refurrection so effectually, that many of them had believed him to be really rifen. And first, to make them fensible of the importance of the facts by which he had proved the refurrection of Christ, he told them, that they conflituted fome of the principal articles of the Gofpel, ver. 1.-That they were the things which he first of all had delivered to them; and that he himfelf had received them first of all by revelation; namely, that Christ died for our fins according to the scriptures, ver. 3 .- and that he was buried as one known to be really dead; and that he arole from the dead on the third day, according to the scriptures, ver. 4.-That after his resurrection, he was feen of the Apoftle Peter: then of the twelve, while they were affembled together in the evening of the day on which he arole, and on the eighth day thereafter, ver. 5.-That he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once, of whom the greater part were living at the time when St. Paul wrote this Epiftle, ver. 6 .- That after this he was feen of James, and then of all the Apostles, immediately before he ascended into Heaven, ver. 7 .- and last of all, that he was feen of St. Paul himfelf, in different places and at different times, ver. 8.

Such were the proofs, by which the Apostle had perfunded the Corinthians to believe the refurrection of Christ. To view these proofs in a proper light, the three following remarks may be of use.

The first is, that the death and burial of Christ, having been publicly transacted at Jerusalem in the view of all the people affembled to celebrate the passforer, were matters fufficiently known, and not denied by any one. And therefore, though they were necessfary antecedents to his refurrection, the Apostle did not think it at all needful to prove them. It was of more consequence to observe, as he has done, that these things happened according to the fcriptures: for thereby he infinuated, that the death and burial of the Meffiah, having been foretold by the Jewish prophets, Christ's pretensions to be the Meffiah were not invalidated, but rather confirmed by his death and burial.—And with respect to his rising again from the dead on the third day, because that was not a matter of such notoriety as his death and burial, but was denied by the Jews, it was absolutely necessary that the Apostle should establish it, to the conviction at least of the unprejudiced, by the clearest proofs.

The fecond remark is, That Christ's refurrection from the dead being a matter of fact, it could not, during his absence in heaven, be fo well proved by any other way as by the testimony of credible witnesses, who faw him alive after his refurrection, and had often conversed with him; and who had no interest to ferve by deceiving the world in that matter; and who accompanied that teltimony by the working of miracles, and by other fupernatural gifts. Accordingly, from the account which St. Paul has given of the proofs by which he perfuaded the Corinthians to believe the refurrection of Christ, they appear to have been precifely of the kind required. For he fays he told them, that after his refurrection, Jefus shewed himself alive in different places, and on different occasions, to his Apostles; that is, to perfons who, having accompanied him during his ministry, were perfectly acquainted with his form, his. vifage, his voice, his manner of speaking, and every other circumftance by which the identity of any perfon can be afcertained; and who, for that reason, were well qualified to judge, whether the perfon who appeared to them was really their Master risen from the dead. And as these witneffes had no interest to serve by testifying Christ's refurrection, but, on the contrary, exposed themselves thereby to innumerable evils, their teftimony merits in every refpect to be believed.

The third remark is, The Apoftle's exposition of the proofs, whereby, at his first coming among the Corinthians, he perfuaded many of them to believe Christ's refurrection, though intended more immediately for the confirmation of the faith of the Corinthians, has been of fingular benefit to the world. For it not only shews, in what manner the belief of the refurrection of Christ was established in the world; but it makes mankind fensible, that the prevalence of that belief in the first age was well founded: and that we likewife, who at this distance of time entertain the fame belief, have fufficient reason for fo doing: and that our Master, by his refurrection from the dead, is powerfully demonstrated to be the Son of God, and our religion. is shewn to be divine.

The Apolle having appealed to the testimony of the eye-witness, as the proper evidence of our Lord's refurrection, now that he is gone into Heaven, proceeds in the following part of the chapter to shew in what manner thatevidence establishes beyond all contradiction, first, the trutk.

9 For I am " the least of the Apostles, that am not meet to be called an Apostle, " because I perfecuted the church of God.

of Christ's refurrection; and secondly, the certainty of the refurrection of all the dead.-His reafoning for that purpole is as follows: If it be conftantly preached by all the eye-witneffes, and if it be firmly believed by all Chriftians, that Chrift really arole from the dead, how can the falfe teacher, or any among you Corinthians, who call themfelves Chrift's difciples, affirm that there will be no refurrection of the dead? ver. 12.—For if there is to be no refurrection of the dead, Chrift, who promifed to return and raife the dead, is an impostor who has deluded the world with falfe hopes, ver. 13 .- And if Chrift had not been raifed, the preaching of all who call themfelves eyewitneffes of his refurrection, is falle, and your faith in the Gospel is false, ver. 14.-Besides, we Apolles are found falfe witneffes concerning God, becaufe we have witneffed, to the infinite difhonour of God, that he has raifed an impoftor from the dead, who assuredly is not rifen, if the dead are not to be raifed, ver. 15.—The argument, taken from the refurrection of Christ, to prove that the dead will be raifed, is of fuch importance, that the Apoftle affirmed a fecond time, if the dead are not to be raifed, neither is Christ risen. He is an impostor whom God would never raife, ver. 16 .- Befides, if Chrift have not rifen, your faith in him as your Saviour, though founded on miracles, is not only falle but ufelefs. It answers no purpole. 'Fhe guilt of your fins remainsth, and you have no ground for escaping punishment, ver. 17.-Certainly alfo, both they who have died in the belief of Christ's refurrection, and they who have fuffered death for that belief, are perifhed, if there is to be no refurrection of the dead, ver. 18 .- Farther, to fhew you the abfurdity of imputing to us Apoftles the crime of fallely teftifying against God, that he has raifed an impostor from the dead whom he has not raifed, confider that if there is to be no refurrection, confequently no future state, our only motive to committing the great crime imputed to us, must be fome advantage which we reap from it in this life. Yet, inflead of advantage, we have, by preaching Christ's refurrection, drawn on ourselves from every quarter, the greatest prefent temporal evils; infomuch, that if in this life only we have hope of advantage from Chrift, we are of all men the most miserable, ver. 19.-This argument joined with the confideration mentioned, ver. 18.—namely, that if there is to be no refurrection, those who have died in the belief of Christ's refurrection, and the witness who have fuffered death for attefting Christ's refurrection, are all utterly perished, demonstrates that the witnesses of Christ's refurrection were themselves fully persuaded of the truth thereof. Wherefore, being perfectly qualified for judging, and having had the best opportunities to judge, of the truth of Chrift's refurrection, they could not poffibly be deceived in that matter, and had no motive whatever to deceive the world.

It feems, the philosophers affirmed that the refurrection of the dead, on account of the obedience of Chrift unto death, is a thing unworthy of God: for the Apoltle told the Corinthians, that God had confuted that affertion, by railing Chrift from the dead, as the first fruit or pledge of his raifing all the dead at the laft day, ver. 20. Next he observed, that fince God, confistently with his justice and goodnefs, fubjected all mankind to death for one man's fin, as experience thews, he may, with equal juffice and goodnefs, raife all men from the dead on account of the obedience of one man unto death, as revelation teaches. This I think is the meaning of ver. 21, 22.—Withal, to render the refurrection of the dead more certain, to fuch of the Corinthians as underftood and believed the other doctrines of the Gofpel, the Apostle assured them, that Chrift will reign in his mediatorial kingdom, till he has deftroyed all dominion opposite to God's; and in particular till he has, by the refurrection of the dead, deftroyed the dominion of death, one of the greatest enemies of mankind. After which, Chrift will deliver up the mediatorial kingdom to the Father, ver. 24-27; and then the Son himfelf, in respect to his humanity, shall be subject to the divinity, that the tri-une God may be over all his faints throughout the universe, ver. 28.

Next, turning his difcourfe to those who denied the refurrection of the dead, he afked them, what they must do to make up their lofs, who are baptized, that is, plunged into the greatest afflictions, for believing the refurrection of the dead, if the dead rife not? and what poffible reafon can be affigned for their willingly fuffering death, on account of that belief? ver. 29.-Here it is infinuated, that the teltimony of the eye-witneffes concerning the refurrection of Christ, had through divine grace appeared fo credible to many, and had wrought in them fuch a firm perfuafion of their own refurrection, that at the time when the Apolle wrote this letter, they were fuffering the greatest evils, rather than renounce that faith and hope. Farther, he afked what reafon the Apoftles could have for exposing themfelves to the danger of death every hour, if they knew the refurrection of Chrift and of the dead to be a fallehood? ver. 30 .- and what advantage he, in particular, could propose to himfelf, in undergoing all the evils that he fuffered, if there is to be no refurrection of the dead? In that cafe, he told them, it had been better for him, and the other Apolles, to have followed the maxims of the profane, Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die, ver. 31, 32. -Having by these strong reasonings established, first, the truth of Christ's refurrection, and next, the certainty of the refurrection of all the dead, the Apoille advised the Corinthians to fhun converfing with any one who denied these effential articles of the Christian faith, ver. 33.and commanded the faction to awake from their errors, ver. 34.

abundantly than they all: <sup>q</sup> yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me.

II Therefore ' whether it were I or they, fo we preach, and fo ye believed.

r Ver. 3, 4. Ch. a. 2. 9 Pf. 115. 1. Mat. 10. 20. 2 Cor. 3. 5. Phil. 2. 13. & 4. 13. 1 Tim. 1. 12.

In what follows, the Apostle answers two questions, with which the false teacher combated the doctrine of the refurrection. But fome one will fay, how can the dead be railed? How is it possible? And if it be possible, with what kind of body do they come out of the grave? The philosophers argued, that the refurrection of the body is a thing impoffible; and that though it were poffible, it is by no means desirable: because a body, such as men now have, is a clog to the foul in its operations. In answer to the first of these questions, the Apostle shewed the possibility of the refurrection of the body, by appealing to the operations of the divine power which we daily behold ; namely, the production of plants from feeds which rot in the earth; the diversity of the bodies of beafts, fowls, and fishes; and the different degrees of light, with which the celestial bodies thine. For if the divine power appears to great, in the endless variety of its productions, can any rational perfon doubt of God's being able to raife the dead ? ver. 35-42. -He therefore concluded that the refurrection of the dead is poffible, ver. 42.

Next, to flew the philosophers their mistake, in suppoing that the foul will be clogged in its operations by its re-union with the body, the Apostle compared the body of the righteous which dies, (for it is of them only that he now discourses,) with that which will be raised. Their buried body is corruptible; is difhonoured by death; is deformed and wafted by difease; and at best is weak in its operations; in short, it is an animal body, which like the body of beafts, depends for its growth and fubfiftence on meat and drink. But the body of the righteous, which shall be railed, will be incorruptible, and glorioufly beautiful in its outward appearance, and powerful in its activity : in one word, it will be a fpiritual body ; a body which does not sublist by meat and drink, but by its own internal vigour. Now, there being these differences between the body of the righteous which dies, and the body which rifes, the refurrection of the body, instead of being a difadvantage to the righteous, will contribute greatly to their perfection and happines in the life to come, ver. 42-47.-For, as the beaunly man Christ now is, fuch alfo, at the refurrection, shall the heavenly men, the righteous be, in respect of their bodies, ver. 48.-And to prove that the righteous who are dellined to live in Heaven, must bear the image of the heavenly man in their body, as well as in their foul, he affirms, that a corruptible body, composed of flesh and blood, cannot inherit the kingdom of God, ver. 49, 50.-Then he declares a great mystery or secret, namely, that the righteous, who are living on the earth at Christ's coming, instead of dying, shall all be changed in their body, from corruptible to incorruptible, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye: by which, and by the refurrection of the righteous from the dead, death thall be fwallowed up for ever, ver. 51-54,—and being warmed by the grandeur of his fubject, he breaks forth into that noble fong of victory : Where, O death, is thy fling ? ver. 55. - 57.-The Apostle gave to this discovery, the appellation of a mystery, not only because it was hitherto kept fecret from mankind; but because it is a discovery infinitely more important, interefting, and certain, than any of the difcoveries concerning a future state, pretended to be made in the heathen mysteries, which were all fictions contrived to amuse the initiated, and raile the curiosity of the ignorant. This difcovery St. Paul was infpired to make, becaufe the knowledge of the manner and circumstances of the refurrection of the dead, and of the general judgment, and of the final iffue of things, by rendering our conceptions of these matters more diftinct, greatly strengthens our faith in them, and gives them a powerful influence on our conduct. Accordingly, the Apostle concluded this wonderful discourse, with an exhortation to the Corinthians to be stable, unmoved, and always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that their labour in the Lord is not in vain, ver. 58. I shall finish this preface with observing, first, that no fingle fact in the hiftory of any nation is supported by evidence equal to that which the Apostle Paul has produced in this xvth chapter of his first Epistle to the Corinthians, in proof of our Lord's refurrection from the dead. He was feen after he arole, by a great number of his acquaintance, of whom eleven are particularly specified, who were appointed by Christ to publish and attest his refurrection to the world. These, having accompanied him during the three years of his ministry, were well qualified to judge, whether the perfon they converfed with during the forty days that he shewed himself to them and ate and drank with them, was their Mafter rifen from the dead. And being fully affured of his refurrection by the evidence of their own fenfes, they published it in Jerusalem where he was put to death, and throughout all Judea, and every where elfe, as a thing of which they were abfolutely certain; and fhewed their perfuation of it, by fuffering death for bearing testimony to it. This was the cafe likewife with St. Paul himfelf, who, though he had not accompanied Jefus during his ministry, was honoured at different times with a fight of him after his afcention, and was put to death for publishing his refurrection to the world. I therefore conclude, that if there be any force in the concurring teftimony of many competent and difinterested witness, to induce mankind to believe things at which they were not themselves present, the refurrection of Jesus from the dead cannot be called in queftion, without rendering all hiftory uncertain, and deftroying the best fource of men's belief. -Secondly, The refurrection of Jefus, his miracles, and the miracles of his Apostles, have been denied, because their existence destroys the Aristotelian atheism, which modern philosophers are so fond of reviving; namely, that the world, by powers natural to matter, has continued from all eternity the fame as we fee it; and that there exists nothing in the universe distinct from matter; fo that the prefent course of things, confisting of the motions of the heavens, and of the successive generations and corruptions of animals and vegetables, can neither be interrupted Nn nor nor destroyed by any thing extraneous, but must continue for ever. Neverthelefs, if miracles have happened, this fyltem of atheifm cannot hold; becaufe miracles, being an interruption of the course of nature, are proofs from experience that there exifts a power diffinet from and fuperior to all the powers inherent in matter. And as this controuling power has exerted itfelf with intelligence and freedom, it must possels both these attributes, and is in part what we mean by the term God.—Miracles, therefore, being proofs from experience of the existence of God,-before the Aristotelian atheism can be establiffied, that ftrong hiftorical evidence by which the refurrection of Jefus, his miracles, and the miracles of his apolitics are fupported, must be destroyed. But, as was observed before, this cannot be done without destroying the faith of hiftory, and overturning the grand foundation of human belief.

. Ver. 1. Moreover, brethren, &c.] After St. Paul had left the Corinthians, fome among them denied the refurrection of the dead, though he had ftrongly inculcated that doctrine. He therefore confutes their objections by Chrift's refurrection, which the number of witneffes yet remaining who had feen him, put past all question; befides the conftant inculcating of it by all the Apostles every where. From the refurrection of Christ thus establifhed, he infers the refurrection of the dead; fhews the order they shall rife in, and what fort of bodies they shall have. It is well known, that the primitive Christians were often infulted by the heathen philosophers for their hope of a refurrection, which one of them ridiculoufly enough calls " the hope of worms." See 2 Tim. ii. 18. Others taught that virtue was its own neceffary reward, in fuch a manner as tended to overthrow the ftrongest of all natural arguments for a future state; namely, that which is taken from fuch an unequal diffribution of rewards and punifiments here below. If, biaffed by thefe vain pretences of the heathen philosophers, or feduced by any Jewish teachers of Sadducean principles, the Christians were tempted fo to refine on the doctrine of the refurrection, as in effect to explain it away, it fnews the propriety of this Apoftle's fetting himfelf to prove the refurrection of the faithful principally, and a refurrection in general only, or chiefly, by implication.

Ver. 2. By which—ye are faved.] "By which you are "brought into a flate of falvation; into the way of being "completely and eternally faved." The next claufe fhould be rendered, If you retain thefe joyful tidings which I delivered unto you. The words rendered unlefs, exter is  $\mu n$ , are remarkable, and may fuggeft the thought expression ver. 17. So the first two verses may be a transition; as if he had faid, "I preach the fame gospel still, and I hope you will "retain it: yet I have reason to fear that fome of you "entertain notions which tend quite to enervate it." Some would render  $ixris ei \mu n$  with a comma, making it an exception to the former clause,—but if not,—if you do not retain what I have preached,—you have believed in vain. See 1 Tim. v. 19.

Ver. 4. And that he role again the third day.] It has been queftioned, where the feriptures foretel that Chrift fhould rife from the dead on the third day. Some think there is a parenthefis: fo that the meaning will be, "Ile " role again according to the foriptures, and this on the " third day." Others refer to Pf. xvi. 10. which fays, He should not fee corruption in the grave, as expressive of this, becaufe bodies begin to putrify on the fourth day. Bifhop Warburton refers this to the reprefentative facrifice of Ifaac. Ifaac, fays he, was the reprefentative of Chrift dying for us; his carrying the wood reprefented Chrift carrying his crofs; his father's bringing him fafe from mount Moriah, after three days, during which the fon was under condemnation of death, represented the time that Christ continued dead; and the father plainly received him under the character of Christ's representative, as restored from the dead; for as his being brought to the mount, his being bound and laid on the altar, figured the fufferings and death of Chrift, fo his being taken from thence alive as properly figured Christ's refurrection; nay, even the very time of his refurrection from the dead.

Ver. 5. Then of the twelve.] It is certain, that neither Judas nor Thomas was there, and probably James might be abfent, (fee on ver. 7.) But as the council of twentythree among the Jews might be faid to be affembled if the greater part were prefent, though the number might not be complete; fo the company might be called the twelve, though we fhould fuppofe a fourth part to have been abfent. See Mark xvi. 14. Luke xxiv. 36. John. xx. 26.

Ver. 6. Above five kundred brethren at once.] This was probably in Galilee, where our Saviour had a very great number of difciples; and though there were no more than a hundred and twenty affembled at Jerufalem when Matthias was chosen, yet it does not follow that there was no fuch number in Galilee, where it appears, from the whole tenor of the gospel, that our Lord's disciples abounded very much. This, therefore, is fo far from being an objection to the truth of our Saviour's refurrection (as Chubb and others would urge), that it is a glorious proof of the contrary. Had it been an imposture, fo many falfe hearts and tongues could never have acted in concert; nor would they all have kept the fecret, which remorfe, interest, and perhaps often torture, might urge them to divulge : especially as there had been one traitor among the twelve; on whofe account, had they been confeious of a fraud, a general fufpicion of each other's fecrecy must have arisen. See Ditton on the Refurrection, and Prideaux's Letter to a Deift, p. 241.

Ver. 7. Then of all the Apolles.] The change of phrafe from that in the conclusion of the 5th verie, is very remarkable, and probably intimates, that they who were there called the twelve, (that is, the greateft part of the company who used to be fo denominated) nated) were not, even the whole eleven. On which circumitance a probable conjecture is grounded, that James might, by fome accident, have been detained from meeting his brethren, both on the day of the refurrection and that day fe'nnight; and likewife at the time when Chrift appeared to the five hundred: and that he might in this respect be upon a level with them, our Lord appeared to him alone, after all the appearances mentioned before.

Ver. 8. As of one born out of due time. ] A birth which comes before its time, (the name which St. Paul here gives himfelf,) is usually fudden and unexpected, and is also weak and feeble. The former part applies to St. Paul's being made a Christian and an apostle, though it be in regard to the latter that he humbly ftiles himfelf one born out of due time.

Ver. 9. For I am the least of the Aposlics, &c.] "For " how much foever I be now enriched, and advanced to " gifts and graces, and in the honours of the apostolate; " and how eminent and fuccefsful foever my labours and " fufferings have been in the execution of that office, "I really am in myself, and in my own account, the " very least and most contemptible of all the Apostles of " Chrift ; yea, lefs than the least of all faints, (Eph. iii. 8.) " utterly unworthy of any favour, much more of fo high " and honourable a flation in the church : Nay, on the " contrary, I justly deferved to have an eternal brand of " infamy fet upon me; becaufe I was all along, in the " days of my unregeneracy, and blind zeal for judaifin, " a most obstinate unbeliever, and a most bitter enemy to, " and outrageous perfecutor of, the church (Acls, viii. 3. "ix. 1,) which God has erected as a peculiar people to * himfelf, and which he owns and bleffes, and will be " glorified in and by."

Ver. 10. Was not in vain.] Inflead of was not in vain, &c. fome render the paffage has not been in vain ; for I have laboured.

Ver. 12. How fay fome among you ? &c.] This may well be understood of the head of the contrary faction, and fome of his disciples. First, because St. Paul introduces this confutation by afferting his miffion, which thefe his oppefers would bring in queftion. Secondly, becaufe he is to careful to let the Corinthians fee that he maintains not the doctrine of the refurrection in opposition to these their new leaders, it being the doctrine which he had preached to them at their first conversion, before any false Apostle appeared among them, and misled them about the relurrection. Their false Apostle was a Jew, and in all appearance judaized; may he not alfo be fufpected of Sadduceism ?-For it is plain that he did, with all his might, oppole St. Paul, which must proceed from fome very great difference in opinion at the bottom, as there are no footfteps of any perfonal provocation.

Ver. 13. Then is Chrift not rifen.] The argument on which the Apostle dwells in fo copious a manner, would appear to be of great moment, whatever the principles were by which the doctrine of the refurrection was affaulted. It could not be faid, that that was in its own nature impossible which was accomplished in Christ; and it would prove that the hope of a refurrection was not, as the Gentiles reprefented it, a mean and fordid hope, fince it was accomplifhed in the Son of God. See on ver. 1.

Ver. 17. Ye are yet in your fins.] The word fin is frequently used for the punifiment due to fin; and in that fense it should be understood here : " Ye are yet liable to " the punifhment of your fins." It is the conftant tenor of fcripture, that atonement for the fins of the world was made by our great High-priest upon the crofs; that his death was our ranfom, and his blood the price paid for it : fo that when we confider the ranfom, which includes our justification, with respect to Christ, the author of it, it must be ascribed to his death and passion ;-but as to ourfelves, our title and interest in this common falvation being grounded in faith, our juftification, though purchafed by the blood of Chrift, must be appropriated to ourfelves through faith in that blood. For the fame Apostle who has told us that we are justified freely through the redemption which is in Christ Jefus, has likewife told us. that God hath fet him forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood. For this reason we are faid to be juffified by faith; not that our faith is the purchase of justification. which we owe to the blood of Chrift alone; but becaufe through faith we obtain the benefit of the redemption wrought by Jefus Christ. Now, though the death of Chrift was the reconciling of the world to God, yet the refurrection of Chrift is the crowning point of our hope and faith in him ; even of our faith in his blood, by which he made a propitiation for our fins : and therefore, although Chrift died for our offences, and made atonement for our fins, yet fince our faith in his death, and our hope in his blood, (by which hope and faith we are juffified,) are built upon the truth and credit of his refurrection, it is very properly faid that he roje again for our juflification. For the death of Chrift would have been no justification to us, nor could we have had hope or faith in it, but for the Nn 2 power power and glory of the refurrection, which has wiped away the fcandal and ignominy of the crofs, and made it both a divine and rational act of faith to hope for life and immortality from bim, who himfelf once died upon the tree. Thus we learn from St. Paul, that if Christ be not rifen, our faith is in vain; we are yet in our fins. Whence we gather that faith in the death of Chrift, not grounded on the assurance of his refurrection, is a vain faith, and fuch a one as cannot deliver us from our fins : nay, that the death of Christ could not have been a propitiation for fin without his refurrection, he expressly teaches in the next verse :- Then they alfo, which are fallen asleep in Christ, are perified.

Ver. 19. We are of all men mist miserable.] Most pitiable. Doddridge. It is quite foreign to the purpole to argue from this text, as fome have done, that if there were no future flate, holinels and virtue would make men more miferable than they would otherwife be. It is evident that St. Paul here fpeaks not of the cafe of good men in general, if we could poffibly fuppose that their hopes of future happines should, after all, be disappointed; but of the case of the Apostles, and other first preachers and professors of Christianity, if, amidst all their hardships and persecutions, they were not fupported by this hope. To be a Chriftian, in those days, was to be an example of well-tried holinefs and virtue, of true wildom, and of confummate fortitude; to be exposed to fcorn, to infamy, and to death; to be pointed at as a fool, a madman, an enthusiast; to be reviled as an atheist, and an enemy to all religion; to be punished as a robber and murderer ; to lofe fame, and friends, and comfort; and to be exposed to every thing at which human nature shudders, and which a person of the greatest courage, unaffifted by divine grace, would certainly endeavour to evade. Destitute therefore of the hope of the refurrection amid these sufferings, they must have been perpetually subjected to the upbraidings of their own minds, for facrificing every view of happinels in this world, to advance what they knew to be a pernicious falschood. Perhaps there never was a fet of men on earth fo wretched as they must have been on this supposition.

Ver. 20. But now is Christ rifen, &c.] It is a great mistake to imagine that the Apostle is employed throughout this chapter in proving a refurrection : the proof lies in a very narrow compais, chiefly from ver. 12 to 19. and almost all the rest of the chapter is taken up in illustrating, vindicating, or applying it. The proof is, indeed, very fhort, but most folid and convincing;-that which arole from Christ's refurrection. Now that not only proved a refurrection to be in fact possible, but, which was much more, as it proved Chrift to be a divine teacher, it provedthe doctrine of a general refurrection, which he fo expressly taught. It was natural too for so good a man as St. Paul to infift on the fad confequences which would follow, with respect to himself and his brethren, from giving up fo glorious a hope; and the cordial manner in which he speaks of this, is a noble internal argument, which every reader of fentibility must feel. Instead ofbecome the first fruits of them that slept, fome render the paffage-the first fruits of them that are fallen asleep. The first fruits was a small part, first taken and offered to God, and which fanctified the whole mais that was to follow. See on ver. 18.

Ver. 24. When he fall have put down all rule.] Shall bave abolifbed, or deposed. The word naraeyious generally fignifies divefting a thing of fome power, whether lawful or ulurped, which it formerly had, and of reducing it to an incapacity of exerting that power any more. Thus it is used of Satan, Heb. ii. 14. of death, here and ver. 26. of temporal princes, 2 Tim. i. 10. and 1 Cor. i. 28. ii. 6. and of the ceremonial law, Ephefians ii. 15.

Ver. 18. Then fball the Son also himself be subject, &c.] "When the Father fhall have fubjected all things to " him, fo that it shall appear to every eye that he is indeed " Lord of all, then shall the Son also himself be subject to " him, who fubjected all things to him, by a public act in " the midit of this most august affembly; giving up as it " were his commission to prefide as universal Lord in the " mediatorial kingdom, as having answered the end for " which it was given him, in the complete falvation of all " his faithful faints ; whom he shall then introduce into "a state of the greatest proximity to God, and most " intimate converse with him, that God, the Trinity, may be, " and that he may appear to be, all in all: that they all " may enjoy complete and everlasting happines, in the " full communication of the divine favour to them for " ever." It appears evidently, that the kingdom to be given up is the rule of this lower world, which is then to be confumed; and that it may not feem as if a province of Christ's empire was destroyed, his mediatorial government, undertaken in avowed fubserviency to the scheme of redemption, Ephef. i. 10. and completed in the glorification of all his faithful people, shall close in the most honourable manner. God will declare the ends of it fully answered; and the whole body of his faints shall be introduced by him into a state of more intimate approach to, and communion with, the tri-une God, than had been known by the spirits of the blessed in their separate state. Upon the whole, we must remember here, that Christ is spoken of in his mediatorial capacity, and that it follows in the nature of things, that his mediatorial kingdom must cease, and be given up, when the great end of his mediatorial government is completely answered; fo that no possible objection can be hence derived against the true Divinity of the fecond Perfon in the ever-bleffed Trinity, who being God before the creation of this world, and, confequently, before he affumed the office of the Redeemer of men, will and must remain God over all, bleffed for ever, when the great defigns of that office are entirely completed. Accordingly, it is very observable, that, though the apolle had expressly mentioned God even the Father, ver. 24. as the Perfon to whom Christ was to give up the hingdom, which he received from him ; yet he here fpeaks of God abfolutely, without the perfonal restriction, as all in all. See Jones's Catholic Doctrine of a Trinity, ch. i. art. 15, 39, &c. Bp. Brown's Procedure of the Understanding, and the Inferences drawn from 2 Cor. xiii. 14

Ver. 29. Elfe what fball they do, &c.] "Such are our

" views and hopes, as Christians; elfe, if it were not for " what should they do who are baptized in token of their em-" bracing the Cariftian faith in the room of the dead, who " are just fallen in the cause of Christ, but whose places " are filled up by a fucceffion of new converts, who im-" mediately offer themselves to fucceed them, as ranks of " foldiers that advance to the combat in the room of their " companions, who have just been flain in their fight. " If the doctrine that I oppose be true, and the dead are not raifed at all, why are they, neverthelefs, thus baptized in the " " room of the dead, as cheerfully ready, at the peril of " their lives, to keep up the caufe of Jefus in the world ?" It would be almost endless to enumerate, and much more to canvals, all the interpretations which have been given of this obscure phrase, une two verpoir. There is no reason to believe that the fuperflitious cuftom, mentioned by Epiphanius, of baptizing a living person, as representing one who had died unbaptized, is here referred to; it is more likely to have arifen from a miltake of this paffage than to have been fo early prevalent. Mr. Cradock's fuppoling it to allude to walhing dead bodies, neither fuits the grammar, nor really makes any fignificant fenfe. The primitive Christians were accustomed, in general, to referve the baptizing of adults for folemn occalions, particularly for Whitfunday. But it is not at all improbable. that when any eminent Christians died, especially martyrs, fome were chosen out of the catechumens who were preparing for baptifm, and, in honour of these eminent faints. and to fill up their places, were baptized for the dead. Dr. Whitby, by the words, for the dead, understands, "for " that Jefus, who, according to their doctrine, must still " be dead ;" and he observes, that the plural civenpoi is frequantly used in scripture, when one person is spoken of; and that the refurrection venpon-of the dead in general, is thrice mentioned by this Apoltle, when speaking of the refurrection of Christ alone. See the Reflections.

Ver. 31. I proteft by your rejoicing.] "I proteft by your " joys, which I do to cordially take part in that I may " " call them my own."

Ver. 32. If after the manner of men, &c.] St. Paul was a Roman citizen, and pleaded his privilege as fuch, and therefore the chief captain was afraid becaufe he had bound him; for, as Cicero fays, Facinus est vinciri civem Romanum, scelus verberari; - that is, "it is wicked, or unlawful, to bind "a Roman citizen; -- it is villainous to focurge him," that is, "to examine him by focurging." This was at Jerufalem; but he had done the like before at Philippi. Now, if he pleaded his privilege on these leffer occasions, would he not much more have done it on fuch an occasion as this which is specified in the text ? Besides, who could order it? The provincials had no fuch power; and the governor would not venture to inflict fuch a punishment on a Roman citizen, from which he was exempt by their laws : and effectially he would not have attempted it at that time, which was the beginning of Nero's reign, while he governed well, and very moderately. Nor does any time appear in the course of the hiftory which can well be affigned for it; for when St. Paul came first from Ephefus, he flayed but a little while, and left them in quiet, Acts, xviii. 19.; and upon his return thither, when the Jews endeavoured to prejudice the multitude against him, he taught in the school of Tyrannus; and though he continued there two years, we hear of no riot till the affair of Demetrius. After this he immediately left the city, and went into Macedonia. There is a like difficulty as to the place; - for to suppose it to have been in the theatre, as tome have done, feems wholly without foundation. Theatres were defigned for fcenical entertainments, fuch as plays, mufical concerts, the contests of poets and orators; and fometimes their public councils were held there. But they were no ways fitted, nor indeed fafe, for contests with wild beafts. The amphitheatres were the ufual places for those shows: nor do we find mention made in ancient writers of any amphitheatre at Ephefus; though had there been one, and St. Paul had been exposed in it, it is fearcely probable but we should have heard of it. Moreover, had the Apostle been thus engaged, it is difficult to apprehend how he could have escaped without a miracle. For those who conquered the beafts were obliged to fight with men till they were killed themfelves. This was the barbarous cuftom at that very time, as we learn from Seneca, epift. 7. It feems most reafonable, therefore, to understand the expreflion as metaphorical, and that he alludes to the tumult raifed by Demetrius. He uses the like metaphors, and with respect to the fame thing, ch. iv. 9. and again, ver. 13. alluding to another cuftom. And in Acts (ch. xx. 29.) fpeaking of the Ephefians, making use of the fame trope, he fays, I know this, that after my departure fall grievous wolves enter in among you, not fparing the flock. As to the expicition xara aigewrow, the fense to be, humanly (peaking; and fo it is used by Chryfippas, and the phrafe . x27' avdea by Æschylus, as Grotius remarks upon Rom. iii. 5. See alfo Galat. iii. 15. 'The relations which Nicephorus and Theodoret give us, of an encounter which St. Paul had with wild beafts on the theatre at Ephefus, have been fo far regarded by Dr. Whitby, that he contends for the literal interpretation of this paffage; in favour of which it is also urged, that had he spoken of brutal men, he would rather have mentioned the affault made upon him at Ly/fra, where he was ftoned, and fuppofed to be dead. . But the danger of being pulled to pieces might be greater at Ephofus: It had happened very lately, and as the feene was much nearer Corinth, it might be more natural for him to mention it here. The filence of St.<sup>4</sup> Luke in his hiftory as to fo memorable an event as a combat with heafts muft have been, and St. Paul's omitting it in the large catalogue of his fufferings, 2 Cor. xi. 23. together with his known privilege as a Roman citizen, which would probably, as to be fure it flould legally, have protected him from fuch an infult, do all favour the figurative interpretation; and the expression  $\kappa \alpha \tau \alpha$  algement, of the manner of men, or humanly fpeaking, has a propriety on this hypothefis, which it cannot have on the other, and feems to be quite decifive.

Let us eat and drink, &c.7 If the dead rife not at all, the Epicurean maxim might feem to be justified : "Let " us make the beft of this fhort life, which is the whole " period of our being; and, giving up those fublime fenti-" ments and purfuits which belong not to creatures of fo " fhort and low an existence, let us eat and drink, fince we " are to die as it were to-morrow or the next day; for, fo " little is the difference between one period of fuch a life " and another, that it is fearcely worth while to make the " diffinction." It should be observed, that St. Paul writes all along upon a fupposition, that if fuch proofs as he had produced of Christ's refurrection were not to be depended upon, we could have no certainty at all with respect to any future exillence. And though it must be acknowledged, that the natural arguments for the immortality of the foul, and future retributions, carry with them great probability, yet the degree of evidence is by no means comparable to that which the Corinthians mult have had of Chrift's refurrection, with which our own has fo neceffary a connection : and, confequently, had these proofs been given up, what might have been pleaded in favour of the other, would probably have made very little impreffion. It is fearcely neceffary to observe, that the Apostle is not here fpeaking his own fentiments, but arguing according to the Epicurean or Sadducean notions of those who, denying a future state, urged as a natural confequence, that man in that cafe had nothing more to do than to make the best he could of the prefent life. St. Paul could not, for a moment, admit of fuch a fuppolition. He was too firmly grounded in the belief of a refurrection, to allow for one moment any reafoning built upon the idea of its falfchood; and therefore we may obferve, that he immediately adds to the fentiments which he puts into the mouth of his opposers, Be not deceived, &c. ver. 33. Consequently, all the abfurd and blafphemous reafonings of Chubb, drawn from this paffage, are grounded upon the most falle and indefenfible principles. St. Paul, in every page of his writings, fnews too great a regard to holinefs and virtue, for us ever to believe that he could think, upon any hypothefis, a life of impurity and vice preferable to them.

14 'Awake to righteoufnefs, and fin not; for some have not the knowledge of God : ' I speak this to your shame.

35 But fome man will fay, ' How are the dead raifed up? and with what body do they come?

36 "Thou fool, that which thou foweft is not quickened, except it die :

37 And that which thou fowest, thou foweft not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of fome other grain :

38 * But God giveth it a body as it hath pleafed him, and to every feed his own body.

39 'All flesh is not the fame flesh: but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beafts, another of fishes, and another of birds.

40 There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celeftial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another.

41 There is one glory of the fun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the flars: for one flar differeth from another ftar in glory.

42 'So alfo is the refurrection of the dead. It is fown in corruption; it is raifed in incorruption:

* Ch. 6. 5. Heb. 5. 11, 12. <sup>t</sup> John, 3, 4. Ezek. 37. 3. Mat. 22. 29. * Gen. 1. 16—. 6. <sup>z</sup> Dan. 12. 3. Mat. 13. 43. Col. 3. 3, 4. Ver. 50—54. Phil. 3. <sup>1</sup> Rom. 13. 11. and are an Iambic verfe. Accordingly Dr. Doddridge very well translates them thus :

" Good manners are debauch'd by talk profane."

Ver. 34. I speak this to your shame.] May not this probably be faid to make them ashamed of their leader, in whom they were fo forward to glory ? For it is not unlikely that their queftioning and denying the refurrection came from their new Apostle, who raised such opposition against St. Paul. Instead of, Awake to rightesuspects, some Rad, Awake, as becomes righteous men.

Ver. 35. Some man will fay, How, &c. ?] If we will allow St. Paul to know what he fays, it is plain from his anfwers, that he understands these words to contain two questions : First, "How comes it to pais, that dead men are raifed to " life again ;- would it not be better they fhould live on ; "-why do they die to live again ?" Secondly, "With " what body shall they return to life ?" To both these he diclinctly answers, 1. That those who are raised to a hearenly state, shall have new bodies; and next, that it is fit men should die, death being no improper way to the attaining of thefe new bodies. He fnews that there is fo plain and common an inftance of this, in the fowing of all feeds, that he thinks it a foolifh thing to make a difficulty of it; and then proceeds to declare, that as they fhall have new bodies, fo they shall have better bodies than they had before; namely, fpiritual and incorruptible bodies. See Locke on the Human Understanding, b. ii. c. 27. and Ward's 48th Differtation.

Ver. 36. Except it die.] It has been objected to this, that if the feed die, it never bears fruit; but it is certain that the feed in general does confume away in the ground, though a little germen or bud, which makes a part of it, fprings up into new life, and is fed by the death and corruption of the reft. So that these wife philosophers of our own, talk just as foolifhly as the Corinthian free-thinktis whom they vindicate. See John, xii. 23, 24.

Ver. 38. To every feed his own body.] The Apostle seems. more directly to fpeak of that as its proper body, which is peculiar to that species of grain; yet undoubtedly each ear has a peculiar reference to one individual, as its proper feed, in fuch a manner, as another of the fame fpecies has not : and what follows plainly fuits fuch a view. God is faid to give it this body as it pleafes him, becaufe we know not how it is produced; and the Apoftle's leading thought is, that it is abfurd to argue against a refurrection, on a principle which is fo palpably falfe as that must be, which fuppofes us to understand the whole progress of the divine works.

Ver. 39. All fleft is not the fame fleft.] The fcope of the passage makes it evident, that by flefb St. Paul here means bodies; as much as to fay, that God has given to the feveral forts of animals, bodies in fhape, texture, and organization, very different one from another, as he has thought good; and fo he can give to men at the refurrection, bodies of very different conflictutions and qualities from those which they had before. Mr. Locke, inflead of beafls, reads cattle, KTHIEV.

Ver. 41, 42. There is one glory of the fun, &c.] Some would connect thefe two verfes in the following manner: There is one glory of the fun, &c .- For one flar differcib from another flar, ver. 42. So alfo in glory is the refurrection of the deal. But the claufe, So alfo is the refurrection of the dead, fhould rather conclude the 41ft verfe. As if the Apostle had faid, "Another kind of glory shall appear " than human nature has known in its pureft state, in any " beauty of form, or ornaments of drefs. There fhall, " indeed, as I intimated but now, be differences in the " degree of that glory, correspondent to the different ex-" cellencies in the characters of good men, on whom it is " to pafs: but all thall experience a most illustrious and " happy change." It floald be obferved, that the refurrection of the dead here spoken of, is not the refurrection of all mankind in common, but only the refurrection of the

43 It is fown in diffioneur; it is raifed in glory: it is fown in weaknefs; it is raifed in power:

the just. This will be evident to any one who observes that St. Paul having, ver. 22. declared that all men shall be made alive again, tells the Corinthians, ver. 23. that it shall not be all at once, but at several distances of time. First of all, Christ role; afterwards next in order to him the just should all be raifed, which refurrection of the just is that which he treats and gives an account of to the end of this discourse and chapter; and thus does not directly come to the refurrection of the wicked, which was to be the third and last in order: so that from the 23d verse to the end of this chapter, all that he fays of the refurrection, is a defcription only of the refurrection of the just, though he calls it here by the general name of the refurrection of the dead. That this is the cafe is fo evident, that there is fcarcely a verse from the 41st to the end, which does not evince it. Ist, What in this refurrection is raifed, St. Paul affures us, ver. 43., is raifed in glory, but the wicked are not raifed in glory. 2dly, He fays we (speaking in the name of all that shall be then raifed) shall bear the image of the heavenly Adam, ver. 49. which cannot belong to the wicked. We shall all be changed, that death may be fwallowed up of victory, which God giveth us through our Lord Jesus Christ, ver. 51, 52, 53, 54. 57. which can-not likewise belong to the damned. And therefore we and us must be understood to be spoken in the name of the dead that will be Christ's, who are to be raised apart by themfelves, before the reft of mankind. 3dly, He fays, ver. 52., that when the dead are raifed, they who are alive shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye. Now that these dead are only the dead in Christ, who shall rife first, and shall be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, is plain from 1 Theff. iv. 16, 17. 4thly, A farther proof whereof is, ver. 56, 57. in that their fins being taken away, the sting whereby death kills is taken away. And hence St. Paul fays, God hath given us the victory, which is the fame us or we who would bear the image of the heavenly Adam, ver. 49. and the fame we who should all be changed, ver. 51, 52. All which places can therefore belong to none but those who will be Christ's, who shall be raifed by themselves the second in order, before the rest of the dead. What St. Paul fays in this 51st verse, is very remarkable, We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in the twinkling of an eye. The reason he gives for it, ver. 53. is, because this corruptible thing must put on incorruption, and this mortal thing must put on immortality. How? Why by putting off flesh and blood, by an instantaneous change, because, as he tells us, ver. 50., flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; and therefore, to fit believers for that kingdom, those faints who are alive at Christ's coming, shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and those that are in their graves shall be changed likewife, and so all the whole collection of faints, all the faithful members of Christ's body, shall be put into a state of incorruptibility, immortality, and glory, ver. 52. Taking the refurrection here spoken of to be the refurrection of all the dead promifcuoufly, St. Paul's reasoning in this place can hardly be understood. But upon a supposition that he here describes the refurrection of the just only-that refurrection which he fays, ver. 23., is to be the next after Christ's, and feparate from the reft, nothing can be more plain, natural, and eafy than St. Paul's reafoning : and it ftands thus; "Men alive are flesh and blood; the dead in the " graves are but the remains of corrupted flesh and blood; " but flefh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, " neither can corruption inherit incorruption, that is to " fay, immortality: therefore, to make all those who will " be Chrift's, capable to enter into his eternal kingdom " of life-as well those of them who are then alive, as " those of them who are railed from the dead, shall in the " twinkling of an eye be all changed, and their corrupt-" ible shall put on incorruption, and their mortal shall put " on immortality : and thus God gives them the victory " over death, through their Lord Jefus Chrift." This is, in fhort, St. Paul's arguing here, and the account that he gives of the refurrection of the bleffed. But how the wicked, who are afterwards to be reflored to life, were to be raifed, and what was to become of them, he here fays nothing, as not being to his prefent purpole; which was to affure the Corinthians, by the refurrection of Chrift, of a happy refurrection to all the faithful faints of God, and thereby to encourage them to continue steadfast in the faith which had fuch a reward. Nor is it in this place alone that St. Paul calls the refurrection of the just by the general name of the refurrection of the dead. He does the fame, Phil. iii. 11., where he speaks of his fufferings, and of his endeavours, if by any means he might attain unto the refurrection of the dead; whereby he cannot mean the refurrection of the dead in general; which, fince he has declared in this very chapter, ver. 22., that all men, both good and bad, shall as certainly partake of, as that they fhall die, there needs no endeavours to attain to it. Our Saviour likewife speaks of the refurrection of the just in the fame general terms of the refurrection, Mat. xxii. 30. And the refurrection from the dead, Luke, xx. 34-36., by which is meant only the refurrection of the just.

Ver. 42-44. It is fown in corruption.] "The body " which has now in it fuch manifest principles of mor-" tality and corruption, which confifts now of fuch brittle " and tender parts, that the least disease disturbs, and un-"fits them for their operations; which is now fubject to " fo many cafualties, and has its continuance depending " upon the fit difpolition of fo many little and eafily-dilor-" dered parts, that it is a greater wonder how we continue " to live a day, than why we die after to few years" " fpace ;- this body shall, at the refurrection, be perfectly " refined and purged from all the feeds of mortality and " corruption. In a word, in respect to the faithful faints " of God, this corruptible body shall spring up into an in-" corruptible and immortal fubstance, which shall be " fitted to endure in perfect glory, as long as the foul to " which it is united, even to all eternity. " into a bright, a beautiful, and glorious body; which, " in comparison of the animal frame, may with fufficient " propriety be called a fpiritual body, as being an infinitely " more pure and refined vehicle for the foul." The phrafe Suga duxudo, ver. 44, which we render a natural body, should be rendered, more fuitably to the Greek, and more conformably to the Apostle's meaning, an animal body; for St. Paul is shewing here, that as we have animal bodies now, which we derive from Adam, endowed with an animal life, which, unlefs supported by a constant supply of food and air, will fail and perifh; and at last, do what we can, will diffolve and come to an end : fo at the refurrection, we shall have from Christ, the second Adam, fpiritual bodies, which fhall have an effential and naturally infeparable life in them, continuing and fubfilting perpetually of itfelf, without the help of meat, or drink, or air, or any fuch foreign support; without decay, or any tendency to a diffolution. Of which our Saviour speaking, fays, That they who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the refurrection from the dead, cannot die any more, for they are equal to the angels : and furely in this view, there can be no impropriety or abfurdity, as fome have urged, in the Apostle's calling this future nature and conflitution, whatever it may be, a spiritual body, or a spiritualized frame.

Mr. Locke juilly obferves, that the time of man's being in this world is his being forun, and not when, being dead, he is put into the grave ; becaufe dead things are not fown ; feeds are fown being alive, and die not till after they are fown: and this, I apprehend, best agrees with the Apostle's calling the body a natural or animal body, ver. 44. But yet, as laying and burying the body in the earth, bears lome refemblance to the fowing of feed; and as the body is much more remarkable for its corruption, weaknefs, and diffencur, after, than before it dies, I would not exclude a confideration of its flate and condition when it dies and is hid in the grave.

preceding verfes. See 1 Theff. v. 23. and the note on Gen. ii. 7. The last clause is not a quotation from Scripture, as fome have thought, but what the Apostle adds on occasion of the quotation from Genesis; as if he had faid, " Chrift is the last Adam, as an illustrious type of the first " (Rom. v. 14.); and he hath in himfelf a Spirit, with " which he quickeneth whom he pleases, and in what de-" gree he pleafes,-even all his faithful faints." The original has a kind of poetical turn, which feems in fome measure to fuit the fublimity of the fentiment; for the first of the clauses, ver. 55., is an Ionic, and the fecond a Trochaic verfe; and Mr. Pope has only transposed them, to make them, as they ftand in our verses, the conclusion of one of his stanzas,-O grave! where is thy victory ?- O death ! where is thy fling? It is generally thought that thefe words are quoted from Hofca, xiii. 10. 14. where fee the note.

Inferences.-The death and refurrection of Chrift conflitute the grand foundation of our holy faith. It may well be the daily joy of our hearts to think how firm that foundation flands, and what various and convincing evidence we'have, that as Christ became incarnate, visited this wretched world, and died for our fins, according to the Scriptures; that as he condeficended to go down into the caverns of the grave, and lie there in the cold and filent tomb, humbled in the duft of death; fo allo, according to the fame Scriptures, he was raifed again on the third day. How thankful ought we to be, that fuch convincing proofs were given of his refurrection, demonstrated by fuch infallible tokens and repeated appearances to all the Apofiles, who had every opportunity which the most forupulous temper could demand of examining at leifure into its certainty ! More than five hundred perfons were witneffes to it at one time; witneffes, who for many years furvived to attest this important fact, and corroborate our faith and hope in God, who quickeneth the dead. As therefore we have thus received, fo let us fland fast in this doctrine; remembering that our falvation dependeth on our fleadfailly and practically retaining it; and that if ever, on any confiderations, we make shipwreck of faith and a good confcience, we have believed in vain, and worfe than in vain.

It is matter of thankful joy, that St. Paul was added to this cloud of witneffes who attefted the refurrection of Jefus ;- that great Apoftle, in whom the grace of God was fo richly magnified; magnified peculiarly in that humility which he here expresses in fo amiable a manner; calling himfelf the least of the Apostles, declaring that he was unworthy the name of an Apolle; and amidst all the labours and glories of this eminent flation in the church, fliil keeping in his eye that madnefs, with which, in the days of his infidelity he had to grievoully offended. And thall not we alfo learn of him to fay, By the grace of God I am what Iam ?-Let us be folicitous that his grace bestowed on us be not in vain; and, ever bearing in mind them any fins of our unconverted state, and our great unworthines fince we have known God and been known of him let us labour in our Lord's fervice with proportionable zeal; and when we have laboured to the utmost, and exerted ourfelves with the greatest fidelity and resolution, let us ascribe it to that divine agency which ftrengthened us for all; and fay again, though fome flould effeem it a difagreeable tautology, Not I, but the grace of God that was with me.

Let us meditate with unutterable joy on the exaltation of our glorified Head,—of our gracious Sovereign, who has conquered death himfelf, and will make all his faithfulfaints partakers of his victory. He has received from his Father glory, honour, and dominion; and he fhall reign till his conqueft be univerfal and complete; fhall reign till death be not only ftripped of its trophies, but rendered fubfervient to his triumphs;—till all his purpofes for his Father's glory and his own be fully accomplifhed.

But O! who can express the joy and glory of that day! when Chrift fhall give up the kingdom to the Father, and prefent unto him all his faithful subjects, transformed into his own image; a beautiful and fplendid church indeed, for ever to be the object of the divine complacence; for ever to dwell in the divine presence, in a flate of the greatest nearnefs to the tri-une God, who shall then be all in all!-Well may the expectation of this illustrious period cheer the Christian under his greatest extremities, and make him of all men the most happy; when otherwise, on account of his fufferings in the fleth, he might feem of all men the most miferable. Well may this his rejoicing in Chrift Jefus, -that facred oath which this perfecuted and diffreffed Apostle with so sublime a spirit here uses, encourage him to go on, though he be daily dying ; though he were to encounter the most favage of mankind, and death itself in its moft

CHAP. XVI.

He exhauted them to relieve the wants of the brethren at Jerufalem; commendeth Timothy; and after friendly admonitions, clofeth his epifile with divers falutations.

[Anno Domini 57.]

NOW 'concerning the collection for the faints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even fo do ye.

2 <sup>b</sup> Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, <sup>c</sup> that there be no gatherings when I come.

most dreadful forms. Well may this knowledge of God, and of his exaited Son, and of his infinite love towards his faithful people, awaken us to righteoufnefs, and deliver us from the bondage of fin.

God Almighty enable us to retain thefe noble principles of doctrine and action, and to guard against thefe evil communications, thefe feeptical and licentious notions, which would corrupt our finits, which would enervate every generous fpark kindled and animated by the Gofpel; and, by bounding our views within the narrow circle of mertal life, degrade us from the anticipations of angelic felicity, to the purfuits of brutal gratifications.

We may learn from this incomparable difcourfe of the Apollie to curb that vain curiofity, which is fo ready in matters of divine revelations to break out into an unbetoming petulance; and where we are fure that God declares the thing, let us leave it to him to overcome every difficulty that may feem to attend the manner in which it hall be effected. Nothing may be more ufeful for the conquering of this weaknefs, than to obferve the operations of God in the works of nature, where he giveth to every feed, whether animal or vegetable, fuch a body as fhall pleafe bim. Each is proper for its fphere, and beautiful in its connection and order, though the degree of their glory be different; yea, and thus all the diversity of glory, which fhall at haft be apparent among the children of God, —even the children of the refurrection, fhall ferve to illustrate the divine wifdom, and goodnefs, and faithfulnefs.

The alterations and procefs made in every inftance will indeed be wonderful, when this mortal puts on immortality, and this corruptible puts on incorruption ! O, let us for ever adore the divine goodnefs, that, when by our relation to the first Adam, we were under a fentence of condemnation and death, he was pleafed, in his infinite mercy, to appoint that we should stand related to Christ, as the fecond Adam, in so happy a bond, that by him we may, if taithful unto death, recover what we have loss in the former; yea, and far more; so that, as we have borne the image of the tartibly, we may also bear the image of the beavenly. May we all earness the image of his holines, and remember that our bearing the image of his holines is infeparably connected with the hope of so glorious a privilege !

Let us therefore endeavour, by cultivating holinefs in all its branches, to maintain this hope in all its fpirit and energy; longing for that glorious day, when, in the utmost ftrength of the prophetic expression, Death shall be froallowed up in vicilary; and mittions of voices, after the long filence of the grave, shall burst out at once into that triumphant fong, O death! where is thy fing? -O grave! where is thy vicilary? And when we see death difarmed, and the terrors of the law filenced, let us bless God for Jesus Christ, by whom the precepts of the law were perfectly fulfished, and its penalty endured, that so we might not only be delivered from the curse, but called to inherit the blessing. Let it be confidered as an engagement to universal obedience; and, in the assure that whatever other labours may be frustrated, these in the Lord shall never be vain, let gratitude and interest concur to render us steadfast, immovable, and continually active in his fervice.

REFLECTIONS.—1st, The refurrection of the dead being a chief article of the Christian faith, the Apostle, in this chapter, afferts and establishes the doctrine, in opposition to tome false teachers who had attempted to undermine and overturn this glorious truth, 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18.

1. He reminds the Corinthians of that golpel which he had formerly preached unto them, which they had received from his lips, and in the faith of which they had hitherto in general perfevered. By which alfo, he adds, ye are faved, if ye keep in memory, or hold faft, what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all, or among the most capital points of the Christian faith, and as the foundation on which all our hopes in time and eternity are built, that which I also received by imme-diate revelation, how that Chriff died for our fins according to the Scriptures, which had foretold his fubilitution and fufferings in the finner's flead; and that he was buried; having truly talled of death, he was laid in the grave; and that he role again the third day according to the Scriptures; being delivered for our officices, he was raifed again for our jultification ; and in his refurrection we have an earnest of our own. And of the fact of his being rifen we have the most authentic evidence, as I have told you that he was feen of Cephas, then of the twelve, which name they bore, though their original number, by the apoftacy of Judas and the absence of Thomas, was not complete. After that, he was feen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this prefent, but fome are fallen affeep in Jelus. After that he was feen of James, the brother or near kinfman of the Lord; then of all the Apoflies; all of 002 whom whom were ready to feal their testimony with their blood; men, who could not be deceived themselves, nor could be under the least temptation of deceiving others, when they expected nothing but fuffering and death in every tremendous shape for their fidelity. And last of all, he was feen of me alfo, that I might be an eye-witness of his refurrection, when called in fo miraculous a way to the office and honour of an Apostle. Hereupon,

2. He makes a beautiful digression, with the deepest humility acknowledging his own unworthinefs, and Chrift's rich grace in calling and qualifying him for the work of the apostleship. He was seen of me, as of one born out of due time; defpicable as an abortive foctus, and brought forth with violent pangs : for I am the leaft of the Apoflles, utterly unworthy of the high honour, and last called to it; that am not meet to be called an Apostle, but deferved to have an eternal brand of infamy stamped upon me, because I perfecuted the church of God. But by the grace of God, his amazingly rich and unmerited grace, a happy alteration is wrought in me, and I am what I am, have obtained mercy, and have been called not only to the faith of the Gospel, but to the dignity of an Apostle; and his grace which was bestowed upon me, was not in vain, but wrought effectually; to that under the influence of it I laboured more abundantly than they all, undergoing greater hardfhips, exposed to greater dangers, and with the most unwearied diligence spreading the Gospel through the world. Yet not I, though constrained to vindicate my character, I impute nothing to myself, but to the grace of God which was with me, enabling me for his work, and crowning it with fuccefs. Therefore, whether it were I or they, fo we preach, and fo ye believed : all of us bore the fame testimony to a crucified and rifen Redeemer, and you profeffed to make him your whole dependance for pardon, grace, life, and falvation. Note; (1.) A gracious man remembers with deep humility those fad days when he lived in rebellion against God. (2.) Whatever we are or do, to the grace of God alone we are indebted for it, and he must have the glory. (3.) All true ministers of Jesus bring one message, determined to know nothing but Chrift, and him crucified.

2 2dly, Having proved the certainty of Christ's refurrection, he proceeds to show the certainty of ours; refuting the opinion of those heretical teachers, who suggested that it was impossible, or that Christ did not rife in a public capacity, as the head and first-fruits of his faithful faints. Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how fay fome among you that there is no refurrection of the dead? From which, if it were true, the following absurdities would necessarily follow:

1. If there be no refurrection of the dead, then is Chrift not rifen, notwithftanding all the propheties, and the undoubted testimony of fo many unexceptionable witness.

2. If Chrift be not rifen, then is our preaching vain, ufelefs, and unprofitable, the refurrection of Jefus being the grand truth on which the whole Gospel depends; and your faith is alfo vain; the doctrine on which it is built would have no folid foundation, and the hopes which you thence derive must difappoint and deceive you. Yea, and, on this fuppofition, we are found fulfe witneffes of God, and mult have made use of his facred name to fupport a most impious falsehood; because we have testified of God, professing to act by his authority, and under his commission, that he raifed up Christ to a glorious and immortal life, in token of the acceptance of his undertaking as the reward of his fufferings, and as he is the head of his faithful faints, who should follow him into his kingdom : whom he raifed not up, if fo be that the dead rife not : for it is evident, if the dead rife not, then is not Christ, who was once numbered among the dead, raifed : and if Chrift be not raifed, your faith is vain, and all the hopes arifing from him are delutive : ye are yet in your fins, under the guilt and condemnation of them: for as there is no atonement for fin, but that which he offered, and on his refurrection the acceptance of his facrifice depended, if he had continued in the grave, and feen corruption, we must have funk into despair, and concluded his oblation unfatisfactory; nor could we have expected, that he who remained himfelf the prifoner of death, fhould ever be able to deliver us from the power of it.

3. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished, this being the neceffary confequence of the above horrid fupposition; for if Christ be not risen, their hope in him is vain; and then, though they died martyrs for his cause, they have departed with a lie in their right hand, and are lost for ever; than which thought nothing can be more shocking or discouraging to surviving Christians.

4. If this were the cafe, that in this life only we have hope in Chrift, and after death have nothing to look for, we, who are Chriftians by profetilion, and effectially the minifters of Chrift, who fland most exposed to perfecution and all kinds of fuffering for his fake, are of all men most miferable; foregoing all the comforts and advantages of this life, and wading through a fea of difficulties and trials: and how abfurd would this be, if after death we had no refpect to the recompence of reward, and expected not a joyful refurrection! and who would ever feek to be crucified unto the world, and the world unto him, if he looked no farther than the grave, and hoped for nothing in eternity.

3dly, The certainty of Christ's refurrection being proved, and the glaring abfurdities demonstrated which must follow from a contrary supposition, the Apostle passes on to the effects of Christ's refurrection, as ensuring the refurrection of all the descendants of Adam, and especially the refurrection to glory of all the faithful faints of God.

1. Because Christ is risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept and shall sleep in him. He is the first-begotten from the dead, and the first-born of many brethren, thren,-all the perfevering faints, whom he will bring unto glory; and his refurrection is the pledge and carneft that all his faithful people thall live with him for ever. God, in railing him up, has given his faints, who perfevere in the love of him, the affurance, that they shall be bleffed and gathered in with him in their feafon : for fince, or because, by man came death, which followed on the first fin, by man came alfo the refurrection of the dead, by the fecond man, the Lord from heaven. For as in Adam, our common parent, all die, involved in his guilt, and exposed to death, temporal, spiritual, and eternal; fo in Christ shall all mankind be made alive ; and especially all his faithful faints, who, by virtue of their union with him, shall be raifed to a life of eternal glory. But every man in his own order, (EM2505) Chrift first, and then his faints, shall each in their time, rank, and order, rife into glory-Christ, the first-fruits, who confectates the harvest, and is the pledge of our refurrection; afterward they that are Christ's, at his coming, even all his faithful people.

2. The Apoftle proves that we must rife, because death is among those enemies which the exalted Mediator shall deftroy. Then cometh the end of the world, and of all the forrows of the faithful, when, having gathered in all his perfevering faints, he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, that mediatorial kingdom, the peculiar administration of which has been entrusted to him as the Son of man : when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power; abolishing every form of civil and ecclefiaftical government, and fubduing every enemy, human or diabolical, that tyrannized over his people; for he must reign, as Mediator, till be hath put all enemies under his fect. The last enemy that shall be destroyed, is death, when the dead bodies of his faithful people shall be raised to immortal life, no more to fee corruption. For he, even God the Father, hath put all things under kis feet, and appointed him to be Head over all things to his church. But when he fulk all things are put under him, it is manifest that this refers only to all created beings, and that he is excepted which did put all things under him; for God himfelf can be fubject to none. And when all things shall be fubdued unto him, and the ends of his Mediatorial kingdom answered in the complete falvation of all his faithful faints, both in body and foul, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that fut all things under him; he will then refign the peculiar government committed to him, furrendering himfelf as the Head of his church, and the members of his body myftical, into his Father's hands, to receive those eternal rewards which are due to him in virtue of his great atoncment; that God may be all in all; and henceforth the delegated power and authority of Jefus, as Mediator, shall cease, and the one glorious God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, shall be the immediate fountain of dominion and bleffednefs to the church triumphant for ever.

3. He argues the certainty of the refurrection from the very baptilm of Christians. Elfe what fhall they do which are bapiized? If there be no refurrection, how abfurd and strange would it be to take up the Christian profession, when, if they had nothing in profpect after death, and here stood exposed to every milery, and the danger of daily martyrdom, they would feem merely baptized for the dead, and be of all men molt miferable if the dead rife not at all. Why are they then baptized for the dead ? Who with fuch a prospect would ever be prevailed on to embrace Chriftianity ? And why fland we in jeopardy every hour, and ready to feal our tellimony with our blood, if we had not the glorious hope of a better refurrection? I proteft by your rejoicing which I have in Chrift Jefus, by all the comforts of Christianity, and as furely as that Spirit lives who is the author of them, I die daily, living continually in the nearest views and expectations of martyrdom. If after the manner of men I have fought with beafls at Ephefus, encountering men brutifh and favage in their tempers, and have expoled myfelf to conflicts as dangerous as those which the condemned criminals fuftain when obliged to encounter wild beafts in the public amphitheatres, what advantageth it me, what benefit could I reap from fuch perilous adventures, or what could ever induce me thus to hazard my life, if the dead rife not? Surely if this were the cafe, that nothing was to be hoped for after the grave, it would be our wifdom rather to adopt the principles of Epicurus, than of Christianity, and to fay, Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die, and rather enjoy prefent pleafure, than fuffer needlefs pain, if there were no hereafter, and death put an end to us for ever. Note; (1.) Nothing but the profpects of eternity can possibly engage any to the practice of Christianity. Till we have realizing views by faith of the things not feen, it is impossible that we should take up the cross of Christ. (2.) One great support in fuffering is a respect to the recompence of the reward.

4. The Apolle closes this part of his discourse with a folemn caution. Be not deceived by those false teachers who endeavour to fap the foundation of your hopes: Evil communications corrupt good manners; the bad principles of these seducers could not but produce immoral practice; and to be connected and intimate with fuch men was dangeroufly infectious. Note; Bad company (hould be flunned as the plague. Awake then to rightcoufnefs ; be on your guard, and fee that ye walk as he on syour holy profeffion : for I perceive by thefe dangerous doctrines which have been introduced among you, that fome of you have not the knowledge of God, and of his mind and will, as revealed in his Gofpel. I fpeak this to your fhame, that men of fuch bad principles and corrupt conversation should be among you, permitted as teachers, or fuffered to communicate with the church as members. Note; We are blamcable not only for the evils that we commit ourfelves, but those which we connive at in others.

4thly, Two plaufible objections against the refurrection are here suggested. (1.) How are the dead raifed up? what power is fufficient for fuch a work, to recover the feattered atoms? and (2.) With what body do they come? with the fame identical particles, or in fome other thape and form? In answer to the objector, the Apostle replies, Thou f.ol. Probably the perfons who opposed the doctrine of the refurrection pretended to high attainments in fcience, and to reafon as philosophers; but they proved their ignorance, rather than their wildom, and erred, not knowing the feriptures, or the power of God.

1. That which they forceft is not quickened, except it die. The fame Power, therefore, that every year railes, from under the clod where the feed was fown and corrupted, a plenteous harvefl, can raife from the grave the body which has returned to its dust again; and it would be as abfurd to object against the possibility of the one as the other.

2. As to the manner of the refurrection, and with what body we fhall come from the grave, to continue the fimilitude, I answer, That which thou forwest, thou forwest not that body that ficall be, but bare grain, without any of that rich clothing which afterwards it produces, the blade, the ear, and then the full corn in the ear; it may chance of wheat, or of fome other grain, which dies and revives again : but God giveth it a body as it hath pleafed him, and to every feed his own body; fo ordering it, in infinite wildom, that every feed produces its own species. In quality, indeed, the refurrection body will differ from the prefent, though in identity of perfon the fame. Nor is this ftrange, when we fee out of the fame materials, that bodies of very different qualities are formed. All flefb is not the fame flefb: but there is one kind of flefb of men, another flefb of beafs, another of fiftes, and another of birds; the fubitance is originally the fame, though, by divine power, wonderfully diversified in quality. There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial; but, though all formed of the first created matter, they greatly differ in excellence; the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another : fuch difference will there be between the present and the refurrection body, as between a clod and a ftar. There is one glory of the fun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the flars; for one flar differeth from another flar in glory, is of greater magnitude, and thines with greater fplendor; fo alfo is the refurrection of the dead. Such will be the difference between the faints in glory, according to their excellencies. We are raifed by the fame divine power which makes the corn vegetate; and that almighty hand which modifies the fame matter in the different bodies around us, can make the like glorious difference between our prefent and our refurrection body, though the manner how, may be to us inconceivable. It is fown in corruption, from the day of its generation till it is putrified in the dust ; it is raised in incorruption, incapable of putrefaction or diffolution. It is forwn in diffeonour; in life full of defilement, covered with shame; in death loathfome and most contemptible; it is raifed in glory, like unto Christ's glorious body, flining as the ftors for ever and ever. It is frwn in weakneft, is at prefent liable to a thoufand infirmities, pain, wearinefs, ficknefs, accidents, and death; and in the grave must be a proy for worms; it is raifed in porver, vigorous and active, fit to join the immortal foul, and, without wearinefs, and without cealing, to ferve God in his temple for ever. It is foun a natural body, which needs the conflant fupport of meat and drink, and fleep, like the beaits that perifh : it is raifed a fpiritual body, requiring none of these animal refreshments. There is a natural body, fuch as we now poficls; and there is a fpiritual body, fuited to the celeffial world which is the inheritance of the faints. And fo it is written, The first man Adam, from whom we derive our prefent body, was made a living foul, was endued with animal life, and required all those fupports which we do : the last Adam, the Lord Jofus, was made a quickening Spirit, possessing life in himself, and the fountain of it to believers, having, fince his refurrection, a fpiritual body: and by virtue of his power, and the union of his faithful faints to him, he fhall fathion their bodies like his own. Howbeit, that was not first which is fpiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is fpiritual: Adam's animal body was first, Christ's spiritual body afterwards; and fuch is the order alfo established for the faithful, first to bear the natural, then to receive the fpiritual body. The first man was of the earth, formed from the clay; and by his fin he became earthy, returning to the dust whence he came. The fecond man is the Lord from heaven, coming thence to take our nature upon him; and is now returned thither with his human nature glorified; and his faithful people may expect him to come from thence to make them like himfelf. As is the earthy, fuch are they alfo that are earthy; as Adam's body was, fo mult our's be, who fprung from him, mortal and corruptible; and as is the heavenly, fuch are they also that are heavenly; as many as are born from above, and made partakers of a divine nature, and are faithful unto death, shall be conformed in their bodies to their Lord, and fhall fhortly be glorified together. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, by nature the children of corruption, fprung from a fallen parent, and like him must return to dust, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly; as many as are by faith perfeveringly united to Jefus, and renewed in the fpirit of their minds, fhall bear fhortly his bright image in their bodies, as well as fouls, for ever.

5thly, The Apoftle,

1. Gives the reason of the change which he had defcribed. Now this I fay, brethren, that flefb and blood, fuch as our bodies are at prefent, cannot inherit the kingdom of God; they are unable to bear the eternal weight of glory, and incapable of tafting the delights, or being employed in the fervices, of that bleft world to which the faithful are going. Neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. The body must be refined from its corruptible drois before it can enter upon or enjoy the incorruptible inheritance.

Be-2. He informs them of a fecret unknown to them. hold, 11 "Let no man therefore despise him: but come unto me: for I look for him with the conduct him forth in peace, that he may brethren.

" Tit. 2. 15. 1 Tim. 4. 12.

kild, I fhew you a mystery: we fkall not all steep in the duft, but we fhall all be changed; on as many of the faints as fhall be found alive at Chrift's appearing, a change will pals equivalent to death and refurrection, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, when the voice of Jefus fhall awaken the dead. For the trumpet shall found, and the dead shall be raifed incorruptible, and we shall be changed, the bodies of the faithful undergoing a happy alteration in their qualities, though preferving their identity; for this corruptible muss put on incorruption, and this matal muss that celefial happines which Jefus has purchased and provided for all those who shall have followed him faithfully through the regeneration.

3. When this awful feafon comes, then fhall death be for ever abolished. So when this corruptible shall have put an incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the faying that is written, If. xxv. 8. Death is swallowed up in victory. And that king of terrors shall be fo utterly destroyed, that he shall never more be able to lift his arm against one of the gloristic faints; and, in the prospect of this happy day, the faithful foul can even now, in faith and hope, antedate her eternal triumphs, and, exulting, cry, O death, where is thy sting? I defy it. O grave, where is thy victory? I rife immortal, and tread the beneath my feet for ever.

4. The ground of the believer's triumph is here declared. The fling of death is fin ; this arms the monfter with all his terrors; and the firength of fin is the law, binding over the transgreffor to a future judgment; and not merely denouncing bodily death as the wages of fin, but palling fentence of eternal death, and configning body and foul to hell. But thanks be to God which give th us the victory through our Lord Jefus Chrift. In his adored name we lift up our banners; in his righteousness we make our boaft, fince he has died in our stead, he has led captivity captive; though the faithful fee corruption in the grave, death cannot hold dominion over them; they shall rife glorious and immortal; and, through their great Redeemer's power and grace, come and reign with him in flory everlassing. Note ; (1.) Death is no longer dreadful, when the fling of fin, through the atoning Blood, is taken out of the confcience. The faithful shall find, by the way of the grave, the golden gates of life and immortality, which open into the paradife of God. (2.) That which will be the subject of the everlassing praises of the righteous, fould now be the matter of their fongs.

5. He clofes the whole with a warm exhortation, arifing from the foregoing difcourfe. Therefore, my beloved brethren, by pfleadfaff, firm, and unwavering in the faith and hope of the golpel, efpecially in the great doctrines of the atoning death and refurrection of Jefus, with the bleffed effects thence flowing, of the immortal life and glory of all the faithful; unnoveable by any of the artifices of Satan, or the etalt of feducers; founded on the rock which ftorms alul in vain; always abounding in the work of the Lord, zealoufly and abidingly engaged in his fervice, cheerful, and willing to undergo any fufferings, in fpite of every opposition, increasing with the increase of God; knowing, as the most affured truth, that your labour shall not be in vain in the Lord, but that, perfeveringly cleaving to him in faith, he will strengthen, uphold, and own you in life and in death, and, after death, raife up your bodies to immortal life, and beftow the never-fading crown of righteoufnefs and glory upon you, the reward, not, indeed, of debt, but of grace. Note; (1.) Our practice will keep pace always with the ftrength of our faith; and the more realizing our views of eternal things are, the more vigoroufly fhall we prefs towards the mark for the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus. (2.) It is the strongest encouragement to labour for the Lord, that the faithful foul is fure to fucceed in his fervice. (3.) Whatever we do or fuffer for Christ, we shall never regret in the day of the refurrection, and shall only then be assumed that we have loved him no more, and ferved him no better.

C H A P. XVI.

DEFORE the Apoftle concluded his letter to the Corinthians, he gave them directions for making the collection for the faints in Judea. During his eighteen months abode at Corinth, he had exhorted the brethren to undertake that good work, (as indeed he did the brethren in all the Gentile churches) with a view to eftablish a cordial union between the converted Jews and Gentiles every where. And fo defirous were the Corinthians of the proposed union, that, on the first mention of the collection, they agreed to make it. But the divisions in the church at Corinth, it feems, had hitherto hindered them from beginning it. The Apostle, therefore, in this letter, requested them to fet about it immediately; and he directed them how to do it, ver. t-4.

At the time that St. Paul wrote this epiftle to the Corinthians, he had altered his refolution refpecting his voyage to Corinth, of which he had formerly given them notice by Timothy and Eraftus, as mentioned 2 Cor. i. 15, 16. For he now informed them, that, inftead of failing directly from Ephefus to Corinth, as he had at first propofed, his intention was, not to come to them immediately, but to take Macedonia in his way, ver. 5 .- after flaying at Ephelus till Pentecoft, on account of the extraordinary fuccefs with which he was preaching the gofpel to the inhabitants of the provinces of Afia, who reforted to him in that metropolis, ver. 8, 9.-In the mean time, to compenfate the lofs which the Corinthians fultained by his delaying to visit them, he wrote to them this letter, in which he gave them the inftructions which he would have delivered to them if he had come to them, and promifed when he came to abide a confiderable time, and, perhaps, to winter with them, ver. 5, 6. - And becaufe he had, fome time before, appointed that Timothy should visit Corinth, he begged the Corinthians to give him a good reception, if he came to them, ver. 10, 11.-With respect to Apollos, los, whom it feems the Corinthians withed to fee, he told them, he had intreated him to go to them with the brethren; but that, having no inclination to go to Corinth at that time, he had deferred his vifit till he fhould find a convenient featon. Perhaps the infolent behaviour of the faction while Apollos was among them, had fo difgufted him, that he did not choose to expose himself a second time to their attempts .- I'o this apology for Apollos the Apoftle fubjoined a few practical advices. Then he shewed a particular regard to the members of the family of Stephanas, becaufe they were the first fruit of Achaia, and had employed themfelves zealoufly in the ministry for the faints, ver. 13-18.

The Apofile, before he finished his letter, fent to the Corinthians the falutations of the churches of the proconfular Afia, and of the brethren at Ephefus, who affifted him in preaching the golpel, ver. 19, 20.-Then wrote his particular falutation to them with his own hand, ver. 21. -And to fhew his fincerity in the curfe that he was going to pronounce on hypocritical professors of religion, he, in the fame hand-writing, added, If any man love not the Lord Jefus Christ, let him be Anathema, Maran-atha, ver. 22.- Laftly, to comfort the fincere part of the church, he gave them, in particular, his apoltolical benediction, together with his own love, ver. 23, 24.

Ver. 2. Upon the first day of the week] Beza observes here, that Basil joined these words, upon the first day of the week, to the preceding claufe, which he reads thus : Now, roncerning the collection for the faints, &c. even fo do ye upon the first day of the week. According to this reading, the following words will express, not what he advises to be done on that day, but previously the week before, in order to prepare for the collections which were to be made, at their usual meetings for public worthip, on the first day of every week. The argument thence drawn for the religious observation of the first day of the week, in these primitive churches of Corinth and Galatia, is too obvious to need any illustration, and yet too important to be paffed by in an entire filence. The word Insade Car fignifies, properly, " putting into the common treasury ;" treafuring it up in the common flock; for it is certain, the Apoltle directs that they should, every Lord's day, bring to the congregation what their charity had laid afide the foregoing week, as their gain came in ; that there it might be put into fome public box, appointed for that purpofe, or into the officers' hands. For if they only laid it alide at home, there would, neverthelefs, be need of a collection when he came. See Luke, xxiv. 1. John, xx. 1. Matth. xxviii. 1.

Ver. 2. And when I come, &c.] When I come, whomfoever you shall approve, them will I fend with letters, to carry your liberality, &c. Locke. The Apostle's fense justifies the prefent manner of reading; he telling them here that. finding their collection ready when he came, he would write by those whom they should think fit to employ in fending it, or go himfelf with them, if it flould be thought convenient.

Ver. 4. And if ] But if.

Ver. 5. For I do pass through Macedonia.] For I am just upon my journey through Macedonia. Macedonia was not the direct way from Ephefus to Corinth.

Ver. 8. But I will tarry at Ephefus, &c.] This is a plain intimation that St. Paul was now at Ephefus, and, confequently, that the infeription added at the end of the epistle, which tells us it was written from Philippi, is very far from being authentic. It should be remembered, that no credit is to be given to any of these additions, which have been very prefumptuoufly made, and very imprudently retained.

Ver. 9. For a great door and efficilual, &c. ] Some think that here is an allufion to the door of the circus, whence chariots were let out when the races were to begin: and that the word 'Avianti peros, fignifies the fame as antagonifis, with whom the Apofile was to contend, as in a courfe, Acts, xix. 20, &c. This opposition rendered his prefence more necessary to preferve those who were already converted, and to increase the number, if God should blefs his ministry.

Ver. 11. But conduct him forth, &c.] But bring him on his journey, &c. The original words of the last clause are fomething ambiguous; but the most natural fense appears to be, "For I expect him here with the other brethren, " who are now the companions of his journey." Accordingly it feems probable that Timothy came to Ephefus before St. Paul was driven out of it by the tumult; and that the Apostle, being obliged to leave that city in fo abrupt a manner, defired Timothy to ftay a while after him, to fettle the affairs of that important church more completely than he had an opportunity of doing. See 1 Tim. i. 3.

Ver. 12. Our brother] There are few, perhaps, who need be told, yet it may be convenient, once for all, to remark, that, in the Apostle's time, brother was the ordinary appellation which Christians used one to another. The brethren here mentioned feem to be Stephanas and those others who came with a meffage, or letter, to St. Paul from the church of Corinth, by whom he returned this epiftle in answer. See Acts, xi. 26.

Ver. 13. Stand fast, &c.] There is no need of seeking a different sense of each word in this verse. If there be any difference, ż difference, the word ardei Zerde may refer to a ftrength of resolution; and the word upalaisofs to that cheerful and courageous expectation of a happy event, which the confciousness of so good a cause would naturally administer. The meaning of the next verse is, "Let all " your affairs be transacted in love, and under the influence " of that noble principle of unfeigned benevolence which " I have fo largely defcribed," ch. xiii. ; the Apoftle's main defign being to put an end to the faction and division which the false apostle had made among them, it is no wonder that we find unity and love fo much and fo often preffed in this and the fecond epiftle.

Ver. 15, 16. I befeech you, brethren, &c.] Dr. Heylin readers these veries thus : Ye know that the family of Stephanatis, &c.- I befeech you then, my brethren, ver. 16. that you my all deference to them, and all others who like them affift us in our labours. Dr. Doddridge reads, I befeech you, brethren, as ye know the household of Stephanas, that it is the firstfruits of Achaia, and as they have fet themfelves to ministring with faints, ver. 16. that you fubject your felves to fuch, and to wery affociate in that work and labour. The 15th verle feems to imply, that it was the generous care of the whole family to allift their fellow-christians; fo that there was not a member of it which did not do its part.

Ver. 17. Fortunatus,] This worthy man furvived St. Paul a confiderable time: for it appears from the epiftle of Clement to the Corinthians, fect. 59. that he was the meffenger of the church at Corinth to that of Rome, by whom Clement fent back that invaluable epistle. See Archbp. Wake's epiftles of the apostolical fathers.

Ver. 18. For they have refreshed my spirit, &c.] By removing those fuspicions and fears which were on both fides.

Ver. 19. Aquila and Priscilla falute you much, &c.] They had formerly made fome abode at Corinth, and there St. Paul's acquaintance with them commenced, Acts, xviii. 1,2. It is no wonder, therefore, that they were particuar in their falutations.

Pol. II.

Ver. 22. Anathema, Maran-atha.] When the Jews loft the power of life and death, they uled, nevertheles, to pronounce an anathema on perfons who should have been executed according to the Mofaic law; and fuch a perfon became an anathema, or cheren, or accursed, -for the expreffions are equivalent. They had a full perfusion that the curfe would not be in vain; and, indeed, it appears they expected that fome judgment, corresponding to that which the law pronounced, would befal the offender. Now, to express their faith that God would, one way or another, and probably in fome remarkable way, interpose, to add that efficacy to their fentence which they could not give it, it is most likely they used the Syriac words Maran-atha ; that is, "The Lord cometh;" or, "He will furely and quickly " come, to put this fentence in execution, and to thew " that the perfon on whom it falls is indeed anathema,accurfed : in allufion to this, when the Apoftle was fpeaking of a fecret alienation from Chrift, maintained under the forms of Christianity, (which, perhaps, might be the cafe among many of the Corinthians, and much more probably may be fo among us,) as this was not a crime capable of being convicted and cenfured in the Christian church, he reminds them that the Lord Jefus Chrift will come at length, and find it out, and punish it in a proper manner. The Apostle chose to write with his own hand this weighty fentence, and infert it between his general falutation and benediction, that it might be the more attentively regarded. See John, ix. 22. and Bishop Patrick on Deut. xxvii. 15.

Ver. 24. My love be with yon all, &c.] When we confider what an alienation of affection fome of these Corinthians had expressed with respect to our Apostle, this declaration of tender regard to them all, without any exception, is fo much the more affectionate, and fully difplays the benevolent disposition of his mind .- With respect to the fubfeription of this epiltle, fee on ver. 8.

Inferences. -- The example of St. Paul before us (hould teach minifters to be ready to promote charitable collections for the relief of poor Chriftians. They (hould frequently exhort their hearers to do good and to communicate, reminding them that their contributions ought to bear a proportion to the degree in which God has been pleafed to profper them. We fee an evident reference to the flated affemblies of the church on the first day of the week in this early age; and it is a proper duty of that day, to devife and execute liberal things according to our refpective abilities.

The prudent caution of St. Paul, as to the management of pecuniary affairs, is worthy the attention of the miniflers of the Gofpel; and may teach them to take care, not only that they fatisfy their own conficiences in the fidelity of their transactions, but alfo that they provide things honefs in the fight of all men. The Apofile's courage, in making the oppofition that he met with at Corinth a reafon for his promifing a longer vifit there, may inftruct us not to fludy our own eafe in the choice of our abode; but rather to prefer those circumftances, however difagreeable in themfelves, wherein we may be providentially led to do most for the advancement of religion in the world.

His care that his young friend Timothy might be as eafy as possible, constitutes likewise a very amiable part of his character, and fuggefts in a manner well worthy of notice, how careful private Christians should be, that they do not terrify and diffress the minds of those who are entering on the ministerial office. A faithful disposition to labour in the work of the Lord, ought to command respect: yet fometimes, as in the inftance of Apollos, even that diligence may be fo liable to mifreprefentation, that it may be the wildom of ministers to absent themselves from places, where they have many to carefs and admire them. On the whole, the great bufine is of life is, to glorify God in doing our best for promoting the happiness of mankind; and no felf-denial ought to feem hard to us, while we keep that glorious end in view. However the particular trials of Christians may vary in different ages, the fame works in general demand their diligence; the fame enemies their watchfulnefs; the fame difficulties their courage and fortitude; nor will they ever perform, resist, and endure well, but when love reigns in their hearts, and prefides over the whole of their behaviour.

We owe our fincere thanks to the Author of all good, when he raifes up the fpirits of his fervants to any diftinguifhed activity and zeal in his caufe. Chriftians, of ftanding fuperior to their brethren, ought to emulate fuch a character; and when they do fo with genuine marks of becoming modefty, and upright views, all proper refpect fhould be paid to them: efpecially to thofe who are honoured with, and labour faithfully in, the ministerial office. To fuch, let others fubmit themfelves in love; not, indeed, as to the lords of their faith, which even the Apoftles pretended not to be; but as friends whom they effect and reverence, ever tenderly folicitous to fecure their comfort, and increafe their ulefulnefs.

We fee how much the Apostle was concerned to promote mutual friendship among the disciples of our bleffed Lord; how kindly he delivers the falutations of one and another. It becomes us to remember each other with cordial regard; and in imitation of this wife example, to do all that we can to cultivate a good understanding among our Christian brethren; and to abhor that disposition to fow difcord, which has been fo fatally fuccefsful in producing envyings, and ftrife, and every ill work.

To conclude all; let us lay up in our memory, and often review this awful fentence, this anathema, maran-atha, which. to give it the greater weight, the Apoftle records with his orun hand : be it ever remembered, that profeffing Chriftians, who do not funcerely love their Mafter, lie under the heavieft curfe which an Apoftle can pronounce. May fuch unhappy perfons take the alarm, and labour to obtain a more ingenuous and devout temper and ipirit, ere the Lord. whom they neglect, and against whom they entertain a fecret enmity, defcend from heaven with insupportable terror, and pronounce the anathema with his own lips, in circumstances which shall for ever cut off all hope, and all poffibility of its being reverfed. If his folemn voice pronounce, his almighty hand will immediately execute it: how will they be caft down to destruction, as in a moment ! How will they be utterly confumed with terrors! To prevent fo dreadful an end of our high profession, of our exalted hopes, may the grace of our Lord Jefus Chrift be with us! Amen.

REFLECTIONS.—Ift, The church at Jerufalem having undergone peculiar opprefions and fufferings, and many of the faints being reduced to great poverty, the Gentile brethren, at the Apofile's infligation, generoufly contributed for their relief.

Now concerning the collection for the faints in Judea, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even to do ye. Since in wealth the Corinthians exceeded the Galatians, and in fpiritual gifts were fo eminent, it would be a shame if they came behind in benevolence and charity. Upon the first day of the week, the day held facred among Christians, and hallowed by their folemn affemblies, let every one of you lay by him in flore, contributing to the collection for the poor, as God hath prospered him, each according to their ability; the rich more abundantly; and they who have little, cheerfully giving a portion out of that little, that there be no gatherings when I come. And, being thus in readinefs, when I come, whomfoever ye shall approve by your letters, and recommend as faithful men, them will I fend to bring your liberality unto Jerufalem, concurring in your recommendation. And if it be meet, and judged neceffary for this benevolent defign, that I go alfo, they fhall go with me. Note; (1.) Every Christian is bound, according to his abilities, to minister to the necessities of his brethren. (2.) All our fucces comes from God's gracious providence, and is gratefully to be acknowledged. (3.) The more we receive from God, the more are we called, as good flewards, to improve it for his glory, and the advantage of our brethren.

2dly, The Apostle, in his own mind, had planned a visit to Corinth, of which he informs them, though Providence prevented at this time the execution of his defign.

Now I will come unto you, fuch is my prefent intention, if the Lord pleafe, when I fhall pafs through Macedonia, for I do purpofe foon to pafs through Macedonia. And it may be that I will abide a confiderable time among you, yea, and winter with you, that ye may bring me on my journey whitherfoever I go, returning to your former affection, and teffifying your accultomed refpect for me, notwithstanding thefe prejudices which the falle teachers have laboured to instil. For I will not fee you now by the way, (en  $\pi a \mu \delta a$ ,) to make make a transient visit, which would not answer the end that I purpole, of fettling your affairs, establishing you in the truth, and enjoying your company; but I trust to tarry a while with you, if the Lord permit, at whose disposal I am, and by whole providence I defire ever to be directed. But I will tarry at Ephcfus (whence he feems to have written this Epifile) until Pentecoft, either till that feaft was paft, or till its approach, when he intended to be at Jerufalem, a great concourse of Jews from all parts assembling there at that feason. And the reason for his long flay at Ephefus he gives; for a great door and effectual is opened unto me, a fignal bleffing has attended my labours, and great multituics are by the Spirit converted to the faith of Chrift, and, as might be expected, there are many adversaries, both Jews and Gentiles, who, inftigated by Satan, oppose with all their might and craft the progress of the Gospel, against whem he chose perforally to stand up, and boldly to vindicate the glorious cause. Note; (1.) Wherever Christ is preached fuccefsfully, there the malice and cunning of earth and hell will be exerted, to ftop the rifing interest of truth and godlinefs. (2.) Succefs in our labours is a great argument and encouragement boldly to perfevere. (3.) Faithful ministers, instead of being affrighted or impeded by outward opposition, have their zeal but the more kindled. What weakens their hands and difcourages their hearts, is the unfaithfulnefs of professions, and the infensibility of their hearers.

3dly, The Apostle,

1. Recommends Timothy to them, who was now on his journey to Corinth. If Timotheus come, fee that he may be with you without fear of any infult from any of the factious leaders; regard him with affection, treat him with refpect, and hear him with attention : for he worketh the work of the Lord, as I alfo do, zealous for the caufe of the fame divine Master, and tried and found faithful. Let no man therefore despife him because of his youth, flight his reproofs, or think lightly of his ministry, but conduct him forth in peace ; give him a proof of your affection and efteem, by providing him with neceffaries for his journey, and bringing him on his way, that he may come unto me : for I look for him with the brethren; either I and the brethren here expect him, or I defire his return with the brethren who may accompany him hither. Note; Young ministers should be encouraged, not despised; and their ministrations, though without the fanction of grey hairs, yet, feconded with the weight of zeal and piety, deferve the most ferious attention.

2. He informs them that Apollos declined a vifit to them at prefent, though he had earnefly prefied him thereto. As touching our brother Apollos, I greatly defired him to come unts you with the brethren, but his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he shall have convenient time. Though a party at Corinth had affected to fet up Apollos in preference to Paul, the Apoftle entertained no jcaloufy of his brother-labourer, affured that he never would encourage, but discountenance, such a spirit of division. The faithful ministers of Chrift will not harbour mean diftruffs of each other; no, not though those who love to fow difford among brethren, endeavour to inftil bafe fuspicions. On the other hand, Apollos, probably out of respect to his honoured brother Paul, declined at that time the vifit, left, in the present ill disposition of too many of the Corinthians, it might be abufed by those who wanted to make him the head of a party; though when the prefent feuds were fubfided, he meant to go thither, and labour among them. Such a fpirit of love fhould ministers cultivate, jealous for each other's reputation as their own, and frowning on every flatterer that would attempt to raife their credit at the expence of their brother.

4thly, The Apoftle proceeds,

1. To fome general exhortations. Watch ye against every enemy of your fouls, especially those who would feduce you from the doctrines of truth; fland fast in the faith, grounded and fettled in the hope of the Gofpel, fo as never to be moved from your holy profession; quit you like men, with wifdom, zeal, and fidelity, in the midft of the opposition of enemies, and the fnares of deceivers; be firing in the grace which is in Jefus Chrift, exercifing yourfelves unto godlinefs, and fighting manfully under the Lord's banners against every enemy within and without. And while you thus fliew yourfelves courageous for the truth, let all your things be done in charity, and let a fpirit of mecknefs temper all your zeal. Note; (1.) 'A Chriftian is compafied with enemics; he need be ever on his guard. (2.) While we are firmly established in the principles of the Gofpel, no danger or fufferings will deter us from the path of duty. (3.) Love or charity is the great ornament of our profession; to bear with the perverseness of mistaken friends, and meekly to fustain the attacks of avowed enemies, is to be like our Master.

2. He commends to their particular regard the houfe of Stephanas. I befeech you, brethren, (ye know the houfe of Stephanas, that it is the first-fruits of Achaia, converted by my ministry, and whom I baptized myself, and that they have addicted themselves unto the ministry of the faints, laying themfeives out in the Lord's immediate fervice, and zealously employed in affisting his people to their utmost, both in their temporal and spiritual concerns,) I befeech you, brethren, that ye fubmit your felves unto fuch, directed by them, imitating their examples, and not led away by upstart teachers; and that ye in like manner reverence, regard, and attend to, every one that helpeth with us, and laboureth to promote the intercs of the fame divine Master, and the edification of your souls.

3. He tellifies his fatisfaction in the good account that he had lately heard concerning them. I am glud of the coming of Stephanas, and Fortunatus, and Achaicus; for that which was lacking on your part, they have fupplied; giving the Apoftle a more clear flate of the matter than was conveyed in the letter which they brought, and explaining, much to his fatisfaction, things which reports had greatly exaggerated. Note; It is a great joy to every minitler and Christian's heart to hear unfavourable reports of the brethren contradicted by thofe who are beilt acquainted with their circumflances.

4. He enjoins them to respect those faithful men at their return. For they have respected my spirit by their conversation, and the accounts they have given; and this cannot but afford a like fatisfaction to yours: therefore acknowledge ye them that are such, and shew them that respect and regard which their kind, candid, and charitable construction of your conduct merits at your hands. Note; Good offices done to us demand a grateful return.

5thly, St. Paul clofes his Epiftle,

1. With aff ctionate falutations. All the churches of Afia falute you, cordially withing you every bieffing of the ever-P p 2 lafting lafting Gospel. Aquila and Priscilla falute you much in the Lord, with the church that is in their house, even all the members of that amiable family which compose a little church among themselves; and such a family is happy indeed. All the brethren greet you with warm affection. Greet ye one another with an holy kiss. The falutation of me Paul with mine own hand. And thus he signs what his amanuens had written from his lips, as genuine and authentic.

2. He subjoins a solemn warning. If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, be his eminence of station never so great, his gifts never so extraordinary, his profession never source for glaring, if his heart be unsound, his principles erroneous, and his practice dishonourable to the Gospel, somenting divisions and pussed up with pride, let him be anathema, maran-atha, excommunicated from the body of the faithful, and configned over to that fcarful judgment, which the righteous Lord, in the day of his appearing and glory, will inflict on fuch offenders, unlefs they truly repent. Note: (1.) It is not enough to be Chriftians in word; do we love the Lord Jefus Chrift in fincerity? That is the queftion. (2.) None fink under heavier vengeance than those who have been falle and faithlefs to their holy profession.

3. He concludes with his ufual benediction and prayer. The grace of our Lord Jefus Chrift be with you; and therein is comprehended every bleffing in time and eternity. My love be with you all in Chrift Jefus. Sharply as I have been conftrained to rebuke you, I love you affectionately in him; and every thing that I have faid flows from the most unfeigned defire to promote your prefent and eternal happines. Amen! May this be the happy iffue. Believe my kind intentions and regard; join with me in my prayers, and then the iffue shall be peace.

THE SECOND EPISTLE

OF

PREFACE.

SI. PAUL's general defign in this Epistle was, to lay open to the Corinthians the artifices of falfe teachers, by whom they had fuffered them sclves to be led astray; ch. xi. 13. These were certain Jews, taken from the bosom of the synagogue, and proselyted to Christianity; who, still retaining an inclination toward the Mofaic ordinances, wanted to introduce a part of those obfervances into the Christian religion, and join the righteousness of Christ with justification by works, to form a full and entire justification. Gal. ii. 4. v. 1, Sc. This is what St. Paul calls, in the prefent Epifle, a corruption of the word of God, cb. ii. 17. and he combats it with great force throughout the iiid. chapter, wherein he admirably shews the superiority of the gospel over the law, and the ministry of the new dispensation over that of the old. He nearly pursues the fame fubject in the ivth chapter; and in the vth teaches that Christ has reconciled the world to God by his death, and that he was the facred victim which atoned for all our fins, ver. 18-21. In the vith chapter he fpeaks of the labours of his ministry, testifies his regard for the Corinthians, and exhorts them to avoid any close connections with unbelievers, ver. 14-18. fince it was a fnare that had betrayed them into many faults, of which he had already spoken in his former Epifle, 1 Cor. viii. 10. x. 14, 20. In the viith chapter he touches again on the cafe of the inceftuous perfon who had been excommunicated, (1 Cor. v. 1-5.) of whofe repentance be had heard with great joy. The viiith and ixth regard the general collection making in the churches of Greece for the faithful at Jerufalem ; which not being completed when St Paul wrote this facond Epifile to the Corinthians, it is clear that it was written not long after the first, where he had spoken of the same thing, 1 Cor. xvi. 1. and confequently, before he wrote the Epifile to the Romans, at which time the collections were finished, and he was himself carrying the produce to Jerusalem, Rom. xv. 25, 26. All the rest of the Epistle is employed in exposing the pomp and vanity of falle teachers, and in vindicating his own ministry by a view of the extraordinary fufferings that he had endured, of his zeal for the churches, and of the visions and extafies with which the Lord had honoured him. The necessity of a legitimate defence obliged him thus to speak of himself in terms painful to his modesty and humility, ch xii. 6. but he owed it to bis own bonour, to the edification of the church, and still more to his religion, which these false teachers thought they never could fuccefsfully attack, if they left St. Paul in the full enjoyment of bis bigb reputation.

CHAP. I.

The Apostle encourageth them against troubles, by the comforts and deliverances which God had given him, as in all his afflictions, fo particularly in his late danger in Aha: and calling both his own conscience and their's to witness of his fincere manner of preaching the immutable truth of the goldel, be excufeth his not coming to them, as proceeding not of lightnefs, but of his lenity towards them.

CHAP. I.

AFTER giving the Corinthians his apostolical benediction, St. Paul began this chapter with returning thanks to God, who had comforted him in every affliction, that he might be able to comfort others, with the confolation wherewith he himfelf had been comforted, ver. 3-7. By this thankfgiving the Apostle infinuated, that one of the purposes of his writing the present letter, was to comfort the fincere part of the Corinthian church, and to relieve them from the forrow occasioned to them by the rebukes in his former letter .- Next, to shew the care which God took of him as a faithful Apostle of his Son, he gave the Corinthians an account of a great affliction which had befallen him in Asia, that is, in Ephefus and its neighbourhood, and of a great deliverance from an imminent danger of death, which God had wrought for him ; namely, when he fought with wild beafts at Ephefus, as mentioned in his former epiftle, ch. xv. 32, and had the fentence of death in himfelf to teach him that he should not truft in himfelf, but in God, ver. 8, 9.

When the Apostle sent Timothy and Erastus from Ephefus into Macedonia, as mentioned, Acts, xix. 22. it is probable that he ordered them to go forward to Corinth, (1 Cor. xvi. 10.) provided the accounts which they received in Macedonia gave them reafon to think their prefence in Corinth would be useful; and that he ordered them likewife to inform the Corinthians, that he was coming straightway from Ephefus to Corinth, to remedy the diforders which fome of the family of Chloe told him had taken place among them. But, after Timothy and Eraflus departed, having more than ordinary fuccefs in converting the idolatrous Gentiles in the province of Afia, he put off his voyage to Corinth for fome time, being determined to remain in Ephefus and its neighbourhood till the following Pentecost; after which he purposed to go through Macedonia, in his way to Corinth. This alteration of his intention the Apostle notified to the Corinthians in his first epistle, ch. xvi. 5-8. But the faction having taken occasion therefrom to speak of him as a false, fickle, worldly-minded man, who, in all his actions, was guided unto ' the church of God which is at Corinth. with <sup>4</sup> all the faints which are in all Achaia :

2 'Grace be to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jefus Chrift.

3 ' Bleffed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jefus Chrift, <sup>s</sup> the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort;

4 Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them who are in any trouble by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.

by interested views, he judged it necessary, in this fecond letter, to vindicate himfelf from that calumny, by affuring the Corinthians that he had behaved with the greatest simplicity and sincerity, ver. 12. - and by declaring that what he was about to write on that fubject was the truth; namely, that when he fent them word by Timothy and Erastus, of his intention to set out for Corinth immediately by fea, he really meant to do fo, ver. 13-16.and that the alteration of his refolution did not proceed either from levity or falfehood, ver. 17 .- as they might have known from the uniformity of the doctrine which he preached to them, ver. 18, 19, 20.—whereby, as well as by the earnest of the Spirit put into his heart, God had fully eftablished his authority with the Corinthians. It was therefore abfurd to impute either levity or fallehood to one who was thus publicly and plainly attefted of God to be an Apostle of Christ, by the spiritual gifts and graces which he had conferred upon him, ver. 22, 23.-Lattly, he called God to witnefs that hitherto he had delayed his journey to Corinth expressly for the purpose of giving the faulty among them time to repent, ver. 23 .- and that, in fo doing, he had acted fuitably to his character; because miraculous powers were beftowed on the Apostles, not to enable them to lord it over the perfons and goods of the disciples, by means of their faith, but to make them helpers of their joy, perfuading them both by arguments and chaftifements to live agreeably to their Christian profession, ver. 24.

St. Paul's first epistle produced different effects among the Corinthians: many of them entered into themfelves; they excommunicated the inceftuous man, requeited St. Paul's return with tears, and vindicated him and his office against the false teacher and his adherents. Others of them still adhered to that adversary of St. Paul, expressly denied his apoftolical office, and even furnished themselves with pretended arguments from that epiftle. He had formerly promifed to take a journey from Ephefus to Corinth; thence to vifit the Macedonians; and to return from thence to Corinth : but the unhappy flate of the Corinthian church made him alter his intention, fince he found that he must have treated them with feverity, ch. i. 15-23. by Chrift. 6 * And whether we be afflicted it is for 5 For, 'as the fufferings of Chrift abound your confolation and falvation, which * is efin us, to our confolation also aboundeth fectual in the enduring of the fame sufferings which we also fuffer : or whether we be comforted, it is for your confolation and falvation.

* Ver. 4. Cb. 4. 15, 17, 18. Rom. 8. 18, 28. 2 Tim. 2.

1 Alis. 9. 4. Col. 7. 24. Ch. 4. 9, 10. Sc. 11. 3. Pf. 34. 19, 20. Sc 94. 13, 19. 30-13. & 1. 8. Oris wrought.

Hence his adverfaries partly argued, 1st, That St. Paul was irrefolute and unificady, and therefore could not be a prophet; 2dly, The improbability of his ever coming to Corinth again, fince he was afraid of them. Such was the state of the Corinthian church, when St. Paul, after his departure from Ephefus, having vifited Macedonia, received an account of the above particulars from Titus, ch. vii. 5, 6. and therefore wrote to them his fecond spille about the end of the fame year, or the beginning of 18. The contents of this epiftle are thefe : First, He gives the Corinthians an account of his fufferings to that time, and of the comfort that he derived from meditating on the refurrection, ch. i. 1-11. Secondly, He vindicates himfelf against those who would not confider him as a true Apoftle, becaufe he had altered his refolutions, ch. i. 12.-ii. 4. Thirdly, He forgives the inceftuous man, and tells the Corinthians how much he longed for their amendment, ch. ii. 5. 13. Fourthly, He treats of the office committed to him, of preaching the redemption by Jefus Chrift in all its branches. His adversaries had ridiculed his sufferings: he thews that they are no difgrace to the golpel, or its minifters; and here he gives a short abstract of the doctrine that he preaches, ch. ii. 14. to the end of ch. v. Fifthly, He flews it to be his office, not only to preach the redemption by Chrift, but to inculcate certain duties, and particularly that of flying from idelatry; -an oblique censure of those who attended the idol feafts, ch. vi. Sixthly, He endeavours, once more, to win their confidence, by telling them how affectionately he was disposed towards them, and rejoiced at their amendment, ch. vii. Seventhly, He exhorts them to a liberal collection for the Christians in Judea, ch.viii. toix. 15. Eighthly, He vindicates himfelf against those who thought him deficient in the evidences of his apoftleflip, and imputed his caution when at Corinth to his consciousness of not being a true Apostle, ch. x. to the end of the epifile.

Ver. 1. Timethy our brother,] That is, either in the common faith, (see Rom. i. 13. and 1 Cor. xvi. 13.) or, brother in the work of the miniflry. See Rom. xvi. 21. St. Paul may be supposed to have given Timothy the title of brother here, in this peculiar connection, for dignity's fake, to procure him a reputation above his age among the Corinthians, to whom he had before fent him with fome kind of authority to rectify their diforders. Timothy was but a young man when St. Paul wrote his first epistle to him, as appears 1 Tim. iv. 12. which epiftle, by univerfal confent, was written to Timothy after he had been at Corinth, and, in the opinion of fome very learned men, not lefs than eight years after; and therefore his calling him brother bere, and joining him with himfelf in writing his epiftle, may be to let the Corinthians fee, that, though he who had been fent to them was fo young, yet he was one whom

St. Paul thought fit to treat as an equal. Achaia was the country in which Corinth ftood.

Ver. 3. Bleffed be God] St. Paul begins with justifying his former letter to them which had afflicted them, (fee ch. vii. 7. 8.) by telling them that he thanks God for his deliverance out of his afflictions, because it enables him to comfort them, by the example both of his affliction and deliverance, acknowledging the obligation that he had to them and others, for their prayers, and for their thanks for his deliverance; which he prefumes they could not but put up for him, fince his conscience bears him witness (which was his comfort) that, in his behaviour to all men, and to them more efpecially, he had been direct and fincere, without any felfish or carnal interest; and that what he wrote to them had no other defign than what lay open, and they read in his words, - and did alfo acknowledge, and he doubted not but they would always acknowledge, (part of them doing fo already,) that he was their minister and apostle, in whom they rejoiced; as they would, he trusted, be his rejoicing in the day of the Lord, ver. 3-14. From what St. Paul fays in this paffage,-which, if read attentively, will appear to be written with great addrefs,it may be gathered, that the opposite faction endeavoured to evade the force of the former epiftle, by fuggefting, that whatever he might pretend, St. Paul was a cunning, artificial, felf-interested man, and had some hidden design in: it; which accufation appears in other parts also of this epiftle. It is obfervable, that eleven of St. Paul's thirteenepiftles begin with exclamations of joy, praife, and thankfgiving. As foon as he thought of a christian church planted in one place or another, there feems to have been a flow of most lively affection accompanying the idea, in which all fenfibility of his or their temporal afflictions was fwallowed up, and the fulnefs of his heart must vent itfelf in fuch cheerful, exalted, and devout language.

Ver. 4. Who comforteth us] It is certain that the mention of these experiences must have had a powerful tendency to conciliate the regard of the Corinthians to St. Paul; and fuch an introduction to his epiftle as the whole of this before us, could not but incline them ftrongly in his favour. Some think that the last clause of this verse refers plainly to the comfort which the repentance of the incettuous person gave St. Paul, after the affliction that he had endured on his account. See ch. vii. 7. But it feems more natural to understand it of that general confolation arifing from the pardon of fin and interest in God; that his afflictions should co-operate for his advantage; and that a crown of glory, heightened by these trials, would close the scene. He frequently infifts on these topics in his epiftles; and none furely can be more important and delightful.

Ver. 6. Which is effectual] or effected. Instead of falvation tion, Mr. Locke reads relief; as it fignifies here only (fays he) deliverance from their prefent forrow.

Ver.8. Our trouble—in Afia.] Some have thought that this may refer to the perfecution at Lyftra, where St. Paul's dauger had been extreme, and he had been recovered by miracle, Acts, xiv. 19, 20. But as that happened fo long before the vifit to Corinth, in which he planted the church there, Acts, xviii. 1. it feems more probable that he either refers to fome opposition which he met with in his journey through Galatia and Phrygia, Acts, xviii. 23. of which no particular account has reached us, or, rather, to the tumult raifed against him at Ephefus, by Demetrius, Acts, xix. 29, 30.

Ver. 11. Ye alfo belping together by prayer] " I have " this confidence in God's continual care; and it is " the more cheerful, as I perfuade myfelf you are and will " be affifting us by your prayers, that fo the favour obtained " for us by the importunate prayers of many, may be ac-" knowledged by the thank fgiving of many on our account ;—as " nothing can be more reafonable than that mercies ob-" tained by prayer, fhould be owned in praife."

Ver. 12. In fimplicity] Plain-beartednefs; not only meaning well on the whole, but declining an over-artful way of profecuting a good end. What is meant by flefkly wijdom, may be feen, ch. ii. 5. St. Paul's working with his own hands for his maintenance among the Corinthians, (Acts, xviii. 3. Cor. ix. 15.) which he did not every where, must be a convincing proof of what he obferves in the last clause of this verse.

Ver. 13. What ye read or acknowledge; ] What ye know and acknowledge. Doddridge. Than what, when you read, you acknowledge. Wale's Critic, notes. "I take the fenfe " to be," fays Dr. Heyhn, " that he meant not by his " letters to infinuate any thing more than was plainly ex-" preffed, and appeared at the first view of them agreeable to the declaration that he had made in the verse before."

Ver. 14. Ihat we are your rejoicing,] The Apostle here fignifies that part of them who adhered to and owned him as their teacher; in which fense rejoicing, or glorying, is much used in these epittles to the Corinthians, on occasion of the several partisans boatting, fome that they were of Paul, and others that they were of Apollos, &c.

Ver. 15. And in this confidence I was minded] Or, I purpofed : So ver. 17. The next thing which St. Paul justifies, is his not coming to them. He had promifed to call on the Corinthians in his way to Macedonia, but failed: this his oppofers would have to proceed from levity in him, or a mind regulating itself wholly by carnal interest (ver. 17.). To which he answers, that God himself having confirmed him among them by the unction and earnest of his Spirit, in the ministry of the gospel of his Son,-whom St. Paul had preached to them steadily the same, without any the least variation, or unfaying of any thing that he had at any time delivered,-they could have no ground to fuspect him tobe an unstable, uncertain man, who could not be depended on in what he faid to them, ver. 15-22. In the next place, with a very folemn affeveration, he professes that it was to fpare them that he came not to them, ver. 23.—ch. ii. 3. He gives another reason, ver. 12, 13. why he went on to Macedonia, without coming to Corinth, as he had proposed ; namely, the uncertainty he was in, by the not coming of Titus, concerning their disposition at Corinth. Having mentioned his journey to Macedonia, he takes notice of the fuccess which God gave to him there and every where, declaring of what confequence his preaching was, both to the falvation and condemnation of those who who received or rejected it ; profeffing again his fincerity and difinterestedness, not without a severe reflection on their falle apostle, ver. 14-17.

By the word xaeiv, in the verfe before us, which our Bibles translate benefit, it is plain the Apostle means his being present among them a second time, without giving them any grief or displeasure. He had been with them before almost two years together, with fatisfaction and kindness; he intended them another visit, but it was, he lays, that they might have the like gratification; that is, the like fatisfaction in his company a second time : which is to the fame purport with what he fays, ch. ii. 1.

Ver. 16. And to pass by you into Macedonia,] See 1 Cor. zri. 5—8.

Ver. 17-20. Yea, yea, and nay, nay?] The fense of thele verses is, "I did not change my defign through " levity, nor did I purpose first one thing and then the " contrary, as felfilli views might determine me, ver. 18. " As God is true, we have never prevaricated with you, "ver. 19. For what I, Sylvanus, and Timothy have " preached concerning Jefus Chrift the Son of God, is " not inconfistent, but invariably the fame, ver.-20. For " all the promifes of God are ratified in and verified by " him to the glory of God by our preaching." And belides, in Christ there is such a real evidence of God's converling with men; and fuch wonders actually wrought, m the incarnation, life, death, refurrection, and afcention of his Son, (facts in themfelves much more wonderful than any of the glorious confequences to follow,) as tend greatly to confirm our faith, and make it eafier for us to believe such illustrious promises as those which are given us, the very greatness of which might otherwise have been an impediment to our faith, and have created a fuspicion, not whither God would have performed what he had promiled, but whether fuch promiles were really given us: and we may add, that God could not have given fuch promifes, except in and through Christ, unless he were unjust, which is impossible.

VOL. II.

Ver. 21. Now he which stablisheth us] Who maketh us fleady; in opposition to the charge of inconstancy, which he complains of, ver. 17. The Greek of anointed is xpirze, that is, hath given us of the fame Spirit which renders Jefus the Chrift. See Heylin, and the next note.

Ver. 22. Who hath alfo fealed us, &c.] Who, answerable to various uses of a feal among men, has likewife printed his holy image upon us, and affured us of our interest in the Blood of the Covenant : and he has freely given us his Spirit, who dwells in our hearts, and fheds abroad his influences, and a fense of his love there, as a pledge and earnest of the eternal inheritance. See Eph. i. 13, 14. All these are arguments to fatisfy the Corinthians, that St. Paul was not, nor could be, a man who minded not what he faid, but as it ferved his turn. His reafoning, ver. 18-22., whereby he would convince the Corinthians that he was neither fickle nor unfteady, being a little difficult to be underftood by reafon of the brevity of his ftyle, the following fummary will fet it in a clear light : " God hath " fet me apart to the ministry of the Gospel by an ex-" traordinary call, has attelted my million by the miracu-" lous gifts of the Holy Ghoft, has fealed me with the " Holy Spirit of promife, has given me the earnest of " cternal life in my heart by his Spirit, and has confirmed " me among you in preaching the Gofpel, which is all " uniform and of a piece; - as I have preached it to you, " without varying in the leaft; and there, to the glory of " God, have shewn that all the promises concur, and are " in Chrift, and are certain to every faithful foul. # CHAP. II.

Having served the reason why he came not to them, he requireth them to forgive and to comfort that excommunicated perfon, even as himself also, upon his true repentance, had forgiven him : declaring withal why he departed from Treas to Macedonia, and the happy fuccifs which God gave to his preaching in all places.

the folemnity of an oath of this kind. The meaning of these verses is as follows: "With respect to that change " in my purpose of coming to you, which some would re-" prefent as an inftance of a contrary conduct, I call God " to witnefs, and declare to you, even as I have hope that " he will have mercy on my foul, that it was not becaufe I " flighted my friends, or feared my enemies, but of real " tendernefs, and with a defire to spare you the uncafi-" nefs, which I thought I must in that case have been " obliged to give you,—that I came not as yet to Corinth, " ver. 24. Not that I pretend to have dominion over your " faith; for it is by faith you ftand; but I forbore to " come, as one concerned to preferve and help forward " your joy, which I am tender of; and therefore declined " coming to you, whilft I thought you in an eftate which " would require a feverity from me that would trouble " you." It is plain that St. Paul's doctrine had been oppoled by fome of them at Corinth; (1 Cor. xv. 12.) his apostleship questioned; (1 Cor. ix. 1, 2.) he himself triumphed over, as if he durst not come; (1 Cor. iv. 18.) they faying that his letters were weighty and powerful, but his bodily prefence weak, and his fpeech con-temptible; 2 Cor. x. 10. This being the flate in which his reputation was then at Corinth, and he having promifed to come to them, I Cor. xvi. 5. he could not but think it necessary to excuse his failing them at that time, by reafons which should be both convincing and kind; such as are contained in the verses before us.

Inferences.—It is very observable, how often the great Apostle describes and addreffes Christians under the appellation of faints. Let the venerable title be ever fixed and retained in our minds; that so we may continually remember the obligations that we are under to answer it, as we would avoid the guilt and infamy of lying to God and men, by falsely and hypocritically professing the best religion, very possibly to the worst, and undoubtedly to the vainest purposes: and that we may be excited to a fanctity becoming this title, let us often think of God, as the Father of mersies, and as the God of all confolation; and especially let us contemplate him, as assuming these titles under the character of the God and Father of our Lord Jefus Christ. So thall we find our hearts more powerfully engaged to love and truft in him, and enter into a more intimate acquaintance and frequent converse with him.

From him may we feek confolation in every diftrefs; confidering the fupports which we fo experience, not as given for ourfelves alone, but for others alfo; that we, on the like principles, may confole them. Minifters, in particular, fhould regard them in this view, and rejoice in those tribulations which may render them more capable of comforting fuch as are in trouble, by those confolations with which they themfelves have been comforted by God; that fo the church may be edified, and God glorified in all, by the thankfgiving of many, for mercies obtained in answer to united prayers.

Let us particularly remember the support which St. Paul experienced, when he was preffed above measure, and as it feemed, quite beyond his strength, so as to despair of life,and received the fentence of death in himself, as what was wifely appointed to teach him a firmer confidence in God, who raifeth the dead. Strong as his faith was, it admitted of farther degrees; and the improvement of it was a happy equivalent for all the extremities that he fuffered. He therefore glories, as affured of being rescued from future dangers, ver. 10. Nor was his faith vain, though he afterwards fell by the hand of his enemies, and seemed as helples a prey to their malice and rage, as any of the multitudes whole blood Nero, or the inftruments of his cruelty, poured out like water. Death is itself the grand refcue of a good man, which bears him to a state of everlasting security; and in this fense, every believer may in some fort adopt the Apostle's words; and while he acknowledges past and prefent, may affuredly, in the confidence of faith, expect future deliverances.

Happy therefore shall we be, if by divine grace we be enabled at all times to maintain the temper and conduct of Christians; and can confidently rejoice in the testimony of our conficiences, that our conversation in the world is in simplicity and godly fincerity; that our ends in religion are great and noble; that our conduct is simple and uniform; in a word, that we act as in the fight of a heart-fearching God. Then may we look upon the applauses or the censures of men as comparatively a very light matter; and may reft affured, if, as with regard to the Apostle in the instance before us, we suffer a malignant breath for a while to obscure might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you.

fcure the luftre of our character, but, notwithstanding, continue to cleave to Chrift,—the day is near, which will reveal it in unclouded glory.

All the promifes of God, are yea and amen in Chrift. Let us depend upon it that they will be performed to all the faithful faints of God; and let us make it our great care, that we may be able to fay we are interested through Chrift in the bleffings to which they relate. Let there be a proportionable steadines and confistency in our obedience; nor let our engagements to God be yea and nay, fince his are fo faithful to his fimple-hearted perfevering faints.— Are we established in Chrift? Are we fealed with the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts? Let us acknowledge, that it is God who hath imparted it to us; and let Christians of the greatest integrity and experience be proportionably humble, rather than by any means elated on account of their superiority to others.

We fee the light in which miniflers fhould always confider themfelves, and in which they are to be confidered by others ;—Not as having dominion over the faith of their people, or a right to dictate, by their own authority, what they fhould believe, or, on the fame principles, what they fhould do; but as helpers of their joy, in confequence of their being helpers of their piety and obedience. In this view, how amiable and engaging does the minifterial office appear! What a friendly afpect does it wear upon the happincis of mankind! and how little true benevolence do they manifeft, who would expose it to ridicule and contempt!

May those who bear that office, be careful that they do not give it the most dangerous wound, and abet the evil works of those who despise and deride it; which yet they will most effectually do, if they once appear to form their purposes according to the flefb. Let them with a lingle eye direct all their administrations to the glory of God, and the edification of the church; that they may be able to appeal to their hearers, as those who must acknowledge, and bear their testimony to their uprightness. In that case, they may confidently look on them as those, in whom they hope to rejoice in the day of the Lord. And if, while they puriue these ends, they are censured as persons actuated by any mean and lefs worthy principle, let them not be much surprized or discouraged. They share in exercises, from which the bleffed Apostle St. Paul was not exempted; as indeed there is no integrity or caution, which can guard any man from the effects of that malice against Christ and his Gospel, with which some hearts overflow, when they feel themselves condemned by it.

REFLECTIONS. - Ift, The Apostle opens the Epistle,

1. With his ufual address and falutation. Paul an Apofthe of Jesus Christ, by the will of God eminently called to this high office, and Timothy our brother, who joins me in hearticft affection towards you; unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the faints which are in all Achaia, who in profession and practice appear to be separated from the world as the Lord's people – Grace be to you, and peace, with all their happy fruits, from God our Father, the Author of all our bleffings, and from the Lord Jefus Chrift, the meritorious caufe of them.

2. He bleffeth God for the fignal mercies that he had experienced. Bleffed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jefus Chrift, who in and through him, as the divine Mediator, is now become to us the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort, multiplying his pardons, fhowering down his benefits, and giving us temporal and spiritual consolation through this Son of his love, who comforteth us in all our tribulation, by his word and Spirit bringing home the great and precious promifes with power to our fouls, and fhedding abroad his love in our hearts; that, from experience of the riches of his goodnefs, we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, whether of foul or body, by the comfort subereswith sue our felves are comforted of God, tenderly fympathizing with them, and fuggefting those encouraging words of fcripture, which, in diffrefs, we have found reviving to our own fouls. For as the fufferings of Chrift abound in us, to whom we are thus conformed, and who is still afflicted in all the afflictions of his members, fo our confolation alfo aboundeth by Chrift, who fails not to minister fupports and comforts proportionable to our fufferings. And whether we be afflicted, it is for your confolation and falvation, it is defigned for your advantage; that by our examples of patience, fortitude, and perfeverance, you may be encouraged to bear up under every trial, and boldly ftand fast, till your falvation is completed ; which is effectual by perfevering in the exercifes of faith and patience, in the enduring of the fame fufferings which we also fuffer : or whether we be comforted by divine supports under our afflictions, or by seasonable deliverances from them, it is also ordered for your confolation and falvation, as the means thereof, if you will but improve them. Note; (1.) All our mercies from God call for perpetual grateful acknowledgments. (2.) They who have been exercifed with trials in their own fouls and bodies, will be the most able comforters to others under the like troubles. We fpeak beft, when we fpeak from experience. (3.) Though our afflictions may be at present grievous, the time will come, if we be faithful in the improvement of them, when we shall fee peculiar reafon to blefs God for them, and know that they have been through grace efpecially conducive to our eternal fulvation. (4.) All our comforts flow from God in Christ, as reconciled to us through the Blood of his Son.

2dly, St. Paul,

1. Expresses his confidence in them; and our hope of you is fleadfaft, that you will never be difcouraged by any tribulations which you fee us endure, or are called to bear yourfelves; knowing that as ye are partakers of the fufferings with us, fo fball ye be also of the consolation, rejoicing with us here in the experience of God's love, and, if faithful unto death, shortly to arrive where forrow shall be for ever banished, and our joys will be perfected.

undergone. For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Afia, (fee Acts, xiv. xvi. xix.) that we avere preffed out of measure, above flrength, loaded with burdens more than our natural ftrength could fustain; fo that we defpaired even of life, not knowing which way to efcape, and our cafe to all appearance desperate. But we had the fentence of death in ourfelves, and concluded that we must be destroyed ; the Lord in his providence suffering us to be brought to these extremities, that we flould not truft in ourfelves, feeling by experience our own utter infufficiency to help ourfelves, but in God which raifeth the dead, whofe wifdom, power, and grace alone could extricate us from our troubles, and fave us from the jaws of death. Note; The Lord fometimes fuffers his believing people to be reduced as it were to the last gasp in their trials, that he may convince them more deeply of their own helpleffices, and magnify his grace and power more fignally in their deliverance.

3. He gratefully acknowledges the divine interpolition: who delivered us from fo great a death, when to human view it appeared inevitable; and doth deliver, in jeopardy as we fand every hour : in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us, content to caft our care upon him, in the fullest confidence of his protection and support : Ye alfo helping together by prayer for us, and joining in affectionate supplications on our behalf, that we may be still preferved in the midft of danger; that for the gift of fo fignal a deliverance as we have experienced, bestowed upon us by the means of many perfons, in answer to the prayers of those faithful fouls, who, ceafelels at a throne of grace, befought the Lord for us, thanks may be given by many on our behalf, and God giorified and praifed for the mercy that he has extended towards us. Note; (1.) Palt experience of God's interposition should engage us still to hope in his mercy. (2.) None ever trusted God and were confounded. (3.) We owe much to the prayers of those who interest themselves for us in their approaches to God. (4.) The bleffings received in answer to prayer, call loud for a due return of praise.

3dly, The Apostle,

I. Vindicates himfelf in general from the infinuations of his traducers. For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, maintaining a fingle eye to God's glory; not with flefly wifdom, purposing any mean ends or fellish defigns of our own; but by the grace of God, having this for our governing principle, taught by his word, and guided by his Spirit, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you ward who cannot but be confcious how holily and unblameably we behaved ourfelves among you; and if I have now difappointed you of my intended vifit, it was no double-mindedness, but the providence of God, which prevented me. Note; A good confcience affords always matter of real joy.

2. He appeals to themselves for the truth of what he Said. For we write none other things unto you than what you read or acknowledge, and I trust ye shall acknowledge even to the end; our future conversation will, we truft, be as exemplary as the past. As alfo ye have acknowledged us in part, that we are your rejcicing, even as ye alfo are ours in the day of the Lord Jefus, when we hope to appear with you before him as the feals of our ministry, our joy and crown.

4thly, In answer to the infinuations of his enendes, who accused him of levity and inconstancy: •

1. He avers the fincerity of his intentions at the time when he gave them his promife. In the confidence of their affection and effeem he was fully purpoled to vifit them, in hopes of affording them further fpiritual affiltance; and not merely to call on them in his way to Macedonia, but to return thence, and make fome confiderable flay among them, and then to have been helped forward on his journey by them to Jerufalem. When I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness, promising rashiy, and altering my mind without fufficient reafon? Or the things that I purpose, do I purpose according to the fl. fb ? Was I influenced by any fecular views? Or did I want to flatter you, and tell you what I never intended to perform? That with me there flould be yea yea, and nay nay, talking backwards and forwards to ferve a turn ? No; St. Paul; as every faithful man does, spoke the truth from his heart.

2. He vindicates his doctrine, which the feducers wanted to represent as equally erroneous as his promise was deceitful; and this he does with a folemn appeal-to God. But, as God is true, our word toward you was not yea and nay, our doctrine was not various and changeable, but uniformly the fame; for the Son of God, Jefus Chrift, who was preached among yeu by us, even by me and Silvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea; the fame crucified Jefus was the fubject of our minitury, and we taught with perfect harmony all the glorious truths of Gospel grace : for all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen, to all his faithful faints; flowing from the favour and love of God, purchased by the obedience to death, and ratified by the blood-fliedding of the Redeemer, unto the glory of God by us, who by our ministrations is thus exalted in the highest.

3. He mentions fome of the ineftimable bleffings which. God in Christ Jefus had bestowed. (1.) Now he which flablisheth us with you in Christ is God, we are built up in him, and are united together to him as our living Head. (2.) He kath anointed us with the gifts and graces of his Spirit. (3.) He hath alfo fealed us, ftamping his bleffed image on our fouls. (4.) He hath given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts, fliedding abroad his love, as a pledge of that eternal felicity which he will confer upon all his faithful faints.

4. He gives a weighty reason for not coming at present to Corinth, and folemnly calls God to witnefs thereto, that it was out of mere tenderness towards them, to spare them, that he might not be obliged to inflict on the otfenders condign punishment. But, to prevent mistakes, he to forgive bim, and comfort bim, left perhaps fuch a one thould be fwallowed up with over-he adds, Not for that we have dominion over your faith, we aflume no tyrannical power, nor pretend to be Lords over your conficience; but are helpers of your joy, defiring to promote your fpiritual and eternal confolation; for by full by fland-faith grounded not on fallible human teftimony, but on the word of God.

CHAP. II.

THE Apolle's apology for delaying his vifit to the Corinthians, which was begun in the preceding chapter, is continued in this. Earneitly defirous of their repentance, he had delayed to come, having determined with himfelf not to come among them with forrow, by punifhing the guilty, if he could by any means avoid it, ver. 1, 2.—And therefore, initead of coming to punifh them, he had written to them, that he might have joy from their repentance, ver. 3.—And, to meliorate the feverity of his first letter, he told them that he wrote it in the deepest affliction; not to make them forry, but to shew the greatness of his love to them, ver. 4.

On receiving the Apostle's former letter, the fincere part of the Corinthian church, which was much more numerous than the faction, immediately excommunicated the incefluous person, in the manner they had been directed. And he appears to have been fo affected with his punithment, that in a little time he difniissed his father's wife, and became a fincere penitent. Of these things the Aposthe had been informed by Titus, who, I fuppofe, was prefent at his excommunication. The Apostle, therefore, in this letter, told the Corinthians, that the punishment which they had inflicted on their faulty brother, having induced him, through grace, to repent of his crime, they were now to forgive him, by taking him again into the church; and even to confirm their love to him, by behaving towards him in a kind and friendly manner, left Satan should drive him to delpair, ver. 5-12. Farther, to make the Corinthians knlible how much he loved them, the Apostle described the diffress he was in at Troas, when he did not find Titus there, from whom he expected an account of their affairs. For, although he had the prospect of much success at Tross, he was so concerned in his mind that he could not remain there, but went forward to Macedonia, in expetation of meeting Titus. In Macedonia his concern was somewhat alleviated, by the fuccess with which his preaching was attended. For in Macedonia God caufed him to ride in triumph with Christ, having enabled him to overcome all opposition, ver. 13, 14.-The idea of riding in triumph with Christ, naturally led the Apostle to describe the effects of his preaching, both upon believers and unbelievers, by images taken from the triumphal proceffions of the Greeks and Romans, ver. 15, 16 .- This beautiful paffage he concluded with a folemn affirmation that he did not, like fome others, corrupt the word of God with foreign mixtures; but always preached it fincerely and difinterestedly, as in the fight of God, ver. 17.-By thus speaking he plainly infinuated, first, that the false teacher, on whom too many of the Corinthians doated, had corrupted the word of God from worldly motives: and, fecondly, that God, in his infinite mercy, had owned and bleffed the fidelity with which he preached the doctrines and precepts of the gofpel, however contrary they might be to the prejudices and pathons of mankind: befides, the difinite reltedness of his conduct, which was evident to all with whom he conversed, manifested, to every ingenuous mind, that, in preaching the gospel, he did not propose to acquire either riches, or fame, or worldly power among his difeiples.

Ver. 1. For—I would not come again, &c.] "I pur-" pofed in myfelf, it is true, to come to you again; but " I refolved too that it fhould be without bringing forrow " with me." That this is the meaning of this verfe, and not that he would not come to them in forrow a fecond time, is paft doubt, fince he had never been with them in forrow a first time. See ch. i. 15.

Ver. 2. For if I make you forry, &c.] "For if I were "to do any thing that would be a trauble to you, whom "I fo dearly love, nothing but a fenfe of duty, and hope "of rectifying what was amifs among you, could ever re-"concile me to it, much lefs give me any fatisfaction in it : "and which of you, in that cale, could exhilarate my fpirits, "and make me rejoice again; unlefs it were the very per-"fon, or perfons, whom I fhould have made uneafy by tharp "rebukes, both of the principal offenders, and of others "among you that were puffed up, and countenanced them, "inftead of mourning over them, and taking care to purge "the church of them? See t Cor. v. 2, 7. It is only the "repentance of fuch, and their recovery from the guilt "which they respectively had contracted, that could turn "my own forrow into joy."

Ver. 3. I wrote this fame unto you,] That I wrote relates to the first epistle to the Corinthians is evident, because it is fo used in the next and the ninth verse; and what he wrote in that epittle, which he calls auto TSTO, this very thing, was, molt probably, concerning the punifhment of the fornicator; as appears by what follows to ver. II. efpecially if it be compared with 1 Cor. iv. and v. 8. For there he writes to them to punish that perfon; and if St. Paul had come himfelf before it was done, he must have come with a rod, as he calls it, and have himfelf chaftifed them: but now, knowing that the Corinthians had punished him, in compliance with his letter, and having had this trial of their obedience, and the offender being become a genuine penitent, he is fo far from continuing the feverity, that he writes to them to forgive him, and to take him again into their affection.

Ver. 4. And anguish of heart] Over-bearing anguish feems the import of the word συνοχ<sup>2</sup>, which nearly refembles the verb συνίχει, ch. v. 14. See the place.

Ver. 5. But if any have canfed grief, &c.] St. Paul being fatisfied with the Corinthians for their ready compliance with his orders in his former letter to punish the fornicator, intercedes to have him reftored; and to that end speaks of him as a penitent in milder terms. St. Chrysoltom, the Syriac, and Arabic, render this verse thus : He has not grieved grieved me, but (not to aggravate too much) in fome fort all of you. Pere Simon has it, He has not only grieved me, but some of you. The following version of Dr. Heylin is paraphrastical, though expressive of the fense: "Whatever affliction I have had, I am not the only per-" fon concerned; fo that I must not charge you all with " what comes but from a part of you."

Ver. 6. Sufficient to fuch a man, &c.] " Sufficient to fuch " a one, who has here been the aggression, but is now a " penitent, is this rebuke and cenfure, which he has already " fuffered by many, and, indeed, by the whole body of your " fociety, which has fhewn fo wife and pious a readinels to " purfue the directions that I gave for animadverting upon " him; and bringing him, through grace, to repentance." It is observable, how tenderly St. Paul deals with the Corinthians in this epifile; for though he treats of the fornicator from the 5th to the 10th verse, inclusively, yet he never mentions him under that, or any other painful title, but in the foft terms of any one, or fuch a one. Instead of this punishment, &c. some read, this rebuke from the majoriiy.

Ver. 12, 13. When I come to Troas] When I came to Troas, and a door to the gospel of Christ was opened. Knatchbull. How uneafy St. Paul was, and upon what account, fee ch. vii. 5-16. It was not barely for the absence of Titus, but for want of the news he was to bring with him, ch. vii. 7. Instead of, I went thence into Macedonia, some read, I came from thence, &c.

Ver. 14. Which caufeth us to triumph in Christ, ] That is, " In the fuccess of my preaching in my journey to Mace-" donia, and also in my victory at the same time at Co-rinth, over the salfe Apostles, my opposers, who had " raifed a faction against me among you." Thus St. Paul II reprefents himfelf as triumphing through the divine power; and, as, in triumphal processions, especially in the east, fragrant odours and incense were burnt near the conquerors, he feems beautifully to allude to this circumstance in what he fays of the cour, the odour of the gospel, in the following verfes: and he feems further to allude to the different effects of strong perfumes, to cheer fome, and to throw others into yiolent diforders, according to the different dispositions they are in to receive them. Alian obferves, that fome kinds of animals are killed by them. Hift. Animal. 1. iii. c. 7. Dr. Heylin observes, that the knowledge of God, or knowledge that there is a God, may be a mere speculation; not so the favour, relish, or mental fenfation of God, called here the favour of his knowledge. Now an apostle speaking by the spirit of God, really excites this favour or fenfation in the minds of his believing hearers : being himfelf actuated by God, he gives, through grace, fome real perception of him.-Those who pioully cultivate this, improve accordingly; those who understand it, and will not be wrought upon by it, grow more indifposed and hardened: as is shewn in the following verses.

Ver. 15, 16. For we are unto God, &c.] For, upon God's account, [or, in order that God may be known] we communicate a favoury odour of Christ, to them who are faved, and to them who are not, ver. 16. To the one we are the favour of death, so as to prove mortal to them; and to the others the favour of life, fo as to revive them. The phrase, For up-on God's account, is, literally, For God. That God cannot be effectually known, but through Christ, is the constant doctrine of scripture. See Heylin, Mill, and Wall.

CHAP. III.

[Anno Domini 58.]

Left their falle teachers should charge him with vain glory, he showeth the faith and graces of the Corinthians to be a sufficient commendation of his ministry. Whereupon, entering on a comparison between the ministers of the law and of the gospel, he proveth that his ministry is so far the more excellent, as the gospel of life and liberty is more glorious than the law of condemnation.

D<sup>0</sup> we begin again to commend ourfelves? or need we, as fome others, epiftles of commendation to you, or letters of commendation from you?

2 <sup>b</sup> Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men.

3 Fora/much as ye are manifeftly declared to be 'the epiftle of Chrift ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshly tables of the heart.

4 And <sup>4</sup> fuch trust have we through Christ to God-ward :

ewn greater gain; and it infinuates, in ftrong terms, the mean temper and conduct of their falfe teachers.

Inferences .- What a tender love and concern have faithful paftors for their flocks! They are exceeding folicitous about their affairs: they make their forrows and joys their own, and are willing to keep up as good an opinion of them as poslible: they are grieved at heart when any of them fall into fin, and perfift with fuch obstinacy in it, as to oblige the church to cast them out of its communion : they are earnestly defirous that fuch offenders may be brought to repentance, and, upon good evidence that they are so, would have them restored to the fellowship and affection of the whole community, left they should be swallowed up with over-much forrow. And why should not churches take off their cenfures, when the proper ends for which they were inflicted are answered? To be unforgiving to those whom we have ground to hope God has pardoned, is a difobedience to Christ's authority, and gives Satan an advantage against the humble penitent, to drive him to despair; and against the church, to bring an odium upon it, as though it were uncharitably fevere. And, alas ! how many are the wiles of the devil for fupplanting the caufe of Chrift, which it is our wifdom and duty to observe, and guard against ! But bleffed be God, who will make his precious gospel triumphant, to the joy of his fervants, whose consciences bear witness to their integrity, in defiance of all opposition; and will take pleafure in its ministrations, whether they issue in the righteous destruction of those whose carnal hearts are averse to it, or in the spiritual life and eternal falvation of those that behere through grace. O how awful on the one hand; how delightful on the other; and how difficult and important, on the whole, is the work of the ministry ! We may well cry out, Who is fufficient for thefe things? And if any are wife and faithful stewards in dispensing them, and that with good effect, all the glory belongs to God. Woe be to those, the number of whom is too great, that corrupt the finplicity of the gospel: but they who, through divine light and influence, preach and maintain the purity of its doctrines, according to the word of God, as in the interrity of their hearts, with difinterested views, and as under his all-feeing eye, may be humbly confident, for their encouragement, that whether their fuccels be more or lefs, they and their labour shall be graciously accepted of him in. the Beloved.

REFLECTIONS .- Ift. The Apoltle fuggelts another reafon why he would not come now to Corinth, (which, indeed, he had intimated in the former chapter,) left he should be compelled to exercise such severity on offenders as would be bitter to them, and painful to himfelf; and in fuch circumstances it must be a melancholy meeting, when he must make those forrowful who should have made him glad; and, while this was the cafe, his tender fympathy with them must occasion heaviness to his own spirit. He. wished, therefore, rather that all offences might be first removed, for which end he had written the former letter, and that he might not be obliged to forrow over those as impenitent, in whom he hoped to rejoice as faithful or penitent ; and he would fain hope, from his confidence in their affection and regard, that bis joy was theirs, and that they would be ready to remove every caufe of uneafinefs, and delight to make him happy. With much anguish of heart, and many tears, he had dictated this cpiftle, not to grieve them, but to profit them, and that his own love towards them, and jealoufy over them, might be more abundantly manifested. Note (1.) Faithful rebuke is the furest mark of love. (2.) Correction is an unpleafing though neceffary talk. (3.) The defign of every reproof fhould not be to grieve, but to recover.

2 ally, The Apolle directs them how to behave towards the incelluous perfon, who had been, according to his orders, excommunicated.

1. He had been grieved, in part, that he was compelled to punifh; but, fince this man had teffified his repentance, the caufe of his forrow was removed: and though he had found fault with many who were puffed up, and had not mourned on this occasion, he would not overcharge them with farther reproof, fince they had, as a body, cleared themfelves by their obedience to his letter.

2. The punifhment which had been inflicted on the offender was fufficient, feeing that he was penitent; and, fince he was humbled and reftored, the fentence of excommunication fhould be removed. He exhorts them therefore, (1.) to forgive him; (2.) to comfort him under the deep wounds of thame and remorfe, which he must have felt, left Satan fhould take advantage of his diftrefs.

to overwhelm him with defpair; (3.) to confirm their love towards him, and receive him into their church with all the cordiality of warm affection. Note, We ought to be peculiarly tender of broken fpirits, not aggravating their offences, but fympathizing with their anguith.

3. This was the end which the Apostle proposed in respect to the prefent fubject, both in his former and prefent epistle, that he might have a proof of their obedience. And, to engage them to a ready compliance with his prefent exhortation, he mentions his own willingnefs to concur with them in forgiving this penitent; and this he did alfo thus publicly for their fakes, as a fresh mark of his love to them, and to promote their welfare, left Satan thould take advantage, from any feverity fhewn to this offender, to discourage the hearts of backfliders from returning, through defpair of pardon, or raife prejudices against the members of the church as of an unforgiving and inexorable fpirit. For we are not, fays he, ignorant of his devices, how by every method he strives to obstruct the fuccefs of the golpel, and difturb the peace of the church. 3dly, The Apoftle,

I. Acquaints them with another thing which retarded his journey to Corinth. Furthermore, when I came to Troas to preach Chriff's gefpel, that conftant delightful theme on which I dwell, and a door was opened unto me of the Lord, he, who hath the hearts of all men in his hand, having given me a pleafing profpect of fuccefs, fo anxious was I to hear of you, that I had no reft in my fpinit, becaufe I found not Titus my brother, whom I expected to arrive there from you: but taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia, where I met him, and heard with delight the account which he brought from you.

2. Having hinted his fuccefsful labours at Troas, he breaks forth into thankigiving to God. Now thanks be unto God, which always caufeth us to triumph, in the midft of all our tribulations, raifing us superior to our foes, and filling 'us with exultation and joy in Chrift, the rock of our confidence; and maketh manifest the favour of his knowledge by us in every place, diffusing his gospel as fragrance, and caufing our labours to be acceptable to himfelf, and profitable to those among whom he fends us to minifter. For we are unto God a' freet favour of Christ; his precious name in our lips, and his grace in our hearts, render us pleafing to God, in them that are faved, who yield to be faved by grace, and in whom God's rich mercy is magnified, being called by him to the faith and privileges of the golpel, and accepting that call to the glory of God; and also in them that perifb, in whom his justice is displayed in punishing their obstinate infidelity; and, though they are not gathered, yet are we alike glorious in the eyes of the Lord, who regards not our fuccefs fo much as our fidelity. To the one we are the favour of death unto death, a despifed and abused gospel aggravating their guilt, and increasing their condemnation; and to the other the favour of life unto life : like a fweet perfume that recovers the fainting fpirit, fo does the gospel, through the power of the Holy Ghost, quicken the fouls of believers from the death of fin unto a life of righteousness, and continues to refresh and revive them amidit all their trials and fufferings. And, in the view of these eternally important truths, and the awful and difficult charge lying upon us, who needs not to tremble for himfelf, and to cry out, Who is fufficient for thefe things ? The greatest, the best of men, will be most confcious of their own weaknefs, and be looking up for more than human power to enable them for the difcharge of this arduous employment. Note, (1.) The golpel word never returns void. Where it is not a favour of life, it will be a favour of death. (2.) The more we are fenfible of our own infufficiency, the more fhall we look up to him who giveth ftrength to the weak.

3. He vindicates himfelf, and glances at their falfe teachers. For we are not as many, which corrupt and adulterate the word of God, to make advantage thereby; but as of fincerity, without guile or deceit; but as of God, fpeaking under his influence, guidance, and authority, in the fight of God fpeak we in Chrift, approving ourfelves to the great Searcher of hearts, with a fingle eye to the Redeemer's glory, and making him the grand fubject of all our ministrations.

CHAP. III.

THE things mentioned in the beginning of this chapter fbew, that the falfe teacher had established himself at Ccrinth, neither by working miracles, nor by communicating to the Corinthians spiritual gifts; but by producing letters of recommendation from fome brethren in Judea, and by talking in a vaunting manner of his own talents. For, in. allusion to these things, the Apostle asked the Corinthians ironically, whether, in order to obtain credit with them as an apofile, it was neceffary that he thould, a fecond time, prove his apostleship ? or, if he needed, as some, (the falle teacher) letters of recommendation, either to them or from them? ver. 1.-And, to heighten the irony, he told them, that they themfelves were a copy of the letter of recommendation which he carried about with him, not from the brethren of any church, but from Chrift himfelf: which original letter was written on his own heart, and was known and read of all his converts, ver. 2.- A copy of this letter the Apostle told the Corinthians he had ministered or furnished to them, written, not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not on tables of flone but on the fleshy tables of their own heart, ver. 3. - A recommendation of this fort, he told them, was a just matter of boafling, and was afforded to him by Chrift in the prefence of God, ver. 4.-Confequently, it was afforded to him by God's authority.

It feems the falfe teacher extolled the law of Mofes above the gofpel of Chrift, and affumed to himfelf great authority authority on account of his knowledge of that law. Wherefore, in the remaining part of this chapter, the Apofile, by the strongest arguments, demonstrated to the Corinthians that the law of Moles was much inferior to the golpel of Chrift. The law was a dispensation of the letter : but the gospel was a dispensation of the spirit : the law killed every finner, whether he was penitent or not, by its dreadful curse; but the gospel gives life to all penitent believers, without exception, by its gracious promifes, ver. 5. 6. The gospel therefore is a covenant of life, but the law a covenant of death .- Farther, he observed, that if the ministration of the covenant of death, engraven on stones, covered the face of Moles, its minister, with such an outward glory that the children of Ifrael could not look fteadfaftly onhim, after he came down from the mount - the ministration of the covenant of the Spirit which give th life must occasion a much greater glory to them who were employed in ministering it. For the gifts of the Spirit, wherewith the Apoftles, the miniflers of the covenant of the Spirit, were honoured, were a much greater glory than the external fplendour which covered Moles's face, when he appeared with the tables of the law in his hand, ver. 7-11.-The reason is, the ministers of the Spirit had the glory of infpiration abiding with them always, fo that they could ule much greater clearness of speech in explaining the covenant of the gospel than Moses was able to do in explaining the covenant of the law; as was emblematically represented by Moses putting a veil upon his face while he spake to the Israelites. For he delivered to them the obfcure figurative inflitutions of the law, together with fuch words as God had spoken to him ; but added nothing, from himfelf, for explaining the meaning of thefe inftitutions. Hence, the generality of the Israelites have remained ignorant of the true nature and end of the law till this day, but partly through the wilful blindness of their own hearts, ver. 12-15. - But when the whole nation fhall turn to the Lord, the darkness of the law shall be done away, ver. 16.

The expressions in this part of the chapter being obfeure, the Apostle told the Corinthians that the Lord, by which he means the gespel, of which the Lord Christ is the author, is the dispension of the Spirit, of which he spake; and that, in delivering the gospel, there was great liberty of speech granted to its ministers, especially to the Apostles, who, by beholding the glory of the Lord Jefus while he abode on earth, and by the repeated revelations which they received from him fince his afcension, were changed into the very fame image, by successions of glory, that is, of flumination, coming from the Spirit of the Lord. So that in respect of the light of the gospel which they diffused through the world, they were become the images of Christ, ver. 17, 18.

Ver. 1. Do we begin again to commend ourfelves ? ] This is a plain indication that St. Paul had been blamed among them for commending himfelf; as the next claufe feems to intimate that their falle apostle had got himself recommended to them by letters, and so had introduced himself into that church.

Ver. 2. Ye are our epifile, &c.] "I may well fay, that you " are yourfelves our epiltle, the best recommendation from "God himfelf; his teltimonial, as it were, written upon " your hearts, in the glorious change by our means produced " there : and the effects of it are fo apparent in your lives, " that I may fay ye are known and read by all men, who "know what you once were, and now are." Many copies, however, read, our hearts; but the Apostle feems to mean, that the change produced, not only in their external conduct, but in their inward temper, was fo great, that all who could judge of it by intimate knowledge (and it is certain that fome judgment may be formed,) must own it a great attestation to his ministry ; -- and in this view we may read your hearts. The enormitics into which they were once plunged, (fee I Cor. vi. II, &c.) would much illuftrate this argument. See the next verfe : and fee the introduction, or preface, to this chapter, for another view of the fubject.

Ver. 3. Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared] The fense of St. Paul here is plainly this: that he needed no letters of commendation to them; but that their conversion, and the gospel written, not with ink, but with the Spirit of God in the tables of their hearts, by his miniftry, and not in tables of ftone; was as clear an evidence and teltimony to them of his million from Chrift, as the law written in tables of stone was an evidence of Moses's million : fo that he [St. Paul] needed no other recommendation. This is what we are to understand by the verse; unlefs we will make the tables of fone to have no fignification here. But to fay, as he does, that the Corinthians, being written upon in their hearts, not with ink, but with the Spirit of God, by his instrumentality, was Chrift's commen-liable to the exception of the captious part of the Corinthians, to obviate all imputation of vanity or vain-glory herein, he immediately fubjoins what follows in the next verfe.

Ver. 4, 5. And fuch truft have we, &c.] As if he had faid, "But miftake me not, as if I boafted of myfelf. This "fo great boafting which I ufe is only my confidence in "God, through Chrift; for it was God who made me a "minifter of the gofpel, who beflowed on me the ability "for it; and whatever I perform in it is wholly from him." Hezudnois, truft, is a milder term for begling. So St. Paul ufes it, ch. x. 7. compared with v. 8. See alfo Rom. ii. 19. The word Aoy(2erdu, ch. x. 7) is ufed as here, [ver. 5.] for counting upon one-fulf. The claufe fhould be renderedto recken upon any thing as of curfelves: or, if the word  $\lambdaoy(azdu, fhould rather be thought to fignify here to dif$ cover by reafoning, then the Apottle's fende will run thus:"Not as if I was fulficient of myfelf,—by the ftrength of<math>R r " my

8 How shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious?

9 For if "the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteoufness exceed in glory. 10 For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this refpect, by reason of the glory that excelleth.

11 For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.

12 Seeing then that we have fuch hope, "we use great * plainness of speech :

But, in whatever fenfe the word  $\lambda_{0\gamma_{1}\sigma\alpha\sigma\delta\alpha'}$ is here taken, it is certain that  $\tau_{1}$ , which is translated any thing, must be limited to the fubject in hand; namely, the gofpel which he had preached to them. Dr. Heylin renders these verses, And we are affured of this, through Christ, before God, ver. 5. Not that we are fufficient of ourfelves to effect any thing by the strength of our own reason; but our sufficiency is from God, ver. 6. who hath enabled us to be minislers, &c. See ch. i. 6. Ver. 6. Not of the letter, &c.] By expressing himfelf as he does here, St. Paul may be understood to intimate, that the New Testament, or Covenant, was also, though obscurely, held forth in the law; for he fays he was conftituted a minister of the Spirit, or spiritual meaning of the law, which was Chrift, (as he tells us himfelf, ver. 17.) and giveth life, while the letter killeth. But both letter and Spirit must be understood of the fame thing,-viz. the letter of the law, and the pirit of the law : and, in fact, we find St. Paul truly a minister of the spirit of the law, efpecially in his epiftle to the Hebrews, where he flews what a fpiritual fenfe ran through the Mofaical inftitution and writings. The letter killeth by pronouncing death, without any way of remiffion, on all transgreffors; it leaves them under an irrevocable sentence of death : but the Spirit, that is Christ, (ver. 17.) who is a quickening Spirit, (1 Cor. xv. 45.) giveth life.

Ver. 7. Which glory was to be done away :] Kalagy Buienny, done away, is applied here to the fhining of Moles's face, and to the law, ver. 11. and 13. In all which places it is used in the present tense, and has the fignification of an adjective, standing for temporary,-or of a duration whose end was determined; and is opposed to Tw Merovri, that which remaineth; that is to fay, that which is lafting, and has no pre-determined end fet to it; as ver. 11. where the gospel dispensation is called 10 µnov, that which remaineth. This may help us to understand from glory to glory, ver. 18. which is manifeftly oppofed to the glory done away in this verse, and fo plainly fignifies a continued lasting glory of the ministry of the golpel; which, as he tells us there, confifted in their being changed into the image and clear representation of the Lord himfelf; as the glory of Moses confifted in the transitory brightness of his face, which was a faint reflection of the glory of God appearing to him in the mount.

Ver. 9. Ministration of righteoufness] Or, of juflification. So the ministry of the gospel is called, because by the gospel a way is provided for the justification of those who have transgressed. But the law has nothing but rigid condemnation for all transgressers, and therefore is called here the ministration of condemnation.

Ver. 10. For even that which was made glorious] Though the fhewing that the ministration of the gospel is more glorious than that of the law, be what St. Paul is treating of here, thereby to justify himfelf, if he has affumed fome authority and commendation to himfelf in his ministry and apostleship; yet, in his thus industriously placing the ministry of the gospel in honour above that of Moles, may he not possibly have an eye to the judaizing false apossle of the Corinthians, to let them fee what little regard was to be had to that ministration, in comparison of the ministry of the gospel?

Ver. 11. If that which is done away] St. Paul here mentions another pre-eminence and superiority of glory in the gospel over the law; namely, that the law was to cease and be abolished, but the gospel to remain, and never to be abolished.

Ver. 12. That we have fuch hope, ] That St. Paul, by thefe words, means the honourable employment of an apoftle and minister of the gospel, or the glory belonging to his ministry in the gospel, is evident from the whole foregoing comparison which he has made between the minifiry of the law and of the gospel, and not between the law and the gspel themfelves. The calling of it hope inftead of glory here, where he fpeaks of his having it, is the language of modesty, which more particularly suited his present purpose; for the conclusion which in this verse he draws from what went before, plainly shews his design in this discourse to be, the justifying his speaking freely of himfelf and others. His argument is to this effect : " Having " therefore fo honourable an employment, as is the mini-" ftry of the gospel, which far exceeds the ministry of the " law in glory;—though even that gave fo great a luftre " to Moles's face, that the children of Israel could not, " with fixed eyes, look upon him ;---I, as becomes one of " fuch hopes, in fuch a post as fets me above all mean " confiderations and compliances, ule great freedom and " plainnefs of fpeech in all things which concern my " miniftry."

the plainnefs and opennefs of their preaching, which he had afferted in the preceding verfe. Thefe words therefore here must, of necessity, be understood, not of Moses, but of the ministers of the gospel; namely, that it was not the obscurity of their preaching, not any thing veiled in their way of proposing the Gospel, which was the cause why the children of Ifrael did not underftand the law perfeely, and fee Chrift the end of it in the writings of Mofes. What is faid in the next verfe plainly determines the words to this fense: "We the ministers of the Gospel " speak plainly and openly, and put no veil upon ourselvcs, " (as Mofes did,) whereby to hinder the Jews from fee-" ing Chrift in the law; but that which now hinders " them is a wilful blindness of their minds." This seems to be obviating an objection, which fome of the Corinthians might make to the Apostle's boasting of fo much plainnels and clearnels in his preaching; as much as to lay, " If you preach the Gospel, and Christ contained in " the law, with fuch a fhining clearness and evidence, how " comes it that the Jews are not converted to it ?"-His reply is, " Their unbelief comes not from any obscurity in " our preaching, but from a wilful blindnefs." Ver. 15. When Mofes is read, ] St. Paul poffibly alludes here to the cultom of the Jews, which continues still in the fynagogue, that, when the law is read, they put a veil over their faces.

Ver. 17. Now the Lord is that Spirit :] Now where the Lord is, the Spirit is. Le Clerc. Now the Spirit is the Lord; and where that Spirit is, there is the liberty of the Lord. Wells. Thefe words, according to Mr. Locke, rclate to ver. 6. where St. Paul fays, he is a minister, not of the law, nor of the outfide and literal fense, but of the myflical and spiritual meaning of it; which here he tells us is Chrift. And he adds, there is liberty, because the Spirit is given only to fons, or those that are free. See Rom. viii. 15. This verfe may be paraphrafed, "Now

" the Lord Jefus Chrift is that Spirit of the land of which "I fpoke before, to whom the letter of it was intended " to lead the Jews; and it is the office of the Spirit of "God, as the great agent in his kingdom, to direct the " minds of men to it : and let him be univerfally fought " in this view; for where the Spirit of the Lord is, there " is liberty; a moral, liberal, and filial difposition, to " which, under the influence and operation of the Spirit, " the Gofpel brings those who are fubject to bondage un-" der the imperfect dispensation of Moles."

Ver. 18. But we all, with open face ] St. Paul justifies his freedom and plainnefs of fpeech, by his being made by God himfelf a minister of the Gospel, which is a more glorious ministry than that of Moses in promulgating the law. This he does from ver. 6. to ver. 12. inclusively: thence to the end of the chapter, he justifies his liberty of fpeaking, in that he, as a minister of the Gospel, being illuminated with greater and brighter rays of light than Moles, was to fpeak, as he did, with more freedom and clearnefs than Moles had done. This being the fcope of St. Paul in this place, it is plain that all, from the words, which put a vail upon his face, ver. 13. to the beginning of this verse, is a parenthesis; which being so read, the comparison between the ministers of the Gospel and Moses itands clear. " Moles with a veil covered the brightnefs " and glory of God which fhone in his countenance; but " we, the ministers of the Gospel, with open counte-" nances, reflecting as mirrors the glory of the Lord, &c. So Mr. Locke would understand the word xajonici jouevoi, and not beholding as in a mirror, because the comparison is between the ministers of the Gospel and Moses, and not between the ministers of the Gospel and the children of Ifrael. Now the action of beholding was the action of the children of Ifrael; but that of finning or reflecting the glory. received in the mount, was the action of Mofes; and therefore it must be fomething answering to that in the ministers of the Gospel, wherein the comparison is made; as is farther manifest in another express part of the comparifon, between the veiled face of Mofes, ver. 13. and the open face of the ministers of the Gospel in this verse. The face of Mofes was veiled, fo that the bright fbining or glory of God remaining on it, or reflected from it, might not be feen. But the faces of the miniflers of the Gospel are open, Rr2 that

He declareth how he hath used all fincerity and faithful diligence in preaching the Gofpel; and how the troubles and perfecutions which he daily endured for the fame, did redound to the praise of God's power, to the benefit of the church, and to the Apofile's own eternal glory.

that the bright fhining of the Goffel, or the glory of Chrift, may be seen. Thus the justness of the comparison stands fair, and has an eafy fenfe. We are changed into the fame . image, imports, "The reflection of Chrift from us is fo " bright and clear, that we are changed into his very " image ; whereas the light which fhone in Mofes's coun-" tenance, was but a faint reflection of the glory which he " faw when God shewed him his back-parts." Exod. xxxiii. 23. From glory to glory means, "With a continued " influx and renewing of glory;" in opposition to the fhining of Mofes's face, which decayed and difappeared in a little time. See on ver. 7. The next claufe thould be rendered, even as from the Lord the Spirit; that is, " As if " this irradiation of light and glory came immediately from " the fource of it, the Lord himfelf, who is that Spirit, " whereof we are the ministers, ver. 6. which giveth life " and liberty, ver. 17." The liberty there fpoken of is wajonoia, mentioned ver. 12. and the subject of St. Paul's discourse here: -- as is further manifest from what immediately follows in the first fix verses of the next chapter, wherein the attentive reader may find a clear comment on the prefent verse, which is there explained in the fense here given. It may be proper, however, to observe, that there are fome who do not entirely agree with this interpretation. Dr. Doddridge paraphales the verse thus : "In " confequence of the liberty enjoyed by virtue of the " Gofpel, we all, who have been fo happy as fuitably to " welcome it, with unveiled face attentively beholding, " as by a glafs or mirror, the glory of the Lord reflected " from his word, are transformed into fomething of the " fame resplendent image of the blessed Redeemer, whose " fhining face we there fee. And the more fleadfaftly we " behold this illustrious and amiable form, the more do we " partake of it, proceeding gradually from glory to glory; " and all this is as proceeding from the Lord the Spirit." Dr. Heylin observes, that instead of beholding as in a mirror, he thinks the original imports receiving as on a mirror. Theodoret, explaining this verfe, fays, "As clear water " represents the face of those who look on it, fo the pure " heart becomes as it were a mirror and effigies of the " divine glory." Therefore the transformation is not im- rupted fincerity, as in the fight and prefence of God, and puted ultimately to the feeing our God, but to his regard to us, whereby he impresses his image on the pure heart, as a polifhed mirror, while it perfifts in his prefence fleadily, and with an uninterrupted ferenity. I think then that the verse before us may be thus rendered : We, on whom the unveiled face of the Lord impression his glory, as on a mirror, are transformed into his refemblance, &c.

Inferences.-Who can forbear withing, that the infinite importance of the Gofpel meffage may be deeply impreffed upon all who preach, and all who hear it? Life or death is in question,-eternal life or eternal death : and while it is from day to day reviving its thousands, it is to be feared, that in fome places it is, by the righteous judgment of God on hard and impenitent hearts, aggravating the guilt and mifery of its thousands.

How awful is the work of difpenting this Golpel! Who can pretend to be fufficient for fuch things as thefe? Who, that confiders the nature and importance of the ministerial work, can undertake or purfue it but with fear and trembling? Yet, infufficient as they ought humbly to acknowledge themfelves to be, to reckon upon any thing as from themfelves, there is a fufficiency in God imparted to faithful ministers: In confequence of which, they are often made to triumph in Chrift, borne on in a holy superiority to all the difficulties of their work, and feeing that their labour is not in vain in the Lord. Well may that support them under the difcouragements which in other inftances they feel, when the fruit of their labours does not immediately appear; yea, when the prefent state of many under their care is directly contrary to what they could defire. For their work is still with the Lord, and they are a faveet favour to God in them that perifb, as well as in them that are faved. Let them therefore gird up the loins of their mind, and exert themfelves with the utmost vigour; rejoicing in this, that God will on the whole be glorified, and they, faithful unto death, fhalf be finally accepted, and through his abundant grace be amply rewarded.

But, as they defire to fecure this acceptance, they should never allow themfelves, by any foreign mixtures, to adulterate the word of God; folicitous to speak it in its uncoras those who know it is not their business to devise a melfage fage out of their own heart, but to deliver what they have received of the Lord: fo may they hope there shall not be wanting those, who, according to the view which the Apostle gives us of these Corinthians, shall appear as epistles written by the hand of Christ himself, in attestation of their commission from him.

That ministers may more cheerfully hope for and expect fuch an honour, we should pray that the Spirit of God may lead them into the true sense and meaning of Scripture; that they may not unprofitably amuse themselves and their hearers with vain and cold criticisms on the letter of it, so as to neglect and forget what is most fpiritual in its defign and meaning; but that they may, under the divine illumination, attain to the mind of the Spirit, and be enabled to make greater proficiency in unfolding and illustrating the important mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, and may be to multitudes a favour of life unto life.

Still full in our view stands the glorious glass of the Gospel, from which the lustre of the Redeemer's countenance is reflected: it is our duty daily to behold his image there, and contemplate it with an attentive eye, as being solicitous that we may wear fome of those rays; yea, that we may wear them with still increasing lustre; that we may be transformed from glory to glory, and, reflecting these rays, shine as lights in the world.

It will greatly conduce to raife our minds to this laudable temper, if we frequently reflect on the excellence of the Christian dispensation, as a dispensation of the Spirit and of life; whereas the law was the ministration of death: and while from the glory attending the law we infer, with the Apostle, the fuper-eminent glory of the Gospel, we thall learn alfo the fuperior obligation under which it brings us to regard and obey it, and the proportionably greater danger of delpifing it. The law of Moles was foon to be abolifhed; the Gofpel still remains, and shall remain to the end of time. Let us pray for its prosperity, and do our utmost to promote it; and let us earnestly plead with God, that whereas there is now a veil upon the face of the Jiws, even to this day, when the facred records are read among them, they may turn unto the Lord, and find the veil taken away: that fo, by the conversion of Israel as a nation, there may be a glorious accession of evidence to Christianity; and that the Jews themselves may be happy in the bleffing of him whom their fathers crucified, and whom they continue fo unhappily to reject.

While defending fo divine a caufe, and enforcing fo important a meflage, may the minifters of the Golpel ufe all becoming plainnefs of fpeech; and may all Christians know more of that liberty which the Spirit of the Lord gives; that God may in all things he glorified through Jefus Christ! REFLECTIONS.---- 1 ft, To filence his traducers, the Apoftle was compelled to proteft his fincerity; and,

1. He apologizes for feeming thus to commend himfelf. Do we begin again to commend ourfelves? or need we as fome others, the falle Apostles, cpifiles of commendation to you from other churches, or letters of commendation from you, in order to gain credit and influence? No, we need them not, out conduct speaks for us. And ye yourfelves are our epiffle, our best letters testimonial, written in our hearts, in the deep affection that we bear you; fome read your hearts, where their convertion bore an honourable testimony to the inftrument of it; known and read of all men, who observe the work of God's grace evident in you through our labours; forafmuch as ye are manifefly declared to be the epifile of Christ, ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God, the Author of all the gifts and graces which you posses; not in tables of flone, as the law of Moses, but in the flefbly tables of the heart, foftened and renewed by grace, where the impression of the gospel-word is deep and effective. And fuch trust have we through Christ to Godward, that our ministry has been made thus effective to you, to God's glory, your benefit, and our own commendation.

2. He prevents any fuggestion, as if he herein arrogated ought to himself. Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves, who cannot from ourselves naturally produce one good thought, and much less by the mere power of our reasoning effect your conversion: no, but our sufficiency is of God, who alone furnishes us with ability, and crowns our labours with success. To him therefore should the praise of all be for ever ascribed. Note; The best of men have always the lowliest thoughts of themselves.

adly, The Apostle runs a parallel between the Mosaical and Gospel dispensations, shewing the superior excellency of the latter, and the honour of those who were the minifters of it.

Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament, furnishing us with abilities, and giving us fuccess; not of the letter, not ministers of the law, which the Judaizing teachers to affect; but of the Spirit, of the Gospel, which the Holy Ghost accompanies with his divine energy: for the letter, the law, killeth, commanding an immaculate innocence which men cannot perform, and denouncing a curse on the least transgression; but the Spirit, the Gospel, attended with the quickening power of the Holy Ghost, giveth life, bringeth penitent finners into a state of favour with God, and raises them to spiritual life.

But if the law, which was the ministration of death, woritten and engraven in stones, was glorious, when the two tables were delivered with such solemn pomp on Sinai, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses, for the glory of his countenance, so bright it shone, which which glory was to be done away in a while; how shall not the ministration of the Spirit, in the Gospel, be rather glorious, which is attended with fuch mighty energy and quickening influence? And how much do its ministers also exceed in glory? For if the ministration of condemnation, which could only denounce wrath on the difobedient, be glory; how much more doth the ministration of righteousness, even of the righteousnels of God by faith, exceed in glory? And they who minister this glorious gospel must as much excel the ministers of the law, as righteoufness and eternal life are preferable to condemnation and wrath : for even that which was made glorious had no glory in this refpect, by reafon of the glory that excelleth, as stars disappear before the rising fun. For if that which is done away, as is now the cafe with the Mofaical difpenfation, was glorious, and introduced with fuch majefty and fplendor; much more that which remaineth, the Gospel dispensation, is glorious : its privileges and bleffings are incomparably greater.

Seeing then that we have fuch hope in the fuperior excellence of the Gospel above the law, and trust in the divine power to make it effectual, we use great plainness of speech, freely delivering our meffage, and affecting no embellifhments :- Not as Mofes which put a vail over his face, to hide the fplendor of his countenance, intimating thereby, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolified; they, in general, stopped at the letter and the shadows, and perceived not that all was intended to lead them to Chrift, that they might be justified by faith: but their minds were blinded, in general wilfully flupified, (inworkin;) for not only then, but until this day remainsth the fame vail untaken away in the reading of the Old Teflament ; befides the natural vail of darknefs on the minds of the wilfully impenitent, there was an obfcurity in the revelation itfelf, as wrapped up in types and figures, which covered it in fome degree from the truly pious; which vail is done away in Chrift, in whom all the types and prophecies received their accomplishment, and who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, into whose hearts he shines with the light of his Gospel: but even unto this day, when Mofes is read, the carnal Jews are fo hardened through pride, prejudice, and fenfuality, that the vail is fill upon their heart, and they continue ignorant of him to whom the law and the prophets bear witnefs. Neverthelefs when it shall turn to the Lord, either the heart of any individual among them, or the people in general in the laft days, the vail shall be taken away, and they will fee, know, and receive the true Meffiah. Now the Lord Jefus Chrift is that quickening Spirit, who alone can effect this mighty work: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, and the Gospel is truly embraced, there is liberty, freedom from darknefs, guilt, and bondage, and accefs with boldnefs to a reconciled God. But we all with open face, who, through the illumination of the Spirit, have received the Gofpel in the light and love of it, beholding there, as in a glafs, or mirror, which diffinctly reflects the perfon and the glory of the Lord, are changed into the fame image of the adored Jefus, from glory to glory, from grace to grace, (for grace is glory in a degree,) till, if faithful unto death, his likenefs is most completely perfected in us to all eternity: and all this is effected even as by the Spirit of the Lord, or by the Lord the Spirit, the great and glorious Agent in this new creation, who is very God, and in the ministration of his Gofpel effectually brings the faithful faints to the measure of the stature of the fulnefs of Christ. Lord, thou Spirit of all grace, thus transform my foul into the Saviour's perfect image l

C II A P. IV.

HAVING in the preceding chapter defcribed the excellency of the difpenfation of the Spirit, and the transcendant honour and authority which the ministers of that difpenfation possessed by virtue of their office, and the abiding infpiration of the Spirit with which they were endowed, the Apostle told the Corinthians, that the confideration of these things animated him and his brethren to diligence in performing the duties of their ministry, ver. 1. -and also to faithfulnels. For using no craft or deceit in preaching, but plainly and fully manifesting the true doctrines and precepts of the Gospel, they recommended themselves to every man's confeience, ver. 2.-And therefore if their Gospel was veiled to any to whom it was preached, it was veiled only to those who destroyed themfelves by hearkening to their own prejudices and lufts, and of whom, rejecting the Gospel, the devil made use in blinding the minds of others by their fophiftry, ver. 3, 4. -Farther, notwithstanding the Apostles possessed fuch authority and miraculous powers, they did not preach themfelves, but Chrift, as Lord or Author of the spiritual difpenfation of the Golpel; being fenfible that they fhone upon the world, only with a light borrowed from him, ver. 5, 6.-Left, however, the low birth and mean station of the Apofiles, with their want of literature, should be thought inconfistent with the high dignity which they claimed as images of Chrift, St. Paul told the Corinthians, that God choic men of their character and station to be Apostles, and committed the treasure of the light of the knowledge of God, to them as to earthen veffels, to fnew, that the excellency of the power, by which the world was converted from idolatry, and the preachers of the Gofpel preferved amid the evils which preffed them on every fide, did not proceed from themselves, but from God, ver. 1.-So that the dignity of the ministry of the Gospel, instead of being diminished, was greatly increased by the low birth of the Apoftles, and by the evils which they fuftained while executing that ministry; fince thereby they had an opportunity of difplaying their faith, their fortitude, and their benevolence to mankind, ver. 2-7.-To 7 But we have * this treasure in earthen veffels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us.

• Mat. 13. 44. 52. 1 Cor. 7. 28. & 2. 5. Ch. 3. 5, 6. & 5. 1, 6. & 6, 7. & 12. 9. Eph. 3. 8. Col. 2. 2, 3. 1 Thef. 4. 4. 2 Tim. 7. 8. & 2. 2~; Pet. 2. 7. with Judg. 7. 13, 16. Col. 1. 27. °Ch. 1. 8. & 7. 5. Rom. 8. 35, 36. 1 Cor. 10. 13. Ch. 1. 10. If. 46. 4. °Or not alcogether without help, or means.

To illustrate this fentiment, the Apostle gave an affecting description of the fufferings to which he and the reft were exposed, and of the extraordinary support which they received while prefied with these evils, and of their surmounting them all through the affistance of God, ver. 8-14.

Next, to fhew the Corinthians how much they, and the whole body of the faithful, were interested in the fusierings of the Apoltles, he affured them that they endured all the evils which he had mentioned, for the fake of the perfons to whom they preached, that by convincing them of their incerity, God might be glorified through their conversion, ver. 15 .- And therefore they did not flag in their work, although their outward man was daily waiting through the labours and fufferings which they were enduring, ver. 16. -Befides, they knew that their affections fully wrought out for them a most exceeding and eternal weight of glory, ver. 17.-which was the reafon that in difcharging the duties of their ministry, they did not aim at obtaining the feen things of the prefent world, which are all temporal, but at obtaining the unfeen things of the world to come, which are eternal, ver. 18.

Ver. 1. We faint not; ] This is to the fame purpofe with we use great plainness of speech, in the 12th verse of the foregoing chapter, and fignifies in both places the clear, plain, direct, and difinterested preaching of the Gospel; which is what the Apostle in a great measure means by his figurative way of speaking in the former chapter, and which he more plainly expresses in the five or fix first verses of this; the chief business of the former part of this Epittle being, as we have already observed, to justify to the Commission of the Gospel he had been open and candid, without any-hidden design, or the least mixture of any secular interest.

Ver. 2. Have renounced the hidden things of di/honefly,] All difhonefl artifices of falle teachers. It would perhaps be better to translate the word  $a\pi i \pi \pi \alpha \mu \beta \sigma_{\alpha}$ , which we render tensunced, by fet at defiance; which seems more literally to express the original. Some read the latter part of the verse, But commending curfelves by manifelling the truth to every man's conficience, &cc.

Ver. 3. If our Gospel be hid, &c.] If our Gospel be under a well too, it is veiled to those that are loss—who wilfully reject it, and perish thereby. This has an evident reference to what was faid above, concerning the veil on the faces of the Jews; and the text may justly be urged as a proof of the perspicuity of the Apostle's writings in all matters of importance to our falvation.

Ver. 4. The god of this world] That is, the Devil; fo called, because the men of this world worshipped or obeyed him as their god. It would be a good illustration of the prefent passage, if it could be proved, as it has been as ferted by many, that this malignant fpirit was fo early called by the Jews, back, semail, " the god who blinds." Blinded their minds here answers to their minds were blinded, ch. iii. 14. and the 2d and 3d verse of this explains ver. 13, 14. of that chapter. Of the glorious Gospel of Christ might be rendered, of the Gospel of the glory of Christ Glory here, as in the former chapter, may be put for spinning and brightness; so that the Gospel of the glory of Christ denotes the brightness or clearness of the doctrine wherein Christ is manifested in the Gospel. Christ is not only the eternal Son, but he is the image of the invisible God in ail his perfections and glories.

Ver. 5. For we preach not ourfelves,] "We aim not at " exalting our own authority, extending our reputation, " or fecuring to ourfelves any fecular advantage; but, re-" nouncing all fuch views, claims, and defires, we preach " Christ Jefus as the fupreme Lord of his church: and " inftead of fetting up ourfelves for your mafters, we de-" clare ourfelves to be your fervants, for the fake of Jefus; " and are willing, out of regard for you, and, above all, " out of duty to him, to ftoop to the humbleft offices of " love, by which we may be ferviceable to you in your " moft important interefts."

Ver. 6. For God, who commanded the light] "God, who: " by his powerful word, in the first creation of this world, " commanded the light inftantaneoufly to fhine out of that " darknefs which covered the whole face of the deep, " (Gen. i. 3.) hath alfo fhined in our once prejudiced and " benighted hearts, to impart the lustre of the knowledge of " God's glory, difcovered, as we before observed, in the " face of our Lord Jelus Christ; and thence reflected " upon us, and from us to you, for the important pur-" pofes of your fanctification and falvation." This is a continuation still of the allegory of Moses, and the shining of his face, &c. fo much infilted on in the foregoing chapter; for the fuller explication whereof, we will add a word or two more to what has been already faid upon it. Mofes, by approaching to God in the mount, had a communication of glory or light, which irradiated from his. face when he descended from the mount. Moses put a, veil over his face, to hide this light or glory; for St. Paul uses both thefe names for the fame thing : but the glory or light of the knowledge of God more fully and clearly. communicated by Jefus Chrift, is faid here to fbine in his face; and in that respect it is that Christ, in the foregoing verfe, is called by St. Paul the image of God ; and the Apostles are faid, in the last verse of the preceding chapter, to be transformed into the fame image from glory to glery; that is, by their large and clear communications of the knowledge of God in the Gospel, they are faid to be transformed into the fame image; to represent, as mirrors, the glory of the Lord, and to be as it were the images of Christ, as Christ is the image of God.

Ver. 7. We have this treafure in earthen voffels, ] Veffels of clay which have been baked, and are brittle. The word rendered earthen, - dsganicous, -fometimes fignifies shells, which are often made use of to preferve things of value in the cabinets of the curious; and these being likewise brittle, convey the fame idea as the former,-that of the frailty of the human body, and the value of the treasure deposited in them.

Ver. 8. We are troubled on every fide,] This and the following verfes contain a beautiful and pathetic detail of the fufferings of the Apoftles; and the contrast which runs through them gives an air of fublimity to the whole, at the fame time that it conveys a noble idea of the intrepidity of the first Christians. This passage may at first feem a digreffion, but nothing could be more pertinent to the Apostle's grand purpole. He aimed at recovering the affections of these Corinthians, which were much alienated from him: to this end he freely opens his heart towards them, and tenderly reprefents the many and grievous preffures and hardfhips to which love to fouls, and love to theirs among the reft, exposed him. This feems to be the true key to this beautiful and pathetic paffage. Inflead of not diftreffed, Dr. Heylin reads, not crushed; and Dr. Doddridge, not utterly over-preffed. Στειοχωρωμενοι properly fignifies crushed in a strait passage.

Ver. 10. Always bearing about in the body, &c.] "So that " the cruclties which were exercifed in putting Chrift to " death, feem to be acted over again upon us by the rage " of the enemy. Yet all this is, in effect, not that an " immediate period fhould be put to our life and ministry, " as they defire, but that the life alfo of Jefus, now " triumphant above all hoftile power, may be more evi-" dently manifested in the prefervation of this our feeble " body, which enemies, fo many and fo mighty, are con-" tinually endeavouring to defiroy."

Ver. 12. So then death worketh in us, ] Or, is wrought in us. "So that the preaching of the Golpel procures fuf" ferings and danger of death to me, but to you it pro-" cures life; that is, the energy of the Spirit of Chrift, " whereby he lives in and gives life to, those who believe in " him."

Ver. 13. We having the fame Spirit, &c.] Dr. Heylin reads this, We having the fame spirit of faith [which David had] when he fuid I believed, and therefore have I fpoken ;we alfo believe, &c. And he observes, that by the spirit of faith is meant the disposition which faith produces. So spirit of meeknefs, &c. Preachers who speak in this spirit of faith, that is to fay, having in themselves a full conviction of the truths which they deliver, will through grace transfer somewhat of that conviction into the breasts of their hearers. Such confider, that they and their audience mult appear together before Chrift, ver. 14. and are careful to deliver nothing, but what they may avow in the day of judgment. See on Pf. exvi. 10.

. Ver. 15, 16. For all things are for your fakes, ] " For I do " and fuffer all things for your fakes, that the exuberant " favour of God may abound by the thankfgiving of a " greater number to the glory of God." That is, " I en-" deavour by my fufferings and preaching to make as many " converts as I can; that fo the more partaking of the " mercy and favour of God, of which there is a plentiful " and inexhaustible flore, the more may give thanks unto " him; it being more for the glory of God, that a greater " number fhould give thanks, and pray to and love For which caufe I faint not."-Concerning " him. the word faint fee on ver. 1. Here St. Paul gives another proof of his fincerity in his ministry; viz. the fufferings and the danger of death which he daily incurs by his preaching the Gofpel. And the reafon why those fufferings and danger deter him not, nor make him faint at all, he tells them is, the affurance he has that God through Chrift will raife him again, and reward him with immortality in glory. Ver. 17. For our light affliction, ] This is one of the most emphatical passages in St. Paul's writings; in which he speaks as much like an orator as an Apostle. The lightnels of the trial is expressed by To erapp'y The Drivews, the lightness of our offliction ; as if he had faid, " It is even " levity itfelf, in fuch a comparison." On the other hand, the KaS' unepooling els uneforing, which we render, far more exceeding, is infinitely emphatical, and cannot be fully exprefied by any translation. It fignifies that all hyperboles fall fort of defcribing that weighty, eternal glory, fo folid and lafting, that you may pais from one hyperbole to another, and yet when you have gained the laft, it is infinitely below it. It is every where visible what an influence St. Paul's Hebrew had upon his Greek : CER kebed, fignifies to be heavy, and to be glorious; St. Paul in his Greek unites these significations, and says, weight of glory. See Blackwall's Sacred Claffics, vol. i. p. 332. Doddridge and Locke.

Ver. 18. While we look not at, &c.] Or, while we aim not at. This is the exact fignification of the Greek word mor vrow; and our English word "fcope," or "mark " aimed at," is derived from the fame Greek word.

Inferences.-How great is their mercy, who are put into the golpel ministry, qualified for it, and faithful in it; and who, notwithstanding all opposition and reproach, hold on their way without fainting, and feek to be approved of God, and recommended to the confciences of their hearers, by an open publication of the truth, without finister views, and without craft or guile ! They 'do not preach themfelves, but Chrift Jefus the Lord in all his characters, and take pleasure in serving the spiritual and eternal interests of the church, for his fake. And O how excellent is the evangelical treasure, which is put into fuch weak, despicable, and mortal creatures, for the enriching of others, as well as of their own fouls, that all the good found in them, and done by them, may the better appear to be entirely of God, and not at all of themfelves ! If any, that enjoy a clear ministration of the Gospel, continue to be ignorant of its important truths, and unimprefied by them; it is becaule they are wilfully wandering in the loft state of nature, under the power of the prince of darkness, whose great bulinels and defign is to keep them flupid and blind, left be should lose his vassals, through the illumination of their minds, by the glorious gospel of Christ, who is both the effential and reprefentative image of God the Father: but 0 with what convincing evidence, power, and advantage, does this bleffed Gospel appear, when God by his Spirit unveils its glory and fheds its illustrious, amiable, and peactuating light, in the hearts of his faithful fervants and people! They may indeed be in deep distress, but they thall not be utterly overwhelmed : they may refemble YOL. II.

their great Lord and Master in sufferings for his fake; but, by their holy fellowship with him in his death, they shall be fupported under them, and carried through them; and the powerful life of Chrift shall be manifested in their prefervation, till at length, like their exalted Head and Saviour, they shall be raifed up, in high favour and acceptance with God, to a bleffed immortality, together with the whole multitude of perfevering believers, that glory may redound to his name, through their united praifes. They that are fully perfuaded of these things by the faith of the operation of his Spirit, which, for fubitance, is the fame in ministers and private Christians, and in Old and New Testament-faints, will neither be assumed to speak of them, nor faint under any difficulties or difcouragements that furround themfelves. O how invaluable are the fpiritual improvements and final iffues of all our prefent tribulations, when, as the outward man perifhes, the inward man is daily renewed, and grace is ripening apace for glory! And how light and momentary are all the afflictions of this life, compared with that superabounding and eternal weight of glory, which lies beyond them; and for the higheft enjoyment of which God, in the riches of his, free favour and love, through Jefus Chrift, prepares the faithful by means of what they endure in the body ! Experience will help our faith, with respect to these real and vast importances, whilst our governing views and regards are, not to the transitory things of this visible world, but to the infinite, though unfeen felicities of the heavenly state, which abide the fame, without diminution or allay, for ever.

REFLECTIONS .- Ift. The Apoftle, having flewn the excellence of the Gofpel above the law, paffes on to give an account of the diligence and fincerity with which he and his companions discharged their ministry.

1. They laboured with perfeverance and fidelity. Therefore feeing we have this minifly from the Lord, as we have received mercy, and support under all our infirmities, we faint net, amidst our greatest trials cheerfully holding on unwearied in our glorious course; but have renounced the hidden things of diffionefty, abhorring every thing fcandalous or reproachful; using no cover or concealment, not walking in craftinefs, to beguile unstable fouls by any mean arts ; nor handling the word of God deceitfully, corrupting the pure truth by any base alloy of our own, or attempting to accommodate it to the tafte of our hearers; but by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's con-fcience in the fight of God, in all plainness of speech apply, ing the Gospel to men's hearts, under a deep sense of the folemn account we must shortly give of our ministry. Note . (1.) The bufinels of ministers is not to adapt their words to men's humours, but to strike at their hearts. (2.) They S/ who

In his affured hope of immortal glory, and in expectance of it, and of the general judgment, the Apossile laboureth to keep a good conficience; not that he may herein boast of himself, but as one that, having received life from Christ, endeavoureth to live as a new creature to Christ only, and by his miniftry of reconciliation to reconcile others alfo in Christ to God.

who lay their hands to the gospel plough, must never faint, or look back, whatever trials they may meet with in the discharge of their office.

2. He obviates an objection, How, if he spoke so plainly, the truth was yet received by fo few comparatively. But if our Gospel, after all the pains we take, be hid, it is hid to them that are loft, who wilfully perfift in their impenitence and unbelief, and wilfully reject the counfel of God against their own fouls; in whom the god of this world, the devil, bath blinded the minds of them which believe not, increasing and confirming, by his malignant influence, the native hardness and darkness of their hearts, by his allurements or discouragements keeping them fafe under his dominion, left the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person, should shine unto them, enlighten their darknefs, and convince and convert their fouls-and they wilfully submit to all this! Note; (1.) The devil has the general sway in this world; and is, though men in general perceive it not, the real object of their worship. (2.) The way in which Satan's kingdom is maintained in the world is by the prejudices that he raifes against the glorious gofpel of Chrift.

3. He declares their integrity. For we preach not ourfelves, not our own inventions, nor seek to promote our own honour or interests, but Christ Jesus the Lord, making him the grand subject of all our discourses, his person, offices, and grace; and acknowledging ourfelves to be more than your fervants for Jefus' fake, whole glory we feek to advance in the falvation of your fouls. For God, who commanded the light to fine out of darkness, by his almighty word at the beginning, bath shined in our bearts, dispelling the thick clouds of spiritual darkness, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, as it appears in that glorious gospel of which he is the sum and fubstance, and wherein all the divine perfections are exalted to the highest. But we have this treasure of the Gofpel in earthen veffels, committed to frail, poor, and perifhing worms, fuch as we are, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. When fuch weak inftruments are enabled to bear up under all perfecutions, and are made fo amazingly fuccefsful in their labours, it must with the strongest demonstrations be evident, that the work is life.

None can illumine the darkness of a fallen foul, but he that at first Said, Let there be light, and there was light; but he is willing to do this for every finner that will but yield to his grace. > 2dly, Many were the dangers to which, for the Gofpel's fake, the ministers of Christ were exposed; yet none of these things moved them.

> 1. Their trials were great. We are troubled on every fide, with manifold afflictions in every place, yet not diffreffed with anxiety, or difcomposed as if we had no way to escape; we are perplexed, and in doubt what step to take, but not in defpair of the Lord's help and interpolition; perfecuted by wicked men with unrelenting malice, but not forfaken of God, fo as to be given up for a prey to their teeth; caft down through the infirmity of our flesh, but not defroyed; on the contrary, comforted and supported, and triumphant over the power of evil: always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, carrying the marks of our fufferings, which thew that we belong to our crucified Mafter, who fympathizes with us and counts our griefs his own; that the life alfo of Jefus might be made manifest in our body, he, as the living principle within, fuftaining us under all our conflicts. For we which live spiritually by his grace, and amidit our continual perfecutions are still preterved, are alway delivered unto death for Jefus' fake, each day in jeopardy, and ready to be cut off for the teltimony which we bear, that the life alfo of Jefus might be made manifest in our mortal fle/b, it being evidently teen, by the protection which he vouchfafes to us, that he is rifen and at the right hand of God, and that his Spirit has quickened us to newnefs of life; while with unfhaken courage, patience, and perfeverance, in the midft of our fufferings, we defire to finish our course after his example. So then death worketh in us, and we, who are Christ's ministering fervants, are exposed to the greatest dangers; but life in you, who enjoy its comforts in peace : and even our fufferings, as they are a confirmation of the Golpel which we preach, are, through grace, the means of advancing your fpiritual

2. If their trials were great, their supports were greater. (1.) They flood by faith. We having the fame fpirit of faith with the faints of old, which animated the divine Redeemer, and is wrought by the Holy Ghoft in us and you; according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I spoken,-we alfo believe, and therefore speak, fully persuaded of the heavenly doctrines which we preach, and confident that the Lord will support us in our testimony to his gospel. (2.) They were upheld by the hope of a joyful refurrection, knowing, with humble affurance, that he which raifed up the Lord Jefus shall raife up us also by Jesus, in virtue of our union with him, and feall prefent us with you, even with all his faithful faints among you, (for the professions at Corinth were not all faints) and with all his perfevering people every where, faultless before the throne of his glory; and the expectation of this raifes us above all the fears of death. (3.) The confcioufnets that God would be glorified by the fairation of many, who would humbly accept of the offers of his grace, fupported and quickened them. For all things ore for your fakes; all our labours and fufferings are intended to promote your present and eternal happines; that the abundant grace held forth in our ministrations, might, through the thank fgiving of many, redound to the glory of God, who, embracing the golpel, and made partakers of its ineftimable bleffings, cannot but with ccafelefs praifes adore and magnify that gracious God, who hath called them to his kingdom and glory, and, if they be faithful unto death, will assuredly confer it upon them. For which caufe we faint not; but for your fakes, and God's glory, patiently and cheerfully perfevere. (4.) Their own fouls were profited by their afflictions, which was another reason why they should bear up under them. But though our outward man perifs through our hardfhips, labours, and fufferings, set the inward man is renewed day by day, with fresh supplies of grace, ftrength, and confolation, growing more meet for the eternal world to which we are going; and we may well be content with every outward crofs that tends to bring us thus nearer to our crown. (5.) The near and allured prospect of glory was their grand support and comfort. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment,to faith teaches us to judge, - our afflictions are light, compared with the weight of glory which we expect, and momentary, however long continued through life, if viewed against the eternity which succeeds to the faithful faints: - and what is more, - it worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. The words are amazingly emphatical, (Kab' interconsiver is interconsive, auwriou Go'pos D'Ens,) and fuch as no translation can fully render. Steadily, therefore, we perfevere, while we look not at the things which stefeen, but at the things which are not feen, the glorious objects above, which faith realizes to the foul; for the things which are feen are temporal, transitory, and momentary; but the things which are not feen are eternal, glorious beyond conception, and to be enjoyed by the faithful without measure and without end.

CHAP. V.

TO fhew what the things were which the Apostles aimed at, and by the hope of which their inward man was daily recruited, St. Paul mentions in this chapter that eternal habitation in heaven which the faithful are to obtain after death, because there all the objects of their defires will be found, and be enjoyed by them in their utmost perfection, ver. 1.-And knowing that their heavenly habitation will be infinitely preferable to their earthly dwelling, they earnefly defire to be introduced into it, ver. 2.—And being a happinefs which they were fure of obtaining, if they continued perfeveringly to cleave to Chrift, they were certain that, although they were deprived of their earthly habitation by their perfecutors, they would not be found destitute of a habitation after death, ver. 3. Their strong defire, however, to be introduced into their heavenly habitation, did not proceed from difcontentment with their prefent fuffering state, but from the hope of having their mortality then changed into immortality, ver. 4. Now, faid the Apostle, he who hath wrought in us this ftrong defire and hope, is God himfelf, who hath beflowed on us the gifts of the Spirit, as an earnest of what we hope for, ver. 5 .- They were therefore at all times bold in preaching the gospel, both knowing that while they were at home on earth in the body, they were from home from the Lord, and being well pleafed to go out of the body, and be with the Lord, ver. 8 .- For which reason, whether they remained on earth, or were to be removed by death, they earneftly endeavoured to behave in fuch a manner as to please Christ, before whose tribunal all men must appear, to receive in their body according to the deeds which they have done, ver. 9, 10.-The Apostle, therefore, knowing the terribleness of Christ's difpleafure, was at the greatest pains in perfuading men to believe the future judgment; and by his earnestness in preaching that judgment, was approved of God, and he hoped also of the Corinthians, to whom he had made known that interesting event, ver. 11.

But that what he had faid, in commendation of his own faithfulness in the ministry of the gospel, might not be imputed to vanity, he told the Corinthians that he had mentioned these things to afford them a folid ground of rejoicing in him, through and in fubmiffion to divine grace as an Apostle, and to enable them to answer those who boafted in the falle teacher, on account of merely external, and not on account of real qualities, ver. 12 .- Farther, because the faction represented the Apostle as a madman, for preaching the gospel at the hazard of his life, without reaping any worldly advantage from it, he assured the Corinthians, that whether in fo doing he acted in the opinion of the faction as a madman, it was for the glory of God; or whether he acted, in the opinion of the fincere part of the church, as one in his right mind, by fhunning perfecution, it was for the fake of his disciples, that he might be con-S f 2 tinued tinued the longer with them, ver. 13 .--- and in either cafe he was moved by a strong sense of the love of Christ, in dying for all, ver. 14, 15.—Therefore, as an Apofile of Chrift, he knew no diffinction between Jew and Gentile; nor in preaching the gospel did he make any distinction between them, but offered the fame terms of falvation to all, ver. 16.-Declaring that if any man believeth in Chrift, whether he be a Jew or a Gentile, he is a new creature, ver. 17.-created by God, who hath reconciled him to himfelf through Jefus Chrift, and who hath given to the Apossles the ministry of the reconciliation, ver. 18which confifts in publishing that God is by Christ reconciling the world to himfelf, not counting to them their trespasses, ver. 19 .- The Apostles, therefore, in Christ's flead, earneftly befought men to be reconciled to God, ver. 20.-and to perfuade them to be reconciled, they reprefented to them that him who knew no fin, God had made a fin-offering for us, that we might be made the righteoufnefs of God in him, ver. 21.-Now, of all the arguments which the ministers of the gospel can propose, to perfuade finners to be reconciled to God, this inftance of God's love to them is by far the greateft and most affecting; and therefore ought to be much infisted on by them in their difcourfes to the people.

Ver. 1. For we know, &c.] We, as has been faid but now, having eternal glory in view, do not droop in our work, nor faint under our manifold afflictions: for we are not only perfuaded, upon the teftimony of God in his word, that there is a reft provided for his faithful people, but by the witnefs of his Spirit with our fpirits, as his children, we are likewife fully affured that we ourfelves have a perfonal interest in it; and that, when these frail bodies, in which our fouls now dwell, as in their houfe and home, (ver. 6.) during our flate of pilgrimage and warfare upon earth, and which were originally formed out of it, and are like mean and moveable tents, that are erected but for a little while, and muft quickly be taken to pieces, and pulled down : as foon, I fay, as this mortal frame shall be diffolved, whether by a natural or violent death, we make no doubt but that cur spirits, which will then return to God, who gave them, (Ecclef. xii. 7.) fhall be immediately poffeffed of a much more glorious habitation; which we already have in title, through Jefus Chrift, and which he has gracioufly prepared for his faithful faints; even a fecure, firm, and delightful manfion for our fouls, in the immediate prefence of Chrift; (ver. 8.) a manfion not of human, temporary fabric, like tents and tabernacles that are made by the hands of men, but built, like a celestial palace, on immoveable foundations, by the immediate power of God himfelf, (Heb. xi. 10.) for our cternal refidence, in a manner fuitable to his own excellent greatness and goodness, past all danger of remove, or decay, in the highest heaven : and we are fatisfied that, at Chrift's fecond appearing, this mertal body fhall be fathioned like unto his glorious body, by his Almighty power; and that then we shall be clothed again with our immortalized bodies, and so in our whole perfons be ever with the Lord. (Phil. iii. 21. I Theff. iv, 17.)

Ver. 2. For in this we groan, ] The following feems the belt and most unexceptionable exposition of the very difficult paffage before us : " And in this view we groan, r through that intenfenels of fpirit with which we are " earnelly and perpetually defiring to be clothed upon " with our house which is from heaven; fince, being for " clothed upon, we should not be found naked, and exposed to " any evil and inconvenience, how entirely foever we may " be ftripped of every thing that we can call our own here " below. And moreover we who are yet in this taber-" nacle do groan, not only with those longings after a blef-" fed immortality, but also being burthened with the pre-" fent weight of many infirmities and calamities. For " which caufe, neverthelefs, we would not be unclothed " or firipped of the body ; for that is what we cannot con-" fider as in itfelf defirable; but rather, if it might be re-" ferred to our own choice, clothed upon immediately-" with a glory like that which fhail inveit the faints after " the refurrection; that so what is mortal, corruptible, " and obnoxious to these diforders, burdens, and forrows, " may all be fo abforbed and fwallowed up by life, as if " it were annihilated by that divine vigour and energy " which fhall then exert itfelf in and upon us." See 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54.

Ver. 5. Now he that hath wrought us, &c.] "To thefe "noble views and fablime defires." This is a most emphatical manner of speaking; not only afferting that God is the author of it, but afcribing Deity to the author. As if he had faid, "None but God could have raifed us to "fuch a temper." The Spirit is frequently mentioned as the pledge and earnest of immortality; more particularly Ephef. i. 13, 14.

Ver. 6. We are always confident] Undaunted,—of good courage: and fo ver. 8. The original here, and in ver. 8. implies the fame with an faint not, ch. iv. 1. and 16. "I "go on undauntedly without fainting, preaching the gofpel "with fincerity and direct plainnefs of speech." The conclusion which he draws here from the confideration of the refurrection and immortality, is the fame which he makes upon the fame ground, ch. iv. 14, 16. The word 'Evônpaules, which we render at home, properly fignifies, are fojourning, and should certainly be for rendered, it destroying the Apostle's whole argument to translate it, "while at " home in the body;" as it is clearly his design to intimate that this is not our home.

Ver. 7. For we walk by faith, &c.] "We now walk "and conduct ourfelves in the whole courfe of our life, "by the faith of objects as yet unfeen, and not by the fight of those glories, or by a regard to those things which "we can fee." Comp. Gal. iii. 11. Heb. x. 38.

be underflood as fpoken with refpect to death; and then it will imply, that a Christian, as soon as he dies, is prefent with Christ: or it may mean, that he wished for Christ's coming, that his whole man might be translated from this flate of absence. Some have argued from this text, not only against the fleep of the foul during the intermediate flate; but that pious fouls, when departed from our world, go into the highest heaven, where they dwell with Christ; and are not, as fome have supposed, in a place where they have only a transitory fight of him on fome extraordinary eccusions.

Ver. 9. Wherefore we labour, ] We make it the height of our artition, Descripting a, whether flaying in the body, or going out of it: that is, " Whether I am to ftay longer here, or " fuddenly to depart." The foregoing verfe leads us to this fense. From ch. iv. 12. to this place, St. Paul, to convince the Corinthians of his uprightness in his ministry, has been shewing that the hopes and fure expectation which he had of eternal life, kept him fteadfaft and refolute in an open incere preaching of the gospel, without any deceitful arthe; in which his argument flands thus: "Knowing " that God, who raifed up Chrift, will raife me up again, " I, without any fear or confideration of what it may draw " upon me, preach the gospel faithfully; making this ac-" count, that the momentary afflictions which I may fuf-" fer for it here, and which are but flight indeed, in com-" parifon of the eternal things of another life, will exceed-" ingly increase my happiness in the other world, where I " long to be; and therefore death, which brings me home " to Chrift, is no terror to me. All my care is, that "whether I am to flay longer in this body, or quickly " leave it, living or dying I may approve myfelf to " Chrift in my ministry." In the next two verfes the Apostle has another argument to fix in the Corinthians the fame thoughts of him; and that is, the puniliment which he fluill receive at the day of judgment, if neglecting to preach the gospel faithfully, and not endeavouring fincerely and carnefly to make converts to Chrift.

Ver. 11. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we perfuade, &c. "We convince men, and perfuade them "to be Christians, through divine grace, and by that "means are manifested to God as his fervants, and "to your conficiences." Mr. Locke's paraphrafe is, "Knowing therefore this terrible judgment of the Lord, "I preach the gospel, perfuading men to be Christi-"ans; and with what integrity I discharge that duty is "manifest to God; and I trust also you are convinced "of it in your conficiences." See the Inferences and Reflections.

Ver. 12. F.r we commend not ourselves again] From this place, and feveral others in the epifile, it cannot be doubted but that St. Paul's fpeaking well of himfelf had been objected to him as a fault; and in this lay his great difficulty, how to deal with this people. If he answered nothing to what was talked of him, his filence might be interpreted guilt and confusion. If he defended himfelf, he was accufed of vanity, felf-commendation, and folly. Hence it is that he uses to many reasons to shew, that his whole carriage was upon principles far above all worldly confiderations; and tells them here, once for all, that the account which he gives of himfelf is only to furnish them who are his friends, and adhered to him, with matter to justify themfelves in their efteem of him, and to reply to those who opposed him. Of this also the last clause may be underftood; for it is manifest from ch. x. 7, 15. and xi. 12, 22, 23. that his oppofers pretended to fomething in which they gloried, though St. Paul affures us that they were fatisfied in confcience that they had no folid ground of glorying

Ver. 13. Whether we be befide ourfelves,] From this verfe to ch. vi. 12. St. Paul gives another reason for his difinterested carriage in preaching the gospel; and that is, his love to Christ, who by his death having given him life, who was dead, he concludes, that in gratitude he ought not to live to himself any more: and therefore, being as in a new creation, he had now no longer any regard to the things of this world; but being made by God a minifter of the gofpel, he minded only the faithful difcharge of his duty in that miniftry, and purfuant thereunto took care that his behaviour fhould be fuch as he defcribes, ch. vi. 3—10. Befide ourfelves means, "in fpeaking " well of myfelf in my own juftification." Whoever obferves what St. Paul fays, ch. xi. 1, 16, 21. xii. 6, 11. will fcarcely doubt but that the fpeaking of himfelf as he did, was, by his enemies, called glorying, and imputed to him as folly and madnefs.

Ver. 14. Confirainethus;] "Bears us away, like a ftrong "and refiftlefs torrent." Thus much is implied by the original word ouvize. See Philip. i. 23.

Ver. 16. Henceforth know we no man, &c.] "From " this time we have no longer any partial regard to the " Jew more than to the Gentile, on account of the descent " of the former. We do not now efteem any one for " the advantages of this world, riches, learning, or elo-" quence; and even they who have feen and converfed " with Chrift while he was on earth, have now no claim # to be preferred before us. No man knows Chrift to any " lasting advantage, any otherwise than in proportion as he " experiences his power, and obeys his laws: for he governs and instructs us now, as a heavenly King, by " his Spirit." Some interpret the last clause thus : " Nay, " if we have known Christ after the flesh, and governed " ourfelves by any carnal expectations from the Melliah, 4 as a temporal prince, who should render our nation the " terror of the whole world, and raife us to univerfal mo-" narchy, henceforth we know him in these views no " more, but entertain quite different sentiments concern-" ing him."

Ver. 17. Therefore, if any man be in Chrift, &c.] Galatians, vi. 14, 15. may give fome light to this place. To connect this and the preceding verfe with St. Paul's difcourfe here, they must be understood in reference to the falle apostle, against whom St. Paul is here justifying himfelf; making it a grand point, in this as well as his former epiltle, to shew that what the falle Apostle gloried in was no just cause of boasting. Pursuant to this just design of finking the authority and credit of that false apostle, St. Paul, in this and the following verfes, infinuates these two things: 1. That the ministry of reconciliation being committed to him, they should not forsake him to hearken to and follow that pretender. 2. That they being in Christ, and fo a new creation, fhould, as he does, not know any man in the flefb,-not efteem or glory in that falfe apostle, because he might perhaps pretend to have seen our Saviour in the fleth, or to have heard him, or the like. The original word Kriois, fignifies creation, and is fo translated. Rom. viii. 22. and the paffage may either mean, as above, that if any one be in Christ, it is as if he were in a new creation, wherein all former relations, confiderations, and interests are ceased, and all things in that state are new to him; or it may imply (and I doubt not but the word takes in both) that there is a new creation in his heart, -his appetites, apprehensions, and pursuits being changed, and his life actually amended and fully reformed.

Ver. 18. And all things, &c.] Now, &c.

Ver. 19. To wit, that God was in Chrift, Namely, &c. Doddridge. For God was in Chrift, &c. Heylin.

Ver. 20. We are ambaffadors for Chrift,] The Apoftles were fo in a peculiar fence; but if it be the will of Chrift that minifters, in all ages, fhould prefs men to accept the treaty of reconciliation established in him, then it is evident they may be called bis ambaffadors, even though fuch a phrase had never been used in scripture. The term  $T\pi i \rho X \rho s \tilde{\kappa}$  plainly means, in Chrift's slead, as we render it. When Chrift was in the world, he pressed this treaty of reconciliation; and we rife up in his stead to urge it still further. See Matth. v. 24.

Ver. 21. Made him to be fin, &c.] "A fin-offering for "us, that, by the factifice of himfelt, he might explate the "guilt of our transfressions, and that so we might be made "accepted in him, and furnished with a plea as prevalent "for our justification and admission into the divine favour, "as if we had retained our innocence untainted, and in "every respect conformed ourfelves to the righteous fines an evident and beautiful contrast between Christ's being made fin, and our being made righteous favour with God, through Christ, although all fin is perfectly hateful to God.

Inferences, drawn from ver. 10, 11.-It is the privilege and diffinguishing character of a rational being, to be able to look forward into futurity, and to confider his actions, not only with respect to the present advantage, or difadvantage, arising from them; but to view them in their confequences, through all the parts of time in which himfelf may possibly exist, and to eternity. If, therefore, we value the privilege of being reasonable creatures, the only way to preferve it is to make use of it; and, by extending our views into all the scenes of futurity, in which we ourselves must bear a part, to provide for folid and durable happines, through the power of almighty grace. With respect to that principal point, that very grand article of religion,-the expectation of a life after this,-we may observe, that as the wilest men thought there mult be, fo the gospel affures us there will be a day, in which God will judge the world in righteousness, and render to every man according to his works. If this doctrine, indeed, has had a larger and more extensive influence, through the authority of the gospel, than it could have had by the light of any inferior dispensation, the world has then received an advantage by the encouragement given to holinefs and virtue, and the reftraint laid upon vice by these means, which ought ever to be acknowledged with thankfulnefs; although the gofpel, in other respects, yields the firongest motives to gratitude, as well as the most powerful encouragements to univerfal obedience.

1. The refurrection of the body was revealed to give all men a plain and a fentible notion of their being fubject to a future judgment. Death is, in fome fenfe, the deftruction of the man: fure we are that the lifelefs body is no man;—and the fpirit, in its flate of feparate existence, is not properly man; for man is made of foul and body; and therefore to bring the man into judgment to answer for his deeds, the foul and body must be brought together again. This doctrine, established upon the authority of the gospel, effectually removes all difficulties that affect our belief of a future judgment, confidered with respect to religion and morality: for the grand point in which religion is concerned in the prefent inftance, is to know, whether men shall be accountable hereafter for their actions here. Reafon tells us that they ought to be fo; but a great difficulty arifes from the diffolution of the man by death; a difficulty followed by endlefs speculations upon the nature of the foul, its feparate existence, its guilt in this separate state, with respect to crimes committed in another, and in conjunction with the body, &c. But take in the declaration of the gofpel, that foul and body shall be as certainly united at the refurrection, as they were divided by death, and every man be completely himfelf again; and there is no more difficulty in conceiving that men may be judged for their iniquities hereafter, than there is in conceiving that they may be judged here, when they offend against the laws of their country. But fome have asked, "What " body shall be raifed, fince no man has exactly the fame " body two days together ? New parts are perpetually added 55 by nutrition, old ones carried off by perspiration ; fo that " in the compais of a few years, a human body may be al-" most totally altered." But this objection, plausible as it may feem, has nothing to do in the prefent cafe : religion is concerned only to preferve the identity or famenefs of the perfon, as the object of future judgment; and has nothing to do with that kind of identity against which the objection can be supposed to have any force. Were the cafe otherwife, the difficulty would be really as great in human judgments now, as in the divine judgment hereafter. Suppose a murderer at twenty should not be difcovered till he was fixty, and then brought to trial; would common fenfe admit him to plead that he was not the fame perfon who committed the fact; and to allege, in proof of it, the alterations in his body for the last forty years ? Suppose then that, instead of being discovered at fixty, he should die at fixty, and should rife either with the body he had at fixty, or twenty, or any intermediate time, -would not the cafe be just the fame with respect to the future judgment ?- This shews, therefore, that the article of the refurrection, fo far as it is a support of religion and of a future judgment, ftands quite clear of this difficulty.

But the prejudices which affect infidels, or fceptics; moft, on confidering this article of the refurrection, arife from the weakeft of all imaginations,—that they can judge from the fettled laws and courfe of nature what is or is not possible to the power of God. It is very true, that all our powers are bounded by the laws of nature, except when supernatural power is given from on high: but does it follow that God's power must be so bounded, who appointed these

CHAP. VI.

The Apostle declarcs that he hath approved himse'f a faithful minifier of Christ, both by his exhortations, and by integrity of life, and by patiently enduring all kinds of afflistion and difgraces for the gospel; of which he speaketh the more boldly among them, because his heart is open to them; and he expecieth the like affection from them again ; exharting them to flee the fociety and pollution of idolaters, as being them felves - temples of the living God.

these laws of nature, and could have appointed others, if he thought proper? We cannot raife a dead body; our hands are tied up by the laws of nature, which we cannot suipafs; neither can we create a new man : but we certainly know, from reason and experience, that there is one who can: and what can induce us to suppose that he cannot give life to a body a fecond time, who, we can certainly know, gave life to it at first ?- These matters, therefore, we may fafely refer to the power of the Almighty, to which all nature is obedient, and upon which we may fecurely depend for the performance of divine promifes,how unpromifing foever, to our fhort-fighted intellect, the circumstances may be which attend them.

Indeed, the golpel has removed all difficulties which lie in the way of our confidering ourfelves as accountable creatures, and subject to the future judgment of God. It is not the fpirit, or foul alone, but the whole man, who is to be brought to that judgment; and plain fense must fee and acknowledge the reasonableness of judging a man hereaster for the crimes committed in this life, as evidently as it fees the reasonableness of judging him here, when his crimes happen to be detected. So that revelation has brought faith and common fense to a perfect agreement.

2. And this gospel revelation, secondly, has made known to us that Christ shall judge the world. We need not multiply texts to this purpole. John, v. 22, 27. Acts, x. 42. xvii. 31. are fully fufficient to establish a doctrine fo very well known to all Christendom.

But it is material to observe, that this authority is given to Chrift, becaufe he is the fon of man, as he himfelf affures us, John, v. 27. and that the Perfon ordained to be judge is, in respect to one of his natures, a man ;-even the man whom God raifed from the dead, as St. Paul afferts, Acts, xvii. 31. How happy is it for us to have a judge, - I had almost faid so partial, but I may well say so favourable to the faithful, that he was content to be himfelf the facrifice, to redeem us from the punishment due to our fins! When we confider ourfelves, - how weak we are, - how frequently we have been doing wrong ;---and contemplate the infinite the grace of God in vain.

2 '(For he faith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of falvation have I fuccoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of falvation.)

<sup>d</sup> Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed :

majesty, holiness, and justice of God; what account can we hope to give of ourfelves to him, whole eyes are purer than to behold iniquity? But fee, God has withdrawn his terrors, and comes as a man, to be the Judge of men; fo that we may fay of our judge, what the Apostle to the Hebrews fays of our High Priest, We have not a judge who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities ; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without fin.

It may, perhaps, be thought that this is drawing confequences upon the ground of vulgar apprehensions, and that, in reality, there is no difference, whether God judge us in the divine nature, or commit the judgment to the Son of man : for, fince Chrift shall come in his humanity, not only in the power, but in the wifdom and justice of his Godhead alfo, to judge the world, what difference can there be in the judgment, fince in both cafes it must be guided and formed by the wildom and justice of God ?- True it is, that a mere man is not qualified to be a judge of the world: the knowledge of hearts is necessary to the right discharge of that office; a knowledge with which no mere man was ever endowed. But still, if man is to be judge, the fentiments, notions, and feelings of the man, however guided and influenced by the wildom of his godhead, must preside over and govern the whole action; otherwife the man will not be judge.

Hence then we may answer some difficulties which speculative men have brought into the subject of a future judgment. Some have imagined that juffice, mercy, and goodness in God, are not of the fame kind with justice, mercy, and goodnefs in them; and therefore that we can never, from our notions of these qualities in man, argue confequentially to the attributes of God, or to the acts flowing from these attributes: the refult of which is, that when we talk of God's justice, or mercy, in judging the world, we talk of fomething which we do not understand. But if men would confult scripture, these difficulties would not meet them in their way: for furely we know what jultice, mercy, and goodness mean among men; and fince the scriptures affure us that the man whom God raifed from the j I the dead is ordained Judge of the world, we may be very certain that the juffice, mercy, and goodnefs to be difplayed in the future judgment, will be fuch as all men have a common fenfe and apprehenfion of; unlefs we can imagine that a new rule is to be introduced, to which the Judge, and those to be judged, are equally ftrangers. Upon this foot of fcripture then we may certainly know what the juffice, mercy, and goodnefs are by which we must finally fland or fall; and this point being fecured, the speculation may be left to shift for itself.

3. Let us then go, thirdly, one ftep farther, and view the confequences of this judgment;—this folemn judgment, which every mortal muft undergo. If we confult the feriptures, we shall find no evidence of any farther change to be made in our future state, after judgment has once passed upon us. That we are accountable, and shall therefore be judged, reason testifies; but can see nothing relating to us after judgment, except the reward or the punishment confequent upon it.

As reason can shew us nothing beyond judgment, but that flate and condition which are the effect of it : so the Holy Scripture declares, that nothing else there shall be, by describing the rewards and punishments of another life ashaving perpetual duration. Life eternal is prepared for the righteous, and everlasting punishment for the wicked. The fire prepared to receive them is never to go out, the worm prepared to torment them will never die: so that in this view our all depends upon the judgment which shall be finally passed on us at the second coming of our Lord; and therefore there is a justness of thought, as well as great charity to the fouls of men, in what the Apostle adds,—Knowing the terror of the Lord, we perfuade men.

If the Christian revelation has cleared our doubts, by bringing life and immortality to light through the gospel; if it has given us ground for hope and confidence, by alluring us that we shall be judged by him who fo loved us, that he gave himfelf for us, and fubmitted to die that we might live; it has allo given us ground to be watchful and careful over ourfelves, and to work out our falvation with fear and trembling, through the grace of God. For it is a fearful thing to be called to answer for ourfelves before the great Searcher of all hearts :- to answer to Him who loved us, for defpiling the love that he shewed us !--- to answer to Him who died for us, for having crucified him afresh, and put him to open fhame ; and for having accounted the blood of the covenant an unbily thing ! This will be the fad cafe of every impenitent finner. The view of this mifery and diftrefs, which finners are calling upon themfelves by their iniquity, moved the Apoille, and must ever move these who are called to the ministry of the word of God, to warn men to flee from the wrath which is to come. We know the terfor of the Lord, and therefore perfuade men. Happy would the, if, knowing and confidering these terrors, men would fuffer themselves to be persuaded in time, and haste for Voz, II.

REFLECTIONS.—1fl. No wonder, with eternal glory full in his view, that the Apoftle fainted not. He enlarges on the delightful theme, which cannot but minister fomething of the like courage and confolation to every gracious foul. We have,

1. The Apoftle's expectation and defire, which every faithful fervant of Jefus can, in a measure, adopt as his own. For we know, by the evidence of God's word, the testimony of our conficience, and the witness of the Spirit; yea, all the faithful faints of God may have a humble confidence, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle, the frail body in which we as pilgrims at prefent fojourn for a day, be diffelved, and return to the dust whence it came, we have a building of God, infinitely more magnificent, an house not made with hands eternal in the heavens, a celestial palace, prepared for the everlasting refidence of all the faithful, and fuited to the excellence of the glorified foul. For in this tabernacle of clay we groan earnefly, loaded with many afflictions, and defiring to be clothed upon with our houfe, which is from heaven, and to arrive at the celettial city, where fin and forrow shall never enter more: if fo be, that being thus clothed with robes of light and purity, we shall not be found naked, exposed any longer to the storms of this wretched world, but be in eternal joy and felicity. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened, longing for our perfect state of happiness, when we shall be for ever releafed from the burthens of outward afflictions: not for that we would be unclothed, and with to part with our bodies, but clothed upon, that mortality might be favallowed up of life; translated as Enoch, or changed in a moment, as their bodies thall be who are alive at the coming of the Lord. Note, (1.) Our prefent abode is a wretched tabernacle, which must quickly be taken down. Are we panting after that eternal manfion which is prepared for the faithful faints of God? (2.) To a foul that has ever tafted of the bitternefs of fin, and groaned under the trials and temptations of this mortal state, the exchange of worlds is a confummation devoutly to be wifned for.

2. The Apofile mentions the ground of his expectation and hope. Now be that hatb acrought us for this felf-fame thing is God, whole mighty energy has fpiritualized our fouls, and led them up to feek thole high and heavenly things: who alfo bath given unto us the earneft of the Spirit, in his graces, contolations, and abiding refidence in our hearts. Therefore we are always confident in the humble alforance of fupport under all our trials, till they fhull happily end; knowing that whilf we are at home in the body, we are abfent from the Lord, and, like pilgrims, diftant from our true home and reft. For we walk by faith, not by fight, looking above all prefent objects to the eternal world, and having our hearts influenced, and our conduct regulated accord-Tt ingly; ingly; we are confident, I fay, in the experience of God's prefent love; and willing rather to be abjent from the body, and to be prefent with the Lord; well pleafed, if God fo willed, to bid an eternal adieu to all our infirmities and afflictions, and enter immediately into the beatific vision of our Lord. Wherefore we labour, that, whether prefent or abfent, we may be accepted of him. This is our holy ambition, fo to be found in him, fprinkled with his blood, and walking under the influence of his grace, that now, and in the day of his appearing and glory, both our perfons and fervices may meet with his approbation. Note, (1.) None enter the heavenly world, but those who have the earnest of the Spirit in their hearts, and are made meet for the inheritance among the faints in light. (2.) Faith in God's promifes infpires confidence of their fulfilment; we know that we have not followed cunningly-devifed fables. (3.) They who, by faith, behold the glories of a better world, cannot but with pleafure look forward to the happy change. (4.) The ftronger our hope of heaven is, the more enlivened will be our diligence in the way that leads thither.

3. He reminds them of the awful day which approached, as a fpur to himfelf, and a warning to them. For we must all appear before the judgment-feat of Christ, where, without cilguife, every man's real character will appear, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad; admitted graciously to the reward of eternal bleffednefs, or finking under righteous vengeance into the abyfs of endless milery. Knowing, therefore, the terror of the Lord, and the fearful end of the hypocrite and ungodly, we perfuade men, by every alarming and alluring motive, to fly from the wrath to come, and embrace the gospel which we proclaim. But, whether they will hear or forbear, we are made manifest unto God, who knows our fimplicity in all our ministrations, and I truft alfo are made manifest in your consciences; for our labours and fufferings bear witnefs to the unfeigned concern that we have fhewn for your fouls. Note, (1.) The fense of an approaching judgment should awaken a holy folicitude to be ready for it. (2.) Gospel ministers mult use the terrors of the Lord to roufe the lethargic finner, and urge him to fly from his impending ruin.

2dly, The Apostle,

1. Prevents an infinuation which might have been fuggefted by his enemies, as if he meant to commend himfelf. For we commend not ourfelves again unto you, nor fpeak this with a view to ingratiate ourfelves into your good opinion, but to give you occasion to glory on our behalf, that ye may have fomewhat to answer them which glory in appearance, and not in beart, furnifhing you with arguments to filence the vain hoaftings of those Judaizing teachers, who would malign and traduce us. For whether we be beside ourfelves, and in our zeal for the gospel talk as men distracted, as they would infinuate, it is to God, and for his glory, that we thus speak; or whether we be foher, and, as the wister part among you justly think, fay nothing but the words of truth and sobernefs, it is for your cause, whose falvation we feek to promote.

2. He declares the noble principle which influenced his preaching and practice. For the love of Chrift confirmenth us, because we thus judge, and have determined, on maturest deliberation, that if one died for all, for finners of all degrees, whether Jews or Gentiles, without diftinction, then were all dead, alike in need of his redemption, by nature the children of wrath, and under the curfe of a broken law; and that he died for all, that they which live, not only redeemed by his blood, but quickened by his Spirit, fould not henceforth live unto themselves, for their own cafe, interests, or honour, but unto him which died for them, and rofe again, devoting themselves to his blessed fervice, who purchased them at fo dear a rate. Note, (1.) A fense of Christ's love upon the heart is the only genuine principle of true obedience. (2.) We then truly live, when the Redeemer's giory is made the grand aim of all our conversation.

1. The Apostle determines, without respect of persons, to preach the gofpel alike to Jews and Gentiles, who are both redeemed by the fame Lord. Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flefb, paying no regard to any external privileges of descent from Abraham, or to circumcifion : yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, and many of us formerly thought, during his abode on earth, that he was come to erect a temporal kingdom, and exalt the Jewish nation to the pinnacle of human glory, yet now beneeforth know we him no more; these foolish prejudices are removed; we have got an acquaintance with the fpiritual nature of his falvation, and know that the great defign for which he became incarnate was to advance the divine glory in the recovery of loft fouls, whether Jews or Gentiles, without diffinction, even of as many as will believe in his name.

2. He urges, as the main point of Christianity, a real change of heart. Therefore if any man be in Christ, vitally united to him, he is a new creature, though the fame perfon, yet morally fo renewed in the Spirit of his mind, and fo fpiritualized in understanding, will, and affections, that he is quite different from his former felf: old things are passed away; his naturally corrupt principles and practices are laid aside, and behold, with wonder, the amazing alteration h. all things are become new; he has new light in his mind; a new bias given to his will and affections; his whole courfe of life is altered; his principles, prospects, ways, thoughts, pursuits, company, are as directly opposite to what they were before, as if he were really another man. Reader, haft thou experienced this change?

3. This new creation is God's work, and wrought, by means of his golpel, for and in all who will yield to be faved by his grace. And all things are of God, who planned and executes the wondrous fcheme of our redemption for all his faithful faints; and bath reconciled us to himfelf by Jefus Chrift, through his atoning blood, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Chrift reconciling the world, Gentiles as well as Jews, unto bimselfs by that amazing expedient of the fubficitution of his own Son

Son in the finner's stead, not imputing their trespasses unto them, but laying upon him the iniquities of us all; and bath committed unto us the word of reconciliation, that we should publish this gospel of peace to every creature. Now then we are ambaffadors for Chrift, fent, in his name, to heal the dangerous breach between the holy God and the finful foul, as though God did befeech you by us, under whole commillion we all with authority, and speak in his name: we pray you, by every endearing argument, as you value your immortal fouls, and urge you, in Chrift's stead, whole person we represent, and whose gospel we minister, be ye reconciled to God; submit to the righteousness which is of God, by faith; accept his proffered pardon and grace; bow humbly at his feet; without referve yield up yourfelves to him, that the reconciliation may be mutual. For he hath made him to be fin, a fin-offering, for us, who knew no fin of his own, but willingly took our iniquities upon himfelf, and fuffered for them, making a full atonement and fatisfaction to the justice of God; that we might be made the rightcoufness of God in him, by virtue of our faith in him, and union with him. My foul, with wonder and delight hear and embrace these glad tidings; and may thy whole and conftant truft be in his infinite merit !

CHAP. VI.

THE Apostle having affirmed in the foregoing chapter that the ministry of reconciliation was committed to the preachers of the gospel; he intreated his fellow-labourers in that ministry, the bishops and pastors at Corinth, to exert themfelves with the utmost fidelity and diligence in their work; because if they were either unfaithful or negligent, they would be guilty of receiving that honourable ministry in vain, ver. 1.-Then he put them in mind of God's promife to affift his faithful fervants, and, by adding, Now is the accepted time, now is the day of falvation, he infinuated that there are feafons in which God more efpecially bleffeth the labours of his fervants, which, therefore, ought not to be neglected by them. And to carry the matter home to their confcience, he told them that the feafon then prefent was fuch a day of falvation, ver. 2.-These earnest exhortations the Apostle addressed to his fellow-labourers, that they might give no encouragement to any one to commit fin, either by their negligence, or by their teaching a lax morality, like the falfe apoftle; becaufe it would occasion the ministry of the gospel to be blamed, as encouraging licentiousness, ver. 3.-He therefore befought them to establish themselves, through divine grace, as faithful minifters of Chrift, by their virtues, both passive and active; and also by found doctrine, and by a right behaviour, both in private and in public, ver. 4-10.

Having thus exhorted his fellow-labourers, the Apostle addressed the Corinthian brethren in general, telling them, bis mouth was opened to them, bis heart was enlarged; he space plainly to them, from love. And, as a reward, he defined an equal return of affection from them, ver. II, 12, 13.—Then proceeded to give an advice, which he knew would be difagreeable to fome of them; namely, not to join themfelves in marriage with idolaters and unbelievers, because, the principles and practices of fuch persons being directly contrary to the principles and manners of Christ's disciples, the Corinthians could have no prospect of union and peace in fuch marriages, ver. 14, 15 .- Or, although love and peace were maintained, their idolatrous fpouses tempting them to join in the worship of idols, they might lofe that holinefs which rendered them the temple or dwelling of God, ver. 16.-as was plain from what God faid to the Ifraclites, Come out from among them, &c. and ye shall be to me fons and daughters, ver. 17, 18.-Then to fnew that these promises were made to the disciples of Chrift, as well as to the disciples of Moses, the Apostle added, as the conclusion of his discourse on this subject, chap. vii. 1. Having therefore thefe promifes, beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, &c.

Ver. 1. We then, as workers together with him] As the joint-labourers of God. Doddridge. As inftruments employed by God. Heylin. See I Cor. iii. 9. Receiving the grace of God in vain, is the fame with believing in vain, I Cor. xv. 1. That is, receiving the doctrine of the gospel for truth, and profeffing Christianity, without experiencing its power, and performing what the gospel requires.

Ver. 2. For he faith] See on Itai. xlix. 8. The Apoftle's reafoning is, God, addreffing himfelf in the paffage produced from Ifaiah to the Meffiah, fpeaks of a limited time, in which the Meffiah's petition, fpeaking more bumano, after the manner of men, was welcome to him, and in which he was ready to grant falvation; and behold, now is the accepted time, - now is the precious feafon, when, by the wonderful favour and goodnefs of God, complete forgivenefs and cternal felicity are freely offered. This verfe should be read in a parenthesis. See the introduction to the chapter.

Ver. 4. In afflictions, &c.] Dr. Whitby thinks that the first word  $\Theta_{\lambda_1 \psi_1 \varsigma_2}$ , fignifies affliction in general; the fecond, ' $A_{\nu \alpha' \gamma \alpha \eta}$ , more grievous and unavoidable troubles; and the third, surgrapica, such preflures as reduce us to the greatest ftraits. See on ch. iv. 8. The compound fense, therefore, on the whole, is, "We are, as it were, hemmed in " with inevitable, and, humanly speaking, inextricable " calamities on every fide." Beza interprets the word dxararacolaes, rendered tumults in the next verse, of " such the attacks as a man cannot stand against; but which bear " him hither and thither with violence." He would render it in Latin by the word exagitationibus.

Ver. 6. By purenefs, by knowledge, &c.] By purity, or chaftity. Heylin. "By knowledge of those divine truths "which it is our great businefs to teach others; and by "the due exercise of that knowledge, through the power "of grace, in a constant command over our passions." Dr. Scott by knowledge understands Christian prudence.

" affault on every fide, it is our care flill to be clothed " and girded about with the armour of righteoufnefs, both " on the right hand and on the left; well knowing that " armour to be impenetrable." On the right hand, and on the left, means on every fide; — perfectly and entirely. Some refer it to the Christian's being armed, through grace, against the temptations of prosperity and adverfity. Mr. Locke's paraphrafe is, " By uprightnefs of " mind, wherewith I am armed at all points, both to do " and to fuffer." It is fearcely neceffary to obferve to the reader, how extremely fublime and pathetic this whole paffage is. Comp Philip. iv. 18. I Tim. vi. 17. Eph. i. 3. Rev. xxi. 7. 1 Cor. iii. 21-23.

Rev. xxi. 7. 1 Cor. iii. 21-23. Ver. 11. O ye Corinthians,] Another argument made use of by St. Paul, to justify and excuse his plainness of fpeech to the Corinthians, is the great affection that he has for them; into an expression whereof he here breaks out in a very pathetic manner. 'This, with an exhortation to feparate themfelves from idolaters and unbelievers, is what he infifts upon from this place to ch. vii. 16. "O ye Co-" rinthians! my mouth is open to you; my heart is en-" larged to you: my affection, my tendernels for you " is not ftrait or narrow. It is your own narrownefs " makes you uneafy. Let me speak to you, as a father to " his children : in return, do you likewife enlarge your " affections to me : be ye not affociated with unbelievers, " (ver. 14.) have nothing to do with them in their vices " or worship, or by uniting yourselves in marriage to them; " for what fellowship hath righteous fields," &c. See ch. vii. 1.

Ver. 12. Ye are not firaitened, &c.] "There is no want "of kindnefs in our fouls toward you; but, alas! there is reafon to fear, concerning fome of you at leaft, that your own hearts are too much fhut up, through the workings of unbelief, carnality, and coolnefs of affection, against us, and against the confolations which are in "Chrift for you, which fuit your circumstances, and of which we would fain have you partakers."

Ver. 14. Be ye not unequally yoked, &c.] "Be not af-"fociates in marriage, in worthip, or in any thing with "infidels; for what union can there be," &c. See on ver. 11.

Ver. 15. Hath he that believeth, &c.] Or, hath a believer, &c.

Ver. 16. The temple of God; ] There feems a peculiar ftrength in this interrogation; "If God would not endure "idols in any part of the land in which he dwelt, how "much lefs would he endure them under his own roof?" No words in our language can equal the force of the Greek, which we render, I will dwell in them; -twawaa iv duroic, —"I will take up my indwelling in them." This was a promife made to the Jews on their being converted; and confequently refers to their privileges, as members of the Chriftian church; which fhews the propriety of the application, Jer. xxxi. 33. xxxii. 37, 38.

Ver. 17, 18. And be ye feparate, faith the Lord,] As God's promifes of dwelling in a peculiar manner among the Jews obliged them to feparate themfelves from the converse of their heathen neighbours, that they might not be enfnared with their fuperflitions; much more are Chriftians obliged, by that peculiar gracious prefence of God which they enjoy, to feparate themfelves from all impure and idolatrous worfhip. It has been questioned whence this quotation is taken. Some fay from Jer. xxxi. 1. &c. but that does not fufficiently express the paternal relation,—I will be a Father, &c. Others refer it to 2 Sam. vii. 8, 14. which may be applied to Chrift, and in him to believers. Comp. Heb. i. 4, 5. Some think it is not expressly to be found any where, and that it refers to all the fcriptures, where God calls his people by the title of children.

the Father, that finners might be accepted through him ! The day of gofpel grace is the only day for finding acceptance with God; and therefore every one should see to it, that he receive it without delay, and do not hear of its glad tidings in vain. But how careful should ministers be, to behave in fo unblameable a manner, as not to difgrace their facred office, nor prejudice their hearers against the doctrines they preach ! They are to approve themselves faithful, by their purity and knowledge, patience, kindnels, and unfeigned love, in all their fufferings, trials, and labours, by the affiftance of the Holy Ghoft; by a right ule of the word of truth and the armour of righteoufnels, to guard them against temptations on every fide, even such as arile from honour and difhonour, from evil report and good report : and they fhould labour, by divine grace, to behave as true and faithful perfons, and to be made manifest as such, in the consciences and esteem of real Christians, while they are traduced as deceivers, or are treated 25 mean and infignificant wretches, by others. In this way of acquitting themselves, behold how fignally God appears for them. How much foever they may be chastened, they are wonderfully kept alive, till their Lord has done his work by them : how fad foever their outward condition may feem to be, they are filled with all joy and peace in believing: and how poor foever they be in this world, they poffeis all things in Christ, their Head, and are inflruments of making many rich toward God. O how freely and affectionately are their hearts and mouths open to their flocks; and what a reasonable return is it, that their people's hearts fhould be enlarged in like love to them! For they are neither ftraitened in the love of their pastors, nor in their ministrations of the promises; but all their straitness lies within themselves, in their own carnality and unbelief. And how concerned should believers be for grace, to enable them to live answerable to the eralted privileges by which God has honoured and diftinguished them; to abstain from every thing, that has the kaft afpect of falling in with any corruptions that lie in opposition to the purity of their faith, worship, and obe-Gence; and to take heed that they be not unequally yoked with unbelievers in any relation, or in any fenfe, that tends to enfnare and defile them. For they can no more, as believers, have Christian fellowship with others in finful, fuperstitious, and idolatrous customs, than righteousness and unrighteousness, light and darkness, Christ and Belial, or the temple of God and idols can be reconciled and harmonize. And, to encourage the people of God to feparate from every thing polluting, and offensive to him, he, who is the Lord Almighty, has promifed that, in their relinquishing such things, they shall be no losers; but that he will dwell in them, and commune with them; will receive them into his special care and protection; and will be the best of Fathers to them, and treat them as his fons and daughters.

REFLECTIONS.-1st, We have an account,

1. Of the general exhortation which, as ambaffadors for Chrift, St. Paul and his fellow-labourers addreffed to all their hearers. We then as workers together with him, as the inftruments that he employs in calling loft finners to a state of reconciliation with God, befcech you alfo, among others to whom we are fent, that ye receive not the grace of God in vain, nor flight his Golpel, remaining empty professions, inftead of actual poffeffors, of the power and life of godlinefs. For he faith, addressing his Son, the Messiah, Ifa. xlix. 4-6. we called to improve the prefent now! (2.) Ministers must with importunity and eagerness urge upon dying men the necessity of attending instantly to the things of their everlasting peace, before they be hid from their eycs

2. Of their carefulness to avoid every occasion of offence. Giving no offence in any thing, that the miniflry be not blamed; behaving to difcreetly, both among Jews and Gentiles, as to give no ground of prejudice against that gospel which we preach, but in all things approving ourfelves as the minifiers of God, becoming the character that we bear; in much patience, meekly refigned, and fleadily perfevering; in afflictions, of various kinds, which we fuffer for our work's fake; in necessities, wanting even food and raiment; in difires, from which we see no human way to extricate ourfelves; in firipes, beaten both in the fynagogues and before the heathen tribunals; in imprisonments, cast into dungeons; in tumults, from outrageous mobs; in labours, unceasing; in watchings, in feflings, having our reft broken, and our provision scanty; and sometimes voluntarily denying our-felves food and sleep on a religious account. And in these fufferings we are supported by purenels, acting with the greatest simplicity of intention, and integrity of conduct; by knowledge, fully acquainted with the truths which we deliver; by long fuffering, bearing with the perverfenefs and provocations of oppofers; by kindnefs, in temper and manners gentle and courtcous; by the Holy Ghost, of whole gifts, graces, and confolations we abundantly partake; by love unfeigned to God and man; by the word of truth, which unadulterated we deliver; by the power of God, whole everlasting arms are under us, and who, in the miracles that he enables us to work, bears testimony to our doctrine; by the armour of righteoufnefs on the right hand and on the left, furnished out of the armoury of God with every thing neceffary for our fpiritual warfare; by honour and diffeonour, not elated with the high effecem of some, nor discouraged by the infolent contempt of others; by evil report, and good report, mentioned with great commendation by our friends, and branded with the most infamous flanders by our enemies; as deceivers, fo treated by many, and yet true, proved and found faithful to Christ, and the fouls of men; as unknown, reprefented as men of no figure and despicable, and yet well known; those who are best acquainted with us, are sensible of our real characters, of our importance and ulefulnels; as dving, and every hour in jeopardy, and behold we live, amidst all our dangers; as chastened from the Lord, and by the hands of men, and net killed, immortal till our work is done; as forrowful, under manifold temptations, yet alway rejuicing in a fense of the divine love and favour; as poor in this world, yet making many rich, with the unfearchable riches of Christ; as having nothing, which we can call our own, dependent on Providence for daily bread; and yet poffifing all things, having a prefent fulnels in the contentment that we enjoy, and bleffed with all the internal riches of grace.

adly, The Apoftle's heart glowed with warm affection, and he cannot but unbosom himself. O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged; we speak with the greatest freedom, and long for your falvation. Ye are not firaitened in us; we love you ardently; we would keep back nothing from you that could promote your fpiritual and eternal interests; but ye are straitened in your own bowels, and fail to make the fuitable returns of gratitude, or to receive fully the bleffings which we communicate. Now for a recompence in the fame, (I speak as unto my children from whom I may justly expect the strongest filial regard) be ye alfo enlarged, in mutual love toward us your faithful ministers, and in your cordial reception of that bleffed Gofpel, with all its precious doctrines and ineftimable privileges, which we declare unto you. As a father then I admonish you, for the credit of your profession, and for the good of your own fouls, be ye not unequally ysked together with unbelievers, intermarrying with the unconverted heathen, or otherwife entering into near and close connections with them, particularly not joining in any of their religious fervices: for what fellowship bath righteousness with unrighteousness? What holy friendship can subsit between a renewed and an unrenewed soul? And what communion, in fociety and converse, hath the enlightened Christian with the unawakened finner, any more than light with darknefs? And what concord hath Chrift with Belial? What harmony can fublist between the members of Christ and the children of the wicked one? Or what part or lot bath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idels? How can the worshippers of the true Jehovah, and who are themselves his living temple, join with hea-thens in their idolatrous worship? How absurd is it, and incongruous ? For ye are the temple of the living God, where his divine Spirit is pleafed to take up his abode; as God hath faid, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, in a nobler fense than he ever was in his temple of old, bleffing them with his prefence and abiding communion; and I will be their God, united to them in love, and making them partakers of my Divine Nature; and they shall be my people, yielding to me a holy and willing obedience. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye feparate from all unneceffary intercourfe and familiarity with the furrounding heathen, faith the Lord; and touch not the unclean thing; keep at the greatest possible distance from idolatry and every abonimation; and I will receive you as my peculiar people, and will be a Father unto you, flewing you the most endeared affection; and ye foall be my fons and daughters, faith the Lord Almighty, admitted to that high dignity and most inestimable privilege. Note; (1.) A child of God must separate himself from the ways and manners of 2 world that lieth in wickedness. (2.) God cannot bear 2 rival in our hearts; no idols must be harboured there.

CHAP. VII.

6 Nevertheleis <sup>b</sup> God, who comforteth those that are cash down, comforted us by the coming of Titus;

7 And not by his coming only, but by the confolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us 'your earnest defire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; fo that I rejoiced the more.

8 * For though I made you forry with a letter, I do not repent, though I did repent: for I perceive that the fame epiftle hath made you forry, though it were but for a feafon.

10 "For godly forrow worketh repentance to falvation not to be repented of: "but the forrow of the world worketh death.

11 For behold this felf-fame thing, that <sup>p</sup> ye forrowed after a godly fort, what carefulnefs it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourfelves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement defire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! In all things ye they might lofe their affection for him, he intreated them to acknowledge and love him as a faithful Apolle of Chrift; fince neither by his doctrine, nor by his actions, had he injured, or corrupted, or deceived any of them, ver. 2.—And becaufe, in thus fpeaking, he obliquely infinuated that their new teacher had done thefe injuries to them, he affured them, that he did not deride their fimplicity, in fuffering themfelves to be foulded: for, as he faid before, he had the most cordial affection for them, ver. 3.— But he fpake freely to them, becaufe he had boasted of their good difpolitions, and becaufe their obedience in excommunicating the inceftuous perfon, had filled him with confolation, ver. 4.

Farther, to make them fenfible of the greatness of his joy on account of their obedience, he pathetically described his anxiety of mind, occasioned by his not meeting with Titus at the time he expected him, ver. 5. and the pleafure which his arrival, with the good news of their fubmiffion and love, had given him, ver. 6, 7.-And as they had taken his admonitions in good part, he told them, he did not repent of having made them forry for a little while, by his former letter, ver. 8. - fince their forrow was of a godly fort, and had wrought in them, through the grace of God, true repentance, ver. 9, 10.-He told them likewife, that he wrote to them to excommunicate the inceftuous perfon, to fhew the care which he took of them in the, fight of God, ver. 12 .- For which reason, their kind reception of Titus, and their obedience, whereby he was made joyful and his spirit was refreshed, had comforted the Apostle, and filled him with exceeding joy, ver. 13 .-And seeing before Titus went to Corinth, the Apostle had boafted to him of the good disposition of the Corinthians, he told them he was glad that his boafting was found true, ver. 14 -In the last place, he informed them, that Titus entertained a most tender affection for them, which was mcreafed by his remembering their obedience to the Apolle, and their kindness to himself, ver. 15.-The Apostle, therefore, rejoiced that he now had confidence in them, in every thing, ver. 16.

Ver. 1. Having therefore these promises,] This verse should certainly have been connected with what goes before, and not have begun a new chapter. Some would read the latter part of it thus: From all filthiness of the flesh, and perfecting the holiness of the Spirit in the sear of God. If we understand it according to our version, the meaning is, "Let us "endeavour, through divine grace, to purify ourfelves "from every actual and outward defilement, and from "every inward sensual affection which can pollute our "hearts, and render them displeasing to God."

Ver. 2. We have defrauded no man.] The original word fignifies, "to indulge a covetous temper, and make a prey of "others by it;" and perhaps intimates, that the falle teachers, of whom he had fo much reason to complain, had done fo.

Ver. 4. Boldness of speech] Freedom of speech. Doddridge. The word rendered exceeding joyful, internetoreuouae, is very expressive, and seems to be a word of the Apoille's own making.

Ver. 6. Nevertheless,] Or, but.

Ver. 8. Though I did repent:] However anxious I might before have been. The original word Metamehica firicity expresses an after-cure and anxiety for any thing that has been done; whereas the word repent always fignifies a wish that it had not been done. Now, as what St. Paul did in writing the former episse was proper, and done under the direction of the divine Spirit, it does not feeny reasonable to suppose that he really repented of it; and therefore the above translation, which is agreeable to the original word, seems proper. The word may also fignify a kind of mission of heart of the success; which is natural when the reproof, however neceffary, is given to a perfon whom one tenderly loves, and where the event is dubious, as it might be in this instance. Dr. Heylin renders the last clause, though but for a short time.

13 Therefore we were comforted in your comfort: yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, ' because his spirit was refreshed by you all.

14 For ' if I have boafted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed; but as we spake all things to you in truth, even fo our boafting, which I made before Titus, is found a truth.

fally underflood to fignify, " not to have been guilty;" row here recorded, the Apoftle with no lefs truth than which could not be the fenfe of the Apostle, he having charged the Corinthians fo strongly in his first epistle. His meaning mult therefore be, that they had now refolved on a contrary course, and were so far clear; that is, were fet right, and in a good disposition again, as he defcribes it in the former part of this verse; and therefore the expression is The meriquals, which we render in this matter, might perhaps better be rendered in fact; that is, "by "your forrow, your fear, &c." It cannot well be tranflated in this matter, understanding thereby the punishment of the fornicator,-for that was not the matter of which St. Paul had been speaking; but the Corinthians siding with the falfe apostle against him, had been the subject of the preceding part of this, and of the three or four foregoing chapters, wherein he justifies himself against their flanders, and invalidates the pretences of the adverse party. This is what lay chiefly upon his heart, and what he labours both in this and the former epiftle to rectify, as the foundation of all the diforders among them; and confequently is that wherein he rejoices to find them all fet right. Indeed, in the immediately following verfe he mentions his having written to them concerning the fornicator, but it is only as an argument of his kindnefs and concern for them; but that which was the great caufe of his rejoicing, was the breaking the faction, and the reuniting them all to himfelf in Chrift; which he expresses in the word all, emphatically used, ver. 13. 15. and thence he concludes thus; I rejoice, therefore, that I have confidence in you in all things, ver. 16. His mind was now at reft : the partifans of his oppofer having forfaken that leader in whom they had fo much gloried, and being all through the bleffing of God now come over to him, he doubted not but all would go well, and therefore here drops the subject.

Ver. 16. I rejoice therefore, &c.] The address of all this part of the epiftle is ftriking and excellent: this verse in particular finely introduces what he had to fay in the following chapter, and is ftrongly illustrated by ch. ix.

Inferences drawn from ver. 6-11.-From the confideration of the different effects of worldly and of religious forholy art infinuates to the Corinthians, how really he had acted the part of a friend towards them, in bringing them through divine grace to a due fense of forrow for the fins they had committed.—But it is the part of a friend to eafe our minds of grief, to step in between us and forrow, and to make us, as far as it is possible, forget our misfortunes. Why then, it may be asked by many, do the ministers of Chrift perpetually fuggest new fears to us, and still labour to awaken our fouls to a fense of their milery, and to fill us with forrow, by continually reprefenting to us the greatness of our loss?-To this let the Apostle answer for himfelf, and for all, (as in ver. 9.) I rejoiced, not that ye were made forry, but that ye forrowed to repentance.

If from worldly forrow there can arife nothing but certain woe and mifery; if the anguish of mind springing therefrom produces feebleness of body, and the lamenting our past misfortunes renders us incapable of the enjoyments which are present; happy is the man who can bear up against afflictions, and with an undisturbed mind submit to those evils which no forrow can either alleviate or prevent. But, if in godly forrow the effects are just the contrary; if penitential grief brings us to a knowledge of ourfelves; if it brings us to Jefus Chrift, the only refuge for the wounded fpirit; and thereby we are at peace with God and ourselves; if now life is rendered comfortable, and death not terrible; if we are rid of fear for the prefent, and filled with hope of future glory; how happy are we, who through conviction of and forrow for fin, are thus led to Chrift, holinefs, and happinefs !

How these bleffed fruits grow out of godly forrow, will appear from the words in question; whence we may obferve,

1. That forrow is diffinguished from repentance; for godly forrow is faid to work repentance,-and is therefore fupposed to have the fame relation to it, that the cause has to its effect. In common speech we are apt to speak of forrow for fin under the name of repentance, and to afcribe to it that effect which belongs only to repentance. But the Apofile here has plainly another notion of repentance, fince the common notion would create an abfurdity: for if by repentance we understand forrow for fin, the Apostle muft

He first them up to a liberal contribution for the poor faints at Jerufalem, by the example of the Macedonians, by commendation of their former forwardness, by the example of Chrift, and by the fpiritual profit that shall redound to themfaires thereby; commending to them the integrity and willingness of Titus, and those other brethren, who, upon his requift, exhortation, and commendation, were purposely come to them for this business.

must then be understood to fay, "That godly forrow pro-"duces forrow for fin; that is, that godly forrow pro-"duces infelf," fince that only is godly forrow, which is upon the account of fin. Repentance therefore is diffinct from forrow, as it is wrought by it; and properly denotes "fuch a change of mind, as leads us ardently to pant "after Christ, forgiveness, and fpiritual things, instead of "the world and the things which are in the world."

Sorrow then is not repentance, though it be the caufe of repentance in very many cafes. The alliance between them will be beft explained by confidering the nature of forrow in general, and the impressions it makes upon every man's mind. Whatever is the caufe of forrow, mult needs be the caufe of aversion too; fince to take pleasure in the thing that grieves us, and caufes us pain, is a contradiction in nature. Sin especially cannot be the caufe of our forrow, but it must be likewise of our aversion; the natural confequence of which is repentance. Thus we see how confequentially repentance arises from godly forrow, or forrow for fin.

2. This godly forrow, fecondly, is not faid to work falration immediately, and of itself, but through divine grace by means of that repentance which it produces, and that conversion which follows. So many are the fad effects of fin, with respect to this world, that the finner who has no fear of God before his eyes, has reason enough, even in respect to his state here below, to be forry for his fins. But forrow arifing from these motives is mere worldly forrow: one man laments the decay of his health; another the loss of his reputation; and a third the ruin of his fortune; and very often one laments the loss of all; and equally would they have lamented thefe loffes, had they come from any other cause besides sin. He that is forry for his fin, merely because it has destroyed his health, would have been as forry had a fever destroyed it; and he that grieves for the loss of his fortune, would have grieved in the same manner, if fire, or the raging sea, had been his undoing. Whence it is plain, that in fuch forrow as this, no regard is had to God; whom yet we are principally to respect in our repentance, as being the person against whom we have offended, and whole mercy and pardon through Jesus Christ we must obtain, or be undone for ever.

In true forrow, which produces repentance, the fenfe of our guilt is a great ingredient, as well as the fenfe of our mifery. The very hopes we have of obtaining pardon at the hand of God through the infinite merits of the Redeemer, will fill our minds with indignation at ourfelves, for having offended fo gracious a Master; for if we can think him to good as to be willing to forgive us through the Son of his love, we must needs think ourfelves exceedingly wicked, and loft to all fenfe of gratitude and goodness, that we could offend so kind and compassionate a Lord. In short, sear, zeal, indignation, every passion will be roufed to act its part in making us hate ourfelves and our iniquities, and will never let us be at peace with our own hearts, till we have found pardon in Jesus Chrift, and through his Spirit have purged ourfelves of every evil luft, and confectated ourfelves entirely to the fervice of our Mafter :--- and this is that true repentance unto falvation never to be repented of.

Fear may fometimes prevail against the power of lust; and the wretch who hates to think of God, may yet not be able to exclude the fervile dread of him. When the flames of hell play before the finner's eyes, and guilt, confcious of its own deferts, fills the imagination with all the horrors of damnation; in this case there will never be a want of fome kind of forrow, though perhaps there be no figns of genuine repentance. Thus Judas grieved; in his grief he died; and in his death he found the pains of hell.

In the Gospel there are no promises made to grief and forrow; the mercies of God are offered to the genuine penitent, on the condition of faith in the Redeemer's. blood. Sorrow which produces not real repentance and living faith, is of no account in the fight of: God. Such forrow forms a trifling part of the finner's due; if he faffer under it, he has but a part of his reward: it is the punishment of his iniquity, but can never be a preparation for pardon.

6 <sup>s</sup> Infomuch that we defired Titus, that you the fame <sup>b</sup> grace alfo. as he had begun, fo he would alfo finish in 7 Therefore, as ye <sup>b</sup> abound in every thing, <sup>8</sup> Ch. 12. 18. 1 Cor. 16. 1, 2. <sup>h</sup> Ver. 1, 4, 7, 14, 19, 20. Ch. 9. 1, 5, 9, 12-14. Phil. 4. 15, 18. <sup>i</sup> J Cor. 1. 5. & xii. xiv. Ch. 7. 75 11. Phil. 1. 9-11.

One would think this were too plain a cafe to be miftaken; and yet, fo commonly is it miftaken, that repentance is grown, in the Christian world at large, almost into a form and method; and inftead of reforming from their fins through divine grace, these people only fet themselves fo many days to be forry for them. Alas! it is a fruitlefs grief; and they may affure themfelves their hopes of pardon will be as empty and delufive as their forrow. Were men once truly fenfible of their guilt, there would need no art to produce forrow, no rules whereby to limit their grief; they would fly to the only refuge, and to the only fountain, for fin and for uncleannefs, with unfought tears and groans. Were we fincere, we fhould of course through grace fly the viper that had stung us, and not cherith and carefs the venomous animal, while with falle tears we bathe the wound that we have received.

3. The nature of this godly repentance will be better understood, by comparing it with worldly forrow, and fhewing the difference between them. Now, worldly forrow is faid immediately to work death: it brings forth nothing analogous to repentance, but does rather confirm the evil dispositions from which it grows.

There is fuch a connection between the paffions, that one cannot be powerfully fet on work, but it must move and engage the others in their feveral fpheres. Thus ver. 11. the Apostle tells us, that the godly forrow of the Corinthians produced fear, indignation, zeal, and vehement defire and revenge. And thus it must be: whatever afflicts us, is in fome fense the object of our aversion; whatever we lament the loss of, that we must needs vehemently defire and long after; and our grief for the loss will rouse us to recover, if possible, the thing we lament for: and thus it always is in respect to religion through the grace of God.

This being agreed, we need only confider the caufes from which worldly forrow and godly forrow arife, to fee the workings of both, and the different effects which they must produce. In all godly forrow we grieve for having enjoyed too much of the world, to the hazard of long the infinitely more valuable pleafurcs of immortality: in worldly forrow we lament our having had too little of the world. It is evident then that forrow in one cafe will, through grace, make us fly from the world and its allurements; in the other it will render us but the more eager to purfue and overtake them. In the one cafe, forrow, by the divine bleffing, gives us new defires, and routes us to feek new joys and comforts, to which before we were strangers. In the other cafe, grief confirms the old habits, quickens the old defires, and makes a man ten times more worldly-minded than he was before : fo that his last state is even worfe than his first. Which will further appear by confidering,

4. That the death which is wrought by worldly forrow is oppofed by the falvation which follows repentance, and may therefore fignify eternal death, as well as temporal; the truth of the proposition admitting either or both of these explications: only that repentance must be followed by perfevering faith and holiness, if we be eternally faved.

The natural effect of grief, confidered as fuch, is, to walte and impair the strength, to deaden the faculties of the mind, and to make a man useless to himself and his friends. But then here lies the difference between godly forrow and worldly forrow: The first, in every step, tends to peace and joy; and its most obvious effect, through divine grace, is, to destroy itself, and leave the mind, by faith in Jefus, in perfect eafe and tranquillity. The finner's tears, though they fpring from grief, do, like showers in fummer, portend a cooler and more refreshing air. But worldly forrow knows no reft, has no period; it ftill urges men to new pursuits after the world; and the world has new difappointments in referve to baffle all their eager care. Every disappointment is a new occasion of grief; and the whole gain of this passion for the world, being fairly computed, amounts to this, -Vanity and vexation of spirit.

Thus the cafe ftands, if we regard only the comforts of this life. Godly forrow for fin produces, through faith in the Redeemer, the pleafure of rightéoufnels, which is a perpetual foring of joy and fpiritual confolation; while the worldly man, purfuing falfe enjoyments, is ever reaping real torments. But if we change the fcene, —if we look into the other world, the difference grows wider flill. The time is coming, when all tears fhall be for ever wiped away from the eyes of the faithful. Whereas worldly forrow will then have a heavy account to pafs: those tears, those guilty tears, which were fled for the transitory pleafures of mortality, will rife up in judgment against the finner's foul, and fearfully exclude him from the joys of that divine life, which endureth for evermore. — The forrow of the world worketh DEATH.

REFLECTIONS.—1st, Having mentioned the amazingly rich and gracious promifes of God, the Apostle,

1. Draws an inference from them. Having therefore these promises, dearly belowed, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, avoiding every kind of intemperance or uncleanness which would pollute our bodiess and mortify the inward abominations of pride, malice, falsehood, &c. which defile the foul; perfecting boliness in the sear of God, growing in grace unto perfect love, imcreasing with all the increase of God, till ultimately our course be completed in endies glory.

2. He returns from the digretiion that he had made, to vindicate himfelf and his fellow-labourers from the flanders of the falfe teachers. Receive us with cordial regard: we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man; our principles have been according to God's word, and our practice upright and unblamable. I fpeak not this to condemn you, reflecting on you as a body, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in ye abound in this grace alfo. all diligence, and in your love to us, fee that 8 * I fpeak not by commandment, but by as having traduced us : for I have faid before, that ye are in our hearts to die and live with you ; fuch confidence have we in you, and fuch warm affection towards you. Great is my boldnefs of speech toward you, in censuring the disorders among you; great is my glorying of you, as, in general, obedient children, and ornaments to your profession. I am filled with comfort in you; I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation, to hear the late gracious accounts from you. For when we were come into Macedonia, in fearch of Titus, our field had no relt, but we were troubled on every fide, not only with the opposition of our enemies, but with the anxiety of our minds on your account ; without, were fightings from our foes; within, were fears for you, left you should be removed from the simplicity which is in Christ. Neverthelefs, God, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by the coming of Titus, whole arrival revived our drooping hearts; and not by his coming only, but by the confolation where with he was comforted in you, by the affectionate and respectful reception he met with at Corinth; when he told us your earnest defire to obey our injunctions, your mourning for the offences which had been committed, your fervent mind toward me, vindicating with zeal my character against the false teachers, and longing for my coming; fo that I rejciced the more, and his report exceedingly heightened the pleasure of his arrival. For though I made you forry with a letter, wherein I was constrained to use sharp rebukes, I do not repent, though I did repent, and grieved exceedingly, even at the time, that I should be neceflitated to use such severity : for I perceive that the fame epifile made you forry, though it were but for a feafon, and engaged you immediately to correct what was amifs. Now Irejoice, not that ye were made forry : in that I could have no fatisfaction, and sympathized tenderly with you; but that ye forrowed to repentance : for ye were made forry after a godly manner, mourning over your unfaithfulnefs, and returning in deep humility to God, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing, but contrariwife be abundantly profited. For godly forrow worketh repentance to fulvation, not to be repented of; and what has fuch a gracious effect, cannot but in the iffue prove matter of the most folid fatisfaction: but the forrow of the world, which men of earthly minds feel, on account of the loss and crosses here below, worketh death, driving them to defpair, impairing their health, and fometimes even caufing them to lay violent hands on themfelves. For behold, this felf-fame thing, that ye for rowed after a godly fort, what a bleffed influence it had upon you ! What carefulnefs it wrought in you to remove the cause of offence, yea, what clearing of yourfelves from any connivance at iniquity; yea, what indignation against what was evil in yourselves, or in the notorious delinquent; yea, what fear of God, and jealoufy for yourselves; yea, what vehement desire to make a thorough reformation of all diforders; yea, what zeal for God's glory, and the honour of your holy profession; yea, what revenge, punishing with due feverity the criminal. In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter, by your ready amendment. Note; (1.) Godly forrow is the most profitable physic for the foul. (2.) Whatever bitterness we may have tasked, we shall never at last repent of that which worketh repentance unto falvation.

adly, Since his admonition had fo good an effect, the Apostie cannot but rejoice. Wherefore, though I wrote unto you with fome tharpness, I did it not for his caufe that had done the wrong, not merely that the inceftuous perfon should be punished, nor for bis cause that suffered wrong, out of any partial favour to his injured father, but that our care for you in the fight of God might appear unto you, and the church be preferved from scandal. Therefore we were comforted in your comfort, the peace and purity of your fociety being reftored : yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, becaufe his fpirit was refreshed by you all, by the kind, obedient, respectful, and affectionate behaviour which you shewed towards him. For if I have boafted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed of the character I gave you; but as we spake all things to you in truth, in fimplicity and godly fincerity, even fo our boaffing which I made before Titus, is found a truth, and the commendation that I gave you has been proved to be but just. And his inward affection is more abundant toward you, whilf he remembereth the obedience of you all to my apostolic injunctions, how with fear and trembling you received him, with deepeft reverence and holy jealoufy, left you should not duly profit by his advice. I rejoice therefore that I have confidence in you in all things, that you will continue to obey my admonitions, and to refresh my spirit by your dutiful and becoming conduct on every occasion. Note ; It is a fingular comfort to a minister, that he has confidence in the fidelity of his people.

CHAP. VIII.

THE directions which the Apolle in his former letter gave to the Corinthians, concerning the collection for the faints in Judea, had not, it feems, been fully complied with. At the perfusion of Titus, indeed, they had begun that collection; but they had not finished it when he left Corinth; owing, perhaps, to the opposition made by the faction, or to the disturbances which the faction had raifed in that church. Wherefore, to ftir up the fincere among the Corinthians, to finish what they had fo well begun, the Apostle, in this chapter, fet before them the example of the Macedonian churches; I suppose the churches of Philippi, Theffalonica, and Beræa, who, notwithstanding their great poverty, occasioned by the perfecution mentioned I Thef. ii. 14. had contributed beyond their ability, being much inclined to that good work by their benevolent disposition, ver. 1, 2, 3 .- and had entreated the Apostle to receive their gift, and carry it to Jerufalem, ver. 4, 5 -His exhortation to the Corinthians on this occasion, no doubt, would be the more regarded by them, becaufe it immediately followed the commendations given them for their love and obedience. Wherefore, in the perfusion that they would now be hearty in the affair, the Apostle told them, he had entreated Titus, that as he U u 2 had had begun, fo he would finish that good work among them, ver. 6.-adding, that as they abounded in every other grace, and entertained great love to him their spiritual father, he hoped they would abound in that grace alfo, ver. 7.-This, however, he did not speak as an injunction, because works of charity must be voluntarily performed; but that they might emulate the forwardness of the Macedonians, and shew the sincerity of their love and gratitude to Christ, ver. 8.—And the more effectually to persuade them to part with some of their riches for relieving the faints, he told them, they were well acquainted with the greatness of the love of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, for our fakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich, ver. 9.—He then gave it as his opinion, that they ought to finish these collections speedily, seeing that they had begun them the last year, ver. 10.-none of them postponing the matter any longer, on pretence of inability, ver. 11.-because God regards the willingness of the giver, more than the greatnefs of his gift, ver. 12.

But left the Corinthians might fancy, that by thus earneftly recommending liberality in making the collection, he meant at their expence to enrich the brethren in Judea, the assured them, he meant only the relief of their present preffing wants, that in their turn they might be able and disposed, in case of need, to affift the Corinthians, ver. 13, 14, 15.—And to fhew that he was much interested in this matter, he thanked God for having put the fame care concerning it in the heart of Titus, ver. 10.-who, at his defire, had willingly agreed to go with him to Corinth, for the purpose of perfuading them to finish their begun collection; but who, being more dillgent in the matter than the Apostle expected, had offered to go before him, to exhort them; and was con-: to them with this letter, ver. 17.-But that Titus might not be burdened with the whole weight of the work, he told them, he had fent with him a brother of great reputation, who had been chosen by the Macedonian churches to accompany the Apostle to Jerusalem, to witness his delivering their gift faithfully, ver. 18, 19 .- a measure which he highly approved; because, in this affair, he withed to avoid all sufpicion of unfaithfulnefs, ver. 20, 21.-And that with them he had fent another brother likewife, whom he had found faithful in many things, ver. 22 .- Now that thefe meffengers might meet with due respect from the Corinthians, the Apostle informed them, that if any of the faction inquired concerning Titus, they might reply, he was his fellow-labourer in preaching the Gospel to the Corinthians. Or if they inquired concerning the brethren who accompanied Titus, they were the meffengers employed by the churches, to carry their collections to Jerufalem; by which fervice, as well as by their other ministrations, they brought great glory to Christ, ver. 23 .- Being therefore perfons so respectable, he hoped the Corinthians would give them and the churches, whole medengers they were, full proof of their good difpolition, and justify his boasting concerning them, by treating them with every mark of affection and esteem, ver. 24.

Ver. 1. The Apostle having employed the feven foregoing chapters, in a confiderable measure, in his own justification, and having in the close expressed the great fatisfaction that he had in the Corinthians being all united again in their affection and obedience to him, exhorts them in this and the following chapter, by the example of the churches of Macedonia particularly, to unite in a liberal contribution for the poor Christians in Judea.

Inftead of we do you to wit, &c. Mr. Locke and others read, we make known unto you the godly charity given by the churches of Macedonia. The word Xa215, which is translated grace in our version, is here used by St. Paul for gift, or liberality, and is so used, ver. 4. 6, 7. 9. 19. and 1 Cor. xvi. 3. It is called the gift of God, because God is the author and procurer of it, moving men's hearts thereto by his grace.

Ver. 2. In a great trial of affliction] How ill-difposed the Macedonians in general were to the Christians, may be seen, Acts, xvi. and xvii. Instead of abounded, some read bath abounded.

Ver. 3. For to-yea, and beyond their power] This is a noble hyperbole; like that of Demosthenes, "I have per-"formed all, even with an industry beyond my power." The prefent and following verses are thus connected and read by Bengelius: For to their power, (I bear record,) yea, beyond their power, of their own accord, befeeching us with much intreaty, they gave to us the liberality, and the communication of the ministry to the faints; and this, not in the manner in which we prefumed to hope, but first giving themfelves to God, and then to us by the will of God.

Ver. 6. As he had begun, &c.] "As he had begun the "collection among you, fo he would also finish it," Heylin; who, instead of grace in the next verse, reads work of charity: See ver. 1 and 9.

Ver. 8. And to prove the fincerity of your love.] The genuine temper, &c. Locke. Taking as we may, without violence to the words, the original, domualw for drawing out a proof, and the word ymoiou for genuine, the passage may be well rendered shewing the world a proof of the genuine temper of your love; and thus properly express St. Paul's obliging way of ftirring up the Corinthians to a liberal contribution: for his discourse briefly stands thus : " The great liberality " of the poor Macedonians made me fend Titus to you, " to finish the collection of your charity, which he had " begun; that you, who excel in all other virtues, might " be eminent in this alfo. But I urge not this as a com-" mandment from God; but, upon occasion of the libe-" rality of others, prefent you with an opportunity of giving the world a proof of the genuine temper of your " " charity, which, like that of your other virtues, will not " bear to be out-done."

Ver. 9. Ye know the grace of our Lord, &cc.] Rather, fakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich.

10 "And herein I give my advice: for this is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but allo to be * forward a year ago.

11 Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have.

12 For "if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

13 'For I mean not that other men be eafed, and ye burdened :

14 But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a fupply for their want, that their abundance also may be a fupply for your want: that there may be equality:

much had nothing over; and he that bad gathered little had no lack.

16 <sup>a</sup> But thanks be to God, which put the fame earnest care into the heart of Titus for you.

17 'For indeed he accepted the exhortation; but being more forward, of his own accord he went unto you.

18 And we have fent with him 'the brother, whofe praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches;

19 And not that only, but who was alfo chosen of the churches to travel with us with this 'grace, which is administered by us to the glory of the fame Lord, and declaration of your ready mind :

20 "Avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is adminiftered by us:

21 * Providing for honeft things, not only 15 As it is written, ? He that bad gathered in the fight of the Lord, but also in the fight of men.

the munificence, or liberality; - the fignification wherein St. Paul ules the word xages frequently in this chapter. Heylin renders it, the bounty.

Ver. 10. But alfo to be forward] Or, But alfo to exert yourselves. Dr. Heylin reads the latter part of this verse, who have not only begun already to make a collection, but alfo were the first that proposed it a year ago. He goes on to the next verse, Now therefore complete it; that as you readily undertook it, so you may as readily perform it, each man according to bis ability.

Ver. 14. But by an equality, &c.] I would only recommend an equality. Heylin. The Apostle does not mean that Christians are obliged to be all upon a level, but that there ought to be such mutual affistance and relief among them, as that the wants and neceffities of all might be supplied s and in that sense the most indigent might be brought nearer to an equality with the rich. The Corinthians at Jerufalem, for a good while, were in want of nothing; they who had lands or poffessions fold them, and they had all things in common : but now, at the diftance of five-andtwenty years from that zera, the frequent loss they endured by confifcations, &c. the increase of the number of Chriftians, and the gradual confumption of the money arifing from fales, reduced them to great extremities of poverty. But though the Christian Jews were poor and oppressed, the Corinthians were rich and prosperous; and therefore, it may be faid, there was no reason to expect that what the Apostle here mentions, would ever happen to the latter, - that their [the Jews] abundance should be a fupply for the want of the Corinthians. To this it may be sufficient to reply, that all human affairs are unstable and uncertain; Corinth itself, from great prosperity, had been defolated in the Roman war by Memmiu's fome time before; or, supposing that no such event should happen to them again, yet particular perfons might be diftreffed, or the whole body of Christians there reduced by perfecutions, though their city continued to flourish.

Ver. 15. He that had gathered much, &c.] See the note on Exod. xvi. 18.

Ver. 18. The brother, whofe praife is in the Gofpel ] This is generally supposed to have been St. Luke, who now was, and had been a long while, St. Paul's companion in his travels. Many ancient Christians understood the expression, whose praise in the Gospel is in all the churches, as referring to the univerfal approbation with which St. Luke's gospel was every where received. This may be included ; but the Apostle's meaning seems more extensive : " Whose " praise is in the Gospel, on account of the various and " eminent fervices which he has done for the interests of " Christianity, wherever his influence has extended, both " by his writings and exhortations."

Ver. 19. And not that only, &c.] This verse is to be included in a parenthesis, and the continued sense of ver. 18. and 20. will be, We have fent that brother, - to avoid blame, &c. Dr. Heylin translates and connects the verses from 18. to 21. thus: A brother, who is not only famous for his [uccefs

(I have used this precaution [in having one joined with me] to prevent any fufpicion that might be raifed, upon my baving the management of fo large a fum ; ver. 21. For I am careful to cenduct myfelf unblamably, not only in the fight of the Lord, but alfo in the fight of men. )

Ver. 22, 23. And we have fent, &c. ] We likewife fend with them [Luke and Titus,] another brother [Apollos,] whofe zeal we have experienced upon many occasions ; and he is now more than ordinarily intent upon this, through the great confidence he has in you, ver. 23. For as to Titus, he is my companion and affifiant in your affairs, and the other brethren are deputies of the churches, and [have been instruments of] the glory of Christ. Heylin. Some critics propose a comma only at the end of the 22d verse, and would connect the two thus; We have fent with them our brother in the great confidence which we have in you, both on account of Titus, my partner and fellow-labourer for you ; and in regard to our brethren, the Apostles or messengers of the churches, and the glory of Chrift. It is a great character which the Apolle gives of these brethren, - " the appointed and diftinguished " meffengers of the churches, and the glory of Chrift ;--men " by whom the name of Chrift is glorified."

Inferences .- What an excellent grace is Christian benevolence, in relieving the poor, and efpecially fuch as are of the household of faith! It is wrought in us by the power of divine grace; it proves the fincerity of our love to Chrift, and to his members for his fake; it is ftrongly recommended by the matchless grace of our Lord Jefus, who, though he was rich, for our fakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich; and it turns to the fpiritual account of the pieus benefactors themfelves, who may likewife hope that, if ever they should be reduced, God will incline the hearts of others to be affiftant to them, in a return of equal kindnefs. How pleafant is it to fee a forwardness in this, and every other good work, while fome of their own accord, and yet under divine influence, fet an example of it to other Christians, according to the utmost of their ability; and others are equally ready to encourage it, and affift in finishing it, according to the preffing occasions that call for it ! A little that is given in love, and with a willing mind, by those that are in strait circumstances, is a high commendation of their liberality; and yet, as the proportion of alms-deeds is accepted according to what a man has; fo fome ought not to be unreasonably burdened, to the easing, much less to the enriching of others; nor ought any to give what is not their own : but all charity, as well as every thing elfe, ought to be managed with fuch prudence and faithfulnefs, and in fuch a difinterested and honourable way, as may approve itself to God, as done in his fight, and even to the confciences of the whole world; and as may cut off all occasions of blame, or even of fuspicions of fraud, partiality, or felfish defigns. How happy is it when ministers and private Christians behave in fuch a way, as is to the glory of Christ, and as spreads their praises among the faints, and begets a mutual affection to, and confidence in one another ! What a beauty is there in the order of the churches, that first gave their ownselves to the Lord with joint confent, and then to the conduct of his fervants, according to the will of God ! And how fweet is their harmony and communion, when the meffengers of fome churches are well recommended to, and are received with refpect and honour, by others!

REFLECTIONS .- ift, As the brethren in Judea had undergone peculiar fufferings, and were reduced to great poverty, the Gentile churches, at the infligation of the Apostles, had made a collection for their relief. The churches of Macedonia had fet the example, and the churches of Achaia ought not to be backward in fo good a work.

r. The Apostle acquaints them with the generous conduct of the Macedonian brethren. Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia, inclining them to exercise their generous benevolence: how that in  $\mu$  great trial of affliction, amid fore perfecutions, the abundance of their jay in the Holy Ghoft, and their deep poverty, abounded unto the riches of their liberality, and fet off, with greater luftre, their diffinguished charity. For to their prover, (I bear record) yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves, needing no inftigation, but praying us, with much intreaty, that we would receive the gift of their kind alms, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the faints, distributing their bounty to the Christians in Judea. And this they did, not merely as we hoped; but with a noble generofity, far exceeding our most fanguine expectations, they first gave their ownfelves to the Lord, folemnly furrendering themfelves, and all their possessions, to his glory, and unto us by the will of God, refolving to be directed by us as his ministering fervants, according to his revealed word. Note ; (1.) The grace of God opens the heart with love, and the hand with liberality. A lively Christian will rather go beyond his power, than be backward in acts of piety and charity. (2.) They who have truly given themfelves to the Lord, will hold back nothing from him, which may ferve to promote his glory and the interests of his kingdom.

CHAP. IX.

He givet the reafon why, though he knew the fortwardnefs of the Corinthians, yet he fent Titus and his brethren beforehand: and proceedeth in flirring them up to a bountiful alms, as being but a kind of forwing of feed, which fhall return a great increase to them, and occasion a great sacrifice of thanksgivings unto God.

[Anno Domini 58.]

FOR as touching ' the ministering to the faints, it is superfluous for me to write to you:

* 1 Cer. 16. 1, 2. Rom. 75. 25, 26. Acts, 11. 29. Ch. 8. 4, 19. 7. 14 & 8. 17, 24. Ch. 11. 17. & 8. 2, 4. Ver. 2, 3.

ceptable to the Corinthians before, to go and finish what he had begun, exciting them to the exercise of the fame grace of liberality, which had fo eminently appeared in the Macedonian churches. Note; The fuccels of our defigns, in a great measure, depends upon the choice of proper instruments.

2dly, The Apolle proceeds, by the most perfuasive arguments, to excite the Corinthians to give liberally to the neceffities of their brethren.

1. Their eminence in other gifts and graces flould make them ambitious to excel in this. Therefore as, or but as, ye abound in every thing, great and gracious, in faith, and utterance, and eloquence, in clear knowledge of the mysteries of the Gospel, and in all diligence to advance the Redeemer's caule and interest; and in your love to us; fee that ye abound in this grace alfo, of Christian liberality. And this I speak not by commandment, as particularly ordered of God, or by my apostolic authority; but rather recommend it to you, by accohon of the forwardness of others, that you may not come behind them in any spiritual attainments; and to prove the fincerity of your love to Jelus and to his poor members for his fake. Note; (1.) We should be ashamed to be outdone in liberality by those who have less ability than ourfelves. (2.) Where our love to Jesus is fincere, it will appear by a readiness to every good word and work.

2. He urges the example of the great Redeemer. For ye know the grace of our Lord Jefus Chrift, the greatnefs of his love to poor and perifhing fouls; that though he was rich in uncreated glory, the Maker and Governor of all things; yet for your fakes he became poor; fo poor, as to want a houfe of his own to cover him when alive, and, when dead, was indebted to the charity of a friend for a grave. And to this he fubmitted, that ye through his poverty might be rich; filled with all the treafures of his glory hereafter, if faithful: therefore ftanding fo indebted to him, how could they withhold a pittance of their perifhing goods from his neceffitous faints and their brethren?

3. Their promifing beginnings called for a fuitable conclusion. And herein I give my advice: for this is expedient for you, and becoming the high rank in which you ftand, who have begun before, not only to do formething by way of fuch a collection, but also to be forward a year ago, teltifying 2 For I know <sup>b</sup> the forwardness of your mind, for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready a year ago; and your zeal hath provoked very many.

3 'Yet have I fent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf; that, as I faid, ye may be ready:

b Ch. 8. 10, 19, 24. 1 Thei 1 7, 8. Heb. 10. 24. 6 I Cor. 16. 1. Ch.

the greatest readiness to concur in this generous service. Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have, that your practice may correspond with your professions, and your contributions be according to your abilities: for if there be first a willing mind, and real charity in the heart, it, the gift, is accepted according to that a man bath, and not according to that be bath not; for it is not the fum contributed, fo much as the spirit whence it proceeds, that God regards.

4. Since the divine Providence had favoured them with abundance of worldly goods, they were peculiarly obliged to liberal distribution to the poor. For I mean not that other men be eafed, and ye burdened ; either that you should impoverish yourselves, to enrich the poor in Judea; or that other churches should be excused, and you alone be called upon to bear the whole charge of their necessary relief: no; but by an equality, proportioning your gifts to your abilities, that now at this time your abundance may be a fupply for their want ; that, if by the ftrange vicifitudes of divine Providence you should be hereafter reduced, and they prosperous, their abundance also may be a supply for your want, that there may be equality, in the mutual beneficence exercised towards each other : as it is written, concerning the manna, be that had gathered much had nothing over, and he that had gathered little had no lack; each had his order; what rcmained to those who had gathered more, being given to fupply the wants of the aged and infirm, who had gathered lefs. In like manner should we, who abound, reckon our superfluities as the debt that we owe to the i adigen'.

1. Thanks God, who put the fame earneft care into the heart of Titus, to engage him in this bleffed work, fo that he needed no entreaty to undertake the journey; but, full of zeal, as the Apofile himfelf, for the honour of the Corinthian brethren, and for the relief of the poor, he was a volunteer in the fervice, and under a divine direction readily undertook to go. 3. He intimates the care that he took to remove all fufpicion of difhonefty or partiality, by thus having others joined with him in this charge : avoiding this, that no man fhould blame us in this abundance, which is administered by us, as if we mifapplied or embezzled the leaft mite; providing things honeft, not only in the fight of the Lord, but also in the fight of men, whom we would convince of our unblemisted integrity. Note, In this cenforious world we cannot be too careful to avoid every occasion of fcandal; and minifters, for the gospel's fake, should be peculiarly cautious, especially in money matters.

4. He commends to them another brother, who also accompanied Titus. (See the Annotations.) He speaks of him with diftinguished respect, as one whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in many things, but now much more diligent, upon the great confidence which 1 have in you, that ye will receive him with respect, and attend to his exhortations.

5. In answer to any cavils of the false teachers, he adds, Whether any do inquire of Titus, he is my partner, and fellowhelper concerning you in the work of the ministry: or our bretheren be inquired of, they are the messengers of the churches, deputed by them to this service, and the glory of Christ, ornaments to the gospel which they preached. #### CHAP. IX.

THE Apostle, in this chapter, continued his discourse concerning the collection, not to perfuade the Corinthians to undertake the work: that, as he observed, was not needful, ver. 1.-He knew their willingnefs, and had boafted to the Macedonians that Achaia was prepared fince the end of the laft year; for fo the Apostle believed at the time he boafted of them, ver. 2.-But now, being informed by Titus that a good deal ftill remained to be done, he had fent the brethren mentioned in the preceding chapter to encourage them to go on, that his boafting concerning their being prepared might not be rendered falle; but that at length they might be prepared, ver. 3.-For if the Macedonian brethren, who were coming with him to Corinth, should find their collection not finished, he, not to fay the Corinthians, would be ashamed of his confident boasting concerning them, ver. 4.-He had judged it necessary, therefore, to intreat the brethren to go before him to Corinth, to perfuade them to complete their collection, that whatever they fhould give, might appear as freely given, and not as forced from them by his prefence, ver. c.-In the mean time, to encourage them to give liberally, he put them in mind of the future reward : He that foweth Sparingly shall reap also sparingly, &c. ver. 6.-Then defired every one of them to confult his own heart, and to give what he thought proper, without grudging, ver. 7.-Becaufe God loves a cheerful giver, and can fupply men abundantly with this world's goods, both for their own maintenance and to enable them to do works of charity, ver. 8, 9.-Farther, he observed, that such a gift, from so many Gentile churches, not only would fupply the wants of the brethren in Judea, but, being a demonstration of the affection which the Gentiles bare to them, would occasion many thankfgivings, ver. 12.—the Jews glorifying God for the professed subjection of the Gentiles to the gospel, of which they would have fo clear a proof, ver. 13.-and alfo praying for the Gentilcs, whom they would love as their brethren on account of the grace of God bestowed on them, ver. 14.-Now the union of the Jews and Gentiles into one body, or church, being in all respects a most happy event, the Apostle returned thanks to God for his unspeakable gift, Jesus Christ, through whom it had been accomplifhed, ver. 15.

I cannot finish this introduction without observing, in praise of the Apostle Paul, that there never was penned, by any writer, a ftronger and more affecting exhortation to works of charity than that which he addreffed to the Corinthians in this and the preceding chapter.-The example of the Christians in Macedonia, who, notwithstanding they were themfelves in very ftraitened circumstances, had contributed liberally towards the relief of the faints in Judea.-The great love of the Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, yet for their fake became poor, that they, through his poverty, might be rich :--God's acceptance of works of charity, not according to the greatnefs of what is bestowed, fo much as according to the willingnefs with which it is beftowed :--- the reward which God will confer, in the life to come, on beneficent men, acting from the principle of divine love :- his supplying them with a fufficiency of this world's goods for their ownmaintenance, and for enabling them to continue their good offices to the indigent :- his bleffing their ordinary labour for that end :- the joy which is occasioned to the poor, whofe wants are relieved by the alms of the charitable :--the thankfgivings which other good men will offer to God when they fee works of this fort done; but efpecially thankfgivings to God from the poor, who are relieved in their straits by the charitable :--- their gratitude towards their benefactors, expressed in earnest prayers to God for their happines:----and the cordial union which is pro-duced between the rich and the poor by this intercourse of good offices :--- all these confiderations are displayed in this excellent exhortation, with a tenderness and feeling which nothing but a heart filled with goodness was capable of expreiling.

With the above mentioned affecting motives, which are fuited to every ingenuous mind, the Apostle intermixed a variety of other incitements to works of charity, adapted to the particular circumstances of the Corinthian brethren, which, therefore, must have made a strong impression on them :-- fuch as their former readiness to do good works :-their being enriched with every spiritual gift, a kind of tiches valtly fuperior to the riches which the Apoftle wilhed them to impart to their needy brethren :- their love to him, their spiritual father, with whose reasonable defires it was their duty to comply :- his having boafted of their good dispositions to the churches of Macedonia :-his anxiety that the meffengers from these churches, who were coming to Corinth, might find them fuch as he had represented them :- and the shame with which the Apoltle himself, as well as the Corinthians, would be overwhelmetl, if, when the Macedonian brethren arrived, they were found to have been negligent in making the collection for the poor in Judea. He therefore intreated them to prove the truth of their love to him, and of his boatting concerning them, before these worthy ftrangers, and before the churches whole medlengers they were, by finithing the collection with chcerfulnefs, that what they gave might appear to be a gift willingly bestowed, and not a thing extorted from them by his importunity.

Upon the whole, if any minister of the gospel, who is himicif animated by a benevolent disposition towards mankind, has occasion to excite his people to works of charity, let him fludy with due attention the viiith and ixth chapters of St. Paul's fecond Epistle to the Corinthians; for no where elfe will he meet with fo fine a model to form his exhortation on, as that which is exhibited in these excellent chapters.

Ver. 15. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.] " When I think of these things, I defire funcerely to blefs " God, on your account, for all the grace the hath given " you, and for all the usefulness with which he is pleased " to honour you. Thanks daily, and everlatting thanks, be aferibed " to our Father and our God for that his unutterable gift, " of the excellence, importance, and grace of which " neither men nor angels can worthily fpeak or conceive." Or, by the unspeakable gift, the Apostle may mean that exseeding grace of God — his precious gift to the world through Chrift, which he fpeaks of in the preceding verfe, as bringing forth fuch excellent fruits in the Corinthians.

Inferences. - How peculiarly amiable docs the Christian liberality of the Macedonians appear, (ch. viii. 1, 2.) when confidered as absunding in a great trial of affliction, and in the depth of their poverty !-- yet a poverty mingled with an abundance of joy, on account of that rich and happy flate into which the golpel had brought them. They were willing of themselves to contribute even beyond their power, as perfons of common generofity would have effimated it. Nor did they, on their dying beds, repent fuch an use of their property, or wifh that it had been fpent in gratifying their appetites, or hoarded for those whom they were to leave behind them : nor do they now regret their liberalities, or complain that their expected harveft is perified.

May we remember their example for imitation ! nor letany who have a mite to fpare be wholly deficient, how low foever their circumftances may be; remembering that gracious complacency with which, where there is a willing mind, the fmallest tribute to the treasury of God is accepted ;-according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not. To elevate us to the most generous cfforts of overflowing benevolence, may we ever bear in mind that grace of our Lord Jefus Chrift, of which we all know fomething, but which it is impossible we should ever fully know, because it passeth knowledge;-that grace, which engaged him, when rich, for our fakes to become poor, that we might be enriched by his poverty. What have we that deferves to be called a possibilition, which we do not hold by an act of divine bounty and grace ?

Let us then confider ourfelves as under indifpenfable engagements, in consequence of it, to consecrate our all to him, confcious that our all is but a low return for the infinite obligations under which he has laid us. He has contrived and determined that the peor, in fome form or other, we fould always have with us, that we may do them good as a token of our gratitude to him. Let us faithfully aim to fupply their need; and he who hath most will have no superfluity to throw away upon the lufts or vanities of life; and he who has least will have no unsupplied lack. Thus the poor will rejeice in the relief of their necessities; and the rich, in the happiest and most delightful use of their abundance.

The tenderness of miniflers, in all points where the comfort and edification of the church is concerned, is, indeed, matter of the highest moment; and where it is remarkable in its degree, it affords just caufe of thankfgivings to God; for it is he who puts into their hearts that earnest care, who excites and maintains every fentiment of benevolence, when they offer themfelves willingly to any generous and charitable fervice. It is grace which has communicated whatever good is done; and it ought to be afcribed to the glory of the fame Lord from whom it comes; for it lofes all its value if it be not directed to this ultimate, this fupreme end.

When the Corinthians defired to deposit their alms in the hands of St. Paul, they certainly acted a very wife part, as no man living could have rendered them more fecure, as to the fidelity or the differentian of the diffribution : and yet we fee that, high as the Apollle's character flood, and though he had fo often given, and was daily renewing, fuch striking demonstrations both of his wildom and integrity,-he neverthelefs would not undertake the truft alone; but used all proper methods to prove his exactness in the management thereof, even to ftran zers, providing things boneft and laudable, not only in the fight of God, but alfo of men-

May ministers be often thus employed as the almoners of perfons richer than themfelves;-(as their readinefs to help the poor in their temporal affairs may, and has often been found greatly to promote their utefulnefs in fpirituals,) and may they appear to have managed their truit with the like confcious and delicate honour. May they fhew a difpofition, like that of St. Paul, to affift in eftablishing and advancing the characters of their younger brethren, and introducing them into effect and confidence. Thus will they indeed most effectually strengthen their own hands, and edity and comfort the churches: thus will they prove the glory of Christ themselves in the present age, and be the means of raising up others, who may eminently deferve that illustrious title in fucceeding generations. Let us observe with pleasure the happy address of the Apostle, ch. ix. 2. a felicity, not the refult of craft, but of that amiable temper which was fo eminent in him. He pleads the bigh opinion he had entertained of his Corinthian friends, and the honourable things that he had faid of them; expreffing his perfuation of their readiness to give, as a matter of bounty, not of constraint. He leads them to the inexhauftible flores of the divine liberality, from which they had had received their prefent all; from which he wifnes they may receive more and more : and this not that thefe fupplies might be ignobly confumed in felf-gratifications, but employed in acts of the nobleft beneficence. He reprefents to them the thank/givings which it had already occafioned to God, the refrefhment it had adminiftered to the faints, the bonour it did to their character and profeffion, and the ghem and friendship for them which it excited in the minds of those, who, though unacquainted with them, were well affected towards their happines, in consequence of this honourable specimen of their character. Who could withftand the force of such oratory? No doubt it was effectual to cultivate the temper which it applauded, and to add a rich abundance to the fruits of their righteousness.

Let us then apply the thoughts here suggested for our own instruction, to excite us to abound in acts of liberality, and to prefent them to God with that cheerfulnefs which he loves. To him let us continually look, to make all grace abound in us, and feek a fufficiency in all things relating to this prefent life, chiefly that we may be ready to every good work; that fo our liberality may full endure, and that the multiplication of our feed form may increase the fruits of our rightenufnefs. To God be the praife of all aferibed. He ministers feed to the forver; he supplies bread for food; he calls up the bleffings of harveft ; he infures the advantages of commerce. May we praife him ourfelves, and, by the ready communication of the good things which he hath given us to those that want, not only supply their necesfiles, but give them caufe to abound in thankfgiving to God, as well as in prayer for us; while they fee and acknowledge that exceeding grace which is the fpring of every generous motion in the human heart, and to which therefore be the glory of all !

To conclude, happy fhall we be if we learn that pious and evangelical turn of thought fuggefled by St. Paul, ver. 15. if by all the other gifts of Grad we are thus led up to the full and greateft unipeakable gift of his love and mercy to finul men. And furely we may thence encourage our hopes of whatever elfe is neceflary and defirable; for, as this great Apofle elfewhere argues,—he that ford not his oven Son, but delivered him up for us all, how is it poffible that he flould not be ready with kim all freely to give us all things that are truly good for us! Rom. viii. 32.

REFLECTIONS .- Ift. The Apoftle, with admirable addrefs, while he feems to wave many arguments which he might have urged, yet by his confidence expressed in the readinefs of the Corinthians to comply with his requeft, lays the ftrongest obligations on them to shew their generofity. He knew their forwardnefs; he boafted of their zeal; and it had excited a holy ambition in the Macedonians to follow them. For their own fakes, therefore, as well as his, he wifhed them to be ready, and had fent Titus and the brethren for this purpole, left if any of the Macedonians came to them with him, he, not to fay they themfelves, might be put to fhame in the confident boafting that he had made of them, should they be found unprepared, and their collections not completed. He fent therefore, that, having timely notice, all might be ready in the way most honourable for them, and molt agreeable to the commendations he had given of them; not as an extorted alms, but as a noble, generous, willing contribution, the grateful acknowledgment due to God for all the fingular mercies they had received. Note, Alms given with reluctance, or fqueezed out by mere importunity, only prove the covetoufnefs, not the charity of the giver.

Note, When we can make no other acknowledgment, we must pray for our kind benefactors, that God, the poor man's friend, may reward them.

3. The Apofile offers up his own earneft prayers for them. Now he that miniflereth feed to the fower, fo that 'there is corn enough for the year's provision, and a fufficiency again to fow the ground, both minifler bread for your food, and give you always a fupply; and multiply your feed fown, reftoring it a hundred fold into your bofoms; and increase the fruits of your rightcoufnefs, enabling you to abound in liberality more and more, as I have humble confidence he will; being enriched in every thing, with all the bleffings of grace and providence, which can enable and difpofe you to exercise all bountifulnefs, which causet through us thankfgiving to God, who blefs his name both for the abundance he has beftowed upon you, and for the heart that he has given you to employ it to his glory.

4. He concludes, therefore, with this doxology; Thanks be unto God for his un/peakable gift, for all that he has done for you, in you, and by you; above all, for Jefus Chrift, that most transferndently invaluable gift, which comprehends all others, and for which all language is infufficient to express our gratitude.

CHAP. X.

HITHERTO St. Paul's difcourfe was chiefly directed to those at Corinth who acknowledged his apostless paid and who had obeyed his orders, fignified to them in his former letter. But in this and the remaining chapters he principally addressed the false teacher himself, and such of the faction as still adhered to him, speaking to them with great authority, and threatening to punish them by his miraculous power, if they did not immediately repent. The different characters, therefore, of the two forts of perfons who composed the Corinthian church, must be carefully attended to; otherwise this part of the epistle will appear a direct contradiction to what goes before.

The falle teacher, it feems, and the faction, ridiculing the Apostle's threatenings in his former letter, had faid, that he was all mecknefs and humility when prefent among them, but exceeding bold by letters when abfent. This they reprefented as wife carnal policy. For, faid they, being confcious of his own weaknefs, he does not choole, when prefent, to provoke us to make too narrow a fearch into his character, left it should lead to difagreeable difcoveries. The Apostle, therefore, in answer to that farcafm, began his addrefs to the faction with telling them, in irony, that the very fame Paul himfelf, who in prefence was humble among them, but bold when abfent, did not now when abfent fpeak boldly, but humbly befought them; not, however, by his own meeknefs, which they ridiculed, but by the mecknefs and gentlenefs of Chrift. And what he befought of them was, that he might not be obliged to be bold, in the manner he had refolved to be bold against fome, who, on account of his meeknefs when prefent with them, had calumniated him as a perfon who walked after the flefh, ver. 1. 2.—But though he was in the flefh, he affured them he did not war against idolaters and unbebelievers with flefhly weapons, but with weapons far more powerful, bestowed on him by God, for the purpose of cafting down all the bulwarks raifed up by worldly policy, for the defence of idolatry and infidelity. These mighty weapons were, the miraculous powers and fpiritual gifts which Chrift had conferred on him as his Apostle, ver. 4, 5.—He farther told them, that, although he feldom used his miraculous power in punishing unbelievers, he had that power in readinefs for punishing all disobedience in them who professed to be the disciples of Christ, and particularly for punifying fuch of the Corinthians as called his apoftleship in question, ver. 6.—He cautioned them, therefore, against estimating things according to their outward appearance; and told them, if the falfe teacher believed himfelf to be Chrift's minister, he ought, from the proofs which St. Paul had given of his apostlessip, to have concluded that even he was Chrift's Apostle, notwithstanding the meannefs of his outward appearance, ver. 7.-For which reafon, faid he, if I should now boast somewhat more than I have hitherto done, of the power which Chrift hath given me as an apostle, I am fure when that power is tried, I shall not be put to shame by its failing me, ver. 8.-Then, in holy contempt of the falfe teacher, who had faid that he was bold towards them by letters when absent, he added, in the highest strain of irony, but I must forbear boasting of my power, that I may not feem as if I would terrify you by letters, ver. 9, 10.-And. because the false teacher was a great pretender to reasoning, the Apostle defired him, by reasoning from the effects of his power, already flewn in the punithment of the incestuous ceftuous person, to conclude that fuch as he was in speech by letters when absent, the same also he would be in deed when present, ver. 11.

Having thus threatened to punish the false teacher and his adherents, the Apostle told them, ironically, that to be fure he durst not rank and compare himself with their learned teacher, who was io full of his own praise. It feems that impostor had boasted among the Corinthians of his great natural talents, and acquired accomplifhments. But the Apostle told them, that his high opinion of himself proceeded from his measuring himself only with himself, and from his comparing himfelf with himfelf; by which method of measuring himself, notwithstanding his great wildom, he did not understand himself, ver. 12 .- Next, because the false teacher boasted of the great things he had done at Corinth, the Apostle told them that, for his part, he would not boast of things done out of the bounds prefcribed to him by God; but would only fay, that according to these bounds he had come to Corinth, in an orderly course of preaching the gospel to perfons who had never heard it before, ver. 13, 14 .- So that when he boasted of things which he had done among the Corinthians, he did not boast of other men's labours, like the false teacher, who had intruded himfelf into a church planted by another; and therefore, agreeably to the rule preferibed by God, the Apostle hoped, when their faith was increased, to be by them enlarged with respect to his bounds, ver. 15 .- fo as to preach the golpel in the regions beyond them, where no other perfon had ever preached, ver. 16.-Laftly, to fhew the folly of the false teacher more fully, the Apostle concluded this part of his difcourse with observing, that the preacher of the gospel who boasts, should boast only in this, that he preaches in the manner the Lord allows, ver. 17.-Becaufe not he who commendeth himfelf is the approved teacher, but he whom the Lord commendeth, ver. 18.

From this paffage we learn two things; first, that the Apostles were specially appointed to preach the gospel in countries where it had not been preached before. This work was particularly affigned to them, not only becaufe they enjoyed the highest degree of inspiration, and possessed the greatest miraculous powers for confirming the gospel, but because they had especially the power of conferring the fpiritual gifts, whereby their converts were enabled, in their absence, to edify themselves and others, and by the means thereof, through the grace of God accompanying them, to convert great multitudes of unbelievers .-Scendly, That in preaching the gofpel the Apoftles were not to pass by or neglect any nation that lay in their way, where the gospel had not been preached before; but were to proceed in an orderly courfe, from one country to another, preaching in each fucceflively, that the light of the solpel might be imparted to all. According to this rule, the faife teacher who had come from Judea to Corinth, not in the orderly course of preaching in countries where the gofpel had not been preached before, but by a direct and fpeedy journey, perhaps in the expectation of becoming rich by preaching in fuch a populous and wealthy city as Corinth, flewed himfelf to be no minifter of Chrift: and having intruded himfelf into a church which had been planted by St. Paul, he had not the least reason to boaft of his labours among the Corinthians.

Ver.1. Now I Paul, &c. ] St. Paul having finished his exhortation to liberality in the collection for the Christians at Jerufalem, he refumes his former argument, and profecutes the main purpofe of this epiftle; which was, totally to reduce and put a final end to the adverfe faction,which feems not yet to have been entirely extinct,-by bringing the Corinthians wholly off from the falle apoltle, to whom they had adhered; and to re-eftablish himself and his authority in the minds of all the members of that church. Thinking it fit to forbear all feverity till he had, by fair means, reduced as many of the contrary party as he could, (fee ver. 6.) he begins his discourse here by conjuring them by the meeknefs and gentlenefs of Chrift, as an example which might excufe his delay of inflicting punishment upon the ringleaders and chief offenders, without giving them reason to think it was for want of power. It feems very probable that they had upbraided and reflected upon him in fome fuch language as that in the close of the verfe : but there was a fenfe in which he was indeed lovely among them, his prefence having nothing majeflic. Sec ver. 10. Inftead of bafe, Dr. Heylin reads mean.

Ver. 2. As if we walked according to the fl[fb] "As if "in my conduct and ministry I regulated myself by carnal "confiderations, by low and mercenary views."

Ver. 3. For though we walk, &c.] "For though we " inhabit mortal bodies, and are obliged, in fome refpects, " to floop to the care of them; yet we do not manage that " important war in which we are engaged according to the " flefb, by carnal methods, or with worldly or interested " views." Mr. Cradock explains this fomewhat differently: " Though we are not free from a mixture of human in-" firmities, yet I do not excreife my apoftolical power in " a weak manner, as either fearing or flattering men; but " use fuch spiritual weapons as Christian fortitude, zeal, " freedom in speaking the truths of God, and courage in " administering the centures of the church; which, through " the divine concurrence, are very effectual." An ingenious critic would render the verife thus: For walking in the flift, not ACCORDING TO the fligh, we carry on our warfare.

Ver. 4. For the weapons of our warfars, &c.] What are the carnal weapons, and those opposed to them, which he calls mighty through God, may be seen, if we read and compare 1 Cor. i. 23, 24, with the 2d. chap. i - 13. and 2 Cor. iv. 2 - 6.

Ver. 5. And bringing into captivity every thought,] The believing foul, when its carnal fortifications are demolifhed, fubmits to the conqueror; and then every thought, every reafoning reasoning takes law from him. Nothing is admitted which contradicts the gospel, Christ being acknowledged as abfolute master. The former clause show ready men are to fortify themselves against him, and to raise as it were one barrier behind another to obstruct his entrance into the foul. See Rom. xv. 18, 19.

Ver. 6. And having in a readine's, &c.] Those whom the Apostle here addresses are the Corinthian converts, who had been too much influenced by the false apostle. Of him the Apostle seems to have no hopes, ch. xi. 13-15. and therefore he every where threatens, and here particularly in the present and 11th verse, to make an example of him and his adherents, (if any were so obstinate as still to remain with him,) when he had brought back all the Corinthians whom he could hope to prevail upon. It should be remembered, that before this time the Apostle had smitten Elymas with blindness; and it is highly probable from this whole passage before us, that fome other miracles of this awful kind had been wrought by him, though they are not recorded in fcripture.

Ver. 8. Somewhat more] See ch. xi. 23. The next claufe contains another reason infinuated by the Apostle for his forbearing any feverity for the present towards them. I fload not be assumed, infers, "Because the truth " would justify me in it."

Ver. 10. His bodily preferer is weak, &c.] Chryfoftome, Nicephorus, and Lucian, relate of St. Paul, that his flature was low, his body crooked, and his head bald; which feem to be the infirmities here referred to. See-on ch. xii. 7.

Ver. 12. But they, meafuring themselves by themselves,]

Dr. Whitby would render it measuring themselves by one another; as if they compared themselves with their falfe apofiles, and grew proud in the degree in which they refembled them in accurateness and eloquence, or other things on which those deceitful teachers valued themfelves. But it is more natural to think the meaning is, " They looked continually on themfelves, furveying their " own great imaginary furniture, but not confidering the " vaftly superior abilities of many others; and so formed " a difproportionate opinion of themfelves:" and this is every where one of the greatest fources of pride. Mr. Locke observes, that this is spoken ironically: and instead of are not wife, he reads do not understand; namely, that they ought not to intrude themfelves into a church planted by another man, and there vaunt and fet themfelves above him who planted it,-which is the meaning of the following verfes.

Ver. 13. Without our measure,] The original word "Austea, here and in ver. 15. does not fignify immense, or inunderate, but something which had not been measured out and adotted to him; fomething which is not committed to him, nor within his province.

Ver. 14. For we are come as far, &c.] This feems to charge the falle Apoftle, the grand leader of the faction, who had caufed all this diffurbance in the church of Corinth, that without being appointed to it, without preaching the gotpel in his way thither, as became an apottle, he had unlawfully crept into that church.

Ver. 15, 16. Not boafling, &c.] That is, "Not inter-"meddling, or assuming to myfelf an authority to meddle, "or 17 'But he that glorieth, let him glory in 18 <sup>2</sup> For not he that commendeth himfelf is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth.

" or any honour for doing fo." St. Paul here visibly taxes the falfe Apoflle for coming into a church converted and gathered by another, and there pretending to be fomebody, and to rule all. This, among feveral other paffages, shews, that the opposition made to St. Paul was owing chiefly to one man, who had placed himfelf at the head of the faction; for it is plain that it was a stranger, who came thither after St. Paul had planted this church; who pretending to be more an Apostle than St. Paul, with greater illumination and more power, fet up against him, to govern that church, and withdraw the Corinthians from following the rules and doctrines of St. Paul and the Golpel. Now it can never be fuppofed to be, a combination of men, who came to Corinth with that defign; nor that they were different men, who came thither feparately, each fetting up for himfelf; for then they would have fallen out one with another, as well as with St. Paul; and in both cafes he must have spoken of them in a different way from what he does now. In I Cor. iii. 10. he plainly speaks of one man. Instead of-measure, that is, of other men's labours, ver. 15. fome read, measure in other men's labours; and instead of another man's line, ver. 16. another man's rule or province. It is certain, the Apostle did go to places already converted, to confirm and establish his brethren in the faith; but this was chiefly where he had himfelf planted churches : though he might take fome others in his way, which it would have been affectation and difrespect, rather than modesty, to have avoided. But he did not speak of churches thus visited, as if he were the founder of them, as his oppofers probably did; pouring contempt on St. Paul's labours, as if they were hardly to be called Christian churches, which he had left, as they pretended, in fo unformed and unfinished a state.

Ver. 18. But whom the Lord commendeth.] Particularly by the gifts of the Holy Ghoft. It is of these weapons of his warfare that St. Paul speaks in this chapter; and it is by them that he intends to try which is the true Apostle, when he comes to them.

Inferences.-With what meeknefs and condescention, in imitation of our bleffed Lord, should his fervants labour to win over fuch, as are unreafonably prejudiced against them and their minifirations; and yet with what authority fhould they vindicate the honour of Chrift, in rebuking those who, after all, continue obstinate in their disobedience to him, as speaking by them ! Though faithful ministers are men of like pathons and infirmities with others, and make but a mean figure in the world, while they dwell in mortal flefh; yet they are not to be judged of by outward appearance; nor are they governed by carnal principles and views in their work and warfare, as many falle pretenders are. And, O how victorious and triumphant is the gospel which they preach, when attended with the mighty power of God, to beat down the firong-holds of fin and Satan; to overcome the perverse reasonings of carnal minds, and all their pride and prejudices; and to fubdue them to the obedience of Chrift ! When his miniftering fervants have a witnefs in themfelves that they are Chrift's, it is fometimes neceffary for them to affert it, in confutation of thole who would unrighteoufly reproach them, as though they affumed too much to themfelves, or acted an inconfiftent part in different fituations: and yet how careful fhould they be, to avoid all appearances of vain-boafting, or of going out of their province, to the hindrance and diffurbance of other churches ! And, as ever they would be approved of God in all that they do, they fhould take heed of priding themfelves in any thing, that they are, have, or perform; and glory only in the Lord, as aferibing the praife of all entirely to him.

REFLECTIONS.—Ift, Nowhere had the Apolle met with more malignant infinuations, than from the falfe teachers at Corinth; he is obliged therefore, in justice to himfelf, to refute their flanders. See the Annotations.

1. Though he had it in his power to punish, he rather chofe mildly to entreat, imitating the meeknefs and gentlenefs of his bleffed Matter. The falfe teachers reviled him as a poor defpicable animal, and mean in his abilities: as diminutive in his stature, who fawned and cringed when present, but when absent wrote in a magisterial stile; terrifying them into compliance with his will, by vain boafts of his apoltolic rod. But he wished not to be compelled to exercise the power wherewith he was invested, and to their faces boldly to rebuke, and feverely chaftife, those who dared infinuate as if he walked after the flefb, with views of fecular advantage, and influenced by carnal policy. Note; (1.) However great provocations we may meet with, the example of the meek and gentle Lamb of God should ever be in our eye. (2.) If men will not be reformed, they will be ruined. (3.) The best of men and ministers may expect malignant traducers.

2. He afferts the integrity of his preaching and conduct. For though we walk in the fleft, furrounded with the common infirmities of humanity, we do not war after the fleft, under the maxims of fleshly wifdom, or for any felfish ends. For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal; we war not against the powers of evil with an arm of flesh, or pretend to convince by mere human perfuasion; but that Gospel we preach, becomes effectual through divine operation, and is mighty through God, the Spirit's energy, to the pulling down of the flrong-holds of fin and Satan in the world, and in the hearts of men; caffing down imaginations, confuting the corrupt reafonings of felf-righteous rabbis and proud philosophers; and every kigh thing that exalteth itfelf against the knowledge of God, confounding the pride and felf-fufficiency of the unhumbled heart; and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chrift; engaging the finner to bow to his gentle yoke; fubmitting his reason to revelation, his will to the commands of Jesus, and in every fentiment of his foul yielding a willing fubjection to the authority of the great Redeemer. Note; (1.) Men are not to be perfuaded by the fword, but by the gospel.

CHAP. XI.

Out of his jealoufy over the Corinthians, who feemed to make more account of the falle apofiles than of him, the Apofile entereth into a forced commendation of himfelf, of his equality with the chief Apofiles, of his preaching the Gospel to them freely, and without putting them to any charge : shewing that he was not inferior to those deceitful workers in any legal prerogative; and in the service of Chriss, and in all kinds of sufferings for his ministry, far superior.

2dly, The Apostle reasons the cafe with the Corinthians. Do ye look on things after the outward appearance? and form your judgment merely on external flow ? If any man truft to himfelf, that he is Chrift's, that he belongs to him as a member of his body myffical, or is commiffioned by him as a minister; let him of himself think this again, that as he is Chrift's, even fo are we Chrift's ; whatever evidence he may produce of the one or the other, I can at least equal him. For though I should boast formerwhat more of our authority, than I have done, or than the vaineft of my traducers dare to do concerning the powers with which they are invefted, (which authority the Lord hath given us for edification of his church, and not for your defirmition, to drive offenders to defpair by feverity,) I foculd not be afhamed, but dare speak with truth and confidence. But I forbear, that I may not feem, as these men suggest, as if I would terrify you by letters. For his letters, fay they, are weighty and powerful; wrote in an authoritative strain, and big with menaces: but his bodily prefence is weak, and his speech contemptible; he appears with no dignity of prefence and afpect, and his parts and elocution are as defpicable as his stature. In answer to such a contemptuous infult, I reply,

1. Let fuch an one think this, and be affured that fuch as we are in word by letters when we are abfent, fuch will we be also in deed when we are prefent, and execute every threatening that we denounce against the obstinately impenitent.

2 For I am <sup>b</sup> jealous over you with godly jealoufy: for I have <sup>c</sup> espouled you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.

3 But I <sup>d</sup> fear, left by any means, <sup>c</sup> as the ferpent beguiled Eve through his fubtilty, <sup>f</sup> fo your minds fhould be corrupted from the fimplicity that is in Chrift.

4 For if he that cometh preacheth <sup>t</sup> another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with bim.

2. We never act with falfehood and oftentation, like thefe feducers; for we dare not make our/elves of the number, or compare ourfelves with fome that commend themfelves, puffed up with vain conceit, and blinded with felf-admiration: but while they fondly value themfelves on their imaginary greatnefs, meafuring themfelves by themfelves, and fuppofing themfelves the ftandard of excellence, and comparing themfelves among themfelves, by the poor and infignificant endowments of others equally vain, they are not wife, foolifhly fancying they are fomething, when in fact they are nothing. Note; All felf-applaufe is hateful. We fhould look to the fuperior excellencies of others to be humble, and not proudly vaunt ourfelves over those beneath us.

3. The Apostle lays down the proper rule of conduct. But we will not bouff of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you: like those who run in the Ifthmian games, we have kept the line marked out for our race, and in a regular course have preached the Gospel as far as Corinth. For we firetch not ourfelves beyond our measure, as these false Aposiles do, as though we reached not unto you, and had in coming to Corinth entered into another man's province; for we are come as far as to you alfo in preaching the Gofpel of Chrift, through countries where his name had not been heard before; not boafling of things without our measure, that is, of other men's labours, and taking to myfelf the credit of their fucces; but having hope when your faith is increased, your church affairs regulated, and your divisions healed, that we shall be enlarged by yeu according to our rule abundantly, to preach the Gofpel in the regions beyond you, where darkness ftill reigns uncontrouled; and not to beast in another man's line of things made ready to our hand, affuming to myfelf the honour of their labours. But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord, afcribing to the grace of God alone the whole of whatever gifts he enjoys, or fuccefs he may be bleffed with, and taking no praise to himself : for not he that commendeth bimself, is approved,

CHAP. XI.

FROM the things written in this chapter, it appears, that although the false teacher, on all occasions, took care to found his own praise, he had represented St. Paul as guilty of folly in praising, or rather justifying himfelf; pretending that he had nothing to boast of. The Apostle, therefore, began with ironically requefting the Corinthians to bear with a little of his foolifhnefs in praifing himfelf, ver. 1.---and for fo doing he gave them this reafon: he suspected that the affections of many of them were estranged from him, through the calumnies of his enemies. Such an estrangement he could not bear. Having by faith and holinefs betrothed them to Christ, he was anxious to prefent them to him at the judgment, as a chaste virgin to her future husband, ver. 2.-This he fould not be able to do, if, believing the calumnies of his enemies, they no longer confidered him as an Apostle. Also he was afraid, that as the ferpent deceived Eve, fo the falle teacher, deceiving them, might corrupt them from the fimplicity of the Gospel, ver. 3.-But their attachment to that teacher, he told them, was unreasonable, as he did not pretend to preach another Jefus; neither had they received from him a different spirit, nor a different gospel, ver. 4.

Having made this apology for what he was going to fay in his own praise, he affirmed that he was in nothing inferior to the greatest Apostles, ver. 5 .- For although his enemies objected to him that he was unlearned in speech, he was not unlearned in the knowledge proper to a minister of the Gospel; but in the whole of his preaching and behaviour at Corinth had shewn himself an able and faithful Apostle of Christ, ver. 6 .- His enemies, indeed, upbraided him with not having supported the dignity of the apostolical character, as he ought to have done, by demanding maintenance from his difciples in Corinth. But he told them, he had committed no offence in that respect, when he humbled himfelf to work for his own fupport among them; fince he did it, that they might be exalted, by having the Gospel preached to them, with the greater fuccels, as a free gift, ver. 7 .- He took wages from other churches, the church at Philippi especially; but it was to do the Corinthians a fervice, by preaching the Gospel to them free of expence, ver. 8 .- For, on a particular occasion, when he was so much employed at Corinth, that he had not time to work for his own maintenance, the Philippians fully fupplied what he wanted; fo that he had kept himfelf, and would keep himfelf, from being burdenfome to them, ver. 9. -folemnly protefting, that no man should deprive him of that ground of boafting, in the regions of Achaia, ver. 10 .---This resolution he had formed, not from want of love to the Corinthians, ver. 11 .- but that he might cut off all opportunity from the falle teacher and others, who defired an VOL. II.

occasion to speak evil of him, as one who preached the Gospel for gain; also, that the false teacher, who in public pretended to imitate him in taking nothing for his preaching, (though in private he received gifts from individuals,) might be obliged to lay afide his hypocrify, and after the Apostle's example take nothing in private from any one, ver. 12.-There was a peculiar propriety in the Apothic's taking nothing from his disciples in Corinth, on account of his preaching; becaufe, being an opulent city, it might have been faid, that his motive for preaching to long there, was to enrich himfelf. This indeed was the view of the false teacher, who, by receiving gifts in private, shewed himself to be a deceitful workman, although he assumed the appearance of a true Apostle, by pretending to preach without taking any reward from the Corinthians. But his affuming that appearance, was not to be wondered at, feeing that Satan himfelf, on fome occasions, put on the appearance of an angel of light, ver. 13-15.

The Apostle having such good reasons for commending or rather vindicating himself, he defired the faction a fecond time not to think him a fool for speaking in his own praise; or at least, as a fool to bear with him, that like the falfe teacher he might boast a little, ver. 16.-For, faid he ironically, to be fure that which I am going to fpeak, in this confident boafting concerning mylelf, I speak not according to the Lord, but as in foolifhnefs, ver. 17. -In his former letter, the Apoltle had used this expresfion, ch. vii. 12. to the reft, I fpeak, not the Lord. This the falfe teacher, milinterpreting, had malicioufly turned into ridicule, by telling the Corinthians, that the praifes which Paul bestowed on himself, were, he supposed, of the number of the things which the Lord did not fpeak. This farcafm the Apostle repeated in an ironical manner, to infinuate to the Corinthians, that the things which he fpake in vindication of himself as an Apostle, he spake by the commandment of Chrift. Then added, feeing many, who are no Apoftles, praise themselves for their supposed qualities, I, who am a real Apofile of Chrift, will likewife praife myfelf for the good qualities which the grace of God has bestowed upon me, ver. 18 .- especially as the false teacher and his followers, being fach wife men, gladly bear with fools, that they may have the pleafure of laughing at them, ver. 10 .- Now, faid he, ye are of fuch a bearing disposition, that if one enflave you, if one eat you up, if one take your goods, if one raifeth himfelf against you in wrath, if one even beat you on the face, ye bear it, ver. 20. -This, it feems, was the infolent manner, in which the falfe teacher treated his adherents at Corinth, who bare it all with great patience. In his account, therefore, of the bearing disposition of the faction, the Apollie gave the fincere part of the church an ironical picture very highly drawn, of the wildom of their wife brethren, in hearing. Farther, he told them, that he was obliged to fpeak in his own praise, because he had been represented as a weak illqualified teacher. But he affirmed, that on whatever ac-Υy count made manifest among you in all things.

7 Have I committed an offence * in abaling mylelf that ye might be exalted, becaufe I have preached to you the gospel of God freely?

9 And when I was prefent with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me the brethren which came from Macedonia fupplied: and in all things I have kept myfelf from being burdenfome unto you, and fo will I keep myfelf.

count any one among them was bold in his own praife, he also had just reason to be bold on the same account, ver. 21.—Are these boasters Hebrews? so am I. Are they, &c. ver. 22.—Is the false teacher a minister of Christ? (I fpeak as a fool,) I am more fo than he-and in proof of what I fay, I appeal to my labours and fufferings for the Gospel. Here the Apostle enumerates the labours and fufferings which he had endured while executing his office: from which it appears, that no man ever did or fuffered as much, in purfuing grandeur or fame, as he did in preaching Christ, ver. 23-29. And with respect to the weaknefs or cowardice with which he was reproached, he told them, that fince he was obliged to boaft, he would boast even of his weakness, in flying from danger on a particular occasion; namely, when the Jews laid wait for him in Damascus. Because his escaping from that danger, was an illustrious example of the care, which both God and man took of him as a faithful minister of Christ.

Ver. 1. Would to God ye could bear] Would you could bear. St. Paul modefuly calls his fpeaking in his own defence folly. From this verife to the 6th he fhews, that the pretended Apofile, bringing to them no other Saviour or gofpel, was not to be preferred before him. See ch. v. 12, 13.

Ver. 2. That I may prefent you as a chafte virgin] This is greatly illustrated by recollecting, that there was an officer among the Greeks, whole business it was to educate and form young women, especially those of rank and figure, defigned for marriage; and then to prefent them to those who were to be their husbands: and if this officer permitted them, through negligence, to be corrupted before the marriage was completed, great blame would naturally fall upon him.

Ver. 3. Left by any means, &c.] Or, Left by fome means or other, &c. As the fuccess of the serpent against Eve lay in false pretences and infinuations, so the success of the false aposties was owing to deceitful pretensions and infinuations likewife. The fimplicity that is in, or rather towards Christ, answers to one husband in the preceding verle; for in, one, is not used there without meaning, but plainly implies thus much : " I have formed and fitted you " for one perfon alone, one hufband, who is Chrift : I am " greatly concerned that you may not be drawn afide from " that fubmission, that obedience, that temper of mind, "which is due to him; for I hope to put you into his "hands, possessed with pure virgin thoughts, wholly fixed " on him, not divided, nor roving after any other, that he " may take you to wife, and marry you to himfelf for ever." It is plain that their perverter, who opposed St. Paul, was a Jew, as we have feen. Of all who professed Christianity, the Jews were they who gave St. Paul most trouble and opposition; for they, having set their hearts upon their own religion, endeavoured to blend Judaism and Christianity together. We may suppose the case here to be much the fame with that which he more fully expresses in the Epistle to the Galatians, particularly ch. i. 6-12. ch. iv. 9-21. and v. 1-13. The meaning of the place before us feems to be this : " I have taught you the Golpel " alone, in its pure and unmixed fimplicity, by which " only you can be united to Chrift; but I fear left this " your new apostle should draw you from it, and that " your minds should not adhere fingly and simply to what " I have taught, but should be corrupted by a mixture of " Judaifm."

Ver. 4. Ye might well bear, &c.] You would kindly, &c. Ver. 6. Rude in fpeech,] The word idwing, rendered rude, frequently fignifies a private man; one who can fpeak no better than the generality of his neighbours, being unformed by the rules of eloquence. But whether this fenfe be applicable to St. Paul, let thole judge, who are able to compare his ftile with the best Claffic writers among the Greeks: let them likewife judge, who are warmed with the pathos and fublimity of his fentiments. To fay that this could be his meaning, would, on fuch a comparison, appear highly abfurd; but to apply it to a natural impediment in his speech, is confistent both with the pathos, the fublimity, and correctness of his stile; and is the only fense, I believe, in which it can be understood with the least degree of propriety.

Ver. 7. Have I committed an offence] The adverse party made it an argument against St. Paul that he was no apostle, fince he took nothing among the Corinthians for his maintenance, I Cor. ix. 1-3. Another objection raised against him on this account was, that he loved them not, ver. II. This he answers here by giving another reason for so doing. A third allegation was, that it was only a crafty trick in him to catch them, ch. xii. 16. which he answers there.

Ver. 8. I robbed other churches,] " I may almost, in this " fense, be faid to have robbed other churches; so freely " have I received from them, at least taking wages as it " were of them, for waiting upon you; for indeed I re-" ceived a kind of (tipend from them while I abode at Co-" rinth." The word iswinga, rendered robbed, properly fignifies, I took the /poils: it is a military term, as is the next also outwing, wages, or rather pay.

Ver. 9. I was chargeable to no man :] Beza would render it, I was not idle at another man's expence. The word view, (whence 10 " As the truth of Chrift is in me, "no man shall stop me of this boassing in the regions of Achaia.

11 Wherefore? ° because I-love you not? 'God knoweth.

12 But what I do, that I will do, <sup>9</sup> that I may cut off occasion from them which defire occasion; that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we.

13 For fuch are 'falle apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ.

14 And no marvel; for 'Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light.

15 Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteoufnefs; ' whofe end fhall be according to their works.

16 I fay again, 'Let no man think me a fool; if otherwife, yet as a fool * receive me, that I may boast myself a little.

17 That which I speak, * I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were 'foolifuly, in this confidence of boafting.

18 <sup>z</sup> Seeing that many glory after the flefh, I will glory alfo.

19 For ye fuffer fools gladly, ' feeing ye yourselves are wife.

20 For ye fuffer, ' if a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himfelf, if a man imite you on the face.

(whence the original xateva pxnoa,) implies a benumbed inallive flate, to which no man feems to have been lefs obnoxious than St. Paul.

Ver. 12. That I will do, ] Rather, and will do; fo the words fland in the Greek, and do not refer to ver. 10. as a profession of St. Paul's resolution to take nothing from them; but to ver. 11. to which they are joined, flewing that his refuging any reward from them was not out of unkindnefs, but for another reafon ;- " What I do, and will " do, is, that I may cut off all occasion, &c." The Jews had a maxim among them : " That it was better for their " wile men to skin dead beasts for a living, than to ask a " maintenance from the generofity of those whom they " taught :" But it plainly appears, that whatever the false apostles might boast on this head, there was no foundation for it. Comp. ver. 20. 1 Cor. ix. 12.

Ver. 13. For fuch are falfe apofiles,] They had queftioned St. Paul's apostleship, I Cor. ix. because of his not taking a maintenance from the Corinthians. He here directly, and without referve, declares them to be no true apoffles.

Ver. 16. I foy again, let no man think, &c.] St. Paul goes on in his juit fication, reflecting upon the carriage of the falle aposile towards the Corinthians, ver. 16-21. He compares himfelf with the false apostle in what he boufts of, 25 being a Hebrew, ver. 21, 22. or, minister of Chrift, ver. 23. and then enlarges upon his labours and lufferings.

Ver. 17. That which I fpeak, &c.] " I do not fpeak ac-" cording to any express command, which Christ deli-" vered in his perfonal ministry (see 1 Cor. vii. 10.): no; "I own that he condemned seeking honour one of ano" ther, John, v. 44. which is certainly very criminal, " when felf-applause is aimed at: but the huge boastings " of my enemies, with a defign of imposing upon, and " perverting you; and their mean infinuations to difparage " my apostleship and the pure Gospel of Christ, and so " to prevent my ulefulnels in preaching it, force me to " fpeak with an air of weakness and folly, in this oftenta-" tious appearance of fetting forth things which relate to " my office."

Ver. 20. If a man bring you into bondage, &c.] This is fpoken ironically, to express their bearing with the infolence and covetouinels of their falle apofile. The bondage here meant was subjection to the will of the false apostle, as appears from the following particulars of this verfe,and not subjection to the Jewish rites; for, had that been the cafe, St. Paul was fo zealous against it, that he would have fpoken more plainly and warmly, as we fee in his Epistle to the Galatians; and not have touched it thus only by the bye, in a doubtful expression. Besides, it is plain that no fuch thing was yet attempted openly, only St. Paul was afraid of it. See ver. 3. The meaning of the whole verse is, " You bear with it, if a man bring you into " bondage; that is, domineer over you, and use you like " his bondmen and flaves: If he make a prey of you, and almost devour you by exorbitant demands; if he make a " gain of you, that is, extort prefents from you, or entice you to make them; if he exalt himself in the spirit of " pride and ambition ; if he finite you on the face, that is, if " " he treat you in the most contumclious, difgraceful, and " debafing manner." Some would render this and the preceding verse (and I think with more force) as follows: ver. 19. Wife as you are, ye bear with fools gladly, ver. 20. Xy 2 But. But,

Ver. 21. I fpeak as concerning reproach.] Do I fpeak this by way of dishonour, as if we curfelves were weak? Surely, in whatsoever any one else may be consident, (I speak it in folly) I also am consident. Doddridge. Heylin renders the verie thus: I speak of disgraces which touch me, as if I had suffered them myself; but in whatsoever any of them dare to boasi, (I speak foolishly) I dare the same.

Ver. 22. Are they Hebrews?] Mr. Locke observes, that though the Apostle makes use of the plural number they, it is his opinion that he means but one person; as after, when he fays we, he means only himself, using the plural number out of delicacy. "Are they Hebrews by language? "fays the Apostle, capable of consulting the scriptures in "the original, with all the advantage which a familiar ac-"quaintance with that tongue from their childhood can "give them?—So am I: Are they Israelites by birth?—Not "descended from Esau, or any other branch of the fa-"mily, but that on which the blessing was entailed?— "So am I. Are they of the feed of Abraham, both by the "father's and mother's fide, not proselytes, or of mingled "descent?—So am I; and can trace up as fair and clear a "genealogy through the tribe of Benjamin, to the father "of the faithful." See Acts, vi. 1.

Ver. 23. I am more: Or, I am more fo. In firipes above measure, fhould rather be read, in firipes far exceeding; for these words, as the other particulars of this verse, should be taken comparatively, with reference to the salfe apostle; with whom St. Paul is comparing himself in the ministry of the Gospel. Unless this be so understood, there will seem to be a disagreeable tautology in the following verses; which, taking these words in a comparative sense, are proofs of his saving, In firipes I am exceedingly beyond him; for, of the Jews five times, &c. Sce on Deut. XXV. 3.

Ver. 25. Thrice was I beaten with rods, &c.] See Matth. xxvii. 26. Mark, xv. 15. John, xix. 1. The wreck at Malta happened long after this time; fo that it must have been the fourth shipwreck that St. Paul suffered. Had the inhabitants of that island been informed of this circumstance, they would have been confirmed in their fulpicions of his being a very bad man; but this remarkably fhews us, that a feries of what the world calls misfortunes from the hand of Providence, may befal the best and worthiest of mankind. The word Nux & mendered a day and a night, fignifies "a natural day, including the hours of light and " darknefs." St. Paul was, during fuch a natural day, in the deep; probably floating on the remainders of the wreck, and just on the point of being washed away and funk every moment. As Bufger, the word here ufed, and rendered the deep, was the name of a deep dungeon at Cyzicum, in the Propontis, Dr. Hammond conjectures that St. Paul was caft into it, as he passed from Troas to that city: but the interpretation above given feems to be more eafy and natural.

Ver. 26. In perils of waters,] Or, of rivers: the word fhould certainly be fo rendered, to contradiftinguish these hazards, from those which he underwent by fea. In the city, means not only in Jerusalem, but in other cities, in opposition to perils in the wilderness. The Apostle possibly mentions false brethren last, as apprehending peculiar danger from their efforts among the Corinthians.

Ver. 27. In wearinefs and painfulnefs,] The latter of the words here ufed,  $M_{\delta\chi}$  (G), is more expressive than the former,  $K'\pi$  (G): it fignifies not only firenuous labour, but such as proceeds to a degree of great fatigue. What an idea does this verse give us of the Apostle's fidelity and zeal! How hard was it for a man of a genteel and liberal education, as St. Paul was, to bear such rigours, and to wander about like a vagabond, hungry, and almost naked; yet coming into the presence of persons of high life; and speaking in large and various affemblies, on matters of the utmost importance! See the Inferences.

me every day. Doddridge. Others would read, besides what is exclusive of these things, the care of all the churches, is, &c. for what he had before mentioned were no other than external things. That which cometh upon me daily, Mr. Saurin would read, what befiegeth me daily. The original is very emphatical; that daily infurrection upon me,-the care, &c. The word 'Emission's properly fignifies a tumult, or crowd of people rifing up against a man at once, and ready to bear him down.

Ver. 29. Who is offended, ] " So as to be led into fin by the railness or uncharitableness of others; and I am not fred-with grief and indignation, to fee fuch diffionour brought upon religion, and with zeal to reprefs the grievance, if possible?" The word Ingesuan properly fignifies to be fired; and it may, perhaps, in this connection, allude to the fudden hurry of spirits into which a man is put by the dangerous fall of a perion whom he tenderly loves, especially when occasioned by the carelessiness and folly of another.

Ver. 30. If I must needs glory, ] See ch. xii. 11. By the word nauxaofas, which is translated fometimes to glory, and fometimes to boaft, the Apostle throughout, when he applies it to himfelf, means nothing but the mentioning some commendable action of his, without vanity or oftentation, and barely from the necessity of the occasion.

Ver. 31. The God and Father, &c.] God, even the Father, &c. There should only be a colon at the end of the verse; this solemn asseveration being introduced to give credit, not to what precedes, but to what follows; which was then known only to few, and is therefore attested in like manner, Gal. i. 20. though afterwards particularly related by St. Luke, Acts, ix. 25.

Inferences drawn from ver. 19, &c.-This portion of kripture is the more remarkable, because it presents us with a great Apostle, engaged in an act very unufual, and, generally speaking, very unbecoming that character. It kems therefore highly neceffary, in order to understand and be able to account for fuch a proceeding, that we confider carefully, first, the occasion, and, secondly, the manner of it; after which, fuch other reflections may be properly suggested, as naturally arise from the subject.

1. The occasion, as has been frequently hinted, was evidently the corruptions brought into the church of Corinth by some false teachers, who had infinuated themselves into the affections of the people by every art of subtilty and deceit. Very many of the people appear to have been caught with their guile, and to have entered into deep prejudices against St. Paul; and were grown to immoderately fond of their false teachers, that at the fame time that they thought the just and gentle authority of an Apostle a yoke too heavy, the utmost vanity and infolence, the most infatiable pillaging and avarice, the most imperious tyranny and contumelious treatment, went down very contentedly, from the hands of those mercenary hypocrites.

Had this partiality been attended with no farther confequence than the leffening St. Paul's private reputation, he would not have thought it worth while fo folicitously to vindicate his honour; but forefeeing that fo undeferved a preference of the men, would certainly bring on a liking for their errors, and thus endanger the fouls of as many as should adhere to them, charity for his brethren called for justice to himfelf. Accordingly, for the fake of those deluded Corinthians, and to justify the truth, he found it neceffary to affert his due; to provoke his bold detractors to a comparison, and fo at once to shew how much he, and how little they, were able to produce, in proof of their authority; -an authority, which he was invelted with by Jefus Chrift and the Holy Ghoft, and exercifed with lenity and temper; but which they, by dint of arrogance, affumed to themfelves, and abufed to the vile purpofes of calumny and faction.

Such was the occasion, such the end of our Apostle's appearing here in a figure fo unlike what he commonly makes in his writings; yet which, though they are fo reasonable and so urgent, he manages in such a way, as to clear his humility of every fufpicion that the most captious adverfary could caft upon it.

2. This may better appear from the fecond particular. -the manner of his proceeding on this delicate occasion : in which we should observe, I. His many apologies, or feeming condemnations of himfelf, in giving way to far to the provocations of those who spoke or thought against him. See ver. 21, 23, 30. (and again ch. xii. 1, 11, &c.). with other expressions to the like purpose. So cautiously does the Apostle conduct himself in a point which he rightly underflood to be fo nice: for, as the expatiating upon ourselves without any necessity, is of all faults in conversation the most nauseous and offensive, fo the being extremely tender and officious, even in our own vindication, is feldom free from vanity. This is the cafe of all mankind,-but especially of the ministers of Christ, who must expect a share in calumnies and contradictions, and ought to be armed with patience to endure them, above the Commending his apollefhip, though he might glory of his wonderful revelations, yet the Apolle rather choofeth to glory of his infirmities, blaming the Corinthians for forcing him to this boalling: he promifeth to come to them again; but yet altogether in the affection of a father, although he fearch he shall, to his grief, find many offenders and public diforders there.

the proportion of common men. When therefore these have influence upon their perfonal advantages only, it is generally better to leave the clearing of their innocence to time, and the evidence of a good conversation. Where they reflect upon their character, and by poisoning the people with ill impressions, tend to obstruct the efficacy of their labours,—the cause becomes public; their charge is concerned, and a becoming folicitude to fct matters right in such circumstances, is no longer zeal for their own, but charity for other men's fafety and good.

And yet even in these circumstances, St. Paul's example teaches us how careful we ought to be in warding off all the spiteful constructions which are apt to be made of the most necessary and the most modest publication of our own conduct and defervings: for, 2. The fubjects upon which he chooses here to enlarge were, not the greatness of his miracles, not the power of his eloquence and arguments, not the fuccefs of his labours, or the number of converts he had won, or of the churches that he had planted, though no man could with greater right have alleged all thefe; but only the toils and hardships, the persecutions and offictions in which the discharge of his ministry had engaged him. These were such privileges, as his adversaries neither had nor defired to have to boaft of. They had other things in view; (ver. 20) the gain of private contributions,-the command of their hearers' purfes, and an absolute domi-nion over their perfons. The grounds upon which they exalted themfelves were all taken from worldly advantages, (ver. 21, 22.) and in that respect St. Paul is content to declare himself their equal. The particulars in which he declares himfelf their fuperior, were of fuch a kind, that they were well enough fatisfied to yield him a preference in them ;-fripes and imprisonments, supervecks, and deaths, hard and perilous journies, cold, and hunger and thirft. These it was so far from vanity to glory in, that the Apostle found it neceffary (ch. xii.) to subjoin his being honoured with extraordinary visions and revelations, to prevent fo great a degree and fo constant a succession of sufferings from being turned into an argument of God's displeasure against one fo incessantly exercised in them.

And yet, these afflictions were really the most proper matter of glorying to St. Paul; because it was perfectly free from all vanity and felf-feeking; for bis were not fufferings in purfuit of his own emolument or gratification; not induftrioufly courted, nor oftentatioufly magnified, in order to turn them into gain—And ftill more, becaufe to all who duly confidered them, they were proofs of that abundant grace which fupported him under them; of that unparallelled fincerity and zeal which, through the bleffing of God, difpofed him fo cheerfully to perfevere in encountering with them; and of the truth of that doctrine, which, by the ministry of one fo wondroufly opprefied and ill treated, could yet gain fo much ground, and triumph over all oppofition.

The paffage thus explained offers to us the following useful confiderations:

1. The inftance before us fhews, how far we ought to be from reckoning what we endure for God's caufe, (when it really is GOD's) as matter of forrow or fhame to us. St. Paul, in comparison of the reft of the Apostles, was a labourer called in at the eleventh hour; and as he taught the Phillippians to esteem it, fo he thought it,—a peculiar grace, that it was given him not only to believe in Jesu, but also to fuffer for his name. The fervency of his charity and zeal made up what was wanting in point of time.

2. When St. Paul, to all his other fufferings, adds the care of all the churches, and his zealous compafion over those who were afflicted or in danger of falling: this shews us the abundance of his charity, and instructs us what ought to be the measure of ours—not to neglect, or think ourselves excused from a tender concern for the afflictions or dangers of our brethren, upon the account of any sufferings of our own. Be our other circumstances what they will, yet still they are members of Christ's body; and while that relation continues, all the duties refulting from it must do so indispensable and perpetual a duty indeed is charity, for the faults of others especially, that those hardships, which lie outward and open to the view of others, are far from being the most fensible part of what the genuine ministers of the Gospel endure.

Laftly, The methods used for exercising St. Paul's patience, holines, and virtue, teach us plainly, that the way in which God would be ferved by Christians, but especially especially by his miniflers, is that of constancy, of indefatigable diligence, and of diffusive love : that case and idlenefs, that luxury and an effeminate declining of trouble for the public good, are by no means agreeable to the character of a difciple of Christ Jesus. So strenuously does this great Apostle, by his own example, encourage and prepare us for the like discipline, if called to it, that no one who profess himself the fervant of Christ can plead exemption from a fimilar perfeverance and fortitude. One great and evident defign of these sharp conflicts of St. Paulwas, doubtlefs, to ftimulate every future Christian to reduce the foftness of a nature generally too indulgent of flesh and blood, and to enure him to fuffer hard ships like a good foldier, under the common Captain of our falvation. In which warfare the lefs we fpare our own perfons, the more we may depend upon his protection and support under the conflict; the brighter trophies shall we raife to his glory, to the honour of religion, and the unspeakable advantage both of body and foul, in that day of triumph and eternal joy! Amen.

REFLECTIONS .- Ift. The Apoftle begins,

1. With an apology for what he was about to fay; Would to God ze could bear with me a little in my folly; and indeed bear with me, compelled reluctantly to fpeak in my own commendation.

2. He gives the reasons for what he was about to fay. It was,

[1.] Out of jealoufy for them. For I am jealous over you with godly jealoufy: for I have efpoufed you to one hufband, that I may prefent you as a chafte virgin to Chrift, true to your folemn engagements, and faithful in all your conduct to this heavenly Bridegroom of fouls. But I fear, knowing the wiles of the falle teachers, self by any means, as the ferpent beguiled Eve through his fubtility, fo your minds flould be corrupted from the fimplicity that is in Chrift; perverted from the principles, or feduced from the practice, of the gofpel.

[2.] Out of justice to himself. For if he that cometh pracheth another Jesus whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another Spirit, which ye have not received, or another goled, which ye have not accepted, ye might well hear with him: but since there is but one Jesus, one Spirit, one gospel, it was shrewdly to be suspected that the person who pretended to preach another Jesus, boassed of a better Spirit, and a more excellent gospel, than that by which they had at first been converted to the faith, was a deceiver, and, inslead of being connived at, or carefied, should be rejected with abhorrence.

adly, Constrained by the infinuations which had been caft out against him, the bleffed Paul,

1. Affirts his equality with the very chief of the apoftles. Though rule in freech, my elocution being not fo graceful as that of fome others, yet my knowledge of the gofpel mysteries is inferior to none. But we have been thoroughly made manifif among you in all things; your conficiences have borne witness to the efficacy of our preaching; and our conversation among you, as you know, has been most unblameable.

2. He afferts his difinterested conduct, and vindicates himfelf from the cavils of his adverfaries, who fuggefted that he had acted below the apostolic character, in not receiving his maintenance from the church at Corinth. Have I committed an offence in abafing myself, to work for my fublistence, that ye might be exalted to the participation of the gospel privileges; because I preached to you the gospel of Gcd freely, that no prejudice might obstruct your receiving our word, which fuch difinterested zeal could not but recommend? I robbed other churches, taking wages of them to do you fervice; not really plundering them, but living upontheir voluntary contributions; when the Corinthians, fo much richer, could much easier have afforded him a maintenance. However, he neither had been, nor would be a burden to them; his former wants the Macedonians. had fupplied; and he was firmly refolved that none in all Achaia, in any future time, fhould have reason to reproach him on this behalf, to ftop his glorying of having preached to them the gospel freely.

Wherefore do I this? out of pride or difgust, as the falle teachers would infinuate, and becaufe I love you not ? No; God knoweth that thefe were not my motives. But I have thus acted, and will continue to to do, that I may cut off occafien from them which defire occafion, and would be ready to catch at any Kandle to fleece you, if I received any thing from yet. Therefore I would with that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we, and as free from every mercenary view : for in truth fuch are falle apofiles, affuming a character to which they have not the least title; deceitful workers, corrupting the word of God; transforming themfelves into the apofiles of Christ, appearing under the most specious professions. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light, as he appeared when he came to feduce Eve from her integrity: therefore it is no great thing if his minifters alfo be transformed as the minifters of righteousnefs, whose end shall be according to their works, and the iffue be their everlasting destruction.

3dly, The Apostle, with reluctance, enters upon the fubject of his own vindication. I fay again, let no man think me a fool; if otherwife, yet as a fool receive me, that I may boast myself a little, fuch boasts, in general, being indeed the indications of a vain mind. That which I seak, I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were foolifbly in this confidence of beafing ; but fince I am compelled, by the unhappy circumstances in which I stand, and feeing that many glory after the fle/b, in their external privileges, I will glory alfo. For ye fuffer fools gladly, and carefs the vain boafters among you, feeing ye yourfelves are wife. Probably the words are spoken ironically: Wile men indeed ye are, to be dupes to fuch oftentatious deceivers. For ye juffer if a man bring you into bondage, tyrannizing over your confciences; if a man devour you under the specious pretences of religion; if a man take of you, or leize from you your possessions : if a man exalt himfelf, and treat you with lordly. contempt;

but now I forbear, left any man should think that he heareth of me. of me above that which he seeth me to be, or 7 And left I should contempt; if a man fmite you on the face, fubmillive to every infult. I fpeak as concerning reproach, as though we had been weak, and had no right to affert fuch authority as they pretend to claim: howbeit, whereinfoever any is bold, (I fpeak foolifhly) I am bold alfo, and can produce as long a catalogue of privileges as the chief of thefe arrogant men.

1. As to external Jewish privileges of defcent. Are they Hebrews? fo am I, by both my parents, (Phil. iii. 5.) are they Ifraelites? the fons of Jacob, fo am I: are they the feed of Abraham? fo am I, a true defcendant of this eminent patriarch.

2. As to golpel privileges. Are they the ministers of Chrift? commissioned by him? (I speak as a fool,) admitting their plea, though falfe, to be true, I am more, having a more extraordinary commission, more eminent endowments, and fuffering for the caufe more than any of them : in labours more abundant ; in stripes above measure, unmercifully beaten; in prisons more frequent; in deaths oft, exposed to the most imminent dangers, a short enumeration of which will prove what I affert. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes, fave one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, by the Roman lictors ; once was I floned, and left for dead ; thrice I fuffered shipwreck ; a night and a day I have been in the deep, toffed on the foaming waves, and every moment ready to be fwallowed up by them : in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in fording rivers, or by land floods ; in perils of robbers; in perils by mine orun countrymen, who Iny in wait for me; in perils by the heathen; in perils in the city, from dangerous infurrections; in perils in the wildernefs, during my travels; in perils in the fea; in perils among falfe brethren, the most dangerous of all enemies : in wearinefs and painfulnefs, under the most fatiguing labours; in watchings often, my reft being broken; in hunger and thirft, for want of needful refreshments; in fastings often, voluntary, or necessitated by mere want; in cold and nakednefs, exposed to the inclemency of the weather, and without fufficient cloathing to keep me warm. Befule those things which affect my body, a heavier load of cares lies upon my mind, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches, to advance their purity and peace, rectify their diforders, and guard them against feducers. Who is weak, and I am not weak? fympathizing with him in his infirmity of body or mind ? who is offended, and I burn not with jealoufy for the offence, and zeal to reftore him? If I muft needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities, and rather mention my fufferings and hardships than my privileges. The God and Father of our Lord Jefus Christ, which is bleffed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not. In Damafcus, the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me : and through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his bands, inatched as it were from inevitable death. Such a glorious courfe marked, indeed, the great Apostle: such sufferings for righteousness' fake are the higheft honour.

CHAP. XII.

AFTER enumerating in the former chapter his almost incredible labours and fufferings for the golpel, the Apoltle in this, directing his discourse to the faction who had ridiculed him for praifing himfelf, faid to them ironically, Well, it does not become me to boaft of any thing I have done or suffered as a minister of Christ: nevertheles, I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord, ver. 1.-But that he might not offend their affected delicacy, he did not fay these visions and revelations were given to himfelf. He only told them that he knew a fervant of Chrift, who, fourteen years before the date of this letter, had been caught up as far as to the third heaven, ver. 2. - Though whether in the body or out of the body, the Apostle did not know, ver. 3.-This servant of Christ, in paradife, heard things which could not be expressed in human language, ver. 4.-Concerning fuch a perfon, the Apostle faid he would boaft; but, concerning himfelf, he told them, ironically, he would not boaft, except in his weakreffes, for which they had ridiculed him, and of which he had boatted in the end of the preceding chapter, ver. 5 .--And yet, being himfelf that fervant of Christ who had been caught up, he told them that if he inclined to boaft concerning himfelf, as the perfon who was fo highly honoured, he fhould not be a fool, becaufe he fhould speak nothing of himfelf but what was strictly true. Neverthelefs he forbare, left forfooth any of them should think more highly of him than his appearance or his manner of speaking warranted. This he faid in high but facred ridicule of their gibe that his bodily presence was weak, but his letters weighty and powerful, ver. 6.

Farther, because he had faid he would not boast, except in his weakneffes, for which they had ridiculed him, he told them that his bodily infirmity, inftead of rendering him contemptible, was an honour to him; because it was fent on him by God, to prevent him from being too much elated with the transcendency of the revelations which had been given to him, ver. 7.-That he had befought the Lord thrice to remove it, ver. 8.—But that he told him his grace was fufficient for making him fuccefsful as an Apostle, and his power in converting the world was most illustriously displayed in the weakness of the instruments employed for that end. The Apostle therefore boasted in his own weaknefs, that the power of Christ might be seen to dwell upon him, ver. 9.-Nay, he even took pleasure in weaknesses, insults, &c. for Christ's fake, ver. 10.-But added, that if he appeared a fool in thus praifing himfelf, his friends among the Corinthians had constrained him to it; because when his enemies called his apostleship in question, they ought to have spoken in his vindication, as they well knew that he was in no respect inferior to the greatest of the apostles, ver. 11 .--- All the proofs of an apostle he had frequently shewed in their presence, by figns and wonders, and powers, ver. 12.-So that as a church they were inferior to others in nothing, except that he, their spiritual father, had not taken maintenance from them. But, in irony of their finding fault with him on that account, he begged them to forgive him that injury, vcr. 13.-Yet to shew that he had done them no injury in that matter, he now told them he was coming to them . ľ them the third time, and still would not be burdensome to them: because he did not seek their goods, but their falvation, and because the children ought not to provide for the parents, but the parents for the children, ver. 14 .--- and therefore with pleafure he would fpend his time and wafte his body for their fouls' fake, fo much did he love them; although the more he loved them, he found the lefs he was belored by them, ver. 15.—Well then, faid he, ye must acknowledge that I did not burden you, by taking maintenance from you. Nevertheles, the faction fay, (because it is the practice of the falle teacher to whom they are attached,) that by this shew of disinterestedness I craftily made you lay alide all fuspicion of my loving money, that I might draw it the more effectually from you by my affiftants, when absent, ver. 16.-But did I make the least gain of you by any of those whom I fent to you after my departure ? ver. 17 .- I besought Titus to visit you lately. Did Titus, or the brother that I fent with him, make any gain of you ? Did they not walk in the fame spirit, and in the same steps with me? ver. 18. Farther, by fending Titus to you this fecond time, do I apologize to you for not coming myfelf? In the fight of God I folemnly proteft that I speak by the direction of Chrift, when I tell you that my fending Titus is defigned for your edification, by giving the faulty among you time to repeat, ver. 19 .- Yet I am afraid that when I come I shall not find you such reformed persons as I wish you to be, and that I shall be found by you such as ye do not wish. My meaning is, that I shall find strifes, emulations, &c. among you, ver. 20.-So that when I come, I shall be so far humbled among you by my God, as to be obliged with grief to punish those among you who have formerly finned, and have not repented of the uncleannefs, and fornication, and lasciviousness which they have habitually committed, ver. 21.

Ver. 1. I will come to visions, &c.] The Apostle's speaking of his visions and revelutions, which, indeed, did him the highest honour, could not be a proof that he was determined not to vindicate himfelf : it is evident, therefore, that the word yip in the original [i soouze yap] cannot have its original fignification, and be rendered for. Our translators take it for a mere expletive. Dr. Doddridge translates it neverthelefs; and it is certain that it has various fignifications, and must have this fignification here, if it express any thing. Some would read the verse, Is it not repedient for me to glory ? - I will come therefore to visions, &c.

Ver. 2. I knew a man in Chrift] St. Paul mult undoubtedly mean himfelf, or the whole article had been quite foreign to his purpole. It hence appears, that the Apostle had concealed this extraordinary event fourteen your; and if this Epifile was written about the year 58, 28 is supposed, this vision must have fallen out in the year 14, which was to long after his convertion as to prove it quite different from the trance mentioned, Acts, ix. 9. some think that this glorious representation was made to him in the temple, on the journey mentioned, Acts, in 30. xxii, 17. and intended to encourage him against the difficulties which he was to encounter in preaching the gospel to the Gentiles. Whether in the body or out of the body, must mean, "I know not whether he was then in the body, " during that extraordinary extacy, or for a time taken " out of the body, fo that only the principle of animal life " remained in him." As St. Paul must have known that his body was not actually dead during this trance, but that the animal motion of his lungs and heart continued, it tends to prove that he really confidered the principle of animal life to be fomething diffinct from the rational foul. See Bishop Brown's distinction of Spirit, Soul, and Body, in his "Procedure of the Understanding," b. ii. ch. 10. Castalio and Bengelius translate the beginning of this verse, I know a Christian caught up fourteen years ago, &c. Instead of I cannot tell, here and ver. 3. some read, I know not.

Ver. 4. Caught up into Paradife] By the third heaven, ver. 2. some understand the feat of the divine glory, the place where Chrift dwelleth at the Father's right-hand; and by Paradife, that garden of God, which is the feat of the happy in the intermediate state, and during their separation from the body. Bifhop Bull, difcourfing on this fubject, observes, "St. Paul, -who had been caught up " into the third heaven, and also into Paradife, (which the " fcriptures tell us is the receptacle of the spirits of good " men, separated from their bodies) and therefore was best " able to give us an account of the ftate of fouls dwelling " there,-affures us, that those fouls live and operate, " and have a perception of excellent things; nay, in the 66 very fame patfage, where he speaks of that rapture of " his, he plainly enough confirms this hypothefis : for " first when he declares himself uncertain whether he received those admirable visions in or out of the body, he " manifestiy supposes it pollible for the foul, when out of " the body, not only to fubfift, but alfo to perceive and 66 know-and even things above the natural apprehention of mortal men; and then when he tells us that he re-" ceived in Paradife visions and revelations, and heard 66 " there "jonra jourala, unspeakable words, not lawful, or rather, not poffible for a man to utter, he directly teaches " that Paradife is so far from being a place of darkness " " and obscurity, filence and oblivion, where the good " fpirits, its proper inhabitants, are all in a profound fleep, " as fome have vainly imagined,-that, on the contrary, " it is a most glorious place, full of light and ravishing vision; a place where mysteries may be heard and " " learned, far furpalling the reach of frail mortals. In fhort, the glories of the third beaven, and of Paradife, ** feem to have been, by an extraordinary revelation, open-" ed and discovered to St. Paul, not only for his own fup-" port under the heavy pressure of his afflictions, but also " " that he might be able to speak of them with greater al-" furance to others. And the order is observable : first, " he had represented to him the most perfect joys of the " third or highest heaven, of which we hope to be par-" takers after the refurrection; and then, left fo long an Ζz " expectation

Ver. 5. But in mine infirmities] "In those things " which carry the marks of weakness, though, in a cer-" tain connection, they will appear honourable too."

Ver. 7. Was given to me a thorn in the flefb,] The conjectures of commentators respecting St. Paul's thorn in the flesh, have been innumerable. We shall not dwell upon them, but infert the following, as it appears to be the most rational interpretation. Ezekiel has a parallel paffage, ch. xxviii. 24. where the pricking briar, and grieving thorn, are used to express a great affliction. In allusion to which the Apostle might use this term, to fignify some paralytic diforder, which affected his fpeech and alpect, owing to the infufferable glories of this vision, which might weaken and relax the nervous system. This infirmity in his flefb might give occasion to the meffenger of Satan, or the false teacher and calumnious adverfary who opposed the Apostle, to reprefent him in a defpicable light. As this diforder might threaten both his acceptance among the Corinthians and others, and his ulefulnefs, it is no wonder that he was fo importunate for its removal; yet, being the effect of fo great and fingular a favour, he might, with the highest propriety, talk of glorying in it, ver. 9. However, as St. Paul thought fit to conceal what this thorn in the flefb was, it is not easy for us to discover, nor is it very material to know what it was.

Ver. 9. My strength is made perfect in weakness.] "Is " illustrated in proportion to the weakness of the instru-ment 1 make use of." The word Ἐπισκηνώση, which we render, may rest upon, is emphatical, and fignifies literally, may pitch its tent upon. See John, i. 14.

Ver. 10. For when I am weak, &c.] "For when, " viewed in my outward state, I appear weak, then, by " the power of Christ, which dwelleth in me, I am found " to be strong."

Ver. 12. In all patience, ] This may well be understood to reflect on the haughtiness and plenty, wherein the falle apostle lived among them.

Ver. 14. The third time I am ready, &c.] Having been difappointed twice before, 1 Cor. xvi. 5. 2 Cor. i. 15, 16.

Ver. 15. I will very gladly fpend and be fpent] "I will " gladly exhauft my ftrength, and put myfelf to any ex-" pence too, for your falvation; though the confequence " of all fhould be, that the more abundantly I love you, " the less I should be loved by you." See 2 Tim. ii. 10. 1 Theff. ii. 8.

Ver. 16. But be it fo, I did not burden you, &c.] But be it fo that I did not burden you, yet [perhaps it will be fuggested] that, being a crafty deceiver, I circumvented you with guile.

felves unto you? we fpeak ' before God in Chrift: but we ' do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying.

21 And left, when I come again, <sup>b</sup> my God will humble me among you, and that I fhall bewail many which have finned already, and have not repented of the uncleannels and fornication and lafcivioufnels which they have committed.

y See ch. 11. 10, 31. Rom. 1. 9. & 9. 7. I Cor. 9 12, 23. & 10. 33 & 14. 26. Ch. 5. 12, 13. & 10. 8. & 13. 10. Ch. 1. 83, 24. & 24. 1. & 10. 2. & 13. 2, 10. 1 Cor. 4. 16, 18, 21. Phil. 3. 18, 19. 1 Cor. 5. 11. Rom. 13. 13.

before given the reason, ch. i. 23. for his not coming to them, with the fame affeveration as in the prefent verfe. If we trace the thread of St. Paul's difcourfe, we may observe that, having concluded the justification of himself and his apostleship by his past actions, ver. 13. he had it in his thoughts to tell them how he would deal with the falle apostle and his adherents when he came, as he was now ready to do; and therefore he folemnly begins, ver. 14. with Behold; and tells them, that now the third time he was ready to come to them : to which joining what was much upon his mind, that he would not be burdenseme to them when he came, an objection was prefented to his thoughts, namely, that this perfonal shyness in him was but cunning, for that he defigned to draw gain from them by other hands; from which he clears himself by the inflance of Titus, and a brother, whom he had fent together with him; who were as far from receiving any thing from them as he himfelf. Titus and his other meffenger being thus mentioned, he thought it necessary to obviate another sufpicion which might be raifed in the minds of some of them, as if he mentioned the fending of those two as an apology for his not coming himfelf. This he utterly difclaims ; and, to prevent any thoughts of that kind, folemnly protents to them, that, in all his conduct towards them, he had done nothing but for their edification; that he had no other aim in any of his actions; and that he forbore coming, merely out of respect and good-will to them. So that the whole, from ver. 14. to ch. xiii. 1, must be looked upon as a difcourfe which fell in occasionally, though tending to the fame purpole with the reft :--- a way of writing very usual with our Apoftle, and with other writers, who abound in quickness and variety of thoughts, as he did. Such men, by new matter rifing in their way, are often put by from what they were going, and had begun to fay; which therefore they are obliged to take up again, and contunue at a diftance, as St. Paul does here, after the interpolition of eight verses. But we must never forget that, however the Holy Spirit was pleafed to operate on the. Apostle's mind, the whole was written under his infallible direction.

Ver. 20. Left there be-envyings, &c.] All these were the natural confequences of those debates which had arisen among them; and therefore St. Paul, in a very judicious manner, gives this folemn warning with relation to them.

Inferences. - What vicifitudes are there in the Christian's comforts and afflictions! He is fometimes lifted up, as it were, to the third heaven, which is like a paradife, for all delights, and unutterable glories; and he prefently falls under the buffetings of Satan, and the forest trials, which God orders and over-rules to prevent spiritual pride, left it should rife, even upon the ground of the most diftinguishing and endearing manifestations of divine favour. How earneftly does the believer betake himfelf to the Lord Jefus for deliverance from temptations and afflictions, which he finds to be more than his own match! And how certain is it that his prayers shall not be in vain, though they may not always be answered in the very thing that he asked ! A promise of Christ's grace as sufficient for us, and of his strength, as to be made perfect in our weaknefs, is the nobleft fupport under every difficulty or danger, and the best fecurity for a due improvement of it, and for victory and triumph in the iffue. We may well glory in those trials which give occasion for, and are attended with, the most evident demonstrations of the power of Chrift, as refting upon us; though, in the midit of the higheft privileges, manifestations, and attainments, we are, as of ourfelves, and ought to be in our own account, as nothing. How happy is it, when the fervants of Chrift can appeal to him for the fincerity of their aims in all their holy ministrations; and can appeal to the confciences of their hearers that the figns of their divine mission are made known among them, by their patient, faithful, tender, and difinterested behaviour; by the good fruits of their labours; and by plain tokens of God's being with them ! And how cheerfully will they fpend, and be fpent, for the good of fouls, and do all things for their edification, while they feek not theirs, but them; and refolve, by the Grace of God, to perfift therein, even though the more they love them, and, like parents, provide for their fpiritual welfare, the lefs they were to be loved of them ! How defirous should they all be to act under the influence ~ of the fame divine Spirit, and with the fame Christian temper; and to tread in the fame laudable fteps, in purfuing the great ends of their ministry! And, as far as they do fo, how ready fhould their people be to encourage and speak well of them, and to fave them the irkfome talk of faying any thing that looks like felf-applause, to vindicate their own characters ! But, O how humbling and grievous is it, not only to be themfelves vilified, but to fee their hopes blasted, and their labour lost upon those, who, instead of answering just expectations of yielding obedience to the authority of Chrift, in all holy conversation and godlines, are guilty of fuch scandalous enormities in temper and behaviour, and continue fo impenitent in them, as to need the feverest animadversions upon them !

He threateneth feverity and the power of his apofileship against obstinate finners; and advising them to a trial of their faith, and to a reformation of their conduct before his coming, he concludeth his epifile with a general exhortation and prayer.

REFLECTIONS.—1ft. Once more he will fpeak. Though (ordinarily the Apostle confesses) it is not expedient for me, doubtlefs, to glory; yet fince others boaft of extraordinary manifestations, I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord; one remarkable inftance of which I will only mention.

I knew, or I know, a man in Chrift, a faithful foul, above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, whether in his fpirit only, or in his whole man, I cannot tell : God knoweth) fuch an one caught up to the third heaven, where angels dwell, and the most illustrious display of the divine glory is made. And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell : God knoweth) how that he was caught up into Paradife, the region of the bleffed, and beard unspeakable words, which contained fuch fublimity of ideas, and were delivered in fuch language as it is not lawful, or poffible, for a man to utter, in his present mortal state of weakness. Of fuch an one will I glory: yet of myfelf I will not glory, but in mine infirmities, and in fuch things as carry evident marks of my own weaknefs. For though I would defire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will fay the truth, I will fpeak with the utmost fincerity and fimplicity : but now I forbear, left any man should think of me above that which be feeth me to be, or that he heareth of me, supposing me to be more than human, who am a mere worm. And left I foould be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the mesfenger of Satan, to buffet me, left I fould be exalted above meafure. What this was, whether fome bodily affliction, or outward reproach, whatever it was, it was very grievous, yet fent for the most bleffed purpose, and served to keep him humble. For this thing I befought the Lord thrice importunately, that it might depart from me. And he faid unto me, by an audible voice, or fome divine impression on my spirit, My grace is sufficient for thee : for my frength is made perfect in weaknefs-fimple faith in my power and love fhall make thee in all things victorious, yea, more than conquetor. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me, and be the more transcendently exalted in refcuing me out of all my trials, and carrying me fafe through every temptation. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necesfities, in perfecutions, in distreffes for Christ's fake ; not only refigned, but happy, rejoicing in the fufferings that I endure : for when I am weak, then am I strong, and rife victorious over every foc, through the power of divine grace. Note, (1.) To be humble in the midit of high attainments is doubly excellent. (2.) Prayer is the great relief under every diffrefs. (3.) Though God does not always answer us according to our petitions, yet, if he gives us firength to fand in our difficulties, we are bound to acknowledge that our prayers are answered. (4.) There is a sufficiency of grace in the Redeemer to carry the faithful foul fale through every trial. (5.) The more the believer fees and feels his own weaknefs, the more firm he flands in the power of 2dly, The Apostle returns again:

1. To apologize for what might in appearance favour of vanity. I am become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I sught to have been commended of you, who have received fuch peculiar benefit by my labours: for in nothing am I behind the very chiefeft Apofiles in my fufferings and la-bours, though I be nothing, confidered as of myfelf; our fufficiency and fuccels is of God. Truly the figns of an Apostle were wrought among you in all patience, amidst innumerable provocations and sufferings, in figns, miracles, and wonders of various kinds, and mighty deeds, which speak the arm of omnipotence. For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, in gifts and privileges, except it be that I myfelf was not burdenfome to you? forgive me this wrong ; than which never was a more beautiful turn, and a more poignant, though polite, rebuke, if it be confidered as fpoken ironically; or, ferioufly, it pleads in a most elegant manner his excufe for refufing that reward from them which might be construed as a mark of disdain. Note, (1.) Where we have received fpiritual benefit, it is a debt that we owe to our ministers to vindicate their injured characters. (2.) The greatest of men and ministers, when viewing themfelves in their true colours, cannot but own " I am nothing."

2. He declares his purpose to shew the fame difinterested conduct. Behold the third time I am ready to come to you, having the fecond time been difappointed; and I will not be burdenfome to you, but will preach the gospel to you freely: for I seek not your's, but you, your spiritual benefit, not your worldly substance. For I consider myself as your father in Christ, and shall treat you with paternal care, not defiring nor accepting aught at your hands; for, in general, the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children. And all I have shall be willingly laid out for you; for I will very gladly fpend and be fpent for you, to promote the good of your fouls, ready, if need be, to lay down my own life, though I should meet with the molt ungrateful returns, and the more abundantly I love you, the lefs I be loved, and even those who seduce you be preferred before me. Note, (1.) A true minister of Chrift never ferves for hire, but for love, delighting to feed, not to fleece the flock. (2.) True zeal for Chrift and his cause will make his servants nobly prodigal of life, unto their power, and fometimes above their power, exerting themselves in his fervice. (3.) The most ungrateful returns must not stay us from doing good even to the evil and unthankful.

Again,

4. Think ge that we excuse ourfelves unto you ? and want, by specious pretences, for finister ends, to infinuate others into your regard, or to get off from viliting you as I promifed ? We speak before God in Christ, appealing to him for our fincenty; but we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying, having this great end ever in view.

5. He declares his jealous fears for them. For I fear, left when I come I fball not find you fuch as I would, obedient and orderly; and that I fball be found unto you fuch as ye would not; obliged, though with reluctance, to exert my apofiolic authority; lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, frifes, backbitings, whifperings, fwellings, tumults, and all other evil fruits of a proud, contentious, uncharitable spiit: And left when I come again my God will humble me among you, and that I fall bewail many which have finned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness, and fornication, and lasciviousness, which they have committed. Note (1.) The falls of professions are a real grief to their faithful ministers; and every gracious foul cannot but mourn over them. (2.) They who perfift in their iniquities must be faithfully rebuked; and if they do not amend, their obstinate impenitence will inevitably iffue in final perdition.

CHAP. XIII.

THE taunting speech of the faction, "that the Apostle " was hold by letters when absent, but humble and meek " when present," he had answered by a delicate but pointed irony, ch. x. 1, 2. But as that speech contained an infinuation that his threatenings to punish them by a supernatural power were mere bugbears, without any foundation, he in this chapter tells them plainly, that he was now coming to Corinth a third time, and would punish all who * Or with him.

f Ch. 10. 3, 4. Rom. 6. 4-6, 8, 11. Phil. 3.

opposed him, as well as those who had finned habitually: and whatever of that kind was proved by the testimony of two or three witneffes, he would confider as fully eftablished, ver. 1.-In my former letter, faid he, I foretold that the delivering the inceftuous perfon to Satan would be followed with the deftruction of his flesh; and I now foretel, as prefent with you in fpirit the fecond time, that the fame thing will follow the centures which I fhall inflict on the guilty; and being absent in body, I write to all those who finned before ye received my former letter, and to all the reft who have finned fince, that if they oppose me when I come, I will not fpare them, ver. 2.-And this I will do, the rather because fome of you, in derifion, feek a proof of Chrift speaking by me. For though ye think me not able to punish you, yet, by the spiritual gifts which Chrift hath bestowed on you, ye must be fenfible that he is fufficiently ftrong to punish every guilty person among you, ver. 3.-He was crucified, indeed, through the weakness of his human nature; but, though he gave himfelf to be put to death, he now liveth by the power of God. In like manner, though I also am weak in body, and subject to death as he was, I will, neverthelefs, fnew myfelf alive with him, by exercising the power that he has given me in punishing you, if you repent not, however strong you may think yourfelves, ver. 4.---And fince ye feek a proof of Chrift speaking by me, I defire you to try yourfelves whether ye be a church of Christ, and to prove your ownfelves, whether as a church ye posses any spiritual gifts? Know ye not yourfelves to be a church of Christ, by the spiritual gifts which ye received from me ? and that Jesus Christ is among you in an extraordinary manner, by his miraculous powers and fpiritual gifts ; unlefs, perhaps, ye are without that proof of his presence ? ver. 5. (See the Annotations.)-In this passage the Apostle, by a very fine irony, shewed the faction the abfurdity of their feeking a proof of Christ's speaking by one who had been the inftrument of their conversion, and who had conferred on them, in fuch plenty, those spiritual gifts whereby Chrift manifested his extraordinary prefence in any church. The Apostle added, that although they fould be without that proof of Christ's prefence, having entirely banished the Spirit, at least in his fupernatural gifts, from among themfelves, by their heinous fins, he trufted they fhould not find him without the proof of Chritt's speaking by him, if it were needful for him to punish any of them when he came, ver. 6 .--- Yet he prayed to God that they might do nothing evil; his with being not to appear approved as an apostle by punishing them, but that they might repent, although the confequence should be, that he should appear as one without proof of his apoltleship, having no occasion to exert his power in punishing them, ver. 7.-For the Apostles could, at no time, use their miraculous power against the truth, but for the truth, ver. 8.-He therefore rejoiced when he appeared weak, through his having no occasion to punifly offenders; and wished the Corinthians to become perfect in love, and most closely knit together, fo as to form a glorious spiritual temple, ver. 9. And to promote their perfection, being absent, he had written these things to them, that when present he might not need to act sharply against them, according to the miraculous power which the Lord Jesus had given him, for edifying, and not for destroying his church, ver. 10.

Ver. 1. In the mouth of two or three witneffes] These words feem to be quoted from the law of our Saviour, Matth. xviii. 16. and not from the law of Moles in Deuteronomy; not only because the words are the same with those in St. Matthew, but from the likeness of the case. In Deuteronomy the rule given concerns only judicial trials; in St. Matthew it is a rule given for the management of persuation, and for the reclaiming of an offender by gentle means, before coming to the utmost extremity; which is the cafe of St. Paul here. In Deuteronomy the judge was to hear the witneffes, Deut. xvii. 6. xix. 15. In St. Matthew the party was to hear the witneffes, Matth. xviii. 17. which was also the cafe of St. Paul here; the witneffes which he made use of to perfuade them being his two epistles. That by witnesses he means his two epistles, is plain, from his way of expressing himfelf here, where he carefully mentions his telling them twice, viz. before in his former epistle, ch. iv. 19. and now a fecond time in his fecond epiftle; and also by the words, as if I were present with you a fecond time. By our Saviour's rule the offended perfon was to go twice to the offender; and therefore St. Paul fays, as if I were with you a fecond time, counting his letters as two perfonal applications to them, as our Saviour directed should be done, before coming to rougher means., Some take the witneffes to be the three meffengers by whom his first Epistle is supposed to be sent: but this would not be according to the method prefcribed by our Saviour, in the place from which St. Paul takes the words that he uses; for there were no witnesses to be made ule of in the first application; neither, if those had been the witneffes meant, would there have been any need for St. Paul fo expressly and carefully to have fet down-as if prefent a fecond time; words which, in that cafe, would be superfluous. Besides, those three men are no where mentioned to have been fent by him to perfuade them, nor the Corinthians required to hear them, or reproved for not having done it. And, laftly, they could not be better witneffes of St. Paul's endeavours twice to gain the Corinthians by fair means before he proceeded to feverity, than the Epifiles themfelves were.

- Ver. 2. I will not fpare:] It is certainly a great confirmation of the veracity of the Apoftles, that, when factions were raifed against them, they used none of the arts of flattery, however neceffary they might feem, but depended on the force of a miraculous power to reduce offenders; the pretence to which would have been most abfurd, if they had not really been confcious to themfelves that it was engaged in their favour. See on 1 Cor. iv. 21.

Ver. 4. Crucified through weaknefs,] With appearance of weaknefs, yet he liveth with the manifelation of the power of God. The meaning of the place is this: "Though "Chrift in his crucifixion appeared weak and defpicable, "yet he now lives to flew the power of God, in the miracles "and mighty works which he does: fo I, though by my "fufferings and infirmities I may appear weak and con-"temptible, yet fhall I live to flew the power of God, by "punifhing miraculoufly the offenders among you."

Ver. 5. Examine yourselves, &c.] "Instead therefore " of your fitting in judgment, and paffing unrighteous " cenfures upon us, as though there were no proof of " Christ's speaking in me, (ver. 3.) or in my dear affo-" ciates, look into your own hearts and ways, and bring " them to the touchstone of the word of God; and, in " carefully comparing them with that infallible ftandard, " make clofe inquiry whether ye yourfelves have believed " to the faving of your fouls, and have a real and evident " intereft in Chrift, through faith in him : pursue the dili-" gent fearch, by divine affiftance, till you have brought " this important point to an iffue, and have the cleareft " proof in yourfelves, whether you be fincere believers, " and whether faith be the governing principle in your own " hearts, or not: What ! are ye strangers to the trans-" actions that have paffed between God and your own " fouls, and to your own state and condition, way and " walk before him, as fome of you feem to be, by your contentions and diforders, and various provocations, and " by your unworthy treatment of me, and of the golpel of " Chrift, as delivered in my ministry? It is a fin and a " fhame for you to be ignorant how things are with you: 4 and, as you are professors of Christianity, do not you " know that Jefus Chrift, the only Saviour, dwells in your " hearts by faith, with powerful influence and dominion " there ? You furely, in the light of the Spirit, may ar-" rive at some fatisfaction about this; unless, after all " your high pretences, and flourishing gifts, there be " fomething very difallowable (ei µn TI accontati ise) " and much amils in you; or you be really disapproved of God, as hypocrites." Prove your own felves, (iaurous donuagene) is a metaphor taken from the trying of metals by the touchstone, or fome other way, to prove whether they be good and pure, or not; and fo fignifies fuch a trial of perfons and things as may shew, or prove, whether they be genuine or spurious, in order to their being allowed of or rejected : and, with a beautiful correspondence hereunto, the Apostle speaks in this, and the two next verses, of persons being (d'audoi or a'diaudoi) approved, or not approved, (which is harfhly rendered reprobate) as found to be fo upon examination or trial. See the introduction to this chapter, where another view of the paffage is given, confonant to the fentiment of fome of the best critics.

Ver. 7. Approved,] Difcerning.

Ver. 9. When we are weak, &c. ] "When we feem " weak, by not exerting any miraculous power to the " punifhment of offenders; and ye are strong in gifts and " graces, in faith and good works." The word xaraption, rendered perfection, alludes to a building, wherein all the parts are so compacted together, as to form one compleat edifice. The Apostle's meaning in this last clause of the verfe is, "Yea, I heartily with that all things were " brought into good order among you; that ye were en-" tirely kuit together in faith and love, like a compleat " and well-compacted building; and that every grace were " perfected in you all, and there were no remainder of " in in any of you."

Ver. 10. Therefore I write, &c.] Dr. Heylin translates this paffage very well from ver. 5. Try your feives, whether ye be in the faith ; bring yourselves to the proof. Are you fo little acquainted with yourfilves, as not to know whether Jefus Chrift be in you? Unlefs indeed you have no proofs of it, ver. 6. But I trust that you shall be convinced that we are not without fuch proofs, ver. 7. Now I pray God that I may not inflict any evil [puni/hment] upon you, and fo my proofs may not be produced, [and this we ask of God for your fakes,] that ye may do what is right, although we thereby shall appear as not baving the proofs [we threaten you with], ver. 8. For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth, ver. 9. And therefore it is matter of joy to us, when we are thus difarmed by the firength of your integrity. And this is what I pray for, even your perfection, ver. 10. These things therefore I write to you, being absent, that when I come, I may not use severity, according to the power which the Lord hath given me, for edification, and not for destruction.

Ver. 11. Be perfect, ] See on ver. 9. the original word being derived from the fame root as the word translated perfection in the former inftance. See also the Reflections. To auto coverte, be of one mind, fould rather be rendered, attend to the fame thing : " Purfue with the greatest unanimity " of heart, and intenfeness of affection, that which ought to " be the great end of all our schemes and defigns,-the " glorifying of God, and adorning the Gofpel." See 1 Cor.

Ver. 14. The grace of the Lord Jefus Chrift,] The word 1. 10

Xa'eis should rather be rendered here by favour : for if grace be taken for fanctifying influences communicated from Chrift,-which doubtlefs makes a great part of the idea,it may be lefs eafy to diffinguish it from the communion of the Spirit. This text has always been produced with great force in proof of the doctrine of the Trinity. It is with great reason that this comprehensive and instructive benediction is pronounced just before our affemblies for public worship are difmiffed; and it is certainly very indecent (to use the mildeft term) to fee many quitting those affemblies, or getting themselves into pollures of removal, before this fhort sentence can be ended. See Numb. vi. 26, 27. *

Inferences drawn from ver. 14 .- In this paffage we find, first, grace, as coming from God the Son, love as from God the Father, and communion as being of the Holy Ghoft. What these three things mean, will be shewn when I speak of their diflinct offices; for I defign, first, to confider the nature, diffinction, union, and offices of the three divine Perfons; and fecondly, to intimate the use and importance of these great articles of our Christian faith.

I. 1. In the first place, it is proper to fay fomething of the nature of each Person, that we may the better conceive what kind of Perfons they are. The first and most general diftinction of all things is into two kinds, created and uncreated. The nature of a creature is, that it comes into being by the order and will of another, and may cease to be whenever the Creator pleases. Of this kind are the fun, moon, stars, men, and angels; they are all of a frail and changeable nature; they might cease to be, and fink into nothing, as from nothing they came, were they not fupported by a fuperior hand. Only the three divine Perfons,-the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoft, from absolute necessity never can fail or cease. They always were, and always will be : their property is, always to exist, from everlasting to everlasting, without the help or support of any thing elfe whatfoever, being indeed the ftay and fupport of the whole creation.

Our thoughts are quite loft, as often as we think of any perfon's existing before all beginning; yet we are very certain that fo it must be, or elfe nothing would ever begin to be at all. Whether one only, or more Persons, might or do exift in this most perfect and incomprehensible manner, we could never know by our own reafon alone, unaffisted by divine revelation. But facted writ fufficiently affures us, that three fuch Perfons there are; who have been from all eternity; who cannot but be to all eternity; and who are the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoft. And this is, and has been all along, the faith of Christ's church, founded upon scripture.

To conceive then rightly of these three divine Persons, we should confider them as being just the reverse of what creatures are; not frail, mutable, or depending upon any one's pleasure; not as beginning to be, or capable of ever ceasing to be; but as being perfect, unchangeable, and allfufficient; without beginning, and without pollibility of ever coming to an end : and for that reason they are all properly divine.

2. With respect to their diffinction, they are constantly represented in scripture as distinct from each other. The Father is not the Son, nor is the Holy Ghost either of the other two. They are defcribed, as any other diffinct perfons are, by different characters and offices; and that fo very frequently in the New Testament, that it were needlefs to inftance in particulars. The Father is faid to fend, the Son to be fent, and the Holy Ghost to proceed, or go forth. The Father is represented as one witness, the Son as another witnefs; --- the Son as one comforter, the Holy Ghoft as another comforter, not both as one. The Father is introduced as fpeaking to the Son; the Son as fpeaking to the Father ; and the Holy Ghost as delivering commands from both. These, and a multitude of other particulars, plainly prove their diffinction one from another; which being analogous to, and nearly refembling the diffinction of perfons among rational creatures, we therefore prefume to call it a perfonal diffinction, and to call the facred Three, Three Perfons.

3. There is also an union, a very close and inexpressible union, among the divine Three; and though Scripture every where represents these three Persons as divine, and every one, fingly, God and Lord; yet the fame Scriptures do as constantly teach that there is but one God and one Lord : whence it evidently follows, that these Three are but one God and one Lord.-And if fuch an imperfect union as that of man and wife be reason sufficient to make them twain to be one flefb; and if the union of a holy man to Christ shall suffice to make them, in a certain sense, one Spirit, (1 Cor. vi. 17.) how much more shall the incomparably closer, and infinitely higher union of the three divine Persons with each other, be sufficient to denominate them one God, and one Lord? There is no other union like it, or fecond to it ;---an union of will, prefence, power, glory, and all perfections; -an union to integrable and unalterable, that no one of the Perfons ever was, or ever could be, without the other two; it being as necesfary for the three to be, and to act together, as to be at all; which is the perfection of unity, and the itrongest conjunction poffible.

This important doctrine is rendered certain, not only from John, x. 30. Rev. xxi. 22. Rev. xxii 1. 1 Cor. ii. 11. and 1 John, v. 7. but from many other places of Scripture. So that the unity of three Perfons in one Godhead is fufficiently revealed, as well as their diffinction : neither is there any difficulty in admitting that three things may be three and one in different respects; distinct enough to be three, and yet united enough to be one; diffinct without division, united without confusion. These, therefore, together, are the one Lord God of the Christians, whom we worship, and into whom we have been baptized.

4. Having thus confidered what the divine Perfons are in themfelves, let us next obferve, what are their offices relative to us. The peculiar offices of the three divine Perfons are to create, redeem, and fanctify : the Father is God the Creator; the Son is God the Redeemer; the Holy Ghoft is God the Sanctifier. Which is not to be fo underftood, as if neither the Son nor Holy Ghoft was concerned in creating; nor as if neither Father nor Holy Ghoft was concerned in redeeming ; nor as if neither Father nor Son was concerned in fanctifying. All the three Perfons concur in every work; all the three together create, redeem, and fanctify: but each Perfon is reprefented in fcripture as having his more peculiar province; on account of which peculiarity, over and above what is common to all, one is more emphatically Creator, another Redeemer, and a third Sanctifier. So much as is common to all, forves to intimate their union one with the other; and io much as is peculiar to any one, in like manner ferves to keep up the notion of their diffinction.

We may observe something of this nature in the words immediately under confideration: the grace of our Lord Jefus Chrift: grace is the common gift of the whole Trinity; but yet, here it is peculiarly attributed to Christ, as his gift and bleffing, and denoting the fpecial grace of redemption. The next words are, -the love of God ; that is to fay, of God the Father. Now we read of the love of Chrift, and of the love of the Spirit ; and love is common to the whole Trinity; for God is Love: but here one particular kind of love is intended; - the love of the Father, in fending his Son to redeem us, and the Holy Ghoft to fanctify our fouls.

The last words are,—And the communion of the Holy Gboft: now, there is a communion both of the Father and the Son with every holy man, John, xiv. 23. Every holy man is the temple of the whole Trinity, which has communion with him, and abides in him; as is plain from innumerable texts of scripture; but in this text before us, one peculiar kind of communion, appertaining especially to the Holy Ghoft, is fignified. And upon the whole we may observe, that though St. Paul might have indifferently applied grace, or love, or communion to either the Father, or the Son, or the Holy Ghost, or to all together; yet he rather chose to make the characters several and diffinel, to keep keep up a more lively lense of the distinction of persons and offices.

II. 1. The importance and use of these weighty truths may be judged of, first, from the nature of the thing itself : for, if there be really fuch three divine Perfons, as above defcribed, (and none can doubt of it, that read the fcriptures without prejudice,) it must be highly expedient and nfeful to let mankind into fome knowledge of them all; for there is no having a right apprehension of any one, without knowing what relation he stands under to the other two: and without this knowledge we cannot honour God perfectly, or in full measure and proportion. Add to this, that if man is to be trained up to a knowledge of God here, in order to be admitted to fee him as he is in the life hereafter, it seems highly expedient that he should know at least how many, and what Perfons stand in that character; that by his acquaintance with them now, in fuch a measure as is proper to his present state, he may attract fuch love and efteem for them here, as may prepare him for the fuller vision and fruition of the fame bereafter.

2. This reafoning is abundantly confirmed from the concern which God has fhewn to imprint and inculcate upon us this fo important a belief, and fo faving when received with divine power. There is no need to cite here the various texts of fcripture bearing testimony to the divinity of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and engaging us to place our hope, trust, and confidence in, and to pay our worship to them all: it will be fufficient for this purpose to fingle out two or three confiderations, which appear of great force in the argument.

It is observable, that as soon as ever our Lord had given his disciples commission to form a church, he instructs them to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoft, Matth. xxviii. 19. Whence we may justly infer, that faith in these three Persons as divine, in oppofition to all the gods of the Gentiles, was to be a fundamental article of Christianity, and its distinguishing charaster.

There is another thing remarkable, not fo obvious perhaps as the former, but no lefs worthy of notice; namely, how purposely the whole fcheme of the divine dispensations feems calculated, to introduce men gradually into the knowledge of these three Persons. This appears all the way down, from the fall of Adam, to the completion of all by the descent of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost. One might justly wonder why man, created after God's image, should be fo foon fuffered to fall; and why, after bis fall, fuch a vast preparation, and so long a train, should be laid for his recovery; that there flould be no way for it, but by means of a Redeemer to mediate and to intercede, to do and to fuffer for him, to raife and reftore him, and at length to judge him. Why might not the thing have been done in a much fhorter and eafier way? Why might not God the Father,-fo gracioully disposed towards all his creatures, have fingly had the honour of pardoning, rettoring, raifing, and judging mankind? Or, supposing both the Father and the Son joined in the work, why fhould it be left as it were unfinished, and incomplete, though in the hands of both, without the concurrence of the Holy Ghoft ?- Can any doubt be made, whether God the Father fingly was able or willing to do all that the Holy Ghoft has done for us; to work miracles, to fhed gifts, to VOL. II.

fanctify man's nature, and to qualify him for the enjoyment of Deity?—These things must appear, at first fight, strange and unaccountable; full of darkness and impenetrable mystery.

But our wonder ceafes, as foon as we confider that mankind were to be gradually let into the knowledge of three divine Perfons, and not one only: that we were to be equally obliged to every one of them, that fo we might be trained up to place our love, our fear, our truft in all, and pay acknowledgments fuitable to their high quality and perfections. This is the grand reafon of that long train, and vast preparation in man's redemption: and with this view there appears fo many characters of confummate wildom all the way, that nothing can furnish us with a more charming and august idea of the divine dispensations, from first to last. Let us consider but a little our Lord's conduct, when he was going to take leave of his difciples, and what he faid to them upon the occasion, respecting the fending to them a Comforter; (John, xvi. 7. and xiv. 16.) and then alk what is the meaning of all this?-Could the disciples want any other Comforter, when he had told them in the fame chapter, that he himfelf and the Father fould come and make their abode with them, John, xiv. 23. and when he had determined himfelf to be with them alway even to the end of the world, Matth. xxviii. 20.? What occasion could they have for any other Comforter?-Or what Comforter could do more or greater things than the Father or Son could do, by their constant prefence with them ?-But the reafon of the whole procedure is very plain and manifest. The Holy Ghost, the third Perfon of the ever-bleffed Trinity, was to be introduced with advantage, to do as great and fignal things for mankind as either Father or Son had done; that fo He likewife might partake of the fame divine honours, and fhare with them in glory; and thus Father, Son, and Holy Ghoft, be acknowledged as one God bleffed for ever.

In this faith was the church of Chrift originally founded : in this faith have the renowned martyrs and confessor old lived and died; and in the fame faith are all the churches of the Christian world instructed and edified at this day. Be it therefore our efpecial care and concern to continue in this faith firm and fleadfast; never to be moved from it by the disputers of this world, who are permitted for a while to gainfay and oppose it for a trial and exercise to others, and that they who are approved may be made manifest. May we perfevere in paying all honour, worthip, and praife, to the three bleffed Perfons of the Godhead; knowing how great and how divine they are, and how fecurely they may be confided in ! And let the intimate union which they have one with another, put us in mind of that brotherly love and union which ought to prevail among Christians; that so we may become as it were one heart, and one foul, knit in the striving together for the faith of the Golpel, in the unity of the Spirit, and the bond of peace. So may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God the Father, and the communion of the Holy Gheft, be with us all now and for evermore. Amen.

REFLECTIONS.—1ft, Having once and again warned the Corinthians, by his epiftles, to amend their diforders, feconded by Softhenes and Timothy who joined in his admonitions, the Apoftle is now, the third time, ready to appear in perfon. Therefore,

1. He affures them, that if any continued yet refractory and diforderly, notwithstanding these repeated rebukes, he would not spare, but inflict condign punishment on such obstinate offenders. Note; There is an approaching end, when wrath to the uttermost will overtake the ungodly.

2. Since they demanded a proof of his apostleship, they fhould receive it; fince ye feek a proof of Christ speaking in me, as if I threatened what I had no power or authority to execute; when you have had fuch demonstration before of that gospel which I preach, and of that authority with which I am invested, which to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty in you, who have experienced the efficacy of my preaching, and begun to fmart under the chaftening rod, (I Cor. xi. 30.) For though he was crucified through weaknefs, yet he liveth by the power of God, and hath all power committed into his hands: for we allo are weak in him, and because of our present sufferings treated by many of you as defpicable, and poffeffed of no authority from him: but we shall live with him by the power of God toward you; and as furely as he lives, shall we prove ourfelves cloathed with his power to punish offenders : and this would foon be experienced by them, if they did not initantly amend their ways.

3. He urges them to judge themfelves, that they might not be judged of the Lord, or his minifters. Examine yourfelves, whether ye be in the faith; bring your hearts to the touchftone of God's revealed will: prove your own felves, by this divine rule: know ye not your ownfelves, how that Jefus Christ is in you, formed in your hearts by his Spirit, except ye be reprobates, and when brought to the teft, like falfe metal, rejected as refufe, and found hypocrites. But I trust that ye shall know that we are not reprobates, but approved and allowed of our divine Mafter, and acknowledged by him as faithful in all things *.

adly, The Apostle adds his fervent prayer for them. Now I pray to God that ye do no evil, nor incur centure from us, or wrath from God: not that we fould appear approved, and by the punishment we inflict give a demonstration of our apostolic power; but that ye fould do that which is boneft, and praise-worthy; though we be as reprodutes, and having no need to exert our power, should be thought of as infignificant perfons, who really had it not. For we can do nothing against the truth, nor dare lift up the rod against fuch as walk according to the Gospel; but our power is to be exercised for the truth, to defend it against heretical teachers, and to recover backfliders by needful correction. For we are glad, when we are weak, and ye are firing; and when your exemplary practice renders cenfure unneceffary, and we appear as if we had no authority to inflict it. And this also we wish, even your perfection; that every offence were removed, the church knit together in perfect harmony and union, and every member of it perfect in love, yea, grown up to the measure of the flature of the fullness of Christ. Therefore I write these things being absent, left, being prefent, I should use sharpness according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification, and not to destruction; defirous rather that all evils among you should be amended, and our reproofs effectual for your reformation, than that we should be constrained to give a proof of our power in executing deferved punifhment on the impenitent.

3dly, The Apostle,

1. Takes his leave of them with affectionate exhortations. Finally, my brethren, farewell: be perfect, giving up your hearts entirely to God without the leaft referve, reforming every diforder, and united to each other in pure and difinterested love: be of good comfort, rejoice alway in the Lord: be of one mind, let every dispute be filenced, and the fpirit of party subside: live in peace and love, and the God of love and peace shall be with you, and dwell in the midst of you with his especial prefence and blefsing. Greet one another with an boly kiss. All the faints falute yeu, withing you all prosperity in your fouls and bodies, in time and in eternity. Note; (1.) Union in affection and fentiment is the fure mark of the prosperity of the church. (2.) The God of love and peace commands us to be like himstelf, and that is to be happy.

2. He concludes with his apoftolical benediction. The grace of the Lord Jefus Chrift, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghoft, be with you all; may the grace of a dying Redeemer, which includes all fpiritual and eternal bleffings, be your portion! May a fenfe of the Father's love, the fpring and fource of your redemption, be warm upon your hearts! And may the richeft communications from the Holy Ghoft revive, quicken, ftrengthen, comfort, and ftablith you ever more and more; till by the mighty operation of this tri-une God your falvation be completed in glory everlafting, and your happy fervice be his never-ending praife. Such is my prayer for you: ceafe not to join my fupplications for these ineftimable benefits; and let every foul among you with faith and fervency fay, Amen !
