What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own foul.

THERE is a celebrated remark to this effect, (I think in the works of Mr. Pafcal) that if a man of low cilate would fpeak of high things, as of what relates to kings or kingdoms, it is not eafy for him to find fuitable expressions, as he is fo little accquainted with things of this nature. But if one of royal parentage fpeaks of royal things, of what concerns his own or his father's kingdom, his language will be free and eafy, as thefe things are familiar to his thoughts. In like manner, if a mere inhabitant of this lower world fpeaks concerning the great things of the kingdom of God, hardly is he able to find expressions suitable to the greatness of the subject. But when the Son of God fpeaks of the highest things, which concern his heavenly kingdom, all his language is easy and unlaboured, his words natural and unaffected : inafmuch as known unto him are all thefe things from all eternity.

2. How

2. How ftrongly this remark is exemplified in the paifage now before us! The Son of God, the great king of heaven and earth, here ufes the plaineft and eatieft words: but how high and deep are the things which he expresses therein? None of the children of men can fully conceive them, till immerging out of the darkness of the present world, he commences an inhabitant of eternity.

9. But we may conceive a little of these deep things, if we confider, First, What is implied in that expression, a man's gaining the whole world : Secondly, What is implied in losing his own foul: We shall then, Thirdly, see in the strongest light; What he is prosited, who gains the whole world, and loses his own foul.

1. 1. We are first to confider, What is implied in a man's gaining the whole world. Perhaps at the first hearing, this may feem to fome equivalent with conquering the whole world. But it has no relation thereto at all: and indeed that expression involves a plain absurdity. For it is impossible, any that is born of a woman should ever conquer the whole world : were it only because the short life of man could not fuffice for to wild an undertaking. Accordingly, no man ever did conquer the half, no, nor the tenth part of the world. But whatever others might do, there was no danger that any of our Lord's hearers should have any thought of this. Among all the fins of the Jewish nation, the defire of universal empire was not found. Even in their moft most flourishing times, they never fought to extend their conquests beyond the river Euphrates. And in our Lord's time, all their ambition was at an end: the fceptre was departed from Judah: and Judea was governed by a Roman procurator, as a branch of the Roman empire.

2. Leaving this, we may find a far more eafy and natural fenfe of the expression. To gain the whole world, may properly enough imply, to gain all the pleasures which the world can give. The man we speak of, may therefore be supposed to have gained all that will gratify his senses. In particular, all that can increase his pleasure of tasting, all the elegancies of meat and drink. Likewife; whatever can gratify his smell, or touch; all that he can enjoy in common with his sellow-brutes. He may have all, the plenty and all the variety of these objects which the world can afford.

g. We may farther fuppole him to have gained all that gratifies the defire of the eyes; whatever (by means of the eye chiefly) conveys any pleafure to the imagination. The pleafures of imagination arife from three fources, grandeur, beauty, and novelty. Accordingly we find by experience, our own imagination is gratified by furveying either grand, or beautiful, or uncommon objects. Let him be incompaffed then with the moft grand, the moft beautiful, and the neweff things that can any where be found. For all this is manifestly implied in a man's gaining, the whole world.

4. But

4. But there is also another thing implied herein, which men of the most elevated spirits have preferred before all the pleasures of sense and of imagiration put together; that is, honour, glory, renown:

Virúm volitare per ora.

It feems, that hardly any principle of the human mind is of greater force than this. It triumphs over the ftrongeft propenfities of nature, over all our appetites and affections. If Brutus fheds the blood of his own children; if we fee another Brutus, in fpite of every pollible obligation, in defiance of all justice and gratitude,

"Cringing while he flabs his friend ;"

if a far greater man than either of these, Paschal Paoli, gave up ease, pleasure, every thing, for a life of constant toil, pain, and alarms: what principle could support them? They might talk of amor patria, the love of their country; but this would never have carried them through, had there not been also the

the immense thirst of praise. Now the man we speak of, has gained abundance of this; he is praised, if not admired, by all that are round about him.. Nay, his name is gone forth into distant lands, as it were to the ends of the earth.

 $5^{+}5^{+}$ Add to this, that he has gained abundance of wealth i that there is no end of his treafures ; that he has laid up filver as the duft, and gold as the fand

of the fea. Now when a man has obtained all thefe pleafures, all that will gratify either the fenfes or the imagination; when he has gained an honourable name, and alfo laid up much treafure for many years: then he may be faid, in an easy, natural fenfe of the word, to have gained the whole world.

II. 1. The next point we have to confider is, What is implied in a man's lofing his own foul. And here we draw a deeper scene, and have need of a more fleady attention. For it is easy to sum up all that is implied in a man's gaining the whole world. But it is not so easy to understand all that is implied in his lofing his own foul. Indeed none can fully conceive this, until he has passed through time into eternity.

2. The first thing which it undeniably implies, is the losing all the prefent pleafures of religion; all those which it affords to truly religious men, even in the prefent life. If there be any confolation in Christ; if any comfort of love, in the love of God, and of all mankind; if any joy in the Holy Ghost; if there be a peace of God, a peace that passet all understanding; if there be any rejoicing in the testimony of a good conficience toward God; it is manifest, all this is totally lost, by the man that loses his own foul.

3. But the prefent life will foon be at an end : we know it paffes away like a fhadow. The hour is at hand, when the fpirit will be fummoned to return return to God that gave it. In that awful moment,

" Leaving the old, both worlds at once they view, Who ftand upon the threshold of the new.

And whether he looks backward or forward, how pleafing is the profpect to him that faves his foul! If he looks back, he has "The calm remembrance of a life well spent." If he looks forward, there is an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, and he fees the convoy of angels ready to carry him into Abraham's bolom. But how is it in that folemn hour, with the man that lofes his foul? Does he look back? What comfort is there in this? He fees nothing but fcenes of horror, matter of fhame, remorfe, and felf-condemnation, a foretafte of the worm that never dieth. If he looks forward, what does he lee ? No joy, no peace ! No. gleam of hope from any point of heaven! Some years fince, one who turned back as a dog to his vomit, was struck down in his mid career of fin. A. friend visiting him, prayed, " Lord, have mercy upon those who are just stepping out of the body. and know not which fhall meet them at their entrance into the other world, an angel or a fiend." The fick man shrieked out with a piercing cry, "A. fiend! a fiend !" and died. Just such an end, unless he die like an ox, may any man expect, who lofes his own foul.

4. But in what fituation is the spirit of a good man, at his entrance into eternity? See,

" The

" The convoy attends, The miniftring hoft of invisible friends:"

they receive the new-born fpirit, and conduct him fafe into Abraham's bolom, into the delights of paradife, the garden of God, where the light of his countenance perpetually fhines. It is but one of a thousand commendations of this anti-chamber of heaven, That there the wicked cease from troubling, there the weary are at reft. For there they have numberless fources of happinels, which they could not have upon earth. There they meet with-" the globious dead of ancient days." They converse with Adam, first of men; with Noah, first of the new world; with Abraham, the friend of God; with Moles and the prophets; with the apostles of the Lamb; with the faints of all ages; and above all they are with Christ.

. 5. How different, alas! is the cafe with him who lofes his own foul? The moment he fteps into eternity, he meets with the devil and his angels. Sad convoy into the world of fpirits! Sad earneft of what is to come! And either he is bound with chains of darknefs, and referved unto the judgment of the great day: or, at beft, he wanders up and down, feeking reft, but finding none. Perhaps he may leek it (like the unclean fpirit caft out of the man) in dry, dreary, defolate places: perhaps

And

And little comfort can he find here! feeing every thing contributes to increase, not remove, the fearful expectation of fiery indignation which will devour the ungodly.

6. For even this is to him but the beginning of forrows. Yet a little while, and he will fee the great white throne coming down from heaven, and him that fitteth thereon, from whofe face the heavens and earth fee away, and there is found no place for them. And the dead, fmall and great, fland before God, and are judged, every one according to his works. Then shall the King fay to them on his right hand, (God grant he may fay to to you 1) Come, ye bleffed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. And the angels shall tune their harps and sing, Lift up your heads, Gye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors, that the heirs of glory may come in. And then shall they shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars for ever and ever.

7 How different will be the lot of him that lofes his own foul! No joyful fentence will be pronounced on him, but one that will pierce him through with unutterable horror, (God forbid, that ever it fhould be pronounced on any of you that are here before God!) Depart, ye curfed, into everlafting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels / And who can doubt, but those infernal fpirits will immediately execute the fentence, will instantly drag those forfaken of God into their own place of torments! Into those

Regions

"Regions of forrow, doleful fhades; where joy, Where peace cannever come! Hopenever comes That comes to all?"

all the children of men who are on this fide eternity. But not to them: the gulph is now fixt, over which they cannot pais. From the moment wherein they are once plunged into the lake of fire, burning with brimftone, their torments are not only without intermiffion, but likewife without end. For they have no reft, day or night, but the finiske of their torment effendeth up for ever and ever.

111. Upon ever fo curfory a view of these things, would not any one be astonished, that a man, that a creature endued with reason, should voluntarily choose, (I say choose: for God forces no man into inevitable domnation: he never yet

" Confign'd one unborn foul to hell,

Or damn'd him from his mother's womb :") fhould thoose thus to lole his own faul, though it were to gain the whole world! For what fhall a man be profited thereby upon the whole of the account?

But a little to abate our aftonifhment at this, let us observe the suppositions which a man generally makes, before he can reconcile himself to this fatal choice.

1. Ho

1. He supposes, first, "That a life of religion is a life of milery." That religion is milery! How is it poffible, that any one fhould entertain fo ftrange a thought? Do any of you imagine this? If you do, the reafon is plain; you know not what religion is. "No! But I do, as well as you." What is it then? "Why, the doing no harm." Not fo: many birds and beafts do no harm: yet they " Then it is going to are not capable of religion. church and facrament." Indeed it is not. This may be an excellent help to religion; and every one who defires to fave his foul, fhould attend them at all opportunities: yet it is possible, you may attend them all your days, and still have no religion at all. Religion is a higher and deeper thing, than any outward ordinance whatever.

2. "What is religion then?" It is eafy to anfwer, if we confult the oracles of God. According to thefe, it lies in one fingle point: it is neither more nor lefs than love: it is love which is the fulfilling of the law, the end of the commandances. Religion is the love of God and our neighbour; that is, every man under heaven. This love ruling the whole life, animating all our tempers and paffions, directing all our thoughts, words, and actions, is pure religion and undefiled.

3. Now will any one be fo hardy as to fay, that love is mifery? Is it mifery to love God? to give him my heart, who alone is worthy of it? Nay, it is the trueft happines, indeed the only true happi-'nets nefs which is to be found under the fun. So does all experience prove the justness of that reflexion which was made long ago, "Thou hast made us for thyfelf; and our heart cannot rest, until it resteth in thee." Or does any one imagine, the love of our neighbour is misery, even the loving every man as our own foul? So far from it, that next to the love of God, this affords the greatest happiness of which we are capable. Therefore

" Let not the ftoic boast his mind unmov'd,

The brute-philosopher, who ne'er has prov'd The joy of loving, or of being lov'd."

4. So much every reasonable man must allow. But he may object, "There is more than this implied in religion. It implies not only the love of GoD and man, (against which I have no objection) but also a great deal of doing and fuffering. And how can this be confistent with happines?"

There is certainly fome truth in this objection. Religion does imply both doing and fuffering. Let us then calmly confider, whether this impairs or heightens our happines.

Religion implies, first, the doing many things. For the love of God will naturally lead us, at all opportunities, to converse with him we love; to speak to him in (public or private) prayer, and to hear the words of his mouth, which are dearer to us than thousands of gold and filver. It will incline us to lose no opportunity of receiving

" The dear memorials of his dying love ?"

to continue inftant in thankfgiving; at morning, evening, and noon-day to praife him. But fuppofe we do all this, will it leften our happinefs? Juft the reverfe. It is plain, all thefe fruits of love are means of increasing the love from which they fpring; and of confequence they increase our happines in the fame proportion. Who then would not join in that wifh,

" Rifing to fing my Saviour's praife,

Thee may I publish all day long;

-And let thy precious word of grace

Flow from my heart, and fill my tongue ;. Fill all my life with pureft love,

And join me to thy church above!"

5. It must also be allowed, that as the love of God naturally leads to works of piety, so the love of our neighbour naturally leads all that feel it, to works of merey. It inclines us to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to visit them that are fick or in prifon; to be as eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame; an hufband to the widow, a father to the fatherles. But can you suppose, that the doing this will prevent or less your happines? Yea, though you did fo much, as to be like a guardian-angel to all that are round about you? On the contrary, it is an infallible truth, that

Than that one joy of doing kindness?"

A man

A man of pleafure was afked fome years ago, "Captain, what was the greatest pleafure you ever had?" After a little paufe he replied, "When we were upon our march in Ireland, in a very hot day, I called at a cabin on the road, and defired a little water. The woman brought me a cup of milk. I gave her a piece of filver: and the joy that poor creature expressed, gave me the greatest pleafure I ever had in my life." Now if the doing good gave fo much pleafure to one who acted merely from natural generofity, how much more must it give to one who does it on a nobler principle, the joint love of God and his neighbour? It remains, that the doing all which religion requires, will not lessed.

6. "Perhaps this alfo may be allowed. But religion implies, according to the Chriftian account, not only doing, but fuffering. And how can fuffering be confiftent with happine's?" Perfectly well. Many centuries ago it was remarked by St. Chryfoftom, "The Chriftian has his forrows, as well as his joys: but his forrow is fweeter than joy." He may accidentally fuffer lofs, poverty, pain: but in all theferhings he is more than conqueror: he can teltify,

> Labour is rest, and pain is fweet, While thou my God art here,

He can fay, The Lord gave: the Lord taketh away s bleffed be the name of the Lord ! He must fuffer; more or loss, reproach; for the fervant is not above his B a master: mafter: but fo much the more does the fpirit of glory and of Chrift reft upon him. Yea, love itfelf will on feveral occcasions be the fource of fuffering: the love of God will frequently produce

> " The pleafing fmart, The meltings of a broken heart."

And the love of our neighbour will give rife to fympathizing forrow; it will lead us to vifit the fatherlefs and widow in their affliction; to be tenderly concerned for the diftreffed, and "to mix our pitying tear with thofe that weep." But may we not well fay, thefe are "Tears that delight, and fighs that waft to heaven?" So far then are all thefe fufferings from either preventing or leffening our happinefs, that they greatly contribute thereto, and indeed conftitute no inconfiderable part of it. So that, upon the whole, there cannot be a more falle fuppolition, than that a life of religion is a life of mifery: feeing true religion, whether confidered in its nature or its fruits, is true and folid happinefs.

7. The man who choofes to gain the world by the lofs of his foul, fuppofes, fecondly, "That a life of wickednefs is a life of happinefs!" That wickednefs is happinefs! Even an old heathen poet could have taught him better. Even Juvenal difcovered,

Nemo malus felix :

"no wicked man is happy! And how expressly does God himfelf declare, There is no peace to the wicked: no peace of mind; and without this, there can be "no happinels." But

But not to avail ourfelves of authority, let us weigh the thing in the balance of Reafon. I afk. What can make a wicked man happy? You answer, He has gained the whole world. We allow it: and what does this imply? He has gained all that gratifies the fenfes: in particular, all that can pleafe the tafte; all the delicacies of meat and drink. True; but can eating and drinking make a man happy? They never did yet : and certain it is, they never will. This is too coarle food for an immortal spirit. But suppose it did give him a poor kind of happines, during those moments wherein he was swallowing; what will he do with the refidue of his time? will it not hang heavy upon his hands ? will he not groan under many a tedious hour, and think fwift-winged time flics too flow? If he is not fully employed, will be not frequently complain of lownels of fpirits Pan unmeaningexprefiion; which the miferable phyfician ulually no more understands, than his milerable patient. We know, there are fuch things as norvous diforders. But we know likewife, that what is commonly called nervous loanefs, is a feoret reproof from God, a kind of confcioulnels, that we are not in our place; that we are not as God would have us to be; we are unhinged from our proper cantre.

out walks and gardens, beautified with all that nature and art can afford. And how long will the fe give him pleafure? Only as long as they are new. As foon as ever the novelty is gone, the pleafure is gone alfo. After he has furveyed them a few months, or years, they give him no more fatisfaction. The man who is faving his foul, has the advantage of him in this very refpect. For he can fay,

" In the pleafures the rich man's poffeffions difplay,

Unenvy'd I challenge my part;

While ev'ry fair object my eye can furvey,

Contributes to gladden my heart."

9. "However he has yet another refource: applaufe, glory. And will not this make him happy?" It will not: for he cannot be applauded by all men; no man ever was. Some will praife: perhaps many; but not all. It is certain, fome will blame: and he that is fond of applaufe, will feel more pain from the cenfure of one, than pleafure from the praife of many. So that whoever feeks happinefs in applaufe, will infallibly be difappointed, and will find, upon the whole of the account, abundantly more pain than pleafure.

10. But to bring the matter to a fhort iffue. Let us take an inftance of one, who had gained more of this world than probably any man alive, unlefs he beafovereign prince. But did all he had gained, make him happy? Anfwer for thyfelf. Then faid Haman, Yet all this profiteth me nothing, while I fee Mordecai fatting in the gate. Poor Haman! One unholy temper, whether pride, envy, jealoufy, or revenge, gave him him more pain, more vexation of fpirit, than all the world could give pleafure. And fo it muft be in the nature of things: for all unholy tempers are unhappy tempers. Ambition, covetoufnefs, vanity, inordinate affection, malice, revengefulnefs, carry their own punifhment with them, and avenge themfelves on the foul wherein they dwell. Indeed what are thefe, more efpecially when they are combined with an awakened conficience, but the dogs of hell already gnawing the foul, forbidding happinefs to approach! Did not even the Heathens fee this? What elfe means their fable of Tityus, chained to a rock, with a vulture continually tearing up his breaft, and feeding upon his liver? Quid rides ? Why do you finile? Says the poet :

> Mutato nomine, de te Fabula narratur.

It is another name. But thou art the man! Luft, foolifh defire, envy, malice, or anger, is now tearing thy breaft: love of money, or of praife, hatred, or revenge, is now feeding on thy poor fpirit. Such happinefs is in vice! So vain is the fuppofition that a life of wickedness is a life of happiness!

11. But he makes a third fuppofition, "That he fhall certainly live forty or fifty or threefcore years." Do you depend upon this? on living threefcore years? Who told you that you fhould? It is no other than the enemy of God and man: it is the murderer of fouls. Believe him not: he was a liar from the beginning; from the beginning of his his rebellion againft God. He is eminently a liar in this; for he would not give you life, if he could. Would God permit, he wouldmake fure work, and juft now hurry you to his own place. And he cannot give you life, if he would: the breath of man is not in his hands. He is not the disposer of life and death: that power belongs to the Most High. It is possible indeed, God may, on some occasions, permit him to inflift death. I do not know, but it was an evil angel who finote an hundred, fourfcore and five thousand Affyrians in one night: and the fine lines of our poet are as applicable to an evil, as to a good spirit:

So when an angel, by divine command, Hurls death and terror o'er a guilty land— He, pleas'd th' Almighty's order to perform, Rides in the whirlwind, and directs the ftorm."

But though Satan may fometimes inflift death, Iknow not that he could ever give life. It was one of his moft faithful fervants, that fhrieked out fomeyears ago, "A week's life! A week's life! Thirtythoufand pounds for a week's life.!" But he could not purchafe a day's life. That night-God requiredhis foul of him! And how foon may he require it ofyou? Are youtfure of living threefoore years? Are you fure of living one year? one month? one week? one day? O make hafte to dive! Surely the man that may die to-night, fhould live to-day.

12. So abfurd are all the suppositions made by him, who gains the world, and loses his foul! But letus for a moment imagine, that religion 1s mifery, that wickednefs is happinefs, and that he fhall certainly live threefcore years; and ftill I would afk, What is he profited, if he gain the whole world for threefcore years, and then lofe his foul eternally?

Can fuch a choice be made by any that confiders what eternity is? Philip Melancthon, the most learned of all the German reformers, gives the following relation. (I pais no judgment upon it, but fet it down nearly in his own words.) "When I was at Wirtemberg, as I was walking out one fummer-evening with feveral of my fellow-ftudents. we heard an uncommon finging, and following the found, faw a bird of an uncommon figure. One ftepping up, afked, In the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoft, what art thou? It answered, I am a damned fpirit : and in vanishing away pronounced these words, O Eternity, Eternity! who can tell the length of Eternity !" And how foon would this be the language of him, who fold his foul for threefcore years' pleafure! How ioon would he cry out, "O Eternity, Eternity! who can tell the length of Eternity !"

13. In how firiking a manner is this illustrated by one of the ancient fathers? "Supposing there was a ball of fand as big as the whole earth. Sup-

Or to be miferable, while it was waking away at that proportion, and happy ever after?" A wife man, it is certain, could not paule one moment upon the choice; feeing all that time wherein this ball would be wafting away, bears infinitely lefs proportion to eternity, than a drop of water to the whole ocean, or a grain of fand to the whole mafs. Allowing then that a life of religion were a life of mifery, that a life of wickednefs were a life of happinefs, and that a man were affured of enjoying that happinefs for the term of threefcore years : yet what would he be profited, if he were then to be miferable to all eternity?

14. But it has been proved, that the cafe is quite otherwife, That religion is happinels, that wicked. nels is mifery, and that no man is affured of living sthreefoore days: and if fo, is bloore any fool, any madman under heaven, who can be compared to dim, that cafts away his own foul, though it were to gain the whole world? For what is the real flate of the cafe ? What is the choice which God propofes to his creatures? It is not, Will you be happy threefcore years, and then miferable for ever: or, will you be miferable threefcore years, and then happy forcever ?" It is not, "Will you have first a temporary heaven, and then hell eternal: or, will you have first a temporary hell, and then beaver, eternal?" But it is fimply this: will you the milerable threefcore years, and milerable ever after : or, will you be happy threefcore years, and happy happy ever after? Will you have a foretafte of heaven now, and then heaven for ever: or, will you have a foretafte of hell now, and then hell for ever? Will you have two hells, or two heavens?

15. One would think there needed no great fagacity, to anfwer this question. And this is the very queftion which I now propose to you in the name of God. Will you be happy here and hereafter; in the world that now is, and in that which is to come? Or will you be miferablehere and hereafter, in time and in eternity? What is your choice? Let there be no delay: now take one or the other. I take heaven and earth to record this day, that I fet before you life and death, bleffing and curfing. O choofe life! The life of peace and love now; the life of glory for ever. By the grace of God now choofe that better part, which shall never be taken from you. And having once fixed your choice, never draw back: adhere to it at all events. Go on in the name of the Lord, whom ye have chosen, and in the power of his might! In fpite of all oppofition, from nature, from the world, from all thepowers of darkness, still fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life! And then there is laid up for you a crown, which the Lord, the mightagens Tudas 111
