This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

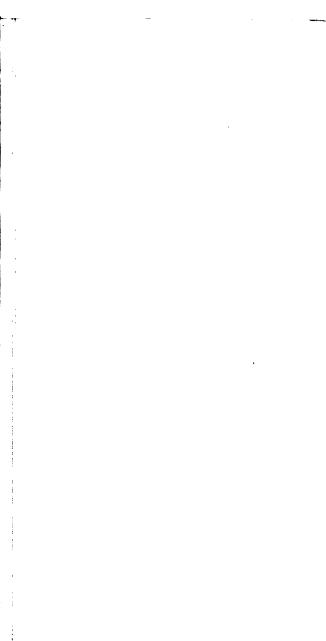

Google books

Digitized by Google

.. Digitized by Google

-

٦

. , , • • 1 Digitized by Google

4014 aa 58.

Digitized by Google

X

3922

THE

NATURE and DESIGN

OF

C H R I S T I A N I T Y.

• Extracted from a late AUTHOR.

THE NINTH EDITION.

BRISTOL:

Printed by WILLIAM PINE, in Wine-Street, 1771.

THE

and DESIGN

CHRISTIANITY.

1. THE wildom of mankind has for feveral ages been enquiring into the nature of man, and the nature of the world in which he is placed.

The wants and miferies of human nature, and the vanity of worldly enjoyments, have made it difficult for the wifest men to tell, what human happiness was, or wherein it confisted.

It has pleased the infinite goodness of God to fatisfy our erquiries, by a revelation made to the world, by his for Jesus Christ.

This revelation has laid open the great fecrets of providence from the creation of the world. It has explained the prefent flate of things, and given man all the information that is necessfary, both to give him reft here, and to lead him fafely to even afting happines.

It is now only neceffary that the poor wildom of man do not exalt itfelf against God, that we suffer our eyes to be opened by him that made them, and our lives to be conducted by him, in whom we live, mov, and have our being.

11. As happinels is the fole end of all our labours, for this revelation aims at nothing elfe.

I gives us right notions of ourfelves, of our true goot and realevil; it fnews us our true condition, both our greatness and meanness, our happiness and milerys

Before this, man was a mere riddle to himfelf, and his condition full of darkness and perplexity; a reftless inhabitant of a miserable diforder'd world, walking in a vain shadow, and disquieting himself in vain.

Bu this light has differred the anxiety of his van c njectures. It has brought us acquainted with God; and, by adding heaven to earth, and eternity to time, has of ened such a glorious view of things, as leads men, men, even in this world, to a peace of God which poffeth all understanding.

111. This revelation acquaints us, that we have a fpirit within us, which was created after the divine image: that this fpirit is now in a fallen condition; that the body in which it is placed is its fepulchre, where it is enflaved to flefhly thoughts, blinded with falfe notions of good and evil, and dead to all tafte of its true happinefs.

It teaches us, that this world in which we live, is also in a difordered irregular state, and cursed for the fake of man: that it is no longer the paradife that God made it, but the remains of a drowned world, full of marks of God's displeasure, and the fin of its inhabitants

That it is a mere wildernefs, a flate of darknefs, avale of mifery: where vice and madnefs, dreams and fhadow, varioufly pleafe and torment the flort miferable lives of men.

Devils also, and evil fpirits have here their refidence, promoting the works of darkness; and wandering up and down seeking whom they may devour.

So that man, in his natural state, is like a peif n fick of variety of diseases, knowing neither his diftempers nor his cure, and inclosed in a place where he can hear, or see, or feel, or taste of nothing but what tends to enflame his diforders.

IV. But Christianity puts an end to this flate of things, blots out all the ideas of worldly wisdom, brings the world itself to afhes, and creates all anew. It calls man from an animal life, and earthly societies, to be born again of the Holy Ghost, and be made a member of the kingdom of God.

It crushes into nothing the concerns of this life, condemns it as a flate of vanity and darkness, and leads man to happiness with God in the realms of light.

It propoles the purifying of our fouls, enlivened with the divine fpirit; it fets before us new goods and evils, and forms us to a glorious participation of the divine nature.

This is the one end of Chriftianity. It does not leave us to grovel on in the defires of the fleich to caft, about for worldly happiness, and we der in darkness.

A 2

and

and exile from God: but the fole defign of it is, to lead us from all thoughts of reft here, to feparate us from worldly tempers, to deliver us from the folly of our paffions, the flavery of our own nature, the power of evil fpirits, and 'unite us to God, the true fountain of real good. This is the mighty change which Chriftianity aims at: to reform our whole natures, -zenew our fouls in the image of God, and make them the inhabitants of heavenly and immortal bodies.

V. The manner in which it changes our whole fate, is equally great and wonderful.

I am the way, the truth, and the life, faith our bleffed Lord, no man cometh to the father but by me.

As all things were created by the fon of God, and without him was not any thing made that was made, fo are all things redeemed and reftored by the fame divine perfon.

As nothing could come into being without him, fo nothing can enter into a flate of happiness but by him.

The dignity of this redemption at once confounds the pride, and relieves the milery of man. How fallen muft he be from God, that fhould need fo great a mediator! And, on the other hand, how full of comfort is the thought that fo high a method, fo flupendous a means, fhould be taken to reftore him to a flate of peace and favour with God.

VI. This is the true point of view, in which every Christian is to behold himself. He is to overlook the poor projects of this life, and confider himself as a creature, through his natural corruption, fallen into a flate of endless misery; but by the mercy of God, redeemed to a condition of everlasting happines.

All the precepts and doctrines of the Gofpel are founded on these two great truths, the deplorable corruption of human nature, and its new birth in Christ lefus.

The one includes all the milery, the other all the happiness of man.

It is on thefe, that the whole frame of Christianity is built; forbidding only fuch things as fasten us to the diforders of fin, and commanding only those duties which lead us into the liberty of the fons of God.

(5)

All Chriftians are continually to behave themfelves conformable to this double capacity. We are to fear, and watch, and pray, like men that are always on the brink of eternal death : and to believe, and hope, and labour, and afpire, like Chriftians that are called to fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life.

VII. This knowledge of ourfelves makes human life a flate of infinite importance, placed upon fo dreadful a point betwixt two fuch eternities.

Well might our Saviour fay to one that begged first to go and bury his father, follow me, and let the dead bury their dead.

For what is all the buffle and hurry of the world but a dead flow, and its greateft actors but dead men,when compared with that real life to which the followers of Chrift are redeemed.

Had we been made only for this world, worldy wildom had been our higheft wildom ; but feeing we are redeemed to an entirely contrary flate, worldly wildom is now our greateft foolifhnefs.

It is now our only wildom, to understand our new state, and conduct ourselves by the principles of our redemption.

VIII. The nature of our Christian calling is of that concern, as to deferve all our thoughts; and is indeed only to be perceived by great ferioutness and attention of mind.

the Christian flate is an invisible life in the Spirit of God, supported not by femible goods, but the spiritual graces of faith and hope : so that man, builed ' in earthly cares and enjoyments, perceives nothing. of this great and heavenly calling.

The changes which Chilftianity make in the prefent flate of things, are all invitible: its goods and evils which are the only true flandards of our aftions, are not fubjeft to the knowledge of our fenfes.

 $\sim 1 \alpha$

In God we live, and move, and have our being; but how unfeen, how unfelt is all this!

Chrift is the Lamb flain from the foundation of the world, the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He is the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end of all things. The whole creation fublifts in him and by him. No perfon is in any favour with God, but by this great mediator. But how invifible, how unknown to all our fenfes is this flate of things!

Chriftians are temples of the Holy Ghoft, confecrated to God, members of Chrift's mystical body, of his flefh and his bones, receiving life, fpirit, and motion from him their head.

But our fenses see no farther than our parents and kindred according to the flesh, and fix our hearts to earthly friendships and relations. Well then may this life be deemed a state of darkness, since it thus clouds and covers all the true appearances of things, and keeps our minds infensible and unaffected with matters of such infinite moment.

IX. Would we therefore know our true condition, we must fearch after a life that is hid with Christ in God. We must consider ourselves as parts of Christ's mystical body, and as members of the kingdom of heaven. In vain do we consider the beauty and strength of our bodies, our alliances with men, and the distinctions of this world: for these things no more constitute the state of human life, than rich costins or beautiful monuments, constitute the state of the dead.

We juftly pity the laft poor effects of human greatnefs, when we fee a breathlefs carcafe lying in ftate. It appears fo far from any real honour, that it rather looks like ridiculing the mifery of our nature. But were religion to form our judgments, the life of a proud, voluptuous, fenfual man, tho' fhining in all the fplendor of the world, would give us no higher an idea of human dignity, than a poor corpfe laid in , iftate,

For a finner, when glorying in the luft of the flefh, the luft of the eye, and the pride of life, is a more fhocking fight of mifery ridicul'd, than any pageantry that can expose the dead.

X. We

X. We have an Apossile's authority to fay, that he who liveth in pleasure is dead while he liveth.

This shews us that when we enquire what our life is, we must think of fomething higher than the vigour of our blood, the gaiety of our spirits, or the enjoyment of senfual pleasures; fince these, tho' the allow'd figns of living men, are often undeniable proofs of dead Christians.

When_therefore we would truly know what our life or happines is, we must look at nothing that is fensible or temporal. We may as well dig in the earth for wisdom, as look at flesh and blood to see what we are, or at worldly enjoyments to find what we want, or at temporal evils, to see what we have to sear.

Our bleffed Saviour put an abfolute end to all enquiries of this kind, when he faid, be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do.

Here our bodies, and all bodily enjoyments, are at one dafh ftruck out of the account of happines, and the present flate of things made to very low and infignificant, that he who can only deprive us of them, has not power enough to deferve our fear.

We must therefore, if we would conceive our true ftate, our real good and evil, look farther than these dim eyes of fleft can carry our views. We must, with the eyes of faith, penetrate into the invisible world, the world of spirits, and confider our order and condition among them; a world, which at St. John speaks, hath no need of the fun, neither of the moon, to fhine in it; for the glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb, is the light thereof. For it is there, among ternal beings, that we must take eternal fellowship, or fall into a kingdom of darkness and everlasting misery.

XI. Christianity is so noble in its ends, so extensive in its views, that it has no less subjects than these to entertain our thoughts.

It buries our bodies, burns the prefent world, triumphs over death by a general refurrection, and opens all into an eternal ftate.

It never confiders us in any other refpect than as fallen fpirits; it difregards worldly diftinctions, and proposes nothing to our fears but eternal mifery, nothing to our hopes but endless enjoyment with God. This is the greta, the important condition, in which Chriftianityhas placed us, "above our bodies, above the world, above death, to be prefent at the diffolution of all things, to fee the earth in flames, and the heavens wrapt up like a foroll, to fland at the general refurrection, to appear at the universal judgment, and to live for ever, when all that our eyes have feen is paffed away and gone.

XII. Take therefore upon thee a temper fuitable to this greatnefs of thy condition. Remember that thou art an eternal fpirit, that thou art but for a few months or years in a flate of flefh and blood, only to try, whether thou fhalt be for ever happy with God, or for ever miferable with the devil.

Thou wilt hear of other concerns, and other greatnefs in the world. Thou wilt fee every order of men, every family, every perfon, purfuing fome fancied happinefs, as if the world had not only happinefs, but a particular kind of happinefs for all its inhabitants.

But when thou feeft this, fancy thou faweft all the world afleep; the prince no longer a prince; the beggar no longer begging, but every man fieeping out of his proper flate; fome happy, others tormented, and all changing their condition, as faft as one foolifh dream could fucceed another.

When thou haft feen this, if thou wilt, thou mayft go to fleep too, thou mayft lie down and dream. And this is all: for be as happy as the world can make thee, all is but fleeping and dreaming : and what is ftill worfe, it is like fleeping in a fhi; when thou flouldft be pumping for life; or dreaming thou art a prince, when thou flouldft be redeeming thyfelf from flavery.

XIII. This is no imaginary flight of a melancholy fancy, but the real nature of things.

For, if thou art that immortal nature, that fallen fpirit, which religion teaches us; if thou art to meet death, refurrection, and judgment, as the forerunners of an eternal ftate; what are the little flashes of pleasure, the changing appearances of worldly happines, but so many forts of dreams?

How canft thou talk of the advantages of fortune, the pleafures of food or apparel, without being in a dream?

Is the beggar afleep, when he fancies he is building

himfelf

Digitized by GOOGLE

himfelf fine houses? Is the prifoner in a dream, when he imagines himfelf in open fields and fine groves? And canst thou think thy immortal spirit is awake, while it is delighting itself in the shadows and bubbles of wordly happines?

For, if it be true that man is upon his trial; if the trial is for eternity; if life is but a vapour; what is there that deferves a ferious thought, but how to get well out of the world, and make it a right paffage to our eternal flate?

XIV. It is the manner of fome countries, in the burial of their dead, to put a flaff, and floes, and money in the fepulchre along with the corps.

We fee the folly and ignorance of fuch a poor contrivance to affift the dead : but if we did but underftand what is life, we fhould fee as much folly in the poor contrivances to affift the living.

For how many things do people labour after, break their reft and peace to get, which yet when gotten, are of just as much real use to them, as a ftsff and shoes to a corpse under ground? They are always adding something to their life, which is only like adding another pair of shoes to a body in the grave.

Thou mays there more fervants, new paint thy rooms, and put on richer apparel; and these will help thee to be happy, a sgolden staffs, or painted shoes, will help a dead man to walk.

XV. If thou remembereft, that the whole race of mankind are a race of fallen fpirits, that paffeth through this world as an arrow paffeth through the air; thou wilt feon perceive, that there is no wildom or happinefs but in getting away to the beft advantage.

If thou remembereft, that this life is but a vapour; that thou art in the body, only to be holy, humble and heavenly-minded; that thou flandeft upon the brink of death, refurrection and judgment; and that these great things will fuddenly come upon the like a thief in the night, thou wilt see a vanity in the things of this world, greater than any words can express.

Do but therefore know thyfelf as religion hath made thee known; do but fee thyfelf in the light which Chrift has brought into the world, and then thou thou wilt fee that nothing concerns thee, but what concerns an everlafting fpirit that is going to God; and that there are no enjoyments here that are worth a thought, but fuch as may adorn thee with that holinefs without which no man fhall fee the Lord.

XVI. This is the end of Christianity. It is not a fchool for the teaching of moral virtue. It is deeper and more divine in its defigns: It implies an entire change of heart, a full dedication of ourfelves, our fouls and bodies unto God.

Our bleffed Saviour came into the world, not to make any composition with it, but to put an end to the defigms of flesh and blood : and to shew us, we must either renounce the world to become fons of God, or by enjoying it take our portion among damned spirits.

Christianity is a state of things that wholly regards eternity : it knows of no other goods and evils but such as relate to another life.

It is a kingdom of heaven that has no other interefts in this world, than as it takes its members out of it; and when the number of the elect is complete, this world will be confumed with fire, as having no other reafon for its existence, than the furnishing members for that bleffed fociety, which is to last for ever.

I cannot here omit observing the folly of human wildom, which, full of imaginary projects, please itfelf with its lasting establishments in a world doomed, to destruction, and which is to last no longer than till a sufficient number is redeemed out of it.

Did we fee a number of animals haftening to take up their apartments, and contending for the beft places in a building that was to be beat down as foon as its old inhabitants had got fafe out, we fhould fee a contention full as wife as the wifdom of worldly ambition.

XVII. That Christianity requires a change of nature, is plain from the whole tenor of the gospel.

The Saviour of the world faith, that except a man be born again, of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. We are told, that to as many os received him, to them he gave power to become the fons of God, which were born not of blocd, nor of the will of the sliph, nor of the will of man, but of God. These

Digitized by Google

للم المشاركين ا

These words plainly teach us, that Christianity implies an entire change of nature; that as our birth was to us the beginning of a new life, and brought us into a fociety of earthly enjoyments, fo Christianity is anotherbirth, that brings us into a condition altogether as new, as when we first faw the light.

We begin again to be, we enter upon fresh terms of life, have new tempers, new hopes, and fears, and an entire change of every thing that can be called good or evil.

This new birth is the very effence and foul of Christianity; it is the feal of the promifes, the mark of our fonship, the earnest of our inheritance, and the fure proof of our acceptance with God.

XVIII. If we would know, what a change our new life in Chrift implies, let us confider what it is to be born of God.

Whofever is born of God, faith the Apostle, doth not commit fin. For his feed remaineth in him; and he cannot fin, because he is born of God. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil. And again, we know that whosever is born of God finneth not, but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and the wicked one toucheth him not, 1 John iii. 10. v. 18.

The fame Apofile tells us, wholever is born of God, overcometh the world. He overcometh all worldly defires and worldly fears. He is crucified unto the world, and the world crucified unto him. He is dead to the luft of the flefh, the luft of the eye, and the pride of life. And he feareth not them that can kill the body, and after that have nothing more that they can do.

We mult therefore examine into the flate of our minds, and fee whether we are thus changed in our natures, thus born again : whether we are fo fpiritual as to have overcome the world; fo holy, as that we cannot commit fin; fince it is the undeniable doctrine of fcripture, that the new birth is as neceffary to falvation, as the believing in Jefus Chrift.

XIX, We have feen two marks of those that are born of God. A third is given us by Christ himselt. Love your enemies. blefs them that curfe you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which defortefully use you and and perfecute you : that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven.

Well may a Christian be faid to be a new Creature, fince without fuch a disposition as this, we cannot be Christians, or children of our father, which is in héaven. It is not enough therefore to love our friends, benefactors and relations; but if we are born of God, we love like God: we have an universal love, a tenderness for all mankind, imitating that love which would that all men should be faved.

God is love : and as he who dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, fo he that dwelleth not in love dwelleth not iu God.

It is impossible to be a true Christian, and an enemy at the fame time.

Mankind hath no enemy but the devil, and those who are of the fame spirit.

XX. There is perhaps no duty more contrary to flesh and blood than this; but it is easy to those that are born of God.

For, take but away earthly goods and evils, and you take away all hatred and malice; for they are the only causes of those base tempers.

Let us here awhile contemplate the heighth and depth of Christian holinels, and that god like fpirit which it implies! and this alone might convince us, that to be Christians, we must be born again : we must fo change our very natures, as to have no defire in our fouls, but that of being like God.

And till we rejoice and delight only in God, we cannot have this love to our fellow-creatures.

We may therefore learn from this, as well as from what was obferved before, that Chriftianity does not confift in doing no harm, nor in doing good, (as it is called) nor yet in any particular moral virtues, as fome idly fuppole; but in an entire change of our hearts, of all our natural tempers, and a life wholly devoted to God.

XXI. The fame doctrine is farther taught by our bleffed Saviour, when speaking of little children, he faith, fuffer them to come unto me, for of fuch is the kingdom of God, Luke xviii. 16.

If we are not refolved to deceive ourfelves, if we have not eyes that fee not, and ears that hear not, we must perceive that these words imply fome mighty change in our nature.

Now the peculiar condition of infants is fuch, that they have every thing to learn; they are to be taught by others, what they are to hope and fear, and wherein their proper happiness consists.

And in this fence first, we are to become as little children: to be as tho' we had every thing to learn, and fuffer ourfelves to be taught, what we are to chuse, and what we are to avoid: to pretend to no wisdom of our own, but be ready to be taught of God, the only way of pursuing that only happines, which God in Christ proposes to us; and to accept it with such simplicity of mind as little children who have nothing of their own to oppose it.

XXII. But how, is this infant temper thus effential to Chriftianity ? Does the kingdom of God confift only of those that have it? This then is another undeniable proof that Christianity implies a new creature, fuch as having renounced the prejudices of life, the maxims of human wildom, gives itlelf with a childlike fubmiffion and fimplicity, to be entirely govern'd by the doctrines and spirit of Christ. Craft and policy, felfish cunning, proud abilities and vain endowments, have no admittance in this holy state of fociety with Chrift in God. The wildom of this world, the intrigues of life, the defigns of greatnels and ambition, lead to another kingdom. He that follows Chrift' nruft be emptied of this vain furniture, and put on the meek ornament of infant and undefigning fimplicity.

Where is the wife? where is the foribe? where is the difputer of this world? Hath not God made fooligh the wifdom of this world?

If we will partake of the wildom of God, we mult judge of this world, and its most boasted gifts, as the wildom of God judgeth of them; we must deem them foolishness, and with undivided hearts, labour after one wildom, one happiness, in being entirely devoted to God.

- XXIII. From all these confiderations it appears.

в

the

that Christianity implies a new creature, and a life entirely devoted to God.

Now if this be Christianity, it may ferve to instruct two forts of people :

First, those who are content with an outward religion: those whose Christianity lies only in an outward decency and regularity of life.

I don't mean those that are infincere or hypocritical: but all those who are content with outward religion; all who are content with any thing flioit of that inward holines, the newness of heart and spirit, which the gospel describes.

They fhould confider that charity, chaftity, fobriety and juftice, may be practifed without Chriftianity, A Jew, a Heathen, may be (what you call) charitable and temperate: but to make thefe parts of Chriftianity, they must proceed from a heart truly turned to God, that is full of infant fimplicity, that is crucified with Chrift, that is born again of the fpirit, that has overcome the world. Temperance or juftice without this turn of heart, may be the temperance of a Jew or a Heathen : but it is not Chriftian temperance or juftice, till it proceeds from a Chriftian fpirit. Could we do and fuffer all that Chrift himfelf did and fuffered, yet if it was not all done in the fame temper, in the fpirit of Chrift, it would profit us nothing.

XXIV. A Christian is fober, charitable and juft, upon the fame principles, and with the fame spirit that he receives the holy communion, as acts of obedience to God, and so many inflances of a heart truly devoted to God.

He is charitable, not only fo far as fuits with his natural temper, and with a good effect among men; but in fuch a measure as is suitable to the doctrine and spirit of the gospel.

For indeed, neither charity, nor temperance, nor juffice, nor any other virtues (as they are called) are parts of Chriftian holinefs, till they fpring from holinefs of heart, from the mind that was in Chrift.

This

This is what cannot be too much confidered by thole whole religion has made no change in their hearts; who fancy themfelves Christians, only because of the regularity of their lives, altho' they have never experienced a renewal in the spirit of their minds, after the image of him that created them; who pray without devotion, give alms without charity, and are Christians without the spirit of Christianity.

XXVI. Secondly, this doctrine may ferve to inflruct those who are convinced, they have been hitherto ftrangers to religion.

Some people, who are ashamed of their pass lives, and begin to look toward religion, think they have done enough, when they have reformed the outward course of their lives, when they have left off their gross vices and follies, or are grown careful of some particular duties or virtues.

Thus, a man who has been a drunkard many years, thinks he has made a fufficient change by becoming temperate : another imagines he is in a very good and fafe ftate, because he does not neglect the public worship, as he used to do: a lady fancies she lives enough to God, because she has left off plays, and hives more at home than formerly.

But fuch people fhould confider, that Christianity does not confist in the fewnels of our vices; no norim any one particular virtue, nor yet in the outward amendment of our lives: but in fuch a thorough change of heart, as makes the love of God the spring, and measure, and rule, of all our tempers and aktions.

XXVII. It is a miferable error, to think we are Chriftians, becaufe we are lefs vain or covetous, more fober or decent in our behaviour than we used to be. Yet this is the cafe with many, who think they are well, becaufe they are not fo bad as they were; becaufe they are reformed from outward wickednefs; not confidering how thorough a change, how entire a reformation of heart as well as life, Chriftianity implies.

But let fuch people remember, that they who thus measure themselves by themselves are not wile. Let them remember that they are not disciples of Christ, 'till they have, like him, offered their whole foul and body as a reasonable, mafonable, living facrifice to God; that they are not members of Chrift's myftical body, 'till they are united unto him by a new fpirit; that they have not entered into the kingdom of God, till they have entered into an infant fimplicity of heart, 'till they are fo born of God as not to commit fin; fo full of an heavenly fpirit as to have overcome the world.

Let them remember, he that is in Chrift is a new creature, and that nothing flort of this will avail before. God; nothing lefs than the entire renewal of the foul, in righteoufnets and all true holinefs. Let them remember that there is no religion that will fland us in any flead, but that which is the convertion of the heart to God; when all our tempers are holy, heavenly, divine, fpringing from a foul that is born again ; of the fpirit, that is full of divine love, and tends with one full bent to perfection and happinefs in the enjoyment of God.

XXVIII. Therefore let us look carefully to ourfelves, and confider what manner of fpirit we are of: Let us not think our condition fafe, becaufe we are of this or that church or perfuasion, or becaufe we are firith observers of the outward offices of religion. For we cannot but fee, these are marks that belong to more than belong to Chrift. All are not his, that prophefy, or even cast out devils, and work miracles in his name. Much lefs those who with corrupt minds and worldly hearts, are only baptized in his name.

If religion has raifed us into a new world; if it has filled us with new ends of life; if it has taken pofferfion of our hearts, altered the whole turn of our minds, and changed the whole ftream of our affections; if it has given us new joys and griefs, new hopes and fears; if all things in us are become new; if the love of God ts fhed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghoft given unto us, and this fpirit beareth witnefs with our fpirits that we are the children of God: then we are Chriftians, not in name only, but in truth; then we do believe in the Holy Jefus, and we fhall rejoice in the day of Chrift that we have not run in yain, neither laboured in vain.

FTX

Digitized by GOOGLC

•

. .

•----

