To the LONDON OCTAVO.

HA V I N G been long employed in the study and cultivation of the English language, I lately published a dictionary like those compiled by the academies of Italy and France, for the use of such as aspire to exactness of criticism or elegance of style.

But it has been since considered, that works of that kind are by no means necessary to the greater number of readers, who, seldom intending to write or presuming to judge, turn over books only to amuse their leisure, and to gain degrees of knowledge suitable to lower characters, or necessary to the common business of life: these know not any other use of a dictionary than that of adjusting orthography, or explaining terms of science or words of infrequent occurrence, or remote derivation.

For these purposes many dictionaries have been written by different authors, and with different degrees of skill; but none of them have yet fallen into my hands, by which even the lowest expectations could be satisfied. Some of their authors wanted industry, and others literature; some knew not their own defects, and others were too idle to supply them.

For this reason a small dictionary appeared yet to be wanting to common readers: and, as I may without arrogance claim to myself a longer acquaintance with the lexicography of our language than any other writer has had, I shall hope to be considered as having more experience at least than most of my predecessors, and as more likely to accommodate the nation with a vocabulary of daily use. I therefore offer to the publick an abstract or epitome of my former work.

In comparing this with other dictionaries of the same kind, it will be found to have several advantages.

I. It contains many words not to be found in any other.

II. Many barbarous terms and phrases by which other dictionaries may vitiate the style, are rejected from this.

P R E F A C E.

III. The words are more correctly spelled, partly by attention to their etymology, and partly by observation of the practice of the best authors.

IV. The etymologies and derivations, whether from foreign languages or from native roots, are more diligently traced, and more distinctly noted.

V. The senses of each word are more copiously enumerated, and more clearly explained.

VI. Many words occurring in the elder authors, such as Spenser, Shakespeare, and Milton, which had been hitherto omitted, are here carefully inserted; so that this book may serve as a glossary or expository index to the poetical writers.

VII. To the words, and to the different senses of each word, are subjoined from the large dictionary, the names of those writers by whom they have been used; so that the reader who knows the different periods of the language, and the time of its authors, may judge of the elegance or prevalence of any word, or meaning of a word; and without recurring to other books, may know what are antiquated, what are unusual, and what are recommended by the best authority.

The words of this dictionary, as opposed to others, are more diligently collected, more accurately spelled, more faithfully explained, and more authentically ascertained. Of an abstract it is not necessary to say more; and I hope, it will not be found that truth requires me to say less.

N. B. The Editors of this Dublin Edition have endeavoured to render it more worthy of the public attention, by adding at full length, the Author's curious preface to the Folio Edition, his History of the English language, and by inserting in their proper places, above 500 Words from the Folio Edition, none of which are contained in the London Octavo: As to the Paper, Print and Correction, they will be found, on comparison, much superior, although the Book is given for near one half of the price of the London Edition.

To the FOLIO EDITION.

IT is the fate of those who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the prospect of good; to be exposed to censure, without hope of praise; to be disgraced by miscarriage, or punished for neglect, where success would have been without applause, and diligence without reward.

Among these unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have considered, not as the pupil, but the slave of science, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to remove rubbish and clear obstructions from the paths of Learning and Genius, who press forward to conquest and glory, without bestowing a smile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progress. Every other author may aspire to praise; the lexicographer can only hope to escape reproach, and even this negative recompense has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithstanding this discouragement, attempted a dictionary of the English language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every species of literature, has itself been hitherto neglected, suffered to spread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance, resigned to the tyranny of time and fashion, and exposed to the corruption of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the first survey of my undertaking, I found our speech copious without order, and energetic without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be disentangled, and confusion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundless variety, without any established principle of selection; adulterations were to be detected, without a settled test of purity; and modes of expression to be rejected or received, without the suffrages of any writers of classical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no assistance but from general grammar, I applied myself to the perusal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of use to ascertain or illustrate any word or phrase, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, establishing to myself in the progress of the work, such rules as experience and analogy suggested to me; experience, which practice and observation were continually increasing; and analogy, which, though in some words obscure, was evident in others.

In adjusting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unsettled and fortuitous, I found it necessary to distinguish those irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which though inconvenient, and in themselves once unnecessary, must be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be registered, that they may not be increased, and ascertained, that they may not be confounded: but every language has likewise its improprieties and absurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proscribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of necessary or common use were spoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any visible signs, must have been spoken with great diversity, as we now observe those who cannot read to catch sounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was first reduced to an alphabet, every every penman endeavoured to express, as he could, the sounds which he was accustomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing such words as were already vitiated in speech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, must have been vague and unsettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the same sound by different combinations.

From this uncertain pronunciation arise, in a great part, the various dialects of the same country, which will always be observed to grow fewer, and less different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary representation of sounds by letters, proceeds that diversity of spelling observable in the Saxon remains, and I suppose in the first book of every nation, which perplexes or destroys analogy and produces anomalous formations, which, being once incorporated, can never be afterward dismissed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, strength from strong, darling from dear, breadth from broad, from dry, droughth, and from high, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes hight; Quid te exempta juvat spinis de pluribus una; to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This uncertainty is most frequent in the vowels, which are so capriciously pronounced, and so differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologists, little regard is to be shewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errors in orthography, but spots of barbarism impressed so deep in the English language, that criticism can never wash them away; these, therefore, must be permitted to remain untouched: but many words have likewise been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and some still continue to be variously written, as authors differ in their care or skill: of these it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always considered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incarnation after the Latin; thus entire, is chosen rather than intire, because it passed to us not from the Latin integer, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to say whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, since at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin service in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally supplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domestick use, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to sacrifice uniformity to custom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberless majority, convey and inweigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; sometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the same power are used indifferently without any discoverable reason of choice, as in choak, choke; soap, sope; sewel, fuel, and many others; which I have sometimes inserted twice, that those who search for them under either form, may not search in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of spelling by which it is inserted in the series of the dictionary, is to be considered as that to which I give, perhaps not often rashly, the preference. I have left, in the examples, to every author his own practice unmolested, that the reader may balance suffrages, and judge between us: but this question is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning; some men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on sounds and derivations; some, knowing in the ancient tongues have

have neglected those in which our words are commonly to be fought. Thus Hammond writes secibleness for feasibleness, because I suppose he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and some words, such as dependant, dependent; dependance, dependence, vary their final syllable, as one or other language is present to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wanted without controul, and vanity fought praise by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a scholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among those few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to those, whose thoughts have been, perhaps, employed too anxiously on verbal singularities, not to disturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been asserted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, says Hosker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worse to better. There is in constancy and stability a general and lasting advantage, which will always overbalance the slow improvements of gradual correction. Much less ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itself, and imitate those changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in observing them.

This recommendation of steadiness and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happiness; or that truth may not be successfully taught by modes of spelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet so lost in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the sons of heaven. Language is only the instrument of science, and words are but the signs of ideas: I wish, however, that the instrument might be less apt to decay, and that signs might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In settling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated syllable. It will sometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the author quoted, on a different syllable from that marked in the alphabetical series; it is then to be understood, that custom has varied, or that the author has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are sometimes given where the sound of letters is irregular; and if they are sometimes omitted, defect in such minute observations will be more easily excused, than superfluity.

In the investigation both of the orthography and signification of words, their ETYMOLOGY was necessarily to be considered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any English root; thus circumspect, circumvent, circumstance, delude, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives, are all those that can be referred to any word in English of greater simplicity.

The derivatives I have referred to their primitives, with an accuracy sometimes needless; for who does not see that remoteness comes from remote, lovely, from love, concavity from concave, and demonstrative from demonstrate? but this grammatical exuberance the scheme of my work did not allow me to repress. It is of great importance in examining the general fabrick of a language, to trace one word from another, by noting the usual modes of derivation and inflection; and uniformity must be preserved in systematical works, though sometimes at the expence of particular propriety.

Among other derivatives I have been careful to insert and elucidate the anomalous

malous plurals of nouns and preterites of verbs, which in the Teutonick dialects are very frequent, and though familiar to those who have always used them, interrupt and embarrass the learners of our language.

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived are the Roman and Teutonick: under the Roman I comprehend the French and provincial tongues; and under the Teutonick range the Saxon, German, and all their kindred dialects. Most of our polysyllables are Roman, and our words of one syllable are very often Teutonick.

In assigning the Roman original, it has perhaps sometimes happened that I have mentioned only the Latin, when the word was borrowed from the French; and considering myself as employed only in the illustration of my own language, I have not been very careful to observe whether the Latin word be pure or barbarous, or the French elegant or obsolete.

For the Teutonick etymologies I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner, the only names which I have forborn to quote when I copied their books; not that I might appropriate their labours or usurp their honours, but that I might spare a perpetual repetition by one general acknowledgment. Of these, whom I ought not to mention but with the reverence due to instructors and benefactors, Junius appears to have excelled in extent of learning, and Skinner in rectitude of understanding. Junius was accurately skilled in all the northern languages, Skinner probably examined the ancient and remoter dialects only by occasional inspection into dictionaries; but the learning of Junius is often of no other use than to show him a track by which he may deviate from his purpose, to which Skinner always presses forward by the shortest way. Skinner is often ignorant, but never ridiculous: Junius is always full of knowledge; but his variety distracts his judgment, and his learning is very frequently disgraced by his absurdities.

The votaries of the northern muses will not perhaps easily restrain their indignation, when they find the name of Junius thus degraded by a disadvantageous comparison: but whatever reverence is due to his diligence, or his attainments, it can be no criminal degree of censoriousness to charge that etymologist with want of judgment, who can seriously derive dream from drama, because life is a drama, and a drama is a dream; and who declares with a tone of defiance, that no man can fail to derive moan from μῆνος, monos, who considers that grief naturally loves to be alone *.

* That I may not appear to have spoken too irreverently of Junius, I have here subjoined a few Specimens of his etymological extravagance.

P R E F A C E.

Our knowledge of the northern literature is so scanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonic the original is not always to be found in any ancient language, and I have therefore inserted Dutch or German substitutes, which I consider not as radical but parallel, not as the parents, but sisters of the English.

The words which are represented as thus related by descent or cognation, do not always agree in sense; for it is incident to words, as to their authors, to degenerate from their ancestors, and to change their manners when they change their country. It is sufficient, in etymological enquiries, if the senses of kindred words be found such as may easily pass into each other, or such as may both be referred to one general idea,

The etymology, so far as it is yet known, was easily found in the volumes where it is particularly and professedly delivered; and, by proper attention to the rules of derivation, the orthography was soon adjusted. But to COLLECT the WORDS of our language was a task of greater difficulty: the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent; and when they were exhausted, what was yet wanting must be sought by fortuitous and unguided excursions into books, and gleaned as industry should find, or chance should offer it, in the boundless chaos of a living speech. My search, however, has been either skilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

As my design was a dictionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; such as Arian, Socinian, Calvinist, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained those of more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received such as could be found either in books of science or technical dictionaries; and have often inserted, from philosophical writers, words which are supported perhaps only by a single authority, and which being not admitted into general use, stand yet as candidates or probationers, and must depend for their adoption on the suffrage of futurity.

The words which our authors have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonness, by compliance with fashion, or lust of innovation, I have registered as they occurred, though commonly only to censure them, and warn others against the folly of naturalizing useless foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by design, merely because they were unnecessary or exuberant; but have received those which by different writers have been differently formed, as viscid, and viscidify, viscous, and viscosity.

Compounded or double words I have seldom noted, except when they obtain a signification different from that which the components have in their simple state. Thus highwayman, woodman, and horsecourser, require an explication; but of biisike or coachdriver no notice was needed, because the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a constant and settled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in ish, as greenish, bluish, adverbs in ly, as dully, openly, substantives in ness, as vileness, faultiness, were less diligently sought, and many sometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to insert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offsprings of English roots, but because their relation to the primitive being always the same, their signification cannot be mistaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, such as the keeping of the castle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illustrate the sense of the verb, except when they signify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an absolute and abstract signification, as colouring, painting, learning.

P R E F A C E.

The participles are likewise omitted, unless, by signifying rather qualities than action, they take the nature of adjectives: as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pace horse, a horse that can pace: these I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are these always inserted, because they are commonly to be understood, without any danger of mistake, by consulting the verb.

Obsolete words are admitted, when they are found in authors not obsolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deserve revival.

As composition is one of the chief characteristics of a language, I have endeavoured to make some reparation for the universal negligence of my predecessors, by inserting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, new, night, fair, and many more. These, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that use and curiosity are here satisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination amply discovered.

Of some forms of composition, such as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to signify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, because the use of these particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is so little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occasion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of composition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which arises to foreigners the greatest difficulty. We modify the signification of many verbs by a particle subjoined; as to come off, to escape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apostatize; to break off, to stop abruptly; to bear out, to justify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to cease; to set off, to embellish; to set in, to begin a continual tenour; to set out, to begin a course or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expressions of the same kind, of which some appear widely irregular, being so far distant from the sense of the simple words, that no sagacity will be able to trace the steps by which they arrived at the present use. These I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myself that the collection is complete, I believe I have so far assisted the students of our language, that this kind of phraseology will be no longer insuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be easily explained by comparison with those that may be found.

Many words yet stand supported only by the name of Bailey, Ainsworth, Philips, or the contracted Dict. for Dictionaries subjoined: of these I am not always certain that they are read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of such I have omitted many, because I had never read them; and many I have inserted, because they may perhaps exist, though they have escaped my notice: they are, however, to be yet considered as resting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I considered as useful, or know to be proper, though I could not at present support them by authorities, I have suffered to stand upon my own attestation, claiming the same privilege with my predecessors of being sometimes credited without proof.

The words, thus selected and disposed, are grammatically considered: they are referred to the different parts of speech; traced when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illustrated by observations, not indeed of great or striking importance, separately considered, but necessary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by English grammarians.

The part of my work on which I expect malignity most frequently to fasten, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to satisfy those, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleased, since I have not always been able to satisfy myself. To interpret interpret a language by itself is very difficult ; many words cannot be explained by synonyms, because the idea signified by them has not more than one appellation ; nor by paraphrase, because simple ideas cannot be described. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unsettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which such notions are conveyed, or such things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And such is the fate of hapless lexicography, that not only darkness, but light, impedes and distresses it ; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illustrated. To explain, requires the use of terms less abstruse than that which is to be explained, and such terms cannot always be found ; for as nothing can be proved but by supposing something intuitively known, and evident without proof, so nothing can be defined but by the use of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the sense is too subtle and evanescent to be fixed in a paraphrase ; such are all those which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are suffered to pass for empty sounds, of no other use than to fill a verse, or to modulate a period, but which are easily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphasis, though it be sometimes such as no other form of expression can convey.

My labour has likewise been much increased by a class of verbs too frequent in the English language, of which the signification is so loose and general, the use so vague and indeterminate, and the senses detorted so widely from the first idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumscribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of distinct and settled meaning : such are bear, break, come, cast, full, get, give, do, put, set, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of these the whole power is not accurately delivered, it must be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that speaks it, these words are hourly shifting their relations, and can no more be ascertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a storm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explication ; this difficulty is not less, nor perhaps greater, in English, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with success ; such at least as can be expected in a task, which no man, however learned or sagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, because I do not understand them ; these might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not so far indulge my vanity as to decline this confession : for when Tully owns himself ignorant whether lessus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral song, or mourning garment ; and Aristotle doubts whether επιτιμος, in the Iliad, signifies a mule, or muleteer, I may freely, without shame, leave some obscurities to happier industry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, should be always reciprocal ; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are seldom exactly synonymous ; a new term was not introduced, but because the former was thought inadequate : names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then necessary to use the proximate word, for the deficiency of single terms can very seldom be supplied by circumlocution ; nor is the inconvenience great of such mutilated interpretations, because the sense may easily be collected entire from the examples.

P R E F A C E.

In every word of extensive use, it was requisite to mark the progress of its meaning, and show by what gradations of intermediate sense, it has passed from its primitive to its remote and accidental signification; so that every foregoing explanation should tend to that which follows, and the series be regularly concatenated from the first notion to the last.

This is specious, but not always practicable; kindred senses may be so interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be disentangled, nor any reason be assigned why one should be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a consecutive series be formed of senses in their nature collateral? The shades of meaning sometimes pass imperceptibly into each other; so that though on one side they apparently differ, yet it is impossible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the same race, though not exactly alike, are sometimes so little different, that no words can express the dissimilitude, though the mind easily perceives it, when they are exhibited together; and sometimes there is such a confusion of acceptations, that discernment is wearied, and distinction puzzled, and perseverance herself hurries to an end, by crowding together what she cannot separate.

These complaints of difficulty will, by those that have never considered words beyond their popular use, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his studies by involution and obscurity. But every art is obscure to those that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to those who have joined philosophy with grammar; and if I have not expressed them very clearly, it must be remembered that I am speaking of that which words are insufficient to explain.

The original sense of words is often driven out of use by their metaphorical acceptations, yet must be inserted for the sake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is used for material heat, or whether flagrant, in English, ever signifies the same with burning; yet such are the primitive ideas of these words, which are therefore set first, though without examples, that the figurative senses may be commodiously deduced.

Such is the exuberance of signification which many words have obtained, that it was scarcely possible to collect all their senses; sometimes the meaning of derivatives must be sought in the mother term, and sometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be supplied in the train of derivation. In any case of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the same race; for some words are slightly passed over to avoid repetition, some admitted easier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better understood, as they are considered in a greater variety of structures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the same skill, or the same happiness: things equally easy in themselves, are not all equally easy to any single mind. Every writer of a long work commits errors, when there appears neither ambiguity to mislead, nor obscurity to confound him; and in a search like this, many felicities of expression will be casually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many seeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus some explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as hind, the female of the stag; stag, the male of the hind: sometimes easier words are changed into harder, as burial into sepulture or interment, drier into desiccative, dryness into ficcidity or aridity, fit into paroxysm; for the easiest word, whatever it be, can never be translated into one more easy. But easiness and difficulty are merely relative, and if the present prevalence of our language guage should invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be assisted by those words which now seem only to encrease or produce obscurity. For this reason I have endeavoured frequently to join Teutonick and Roman interpretation, as to CHEER to gladden, or exbilarate, that every learner of Englisb may be assisted by his own tongue.

The solution of all difficulties, and the supply of all defects, must be sought in the examples, subjoined to the various senses of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authors.

When first I collected these authorities, I was desirous that every quotation should be useful to some other end than the illustration of a word; I therefore extracted from philosophers principles of science; from historians remarkable facts; from chymists complete processes; from divines striking exhortations; and from poets beautiful descriptions. Such is design, while it is yet at a distance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wisdom into an alphabetical series, I soon discovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the student, and was forced to depart from my scheme of including all that was pleasing or useful in Englisb literature, and reduce my transcripts very often to clusters of words, in which scarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the weariness of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some passages I have yet spared, which may relieve the labour of verbal searches, and interperse with verdure and flowers the dusty desarts of barren philosophy.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be considered as conveying the sentiments or doctrine of their authors; the word for the sake of which they are inserted, with all its appendant clauses, has been carefully preserved; but it may sometimes happen, by hasty detraction, that the general tendency of the sentence may be changed: the divine may desert his tenets, or the philosopher his system.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as masters of elegance or models of stile; but words must be sought where they are used; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations serve no other purpose, than that of proving the bare existence of words, and are therefore selected with less scrupulousness than those which are to teach their structures and relations.

My purpose was to admit no testimony of living authors, that I might not be misled by partiality, and that none of my contemporaries might have reason to complain; nor have I departed from this resolution, but when some performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory supplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart in the tenderness of friendship, solicited admission for a favourite name.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have studiously endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the restoration, whose works I regard as the wells of Englisb undefiled, as the pure sources of genuine diction. Our language, for almost a century, has, by the concurrence of many causes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonick character, and deviating towards a Gallick structure and phraseology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recal it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of stile, admitting among the additions of later times, only such as may supply real deficiencies; such are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate easily with our native idioms.

But as every language has a time of rudeness antecedent to perfection, as well as of false refinement and declension, I have been cautious lest my zeal for antiquity

quity might drive me into times too remote, and crowd my book with words now no longer understood; I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excursions. From the authors which rose in the time of Elizabeth, a speech might be formed adequate to all the purposes of use and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the translation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phrases of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenser and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakespeare, few ideas would be lost to mankind, for want of English words, in which they might be expressed.

It is not sufficient that a word is found, unless it be so combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the sentence; such passages I have therefore chosen, and when it happened that any author gave a definition of a term, or such an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a supplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwise observed.

Some words, indeed, stand unsupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and constant analogy, or names of things seldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reason to doubt their existence.

There is more danger of censure from the multiplicity than paucity of examples; authorities will sometimes seem to have been accumulated without necessity or use, and perhaps some will be found, which might, without loss, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not hastily to be charged with superfluities: those quotations which to careless or unskilful perusers appear only to repeat the same sense, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diversities of signification, or, at least, afford different shades of the same meaning: one will shew the word applied to persons, another to things; one will express an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral sense; one will prove the expression genuine from an ancient author; another will shew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous sentence is ascertained by a passage clear and determinate; the word, how often soever repeated, appears with new associates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes something to the stability or enlargement of the language.

When words are used equivocally, I receive them in either sense; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have sometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of sentiments, by shewing how one author copied the thoughts and diction of another: such quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might justly be censured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual history.

The various syntactical structures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the licence or negligence with which many words have been hitherto used, has made our style capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the same word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus I have laboured to settle the orthography, display the analogy, regulate the fracture, and ascertain the signification of English words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have not always executed my own scheme, or satisfied my own expectation. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is still controvertible, the etymology which I adopt

adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous ; the explanations are sometimes too much contracted, and sometimes too much diffused, the significations are distinguished rather with subtilty than skill, and the attention is harassed with unnecessary minuteness.

The examples are too often injudiciously truncated, and perhaps sometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a mistaken sense ; for in making this collection I trusted more to memory, than, in a state of disquiet and embarrassment, memory can contain, and purposed to supply at the review what was left incomplete in the first transcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though necessary and significant, are undoubtedly omitted ; and of the words most studiously considered and exemplified, many senses have escaped observation.

Yet these failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprise is above the strength that undertakes it : To rest below his own aim is incident to every one whose fancy is active, and whose views are comprehensive ; nor is any man satisfied with himself because he has done much, but because he can conceive little. When first I engaged in this work, I resolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleased myself with a prospect of the hours which I should revel away in feasts of literature, the obscure recesses of northern learning which I should enter and ransack, the treasures with which I expected every search into those neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I should display my acquisitions to mankind. When I thus enquired into the original of words, I resolved to show likewise my attention to things ; to pierce deep into every science, to enquire the nature of every substance of which I inserted the name, to limit every idea by a definition strictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate description, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But these were the dreams of a poet doomed at last to wake a lexicographer. I soon found that it is too late to look for instruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my task, with those I must finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to enquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement ; for I did not find by my first experiments, that what I had not of my own was easily to be obtained : I saw that one enquiry only gave occasion to another, that book referred to book, that to search was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed ; and that thus to pursue perfection, was, like the first inhabitants of Arcadia, to chase the sun, which, when they had reached the hill where he seemed to rest, was still beheld at the same distance from them.

I then contracted my design, determining to confide in myself, and no longer to solicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than assistance : by this I obtained at least one advantage, that I set limits to my work, which would in time be finished, though not completed.

Despondency has never so far prevailed as to depress me to negligence ; some faults will at least appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and persevering activity. The nice and subtle ramifications of meaning were not easily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the necessity of disentangling combinations, and separating similitudes. Many of the distinctions which to common readers appear useless and idle, will be found real and important by men versed in the school philosophy, without which no dictionary ever shall be accurately compiled, or skilfully examined.

Some senses however there are, which, though not the same, are yet so nearly allied, allied, that they are often confounded. Most men think indistinctly, and therefore cannot speak with exactness; and consequently some examples might be indifferently put to either signification: this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but register the language; who do not teach men how they should think, but relate how they have hitherto expressed their thoughts.

The imperfect sense of some examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compensated by innumerable passages selected with propriety, and preserved with exactness; some shining with sparks of imagination, and some replete with treasures of wisdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but because care will not always be successful, and recollection or information come too late for use.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, must be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable. I could not visit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my skill in the dialect of navigation, nor visit the warehouses of merchants, and shops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools, operations, of which no mention is found in books; what favourable accident, or enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected; but it had been a hopeless labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and contesting with the fullness of one, and the roughness of another.

To furnish the academicians della Crusca with words of this kind, a series of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was professedly written by Buonaroti; but I had no such assistant, and therefore was content to want what they must have wanted likewise, had they not luckily been so supplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omissions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great measure casual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for some temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a state of increase or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore must be suffered to perish with other things unworthy of preservation.

Care will sometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which seldom occur, will suffer those to pass by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is searching for rare and remote things, will neglect those that are obvious and familiar: thus many of the most common and cursory words have been inserted with little illustration, because in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy those which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things easy from confidence; the mind, afraid of greatness, and disdainful of littleness, hastily withdraws herself from painful searches, and passes with scornful rapidity over tasks not adequate to her powers, sometimes too secure for caution, and again too anxious of vigorous effort; sometimes idle in a plain path, and sometimes distracted in labyrinths, and dissipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult because it is large, even though all its parts might singly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each must be allowed its share of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the stones which form the dome of a temple, should be squared and polished like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured it with so much application,

cation, I cannot but have some degree of parental fondness, it is natural to form conjectures. Those who have been persuaded to think well of my design, require that it should fix our language, and put a stop to those alterations which time and chance have hitherto been suffered to make in it without opposition. With this consequence I will confess that I flattered myself for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reason nor experience can justify. When we see men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promises to prolong life to a thousand years, and with equal justice may the lexicographer be derided, who being able to produce no example of a nation that has preserved their words and phrases from mutability, shall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and secure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change sublunary nature, or clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been instituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulse intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain; sounds are too volatile and subtle for legal restraints; to enchain syllables, and to lash the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to measure its desires by its strength. The French language has visibly changed under the inspection of the academy; the style of Amelot's translation of father Paul is observed by Le Courayer to be un peu passé; and no Italian will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Machiavel, or Caro.

Total and sudden transformations of a language seldom happen; conquests and migrations are now very rare: but there are other causes of change, which, though slow in their operation, and invisible in their progress, are perhaps as much superior to human resistance, as the revolutions of the sky, or intumescence of the tide. Commerce, however necessary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourse with strangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themselves, must in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which serves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coasts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehouse, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at last incorporated with the current speech.

There are likewise internal causes equally forcible. The language most likely to continue long without alteration, would be that of a nation raised a little, and but a little, above barbarity, secluded from strangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniences of life; either without books, or, like some of the Mahometan countries, with very few: men thus busied and unlearned, having only such words as common use requires, would perhaps long continue to express the same notions by the same signs. But no such constancy can be expected in a people polished by arts, and classed by subordination, where one part of the community is sustained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Those who have much leisure to think, will always be enlarging the stock of ideas, and every increase of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words or combination of words. When the mind is unchained from necessity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of speculation, it will shift opinions; as any custom is disused, the words that expressed it must perish with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate speech in the same proportion as it alters practice.

As by the cultivation of various sciences, a language is amplified, it will be more furnished with words dejected from their original sense; the geometrician will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the excentrick virtue of a wild hero, and the physician of sanguine expectations and phlegmatick delays. Copiousness of speech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which some words will be preferred and others degraded; vicissitudes of fashion will enforce the use of new, or extend the signification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current sense: pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen must at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will at one time or other, by publick insatiation, rise into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will use them with colloquial licentiousness, confound distinction, and forget propriety. As politeness increases, some expressions will be considered as too gross and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phrases are therefore adopted, which must for the same reasons, be in time dismissed. Swift, in his petty treatise on the English language, allows that new words must sometimes be introduced, but proposed that none should be suffered to become obsolete. But what makes a word obsolete more than general agreement to forbear it? and how shall it be continued, when it conveys an offensive idea, or recalled again into the mouths of mankind, when it has once by disuse become unfamiliar, and by unfamiliarity unpleasing.

There is another cause of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the present state of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third distinct from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the most conspicuous accomplishment, is skill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language will find its words and combinations crowd upon his memory; and haste and negligence, refinement and affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotic expressions.

The great pest of speech is frequency of translation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting something of its native idiom; this is the most mischievous and comprehensive innovation; single words may enter by thousands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the same, but new phraseology changes much at once; it alters not the single stones of the building, but the order of the Columns. If an academy should be established for the cultivation of our stile, which I, who can never wish to see dependance multiplied, hope the spirit of English liberty will hinder or destroy, let them, instead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to stop the licence of translators, whose idleness and ignorance, if it be suffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes that we fear be thus irresistible, what remains but to acquiesce with silence, as in the other insurmountable distresses of humanity? it remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated: tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preserved our constitution, let us make some struggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people arises from its authors: whether I shall add any thing by my own writing to the reputation of English literature, must be left to time: much of my life has been lost under the pressures of disease; much has been trifled away; and much has always been spent in provision for the day that was passing over me: but I shall not think my employment useless or ignoble, if by my assistance foreign nations, and distant ages, gain access to the propagators of knowledge, and understand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford afford light to the repositories of science, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Locke, to Milton and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wish, I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promised to myself: a few wild blunders, and risible absurdities, from which no work of such multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furnish folly with laughter, and harden ignorance into contempt; but useful diligence will at last prevail, and there never can be wanting some who distinguish desert; who will consider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, since while it is hastening to publication, some words are budding, and some falling away; that a whole life cannot be spent upon syntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be sufficient; that he, whose design includes whatever language can express, must often speak of what he does not understand; that a writer will sometimes be hurried by eagerness to the end, and sometimes faint with weariness under a task, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always present; that sudden fits of inadvertency will surprize vigilance, slight avocations will seduce attention, and casual eclipses of the mind will darken learning; and that the writer shall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yesterday he knew with intuitive readiness, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it shall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewise is performed; and though no book was ever spared out of tenderness to the author, and the world is little solicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curiosity to inform it, that the English Dictionary was written with little assistance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the soft obscurities of retirement, or under the shelter of academick bowers, but amidst inconvenience and distraction, in sickness and in sorrow: and it may repress the triumph of malignant criticism to observe, that if our language is not here fully displayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprised in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of successive ages, inadequate and delusive; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians, did not secure them from the censure of Beni; if the embodied critics of France, when fifty years had been spent upon their work, were obliged to change its oeconomy, and give their second edition another form, I may surely be contented without the praise of perfection, which if I could obtain, in this gloom of solitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till most of those whom I wished to please, have sunk into the grave, and success and miscarriage are empty sounds: I therefore dismiss it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from censure or from praise.

THE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THOUGH the Britains or Welsh were the first possessors of this island, whose names are recorded, and are therefore in civil history always considered as the predecessors of the present inhabitants; yet the deduction of the English language from the earliest times of which we have any knowledge to its present state, requires no mention of them. for we have so few words, which can, with any probability be referred to British roots, that we justly regard the Saxons and Welsh, as nations totally distinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons seized this country, they suffered the Britains to live among them in a state of vassalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble services. But it is scarcely possible, that a nation, however depressed, should have been mixed in considerable numbers with the Saxons without some communication of their tongue, and therefore it may, with great reason, be imagined, that those, who were not sheltered in the mountains, perished by the sword.

The whole fabrick and scheme of the English language is Gothick or Teutonic: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except those where the Slavonian is spoken. Of these languages Dr. Hickes thus exhibited the genealogy.

GOTHICK.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the gospel: somewhat mutilated, which, from the silver with which the characters are adorned, is call'd the silver book. It is now preserved at Upsal, and has been twice published. Whether the dialect of this venerable manuscript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it seems however to exhibit the most ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonic race, and the Saxon, which is the original of the present English, was either derived from it, or both descended from some common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language when, about the year 450, they first entered

Britain, cannot now be known. They seem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their speech therefore, having been always cursory and extemporaneous, must have been artless and unconnected, without any modes of transition or involution of clauses; which abruptness and inconnection may be observed even in their later writings. This barbarity may be supposed to have continued during their wars with the Britains, which for a time left them no leisure for soter studies; nor is there any reason for supposing it abated, till the year 570, when Augustine came from Rome to convert them to Christianity. The Christian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning; they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and so gained, from time to time, some knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of expressing all the sentiments of a civilised people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphrase or imitation of Boethius, and his short preface, which I have selected as the first specimen of ancient English.

This may perhaps be considered as a specimen of the Saxon in its highest state of purity, for here are scarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects.

Of the following version of the gospels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conquest, and therefore may properly be inserted here.

Translations seldom afford just specimens of a language, and least of all those in which a scrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, because they retain the phraseology and structure of the original tongue; yet they have often this convenience, that the same book, being translated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age in comparison with another. For this purpose I have placed the Saxon version and that of Wicliffe, written about the year 1380, in opposite columns; because the convenience of easy collation seems greater than that of regular chronology.

16 And manega Ispahela bearna he gecýrd to Ðrihtne hyra Gode.

17 And he gæð toforan him on gafte 7 ehar mihte þæt he fadera heortan to hyra bearnum gecýrpe. 7 ungelæppulle to rihtforra glosprepe. Ðrihtne fulfremed folc gefearpan :

18 Ða cwæð Zacharias to þam engle. Ðranum pat ic þis. ic eom nu eald. and min wif on hyre dagum firdode :

19 Ða andsparode him se engel. Ic eom Gabriel. ic þe freatode beforan Gode. and ic eom arend wíð þe fprecan. 7 þe þis bodian.

20 And nu þu hert fupzende. 7 þu fprecan ne miht oð þone dag þe þar iung gepurðað. forþam þu munum firdum ne gelyfberst. þa beoð on hyra timan gefyllde :

21 And þæt folc þe Racharian geandzende. and punerodra þæt he on þam temple læt wæs :

22 Ða he ut-eode ne mihte he him tofprecan. 7 hig onnescon þæt he on þam temple fume gefirde ðereah. 7 he wæs bicnide him. 7 ðuinb þurfpurnde :

23 Ða wæs geferd þa hyr þenurza dazaf gefyllde wæron. he ferde to hyr huse :

24 Soðlice aftren ðigum Elizabeth his wif gefeagode. and heo beoðglude hig fif monþaf. 7 cweð.

25 Soðlice me Ðrihten gedýð. þur on þam dagum þe he gefeah minne hif þe wæs mannum afprean :

26 Soðlice on þam fyxan monðe wæs arend Gabriel se engel fram Ðrihtne on Iahlea earene. þe forþama wæs Nazareth.

3 And thei hadden no child, for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet oge in her dayes.

4 And it biſel that whanne Zacarye ſchould do the office of preſthod in the ordir of his courſe to fore God.

5 Aſtir the cuſtom of the preſthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encenſen.

6 And at the multitude of the puple was without forth and preyede in the hour of encenſing.

7 And an aungel of the Lord apperide to him : and ſtood on the right half of the auter of enſenſe.

8 And Zacarye ſeynge was afrayed : and drede fel upon him.

9 And theaungel ſayde to him, Zacarye drede thou not : for thy preier is herd, and Elizabeth thi wiſ ſchal bere to thee a ſone : and his name ſchal be clepid Jon

10 And joye and gladyng ſchal be to thee : and manye ſchulen have joye in his natyvyte

11 For he ſchal be great bifore the Lord : and he ſchal not drinke wyn ne ſydyr, and he ſchal be fulfilled with the holy goſt yit of his moder wombe.

12 And he ſchal convert manye of the children of Iſrael to her Lord God.

13 And he ſchal go bifore in the ſpyrte and vertu of Helye : and he ſchal turne the heartis of the fadris to the ſonis, and men out of beleewe : to the prudence of juſt men, to make redy to prefer puple to the Lord.

14 And Zacarye ſeyde to the aungel : whereof ſchal Y wite this ? for Y am old : and my wif hath goa ler in hir dayes.

15 And the aungel anwerde and ſeyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that ſtonde nygh before God, and Y am ſent to thee to ſpeke and to ewangelife to thee theſe thingis, and lo thou ſchalt be doumbe.

16 And thou ſchalt not mowe ſpeke, til into the day in which theſe thingis ſchulen be don. for thou haſt not beleved my to wordis, whiche ſchulen be fulfilled in her tyme.

17 And the puple was abidyng Zacarye : and thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18 And he gede out and myghte not ſpeke to hem : and thei knewen that he hadde feyn a viſoun in the temple, and he bekenide to hem : and he dwellide ſtille doumbe.

19 And it was don whanne the days of his office weren fulfilled : he wente into his hous.

20 And aſtir theſe dayes Elizabeth his wif confeveyde and hidde hir fyve monethis and ſyde.

21 For ſo the Lorde dide to me in the days in whiche he biheld to take away my reprof among men.

22 But in the ſixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was ſent from God : into a cytee of Galilee wher name was Nazareth.

Of the Saxon poetry ſome ſpecimen is neces-ſary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their ſyllables ; but it would be very difficult, perhaps impoſſible, to recover, excludes us from that pleaſure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The ſiſt poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and conſequently muſt have depended upon the quantity of their ſyllables ; but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and cloſe their verſes with correſpondent ſounds.

The two paſſages, which I have ſeleſted, contain apparently the rudiments of our preſent lyrick meaſures, and the writers may be juſtly conſidered as the genuine ancetors of the Engliſh poets.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the present Engl. sh may be plainly discovered, this change seems not to have been the effect of the Norman conquest, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the first hundred years after it; the language must therefore have been altered by causes like those which, notwithstanding the care of writers and societies instituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a specimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry ſeems to have been written, of which I have interſted only ſhort fragments; the firſt is a rude attempt at the preſent meaſure of eight ſyllables, and the ſecond is a natural introduction to Robert of Glouceſter, being compoſed in the ſame meaſure, which, however rude and barbarous it may ſeem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

In theſe fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not ſo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own forms and terminations: for which no reaſon can be given.

Hitherto the language uſed in this iſland, however different in ſucceſſive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be aſſigned when the Saxon may be ſaid to ceaſe, and the Engliſh to commence. Robert of Glouceſter however, who is placed by the critics in the thirteenth century, ſeems to have ued a kind of intermediate diction, neither Saxon nor Engliſh; in his work therefore we ſee the tranſition exhibited, and, as he is the firſt of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extenſive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the ſame meaſure with the foregoing author of St. Margarete, which poliſhed into greater exactneſs, appeared

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himself informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which comprising a relation of many different particulars, consequently required the use of many words and phrases, may be properly specified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have chosen the first, because it shows, in some measure the state of European Science as well as of the English tongue; and the second, because it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expression.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may see the sterre transmontayne, that is clept the sterre of the see, that is unmevabe, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode sterre. But men seen another sterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Astartyk. And right as the schip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode sterre, right so don schip men bezonde the parties, be the sterre of the Southe, the which sterre apperethe not to us. And this sterre, that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode sterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche cause, men may wel perceyve, that the lond and the see ben of rownde scapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament scheweithe in o contree, that scheweithe not in another contree. And men may well prevea be experience and fofyle compassment of wytt, that zit a man fond passages be schippes, that wolde go to urchen the world, men myghte go be schippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, afre that I have seyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Astrolabre, that the sterre that is clept the transmontayne, is 53 degrees hight. And more for here ia Almayne and Bewne, it hathe hathe 68 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties septentrionales, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes. For I my self have mesured it by the Astrolabre. Now schulle ze knowe, that azen the Transmontayne, is the tother sterre, that is clept Antartyk; as I have seyd before. And tho 2 sterres ne meeven nevere. And be him turnethe alle the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree; so that tho sterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties: so that it hath als mochel aboven, as it hathe beneath. A'tre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden that in Lybye, men seen first the sterre Antartyk. And so fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that sterre more highe; so that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees in heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the whiche, 60 minutes maken a degree) a'tre goyng be see and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have spoke, and to other yles and londs bezonde that contree, I have founden the sterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companie and schippyng, for to go more bezonde, I trowe well in certyn, that wee scholde have seen alle the roundnesse of the firmament alle about. For as I have seyd zou be for, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 sterres: the whiche haliondelle I have seyn. And of the t'her haliondelle, I have seyn toward the Northe, undre the Transmontayne 62 degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionale, I have seen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the haliondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have seen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nighe the haliondelle of a degree; and so there ne faylethe but that I have seen alle the firmament, saf 84 degrees and the haliondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourth part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundnesse of the firmament holt 90 degrees: so there faylethe but 5 degrees and an half, of the fourth partie. And also I have seen the 3 parties of alle the roundnesse of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I seye zou certainly, that men may envrowne alle the erthe of all the world, as well undre as aboven, and tunen azen to his contree, that hadde companie and schippyng and conduyt: and alle weyes he scholde fynde men, londs, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben streghte, feet azen feet of lum, that dwellen undre the transmontayne; als wel as wee and thei that dwellyn under us, ben feet azenft feet. For alle the parties of see and of lond han here appoyntes, habitables or troppables, and thei of this hal, and bezond half. And wycthe wel, that a'tre that, that I may parceyve and comprehend the londes of Prestre John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goyng from Scotland or from Englund toward Jerusalem, men gon upward always. For our lond is in the lowe partie of the erthe toward the West: and the lond of Prestre John is the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Est: and they han there the day, when we have the nyghte, and also highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, when we han the day. For the erthe and the see ben of round forme and schapp, as I have seyd before. And that men gon upward to o colt, men gon downward to another colt. Also zee have herd me seye, that Jerusalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and schewen there, be a sere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, when it is equenoxium, that schewethe no schadwe on no fyde. And that it scholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wyntesse the it in the Pfautre, where he seythe, Deus operatus est salute in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten to the parties of the West, for to go toward Jerusalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon for Jerusalem, unto other contynyes of the superficialitie of the erthe bezonde. And whan man men gon bezonde the iourneyes, towarde Ynde and the forynn yles, alle is envyroung the roundnesse of the erthe and of the see, undre oure contrees on this half. And therefore hath it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd countyd, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed sometyme from our contrees, for to go serche the world. And so he passed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and so longe he wente be see and lond, and so envround the world be many seylons, that he sond an yle, where he herde spek his owne language, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, suche wordes as men speken to bestes in his own contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knew not how it myghte be. But I seye, that he had gon so longe, be londe and be see, that he had envyround all the erthe, that he was comen azen envyroung, that is to seye, goyng aboute, unto his own marches, zif he wolde have passed forthe, till he had founden his contree and his owne knoueleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and so he losten moche peyneffulle labour, as him self seyde, a great while a'tre, that he was comen hom. For it beselle a'tre, that he went in to Norweye; and there tempest of the see toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and when he was in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle, where he had herd speke his own language before, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was possible thinge. But how it semethe to symple men unlearned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and also that men scholde

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

fall toward the hevenic, from undre ! But that may not be, upon lesse; than wee mowe falle towards hevene, fro the erthe, where wee bea. For fro what partie of the erthe, that men duelle, outhen aboven or benethen, that semethe alweyes to hem that duellen, that thei gon more righte than any other folk. And nighte as it semethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte so it semethe hem, that wee ben undre hem. For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; be grettere refoun, the erthe and the see, that ben so grete and so hevye, scholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therfore seithe oure Lord God, Non timeas me, qui suspendi terra ex nicholo? And alle be it, that it be possible thing, that men may fo envyronne alle the worlde, natheles of a 1000 perfonnes, on ne myghte not happen to retournen in to his contree. For, fro the grettesse of the erthe and of the see, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man cowde redye him perfily toward the parties that he cam fro, but zif it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and lulle gret, and holt in roundnesse and aboute envyroun, be aboven and benethen 20425 myles, afre the oppynoun of the olde wise astronomeres. And here seyenges I reprevre noughte. But afre my litylle wyt, it semethe me, savyng here reverence, that it is more. And for to have bettere understandinge, I seye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hathe a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another litille compas: than afre, be the gret compas devyded be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; so that in as many parties, as the gret compas schal be departed, in als manye, schalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the spaces ben lesse. Now thanne, be the gret compas represented for the firmament, and the litille compas represented for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devyded, be astronomeres, in 12 signes; and every signe is devyded in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees that the firmament hathe aboven. Also, be the erthe devyded in als many parties, as the firmament; and lat every partye answer to a degree of the firmament: and wytethe it wel, that afre the auctoures of astronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe answeren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 87 myles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplied be 360 fithes; and than thei ben 31500 myles, every of 8 furlonges, afre myles of oure contree. So moche hathe the erthe in roundnesse, and of heghte envyroun, after myn oppynoun and myn understandinge. And zee schulle undirstonde, that afre the oppynoun of olde wise philosphes and astronomeres, our contree ne Ireland ne Wales ne Scotland ne Norweye ne the other yles colyng to hem, ne ben not in the superficies counted aboven the erthe; as it schewethe be alle the bokes of astronomye. For the superficies of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept clymates. And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates; for thei ben descendyng toward the West. And also these yles of Ynde, which both evene asent us, both nought reckned in the climates; for thei ben asent us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 climates strechen hem envyrounyng the world.

II. And I John Maundeville knyghte abovefeyd, (alle though I be unworthi) that departed from our contrees and passed the see, the zeer of grace 1322. that have passed manye londs and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle straunge places, and have ben in many a fulle gode honourable companye, and at many a faire dede of armes (alle be it that I dide none myself, for myn unable insuffiance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my self) to reste: for gowtes, artetykes, that my distreynen, tho diffynen the ende of my labour, asent my will (God knowethe.) And thus takeyng solace in my wretched reste, recordyng the tyme passed, I have fulfilled theise thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde come in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from oure contrees. Wherefore I preye to alle the rediers and hereres of this boke, zif it plese hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I schalle preye for hem. And alle tho that seyn for me a Pater noster, with an Ave Maria, that God forzeve me my synnes, I make hem partyners and graunte hem part of alle the gode pilgrimages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif any be to his plesance: and noghte only of tho, but of alle that evere I schalle do unto my lytes end. And I beseeche Almyghty God, fro whom alle goodnesse and grace cometh fro, that he vouchesaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle sylle hire soules with inspiratioun of the Holy Gost, in makyngs delience of alle hire golly enemyes here in erthe, to hire salvacioun, bothe of body and soule; to worchipe and thankyng of him, that is three and on, with outen begynnyng and withouten endyng; that is, with outen qualitee, good, and with outen quantytee, gret; that in alle places is present, and alle thinges conteynyng; the whiche that no goodnesse may amende, ne none evelle empeyre; that in perfeyte trynytee lyveth and regneth God, be alle worldes and be alle tymmes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The first of our authors, who can be properly said to have written Englysh, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confession of a Lover, calls Chaucer his discipule, and may therefore be considered as the father of our poetry.

THE HISTORY OF THE

NOWE for to speke of the commune.

It is to drede of that fortune,
Which hath befallē in sondrye londes;
But ofe for defaule of bondes
Allfodeinly, er it be wist,
A tunne, whan his lie arist
'Tobreketh, and renneth all aboute,
Whiche els shulde nought gone out.
And eke full ofte a lirtell skare
Ypon a banke, er men beware,
Let in the streame, whiche with gret peine,
If any man it shall restraine.

Whiche lawe fastleth, erreur groweth.
He is not wise, who that ne knoweth
For it hath proued ofter this.
And thus the common clamour is
In every londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complainte telleth,
How that the worlde is miswent,
And thervpon his argument
Yeueth euery man in sondrie wise:
But what man wolde him sel: auisse
His conscience, and nought misuse,
He maie well at the first excule
His god, whiche euer stant in one,
In him there is detaute none
So must it stande vpon vs selue,
Nought only vpon ten or twelue,
But plenary vpon vs all
For man is cause of that shall fall.

The history of our language is now brought to the point at which the history of our poetry is generally supposed to commence, the time of the illustrious Geoffry Chaucer, who may perhaps, with great justice, be tyled the first of our versifiers who wrote poetically. He does not however appear to have deserved all the praise which he has received, or all the censure that he has suffered. Dryden, who mistakes genius for learning, and in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, ascribes to Chaucer the first refinement of our numbers, the first production of easy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more polished languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harsh terms for having vitiated his native speech by unble cartloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower, will find smooth numbers and easy rhymes, of which Chaucer is supposed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does allow us to discover with particular exactness; but the works of Gower and Lydgate sufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries: and some improvements he undoubtedly made by the various dispositions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he seems to have been happy and judicious. I have selected several specimens both of his prose and verse; and among them, part of his translation of Boetius, to which another version, made in the time of queen Mary, is opposed. It would be improper to quote very sparingly an author of so much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book so generally known.

COLVILLE.

I THAT in tyme of prosperite, and flourishyng
I studey, made pleasaunte and delectable dities, or verses: alas now beyng heavy and sad ouerthrowen in aduersitie, am compelled to sele and tast hevines and grief. Beholde the muses Poeticall, that is to seye: the pleasure that is in poetes verses, do appoynt me, and compell me to writ these verses, in meter, and the sorrowfull verses do wet my wretched face with very waterye teares, yllsaunge out of my eyes for sorowe. Whiche muses no feare without doute could overcome, but that they wold folow me in my journey of exile or banishment. Sometyme the ioye of happy and lusty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and nowe the course of sorrowfull olde age caueth me to reioyse. For hasty old age vnloked for is come vpon me with al her incommodities and cuyls, and sorow hath commaunded and broughte me into the same olde age, that is to say: that sorowe caueth me to beold, before my time come of old age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon my heade, and my reuiled skynne trembleth my flesh, cleane consumed and wasted with so-

rowe. Mannes death is happy, that cometh not in youth when a man is lustye, and in pleasure or welth: but in time of aduersitie, when it is often desired. Alas Alas howe dull and deffe be the eares of cruel death vnto men in misery that would fayne dye: and yet refusythe to come and shute vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes, Whiles that false fortune fauorydme with her transitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almost ouercom me. That is to say deathe was redy to eppresse me when I was in prosperite. Nowe for by cause that fortune beyng turned, from prosperitie into aduersitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyuable countenance, my wretched life is yet prolonged and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes why haue you so often boasted me, sayinge that I was happy when I had honour, possessions riches, and authoritie whych be transitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no stedfast degre.

IN the mene while, that I still record these thynges with my self, and marked my wepelic complainte with office of pointell: I laugh stonyng abouen the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by semblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, seying over the common sight of menne, with a lively colour, and with soche vigour and strength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it so, that she were full of so grete age, that menne woulde not trowen in no manere, that she were of our elde.

The stature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for sometyme she constrained and shronke her selven, like to the common mesure of menne: And sometyme it semed, that she touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when she hove her hedde higher, she perced the self heven, so that the sight of menne loking was in ydell: her clothes wer makid of right delie thredes, and subtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes she had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her self declaring, and shewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darknesse of a forleten and dispised elde had dusked and darked, as it is wonte to darke by smoked Images.

In the netherest hemme and border of these clothes menne redde iwoven therein a Grekische A. that signifieth the life active, and above that letter in the hieft bordure, a Grekische C. that signifieth the life contemplative. And betwene these two letters there were seen degrees nobly wrought, in manner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the netherest letter to the upperest: nathelesse handes of some men hadden kerue that clothe, by violence or by strength, and the hygher parte wher the letter T. was which is vnderstand speculation or contemplacion, Neuertheles the handes of some vyolente persones had cut the sayde veitures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thereof, such as euery one coulde catch. And the her selfe dyd bare in her ryght hand litel bokes, and in her lefte hande a scepter, which foresayd phylosophy (when she saw the muses poetycal present at my bed, cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to mewarde, myne unpiuous lie draweth along ungreable dwellynges. O ye my tennes, what, or whereto avauoned ye me to ben weifull: For he that hath fallin, Rode in no stedfast degre.

WHYLES that I considerydde pryuylye with my selfe the thynges before sayd, and describde my wofull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wrytter, me thought I sawe a woman stand ouer my head of a reuerend countenance, hauyng quycke and glysteryng clere eyes, aboue the common sorte of men in lyuely and delectable colour, and ful of strength, although she semed so olde that by no meanes she is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her stature is of doutetful knowledge, for nowe she shewethe herselfe at the common length or stature of men, and other whiles she semeth so high, as though she touched heuen with the crown of her hed. Ani when the wold stretch fourth her hed hygher, it also perced thorough heauen, so that mens syghte could not attain to behold her. Her veitures or cloths were persyt of the finest thredes, and subtyll workemanship, and of substance permanent, whych veitures she had wouen with her own handes as I perceuyed after by her owne saynge. The kynde or beawtye of the whyche veitures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignorance of oldenes forgotten hadde obicuryd and darkened, as the smoke is wont to darken Images that stand nyghte the smocke. In the lower parte of the said veitures was read the greke letter P. wouen whych signifyeth practise or adyffe, and in the hygher part of the veitures the greke letter. T. whych estandeth for theorica, that signifieth speculation or contemplation. And betwene both the sayd letters were sene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders wherein was as it were a passage or waye in steppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter. P. was which is vnderstand from practys or adyff, unto everiche manne of them had borne awaie soche peces, as he might getten. And forsothe this foresaid woman bare inale bokes in her righte hande, and in her left hand she bare a scepter. And when she sawe these Poeticall muses apochyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, she was a litle amoued, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (quod she) hath suffered approchen to this silke manne these commen strompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche only ne asswage not his sorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and nourishe hym with swete venime? Forsothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of afficcions, whiche that ben nothyng frustuous nor profitable, ditroien the Corne, plentuou of fruites of reson. For thei holden heries of men in usage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye muses had withdrawn from me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde commenly among the peple, I would well suffre the lasse grevously. For why, in soche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrawn from me this man, that hath ben nourished in my studies or scoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben swete, till it be at the last, and suffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muses, that is to say, by my notefull sciences. And thus this companie of muses iblamed casten wrothly the chere dounward to the yerth, and shewing by rednesse ther shame, thei passeden sorowfully the thresholde. And I of whom the sight plounged in teres was darked, so that I ne might not know what that woman was, of so Imperial auctoritie, I woxe all abashed and stoned, and cast my sight doune to the yerth, and began still for to abide what she would doen aterward. Then came she nere, and set here doune upon the uttermost corner of my bed, and the beholding my chere, that was cast to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with these wordes (that I shall saine) the perturbation of my thought.

bed, spekyng sorrowful wordes to my wepyng, beying angry sayd (with terrible or frowning countenance) who suffred these crafty harlottes to eom to thys sycke man? which can help hym by no means of hys grieve by any kind of medicines, but rather increase the same with swete payson. These be they that doo dystroye the fertile and plentious commedytes of reason and the fruytes thereo: wyth their prickyng thornes, or barren affectes, and accustome or subdue mens myndes with sickene, and heuynes, and do not deliyer or heale them of the same. But yf your flattery had conveyed or wythdrawen from me, any vlneryd man as the comen sorte of people are wonte to be, I coulde haue ben better contentyd, for in that my worke should not be hurt or hynderyd. But you haue taken and conveyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the studies of Aristotel and of Plato. But yet get you hence mairmaids (that seme swete untill you have broughte a man to deathe) and suffer me to heale thys my man wyth my muses or scyences that be holsome and good. And after that philo sophy had spoken these wordes the sayd companie of the musys poetical beynge rebukyd and sad, caste downe their countenance to the grounde, and by blussing confessed their shampaltnes, and went out of the doores. But I (that had my sight dull and bynd wyth wepyng, so that I knew not what woman this hauyng soo great auctoritie) was amalyd or stonyed, and lokyng dounward, towarde the grounde, I began pryvylye to look what thyng the would saye ferther, than she had said. Then she approachyng and drawyng nere unto me, sat doune vpon my face sad with wepyng, and declynyng toward the earth for sorow, bewayled the trouble of my minde with these saynges tolowyng.

The conclusions of the ASTROLABIE.

This book (written to his son in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II) standeth so good at this day, especially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, says an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowys my sonne, I perceve well by certayne evidences thine abylyte to lerne scyences, touching nombres and proportions, and also well consyde I thy besye prayer in especyal to lerne the trefyfe of the astrolabye. Than for as moche as a philosopher saithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiscendeth to the ryghtuall prayers of his frende: theroie I have given the a sufficient astrolabye for our orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the which by mediacion of this lytell trefyfe, I purposie to teche the a certain nombre of conclusions, pertainyng to this same instrument. I say a certayne nombre of conclusions for thre causes, the first cause is this. Truste wel that al the conclusions that have be founden, or ells possiblye might be founde in so noble an instrument as in the astrolabye, ben unknownen perfetly to anye mortal man in this region, as I suppoie. Another cause is this, that tothely in any causes of the astrolabye that I have yfene, ther ben some conclusions, that wol not in al thinges perourme ther benefite: and some of hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This trefyfe divided in five partes, wil I shewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Englishe, for Latine ne canst thou nat yet but smale, my litel sonne. But neverthelesse sufficeth to the these trewe conclusions in Englishe, as well as sufficeth to these noble clerkes gokes these same conclusions in greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to Jews in Hebrew, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke

folke had 'hem firste oute of other divers languages, and write 'hem in ther owne tonge, that is to saie in Latine.

And God wote that in all these languages and in manye mo, have these conclusyons ben sufficientlye lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely every person discrete, that redeth hereth or his lityl treatise to have my rude entermyng excused, and my superfluite of wordes, for two causes. The first cause is, for that curious endityng and hard sentences is ful hevvy at ones, for such a childe to lerne. And the seconde cause is this, that sothely me semeth better to written unto a child twice a gode sentence, than he foriete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be so that I shewe the in my lith Englishe, as crew conclusions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and subtil conclusions as ben yshewed in latin, in any comon tretise of the astrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God save the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith bereth, and obeiech everich in his degree, the more and the lesse. But confydrerth well, that I ne usurpe not to have founded this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I n'ame but a leude compilatour of the labour of olde astrologiens, and have it translated in myn englishe onely for thy doctrine: and with this swerde that I sene envy.

The first party.

The first partye of this tretise shall reherce the figures, and the membres of thyne astrolabye, bycause that thou shalte have the greter knowyng of thine owne instrument.

The seconde party.

The seconde partye shal teche the to werken the very practike of the foresaid conclusions, as ferforth and also narrowe as may be shewed in so smale an instrument portatife aboute. For wel wote every astrologien, that smallest fractions ne wol not be shewed in so smal an instrument, as in subtil tables calculated for a cause.

THE PROLOGUE of the TESTAMENT of LOVE.

MANY men there ben, that with eyes openly sprad so moche twalowen the deliouse of jelles and of ryme, by quaint knyttinge coloures, that of the godenesse or of the badnesse of the sentence take they litel hede or els none.

Sothely dulle witte and a thoughtfulle soule so sore have mined and graffed in my spirites, that soche craft of endityng wol nat ben of mine acquaintance. And for rude wordes and boistous perent the herte of the heier to the inrest point, and platen there the sentence of thynges, so that with litel helpe it is able to sprung, this bokke, that nothyng hath of the grete flode of wytte, no of femelyche coloures, is dolven with rude wordes and boistous, and so drawe togider to maken the catchers therof hen the more redy to hent sentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with coloures riche and some with wers, as with red inke, and some with coles and chalke: and yet is there gode matter to the leude people of thylike chalkye purtreiture, as 'hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the syght of the better coloures yeven to 'hem more joye for the first leudenesse. So sothly this leude cloudy occupacyon is not to prayle, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudenesse commendeth. Eke it shal yeve sight that other precyous thynges shall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many soveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thynges fulfild but certes there ben some that speken ther poisyte mater in Frenche, of whiche speche the Frenche men have as gode a fantasie as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Englishe. And many termes there ben in Englishe, whiche unneth we Englishe men connen declare the knowlege: howe should than a Frenche man borne? soche termes connejumpere in his mater, but as the jay chattereth Englishe. Right so trulye the understandyn of Englishmen wol not stretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what so ever we botten of straunge langage. Let than clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the proprie of science, and the knowyng in that facultie: and lette Frenche men in their Frenche also enditen ther quaint termes, for it is kyndlye to ther mouthe; and let us shewe our fantasies in such wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this bokke by lityl thank worthy for the leudnesse in travaille, yet soch writtinge xiten men to thiike thynges that ben necessarie: for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrroure sene the vices or vertues of other, in wyche thyng lightly may be conceved to eschue perils, and necessities to catch, after as adventures have fallen to other people or persons.

Certes the soverainst thyng of desire and most creature resonable, have or els shuld have full appetite to ther perseeuyng: unresonable bestes mowen not, sith the reson hath in 'hem no workinge: than resonable that wol not, is compared to unresonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forsohe the most soveraine and small perfeccion of man is in knowyng of a sothe, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to know, and love his creatour.

Nowe principally the mene to brunge in knowlege and lovyng his creatour, is the consideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylike thynges that ben made, understandyng here to our wyttes, are the unseyn privities of God made to us syghtfull and knowyng, in our contemplancon and understandyng.

THE HISTORY OF THE

These thinges than forsothe moche bringen us to the ful knowleginge sothe, and to the parfyte love of the maker of hevenly thynges. Lo! David saith: thou haste delighted me in makinge, as who saith, to have delite in the tune how God hath lent me in consideration of thy makinge. Wherof Aristotle in the boke de Animalibus, saith to naturel philosophers: it is a grete likynge in love of knowinge their cretoure: and also in knowinge of causes in kindely thynges, confidrid forsothe the formes of kindely thynges and the shap, a gret kyndely love we shulde have to the werkman that hem made. The craite of a werkman is shewed in the werk. Herefore trulie the philosophers with a lvely studie manie noble thinges, righte precious, and worthy to memroye, written, and by a gret swet and travaille to us lesten of causes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore philosophers it was more joy, more lykynge, more herty lust in kindely vertues and matters of reton the perfection by busy study to knowe, than to have had al the treasour, al the richeffe, al the vaine glory, that the passed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therefore the names of hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne written; and in the contrarie, that is tofaine in Styxe the soule pitte of helle arne thilke pressed that soch gedenes hated. And because this boke shall be of love, and the prime causes of stering in that doynge with passions and desires for wantynge of desire, I wil that this boke be cleped the testament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in scorn laugh, to bere a warie or els halfe a man, say he wil rende out the iwerde of Hercules handes, and also he shulde set Hercules Gades a mile yet fether, and over that he had power of strenght to pull up the spere, that Aristander the noble might never wagge, and that passynge al thinge to ben mayster of Fraunce by night, there as the noble gracious Edwade the thirde for al his gret prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther shall be made more scorn and jape of me, that I so unworthely clothed altogether in the cloude of uncorning, wil putten me in ptees to speak of love, or els of the causes in that matter, sithen al the grettest clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who saith gathered up clere toirne hem, and with ther sharp sithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al pienties to lade me and many an other. Envyte forsothe commendeth noughte his reton, that he hath in hain, be it never to trusty. And although these noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy tier hier, han al draw and bounde up in the sheves, and made many shokes, yet have I ensample to gader the smale crommes, and fullin ma walet of tho that fallen from the bourde among the smalle houndes, notwithstanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remoulles, as trenchours, and the relese to bere to the almocse. Yet also have I leve of the noble husbunde Boece, although I be a straunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and thele grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the shedyng after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encrese my porcion with that I shal drawe by privyties out of shokes; a slye servaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in causes of thynges, was more hardier in the firste sechers, and so saith Aristotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther passing study han freshed our wittes, and oure understondynge han excited in consideration of trouthe by sharpnes of ther refons. Utterly these thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouthe, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of mesure was boitous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as this kind asketh, with dryynge coldes maked the waves of the ocean se so to arise unkindely over the common bankes that it was in point to spill all the erthe.

The PROLOGUES of the CANTERBURY Tales of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that Aprilis with his shouris sote,
The drought of March had percid to the rote,

And bathid every veyn in such licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the flour.
When Zephyrus eke, with his swete breth
Enspirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppis; and that the yong Sunn
Hath in the Ramm halve cours yrunn;
And smale foulis makin melodye,
That slepin alle nighte with opyn eye,
(So prickith them nature in ther corage)
Then longin folk to go on pilgrimage:
And palmers for to sekin strange strondes,
To servin hallowes couth in sondry londes:
And specially fro every shir's end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,
The holy blisfull martyr for they seke,
That them hath holpin, whan that thee were seke.

Befell that in that seson on a day
In Southwerk at the Taberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that hoftery
Wele nine and twenty in a cumpany
Of fundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felaship; and pilgrimes wer they all;
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.

The chambers and the stablis werin wide,
And well we werin esid at the best:
And shortly whan the sunne was to rest,
So had I spokin with them everych one,
That I was of ther felaship anone:
And made forward erli for to riie,
To take our weye, ther as I did devise.

But natheles while that I have time and space
Er' that I farther in this tale pabe,

f ech of them, so as it semid me.
^And which they werin, and of what degree,
^And eke in what array that they wer in :
^And at a knight then woll I first begin.

The KNIGHT.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
 That fro the time that he first began
 To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
 Trowth and honour, fredorne and curtesy.
 Full worthy was he in his lord's werre,
 And thereto had he riddin name more ferre
 As well in Christendom, as in Hethnes ;
 And eyr honoured for his worthines.

At Alefandre' he was when it was won ;
 Full oft timis he had the bord begon
 Abovin alle naciquns in Pruce :
 In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce,
 No Christea-man fo oft of his degree
 In Granada ; in the sege had he be
 Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary ;
 At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
 Whan that they wer won ; and in the grete see
 At many a noble army had he be :
 At mortal battails had he ben fiftene,
 And foughtin for our feith at Tramesene,
 In listis thrys, and alwey slein his fo.

This ilke worthy knight had been also Sometimis with the lord of Palathy,
 Ayens anotbir hethin in Turkey ;
 And evirmere he had a sov'rane prize ;
 And though that he was worthy, he was wise ;
 And of his port as meke as is a maid,
 He nevir yet no villany ne said
 In all his life unto no manner wight :
 He was a very parfit gentil knight.
 But for to tellin you of his array,
 His hors wer good ; but he was nothing gay,
 Of fustian he werid a gipon,
 Alle besmotrid with his haburgeon.
 For he was late ycome from his viage,
 And wente for to do his pilgimage.

The House of F A M E.

The first Boke.

NOW herkia, as I have you saied,
 What that I mette or I abraied,
 Of December the tenith daie,
 When it was night, to slepe I laie,
 Right as I was wonte so to doen,
 And fill aslepe wondir sone,
 As he that was werie forgo
 On pilgimage millis two
 To the corps of saint Leonarde,
 To makin liehe that erst was harde.

But as me slept me mette I was Within a temple' imade of glas,
 In whiche there weroin mo images
 Of golde, standyng in sondrie stages,
 Sete in mo riche tabirnaclis,
 And with perre mo pinnacles,
 And mo curious portraitureis,
 And queinat manir of figuris
 O fgolde worke, then I saw evir.

But certainly I n'ist nevir
 Where that it was, but well wist I
 It was of Venus redily
 This temple, for in purtreiture
 I sawe anone right her figure
 Nakid yfletyng in a se,
 And also on her hedde parde
 Her rosly garland white and rekde,
 And her combe for to kembe her hedde.
 Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
 Her blinde sonne, and Vulcano,
 That in his face ywas full broune.

But as I romid up and downne,
 I founde that on the wall there was Thus written on a table' of bras.

I woll now syng, if that I can,
 The armis, and also the man,
 That first came through his destine
 Fugitive fro Troye the countre
 Into Itaile, with full moche pine,
 Unto the stiondis of Lavine,
 And tho began the storie' anone,
 As I shall tellin you echone.

First sawe I the distruction
 Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
 With his false untrue forfweynges,
 And with his chere and his leiynges,
 That made a horfe, brought into Troye,
 By whiche Trojans loste all ther joye :

And aftir this they graved, alas !
 How Ilions castill assailed was,
 And won, and kyng Priamus slain,
 And Polites his sonne certain,
 Dispitously of Dan Pyrrus.

And next that sawe I how Venus,
 When that she sawe the castill brende,
 Doune from hevyn she gan descende,
 And bade her sonne Æneas fle,
 And how he fled, and how that he Escapid was from all the pres,
 And toke his father' old Anchises,
 And bare hym on his back awaie,
 Crying alas and welawaie !
 The whiche Anchiites in his hande,
 Bare tho the goddis of the lande
 I mene thilke that unbrendid were.

Then sawe I next that all in ferre
 How Creusa, Dan Æneas wife,
 Whom that he lovid all his life,
 And her yong sonne clepid Julo,
 And eke Ascanius also,
 Fleddia eke, with full drierie chere,
 That it was pitie for to here,
 And in a forest as they went
 How at a tournyng of a went Creusa was iloste, alas !
 That rede aot I, how that it was
 How he her sought, and how her ghoft
 Bad hym to fle the Grekis hotte,
 And saied he must into Itaile,
 As was his destine, saung saile,
 That it was pitie for to here,
 When that her spirite gan appere,
 The wordis that she to him saied,
 And for to kepe her sonne hym praied.

THE HISTORY OF THE

There sawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meine,
With his shippis began to faile
Toward the cuntry of Itaile,
As streight as ere thei mightin go.

There sawe I eke the, cruil Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That halt ihaid all thy life

Mercilels all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and crie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the god of windes,
To blowin out of alle kindes
So loude, that he should ydrenche
Lorde and ladie, and grome, and wenche
Of all the Trojanis nacion,
Without any' of their favacion.

There sawe I soche tempest arise,
That every herte might agrife
To se it paintid on the wall.

There sawe I eke gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
Ywepying with full woful chere
Yprayid Jupiter on hie,
To save and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your sonne ywas.

Governid is by fortun's errour,
But nathelesse the lacke of her favour
Ne maie not doe me syng though that I die,
J'ay tout perdu, mon temps & labeur
For finally fortune I doe defie.

Yet is me leit the sight of my rescoun

To knowin frende fro fre in thy mirror,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and down,
I taughtin me to knowin in an hour,
But truly no force of thy reddour

To hym that ovir hymself hath maistrise,
My suffisaunce yshal be my succour,
For finally fortune I do defie.

O Socrates, thou stedfast champion,

The answer of Fortune.

No man is wretchid but hymself it wene,
He that yath hymself hath suffisaunce,
Why saiest thou then I am to the so kene,
That hast thy self out of my goviraunce ?
Saie thus grant mercie of thin habudance,
That thou hast lent or this, thou shalt not

What wost thou yet how I the woll avauce ?
And eke thou hast thy beste frende alive.

Frende of effeste, and frende of countinaunce,
The nedith not the galle of an hine,
That curith eyin derke for ther penaunce,
Now seest thou clere that wer in ignoraunce,

Yet holt thine anker, and thou maiest arive
There bountie bereth the key of my sub-

And eke thou haste thy beste frende alive.
How many have I refused to sustene,

Sith I have the sofrid in thy pleiaunce ?
Wolt thou then make a statue on thy quene,
That I shall be aie at thine ordinaunce ?

Thou born art in my reign of variaunce,
About the whole with othir must thou drive
My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
And eke thou hast thy beste frende alive.

The answer to Fortune.

Thy lore I dampne, it is adversitie,
My frend maist thou not revin blind goddesse,
That I thy friendis knowe I thank it the.
Take 'hem again, let 'hem go lie a presse,
The nigardis in keepyng ther richeffe
Pronostike is thou wolt ther toure assaile,
Wicke appetite cometh aie before sicknesse,

Fortune.

Thou pinchist at my mutabilitie,
For I the lent a droppe of my richeffe,
And now me likith to withdrawin me,
Why shouldist thou my roialtie oppresse ?
The se maie ebbe and flowin more and lesse,
The welkin hath might to shine, rain and

The Plaintiffe.

Lo, the' execution of the majestic,
That all the purveighth of his rightwiseness,
That same thyng fortune yclepin ye,
Ye blindè bestis full of ludèness!
The heven hath prépitie of sikkirness,
This worldè hath evir restleisse travaile,
The last daie is the ende of myne entresse,
In general this rule ne mai not faile.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

Princes I prae you of your gentillesse,
Let not this man and me thus crie and plain,
And I shall quittin you this businesse,
And if ye liste releve hym of his pain,
Praie ye his best frende of his noblenesse,
That to some bettir state he may attain.

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the same time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third Book of the Fall of Princes a few stanzas are selected, which, being compared with the style of his two contemporaries will show that our Language was then not written by caprice, but was in a settled state.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on foote,
And hath none horse to releue his traouyle,
Whote, drye and wery, and may find no bote
Of wel cold whan thrust doth hym assaile,
Wine nor licour, that may to hym ausaile,
Tight to fare which in my businesse,
No succour fynde my rudenes to redresse.

I meane as thus, I have no fresh licour
Out of the conduites of Calliope,
Nor through Clio in rhetorike no flour,
In my labour for to refresh me:
Nor of the susters in nouber thirfe three,
Which with Cithera on Parnaso dwell,
They neuer gave me drink once of their wel.
Nor of theyr springes clere and cristalline,
That sprange by touchyng of the Pegale,
Their Fauour lacketh my making ten lumine
I fynde theyr bawme of so great scarcitie,
To tame their tunnes with some drop of plentie
For Poliphemus throw his great blindnes,
Hath in me derked of Argus the brightnes.

Our life here short of wit the great dulnes
The heuy soule troubled with traouyle,
And of memory the glasyng brotelhes,
Drede and vuncanning haue made a strong batail
With werines my spirits to assaile.
And with their subtil creping in most quiet
Hath made my spirit in making for to faint.

And ouermore, the ferefull trowardnes
Of my stepmother called obliuion,
Hath a bastyll of fortyetfulnes,
To stop the passage, and shadow my reason
That I might have no clere direccion,
In translating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.

Thus was I tet and stode in double werre
t the mestyng of scarcysyl wayes tweyne,

The one was this, who euer list to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me constrayne;
Bochas taccomplish for to doe my payne,
Came ignoraunce, with a menace of drede,
My penne to rest I durst not procede.

Fortescue was chief justice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471. after the battle of Tewkesbury, and probably wrote most of his works in his privacy. The following passage is selected from his book of the Difference between an absolute and limited Monarchy.

HY T may peradventure be marveld by some men, why one Realme is a Lordshyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, callid Jus Regale, and another Kyngdome is a Lordshyp, Royall and Politike, and the Prince theaetof rulyth by a Lawe, callid Jus Politicum & Regale; sythen rhes two Princes beth of egall Altate.

To this dowte it may be answerd in this manner; the first Instiutiuon of thes two Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the cause of this diversyete.

Whan Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the first Realme, and subduyd it to hymself by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accomplishment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he has thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyd to cal hym a Kyng, Quid Rex dicitur a Regendo; Whych thyng he oyd not, but oppressyd the Peopie by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Rebuthur Venator coram Deo. For as the hunter takyth the wyld beste for to sleie and eate hym; so Nembroth subduyd to him the peopie with Might, to have their service and their goods, using upon them the Lordshyp that is callid, Dominium Regale tantum. After him Belus that was callid first a Kyng, and after hym his Sonne Nynus, and after hym other Panymys; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmyns, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys been right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then most resembled to the Kingdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by his own Will. Wherefore many Crystyn Princes usen the same Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys sayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I suppose first begane in Realmys, Dominium tantum Regale. But afterward, when Man-kynd was more manufect, and better dypoyd to Vertue, Grete Communalities, as was the Felishyp, that came into this Lond with Brute, wyllyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, having an Hued to governe it; as after the Saying of the Philosopher, every Commualtie unyed of many parts muitt needs have an Hued; than they chioie the same Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Institution, and onyng of themself into a Realme, ordeynyd the same Realme so to be rulyd and justyiyd by such Lawys, as they shold assent unto; which Law therof is callid Politicum, and bycause it is mynystrid by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quasi Regimen, plurium Scientia, sive Consilio ministratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his People by this Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus saith, in his Boke de prisca Historis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the same Law, and therof the Kyng therof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Assent of his People. And in like forme as he saith is rulid the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Ethiopia; And also the more parte of all the Realmys in Afrika. Which manner of Rule and Lordship, the sayd Diodorus in that Boke, prayseth gretely, For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more sewerly do justice, than by his own Arbitriment; but it is also good for his People that receyve therby, such Justice as they desyer themself. Now as me seymeth, it ys shewyd openly ynough, why one Kyng iulyth and reynith on his People Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Desier and Institution of the People of the same Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was necessary to give a larger specimen, both because our language was then in a great degree formed and settled, and because it appears from Ben Jonson, that his works were considered as models of pure and elegant style. The tale, which is placed first, because earliest written, will show what an attentive reader will, in perusing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being disused among those classes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has suffered very little change. There is another reason why the extracts from this author are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better trusted than any other edition of the English books of that or the preceding ages.

A merry iest how a sergeaunt would learne to playe the frere. Written by maister Thomas More in hys youth.

WYSE men alway,
Affyrme and say,
That best is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The busines that he can,
And in no wyle,
To enterpryse,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no skyll,

Is neuer like to the.
He that hath laste,
The hosters crafte,
And fallett to making shone
The smythe that shall,
To payntyng fall,
His thritt is well nigh done.
A blacke draper.
With whyte paper,
To goe to writyng scole,
An olde butler,
Becum a cutler,
I wene shall proue a sole.
And an olde trot,
That can I wot,
Nothing but kyffe the cup,
With her physick,
Wil kepe one sicke,
Tyll she haue louid hym vp.
A man of lawe,
That neuer sawe.
The wayes to bye and sell.
Wenyng to ryse,
By marchaundie,
I wish to spede hym well.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll goo seke,
By all the means he may,
To fall in sute,
Tyll he dispute,
His money cleane away,
Pletying the lawe,
For every strawe,
Shall proue a thrifty man,
With bate and strife,
But by my life,
I cannot tell you whan.
Whan an hatter
Wyll go smatter,
In philokophy,
Or a pedlar,
Ware a medlar,
In theology,
All that ensue,
Such crastes new,
They diue so sarre a cast,
That euermore,
They do therefore,
Beshrewe themselfe at last.
This thing was tryed
And veretyed,
Here by a sergeaunt late,
That thrittly was,
Or he could pas,
Rapped about the pate,
Whyte that he would See how he could,
A little play the frere:
Now ys you wyll,
Knowe how it fyll,
Take hede and ye shall here.
It happed so,
Not long ago.
A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred poynde,

 Yet or this day
 I have hard ſay,
 That many a man certesse,
 Hath with good caſt,
 Be ryche at laſt,
 That hath begonne with leſſe.
 But this young mane,
 So well beganne,
 His money to employ,
 That certainly,
 His policy,
 To ſee it was a joy,
 For left ſum blaſt,

 For to put out,
 All maner dout,
 He made a good puruay,
 For euery whyt,
 By his owne wyt,
 And toke an other way ;
 Firſt fayre and wele,
 Therof much dele,
 He dygged it in a pot,
 But then him thought
 That way was nought.
 And there he left it not.
 So was he ſaine,
 From thence agayne,
 To put it in a cup,
 And by and by,
 Couctouſly,
 He ſupped it fayre up,
 In his owne beſt,
 He thought it beſt,
 His money to encloſe,
 Then wiſt he well,
 What euer fell,

 He borrowed then,
 Of other men,
 Money and marchaundife :

 There would he nedes abyde.
 There ſpent he faſt,
 Till all were paſt,
 And to him came there meny,
 To aſk theyr det,

The fergeaunt said,
 Be not afrayd,
 It shall be brought about.
 In many a game,
 Lyke to the same,
 Hauē I bene well in vre.
 And for your sake;
 Let me be lāke,
 But yf I do this cure.
 Thus part they both,
 And fourth then goth,
 A pace this officere,
 And for a day,
 All his array,
 He chaunged with a frere.
 So was he dight.
 Tha' no man might,
 Hym for a frere deny,
 He dopped and looked,
 He spake and looked,
 So religiously.
 Yet in a glasse,
 Or he would passe,
 He toted and he peered,
 His harte for pryde,
 Lepte in his syde,
 To see how well he freerck.
 Than toth a pace,
 Unto a place,
 He goth withouten shame
 To do this dede,
 But now take hede,
 For here begynneth the game.
 He drew hym ny,
 And softly,
 Streight at the dore he knocked:
 And a dam ell,
 That hard hym well,
 There came and it unlocked.
 The frere layd,
 Good spede sayre mayd,
 Here lodgeth such a man,
 It is told me:
 Well syr quoth she,
 And yf he do what than.
 Quoth he maystresse,
 No harm doutleie;
 It longeth for our order,
 To hurt no man,
 But as we can,
 Euery wight to forder.
 With hym truly,
 Fayne speake would I.
 Sir quod she by my fay,
 He is to fike,
 Ye be not like,
 To speake with hym to day.
 Quoth he fayre may,
 Yet I you pray,
 This much at my desire,
 Vouchsa'e to do,
 As go hym to,
 And say au austen frere
 Would with hym speke,
 And matters breake,
 For his auayle certayn.

Quod she I wyll,
 Stonde ye here styll,
 Till I come downe agayn.
 Vp is she go,
 And told hym so,
 As she was bode to say,
 He mistrustlyng,
 No maner thyng,
 Sayd mayden go thy way,
 And fetch him hyder,
 That we togyder,
 May talk. A downe she gothe,
 Vp she him brought,
 No harme she thought,
 But it made some folke wrothe.
 This officere,
 This fayned frere,
 When he was come aloft,
 He dopped than,
 And grete this man,
 Religiously and oft,
 And he agayn,
 Ryght glad and fayn,
 Toke him there by the hande,
 The frere than sayd,
 Ye be dismayed,
 With trouble I understande.
 In dede quod he,
 It hath with me,
 Bene better than it is.
 Syr quod the frere,
 Be of good chere,
 Yet shall it after this.
 But I would now,
 Comen with you,
 In counsaile yf you please,
 Or ellys nat
 Of matters that Shall set your heart at ease.
 Downe went the mayd,
 The marchaunt sayd,
 Now say on gentle frere,
 Of thys tydyng
 That ye me bryng,
 I long full fore to here.
 Whan there was none,
 But they alone,
 The frere with euyll grace
 Seyd, I rest the,
 Come on with me,
 And out he toke his mace:
 Thou shalt obay,
 Come on thy way,
 I have the in my clouche.
 Thou goest not hence,
 For all the pence,
 The mayre hath in his pouche.
 This marchaunt there,

 Almost in fowne,
 The frere is overthrow.
 Yet was this man,
 Well fearder than,
 Lest he the frere had slayne,
 Tyll with good rappes,
 And heauy clappes,
 He dawde hym vp agayne.
 The frere toke harte,
 And vp he starte,
 And well he layde about,
 And so there goth,
 Betwene them both,
 Many a lusty clut.
 They rent and tere
 Eche others here,
 And claue togyder fast,
 Tyll with luggyng,
 And with tuggyng,
 They fell down both at last.
 Than on the grounde,
 Togyder rounde,
 With many a sadde stroke,
 They roll and rumber,
 They turne and tumble,
 As pygges do in a poke.
 So long aboue,
 They heue and shoue,
 Togider that at last,
 The mayd and wyfe,
 To breake the strife,
 Hyed them vpward fast.
 And when they ipe,
 The captaynes lye
 Both waltring on the place,
 The freres hood,
 They pulled a good,
 Adowne about his face.
 Whyle he was bynde,
 The wenche behynde,
 Lent him leyd on the flore,
 Many a ioule,
 About the noule,
 With a great batyldore.
 The wyfe came yet,
 And with her fete,
 She holpe to kepe him downe,
 And with her rocke,
 Many a knocke,
 She gaue hym on the crowne.
 They layd his mace,
 About his face,
 That he was wood for payne.
 The frere frappe,
 Gate many a swappe,
 Tyll he was full nygh slayne.
 Vp they hym lift,
 And with yll thriit,
 Hedlyng a long the stayre,
 Downe they hym threwe,
 A fayde adewe,
 Commende us to the mayre.
 The frere arose,
 But I suppose,

Amased was his hed,
 He shoke his eares,
 And from grete feares,
 He thought hym well yfied.
 Quod he now lost,
 Is all this cost,
 We be neuer the nere.
 Ill mote he be,
 That caufed me,
 To make myself a frere.
 Now masters all,
 Here now I shall,
 Ende there as I began,
 In any wyfe,
 I would auyte,
 And counsayle euery man,
 His own craite use,
 All newe refuse,
 And lightly let them gone:
 Play not the frere,
 Now make good chere,
 And welcome euerych one.

Certain meters in English written by master Thomas More in hys youth for the boke of fortune, and caused them to be printed in the beginning of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high estate power and auctoritie,
If ye ne know, enserche and ye shall spye,

That richeffe, worship, welth, and dignitie,
Joy, rest, and peace, and all thyng fynally,
That any pleasure or profit may come by,
To manner, comfort, ayde, and sustinaunce,
Is all at my deuyse and ordinaunce.

Without my fauour there is nothing wonne.
Many a mattes haue I brought at last,
To good conclusion, that fondly was begonne.
And many a purpose, bounden sure and fast
With wile prouision, I haue ouercast.
Without good happe there may no wit suffice.
Better is to be fortunate than wyle.

And therefore hath there some men ben or this,

My deadly foes and written many a boke,
To my dyspraise. And other cause there nys,
But for me list not frendly on them loke.
Thus like the fox they fare that once forfoke,
The pleasaunt grapes, and gan for to desy them, Because he lept and yet could not come by them.

But let them write theyr labour is in vayne.
For well ye wote, myrth, honour and richeffe,
Much better is than penyur and payne.
The nedy wretch that lingereth in distresse,
Without myne helpe is euer comfortlesse

A very burden odious and loth,
To all the world, and eke to him selfe both.

But hethat by my fauour may ascende,
To mighty weale and excellent degree,
A common power to gouerne and defende,
O in how blist condicion standeth he:
Him self in honour and felicity,
And ouer, that may forther and increase,
A region hole in ioyful rest and peace.

Now in this poynt there is no more to say,
Eche man hath of him self the gouernaunce.
Let euery wight than solowe his owne way,
And he that out of pouertee or mischaunce,
Lift for to to liue, and wyll him self enhance,
In wealth and richeffe, come forth and wayte on me.

And he that wyll, be a beggar let hym be.

THOMAS MORE to them that trust in Fortune.

But this chere fayned, may not long abide.
There cometh a cloude, and farewell all our pryde.

Like any serpent the beginneth to swell,
And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell.

Yet for all that we brotle men are fayne,
(So wretched is our nature and so blynde)
As soone as Fortune list to laugh agayne,
With fayre countenance and disceitfull mynde,
To crouche and knele and gape after the wynde,

Not one or twayne but thousandes in a rout,
Lyke swarming bees come flickeryng her about.

Then as a bayte she bryngeth forth her ware,
Silver, gold, riche perle, and precious stone:
On whiche the mased people gaze and stare,
And gape therefore, as dogges do for the bone.
Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trone
Amyd her treasure and waecryng rycheffe,
Prowdly she honeth as lady and empretie.

Fast by her syde doth very labour stand,
Pale fere also, and forow all bewept,
Disdayn and hatred on the other hand,
Eke restles wachte fro slepe with trauayle kept,
His eyes drowfy and loking as he slept.
Before her standeth daunger and enuy,
Flattery, dysceyt, mischief and tiranny.

About her commeth all the world to begge.
He asketh laude, and he to pas would bryng.
This toy and that, and all not worth an egge:
He would in loue prosper above all thyng:
He kneleth downe and would be made a kyng:
He forceth not so he may money hawe,
Though all the world accompt hym for a knaue.

Lo thus ye see diuers heddes, diuers wittes.
Fortune alone as diuers as they all,
Vnstable here and there among them flittes:
And at auenture downe her giftes fall,
Catch who fo may she throweth great and small
Not to all men, as commeth sonne or dewe,
But for the most part, all among a fewe.

And yet her brotell giftes long may not last.
He that she gaue them, loketh prowde and hie.
Shh whirleth about and plucketh away as fast,
And giueth them to an other by and by.
And thus from man to man continually.
She vseth to geue and take, and slyly coffe,
One man to wyanyng of on others losse.

And when she sobbeth one, down goth his pryde.

Helpepeth and wayleth and curseth her fall fore.
But he that receueth it, on that other syde,
Is glad, and blesther her often tymes therefore.
But in a whyte when she loueth hym no more,
She glydeth from hym, and her giftes to,
And he her curseth, as other foolles do.

Alas the folysh people can not cease,
No voyd her trayne, tyll they the harme do sele.
About her alway, betely they preace.
But lord how he doth thynk hym selfe full wele,
That may set once his hande vpon her whele.
He holdeth fast: but upward as he flieth,
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.

Thus fell Julius from his mighty power.
Thus felt Darius the worthy kyng of Perse.
Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.
Thus many mo then I may well reherie.
Thus double fortune, when the lyst reuerse
Her slipper sauour fro them that in her trust,
She fleeth her wey and leyeth them in the dust.
She sodenly enhaunceth them aloft.

And sodenly miicheueth all the flocke.
The head that late lay easily and full soft,
In stede of pylows lyeth after on the blocke.
And yet alas the most cruell proude mocke:
The deynyt mowth that ladyes kissed haue,
She bryngeth in the case to kyse a knaue.

In chaunging of her courle, the chaunge
fleeth this, [knight,

Vp stath a knaue, and downe there salth a
The beggar ryche, and the ryche man poore is;
Hatred is turned to loue, loue to dellyght.
This is her sport, thus proueth she her myght.
Great bolte the maketh yf one be by her power,
Welthy and wretched both within an howre.

Pouertee that of her giftes wyl nothing take,
Wyth mery chere, looketh vpon the prece,
And seeth how fortunes household goeth to wrake.
First by her standeth the wyse Socrates,
Arrihippus, Pythagoras, and many a lese,
Of olde philosphers. And eke agaynst the sonne

Bekyth hym poore Diogenes in his tone.

With her is Byas, whose country lackt defence,

And whylom of their foes stode so in dout,
That eche man hastily gan to carry thence,
And asked hym why he nought carued out.
I here quod be all myne with me about:
Wisdom he ment, not fortunes brotle fees:
For nought he counted his that he might leefe.

Heracilius eke, lyst felowship to kepe
With glad pouertee, Democritus also:
Of which the fyrst can neuer cease but wepe,
To see how thicke the blinded people go,
With labour great to purchace care and wo.
That other laugheth to see thee foolysh aper,
How earnestly they walk about theyr capes.

Of this poore sect, it is comen vlage,
Onely to take that nature may sustayne,
Banishing cleane all other surpluseage,
They be content, and of nothing complayne,
No nygarde eke is of his good so fayne.
But they more pleasure haue a thousande solde,
The secret draughts of nature to beholde.

Set fortunes tervantes by them and ye wuil,
That one is free, the other euer thrall,
That one content, that other neuer full.
That one in sureyte, that other like to fall.
Who lyst to aduise them both, parceyve he shall,

As great difference between them as we see,
Betwixe wretchednes and felicite.

Nowe haue I shewed you bothe: these whiche ye lyst.

Stately fortune, or humble pouertee:
That is to say, nowe lyeth it in your syst,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.

But

THE HISTORY OF THE

But in thys poynthe and ye do after me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to please,
If that ye thynk your selfe to well at ease.

And fyrst vpon the louely shall the smile,
And frendly on the cast her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a while,
Put the and kepe the in a foolles paradise:
And fourth with all what so thou lyst deuise,
She will the graunt it I berally pashappes:
But for all that beware of after clappes.

Recken you neuer of her fauoure sure:
Ye may in cloudes as easly trace an hare,
Or in dry lande cause fishes to endure,
And make the burnyng fyre his heate to spare,
And all thys worlde in compace to forsare,
As her to make by craft or engine stable,
That of her nature is ever variable.

Serue her day and nyght as reuerently,
Vpon thy knees as any seruant may,
And in conclusion, that thou shalt winne thereby
Shall not be worth thy seruyce I dare say.
And looke yet what she geueth the to day,
With labour wonne she shall haply to morrow,
Pluck it agayne out of thine hand with sorrow.

Wherefore ys thou in suretye lyst to stande,
Take pouerties parte and let proude fortune go,
Receyue nothing that commeth from her hande.
Loue maner and vertue: they be onely tho,
Whiche double fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayst thou boldly desye her turnyng
chaunce:

She can the neyther hynder nor ausunce.

But and thou wykt nedes medle with her treasure,

Trust not therein, and spende it liberally.

Bear the not proude, nor take not out of measure,

Bylde not thine house on heyth vp in the skye.
None falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye,
Remember nature sent the hyther bare,
The gyktes of fortune couunt them borrowed ware.

THOMAS MORE to them that seke Fortune.

WHO so delyteth to prouen and assay,
Of waveryng fortune the vncertayne lot,
If that the aunswere please you not alway,
Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not,
Fortune to trust, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fit,
She renneth loose, and turneth where she lyst.

The rolling dyie in whome your lucke doth stande,

With whose vnhappy chaunce ye be so wroth,
Ye knowe your selfe came neuer in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be sythe and frogges both Cast in your nette: but be you liete or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyst allyne:
For it is your own fishyng and not myne.

And though in one chaunge tortune you offend,

Grudge not there at, but beare a merry face.
In many an other she shall it amende.

'T here is no manne so farre out of her grace,

But he sometyme hath comfort and solace:
Ne none agayne so farre fourth in her fauour,
That is full satisfiued with her behauiour.

Fortune is stately, solemne, proude, and hye:
And rycheffe geueth, to have seruyce therefore.

The nedey begger catcheth an halspeny:
Some manne a thousande pound, some lesse some more.

But for all that she kepeth euer in store,
From euery manne some parcell of his wyll,
That he may pray therefore and serue her still.

Some manne hath good, but chyl dren hath he none
Some man hath both, but he can get none health.

Some hath all thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can he not crepe, by no manner of stelh.
To some she sendeth, children, ryches, wealthe,
Honour, woorthyp, and reuerence all hys lyfe:
But yet the pyncheth hym with a shrewde wife.

Then for a much as it is fortunes gysfe,
To graunt no manne all thyng that he wyll axe,
But as her selfe lyst order and deuise,
Doth euery manne his part diuide and tax,
I counsaile you eche one truste vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With such rewarde as fortune hath you sent.

All thynges in this boke that ye shall rede,
Doe as ye lyst, there shall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as surely as your crede,
But notwithstanding certes in my mynde,
I durst well swere, as true ye shall them synde,
In euery poynthe eche answere by and by,
As are the iudgementes of astronomye.

The Description of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the thirde sonne, of whom we knowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and pro-wesse farre vnder them bothe, little of stature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left shoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of visage, and such as is in states called warlye, in other menne orherwise, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, ever froworde. It is for trouthe reported, that the duches his mother had so much a doe in her trauaile, that shee coulde not bee de-liuered of hym vncutte: and that hee came into the world with his feete forwarde, as menne bee borne outwarde, and as the same runneth, also not untothed, whether menne of hatred reporte aboute the trouthe, or elles that nature changed her course in hys beginninge, whiche in the course of his lyle many things unnaturallye committed. None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his disposition was more merely than for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and sometyme ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne parsonne, either of hardinesse or polytike order, free was hee called of dyspence, and somewhat aboute hys power

power liberall, with large giftes hee get him vnitedfaſte frendſhippe, for whiche hee was faine to pil and ſpoyle in other places, and get him ſtedfaſt hatred. Hee was cloſe and ſecrete, a deepe diſſimuler, lowlye of countenance, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumpinable where he inwardly hated, not letting to kiſſe whome hee thoughte to kyl: diſpitiouſ and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after ambition, and either for the ſuretie or encrease of his eſtate. Frende and foo was muche what indifferent, where his aduantage grew, he ſpared no mans deathe, whose life withſtoode his purpoſe. He ſlewe with his owne handes king Henry the ſixt, being priſoner in the Tower, as menne conſtantly ſaye, and that without commaundement or knowlege of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had intended that thinne, haue appointed that boocherly office, to ſome other then his owne borne brother.

Somme wile menne alſo weene, that his drift covertly conuayde, lacked not in helping furth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee reſiſted openly, howbeit ſomewhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartely minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, think that he long time in king Edwardes life, forthought to be king in that caſe the king his brother (whose life hee looked that euill dyete ſhoulde ſhorten) ſhoulde happen to deceaſe (as in dede hee did) while his children wer yonge. And thei deme, that for thys intente he was gladd of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whose life muſt nedes haue hindered hym ſo endenyng, whither the ſame duke of Clarence badde kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterprised to be kyng himſelfe. But of al this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whoſo diuineſh vpon coniectures, maye as wel thote to ſarre as to thort. How bet this haue I by credible informacion learned, that the ſelſe nighte in whiche kyng Edwarde died, one M. Rylebrooke longe ere mornynge, came in great haite to the houſe of one Pottyer dwelling in Reddecroſſe ſtreete without Crepulgate: and when he was with haltye rappynge quickly letten in, hee ſhewed vnto Pottyer that kyng Edwarde was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottyer then wylly my ayter the duke of Glouceſter be kyng. What cauſe hee hadde ſo to thinke harde it is to ſaye, whyther hee being toward him, anye thinge knewe that hee ſuche thinge purpoſed, or otherwyſe had anye inkelyng thereof: for hee was not likelie to ſpeake it of thoughte.

But nowe to returne to the courſe of this hystorie, were it that the duke of Glouceſter badde of old foreminded this concluſion, or was moue at erite thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occaſion of the tender age of the younge prince, his nephew (as opportunitye and lykelyhoode of ſpede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer intended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr deſtruction, with the viſpacion of the regal dignitee vpon himſelfe.

And for as muche as hee well wiſſe and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennyng betwene the quenes kiared and the kinges blood eyther partye enuyng others authoritee, hee nowe thought that their deuſion ſhoulde be (as it was in dede) a fartherlye begynnyng to the purſuite of his intente, and a ſure ground for the foundation of al his buildinge yf he mighte ſtrite vnder the pretext of reuengynge of olde diſpleaſure, abuſe the anger and ygnorance of the tone partie, to the deſtruction of the tother: and then wyne to his purpoſe as manye as he coulde: and thoſe that coulde not be wonne, myght be loſte ere they looked therefore. For of one thinge was hee certayne, that if his entente wer perceiued, he ſhoulde ſo ne haue made peace betwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kyng Edwarde in his life, albeit that this diſcencion betwene hys frendes ſomewhat yrked hym: yet in his good health he ſomewhat the leſſe regarded it, becauſe hee thought whatſoeuer buſines ſhoulde falle betwene them hymſelfe ſhoulde alwaye be hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his laſt ſickneſſe, when he perceiued his naturall ſtrengthe ſoo ſore enfebled, that hee dyſpayred all recouerye, then hee conſydeyng the youthe of his chyldren, albeit hee nothyng leſſe miſtruſted then that that happened, yet well forſeyng that manye harmes myghte growe by their debate, whyle the youth of hys chyldren ſhoulde lacke diſcretion of themſelf and good counſayle, of their frendes, of whiche either party ſhoulde counſayle for their owne commodity and rather by pleaſaunte aduſe too wyne themſelſe fauour, then by profitable aduertifement to do the children good, he called ſome of them before him that were at variaunce, and in eſpeccyall the lorde marques Dorſette the quenes ſonne by her fyrſte houſebande, and Richarde the lorde Haſtyngs, a noble man, than lorde chamberlayne agayne whome the quene ſpeciallye grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and alſo for that ſhee thoughte hym ſecretelye familer with the kyng in wanton compaignye. Her kynred alſo bare hym ſore, as well for that the kyng hadde made hym captayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryuers brother to the quene claimed of the kinges former promyſe as for diuerſe other great giftes whiche hee receyued, that they looked for. When theſe lordes with diuerſe other of bothe the parties wer come in preſence, the kyng I ſinge vpp himſelfe and vnderſette with pilowes, as it is reported on this wyſe ſayd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinſmenne and allies, in what plighte I lye you ſee, and I feele. By whiche the leſſe whyle I looke to lye with you, the more depeyle am I moued to care in what caſe I leaue you, for ſuch as I leaue you, ſuche be my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they ſhoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at variaunce, myghte happe to fall themſelſe at warre ere their diſcretion would ſerue to ſette

THE HISTORY OF THE

you at peace. Ye se their youthe, of whiche I reckon the onely suretie to reste in youre concord. For it suffieth not that al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other. If they wer menne, your faithfulnesse happelye wou'de suffice. But childehood must be maintained by mens authoritye, and slipper youth vnderpropped with elder counaile, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche laboureth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of ech of others pason, impugreth eche others counsaile, there must it nedes bee long ere any good conclusion goe forwaide. And also while either partye laboureth to be chiefe, flattery shall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduise, of whiche muste aceede ensue the euill bringing vppe of the prynce, whose mynd in tender youth inuest, shall redily fall to mischief and riot, and drawe down with this noble realme to ruine, but if grace turn him to wisdom: which if God send, then thei that by euill menes before pleased him best, shal after fall farthest out of fauour, so that euer at length euil driites diewe to nought, and good plain wayes prosper. Great variance hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great causes. Sometime a thing right well intended, our misconstruccion turneth vnto worse or a smal displeasure done vs, eyther ovr owne affection or euil tongues agreueth. But this wote I well ye neuer had so great cause of hatred, as ye haue of loue. That we be al men, that we be christen men, this shall I leaue for preachers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any preachers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gooying to the place that thei all preache of.) But this shal I desire you to remember, that the one parte of yow is of my bloode, the other of myne allies, and eche of yow with other, eyther of kindred or affinitie, whiche spirytuall kynred of affynity, if the sacramentes of Christes church, beare that weyght with vs that wou'de Godde thei did, shoulke no lesse moue us to charitye, then the respecte of fleshye consanguinitye. Oure Lord sebydde, that you loue together the worse, for the selue cause that you ought to loue the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where fynde were so deadlye debate, as among them, whiche by nature and lawe molte ought to agree together. Suche a pestilente ierpente is ambicion and desyre of vaine glorye and feuraintye, whiche among states wher he once entreth crepeth loorth so farre, tyll with deuision and variance hee turneth all to mischief. Firste longing to be nexte the best, afterwaide egall with the beste, and at laste chiete and aboute the beste. Of which immoderate appetite of woorship, and thereby of debate and dissencion what lesse, what sorrowe, what trouble hath within these fewe yeares growen in this realme, I praye Godde as well forgeate as we well remember.

Whiche thinges yf I cou'de as well haue

forseene, as I haue with my more payne then pleasure proued, by Goddes blessed Ladie (that was euer his othe) I wou'de neuer haue won the coortseye of mennes knee, with the losse of soo many heades. But sithen thynges passed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte we the more beware, by what occasion we haue taken foo greate hurte alore, that we esteoones fall not in that occasion agayne. Nowe be those griefes passed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and likeliie righte wel to prosper in wealthfull peace vnder your coseyns my children, if Godde sende them life and you loue. Of whiche twoo thinges, the lesse losse wer they by whome thoughe Godde didde hys pleasure, yet shou'de the realme alway fynde kinges and peradventure as good kinges. But yf you among youre selfe in a childes reygne fall at debate, many a good man shall perishe and hapely he to, and ye to, ere thys land fynde peace again. Wherefore in these last wordes that euer I looke to speak with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the love that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forwaide, all grieues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye truste you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitie or kined, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne surety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to sitte vp, laide him down on his right side, his face towards them: and none was there present that cou'de refrain from weeping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they cou'd, and answering for the time as thei thought to stand with his pleasure, there in his presence (as by their wordes appered ech forgave other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appeared by their dedies) their hearts were far a sonder. As sone as the king was departed, the noble prince his sonne drew toward London, which at the time of his decease, kept his houshold at Ludlow in Wales. Which countrey being far of from the law and recourse to iustice, was begon to be farre out of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and rioters walking at libertie vncorrected. And for this encheason the prince was in the life of his father sent thither, to the end that the authoritie of his presence, shoulde refraine euill disposed parsons from the boldnes of their former ouerages, to the gouernance and ordering of this yong prince at his sending thither, was there appointed Sir Antony Wodvile lord Riuer and brother vnto the queene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counsaile. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the same partie, and in effect euery one as he was nerest of kin vnto the queene, so was planted next about the prince. That driite by the queene not vnwisely deuised, whereby her bloode mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauor, the duke of Gloucester turned vnto their destruccion, and vpon that grounde set the foundacion of all his unhappy building.

building. For whom sooner he perceived, either at variance with them, or bearing himself their fauor, hee brake vnto them, some by mouth, som by writing and secret messengers, that it neyther was reason nor in any wise to be suffered, that the yong king their master and kinsmanne, should be in the handes and custodie of his mothers kinred, sequestred in maner from their compani and attendance, of which eueri one ought him as faithful seruaice as they, and manye of them. far more honorable part of kin then his mothers side: whose blood (quod he) sawing the kinges pleasure, was ful vnmetely to be matched with his: whiche nowe to be as who say remoued from the kyng, and the lesse noble to be left aboute him, is (quod he) neither honorable to hys maggettie, nor vnto vs, and alio to his grace no surety to haue the mightiest of his frendes from him, and vnto vs no litle ieopardy, to suffer our welproued euil willers, to grow in ouergret authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is lighte of beliefe and sone perswaded. Ye remember I trow king Edward himself, albeit he was a manne of age and of discrecion, yet was he in many thynges ruled by the bende, more then stode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except onely the immoderate advancement of them selfe. Which whither they sorer thirsted after their own weale, or our woe, it wer hard I wene to gesse. And if some folkes friendship had not holden better place with the king, then any respect of kindred, they might peraduenture easily haue be trapped and brought to confusion somme of vs ere this. Why not as easily as they haue done some other alreadye, as nere of his royal bloode as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanks be to his grace that peril is past. How be it as great is growing, yt we suffer this yonge kyng in our enemyes hande, whiche without his wytyng, might abuse the name of his commendement, to ani of our vndoing, which thyng God and good prouision forbyd. Of which good prouision none of us hath any thing the lesse nede, for the late made attonement, in whiche the kinges pleasure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of vs I belieue is so vnwylye, ouerfune to truste a newe frende made of an old foe, or to think that an hoerly kindnes, sodainely contract in one houre continued, yet scant a fortnight, should be deper fetled in their stomackes: then a long accustomed malice many yeres rooted.

With these wordes and writynges and suche other, the duke of Gloucester lone set a fyre, them that were of themself ethe to kindle, and in speciall twayne, Edward duke of Buckyngham, and Richarde lorde Hastings and chaumberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The one by longe succession from his ancestorie, the tother by his office and the kinges fauor. These two not bearing ethe to other so muche loue, as hatred bothe vnto the quenes parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Gloucester, that they wolde vtterlye amoue fro the kynes companie, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Gloucester understanding, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were about the kyng, entended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accompanied with suche power of their frendes, that it should bee harde for hym to brynge his purpose to passe, without the gathering and great assemble of people and in maner of open warre, whereof the end he wiste was doubtuous, and in which the kyng being on their side, his part should haue the face and name of a rebellion: he secretly therefore by driuers meanes, caused the quene to be perswaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and alio shold be ieopardous, the king to come vp strong. For where as nowe euey lorde loued other, and none other thing studyed vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honoure of the king: if the lordes of her kindred shold assemble in the kinges name muche people, they should geue the lordes atwixte whome and them hadde bene summetynne debate, to feare and suspecte, lest they should gather thys people, not for the kynes sauegarde whom no man enpugned, but for their destruccion, hauyng more regarde to their olde variaunce, then their newe attonement. For whiche cause they should assemble on the other partie much people agayne for their defence, whose power she wyste wel farre stretched. And thus should all the realme fall on a rore. And of all the hurte that therof shoud ensue, which was like'y not to be litle, and the most harme there like to fall where the left would, all the worlde woulde put her and her hindred in the wyght, and say that they had vnwylye and untrewlye also, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng her husband so prudentlye made betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obserued.

The quene being in this wise perswaded, suche woorde sent vnto her sonne, and vnto her brother being aboute the kyng, and ouer that the duke of Gloucester hys selfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wrote vnto the kyng so reuerentlye, and to the quenes tendes, there foo louyngelye, that they nothyng earthelye mystruynge, broughte the kyng vppe in great halte, not in good spede, with a sober companie. Nowe was the king in his way: to London gone, from Northampton, when these dukes of Gloucester and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lord Ryuers the kynes vacle, entending on the morrowe to folow the kyng, and bee with hym at Stony Stratford miles thence earely or hee departed. So was there made that nyght much friendly chere betwene these dukes and the lorde Rivers a greate while. But incontinente after that they were openlye with greate courtesye departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes secretlye with a fewe of their most priuie frendes, sette them downe in counsaile, wherein they spent a great parte of the nyght. And at their risinge in the dawninge of the day, they sent about priuily, to their seruantes in their innes and lodgyngs about, geuinge them commaundement to make them felie shortlye readye, for their lordes wer to horsebackward vpon whiche messages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lord Riuers seruantes were vnreadye. Now hadde these dukes taken also into their custodye the keyes of the inne, that none should passe forth without theyr licence.

And ouer this in the hyghe waye towardes Stonye Stratforde where the kynge laye, they hadde bestowen certayne of theyr folke, that shoulde fendre backe agayne, and compell to retourne, any manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stony Stratforde, tyll they shoulde geue other licence. For as muche as the dukes themsel' e entended for the shewe of theire dylygence, to be the fyfste that shoulde that daye attende vpon the kynges highnesse oute of that towne: thus bare they folke in hande. But when the lorde Riuers vnderstode the gates closed, and the wayes on euery side belette, neyther hys seruantes nor hymself suffered to go oute, parciuyng well so greate a thyng without his knowledg not begun for nough'e, comparing this maner present with this last nightes chere, in so fewe hours so gret a chaunge maruelouslye mistaked. How be it siche hee coulde not geat awaye, and keepe himselfe close, hee woulde not, lette he shoulde seeme to hyde himselfe for some secret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he saw no such cause in hym self: he determined vpon the furetie of his own conscience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what thys matter myghte meane. Whome as soone as they sawe, they beganne to quarrell with hym, and saye, that hee intended to sette distaunce betweene the kynge and them, and to bryng them to confusio, but it shoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee beganne (as hee was a very well spoken manne) in goodly wyse to excuse himselfe, they taryed not the ende of his aunswere, but shortlye tooke him and putte him in warde, and that done, forthwith wente to horsebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kynge with his companie readye to leape on horsebacke, and depart forwarde, to leaue that lodging for them, because it was to streighte for bothe companies. And as soone as they came in his presence, they lighte adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckyngham saide, gre afore gentlemenne and yeomen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly araye, they came to the kynge, and on their knees in very humble wyse, saluted his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthiye knowinge

nor mistrustinge as yet. But euen by and by in his presence they picked a quarrell to the lorde Richard Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, sayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Riuers his vncl, hadde coupailed to rule the kinge and the realme, and to set'e variaunce among the states, and to sublewe and destroye the noble blood of the realme. Toward the accoumpting wherof, they sayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kynges treasor, and sent menne to the sea. All whiche thynges these dukes wiste well were done for good purposes and necessari by the whole counsaile at London, sauing that somewhat they must sai. Vnto whiche wordes, the king answered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot saie. But in good faith I dare well aunswere for myne vncl Riuers and my brother here, that they be innocent of any such matters. Ye my liege quod the duke of Buckyngham they haue kepte theire dealing in these matters farre fro the knowledg of your good grace. And forthwith they arrested the lorde Richard and Sir Thomas Vaughan, knyghte, in the kynges presence, and broughte the king and alle backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke agayne further counsaile. And there they sent awaie from the kinge whom it pleased them, and sette newe seruantes aboute him, suche as lyked better them than him. At whiche dealinge hee wepte and was nothinge contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Gloucester sente a dishe from his owne table to the lord Riuers, prayinge him to be of good chere, all should be well inough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the messenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Richard with the same message for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of comfort, asone to whom such aduersitie was straunge. But himself had been at his days in vre therewith, and therefore coulde beare it the better. But for al this comfortable courtesye of the duke of Gloucester, he sent the lord Riuers and the lorde Richard with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe countrey into diuers places to prison, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in conclusion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir THOMAS MORE to hys daughter maistres MARGARET ROBER, within a whyle after he was prisoner in the Towre.

MYNE own good daughter, our lorde be thanked I am in good helthe of bodye, and in good quiet of mind: and of worldly thynges I no more desyer then I haue. I besefche hym make you all merry in the hope of heauen. And such thynges as I somewhat longed to talke with you all concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put them into your myndes, as I truite he dothe and better to by hys holy spirite: who blesse you and preferue you all. Two short ballettes which Sir THOMAS MORE made for hys pastime while he was prisoner in the Tower of London.

LEWYS the lost lover.

EY flatering fortune, loke thou neuer so fayre,
Or neuer so pleasantly begin to smile.
As though thou wouldst my ruine all repayre,
During my life thou shalt me not beguile.
Trust shall I God, to entre in a while.
Hys haueu or heauen sure and vnforme.
Euer aiter thy calme, loke I for a storme.

DAUW the dyer.

LONG was I lady Lucke your seruing man,
And now haue lost agayne all that I gat,
Wherefore when I thinke on you nowe and than,
And in my mynde remember this and that,
Ye may not blame me though I besrew your cat,

But in fayth I blesse you agayne a thousand times,
For lending me now some layture to make rymes.

At the same time with Sir Thomas More, lived Skelton, the poet laureate of Henry VIII. from whose works it seems proper to insert a few stanzas, though he cannot be said to have attained great elegance of language.

The prologue to the Bouge of Courte.

IN Autumpne whan the sonne in vyrgyne
By radiant hete enryped hath our corne
When Luna full of mutabylyte
As Emperes the dyademe hath worne
Of our pole artyke, saylyng halfe in scorne
At our foly, and our vntedfastnesse
The time whan Mars to warre hym dyd dres,

I callynge to mynde the greate auctoryte
Of poetes olde, whiche full craftly
Vnder as couerte termes as coulde be
Can touche a trowth, and cloke subtylly
With freshe vtterance full sentencyously
Dyuerse in style some spared not vyce to wryte
Some of mortalitie nobly dyd endyte

Whereby I rede, theyr renome and theyr fame
Maye neuer dye, but euermore endure
I was fore moued to a forse the same
But ignorance full soone dyde me dyscure
And shewed that in this arte I was not sure
For to illumine we sayd I was to dulle
Aduylyng me my penne awaye to pulle

And not to wryte, for he so wyll atteyne Excedyng farther than his counynge is
His heed may be harde, but feble is brayne
Yet haue I knowen sliche er this
But of reproche iurely he may not mys

That clymmeth hyer than he may fotinge haue
What an he flyde downe, who shall him saue?

Thus vp and downe my myde was drawen and cast

That I ne wytte what to do was beste
So sore enwered that I was at the laite
Enriord to slepe, and for to take some reste
And to lye downe as soone as I my drette
At Harwyche porte slumbryng as I laye
In myne hostes house called powers keye.

Of the wits that flourished in the reign of Henry VIII. none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of Surry, and this history would therefore have been imperfect without some specimens of his works, which yet it is not easy to distinguish from those of Sir Thomas Wyatt and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands. The three first are, I believe, Surry's; the rest, being of the same age, are selected, some as examples of different measures, and one as the oldest composition which I have found in blank verse.

Description of Spring, wherein eche thing renews, save only the lover.

THE soore season that bud, and bloome fourth brings,
With grene hath cladde the hyll, and eke the vale,

The Nightingall with fethers new she singes;
The turtle to her mate hath told her tale:
Somers is come, for every spray now springes.
The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake hys winter coate he flynges;
The fishes flete with newe repayred scale:
The adder all her slough away she flynges,
The twit i swallow pursueth the flies smalle,
The busy bee her honey how the mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I see among these pleasant thynges
Eche care decayes, and yet my sorrow springes.

Description of the restless estate of a lover.

WHEN youth had led me half the race,
That Cupides scourge had made me runne;

I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary course begunne:

And when I saw howe my delyre
Misguiding me had led the waye,
Myne eyne to gredy of theyre hyre,
Had made me lose a better prey.

For when in lighes I spent the day,
And could not cloake my grief with game;
The boylng smoke dyd still bewray,
The present heat of secret flame:

And when salt teares do bayne my breast,
Where love his pleasant traynes hath sowne,
Her beauty hath the fruytes opprest,
Ere that the budde were spronge and blowne.

And when myne eyen dyd still pursue,
The flying chaire of theyre request;

Theyre

THE HISTORY OF THE

Theyre greedy looks dyd oft renew,
The hydden wounde within my breste.

When every loke these cheeks might stayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red :
By outward signes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my hart was fled.

But all to late Love learneth me,
To paynt all kind of Colours new :
To blynd theyre eyes that elle should see
My speckled cheeks with Cupids hew.

And now the covert brest I claime,
That worshipt Cupide secretly ;
And nourished hys sacred flame,
From whence no blairing sparks do flye.

Descrpcion of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleightes of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that most part in discord
Our willes do stand, whereby our hates but fel-dom do accord :

Decyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The simple hartes which he doth strike with froward divers stroke.

He catcheth th' one to rage with golden burning darte,

And doth alay with Leaden cold, again the others harte.

Whose glames of burning fyre and easy sparkes of flame,

In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame

From easye ford where I myghte wade and pass full well,

He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a depe dark hell :

And me withholdes where I am calde and offred
place,

And willes me that my mortal foe I do beseke of Grace ;

He lettes me to pursue a conquest welnere wonne
To follow where my paynes were lost, ere that my fute begunne.

So by this means I know how soon a hart may turne

From warre to peace, from truce to stryfe, and to agayne returne.

I know how to content my self in others lust,
Of little stufte unto my self to weave a webbe of truit :

And how to hyde my harmes with sole dyssem-bling chere,

When in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare

I know how that the blood forsakes the face for dred,

And how by shame it staynes agayne the Chckes with flaming red :

I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he lurkes ;

The hammer of the restless forge I wote eke
how it workes.

I knowe and con by roate the tale that I woulde tell

But ofte the woordes come fourth awrye of him that loveth well.

I know in heate and cold the Lover how he shakes,

In synging how he doth complayne, in sleeping
how he wakes

To languish without ache, sickelesse for to comsume,

A thousand thynges for to devyse, resolvyng of his sume ;

And though he lyste to see his Ladyes Grace full
fore

Such pleasures as delyght hys Eye, do not his health restore,

I know to seke the tracte of my desired foe,
And here to fynde that I do seek, but chiefly this
I know,

That Lovers must transfourme into the thyng beloved,

And live (alas ! who would believe ?) with sprite from Lyfe removed.

I knowe in hartly sighes and laughers of the spleene,

At once to change my state, my will, and eke
my colour clene.

I know how to deceyve my self wythe others
helpe,

And how the Lyon chastised is, by beatyng of the whelpe.

In standyng nere the fyre, I know how that I fresle ;

Farre of I burne, in bothe I waste, and so my Lyfe I leefe.

I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde,

How smalle a nete may take and make a harte of gentle kinde :

Or else with seldom swete to season hopes of gall, Revived with a glymple of Grace old sorrowes to let fall.

The hydden traynes I know, and secret snares of love.

How soone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove.

The sllyper state I know, the sodein turnes from welthe

The doubtful hope, the certaine woode, and sure despaired helthe.

A praise of his ladie.

GIVE place you ladies and be gone,
Boait not your selves at all,
For here at hande approacheth one,
Whose face will stayne you all.

The vertue of her lively lookes
Excels the precious stone,
I withe to have none other books
To rede or look upon.

In eche of her two chrifall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy ;
It would you all in heart suffise
To see that lampe of joye.

I think nature hath lost the moule,
Where the her shape did take ;
Or else I doute if nature coulede
So sayre a creature make

She may be well comparde
Unto the Phenix kinde,

The Death of ZOROAS, an Egiptian astronomer, in the first fight that Alexander had with the Persiana.

NOW clattering armes, now raging broyls of warre,
Gan passe the noys of dreadfull trumpetts clang, Shrowded with shafts, the heaven with cloude of dartes,

Covered the ayre. Against full fatted bulles,
As forceth kyndled yre the Lyons keene,
Whole greedy guts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons against the Persians fare,
Now corpes hyde the purpurde soyle with blood;
Large slaughter on eche side, but Perfes more,
Moylt fields bebled, theyr hearts and numbers

Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.
The liting Macedon by swords, by gleaves,
By bands and troupes of footmen, with his garde.
Speedes to Dary, but hym his merest kyn,

Oxate preserues with horsemen on a plampe
Before his carr, that none his charge should give.
Here grunts, here groans, eche where strong youth is spent:

Shaking her bloody hands, Bellone among
The Perfes soweth all kinds of cruel death:
With throte yent he roares, he lyeth along
His entrailes with a launce through gryded quyte,
Hym smythes the club, hym woundes iarre stryking

And him the sling, and him the shining sword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he rests.
Right over stode in snowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cuynying clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
And in celestiall bodies he could tell
The moving meeting light, aspect, eclips,
And influence, and constellations all;
What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of plenty storde, what singe forewarned death,
How winter gendreth snow, what temperature
In the prime tyde doth season well the soyle,
Why summer burnes, why autumn bath ripe

Whither the circle quadrate may become,
Whither our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themselves how great

Of his right hand desirous to be slain,
The bouidest borne, and worthiest in the feilde;
And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And seeking death, in fyrst front of his rage,
Comes desperately to Alexandars face,
At him with dartes one after other throws,
With recklesseworde and clamour him provoker,
And sayth, Nestanacks bastard shamefull stayne
Of mothers bed, why loiest thou thy strokes,
Cowardes among, I urn thee to me, in case
Manhood there be so much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare

THE HISTORY OF THE

My sword shall never bruise that skilfull brayce,
 Long gather'd heapes of science sone to spill;
 O how sayre fruites may you to mortall men
 From Wisdoms garden give; how many may
 By you the wifer and the better prove:
 What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
 Perswades to be downe, sent to depe Auerne,
 Where no artes flourish, nor no knowledge vailes
 For all the'th' sawes. When thus the soveraign said,

Alighted Zoroas with sword unsheathed,
 The careles king there smote above the greve,
 At th' opening of his quilles wounded him,
 So that the blood down trailed on the ground:
 The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gashe,
 But yet his mynde he bent in any wise
 Hym to forbear, sett spurrs unto his stede,
 And turnde away, lest anger of his smarte
 Shoulde cause revenger hand deale baleful blowes.
 But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
 One Melager could not bear this sight,
 But ran upon the said Egyptian rude,
 And cutt him in both knees: he fell to ground,
 Wherewith a whole rout came of souldiours
 And all in pieces hewed the sely seg, [strae,
 But happily the soule fled to the starres,
 Where, under him, he hath full sight of all,
 Wherat he gazed here with reaching looke.
 The Persians waild such spience to forgoe,
 The very sone the Macedonians wisht
 He would have lived, king Alexander selfe
 Demde him a man unmete to dye at all;
 Who wonne like prais for conquest of his Yre,
 As for stoute men in field that day subdued,
 Who princes taught how to discern a man,
 That in his head is rare a jewel beares,
 But over all these same Camenes, those same,
 Divine Camenes, whose honour be procure,
 A tender parent doth his daughters weale,
 Lamented, and for thanks, all that they can,
 Do cherish hym deceall, and sett him free,
 From dark oblivion of devouring death.

Barclay wrote about 1550; his chief work is the Ship of Fools, of which the following extract will shew his style.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and false Accusers.

O Heartless fooles, haste here to our doctrine,
 Leave off the wayes of your enormitie,
 Enforce you to my preceptes to incline,
 For here shall I shewe you good and vertie:
 Encline, and ye shal shall great prosperitie,
 Ensiuing the doctrines of our fathers olde,
 And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.

Who that will followe the graces many olde
 Which are in vertue, shall find auancement:
 Wherefore ye fooles that in your sinne are bolde,
 Ensiue ye wisdome, and leaue your lewde intent,
 Wisdome is the way of men most excellent:
 Therefore haue done, and shortly speede your pace,
 To quaynt yourselfe and company with grace.

Learn what is virtue, therein is great solace,
 Learn what is truth, fadaes and prudence,
 Let gruche be gone, and grauitie purchase,
 Forcye your folly and inconuenience,

Cease to be fooles, and ay to sue offence,
 Followe ye virtue, chief roote of godlynes
 For it and wiledome is ground of clenlynes.

Wisdome and virtue twothings are doubtles,
 Whiche man endueth with honour speciall,
 But such heartes as slepe in foolishnes
 Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all;
 But in this little barge in principall
 All foolish mockers I purpose to reпре,
 Clawe he his backe that seeleth itchte or greue.

Mockers and scorners that are harde of beleue,
 With a rough combe here will I clawe and grate,
 To proue if they will from their vice remeue,
 And leaue their folly, which causeth great debate: [estate,

Suche caytives spare neyther poore man nor
 And where their selte are moste worthy derision,
 Other men to scorne is all their most condition.

Yet are mo fooles of this abuson,
 Whiche of wise men despiseth the doctrine,
 With mowes, mockes, scorne, and collusion,
 Rewarding rebukes for their good discipline:
 Shewe to suche wiledome, yet shall they not encline.

Unto the same, but set nothing thereby,
 But mocke thy doctrine, still or openly.

So in the worlde it appeareth commonly.
 That who that will a foole rebuke or blame,
 A mocke or mowe shall he haue by and by:
 Thus in derision haue fooles their speciall game.
 Correct a wise man that woulde chuse ill name.
 And sayne would learne, and his lewde life amende,

And to thy wordes he gladly shall intende.

If by misfortune a rightwise man offense,
 He gladly suffereth a iuste correction,
 And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
 Him selte putting mekely unto subiection,
 Following his preceptes and good direction.
 But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
 He shall his teacher hate, slander and diffame.

Howbeit his wordes oit turne to his owne shame.

And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
 And so is he fore wounded with the same,
 And in wo endeth, great misery and payne.
 It also proued full oiten is certayne,
 That they that on mockers alway their mindes cast,

Shall of all other be mocked at the last.

He that goeth right, stedfast, sure, and fast,
 May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame

And he that is white may well his scornes cast, Agaynst a man of Inde: but no man ought to blame

Another's vice, while he vseth the same.

But who that of sinne is cleane in deede and thought, [ought.

May him well scorne whose living is stauke
 The scornes of Nabal full nere should haue been bought,

If Abigayl his wife discrete and sage,
 Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes sought,
 The wrath of Dauid to temper and awwage.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Wilson, a man celebrated for the politeness of his style, and the extent of his knowledge : what was the state of our language in his time, the following may be of use to show.

PRonunciation is an apte ordering bothe of the voyce, countenance, and all the whole bodye, accordyng to the worthines of suche wordes and mater as by speache are declared.
The vse hereof is suche for anye one that liketh

Thus haue I deduced the English language from the age of Alfred to that of Elizabeth ; in some parts imperfectly for want of materials ;
but I hope, at least, in such a manner that its blie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comely countenance, he shal be thought to passe all other that haue not the like vtterance : though they haue much better learning. The tongue geueth a certayne grace to euery matter, and beautifieth the cause in like maner, as a swete foundyng lute muche setteth forthe a meane deuifed ballade. Or as the founde of a good instrumente styrreth the hearers, and moueth muche delite, so a cleare foundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares, with much sweete melodie, and causeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters sake, then the reporter for the matters sake. Demosthenes therefore, that famous orator, beyng asked what was the chiefe point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praise to Pronunciation ; being demaunded, what was the seconde, and the thirde, he still made an-swere, Pronunciation, and would make none other answer, till they leste askyng, declaryng hereby that arte without vtterance can dooe nothyng, vtterance without arte can dooe right muche. And no doubt that man is in outwarde appearance halfe a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue and a comely gesture of his body.

Æchines lykwyse beyng bannished his cuntry through Demosthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demosthenes answerd thereunto, by force whereof he was bannished, and all they marueiled muche at the excellence of the same : then (qd Æchines) you would haue marueiled much more if you had heard hymselfe speak it. Thus beyng cast in miserie and bannished for euer, he could not but geue such great reporte of his deadly and mortal enemy.

progress may be easily traced, and the gradations obserued, by which it advanced from its first rudeness to its present elegance.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of using words properly, comprises four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.

To these may be added certain combinations of letters universally used in printing; as ct, ft, fl, fl, sb, sh, sk, ff, fi, fi, fi, fh, ff, and &c., or and per se, and, &c, fi, fi, fi, sb, sb, sk, fi, fi, fi, fi, fi, fi, &c. ct, fl, fl, ff, ll, fi, fi, fi, fi, &c.

In this division and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without enquiring whether a fitter distribution might not be found. Experience has long shown this method to be so distinct as to obviate confusion, and so comprehensive as to prevent any inconvenient omissions. I likewise use the terms already received, and already understood, though perhaps others more proper might sometimes be invented. Syllburgius, and other innovators, whose new terms have sunk their learning into neglect, have left sufficient warning against the trifling ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty-four, because anciently i and j, as well as u and v, were expressed by the same character; but as those letters, which had always different powers have now different forms, our alphabet may be properly said to consist of twenty-six letters.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into syllables, and syllables into words. It therefore teaches previously the form and found of letters.

None of the small consonants have a double form, except f, s; of which f, is used in the beginning and middle, and s at the end.

The letters of the English language are,

Vowels are five, a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received; but for i it is the practice to write y in the end of words, as thy, holy; before i, as from die, dying; from beautify, beautifying; in the words says, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with o, as system, sympathy, συμπάθεια.

For w we often write u after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as, raw, grew, view, crew, flowing, lowness.

The sounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I shall not, like some other grammarians, enquire into the original of their form as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and prolation by the organ of speech, as a mechanick, anatomist, or physiologist; nor into the properties and gradation of sounds, or the elegance or harshness of particular combinations, as a writer of universal and transcendental grammar. I consider the English alphabet only as it is English; and even in this narrow view I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, because by writing in English I suppose my reader already acquainted with the English language; and because of sounds in general it may be observed, that words are unable to describe them. An account therefore of the primitive and simple letters is useless almost alike to those who know their found, and those who know it not.

A has three sounds, the slender, open, and broad.

A GRAMMAR, &c.

A slender is found in most words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, salvation, generation.

The a slender is the proper English a, called very justly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum cum e mistum, as having a middle sound between the open a and the e. The French have a similar sound in the word pais, and in their e masculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly resembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glass.

A broad resembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as faul, maul; and we still say faul, maul. This was probably the Saxon sound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the ruttick pronunciation: as maun for man, baund for band.

The short a approaches to the a open, as grass.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always slender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or o. As or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the sound of the long and slender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wase.

Au or aw has the sound of the German a, as vaw, naughty.

æ is sometimes found in Latin words not completely naturalised or assimilated, but is no English diphthong; and is more properly exprest by single e, as Cesar, Eneas.

E is the letter which occurs most frequently in the English language.

E is long, as in scene; or short, as in cellar, separate, celebrate, mæn, thæn

It is always short before a double consonant, or two consonants, relent, medlar, reptile, serpent, cellar, cessation, blessing, fell, falling, debt.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being used to modify the foregoing consonant, as since, once, hedge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as bæn, bûne; cæn, câne; pin, pine; tûn, tûne; rûb, rûbe; pîp, pûpe; fir, fîre; cûr, cûre; tûb, tûbe.

Almost all words which now terminate in consonants ended anciently in e, as year, yeare, wildness, wildnesse; which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and constituted a syllable with its associate consonant; for, in old editions, words are sometimes divided thus, clea-re, sel-ke, knowled-ge. Thus e was perhaps for a time vocal or silent in poetry as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden calls it the silent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glève, love, gear.

It has sometimes in the end of words a sound obscure, and scarcely perceptible, as open, shapen, stotten, thistle, participle, metre, lucre.

E forms a diphthong with a; as near, with i, as deign, receive; and with u, or o, as now, flew.

Ea sounds like e long, as mean; or like oe, as dear, clear, near.

Es is sounded like e long, as seize, perceiving.

Eu sounds as u long and soft.

E, a, u are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the sound of u.

E may be said to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, sleeping.

Eo is found in yeomen, where it is sounded as e short; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a sound, long, as fine; and short, as fin

That is eminently observable in i, which may be likewise remarked in other letters, that the short sound is not the long sound contracted, but a sound wholly different.

The long found in monosyllables is always marked by the e final, as ib-æ, thîne.

I is often sounded before r as a short u; as stir, fir, fir, stir.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, shield, which is sounded as the double ee; except friend, which is sounded as frënd.

I is joined with eu in few, and ew in view; which triphthongs are sounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bône, obedient, corroding; or short, as black, knock, oblique, lill.

Women is pronounced wômen.

The short o has sometimes the sound of a close u, as son, come.

O coalesces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the sound of o long.

O is united to e in some words derived from Greek, as æconomy; but œ being not an English diphthong, they are better written as they are sounded, with only e, economy.

With i, as oil, soil, moist, noisome.

This coalition of letters seems to unite the sounds of the two letters as far as two sounds can be united with out being destroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boat, hot, cooler; oo has the sound of the Italian u

With u or o, as our, power, flower; but in some words has only the sound of o long, as in owl, bow, sow, grow. These different sounds are used to distinguish different significations; as bow, an instrument for shooting; bow, a depression of the head; sow, the she of a boar; sow, to scatter seed; bow, an orbicular body; owl, a wooden vessel.

Ou is sometimes pronounced like o soft, as count; sometimes like o short, as cough; sometimes times like w close, as could; or w open, as rough, tough; which use only can teach.

Ou is frequently used in the last syllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made English, as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the w, without considering that the last syllable gives the sound neither of er nor ur, but a sound between them, if not compounded of both; besides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honneur, fauteur.

U.

U is long in use, confusion; or short, as us, conclusion.

It coalesces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in these combinations the force of the w consonant, as quaff, quest, quit, quite, languish; sometimes in ui the i loses its sound, as in juice. It is sometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, quest, guise, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no sound.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian observes, is one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It supplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as destroy, destroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayed; pray, prayer; say, sayed; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel ȳ, which was commonly used where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

GENERAL RULES.

A vowel in the beginning or middle syllable, before two consonants, is commonly short, as opportunity.

In monosyllables a single vowel before a single consonant is short, as flag, frog.

B.

B has one unvaried sound, such as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, subtle, doubt, lamb, lamb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is used before l and r, as black, brown,

C.

C has before e and i the sound of s; as sincerely, centrick, century, circular, cistern, city, fidelity: before a, o, and w, it sounds like k, as caim, conceavity, copper, incorporate, curiosity, concupiscence.

C might be omitted in the language without loss, since one of its sounds might be supplied by s, and the other by k, but that it preserves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captiue from captivus.

Ch has a sound which is analysed into tsb, as church, chin, crutch. It is the same sound which the Italians give to the c simple before i and e, is citta, cerra.

Ch is sounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as rhymsist, scheme, cisler. Arch is commonly sounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the English sound of ch before a consonant, as archbishop.

Ch, in some French words not yet assimilated, sounds like ts, as machine, chaife.

C, according to English orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write stick, black, which were originally sticke, blake, in such words. C is now mute.

It is used before l and r, as clock, cross.

Is uniform in its sound, as death, diligent.

It is used before r, as draw, dress; and w, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the semivowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiously sounded before a liquid, as fish, fly, break. It has an unvariable sound, except that y sometimes spoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two sounds, one hard, as in gay, ge, gun. the other soft, as in gem, giant.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, fung, song, frag.

Before e and i the sound is uncertain.

G before e is soft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geese, get, gewgaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as singing, stronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as singer.

G is mute before n, as grass, sign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantick, gibbet, gibe, giblets, giles, gill, gillflower, gin, ginger, gingle, gipsy.

Gh in the beginning of a word has the sound of the hard g, as ghostly; in the middle, and sometime at the end, it is quite silent, as though, right, ought, spoken tho', rite, sente.

It has often at the end the sound of f, as laugh; whence laughter retains the same sound in the middle; cough, trough, fough, tough, enough, slough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a consonant deeply guttural, which is still continued among the Scotch.

G is used before t, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aspiration, and shows that the following

following vowel must be pronounced with a strong emission of the breath, as bat, horse.

It seldom, perhaps never, begins any but the first syllable, in which it is always sounded with a full breath, except in hair, herb, hostler, h:ar, humble, honest, humour, and their derivatives.

J.

J consonant sounds uniformly like the soft g, and is therefore a letter useless, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jester, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the sound of hard c, and is used before e and i, where, according to English analogy, c would be soft, as kept, king, skirt, shep:tick, for so it should be written, not sc:ptick.

It is used before n, as knell, knot, but totally loses its sound.

L has in English the same liquid sound as in other languages.

The custom is to double the l at the end of monosyllables, as kill, will, full. These words were originally written kille, wille, fulle; and when the e first grew silent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is sometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, cakes, could, would, psalm, talk, salmon, falcon.

The Saxons, who delighted in guttural sounds, sometimes aspirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlaf, a las, or bread; hlacord, a lord; but this pronunciation is now disused.

L at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almost mute, as table, shuttle.

M.

M has always the same sound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has always the same sound, as noble, manners.

N is sometimes mute after m, as damn, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the same sound, which the Welsh and Germans confound with B.

P is sometimes mute, as in psalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Pb is used for f in words derived from the Greek, as philosophy, philanthropy, Philip.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a sound which our Saxon ancestors well expressed by cy, cw, as quadrant, queen, equestrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is sometimes sounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, risque, chequer.

R.

R has the same rough snarling sound as in other tongues.

The Saxons used often to put b before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rb is used in words derived from the Greek, as myrrb, myrrbine, catarrhus, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

S has a hissing sound, as sibilatio, sifter.

A single s seldom ends any word, except the third person of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, bushes, distresses; the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, surplus; the close being always either in se, as tease, horse, or in st, as grass, dress, bias, less, anciently grasse, dresse.

S single, at the end of words, has a grosser sound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, surplus.

It sounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intrusion; and like s, if it follows a consonant, as conversion.

It sounds like z before e mute, as refuse, and before y final, as rosy; and in those words, bosom, desire, wisdom, prison, prisoner, present, present, damiel, casement.

It is the peculiar quality of f, that it may be sounded before all consonants, except x and z, in which f is comprised, x being only ks, and z, a hard or gross f. This f is therefore termed by grammarians ſua potestatis litera; the reason of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneously supposed to be, that in some words it might be doubled at pleasure. Thus we find in several languages:

Σκέρωμι, scatter, sdegno, stracciolo, sfavellare, σφικε, sgombrare, sgranare, sbake, slumber, smell, sbrife, space, splendour, spring, squeeze, sbrave, step, strength, stramen, sventura, swell.

S is mute in isle, island, demesne, viscount.

T has its customary sound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the sound of th, as salvation, except an f goes before, as question, excepting likewise derivatives from y, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two sounds; the one soft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The sound is lost in these words, than, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds, that, these, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this,

A GRAMMAR OF THE

this, taste, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is softened at the end of a word, an e silent must be added, as breath, breathe, cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a sound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f in the Islandick alphabet, v is only distinguished by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, some grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a consonant; and not rather as it is called a double u or ou, as water may be resolved in cuater; but letters of the same sound are always reckoned consonants in other alphabets: and it may be observed, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as fragly, winter.

Wh has a sound accounted peculiar to the English, which the Saxons better expressed by hy, hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and sometimes in wholesale, wh is sounded like a simple h.

X.

X begins no English word; it has the sound of ks, as axe, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a consonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either vowel or diphthong, is a consonant, as ye, young. It is thought by some to be in all cases a vowel. But it may be observed of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as resy, yeast.

Z.

Z begins no word originally English; it has the sound as its name izzard or sharp expresses, of an s uttered with closer compression of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, freeze.

In orthography I have supposed orthopy, or just utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expressing certain sounds by proper characters. I have therefore observed in what words any of the letters are mute.

Most of the writers of English grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwise than they are written, and seem not sufficiently to have considered, that of English, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one cursory and colloquial, the other regular and solemn. The cursory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unskillfulness, or affectation. The solemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always less remote from the orthography, and less liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the cursory speech of those with whom they happened to converse; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often established the jargon of the lowest of the people as the model of speech.

For pronunciation the best general rule is, to consider those as the most elegant speakers who deviate least from the written words.

There have been many schemes offered for the emendation and settlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earliest writers in rude ages, was at first very various and uncertain, and is yet sufficiently irregular. Of these reformers some have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without considering that this is to measure by a shadow, to take that for a model or standard which is changing while they apply it. Others, less absurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelhood of success, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of sounds, that every sound may have its own character, and every character a single sound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a synod of grammarians upon principles of science. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books useless? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confusion and perplexity of such an alteration?

Some of these schemes I shall however exhibit, which may be used according to the diversities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or resource to innovators.

One of the first who proposed a scheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practised in grammatical disquisitions. Had he written the following lines according to his scheme, they would have appeared thus:

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove thoe' holy Vandals off the stage.

At lengd Erasmus, dat grēt injur'd nām,
De glori of de presthūd, and de zām,
Stemm'd de wild torrent of a barb'rous āg,
And drōv thōs hōli Vandals off de stāg

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated master of St. Paul's school in London; which I cannot well present exactly for want of types, but will approach approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in use so as to make it understood, exhibiting two stanzas of Spenser in the reformed orthography.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Spenser, book iii. canto 5.

Unthankful wretch, said he, is this the meed,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?

Thy life she saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost ween with villainous despite,
To blot her honour, and her heavenly light.
Die, rather die, than so disloyally,
Deem of her high desert, or seem so light.
Fair death it is to shun more shame; then die.

Die, rather die, than ever love disloyally.

But if to love disloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from death's door
Me brought? ah! far be such reproach from me.

What can I less do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot restore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her serve,
Dying her serve, and living her adore
Thy life she gave, thy life she doth deserve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her service swerve.

Vnthankful wret, said he, is this the meed,
With which her soverain merci thou dost quite?
Dj lji rj saged bj her gracios djd;
But thou dost wen with villainous despite,
Tu blot her honor, and her heavenly light.

Dj, rather dj, than ever love disloyally.

But if tu love disloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her that from death's door

Dj lji rj g'v, dj lji rj dub deserve;
Dj, rather dj, than ever from her service swerve.

Dr Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an understanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He seems to have been more sanguine than his predecessors, for he printed his book according to his own scheme: which the following specimen will make easily understood.

But whensoever you have occasion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. For the safeguard of your face, which they have most mind unto, provide a purplehood, made of coarse bouldering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more safety is to be lined against the eminent parts with woollen cloth. First cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being sowed in his place, join unto it two short pieces of the same breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks, and then set another piece about the breadth of a shilling against the top of the nose. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may serve though it be in the heat of the day.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears among other books, in such editions of the works of Milton as were published by himself. Or these reformers every man had his own scheme; but they agreed in one general design of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting such as they thought superfluous. Some of them would have written these lines thus:

—All the earth
Shall then be paradys, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier date.

Bishop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philosophical language, proposed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography: by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

Ysr Fädher huith art in héven, halloed in dhyi nám, dhyi cingdym cym, dhyi will be dya in earth as it is in heaven, &c.

We have since had no general reformers; but some ingenious men have endeavoured to deserve well of their country, by writing honor and labor for honour and labour, and red for

A GRAMMAR OF THE

read in the present-tense, sais for says, repete for repeat, explaine for explain, or declame for declaim. Of these it may be said, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both because they have innovated little, and because few have followed them.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the sense of the same word is diversified; as herje, lojjes; I love, I loved.

Of the ARTICLE.

The English have two articles, an, a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite signification, and means one with some reference to more; as, This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a sword, that is, some sword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of those that are men, than one of those that are boys. An army might enter without resistance, that is, any army.

In the senses in which we use a or an in the singular, we speak in the plural without an article; as, these are good books.

I have made an the original article, because it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new use, as the German ein, and the French un; the n being cut off before a consonant in the speed of utterance.

Grammarians of the last age direct, that an should be used before b; whence it appears that the English anciently aspirated less. An is still used before the silent b, as, an herb, an honest man: but otherwise a: as, A horse, a horse, my kingdom for a horse.

Shakespeare.

THE has a particular and definite signification.

The fruit

Of that f bidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world Al-lan.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the use of man; that is, for those beings that are cattle, and his use that is man.

The is used in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran.

Dryden.

Many words are used without articles; as

1. Proper names, as John, Alexander, Longinus, Aristarchus, Jerusalem, Aibeni, Rome, London. GOD is used as a proper name.

2. Abstract names, as blackness, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, ugliness, love, hatred, anger, goodness, kindness.

3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer but water; This is not brass, but steel.

Of NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relations of English nouns to words going before or following are not expressed by cases, or changes of termination, but as in most of the other European languages by prepositions, unless we may be said to have a genitive case.

Singular.

Nom. Magister,	a Master, the Master.
Gen. Magistri,	of a Master, of the Master, of Masters, the Masters.
Dat. Magistro,	to a Master, to the Master.
Asc. Magistrum,	a Master, the Master.
Voc. Magister,	Master, O Master.
Alb. Magistro,	from a Master, from the Master.

Plural.

Nom. Magistri,	Masters, the Masters.
Gen. Magistrorum,	of Masters, of the Masters.
Dat. Magistris,	to Masters, to the Masters.
Acc. Magistros,	Masters, the Masters.
Voc. Magistri,	Masters, O Masters.
Abl. Magistris,	from Masters, from the Masters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Master,	Gen. Masters.	Plur. Masters.
Scholar,	Gen. Scholars.	Plur. Scholars.

These genitives are always written with a mark of elision, master's, scholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of his, as the soldier's valour, for the soldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original, because 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate: and collective nouns, as Woman's passions; the rabble's insolence; the multitude's folly; in all these cases it is apparent that his cannot be understood. We say likewise the foundation's strength, the diamond's lustre, the winter's severity; but in these cases his may be understood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuter in the place now supplied by it and its.

The learned, the sagacious Wallis, to whom every English grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective possessive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the same to the genitive in equum decus, Trojæ oris, or any other Latin genitive.

This termination of the noun seems to constitute a real genitive indicating possession. It is derived to us from those who declined smith, a smith; Gen. smith's, of a smith; Plur. smith's, or smiths, smiths; and so in two other of their seven declensions.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a syllable than the original word; knights, for knights', in Chaucer; lewis, for lewis', in Spenser.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the same with the nominative, as Venus temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables; flies, flies; sister, sisters; wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwise be sounded, as after cb, s, ß, x, z; after c sounded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive singular is the same.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, oxen, swine, and more antiently eyen and shoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonic dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as leaf, leaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, muffs; chief, chiefs. So boof, roof, proof, relief, mischief, puff; cuff, dwarf, handkerchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice from louse, mice from mouse, geese from goose, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have no genitives; but we say, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits against the ladies hairs. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lords house may be said for the house of Lords; but such phrases are not now in use; and surely an English ear rebels against them.

OF ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives in the English language are wholly indeclinable; having neither case, gender, nor number, and being added to substantives in all relations without any change; as, a good woman, good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Comparison of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the superlative by adding est, to the positive; as, fair, fairer, fairest; lovely, lovelier, loveliest; sweet, sweeter; low, lower, lowest; high, higher, highest.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, best; bad, worse, worst; little, less, least; near, nearer, next; much, more, most; many (or more), more (for more), most (for most); late, later, latest or last.

Some comparatives form a superlative by adding most, as nether, nethermost; outer, outmost; under, undermost; up, upper, uppermost; far, farmer, foremost.

Most is sometimes added to a substantive, as ispmost, footmost.

Many adjectives do not admit of comparison by terminations, and are only compared by more and most, as benevolent, more benevolent, most benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and most, even when they have comparatives and superlatives regularly formed; as fair, fairer, or more fair; fairest, or most fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular comparison, the comparative more is oftner used than the superlative most, as more fair is oftner written for fairer, than most fair for fairest.

The comparison of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiousness of utterance, or agreeableness of sound, is not easily reduced to rules.

Monosyllables are commonly compared.

Poly-syllables, or words of more than two syllables, are seldom compared otherwise than by more and most, as deplorable, more deplorable, most deplorable.

Disyllables are seldom compared if they terminate in some, as fulsome, tailsome; in ful, as careful, spleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as porous; in less, as careless, harmless; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, ferent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as missive; in dy, as woody; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as skinny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as hoary.

Some comparatives and superlatives are yet found in good writers formed without regard to the foregoing rules; but in a language subjected to little and so lately to grammar, such anomalies must frequently occur.

So sbady is compared by Milton.

She in sbadest covert hid,

Tun'd her nocturnal note.

Parad. Lost.

And virtuous.

What she wills to say or do,

Seems wisest, virtuous, best, discreetest, best.

Parad. Lost.

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not so decorous, in respect of God, that he should immediately do all the meanest and triflingest things himself, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister.

Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I shall be named among the famous, best

Milton's Agonistes.

Inventive by Ascham.

Those have the inventive, best heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters.

Pow'rfuſe, by Milton.
 We have ſuſtain'd one day in doubtful fight,
 What heav'n's great King hath pow'rfulleſt to ſend Againſt us from about his throne. Parad. Loſt.

The termination in iſb may be accounted in ſome ſort a degree of compariſon, by which the ſignification is diminiſhed below the poſitive, as black, blackiſb, or tending to blackneſs; ſalt, ſaltiſb, or having a little taſte of ſalt: they therefore admit no compariſon. This termination is ſeldom added but to words expreſſing ſenſible qualities, nor often to words of above one ſyllable, and is ſcarcely uſed in the ſolemn or ſublime ſtyle.

OF PRONOUNS.

Pronouns, in the Engliſh language, are, I, thou, he, with their plurals, we, ye, they, it, who, which, what, whether, whoſeſoever, whatſoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the ſame.

The pronouns perſonal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural
Nom.	I.	We
Accuſ. and other oblique caſes.	Me	Us	}
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

You is commonly uſed in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the ſecond perſon plural is uſed for the ſecond perſon ſingular, You are my friend.

Nom.	She	They	}
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	}
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it, the practice of ancient writers was to uſe he, and for its, his.

The poſſeſſive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without caſes or change of termination.

The poſſeſſive of the firſt perſon is my, mine, our, ours; of the ſecond, thy, thine, you, yours; of the third, from he, his, from ſhe, her, and hers, and in the plural their, theirs, for both ſexes.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, are uſed when the ſubſtantive preceding is ſeparated by a verb, as Theſe are our books. Theſe books are ours. Your children excel ours in ſtature, but ours ſurpaſs yours in learning.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithstanding their ſeeming plural termination, are applied equally to ſingular and plural ſubſtantives, as This book is ours. Theſe books are ours.

Mine and thine were formerly uſed before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which though now diſuſed in proſe, might be ſtill properly continued in poetry: they are uſed as ours and yours, when they are referred to a ſubſtantive preceding.

Their and theirs are the poſſeſſives likewiſe of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whether, whoſeſoever, whatſoever.

Whoſe is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which:

 Brought death into the world. Milton.

Whether is only uſed in the nominative and accuſative caſes; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as Whether of theſe is leſt I know not. Whether ſhall I chooſe? It is now almoſt obſolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whoſeſoever, whatſoever, being compounded of who or what, and ſoever, follow the rule of their primitives.

of, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which signify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly there for, and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in use. The rest seem to be passing by degrees into neglect, though proper, useful, and analogous. They are referred both to singular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words used only in conjunction with pronouns, own and self.

Own is added to possessives, both singular and plural, as my own hand, our own house. It is emphatical, and implies a silent contrariety or opposition, as, I live in my own house, that is, not in a hired house. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to possessives, as myself; yourselves; and sometimes to personal pronouns, as himself, itself, themselves. It then, like own, expresses emphasis and opposition, as I did this myself, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourselves by vain rage.

Himself, itself, themselves, is supposed by Wallis to be put by corruption, for his self, itself, their selves; so that self is always a substantive. This seems justly observed, for we say,
He came himself; Himself shall do this; where himself cannot be an acculative.

Of the VERB.

English verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languish. The neuters are formed like the active.

Most verbs signifying action, may likewise signify condition or habit, and become neuters;
as I love, I am in love; I strike, I am now striking.

Verbs have only two tenses inflected in their terminations, the present, and simple preterite;
the other tenses are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, shall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The passive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the substantive verb, as I am loved.

To Have. Indicative Mood.

Present Tense.

Sing. I have, thou hast, he hath or has;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hath, but now more frequently used both in verse and prose.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had, thou hadst, he had;
Plur. We had, ye had, they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had, thou hast had, he has had;
Plur. We have had, ye have had, they have had.

Preterpluperfect.

Sing. I had had, thou hadst had, he had had;
Plur. We had had, ye had had, they had had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have, thou shalt have, he shall have;
Plur. We shall have, ye shall have, they will have.

Second Future.

Sing. I will have, thou wilt have, he will have;
Plur. We will have, ye will have, they will have.

By reading these future tenses may be observed the variations of shall and will.

Imperative Mood.

Sing. Have or have thou, let him have;
Plur. Let us have, have or have ye, let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.

Present.

Sing. I have, thou have, he have;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.

Preterite simple as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound.

Sing. I have had, they have had, he have had;
Plur. We have had, ye have had, they have had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have, as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

Sing. I shall have had, thou shalt have had, he shall have had;
Plur. We shall have had, ye shall have had, they shall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of speaking is expressed by may, can, in the present; and might, could, or should, in the preterite, joined with the Infinitive mood of the verb.

Present.

Sing. I may have, thou mayst have, he may have;

Plur. We may have, ye may have, they may have.

Preterite.

Sing. I might have, thou mightest have, he might have.

Plur. We might have, ye might have, they might have.

Present.

Sing. I can have, thou canst have, he can have;
Plur. We can have, ye can have, they can have.

Preterite.

Sing. I could have, thou couldst have, he could have;
Plur. We could have, ye could have, they could have.

In the like manner should is united to the verb.

There is likewise a double Preterite.

Sing. I should have had, thou shouldst have had, he should have had;
Plur. We should have had, ye should have had, they should have had.

In like manner we use, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Present. To have.
Preterite. To have had.
Participle present. Having.
Participle preterite. Had.

Verb active. To love.

Indicative. Present.

Sin. I love, thou lovest, he loveth or loves;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.

Preterite simple.

Sing. I loved, thou lovedst, he loved;
Plur. We loved, ye loved, they loved.
Preterperfect compared. I have loved, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had loved, &c.
Future. I shall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love or love thou, let him love;
Plur. Let us love, love or love ye, let them love.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I love, thou love, he love;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.
Preterite simple, as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.
Future. I shall love, &c.
Second Future. I shall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Present. I may or can love, &c.
Preterite. I might, could, or should have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To love.
Preterite. To have loved.
Participle present. Loving.
Participle past. Loved.

The passive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite, to the different tenses of the verb to be, which must therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I am, thou art, he is;
Plur. We are or be, ye are or be, they are or be.

The plural be is now little in use.

Preterite.

Sing. I was, thou wast or wert, he was;
Plur. We were, ye were, they were.
Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be used in the indicative.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.
Future. I shall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou; let him be;
Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I be, thou beest, he be;
Plur. We be, ye be, they be.
Preterite.
Sing. I were, thou wert, he were;
Plur. We were, ye were, they were.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Future. I shall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or should be;
 could, would, or should have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be.
Preterite. To have been.
Participle present. Being.
Participle preterite. Having been.

Passive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I shall have been loved, &c.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or should be loved, &c. I might, could, or should have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be loved.
Preterite. To have been loved.

There is another form of English verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To do.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

To Do.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I do, thou dost, he doth;
Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I did, thou didst, he did;
Plur. We did, ye did, they did.
Preterit. &c. I have done, &c. I had done.

&c.

Future. I shall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Do thou, let him do;
Plur. Let us do, do ye, let them do.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I do, thou do, he do;
Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

The rest are as in the Indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.

Participle. Present. Doing.

Participle preter. Done.

I do is sometimes used superfluously, as, I do love, I did love; simply for I love or I loved; but this is considered as a vitious mode of speech.

It is sometimes used emphatically; as,
I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shakesp.

It is frequently joined with a negative; as,
I like her, but I do not love her; I wisht him success, but did not help him.

The Imperative prohibitory is seldom applied in the second person, at least in prose, without the word do; as, Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praise beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief use is in interrogative forms of speech, in which it is used through all the persons, as, Do I live? Dost thou strike me? Do they rebel? Did I complain? Didst thou love her? Did she die? So likewise in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did she not die?

Do is thus only used in the simple tenses.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when used, may not improperly denominate them neuter passives, as they are inflected according to the passive form by the help of the verb substantive to be. They answer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as,
I am risen, surrexi, Latin; Je me suis levé. French.

I was walked out, exieram. Je m'étois promené.

In like manner we commonly express the present tense; as I am going, eo. I am grieving, dolco. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempest is raging, furit procella. I am pursuing an enemy, hostem insequor. So the other tenses, as We were walking, τρούχωνον περιπαλόντες, I have been walking, I had been walking, I shall or will be walking.

There is another manner of using the active participle, which gives it a passive signification; as, the grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc charis imprimitur. The brass is forging, era excuduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expression, probably corrupted from a phrase more pure, but now somewhat obsolete: The book is a printing, The brass is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns signifying action according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when some convenience of verification does not invite its revival. It is used among the purer writers after if, though, ere, before, whether, except, unless, whatssoever, whomsoever, and words of wishing; as, Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not.

Of IRREGULAR VERBS.

The English verbs were divided by Ben Jonson into four conjugations, without any reason arising from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, such as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be considered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monosyllable Saxon verbs and the verbs derived from them very frequent; but almost all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages, follow the regular form.

Our verbs are observed by Dr. Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the scantiness of our conjugations, there is scarcely any other places for irregularity.

The first irregularity, is a slight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction: the last syllable ed is often joined with the former by suppression of e; as lov'd for loved; after c, ch, jb, f, k, x, and after the consonants s, t, when more strongly pronounced, and sometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a short vowel, t is used in pronunciation, but very seldom in writing, rather than d, as plac't, snatch't, fish't, walk't, duel't, smel't, for plac'd, snatch'd, fish'd, walk'd, duel'd, smel'd; or plac'd, snatched, fish'd, walk'd, dwelled, smelled.

Those words which terminate in l or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in solemn language; as, crept, f. li, dwelt; sometimes after x, ed is changed into t; as next: this is not constant.

A long vowel is often changed into a short one; thus kept, slept, wep't, crept, swapt; from the verbs, to keep, to sleep, to wweep, to sweep, to swweep. Where black, to blacken; hard, to harden; soft, to soften.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as, a louse, lousy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, heartly; a hand, handy.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; vice, viceful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almost the same sense, but with some kind of diminution thereof, the termination some is added, denoting something; or in some degree; as, delight, delightfulsome; game, gamefulsome; irk, irkfulsome; burden, burdenfulsome; trouble, troublefulsome; light, lightfulsome; hand, handfulsome; alone, lonelysome; toil, toilfulsome.

On the contrary, the termination of less added to substantives, makes adjectives signifying want; as, worthless, witless, burmless, joyless, careless, helpless. Thus comiort, comiortless; sap, sapless.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as, pleasant, unpleasant; wise, unwise; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuseful, and many more.

The original English privative is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin or its descendants, words already signifying privation, as insufficient, impious, indiscreet, the inseparable particles un and in have fallen into confusion, from which it is not easy to disentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally English, as untrue, untruth, untaught, unbandome.

Un is prefixed to all particle-made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unaffixing, unaided, undelighted, unendeared.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle present, to mark a forbearance of action, as unfixing; but a privation of habit, as unpitying.

Un is prefixed to most substantives which have an English termination, as unfertility, unperfectness, which if they have borrowed terminations, take ig or im, as infertility, imperfection; unevil, inconvivial, unactive, inactive.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is usual to retain the particle prefixed, as indecent, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepositive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, signify almost the same as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, since it answers to the Latin preposition de. Mis insinuates some error, and for the most part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to dislike; honour, dishonour; to honour, to grace, to dishonour, to disgrace; to deign, to disdeign; chance, hap, mischance, misbap; to take, to mistake: deed, misdeed; to use, to misuse; to employ, to misemploy; to apply, to misapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the same signification, as distinguish, distinguishing; detract, detraho; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to substantives, and sometimes to adjectives forms adjectives that import some kind of similitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of like or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike: earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The same termination ly, added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like signification; as beautifully, beautifully; sweetly, sweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with some degree of sweetness.

The termination ish added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to substantives, imports similitude or tendency to a character; as, green, greenish; white, whitish; soft, softish; a thief, thievish; a wolf, wolfish; a child, childish.

We have forms of diminutives in substantives, though not frequent; as, a hill, a hillock; a cock, a cockril; a pike, a pikrel; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the petronick Hawkins, Wilkin, Thomson, and others.

Yet still there is another form of diminution among the English, by lessening the sound itself, especially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that sometimes not so much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as, sup, sp, soop, sof, sippet; where, besides the extenuation of the vowel, there is added the French termination et & top, tip; spit, spout; babe, baby, booby, coömais; great pronounced long, especially it with a stronger sound, great: little pronounced long, leettle; ting, tang, song, imports a succession of smaller and then greater tunds; and so in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore scarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abstract substantives, by adding the termination ness, and a few in hood or bead, noting character of qualities; as, white, whiteness; hard, hardness; great, greatness; skilful, skilfulness, unskilfulness.

ness; godhead, manhood, maidenhead, widowhood, knighthood, priesthood, likenood, falsehood.

There are other abstracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a small change being sometimes made; as long, length; strong, strength; broad, wide, breadth, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearth; slow, slownth; merry, mirth; heal, health; well, weal, wealth; dry, drought; young, youth; and so moon, month.

Like these are some words derived from verbs; dy death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after mow'th; commonly spoken and written later math, after math; steal, stealth; bear, birth; rue, ruth; and probably earth from ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

These should rather be written flight, fright, only that custom prevails, lest b should be twice repeated.

The same form retain faith, spight, wreathe, wrath, broth, frath, breath, sooth, worth, light, wight, and the like, whose primitives are either entirely obsolete, or seldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from sey or foy, spry, wry, wreak, brow, mow, fry, bray, say, work.

Some ending in ship, imply an office, employment or condition; as, kingship, wardship, guardianship, partnership, stewardship, headship, lordship.

Thus, worship, that is, worthship; whence worshipful, to worship.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do especially denote dominion, at least state or condition; as, kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, christendom, freedom, wisdom, woredom, bishoprick, bailiwick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the same import with us as among them, scarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, usage.

There are in English often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation; as, to beat, a bat, batoon, a battle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, butter, a kind of glutinous composition for food. All these are of similar signification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batuo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tango, tetigi, taclum.

From two, are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twist, twirk, twig, twitch, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more subtlety than solidity, and such as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn usually implies the nose, and what relates to it. From the Latin nasus are derived the French nes and the English nose; and nesse, a promontory, as projecting like a nose. But as if from the consonants ns taken from nasus, and transposed that they may the better correspond sn denotes nasus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the nose, as snout, sneeze, snore, snort, snear, snicker, snout, snivel, snite, snuff; snuffle, snaffle, snarle, snudge.

There is another sn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin snus, as snake, snack, snail, snare; so likewise snap and snatch, snib, snub.

Bl implies a blast; as blow, blast, to blast, to blight, and, metaphorically, to blast one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bleak, blay, bleach, bluster, blurt, blister, blab, bladder, bleb, blister, blabber-lip, blubber-check, blot, blot-berrings, blast, blase, to blow, that is blossom, blom; and perhaps blood and blush.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing signified; and therefore the sounds of letters smaller, sharper, louder, closer, softer, stronger, clearer, more obscure, and more stridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the things signified.

Thus words that begin with st intimate the force and effect of the thing signified, as if probably derived from σπινυμι, or strenuus; as strong, strength, strew, strike, streak, strake, stripe, strive, strife, struggle, strout, strut, stretch, strait, strict, stright, that is, narrow, distrain, stress, distract, string, strap, stream, streamer, strand, strip, stray, struggle, strange, stride, straddle.

St in like manner implies strength, but in a less degree, so much only as is sufficient to preferve what has already been communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin sto: for example, stand, stay, that is to remain, or to prop; staff, stay, that is, to oppose; stop, to stuff, stifle, to stay, that is to stop; a stay, that is an obitacle; stick, stuck, stutter, stammer, stagger, stickle, stick, stake, a sharp pale, and any thing deposited at play; stock, stem, sting, to sting, stink, stitch, stid, stanchion, stubb, stubbie, to stub up, stump, whence stumble, stalk, to stalk, step, stamp, with the feet, whence to stamp, that is, to make an impression and a stamp, stare, to stow, to bestow, steward, or steward, stead, steady, steadfast, stable, a stable, a stall, to stall, stool, stall, still, stall, stallage, stall, stage, still, adj. and fl. adv. stale, stout, sturdy, stead, stout, stallion, stiff, stark-dead, to starve with hunger or cold; stare, steech, stern, stanch, to stanch blood, to stare, steep, steep, stair, standard, a stated measure; stately. In all these, and perhaps some others, st denotes something firm and fixed.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

They imply a more violent degree of motion, as throw, thrust, throng, throbb, through, threat, threaten, thrall, throw.

We imply some sort of obliquity or distortion, as war, to wreath, wrest, wrestle, wring, wrong, wring, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, wrath, wreck, wrack, wretch, wrist, wrap.

So imply a silent agitation, or a softer kind of lateral motion; as, sway, swang, to sway, swagger, swerve, sweet, sweep, swill, swim, swing, swift, sweet, switch, sevinge.

Not is there much difference of sm in smoothe, smug, smile, smirk, smite, which signifies the same as to strike, but is a softer word; small, smell, smack, smother, smart, a smart blow properly signifies such a kind of stroke as with an originally silent motion implied in sm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar suddenly ended, as is shewn by t.

Cl denote a kind of adhesion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, clamber, clammy, clasp, to clasp, to clip, to clinch, cloak, clog, clove, to close, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blood, clouted cream, a clatter, a cluster.

Sp imply a kind of dissipation or expansion, especially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from spargo or separo: for example, spread, spring, sprig, sprout, sprinkle, split, splinter, spill, spit, sputter, spatter.

Sl denote a kind of silent fall, or a less observable motion; as in slime, slide, slip, slipper, fly, sleight, slit, slow, slack, slight, sling, slap.

And so likewise asb, in crash, rash, gasb, flasp, clasp, lasb, slasp, plasp, trasp, indicates something acting more nimbly and sharply. But usf, in crush, rush, gush, flush, blush, brush, hush, push, imply something as acting more obtusely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a swift and sudden motion, not instantaneous, but gradual, by the continued sound sb.

Thus in sling, sling, ding, swing, cling, sing, wring, sting, the tingling of the termination ng, and the sharpness of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very slender motion or tremor, at length indeed vanishing, but not suddenly interrupted. But in think, wink, sink, clink, chink, think, that end in a mute consonant, there is also indicated a sudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, sprinkle, twinkle, there is implied a frequency, or iteration of small acts. And the same frequency of acts, but less subtle by reason of the clearer vowel a, is indicated in jangle, tangle, spangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as also in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, slumble, ramble, crumble, fumble. But at the same time the close a implies something obscure or obtunded; and a congeries of consonants *mb*l, denotes a confused kind of rolling or tumbling, as in ramble, scamble, scramble, wamble, amble; as in which there is something acute.

In amble, the acuteness of the vowel denotes celerity. In sparkle, sp denotes dissipation, ar so acute crackling, k a sudden interruption, la frequent iteration; and in like manner in sprinkle, waft: z may imply the subtilty of the dissipated guttules. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuse consonant, and the latter with an acute.

In like manner, in squeek, squeak, squeal, squall, brawl, yaul, spual, sereek, jbreck, sbril, sbarp, sbrivel, wrinkle, crack, crab, clasp, gnash, plash, crush, huff, hiss, fiff, whiff, soft, jarr, hurl, curl, whirl, buzz, bustle, spindle, twindle, twine, twist, and in many more, we may observe the agreement of such sort of sounds with the things signified: and this so frequently happens, that scarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monosyllabic word, of which kind are almost all ours, emphatically expresses what in other languages can scarce be explained but by compounds, or decompositions, or sometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greater part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as, grace, face, elegant, elegance, resemble.

Some verbs which seem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the present tense, and some from the supines.

From the present are formed, spend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; despise, despicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the supines, supplicate, supplico; demonstrate, demonstro; dispose, dispono; expatiate, expatio; suppress, supprimo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in quest of originals. Many of these which seem selected as immediate descendents from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expose, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as, garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, crier, plaider; though indeed, even of these, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from some common original; as, wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wall, vallum; wallo, volvo; wool, vellus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; wasp, vespa; day, dies; draw, traho; tame, domo, δαμάω; yoke, jugum, ζεύξω; over, super, super, ὑπέρ; am, sum, εἰμι; break, frango; fly, volo; blow, flo.

I make no doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin: and it is no less certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, especially the Æolic, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oscan and others, which have long become obsolete, received not a few from the Teutonick. It is certain, that the English, German, and other Teutonick languages, retained some derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as path, psad, ax, acts, mit, serd, psurd, daughter, ickter, mickle, mingle, moon, fear, grave, grass, to grave, to scrape, whole, heal, from βάσις, ἀξίον, μέλα, κορβίον, μαγάριον, μίγνυσι, μίμν, ξηρός, γράφω, διό, εἰδέω. Since they received these immediately from the Greeks without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the same fountain, though they be likewise found among the Latins?

A GRAMMAR OF THE

Our ancestors were studious to form borrowed words, however long, into monosyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the first syllable, especially in words beginning with a vowel: and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewise consonants of a weaker sound, retaining the stronger, which seem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the same organ, in order that the sound might become the softer; but especially transposing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, spend; exemplum, sample; excipio, scape; extraneus, strange; extractum, stretch'd; excrucio, to screw; excorio, to scour; excorio, to scourge; excortico, to scratch; and others beginning with ex: as also, emendo, to mend; episcopus, bishop; in Danish, Bisp; epistola, pistle; hospitale, spital; Hispania, Spain; historia, story.

Many of these etymologies are doubtful, and some evidently mistaken.

The following are somewhat harder, Alexander, Sander; Elisabetha, Betty; apis, bee; aper, bar; passing into b, as in bishop; and by cutting off a from the beginning, which is restored in the middle; but for the old bar or bare, we now say beare; as for lang, long; for bain, bane; for stane, stone; apruna, brawn, p being changed into b, and a transposed, as in aper, and g changed into w, as in pinus, pawn; lege, law; ἀλαστός, fix, cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pellis, a feli; pullus, a fowl; pater, father; pavor, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, fuel; picis, fish; and transposing o into the middle, which was taken from the beginning; apex, a piece; peak, pike; zophorus, freeze; mutium, stum; defensio, fence; dispensator, spencer; aculto, elcounter; Fr. scut; exicalpo, scrape, restoring l instead of r, and hence scrap, scrabble, scrawl; exculpo, scoup; exterritus, start; extonitus, attonitus, stum'd; stomachus, maw; offendo, fined; obitiplo, slip; audere, dare; cavere, ware, whence a-ware, beware, wary, warn, warning; for the Latin v consonant formerly sounded like our w, and the modern sound of the v consonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the sound of φ, and the modern sound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or ph; ulcus, ulcer, ulcer, sore, and hence sorry, sorrow, ferreus, iron; ingenium, engine, gin; scalenus, leaving, unless you would rather derive it from κλίμα, whence inclino, infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projectum, to jett forth a jetty; cucullus, a coat.

There are sycnopses somewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French homme, femme, nom, from homine, fœmina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; πόσιον, pot; κυνάλλα, cup; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray; præda, prey; specio, speculator, spy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; sedes episcopalis, see.

A vowel is also cut off in the middle, that the number of the syllables may be lessened; as, amita, aunt; spiritus, spright; debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, to acquit; separo, to spare; stabilis, stable; stabulum, stable; pallacium, palace, place; rabula, rail, ravel, wravel, brasul, rable, brable; questio, quest.

As also a consonant, or at least one of a softer sound, or even a whole syllable, rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; securus, jure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; subtilis, subtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo, count; subitaneus, suddain, soon; superate, to soar; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as, magnus, main; dignor, deign; tingo, stain; tinctum, taint; pingo, paint; prædari, reach.

The contractions may seem harder, where many of them meet, as κυριακός, kyrk church; presbyter, priest; sacristanus, sexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, fœm, beech, f changed into b, and g into ct, which are letters near-akin; frigeo, freeze; frigeo, fresh; sc into sb, as above in bishop, fish, so in scapula, skiff, skiff, and retrigeo, refresh; but viresco, fresh; phlebotamus, steam; bovina, beef; viulina, veal; scutifer, square; pœnitentia, penance; sanctuarium, sanctuary, sentry; questio, chafe; perquisitio, purchase; anguilla, eel; insula, isle, ste, island, island; insula, islet, islet; eyght and more contractedly ey, whence Oswjney, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to scan; namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and o according to the usual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not use x, writ cxamen, or cxamer is contracted into scan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abominus, ban; and indeed, apud examen they turned into sciam; for which we say swarwe, by inserting r to denote the murmuring; thesaurus, store; sedile, stool; vetis, wet; tudo, sweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; fucus, juice; catena, chain; caliga, calga; chaufe, chauffe, Fr. hose; extinguo, stanch, squench, quench, stint; foras, forth; species, spice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid; aisiv xvum, ay, age, ever; foccus, look; excerpo, scrape, scrabble, scrawl; extravagus, stray, straggle; collectum, clst, clutch; colligo, coil; recolligo, recoil; severo, swear; stridulus, shrill; procurator, proxy; pullo, to push; calamus, a quill; impetere, to impeach; augeo, auxi, wax; and venieo, vanui, wane; syllabare, to spell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumpli, crinkle.

Some may seem harsher, yet may not be rejected, for it at least appears, that some of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whose etymology is acknowledged by every body;

ENGLISH TONGUE.

body; as, Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sandy, Sosny; Elizabetha, Elizabeth, Elisabeth, Betty, Bess; Margareta, Margaret, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Pal, Malkin, Mawkin, Mawkes; Mathzeus, Mattha, Mattheus; Martha, Matt, Pat; Guilelmus, Wilbelmus, Girelamo, Guillaume, William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Wicken, Wicks, Weeks.

Thus cariophyllus, flos; gerofilo, Ital. giriflee, gilofer, Fr. gillflower, which the vulgar call julyflower, as if derived from the month July; petroselinum, parsley, portulaca, portlain; cydonium, quince; cydoniatum, quidney; persicum, peach; eruca, eruke, which they corrupt to ear-wig, as if it took its name from the ear; anallus geminus, a gimmel, or gimbal ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quelques chofes, kickshaws. Since the origin of these, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus disfigured many, especially as they so much affected monosyllables; and, to make them found the softer, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, transposing, and softening them.

But while we derive these from the Latin, I do not mean to say, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danish, Dutch, and Teutonick languages, and other dialects, and some taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards.

The same word according to its different significations, often has a different origin; as, to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence birth, born, bairn, comes from pario; and a bear, at least if it be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fish, from perca; but perch, a measure, from pertica, and likewise to perch. To spell is from syllaba; but spell, an enchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are so fixed in lands that none can pass them against the master's will, from expello; and spell, a messenger, from epistola; whence gospel, good-spel, or god-spel. Thus freeze, or freeze, from frigeo; but freeze, an architectonic word from xophorus; but freeze, for cloth, from Frisia, or perhaps from frigeo, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us, even monosyllables, compounded of two or more words, at least serving instead of compounds, and comprising the signification of more words than one; as, from serip and roll comes scroll; from prout and dance, prance; from st of the verb stey, or stand and stout, is made stout; from stout and hardy, sturdy; from sp of spit or spew, and out, comes spout; from the same sp with the termination in, is spin; and adding out, spin out; and from the same sp, with it, is spit, which only differs from spout in that it is smaller, and with less noise and force; but sputter is, because of the obscure s, something between spit and spout; and by reason of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noise, but obscurely confused: whereas sputter, on account of the sharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more distinct noise, in which it chiefly differs from sputter. From the same sp, and the termination ark, comes spark, signifying a single emission of fire with a noise; namely, sp the emission, or the more acute noise; and k, the mute consonant, intimates its being suddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative sparkle. The same sp, by adding r, that is spr, implies a more lively impetus of diffusing or expanding itself; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes spring; its vigour spr imports, its sharpness the termination ing, and lastly in acute and tremulous, ends in the mute consonant g, denotes the sudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary signification, of a single, not a complicated ex- lition. Hence we call spring whatever has an elastick force; as also a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to spring, to germinate; and spring, one of the four seasons. From the same spr and out, is formed sprout, and with the termination ig, sprig; of which the following, for the most part, is the difference: sprout, of a grosser found, imports fatter or crosser bud; sprig, of a slenderer found, denotes a smaller shoot. In like manner, from str of the verb strive, and out, comes strout and strut. From the same str, and the termination uggle, is made struggle; and this gl imports, but without any great noise, by reason of the obscure sound of the vowel u. In like manner, from throw and roll is made trull; and almost in the same sense is trundle, from throw or truff, and rundle. Thus graff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trot and dudge.

In these observations it is easy to discover great sagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much delected by the desire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often so made, that by the same licence any language may be deduced from any other.
2. That he makes no distinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and those which being copied from other languages, and therefore afford no example of the genius of the English language, or its laws of derivation.
3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harshness and violence, words apparently Teutonick; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.
4. That some of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The established practice of grammarians requires that I should here treat of the Syntax; but our language has so little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its construction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally omitted; and Johnson, whose desire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a syntax indispens-

A GRAMMAR OF THE

vably necessary, has published such petty observations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and person; as, Thou sleepest from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two substantives the noun possessive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The sun's heat.

Verbs transitive require an oblique case; as, He loves me; You fear him.

All propositions require an oblique case: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He says this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for those that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Prosody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buonmattei; that of the French by Desmarais; and that of the English by Wallis, Cooper, and even by John though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to insert them.

Prosody comprises orthoepey, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of versification.

PRONUNCIATION is just, when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent, or, which in English versification is the same, its proper quantity.

The sounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not easily to be given, being subject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I shall here propose.

1. Of dissyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented, as, chilicid, kingdom, eldest, acted, toilsome, lover, scoffer, farrer, foremost, zealous, fulness, godly, meekly, artist.

2. Dissyllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to begot, to beset, to bestow.

3. Of dissyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former syllable, as, to deicant, a deicant; to cement, a cement; to contract, a contract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs seldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter syllable; as, delight, perfume.

4. All dissyllables ending in y, as cranny; in our, as labour, favour; in ow, as willow, swallow, except, alow; in le, as battle, bible; in ish, as banish; in ck, as cambrick, cask; in ter, as to better; in age, as courage; in en, as fasten; in et, as quiet; accent the former syllable.

5. Dissyllable nouns in er, as cincher, butter, have the accent on the former syllable.

6. Dissyllable verbs terminating in a consonant and e final, as comprise, escape; or having a diphthong in the last syllable, as appease, reveal; or ending in two consonants, as attend; have the accent on the latter syllable.

7. Dissyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter syllable, have commonly their accent on the latter syllable, as applause; except words in ain, certain, mountain.

8. Trissyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a syllable, retain the accent of the radical word as loveliness, tenderness, contemner, swaggoner, physical, bespatter, commencing, commending, assurance.

9. Trissyllables ending in ous, as gracious, arduous; in al, as capital; in ion, as mention, accent the first.

10. Trissyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the first syllable, as countenance, continence, armament, imminent, elegant, propagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the last, as convivance, acquaintance; or the middle syllable hath a vowel before two consonants, as promulgate.

11. Trissyllables ending in y, as entity, specify, liberty, victory, subsidy, commonly accent the first syllable.

12. Trissyllables in re or le accent the first syllable, as legible, theatre, except disciple, and some words which have a position, as exámple, esjile.

13. Trissyllables in ude commonly accent the first syllable, as plénitude.

14. Trissyllables ending in ator or atour, as créateur, or having in the middle syllable a diphthong, as eudeavour; or a vowel before two consonants, as domestick, accent the middle syllable.

15. Trissyllables that have their accent on the last syllable are commonly French, as acquiesce, reparée, magazine, or words formed by prefixing one or two syllables to an acute syllable, as immature, overcharge.

16. Polysyllables, or words of more than three syllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as arrogating, continency, incontinently, commendable, communicableness.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as salvation, perturbation, concótion; words in atour, or ator on the penult, as dedicator.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the first syllable, as amicable, unless the second syllable have a vowel before two consonants, as combustible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxoribus, voluptuous.

20. Words ending in ly have their accent on the antepenult, as puffillanimity, activity.

These rules are not advanced as complete or invariable, but proposed as useful. Almost every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in English, as in other tongues, much must be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have escaped my observations.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of syllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verses are either iambick, as alóft, create; or trochaick, as boly, löfty.

Our iambick measure comprises verses Of four syllables.

ENGLISH TONGUE,

Most good, most fair,
 Or things as rare
 To call you's lost;
 For all the cost
 Words can bestow,
 So poorly show
 Upon your praise,
 That all the ways
 Sense hath, comes short.
 With ravish'd ears
 The monarch hears,

Drayton.

Dryden.

Of six,

This while we are abroad,
 Shall we not touch our lyre?
 Shall we not sing an ode?
 Shall that holy fire,
 In us that strongly glow'd,
 In this cold air expire?
 Though in the utmost Peak
 A while we do remain,
 Amongst the mountains bleak,
 Expos'd to sleet and rain,
 No sport our hours shall break,
 To exercise our vein.
 Who though bright Phœbus' beams
 Refresh the southern ground,
 And though the princely Thames
 With beauteous nymphs abound,
 And by old Camber's streams
 Be many wonders found;
 Yet many rivers clear
 Here glide in silver swathes,
 And what of all most dear,
 Buxton's delicious baths.
 Strong ale and noble cheer,
 T'assuage breem winter's scathes.
 In places far or near,
 Or famous, or obscure,
 Where wholeisom is the air,
 Or where the most impure,
 All times, and every where,
 The muse is still in ure.

Drayton.

Of eight which is the usual measure for short poems.

And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown, and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit, and nightly spell
 Of ev'ry star the sky does shew,
 And ev'ry herb that tips the dew.

Milton.

Of ten, which is the common measure of heroick and tragick poetry.

Fall in the midst of this created space,
 Betwixt heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place
 Confining on all three; with triple bound;
 Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
 And thither bring their undulating sound.
 The palace of loud Fame, her seat of pow'r;
 Plac'd on the summit of a lofty tower;
 A thousand winding entries long and wide
 Receive of fresh reports a flowing tide.
 A thousand crannies in the walls are made;
 Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.

'Tis built of brass, the better to diffuse
 The spreading sounds, and multiply the news;
 Where echo's in repeated echo's play:
 A mart for ever full; and open night and day.
 Nor silence is within, nor voice express,
 But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;
 Confus'd and chiding, like the hollow rore
 Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore;
 Or like the broken thunder, heard from far
 When Jove to distance drives the rolling war.
 The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
 Of crouds, or issuing forth, or entering in:
 A thorough-fare of news; where some devise Things never heard, some mingle truth with lies;

The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,
 Intent to hear, and eager to repeat. Dryden.

In all these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables; and every line considered by itself is more harmonious, as this rule is more strictly observed.

Our trochaick measures are

Of three syllables,

Here we may Think and pray
 Before death
 Stops our breath:
 Other joys
 Are but toys.

Of five,

In the days of old,
 Stories plainly told,
 Lovers felt annoy.

Of seven,

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
 Urge not thus your haughty birth,

In these measures the accent is to be placed on the odd syllables.

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton's Polyol-bion.

Of all the Cambian shires their heads that bear
 so high, [eye,

And farth't survey their soils with an ambitious Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchless crouds, [clouds,

The nearest that are said to kiss the wand'ring Especial audience craves, offended with the throng,

That she or all the rest neglected was so long;
 Alledging for herself, when through the Saxons pride,

The godlike race of Brute to Severn's setting side
 Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve Those whom devouring war else every where did grieve. [might,)

And when all Wales beside (by fortune or by Unto her ancient foe resign'd her ancient right,
 A constant maiden still the only did remain,
 The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain.
