This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google^{*} books

https://books.google.com

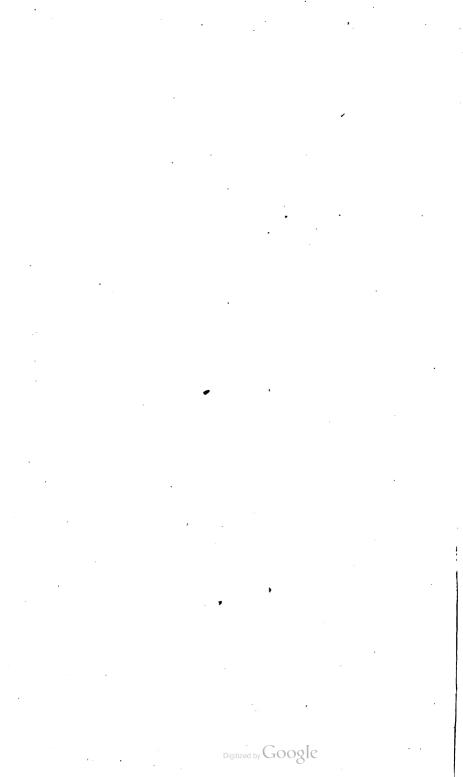

808. 65D169.

A. 2121:

ang ing see a second second

E S S A Y S

A N,D

TREATISES

ΟN

SEVERAL SUBJECTS.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

By DAVID HUME, Efq;

VOL. I.

CONTAINING

ESSAYS, MORAL, POLITICAL, and LITERARY.

A NEW EDITION.

LONDON:

Printed for T. CADELL, in the Strand: A. DONALDSON, in St. Paul's Church-yard; and W. CREECH, at Edinburgh.

MDCCLXXXIV.

652169 Digitized by Google

THE

CONTENTS OF THE

FÍRST VOLUME.

ESSAYS, MORAL, POLITICAL, and LITERARY,

PART I.

Effay	age
I. $\bigcap F$ the Delicacy of Tafte and Paffion	3
II. \mathbf{U} Of the Liberty of the Prefs	9
III. That Politicks may be reduced to a Science	13
IV. Of the First Principles of Government	2ģ
V. Of the Origin of Government	35
VI. Of the Independency of Parliament	4 I
VII. Whether the British Government inclines n	nóre
to abfolute Monarchy, or to a Republic	47
VIII. Of Parties in General	55
IX. Of the Parties of Great Britain	65
X. Of Superflition and Enthusiasm	75
XI. Of the Dignity or Meannels of Human	Nature	83
XII. Of Civil Liberty	91
XIII. Of Eloquence	IOI
XIV. Of the Rife and Progress of the Arts and	Sciences	115
XV. The Epicurean	143

CONTENTS.

Effay	Page
XVI. The Stoic	153
XVII. The Platonift	165
XVIII. The Sceptic	171
XIX. Of Polygamy and Divorces	195
XX. Of Simplicity and Refinement in Writing	g 207
XXI. Of national Characters	213
XXII. Of Tragedy	231
XXIII. Of the Standard of Tafte	241

PART II.

I. \frown F Commerce	269
I. O F Commerce II. O Of Refinement in the Arts	285
III. Of Money	29 9
IV. Of Interest	313
• V. Of the Balance of Trade	32 7
VI. Of the Jealoufy of Trade	347
VII. Of the Balance of Power	353
VIII. Of Taxes	36 3
IX. Of Public Credit	369
X. Of fome remarkable Cuftoms	3 ⁸ 7
XI. Of the Populousnels of Ancient Nations	397
XII. Of the Original Contract	47 I
XIII. Of Paffive Obedience	495
XIV. Of the Coalition of Parties	50I
XV. Of the Protestant Succession	511
XVI. Idea of a perfect Commonwealth	523

ESSAYS,

ESSAYS, MORAL, POLITICAL,

AND LITERARY.

PART I.*

* PUBLISHED in 1742?

Vol. I.

B

ESSAY Ι.

3

Of the DELICACY of TASTE and PASSION.

OME People are fubject to a certain delicacy of paffion, which makes them extremely fensible to all the accidents of life, and gives them a lively joy upon every profperous event, as well 'as a piercing grief, when they meet with misfortunes and adverfity. Favours and good offices eafily engage their friendship; while the fmallest injury provokes their refentment. Any honour or mark of diffinction elevates them above measure; but they are as fensibly touched with contempt. People of this character have, no doubt, more lively enjoyments, as well as more pungent forrows, than men of cool and fedate tempers : But, I believe, when every thing is balanced, there is no one, who would not rather be of the latter character, were he entirely master of his own disposition. Good or ill fortune is very little at our 'disposal: And when a person, that has this sensibility of temper, meets with any misfortune, his forrow or refentment takes entire possession of him, and deprives him of all relifh in the common occurrences of life; the right enjoyment of which forms the chief part of our happinefs. Great pleafures are much lefs frequent than great pains; fo that a fenfible temper must meet with fewer trials in the former way than in the latter. Not to mention, that men of fuch lively paffions are apt to be tranfported beyond all bounds of prudence and difcretion, and and to take false steps in the conduct of life, which are often irretrievable.

B 2

There is a delicacy of tafte observable in some men. which very much refembles this delicacy of paffion, and produces the fame fenfibility to beauty and deformity of every kind, as that does to profperity and adversity, obligations and injuries. When you prefent a poem or a picture to a man poffeffed of this talent, the delicacy of his feeling makes him be fenfibly touched with every part of it : nor are the mafterly ftrokes perceived with more exquifite relifh and fatisfaction, than the negligences or absurdities with difgust and uneafiness. A polite and judicious conversation affords him the highest entertainment; rudeness or impertinence is as great a punishment to him. In fhort, delicacy of tafte has the fame effect as delicacy of paffion : It enlarges the fphere both of our happiness and milery, and makes us fensible to pains as well as pleafures, which efcape the reft of mankind.

I believe, however, every one will agree with me, that, notwithstanding this refemblance, delicacy of taste is as much to be defired and cultivated, as delicacy of paffion is to be lamented, and to be remedied, if poffible. The good or ill accidents of life are very little at our disposal; but we are pretty much masters what books we fhall read, what diversions we shall partake of, and what company we shall keep. Philosophers have endeavoured to render happiness entirely independent of every thing external. That degree of perfection is imposfible to be attained : But every wife man will endeavour to place his happiness on fuch objects chiefly as depend upon himself: And that is not to be attained fo much by any other means as by this delicacy of fentiment. When a man is poffeffed of that talent, he is more happy by what pleafes his tafte, than by what gratifies his appetites, and receives more enjoyment enjoyment from a poem or a piece of reasoning than the most expensive luxury can afford.

DELICACY of TASTE.

Whatever connexion there may be originally between these two species of delicacy, I am persuaded, that nothing is fo proper to cure us of this delicacy of paffion, as the cultivating of that higher and more refined tafte, which enables us to judge of the characters of men, of compositions of genius, and of the productions of the nobler arts. A greater or lefs relifh for those obvious beauties, which strike the senses, depends entirely upon the greater or lefs fenfibility of the temper: But with regard to the sciences and liberal arts, a fine taste is, in some measure, the same with strong sense, or at least depends fo much upon it, that they are infeparable. In order to judge aright of a composition of genius, there are fo many views to be taken in, fo many circumstances to be compared, and fuch a knowledge of human nature requifite, that no man, who is not possesfied of the foundeft judgment, will ever make a tolerable critic in fuch performances. And this is a new reason for cultivating a relifh in the liberal arts. Our judgment will frengthen by this exercise : We shall form juster notions of life: Many things, which pleafe or afflict others, will appear to us too frivolous to engage our attention : And we fhall lofe by degrees that fenfibility and delicacy of paffion, which is fo incommodious.

But perhaps I have gone too far, in faying that a cultivated tafte for the polite arts extinguishes the passions, and renders us indifferent to those objects, which are fo fondly pursued by the rest of mankind. On farther reflection, I find, that it rather improves our fensibility for all the tender and agreeable passions; at the fame time that it renders the mind incapable of the rougher and more boisterous emotions.

Ingenua

B₃

2

ESSAY I.

Ingenuas didicisse fideliter artes, Emollit mores, nec sinit esse feros.

A

For this, I think there may be affigned two very natural reafons. In the firft place, nothing is fo improving to the temper as the fludy of the beauties, either of poetry, eloquence, mufic, or painting. They give a certain elegance of fentiment to which the reft of mankind are ftrangers. The emotions which they excite are foft and tender. They draw off the mind from the hurry of bufinefs and intereft; cherifh reflection; difpofe to tranquillity; and produce an agreeable melancholy, which, of all difpofitions of the mind, is the beft fuited to love and friendfhip.

In the fecond place, a delicacy of tafte is favourable to love and friendship, by confining our choice to few people, and making us indifferent to the company and conversation of the greater part of men. You will feldom find that mere men of the world, whatever ftrong fense they may be endowed with, are very nice in diffinguishing characters, or in marking those infensible differences and gradations, which make one man preferable to another. Any one, that has competent fense, is sufficient for their entertainment : They talk to him, of their pleafure and affairs, with the fame franknefs that they would to another; and finding many, who are fit to fupply his place, they never feel any vacancy or want in his abfence. But to make use of the allusion of a celebrated French * author, the judgment may be compared to a clock or watch, where the most ordinary machine is fufficient to tell the hours; but the most elaborate alone

* Monf. FONTENELLE, Pluralité des Mondes. Soir 6.

Digitized by Google

can

DELICACY of TASTE.

can point out the minutes and feconds, and diffinguifh 'the fmalleft differences of time. One that has well digefted his knowledge both of books and men, has little enjoyment but in the company of a few felect companions. He feels too fenfibly, how much all the reft of mankind fall fhort of the notions which he has entertained. And, his affections being thus confined within a narrow circle, no wonder he carries them further, than if they were more general and undiffinguifhed. The gaiety and frolic of a bottle companion improves with him into a folid friendfhip: And the ardours of a youthful appetite become an elegant paffion.

B 4

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

(9)

ESSAY II.

Of the LIBERTY of the PRESS,

NOTHING is more apt to furprize a foreigner. than the extreme liberty, which we enjoy in this country, of communicating whatever we pleafe to the public, and of openly cenfuring every measure, entered into by the king or his ministers. If the administration refolve upon war, it is affirmed, that, either wilfully or ignorantly, they miftake the interefts of the nation, and that peace, in the prefent fituation of affairs, is infinitely preferable. If the paffion of the ministers lie towards peace, our political writers breathe nothing but war and devastation, and represent the pacific conduct of the government as mean and pufillanimous. As this liberty is not indulged in any other government, either republican or monarchical; in HOLLAND and VENICE, more than in FRANCE or SPAIN; it may very naturally give occasion to a queftion, How it happens that GREAT BRITAIN alone enjoys this peculiar privilege?

The reason, why the laws indulge us in fuch a liberty feems to be derived from our mixed form of government, which is neither wholly monarchical, nor wholly republican. It will be found, if I mistake not, a true observation in politics, that the two extremes in government, liberty and flavery, commonly approach nearess to each other; and that, as you depart from the extremes, and mix a little of monarchy with liberty, the government becomes becomes always the more free; and, on the other hand, when you mix a little of liberty with monarchy, the yoke becomes always the more grievous and intolerable. In a government, such as that of FRANCE, which is absolute, and where law, cuftom, and religion concur, all of them, to make the people fully fatisfied with their condition, the monarch cannot entertain any jealouly against his subjects, and therefore is apt to indulge them in great liberties both of fpeech and action. In a government altogether republican, fuch as that of HOLLAND, where there is no magistrate so eminent as to give jealouly to the state, there is no danger in intrusting the magistrates with large difcretionary powers; and though many advantages refult from fuch powers, in preferving peace and order, yet they lay a confiderable reftraint on men's actions, and make every private citizen pay a great respect to the government. Thus it feems evident, that the two extremes of abfolute monarchy and of a republic, approach near to each other in fome material circumstances. In the first, the magistrate has no jealousy of the people : in the fecond, the people have none of the magistrate: Which want of jealoufy begets a mutual confidence and truft in both cafes, and produces a fpecies of liberty in monarchies, and of arbitrary power in republics.

ESSAY II.

To justify the other part of the foregoing observation, that, in every government, the means are most wide of each other, and that the mixtures of monarchy and liberty render the yoke either more easy or more grievous; I, must take notice of a remark in TACITUS with regard to the ROMANS under the emperors, that they neither could bear total flavery nor total liberty, Nec totam fervitutem, nec totam libertatem pati possibility. This remark a celebrated poet has translated and applied to the ENGLISH

Digitized by Google

to

LIBERTY of the PRESS.

ENGLISH, in his lively defcription of queen ELIZABETH'S policy and government, Et fit aimer son joug à l'Anglois indompt', Qui ne peut ni servir, ni vivre en liberté. HENRIADE, liv. I.

According to these remarks, we are to confider the ROMAN government under the emperors as a mixture of defpotifm and liberty, where the defpotifm prevailed; and the ENGLISH government as a mixture of the fame kind, where the liberty predominates. The confequences are conformable to the foregoing observation; and such as may be expected from those mixed forms of government, which beget a mutual watchfulnefs and jealoufy. The ROMAN emperors were, many of them, the most frightful tyrants that ever difgraced human nature; and it is evident, that their cruelty was chiefly excited by their jealouly, and by their observing that all the great men of ROME bore with impatience the dominion of a family, which, but a little before, was no wife fuperior to their On the other hand, as the republican part of the own. government prevails in ENGLAND, though with a great mixture of monarchy, it is obliged, for its own prefervation, to maintain a watchful jealoufy over the magistrates, to remove all difcretionary powers, and to fecure every one's life and fortune by general and inflexible laws. No action must be deemed a crime but what the law has plainly determined to be fuch : No crime must be imputed to a man but from a legal proof before his judges; and even these judges must be his fellow-subjects, who are obliged, by their own interest, to have a watchful eye over the encroachments and violence of the ministers. From these causes it proceeds, that there is as much liberty, and

ÌĮ.

and even, perhaps, licentiousness in GREAT BRITAIN, as there were formerly flavery and tyranny in ROME.

These principles account for the great liberty of the prefs in thefe kingdoms, beyond what is indulged in any other government. It is apprehended, that arbitrary power would steal in upon us, were we not careful to prevent its progrefs, and were there not an eafy method of conveying the alarm from one end of the kingdom to the other. The fpirit of the people must frequently be rouzed, in order to curb the ambition of the court; and the dread of rouzing this spirit must be employed to prevent that ambition. Nothing fo effectual to this purpofe as the liberty of the prefs, by which all the learning, wit, and genius of the nation may be employed on the fide of freedom, and every one be animated to its defence. As long, therefore, as the republican part of our government can maintain itself against the monarchical, it will naturally be careful to keep the prefs open, as of importance to its own prefervation.

It must however be allowed, that the unbounded liberty of the prefs, though it be difficult, perhaps impossible, to propose a fuitable remedy for it, is one of the evils, attending those mixt forms of government.

Digitized by Google

(13)

ESSAY III.

That POLITICS may be reduced to a SCIENCE.

I T is a queftion with feveral, whether there be any effential difference between one form of government and another ? and, whether every form may not become good or bad, according as it is well or ill adminiftered * ? Were it once admitted, that all governments are alike, and that the only difference confifts in the character and conduct of the governors, moft political difputes would be at an end, and all Zeal for one conflitution above another, muft be efteemed mere bigotry and folly. But, though a friend to moderation, I cannot forbear condemning this fentiment, and fhould be forry to think, that human affairs admit of no greater flability, than what they receive from the cafual humours and characters of particular men.

It is true; those who maintain, that the goodness of all government confists in the goodness of the administration, may cite many particular instances in history, where the very fame government, in different hands, has varied fuddenly into the two opposite extremes of good and bad. Compare the FRENCH government under HENRY III. and under HENRY IV. Oppression, levity, artifice on the part of the rulers; faction, fedition, treachery, rebellion, disloyalty on the part of the fubjects: These compose the character of the former miserable æra. But when the patriot and heroic prince, who fucceeded, was once finally feated on the throne, the government, the people, every thing feemed to be totally changed; and all from the difference of the temper and conduct of thefe two fovereigns. Inftances of this kind may be multiplied, almost without number, from ancient as well as modern history, foreign as well as domestic.

Digitized by Google

* For forms of government let fools conteft, Whate'er is best administer'd is best.

> Essay on Man, Book 3. when

But here it may be proper to make a diffinction. All absolute governments must very much depend on the administration; and this is one of the great inconveniences attending that form of government. But a republican and free government would be an obvious abfurdity, if the particular checks and controuls, provided by the conftitution, had really no influence, and made it not the interest, even of bad men, to act for the public Such is the intention of these forms of govern good. ment, and fuch is their real effect, where they are wifely conflituted: As on the other hand, they are the fource of all diforder, and of the blackeft crimes, where either skill or honesty has been wanting in their original frame and inftitution.

So great is the force of laws, and of particular forms of government, and fo little dependence have they on the humours and tempers of men, that confequences almost as general and certain may fometimes be deduced from them, as any which the mathematical fciences afford us.

The conftitution of the ROMAN republic gave the whole legiflative power to the people, without allowing a negative voice either to the nobility or confuls. This unbounded power they possified in a collective, not in a representative body. The confequences were: When the people, by fuccess and conquest, had become very numerous, and had spread themselves to a great distance from from the capital, the city-tribes, though the most contemptible, carried almost every vote: They were, therefore, most cajoled by every one that affected popularity: They were supported in idleness by the general distribution of corn, and by particular bribes, which they received from almost every candidate: By this means, they became every day more licentious, and the CAMPUS MARTIUS was a perpetual scene of tumult and sedition: Armed flaves were introduced among these rascally citizens; fo that the whole government fell into anarchy, and the greatest happines, which the ROMANS could look for, was the despotic power of the CÆSARS. Such are the effects of democracy without a representative.

Digitized by Google

Politics a Science.

A Nobility may posses the whole, or any part of the legislative power of a state, in two different ways. Either every nobleman fhares the power as part of the whole body; or the whole body enjoys the power as composed of parts; which have each a diffinct power and authority. The VENETIAN ariftocracy is an inftance of the first kind of government: The Polish of the fecond. In the VENETIAN government the whole body of nobility posses the whole power, and no nobleman has any authority which he receives not from the whole. In the POLISH government every nobleman, by means of his fiefs, has a diffinct hereditary authority over his vaffals, and the whole body has no authority but what it receives from the concurrence of its parts. The different operations and tendencies of these two species of government might be made apparent even a priori. A VENETIAN nobility is preferable to a POLISH, let the humours and education of men be ever fo much varied. A nobility who poffers their power in common, will preferve peace and order, both among themselves, and their subjects; and no member can have authority enough to controut the the laws for a moment. The nobles will preferve their authority over the people, but without any grievous tyranny, or any breach of private property; becaufe fuch a tyrannical government promotes not the interefts of the whole body, however it may that of fome individuals. There will be a diffinction of rank between the nobility and people, but this will be the only diffinction in the ftate. The whole nobility will form one body, and the whole people another, without any of those private feuds and animolities, which spread ruin and defolation every where. It is eafy to see the difadvantages of a Polish nobility in every one of these particulars.

Digitized by Google

İţ

It is poffible to to conftitute a free government, as that a fingle perfon, call him doge, prince, or king, fhall poffefs a large share of power, and shall form a proper balance or counterpoife to the other parts of the legisla-This chief magistrate may be either elective or ture. hereditary; and though the former inftitution may, to a fuperficial view, appear the most advantageous; yet a more accurate infpection will discover in it greater inconveniencies than in the latter, and fuch as are founded on caufes and principles eternal and immutable. The filling of the throne, in fuch a government, is a point of too great and too general interest, not to divide the whole people into factions: Whence a civil war, the greateft of ills, may be apprehended, almost with certainty, upon every vacancy. The prince elected muft be either a Foreigner or a Native : The former will be ignorant of the people whom he is to govern; fuspicious of his new fubjects, and fufpected by them; giving his confidence entirely to ftrangers, who will have no other care but of enriching themselves in the quickest manner, while their mafter's favour and authority are able to support them. A native will carry into the throne all his his private animofities and friendfhips, and will never be viewed in his elevation; without exciting the fentiment of envy in thofe, who formerly confidered him as their equal. Not to mention that a crown is too high a reward ever to be given to merit alone, and will always induce the candidates to employ force, or money, or intrigue, to procure the votes of the electors: So that fuch an election will give no better chance for fuperior merit in the prince, than if the flate had trufted to birth alone for determining their fovereign.

Politics a Science.

It may therefore be pronounced as an universal axiom in politics, That an hereditary prince, a nobility without vaffals, and a people voting by their reprefentatives, form the beft MONARCHY, ARISTOCRACY, and DEMOCRACY. But in order to prove more fully, that politics admit of general truths, which are invariable by the humour or education either of subject or sovereign, it may not be amiss to observe some other principles of this science, which may seem to deferve that character.

It may eafily be observed, that, though free governments have been commonly the most happy for those who partake of their freedom; yet are they the most ruinous and oppreffive to their provinces: And this obfervation may, I believe, be fixed as a maxim of the kind we are here speaking of. When a monarch extends his dominions by conquest, he foon learns to confider his old and his new fubjects as on the fame footing; becaufe, in reality, all his fubjects are to him the fame, except the few friends and favourites, with whom he is perfonally acquainted. He does not, therefore, make any diffinction between them in his general laws; and, at the fame time, is careful to prevent all particular acts of oppreffion on the one as well as on the other. But a free flate neceffarily makes a great diffinction, and muft always do VOL. I. С 10, fo, till men learn to love their neighbours as well as themfelves. The conquerors, in fuch a government, are all legiflators, and will be fure to contrive matters, by restrictions on trade, and by taxes, so as to draw some private, as well as public, advantage from their conquests. Provincial governors have also a better chance, in a republic, to escape with their plunder, by means of bribery or intrigue; and their fellow-citizens, who find their own flate to be enriched by the fpoils of the fubject provinces, will be the more inclined to tolerate fuch abufes. Not to mention, that it is a neceffary precaution in a free state to change the governors frequently; which obliges these temporary tyrants to be more expeditious and rapacious, that they may accumulate fufficient wealth before they give place to their fucceffors. What cruel tyrants were the ROMANS over the world during the time of their commonwealth ! It is true, they had laws to prevent oppreffion in their provincial magiftrates : but CICERO informs us, that the ROMANS could not better confult the interefts of the provinces than by repealing these very laws. For, in that case, says he, our magistrates, having entire impunity, would plunder no more than would fatisfy their own rapaciousnes; whereas, at prefent, they must also fatisfy that of their judges, and of all the great men in ROME, of whole protection they fland in need. Who can read of the cruelties and oppressions of VERRES without horror and aftonishment? And who is not touched with indignation to hear, that, after CICERO had exhausted on that abandoned criminal all the thunders of his eloquence, and had prevailed for far as to get him condemned to the utmost extent of the laws; yet that cruel tyrant lived peaceably to old age, in opulence and cafe, and, thirty years afterwards, was put into the profeription by MARK ANTHONY, on 18

Digitized by Google

account

POLITICS a SCIENCE.

account of his exorbitant wealth, where he fell with CICERO himfelf, and all the most virtuous men of ROME? After the diffolution of the commonwealth, the ROMAN voke became easier upon the provinces, as TACITUS informs us*; and it may be observed, that many of the worft emperors, DOMITIAN +, for inftance; were careful to prevent all oppression on the provinces. In † TIBEkius's time. GAUL was effeemed richer than ITALY itfelf: Nor, do I find, during the whole time of the ROMAN monarchy, that the empire became lefs rich or populous in any of its provinces; though indeed its valour and military difcipline were always upon the decline. The oppression and tyranny of the CARTHAGINIANS over their subject states in AFRICA went so far, as we learn from POLYBIUS ||, that, not content with exacting the half of all the produce of the land; which of itfelf was a very high rent, they also loaded them with many other taxes. If we pass from ancient to modern times, we shall still find the observation to hold. The provinces of absolute monarchies are always better treated than those of free states. Compare the Pais conquis of FRANCE with IRELAND, and you will be convinced of this truth t though this latter kingdom, being, in a good meafure. peopled from ENGLAND, posselles fo many rights and privileges as fhould naturally make it challenge better treatment than that of a conquered province. CORSICA is also an obvious instance to the fame purpole.

· Ann. lib. 1. cap. 2.

† SUET. in vita DOMIT.

1 Egregium refumendæ libertati tempus, fi ipfi florentes, quam inops ITALIA, quam invellis urbana pl. bs, nibil validum in exercicibus, nifi quod externum cogitarent. TACIT. Ann. lib. 2.

Digitized by Google

| Lib. 1. cap. 72.

C 2

There

İġ

There is an observation in MACHIAVEL, with regard to the conquests of ALEXANDER the Great, which, I think, may be regarded as one of those eternal political truths, which no time nor accidents can vary. It may feem strange, fays that politician, that fuch fudden conquefts, as those of ALEXANDER, should be posselfed to peaceably by his fucceffors, and that the PERSIANS, during all the confusions and civil wars among the GREEKS, never made the smallest effort towards the recovery of their former independent government. To fatisfy us concerning the caufe of this remarkable event, we may confider, that a monarch may govern his fubjects in two different ways. He may either follow the maxims of the eastern princes, and stretch his authority fo far as to leave no diffinction of rank among his fubjects, but what proceeds immediately from himfelf; no advantages of birth; no hereditary honours and possessions; and, in a word, no credit among the people, except from his commiffion alone. Or a monarch may exert his power after a milder manner, like other EUROPEAN princes; and leave other fources of honour, befide his fmile and favour: Birth, titles, possessions, valour, integrity, knowledge, or great and fortunate atchievements. In the former species of government, after a conquest, it is impoffible ever to fhake off the yoke; fince no one poffeffes, among the people, fo much perfonal credit and authority as to begin fuch an enterprize : Whereas, in the latter, the least misfortune, or discord among the victors, will encourage the vanquished to take arms, who have leaders ready to prompt and conduct them in every undertaking *.

* See NOTE [A].

Digitized by Google

Such

POLITICS & SCIENCE.

Such is the reafoning of MACHIAVEL, which feems folid and conclusive; though I wish he had not mixed falsehood with truth, in afferting, that monarchies, governed according to eaftern policy, though more eafily kept when once fubdued, yet are the most difficult to fubdue; fince they cannot contain any powerful fubject, whole difcontent and faction may facilitate the enterprizes of an enemy. For befides, that fuch a tyrannical government enervates the courage of men, and renders them indifferent towards the fortunes of their fovereign; befides this, I fay, we find by experience, that even the temporary and delegated authority of the generals and magistrates; being always, in fuch governments, as abfolute within its fphere, as that of the prince himfelf; is able, with barbarians, accuftomed to a blind fubmiffion, to produce the most dangerous and fatal revolutions, So that, in every respect, a gentle government is preferable, and gives the greatest fecurity to the fovereign as well as to the fubject.

Legislators, therefore, ought not to trust the future government of a flate entirely to chance, but ought to provide a fystem of laws to regulate the administration of public affairs to the latest posterity. Effects will always correspond to causes; and wife regulations, in any commonwealth, are the most valuable legacy that can be left to future ages. In the smallest court or office, the stated forms and methods, by which bufiness must be conducted, are found to be a confiderable check on the natural depravity of mankind. Why fhould not the cafe be the fame in public affairs ? Can we afcribe the ftability and wildom of the VENETIAN government, through fo many ages, to any thing but the form of government ? And is it not eafy to point out those defects in the original C 3 conflitution, conftitution, which produced the tumultuous governments of ATHENS and ROME, and ended at last in the ruin of thefe two famous republics ? And fo little dependance has this affair on the humours and education of particular men, that one part of the fame republic may be wifely conducted, and another weakly, by the very fame men, merely on account of the difference of the forms and inflitutions by which these parts are regulated. Hiftorians inform us that this was actually the cafe with GE-For while the ftate was always full of fedition, NOA. and tumult, and diforder, the bank of St. GEORGE, which had become a confiderable part of the people, was conducted, for feveral ages, with the utmost integrity and wifdom *.

Digitized by Google

ESSAY III.

The ages of greatest public spirit are not always most eminent for private virtue. Good laws may beget order and moderation in the government, where the manners and customs have instilled little humanity or justice into the tempers of men. The most illustrious period of the ROMAN history, confidered in a political view, is that between the beginning of the first and end of the last PUNIC war; the due balance between the nobility and people being then fixed by the contests of the tribunes, and not being yet lost by the extent of conquests. Yet at this very time, the horrid practice of possioning was fo common, that, during part of a feason, a Prætor punished • Essempio veramente raro, & da Filosofi intante loro imaginate & vedute Republiche mai non trovato, vedere dentro ad un medesimo cerchio, fia medesimi cittadini, la liberta, & la tirannide, la vita civile & la corotta, la giustitia & la luenza; perche quello ordine solo mantiere quella citta piena di costumi antichi & venerabili. E s'egli auveniste (che col temps, in ogni modo auverrà 1 que San Giorgio tutta quel la città occupasse, furrebhe quella una Republica piu dalla VENETIANA memorabile. Della Hist. Florentinè, lib. 8.

Digitized by Google

capitally

capitally for this crime above three thousand * perfons in a part of ITALY; and found informations of this nature still multiplying upon him. There is a fimilar, or rather a worfe instance +, in the more early times of the commonwealth. So depraved in private life were that people, whom in their histories we fo much admire. I doubt not but they were really more virtuous during the time of the two Triumvirates; when they were tearing their common country to pieces, and spreading flaughter and defolation over the face of the earth, merely for the choice of tyrants \ddagger .

Here, then, is a fufficient inducement to maintain, with the utmost ZEAL, in every free flate, those forms and infitutions, by which liberty is fecured, the public good confulted, and the avarice or ambition of particular men reftrained and punished. Nothing does more honour to human nature, than to fee it fusceptible of fo noble a passion; as nothing can be a greater indication of meanness of heart in any man, than to see him destitute of it. A man who loves only himself, without regard to friendship and desert, merits the severest blame; and a man, who is only sufceptible of friendship, without public spirit, or a regard to the community, is deficient in the most material part of virtue.

But this is a fubject which needs not be longer infifted on at prefent. There are enow of zealots on both fides who kindle up the paffions of their partizans, and under

- T. LIVII, lib. 40. cap. 43.
- + Id. lib. 8. cap. 18.
- ‡ L'Aigle contre L'Aigle, ROMAINS contre ROMAINS, Combatans feulement pour le choix de tyrans. CORNEILLE.

Digitized by Google

Ç4

pretenco

pretence of public good, pursue the interests and ends of their particular faction. For my part, I shall always be more fond of promoting moderation than zeal; though perhaps the surface our zeal for the public. Let us therefore try, if it be possible, from the foregoing doctrine, to draw a lesson of moderation with regard to the parties, into which our country is at present divided; at the fame time, that we allow not this moderation to abate the industry and passion, with which every individual is bound to pursue the good of his country.

Those who either attack or defend a minister in such a government as ours, where the utmost liberty is allowed, always carry matters to an extreme, and exaggerate his merit or demerit with regard to the public. His enemies are fure to charge him with the greatest enormities, both in domeflic and foreign management; and there is no meannels or crime, of which, in their account, he is Unnecessary wars, scandalous treaties, not capable. profusion of public treasure, oppressive taxes, every kind of mal-administration is afcribed to him. To aggravate the charge, his pernicious conduct, it is faid, will extend its baneful influence even to posterity, by undermining the best constitution in the world, and difordering that wife fystem of laws, institutions, and customs, by which our anceftors, during fo many centuries, have been fo happily governed. He is not only a wicked minister in himfelf, but has removed every fecurity provided against wicked ministers for the future.

On the other hand, the partizans of the minister make his panegyric run as high as the accufation against him, and celebrate his wife, steady, and moderate conduct in every part part of his administration. The honour and interest of the nation supported abroad, public credit maintained at home, perfecution restrained, faction subdued; the merit of all these bleffings is ascribed folely to the minister. At the same time, he crowns all his other merits by a religious care of the best constitution in the world, which he has preferved in all its parts, and has transmitted entire, to be the happiness and security of the latest pokerity.

POLITICS 2 SCIENCE.

When this accufation and panegvric are received by the partizans of each party, no wonder they beget an extraordinary ferment on both fides, and fill the nation But I would fain perfuade with violent animolities. these party-zealots, that there is a flat contradiction both in the accufation and panegyric, and that it were impoffible for either of them to run fo high, were it not for this contradiction. If our conflitution be really that noble fabric, the pride of BRITAIN, the envy of our neighbours, raifed by the labour of fo many centuries, repaired at the expence of fo many millions, and cemented by fuch a profusion of blood*; I fay, if our conftitution does in any degree deferve these eulogies, it would never have suffered a wicked and weak minister to govern triumphantly for a course of twenty years, when opposed by the greatest geniuses in the nation, who exercised the utmost liberty of tongue and pen, in parliament, and in their frequent appeals to the people. But, if the minister be wicked and weak, to the degree fo ftrenuoufly infifted on, the conftitution must be faulty in its original principles, and he cannot confiftently be charged with undermining the Differtation on parties, Letter 10.

Digitized by Google

beft

beft form of government in the world. A conftitution is only fo far good, as it provides a remedy against maladministration; and if the BRITISH, when in its greatest vigour, and repaired by two fuch remarkable events, as the Revolution and Acceffion, by which our ancient royal family was facrificed to it; if our conflictution, I fay, with fo great advantages, does not, in fact, provide any fuch remedy, we are rather beholden to any minister who undermines it, and affords us an opportunity of erecting a better in its place.

I would employ the fame topics to moderate the zeal of those who defend the minister. Is our constitution for excellent? Then a change of ministry can be no fuch dreadful event; fince it is effential to fuch a constitution, in every ministry, both to preferve itfelf from violation, and to prevent all enormities in the administration. Is our constitution very bad? Then so extraordinary a jealoufy and apprehenfion, on account of changes, is ill placed; and a man fhould no more be anxious in this cafe, than a hufband, who had married a woman -from the flews, fhould be watchful to prevent her infidelity. Public affairs, in such a government, must neceffarily go to confusion, by whatever hands they are conducted; and the zeal of patriots is in that cafe much lefs requifite than the patience and fubmiffion of philofophers. The virtue and good intentions of CATO and BRUTUS are highly laudable; but to what purpose did their zeal ferve? Only to haften the fatal period of the ROMAN government, and render its convulsions and dying agonies more violent and painful.

I would not be understood to mean, that public affairs deferve no care and attention at all. Would men be moderate.

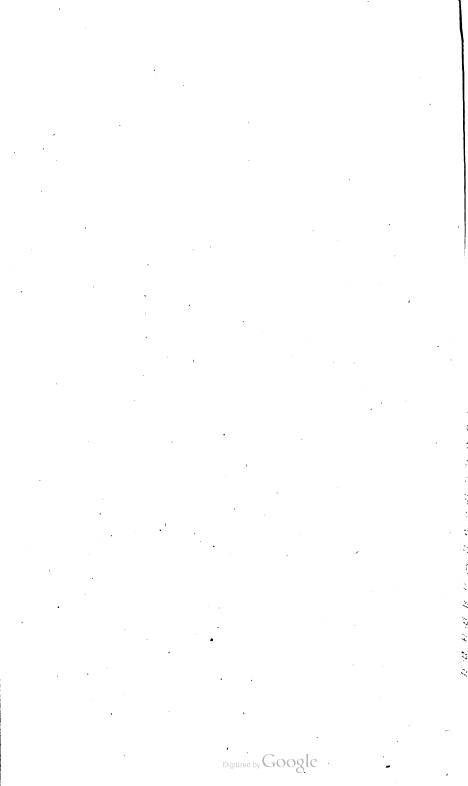

Digitized by Google

POLITICS a SCIENCE.

moderate and confistent, their claims might be admitted; at least might be examined. The country-party might ftill affert, that our confitution, though excellent, will admit of mal-administration to a certain degree; and therefore, if the minister be bad, it is proper to oppose him with a fuitable degree of zeal. And, on the other hand, the court-party may be allowed, upon the fupposition that the minister were good, to defend, and with fome zeal too, his administration. I would only persuade men not to contend, as if they were fighting pro aris & focis, and change a good conflitution into a bad one, by the violence of their factions.

I have not here confidered any thing that is perfonal in the prefent controverfy. In the beft civil conftitution, where every man is reftrained by the most rigid laws, it is eafy to difcover either the good or bad intentions of a minister, and to judge, whether his perfonal character deferve love or hatred. But such questions are of little importance to the public, and lay those, who employ their pens upon them, under a just sufficience either of malevolence or of flattery.

Digitized by Google

(29)

ESSAY IV.

Of the FIRST PRINCIPLES of GOVERNMENT.

TOTHING appears more furprizing to thole, who confider human affairs with a philosophical eye, than the eafinefs with which the many are governed by the few; and the implicit fubmiffion, with which men refign their own fentiments and paffions to those of their rulers. When we enquire by what means this wonder is effected, we fhall find, that, as FORCE is always on the fide of the governed, the governors have nothing to support them but opinion. It is, therefore, on opinion only that government is founded; and this maxim extends to the most despotic and most military governments, as well as to the most free and most popular. The foldan of EGYPT, or the emperor of Rome. might drive his harmless subjects, like brute beafts, against their fentiments and inclination : But he must, at least, have led his mamalukes, or prætorian bands, like men, by their opinion.

Opinion is of two kinds, to wit, opinion of INTEREST, and opinion of RIGHT. By opinion of interest, I chiefly understand the sense of the general advantage which is reaped from government; together with the persuasion, that the particular government, which is established, is equally advantageous with any other that could easily be settled. When this opinion prevails among the generality of

Digitized by Google

of a flate, or among those who have the force in their hands, it gives great security to any government.

Right is of two kinds, right to Power and right to PROPERTY. What prevalence opinion of the first kind has over mankind, may eafily be underftood, by observing the attachment which all nations have to their ancient government, and even to those names which have had the fanction of antiquity. Antiquity always begets the opinion of right; and whatever difadvantageous fentiments we may entertain of mankind, they are always found to be prodigal both of blood and treasure in the maintenance of public justice. There is, indeed, no particular, in which, at first fight, there may appear a greater contradiction in the frame of the human mind than the prefent. When men act in a faction, they are apt, without fhame or remorfe, to neglect all the ties of honour and morality; in order to ferve their party; and yet, when a faction is formed upon a point of right or principle, there is no occasion, where men discover a greater obstinacy, and a more determined sense of justice and equity. The fame focial disposition of mankind is the caufe of these contradictory appearances.

It is fufficiently underftood, that the opinion of right to property is of moment in all matters of government. A noted author has made property the foundation of all government; and most of our political writers feem inclined to follow him in that particular. This is carrying the matter too far; but ftill it must be owned, that the opinion of right to property has a great influence in this fubject.

Digitized by Google

Upon ,

PRINCIPLES of GOVERNMENT.

Upon these three opinions, therefore, of public interest; of right to power, and of right to property, are all governments founded, and all authority of the few over the many. There are indeed other principles, which add force to these, and determine, limit, or alter their operation; fuch as self-interest, fear, and affection: But still we may affert, that these other principles can have no influence alone, but suppose the antecedent influence of those opinions above-mentioned. They are, therefore, to be esteemed the secondary, not the original principles of government.

For, first, as to self-interest, by which I mean the expectation of particular rewards, diffinct from the general protection which we receive from government, it is evident that the magistrate's authority must be antecedently established, at least be hoped for, in order to produce this expectation. The prospect of reward may augment his authority with regard to fome particular perfons; but can never give birth to it, with regard to the public. Men naturally look for the greatest favours from their friends and acquaintance; and therefore, the hopes of any confiderable number of the flate would never center in any particular fet of men, if these men had no other title to magistracy, and had no separate influence over the opinions of mankind. The fame obfervation may be extended to the other two principles of fear and affection. No man would have any reason to fear the fury of a tyrant, if he had no authority over any but from fear; fince, as a fingle man, his bodily force can reach but a small way, and all the farther power he posselies must be founded either on our own opinion, or on the prefumed opinion of others. And though affection to wildom and virtue in a fovereign extends very far, and and has great influence; yet he must antecedently be fuppofed invested with a public character, otherwise the public efteem will ferve him in no stead, nor will his virtue have any influence beyond a narrow sphere.

A Government may endure for feveral ages, though the balance of power, and the balance of property do not This chiefly happens, where any rank or order coincide. of the state has acquired a large share in the property; but, from the original conftitution of the government, has no thare in the power. Under what pretence would any individual of that order affume authority in public affairs? As men are commonly much attached to their ancient government, it is not to be expected, that the public would ever favour fuch usurpations. But where the original conflitution allows any fhare of power, though fmall, to an order of men, who posses a large share of the property, it is eafy for them gradually to ftretch their authority, and bring the balance of power to coincide with that of This has been the cafe with the house of property. commons in ENGLAND.

Moft writers, that have treated of the BRITISH government, have fuppofed, that, as the lower houfe reprefents all the commons of GREAT BRITAIN, its weight in the fcale is proportioned to the property and power of all whom it reprefents. But this principle muft not be received as abfolutely true. For though the people are apt to attach themfelves more to the houfe of commons, than to any other member of the conflictuion: that houfe being chofen by them as their reprefentatives, and as the public guardians of their liberty; yet are there inftances where the houfe, even when in oppofition to the crown, has not been followed by the people; as we may particularly obferve of the tary houfe of commons in the 32 .

Digitized by Google

PRINCIPLES OF GOVERNMENT.

the reign of king WILLIAM. Were the members obliged to receive inftructions from their conftituents, like the DUTCH deputies, this would entirely alter the cafe; and if fuch immenfe power and riches, as those of all the commons of GREAT BRITAIN, were brought into the fcale, it is not eafy to conceive, that the crown could either influence that multitude of people, or withstand that overbalance of property. It is true, the crown has great influence over the collective body in the elections of members; but were this influence, which at prefent is only exerted once in feven years, to be employed in bringing over the people to every vote, it would foon be wasted; and no skill, popularity, or revenue could support it. I must, therefore, be of opinion, that an alteration in this particular would introduce a total alteration in our government, and would foon reduce it to a pure republic; and, perhaps, to a republic of no inconvenient form. For though the people, collected in a body like the ROMAN tribes, be quite unfit for government, yet, when dispersed in small bodies, they are more fusceptible both of reason and order; the force of populat currents and tides is, in a great measure, broken; and the public interest may be pursued with some method and conftancy. But it is needless to reason any farther concerning a form of government, which is never likely to have place in GREAT BRITAIN, and which feems not to be the aim of any party amongst us. Let us cherish and improve our ancient government as much as poffible, without encouraging a paffion for fuch dangerous novelties.

Digitized by Google

(35)

ESSAY V.

Of the ORIGIN of GOVERNMENT:

AN, born in a family, is compelled to maintain fociety, from neceffity, from natural inclination, and from habit. The fame creature, in his farther progress, is engaged to establish political fociety, in order to administer justice; without which there can be no peace among them, nor fafety, nor mutual intercourfe. We are, therefore, to look upon all the vaft apparatus of our government, as having ultimately no other object or purpose but the distribution of justice, or, in other words, the fupport of the twelve judges. Kings and parliaments, fleets and armies, officers of the court and revenue, ambassadors, ministers, and privy-counfellors, are all fubordinate in their end to this part of adminiftration. Even the clergy, as their duty leads them to inculcate morality, may justly be thought, fo far as regards this world, to have no other useful object of their institution.

All men are fenfible of the neceffity of juffice to maintain peace and order ; and all men are fenfible of the neceffity of peace and order for the maintenance of fociety. Yet, notwithftanding this flrong and obvious neceffity, fuch is the frailty or perverfenels of our nature ! it is impossible to keep men, faithfully and unerringly, in the paths of juffice. Some extraordinary circumstances may happen, in which a man finds his in-D 2 terefts to be more promoted by fraud or rapine, than hurt by the breach which his injuffice makes in the focial union. But much more frequently, he is feduced from his great and important, but diftant interefts, by the allurement of prefent, though often very frivolous temptations. This great weaknefs is incurable in human nature.

Men muft, therefore, endeavour to palliate what they cannot cure. They muft inflitute fome perfons, under the appellation of magistrates, whose peculiar office it is, to point out the decrees of equity, to punish tranfgreffors, to correct fraud and violence, and to oblige men, however reluctant, to confult their own real and permanent interests. In a word, OBEDIENCE is a new duty which must be invented to support that of JUSTICE; and the ties of equity must be corroborated by those of allegiance.

' But fill, viewing matters in an abstract light, it may be thought, that nothing is gained by this alliance, and that the factitious duty of obedience, from its very nature, lays as feeble a hold of the human mind, as the primitive and natural duty of justice. Peculiar interests and prefent temptations may overcome the one as well as the other. They are equally exposed to the fame inconvenience. And the man, who is inclined to be a bad neighbour, must be led by the fame motives, well or ill understood, to be a bad citizen and subject. Not to mention, that the magistrate himfelf may often be negligent, or partial, or unjust in his administration.

Experience, however, proves, that there is a great difference between the cafes. Order in fociety, we find, is much better maintained by means of government; and our duty to the magistrate is more strictly guarded

Digitized by Google

by

ORIGIN OF GOVERNMENT.

by the principles of human nature, than our duty to our fellow-citizens. The love of dominion is fo ftrong in the breast of man, that many not only submit to, but court all the dangers, and fatigues, and cares of government; and men, once raifed to that flation, though often led aftray by private paffions, find, in ordinary cafes, a visible interest in the impartial administration of justice. The perfons, who first attain this distinction by the confent, tacit or express, of the people, must be endowed with superior personal qualities of valour, force, integrity, or prudence, which command respect and confidence : and, after government is eftablished, a regard to birth, rank, and station, has a mighty influence over men, and enforces the decrees of the magiftrate. The prince or leader exclaims against every disorder which difturbs his fociety. He fummons all his partizans and all men of probity to aid him in correcting and redreffing it: and he is readily followed by all indifferent perfons in the execution of his office. He foon acquires the power of rewarding these fervices; and in the progrefs of fociety, he establishes fubordinate ministers and often a military force, who find an immediate and a visible interest, in supporting his authority. Habit soon confolidates what other principles of human nature had imperfectly founded; and men, once accuftomed to obedience, never think of departing from that path, in which they and their anceftors have conftantly trod, and to which they are confined by fo many urgent and visible motives.

But though this progrefs of human affairs may appear certain and inevitable, and though the fupport which allegiance brings to justice, be founded on obvious principles of human nature, it cannot be expected that that men should beforehand be able to discover them, or forefee their operation. Government commences more cafually and more imperfectly. It is probable, that the first ascendant of one man over multitudes begun during a flate of war; where the fuperiority of courage and of genius difcovers itfelf most visibly, where unanimity and concert are most requisite, and where the pernicious effects of diforder are most fensibly felt. The long continuance of that state, an incident common among favage tribes, enured the people to fubmiffion; and if the chieftain pollelled as much equity as prudence and valour, he became, even during peace, the arbiter of all differences, and could gradually, by a mixture of force and confent, establish his authority. The benefit fenfibly felt from his influence, made it be cherished by the people, at least by the peaceable and well-difpofed among them; and if his fon enjoyed the fame good qualities, government advanced the fooner to maturity and perfection; but was still in a feeble state, till the farther progress of improvement procured the magistrate a revenue, and enabled him to bestow rewards on the feveral inftruments of his administration, and to inflict punifhments on the refractory and difobedient. Before that period, each exertion of his influence must have been particular, and founded on the peculiar circumftances of the cafe. After it, fubmiffion was no longer a matter of choice in the bulk of the community, but was rigoroufly exacted by the authority of the fupreme magistrate.

Digitized by Google

D 3

In all governments, there is a perpetual inteftine ftruggle, open or fecret, between AUTHORITY and LI-BERTY; and neither of them can ever abfolutely prevail in the conteft. A great facrifice of liberty must neceffarily

Digitized by Google

2 ì

2. 11

Ł

ORIGIN of GOVERNMENT,"

farily be made in every government; yet even the authority, which confines liberty, can never, and perhaps ought never, in any conflitution, to become quite entire The fultan is mafter of the life and uncontroulable. and fortune of any individual; but will not be permitted to impose new taxes on his subjects : a French monarch can impose taxes at pleasure; but would find it dangerous to attempt the lives and fortunes of individuals. Religion alfo, in most countries, is commonly found to be a very intractable principle; and other principles or prejudices frequently refift all the authority of the civil magistrate; whose power, being founded on opinion, can never fubvert other opinions, equally rooted with that of his title to dominion. The government, which, in common appellation, receives the appellation of free, is that which admits of a partition of power among feveral members, whole united authority is no lefs, or is commonly greater, than that of any monarch; but who, in the usual course of administration, must act by general and equal laws, that are previoufly known to all the members, and to all their fubjects. In this fenfe, it must be owned, that liberty is the perfection of civil fociety; but still authority must be acknowledged effential to its very existence: and in those contests, which fo often take place between the one and the other. the latter may, on that account, challenge the preference. Unlefs perhaps one may fay (and it may be faid with fome reason) that a circumstance, which is effential to the existence of civil society, must always support itself, and needs be guarded with lefs jealoufy, than one that contributes only to its perfection, which the indolence of men is fo apt to neglect, or their ignorance to overlook.

D 4

Digitized by Google

. • • Digitized by Google

(41)

E $S^{\cdot}S A Y$ VI.

Of the INDEPENDENCY of PARLIAMENT.

OLITICAL writers have established it as a maxim, that, in contriving any fystem of government, and fixing the feveral checks and controuls of the conflitution, every man ought to be fupposed a knave, and to have no other end, in all his actions, than private in-By this interest we must govern him, and, by tereft. means of it, make him, notwithstanding his infatiable avarice and ambition, co-operate to public good. Without this, fay they, we fhall in vain boaft of the advantages of any conftitution, and fhall find, in the end. that we have no fecurity for our liberties or poffetions. except the good-will of our rulers; that is, we shall have no fecurity at all.

It is, therefore, a just political maxim, that every man must be supposed a knave : Though, at the fame time, it appears fomewhat strange, that a maxim should be true in politics, which is false in fact. But to fatisfy us on this head, we may confider, that men are generally more honeft in their private than in their public capacity, and will go greater lengths to ferve a party, than when their own private interest is alone concerned. Honour is a great check upon mankind: But where a confiderable body of men act together, this check is, in a great measure, measure, removed; fince a man is sure to be approved of by his own party, for what promotes the common interest; and he soon learns to despise the clamours of adversaries. To which we may add, that every court or senate is determined by the greater number of voices; so that, if self-interest influences only the majority (as it will always do), the whole senate follows the allurements of this separate interest, and acts as if it contained not one member, who had any regard to public interest and liberty.

Digitized by Google

When there offers, therefore, to our cenfure and examination, any plan of government, real or imaginary, where the power is diffributed among feveral courts, and feveral orders of men, we fhould always confider the feparate intereft of each court, and each order; and, if we find that, by the fkilful divifion of power, this intereft muft neceffarily, in its operation, concur with public, we may pronounce that government to be wife and happy. If, on the contrary, feparate intereft be not checked, and be not directed to the public, we ought to look for nothing but faction, diforder, and tyranny from fuch a government. In this opinion I am juftified by experience, as well as by the authority of all philofophers and politicians, both antient and modern.

How much, therefore, would it have furprifed fuch a genius as CICERO, or TACITUS, to have been told, that, in a future age, there fhould arife a very regular fyftem of mixed government, where the authority was fo diffributed, that one rank, whenever it pleafed, might fwallow up all the reft, and engrofs the whole power of the conflictution. Such a government, they would fay, will not be a mixed government. For fo great is the natural ambition of men, that they are never fatisfied with with power; and if one order of men, by purfuing its own intereft, can ufurp upon every other order, it will certainly do fo, and render itfelf, as far as poffible, abfolute and uncontroulable.

INDEPENDENCY OF PARLIAMENT. 41

But, in this opinion, experience fnews they would have been miftaken. For this is actually the cafe with the BRITISH conflitution. The fhare of power, allotted by our conffitution to the houfe of commons, is fo great, that it abfolutely commands all the other parts of the . government. The king's legiflative power is plainly no proper check to it. For though the king has a negative in framing laws; yet this, in fact, is efteemed of fo little moment, that whatever is voted by the two houfes, is always fure to pass into a law, and the royal affent is little better than a form. The principal weight of the crown lies in the executive power. But befides that the executive power in every government is altogether fubordinate to the legislative; befides this, I fay, the exercife of this power requires an immenfe expence; and the commons have affumed to themfelves the fole right of granting money. How eafy, therefore, would it be for that house to wrest from the crown all these powers, one after another; by making every grant conditional, and choosing their time so well, that their refusal of supply fhould only diftrefs the government, without giving foreign powers any advantage over us? Did the house of commons depend in the fame manner on the king, and had none of the members any property but from his gift, would not he command all their refolutions, and be from that moment abfolute ? As to the house of lords, they are a very powerful support to the Crown, so long as they are, in their turn, supported by it; but both experience and reason shew, that they have no force or authority authority fufficient to maintain themfelves alone, without fuch fupport.

How, therefore, fhall we folve this paradox ? And by what means is this member of our conflictution confined within the proper limits; fince, from our very conflitution, it must necessarily have as much power as it demands, and can only be confined by itfelf? How is this confistent with our experience of human nature? I answer, that the interest of the body is here restrained by that of the individuals, and that the house of commons stretches not its power, because such an usurpation would be contrary to the interest of the majority of its The crown has fo many offices at its difpomembers. fal, that, when affisted by the honeft and difinterested part of the houfe, it will always command the refolutions of the whole, fo far, at least, as to preferve the antient conflitution from danger. We may, therefore, give to this influence what name we pleafe; we may call it by the invidious appellations of corruption and dependence; but fome degree and fome kind of it are infeparable from the very nature of the conflictution, and neceffary to the prefervation of our mixed government.

Inftead then of afferting * abfolutely, that the dependence of parliament, in every degree, is an infringement of BRITISH liberty, the country-party fhould have made fome conceffions to their adverfaries, and have only examined what was the proper degree of this dependence, beyond which it became dangerous to liberty. But fuch a moderation is not to be expected in party-men of any kind. After a conceffion of this nature, all declamation muft be abandoned; and a calm enquiry into the

* See Differtation on Parties, throughout.

Digitized by Google

proper

INDEPENDENCY OF PARLIAMENT.

proper degree of court-influence and parliamentary dependence would have been expected by the readers. And though the advantage, in fuch a controverfy, might poffibly remain to the country-party; yet the victory would not be fo complete as they wifh for, nor would a true patriot have given an entire loofe to his zeal, for fear of running matters into a contrary extreme, by diminifhing too * far the influence of the crown. It was, therefore, thought beft to deny, that this extreme could ever be dangerous to the conflictution, or that the crown could ever have too little influence over members of parliament.

All queftions concerning the proper medium between extremes are difficult to be.decided; both because it is not eafy to find words proper to fix this medium, and becaufe the good and ill, in fuch cafes, run fo gradually into each other, as even to render our fentiments doubtful and uncertain. But there is a peculiar difficulty in the prefent cafe, which would embarrafs the most knowing and most impartial examiner. The power of the crown is always lodged in a fingle perfon, either king or minister; and as this person may have either a greater or lefs degree of ambition, capacity, courage, popularity, or fortune, the power, which is too great in one hand, may become too little in another. In pure republics, where the authority is diffributed among feveral affemblies or fenates, the checks and controuls are more regular in their operation; because the members of such numerous affemblies may be prefumed to be always nearly equal in capacity and virtue; and it is only their number, riches, or authority, which enter into confider-

* See NOTE [B].

ation.

45

Digitized by Google

ation. But a limited monarchy admits not of any fuch ftability; nor is it poffible to affign to the crown fuch a determinate degree of power, as will, in every hand, form a proper counterbalance to the other parts of the conftitution. This is an unavoidable difadvantage, among the many advantages, attending that fpecies of government.

Digitized by Google

(47)

ESSAY VII.

Whether the BRITISH GOVERNMENT inclines more to Absolute Monarchy, or to a Republic?

I T affords a violent prejudice against almost every fcience, that no prudent man, however fure of his principles, dares prophefy concerning any event, or foretel the remote confequences of things. A phyfician will not venture to pronounce concerning the condition of his patient a fortnight or a month after : And still less dares a politician foretel the fituation of public affairs a few. years hence. HARRINGTON thought himself fo fure of his general principle, that the balance of power depends on that of property, that he ventured to pronounce it impoffible ever to re-establish monarchy in ENGLAND: But his book was fcarcely published when the king was reflored; and we fee, that monarchy has ever fince fubfifted upon the fame footing as before. Notwithstanding this unlucky example, I will venture to examine an important question, to wit, Whether the BRITISH government inclines more to ab, olute monarchy, or to a republic; and in which of thefe two species of government it will most probably terminate? As there feems not to be any great danger of a fudden revolution either way, I fhall at least escape the ihame attending my temerity, if I should be found to have been mistaken.

Digitized by Google

Thofe

48

Those who affert, that the balance of our government inclines towards absolute monarchy, may support their opinion by the following reasons : That property has a great influence on power cannot poffibly be denied; but vet the general maxim, that the balance of one depends on the balance of the other, must be received with feveral limitations. It is evident, that much lefs property in a fingle hand will be able to counterbalance a greater property in feveral; not only because it is difficult to make many perfons combine in the fame views and meafures; but because property, when united, causes much greater dependence, than the fame property, when difpersed. A hundred persons, of 1000 l. a year a-piece, can confume all their income, and nobody shall ever be the better for them, except their fervants and tradefmen. who justly regard their profits as the product of their own But a man possessed of 100,000 l. a year, if he labour. has either any generofity, or any cunning, may create a great dependence by obligations, and still a greater by expectations. Hence we may observe, that, in all free governments, any fubject exorbitantly rich has always created jealoufy, even though his riches bore no proportion to those of the state. CRASSUS'S fortune, if I remember well, amounted only to about two millions and a half of our money; yet we find, that though his genius was nothing extraordinary, he was able, by means of his riches alone, to counterbalance, during his lifetime, the power of POMPEY as well as that of CE-SAR, who afterwards became mafter of the world. The wealth of the MEDICI made them mafters of FLO-RENCE; though, it is probable, it was not confiderable, compared to the united property of that opulent republic.

Digitized by Google

Thefe

The BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

These confiderations are apt to make one entertain a magnificent idea of the BRITISH spirit and love of liberty; fince we could maintain our free government, during fo many centuries, against our fovereigns, who, befides the power and dignity and majefty of the crown, have always been possessed of much more property than any subject has ever enjoyed in any commonwealth. But it may be faid, that this fpirit, however great, will never be able to support itself against that immense property, which is now lodged in the king, and which is ftill encreafing. Upon a moderate computation, there are near three millions a year at the disposal of the crown. The civil lift amounts to near a million; the collection of all taxes to another; ' and the employments in the army and navy, together with ecclefiaffical preferments, to above a third million : An enormous fum, and what may fairly be computed to be more than a thirtieth part of the whole income and labour of the kingdom. When we add to this great property, the increasing luxury of the nation, our pronenels to corruption, together with the great power and prerogatives of the crown, and the command of military force, there is no one but must despair of being able, without extraordinary efforts, to support our free government much longer under these difadvantages.

On the other hand, those who maintain, that the bias of the BRITISH government leans towards a republic, may fupport their opinion by fpecious arguments. It may be faid, that, though this immense property in the crown be joined to the dignity of first magistrate, and to many other legal powers and prerogatives, which should naturally give it greater influence; yet it really becomes lefs dangerous to liberty upon that very account. VOL. I. Were gitized by Google

ESSAY VII.

Were ENGLAND a republic, and were any private man posselled of a revenue, a third, or even a tenth part as large as that of the crown, he would very justly excite jealoufy; because he would infallibly have great authority in the government. And fuch an irregular authority, not avowed by the laws, is always more dangerous than a much greater authority, derived from them. A man, possessed of usurped power, can set no bounds to his pretensions: His partizans have liberty to hope for every thing in his favour : His enemies provoke his ambition, with his fears, by the violence of their opposition : And the government being thrown into a ferment, every corrupted humour in the ftate naturally gathers to him. On the contrary, a legal authority, though great, has always fome bounds, which terminate both the hopes and pretensions of the perfon possessed of it: The laws must have provided a remedy against its excesses : Such an eminent magistrate has much to fear, and little to hope from his usurpations: And as his legal authority is quietly submitted to, he has small temptation and small opportunity of extending it farther. Befides, it happens, with regard to ambitious aims and projects, what may be observed with regard to fects of philosophy and reli-A new fect excites, fuch a ferment, and is both gion. opposed and defended with fuch vehemence, that it always fpreads fafter, and multiplies its partizans with greater rapidity, than any old eftablished opinion, recommended by the fanction of the laws and of antiquity. Such is the nature of novelty, that, where any thing pleases, it becomes doubly agreeable, if new; but if it difpleafes, it is doubly difpleafing, upon that very account. And, in most cases, the violence of enemies is favourable to ambitious projects, as well as the zeal of partizans.

Digitized by Google

6

50

It

The BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

It may farther be faid, that, though men be much governed by intereft; yet even intereft itfelf, and all human affairs, are entirely governed by opinion. Now, there has been a fudden and fenfible change in the opinions of men within these last fifty years, by the progress of learning and of liberty. Most people, in this island, have divested themselves of all superstitious reverence to names and authority: The clergy have much loft their credit: Their pretensions and doctrines have been ridiculed: and even religion can fcarcely fupport itfelf in the world. The mere name of king commands little respect; and to talk of a king as GOD's vicegerent on earth, or to give him any of those magnificent titles, which formerly dazzled mankind, would but excite laughter in every Though the crown, by means of its large revenue, one. may maintain its authority, in times of tranquillity, upon private intereft and influence; yet, as the leaft flock or convulsion must break all these interests to pieces, the royal power, being no longer fupported by the fettled principles and opinions of men, will immediately diffolve. Had men been in the fame disposition at the revolution, as they are at prefent, monarchy would have run a great rifque of being entirely loft in this island.

Durft I venture to deliver my own fentiments amidft thefe oppofite arguments, I would affert, that, unlefs there happen fome extraordinary convultion, the power of the crown, by means of its large revenue, is rather upon the increase; though, at the fame time, I own, that its progrefs feems very flow, and almost infensible. The tide has run long, and with fome rapidity, to the fide of popular government, and is just beginning to turn towards monarchy.

Digitized by Google

Ĩt

It is well known, that every government must come to a period, and that death is unavoidable to the political as well as to the animal body. But, as one kind of death may be preferable to another, it may be enquired, whether it be more defirable for the BRITISH conflictution to terminate in a popular government, or in abfolute monarchy? Here I would frankly declare, that, though liberty be preferable to flavery, in almost every cafe; yet I should rather with to fee an absolute monarch than a republic in this island. For, let us confider, what kind of republic we have reason to expect. The question is not concerning any fine imaginary republic, of which a man may form a plan in his closet. There is no doubt. but a popular government may be imagined more perfect than absolute monarchy, or even than our present con-But what reafon have we to expect that any fuch flitution. government will ever be established in GREAT BRITAIN, upon the diffolution of our monarchy? If any fingle perfon acquire power enough to take our conflictution to pieces, and put it up a-new, he is really an abfolute monarch; and we have already had an inftance of this kind, fufficient to convince us, that fuch a perfon will never refign his power, or eftablish any free government. Matters, therefore, must be trusted to their natural progrefs and operation; and the houfe of commons, according to its prefent constitution, must be the only legislature in such a popular government. The inconveniences attending fuch a fituation of affairs, prefent themfelves by thoufands. If the houfe of commons, in fuch à case, ever dissolve itself, which is not to be expected, we may look for a civil war every election. If it continue itself, we shall suffer all the tyranny of a faction, subdivided into new factions. And, as such a violent violent government cannot long fubfift, we fhall, at laft, after many convultions, and civil wars, find repofe in abfolute monarchy, which it would have been happier for us to have eftablished peaceably from the beginning. Abfolute monarchy, therefore, is the easieft death, the true Euthanafia of the BRITISH conflictution.

The BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

Thus, if we have reason to be more jealous of monarchy, because the danger is more imminent from that quarter; we have also reason to be more jealous of popular government, because that danger is more terrible. This may teach us a lesson of moderation in all our political controversies.

E 3

Digitized by Google

(55)

E S S A Y VIII.

Of PARTIES in GENERAL.

F all men, that diffinguish themselves by memorable atchievements, the first place of honour feems due to LEGISLATORS and founders of states, who transmit a system of laws and inftitutions to fecure the peace, happinefs, and liberty of future generations. The influence of ufeful inventions in the arts and fciences may, perhaps, extend farther than that of wife laws, whole effects are limited both in time and place; but the benefit arifing from the former, is not fo fenfible as that which refults from the latter. Speculative fciences do, indeed, improve the mind; but this advantage reaches only to a few perfons, who have leifure to apply themfelves to them. And as to practical arts, which encrease the commodities and enjoyments of life, it is well known, that men's happines confifts not fo much in an abundance of thefe, as in the peace and fecurity with which they poffers them; and those bleffings can only be derived from good government. Not to mention, that general virtue and good morals in a state, which are so requisite to happiness, can never arife from the most refined precepts of philosophy, or even the feverest injunctions of religion; but must proceed E 4 entirely entirely from the virtuous education of youth, the effect of wife laws and inftitutions. I must, therefore, prefume to differ from Lord BACON in this particular, and must regard antiquity as fomewhat unjust in its distribution of honours, when it made gods of all the inventors of useful arts, such as CERES, BACCHUS, ÆSCULAPIUS; and dignify legislators, such as ROMULUS and THESEUS, only with the appellation of demigods and heroes.

Digitized by Google

As much as legiflators and founders of flates ought to be honoured and respected among men, as much ought the founders of fects and factions to be detefted and hated ; because the influence of faction is directly contrary to Factions subvert government, render laws that of laws. impotent, and beget the fiercest animolities among men of the fame nation, who ought to give mutual affiftance and protection to each other. And what should render the founders of parties more odious, is the difficulty of extirpating thefe weeds, when once they have taken root in any ftate. They naturally propagate themfelves for many centuries, and feldom end but by the total diffolution of that government, in which they are fown. They are, befides, plants which grow most plentifully in the richeft foil; and though abfolute governments be not wholly free from them, it must be confessed, that they rife more eafily, and propagate themfelves fafter in free governments, where they always infect the legiflature itfelf, which alone could be able, by the fleady application of rewards and punifhments, to eradicate them.

Factions may be divided into PERSONAL and REAL; that is, into factions, founded on perfonal friendfhip or animolity among fuch as compose the contending parties, and into those founded on some real difference of fentiment or interest. The reason of this distinction is obvious; though though I must acknowledge, that parties are feldom found pure and unmixed, either of the one kind or the other, It is not often feen, that a government divides into factions, where there is no difference in the views of the conflituent members, either real or apparent, trivial or material: And in those factions, which are founded on the most real and most material difference, there is always observed a great deal of personal animosity or affection. But notwithstanding this mixture, a party may be denominated either personal or real, according to that principle which is predominant, and is found to have the greatest influence.

Digitized by Google

Of PARTIES in GENERAL.

Perfonal factions arife most easily in fmall republics. Every domestic quarrel, there, becomes an affair of state. Love, vanity, emulation, any passion, as well as ambition and refentment, begets public division. The NERI and BIANCHI of FLORENCE, the FREGOSI and ADORNI of GENOA, the COLONESI and ORSINI of modern ROME, were parties of this kind.

Men have fuch a propenfity to divide into perfonal factions, that the fmalleft appearance of real difference will produce them. What can be imagined more trivial than the difference between one colour of livery and another in horfe-races? Yet this difference begat two most inveterate factions in the GREEK empire, the PRASINI and VENETI, who never fufpended their animostities, till they ruined that unhappy government.

We find in the ROMAN hiftory a remarkable diffention between two tribes, the POLLIA and PAPIRIA, which continued for the space of near three hundred years, and discovered itself in their suffrages at every election of magistrates*. This faction was the more remarkable, as

• As this fact has not been much observed by antiquaries or politicians, fhall deliver it in the words of the ROMAN historian. Populas TUSCU-LANUS ESSAY VIII.

It could continue for fo long a tract of time; even though it did not fpread itfelf, nor draw any of the other tribes into a fhare of the quarrel. If mankind had not a ftrong propenfity to fuch divisions, the indifference of the reft of the community must have fupprefied this foolish animofity, that had not any aliment of new benefits and injuries, of general fympathy and antipathy, which never fail to take place, when the whole ftate is rent into two equal factions.

Nothing is more usual than to fee parties, which have begun upon a real difference, continue even after that difference is loft. When men are once inlifted on oppofite fides, they contract an affection to the perfons with whom they are united, and an animofity against their antagonists; And these passions they often transmit to their posterity, The real difference between GUELF and GHIBBELLINE was long loft in ITALY, before thefe factions were extinguished. The GUELFS adhered to the pope, the GHIBBELLINES to the emperor; yet the family of SFORZA, who were in alliance with the emperor, though they were GUELFS, being expelled MILAN by the king * of FRANCE, affifted by JACOMO TRIVULZIO and the GHIBBELLINES, the pope concurred with the latter, and they formed leagues with the pope against the emperor.

LANUS cum conjugibus ac liberis ROMAM venit : Ea multitudo, vefte mutata, & fpesie reorum, tribus circuit, genibus fe omnium advolvens. Plus itaque mifericordia ad şænæ veniam impetrandam, quam caufa ad crimen furgandum, valuit. Tribus omme, præter POLLIAM, antiquârunt legem. POLLIÆ fententia fuit, puberes verberatos necari; liberos conjugefque fub corona lege belli venire : Me-, morianque ejus iræ TUSCULANIS in pænæ tam atrocis autfores manfife ad pairum ætatem conflat; mes quemquam ferme ex POLLIA tribu candidatum PAPI-RIAM ferre folitum, T.LIVII, lib. 8. The CASTELANI and NICOLLOTI are two mobbih factions in VIN:CE, who frequently box together, and then lay afide their quarrels prefently.

Digitized by Google

• LEWIS XII.

The

Of PARTIES in GENERAL,

The civil wars which arofe fome few years ago in Mo-Rocco, between the blacks and whites, merely on account of their complexion, are founded on a pleafant difference. We laugh at them; but I believe, were things rightly examined, we afford much more occasion of ridicule to the Moors. For, what are all the wars of religion, which have prevailed in this polite and knowing part of the world? They are certainly more abfurd than the MOORISH civil wars. The difference of complexion is a fensible and a real difference: But the controverfy about an article of faith, which is utterly abfurd and unintelligible, is not a difference in fentiment, but in a few phrafes and expressions, which one party accepts of, without understanding them; and the other refuses in the, fame manner.

Real factions may be divided into those from interest, from principle, and from affection. Of all factions, the first are the most reasonable, and the most excusable, Where two orders of men, fuch as the nobles and people. have a diffinct authority in a government, not very accurately balanced and modelled, they naturally follow a diftinct interest; nor can we reasonably expect a different conduct, confidering that degree of felfifhnefs implanted in human nature. It requires great skill in a legislator to prevent fuch parties; and many philosophers are of opinion, that this fecret, like the grand elixir, or perpetual motion, may amufe men in theory, but can never possibly be reduced to practice. In defpotic governments, indeed, factions often do not appear; but they are not the lefs real; or rather, they are more real and more pernicious, upon that very account. The diffinct orders of men, nobles and people, foldiers and merchants, have all a diffinct interest; but the more powerful oppresses the weaker weaker with impunity, and without refiftance; which begets a feeming tranquillity in fuch governments.

There has been an attempt in ENGLAND to divide the landed and trading part of the nation; but without fuccefs. The interefts of thefe two bodies are not really diffinct, and never will be fo, till our public debts encreafe to fuch a degree, as to become altogether oppreffive and intolerable.

Parties from principle, especially abstract speculative principle, are known only to modern times, and are, perhaps, the most extraordinary and unaccountable phanomenon that has yet appeared in human affairs. Where different principles beget a contrariety of conduct, which is the cafe with all different political principles, the matter may be more eafily explained. A man, who effeems the true right of government to lie in one man, or one family, cannot eafily agree with his fellow-citizen, who thinks that another man or family is possesfield of this right. Each naturally wifnes that right may take place, according to his own notions of it. But where the difference of principle is attended with no contrariety of action, but every one may follow his own way, without interfering with his neighbour, as happens in all religious controverfies; what madnefs, what fury can beget fuch unhappy and fuch fatal divisions ?

Two men travelling on the highway, the one eaft, the other weft, can eafily pafs each other, if the way be broad enough: but two men, reafoning upon oppofite principles of religion, cannot fo eafily pafs, without fhocking; though one fhould think, that the way were alfo, in that cafe, fufficiently broad, and that each might proceed, without interruption, in his own courfe. But fuch is the nature of the human mind, that it always lays hold on every mind that approaches it; and as it is wonderfully fortified

itized by GOOGIC

Of PARTIES in GENERAL.

fortified by an unanimity of fentiments, fo is it fhocked and diffurbed by any contrariety. Hence the eagerness, which most people discover in a dispute; and hence their impatience of opposition, even in the most speculative and indifferent opinions.

This principle, however frivolous it may appear, feems to have been the origin of all religious wars and divisions. But as this principle is universal in human nature, its effects would not have been confined to one age, and to one fect of religion, did it not there concur with other more accidental causes, which raise it to such a height, as to produce the greatest misery and devasta-Most religions of the ancient world arose in the tion. unknown ages of government, when men were as yet barbarous and uninstructed, and the prince, as well as peafant, was disposed to receive, with implicit faith, every pious tale or fiction, which was offered him. The magistrate embraced the religion of the people, and entering cordially into the care of facred matters, naturally acquired an authority in them, and united the ecclesiaftical with the civil power. But the Christian religion arifing, while principles directly opposite to it were firmly effablished in the polite part of the world, who defpifed the nation that first broached this novelty; no wonder, that, in fuch circumstances, it was but little countenanced by the civil magistrate, and that the priest. hood was allowed to engrofs all the authority in the new So bad a use did they make of this power, even in sect. those early times, that the primitive perfecutions may, perhaps, in part *, be afcribed to the violence inftilled by them into their followers. And the fame principles of priestly government continuing, after Christianity became

• See NOTE [C].

Digitized by GOOGLE

the

the established religion, they have engendered a spirit of perfecution, which has ever since been the poison of human society, and the source of the most inveterate factions in every government. Such divisions, therefore, on the part of the people, may justly be esteemed factions of principle; but, on the part of the priests, who are the prime movers, they are really factions of interest.

There is another caufe (befide the authority of the priefts, and the feparation of the ecclefiaffical and civil powers) which has contributed to render CHRISTENDOM the fcene of religious wars and divisions. Religions, that arife in ages totally ignorant and barbarous, confift mostly of traditional tales and fictions, which may be different in every fect, without being contraty to each other; and even when they are contrary, every one adheres to the tradition of his own fect, without much reafoning or diffutation. But as philosophy was widely spread over the world, at the time when Christianity arole, the teachers of the new fect were obliged to form a fystem of speculative opinions; to divide, with some accuracy, their articles of faith; and to explain, comment, confute, and defend with all the fubtility of argument and Hence naturally arofe keennefs in difpute, fcience. when the Christian religion came to be fplit into new divisions and herefies: And this keennefs affifted the priests in their policy, of begetting a mutual hatred and antipathy among their deluded followers. Sects of philofophy, in the ancient world, were more zealous than parties of religion; but in modern times, parties of religion are more furious and enraged than the most cruel factions that ever arole from interest and ambition.

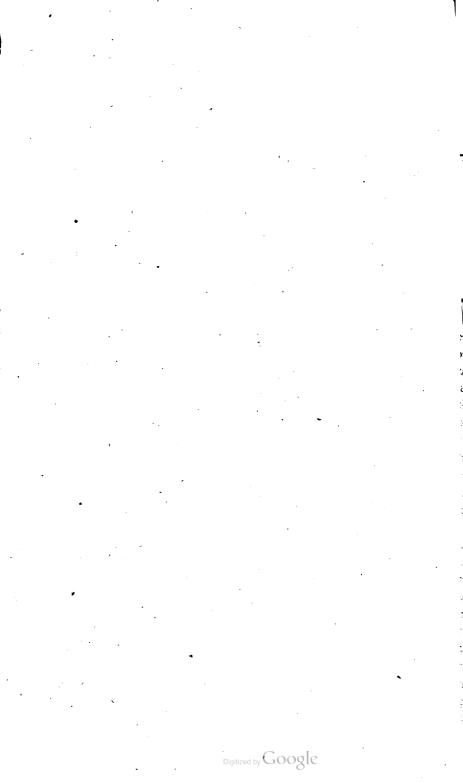

I have mentioned parties from affection as a kind of real parties, befide those from interest and principle. By parties from affection, I understand those which are founded founded on the different attachments of men towards particular families and perfons, whom they defire to rule over them. These factions are often very violent; though, I must own, it may feem unaccountable, that men should attach themfelves fo ftrongly to perfons, with whom they are no wife acquainted, whom perhaps they never faw, and from whom they never received, nor can ever hope for, any favour. Yet this we often find to be the cafe, and even with men, who, on other occasions, discover no great generofity of fpirit, nor are found to be eafily tranfported by friendship beyond their own interest. We are apt to think the relation between us and our fovereign very close and intimate. The splendour of majesty and power bestows an importance on the fortunes even of a fingle perfon. And when a man's good-nature does not give him this imaginary interest, his ill-nature will, from fpite and opposition to perfons whole fentiments are different from his own.

Digitized by Google

Of PARTIES in GENERAL.

Digitized by Google

ESSAY IX.

Of the PARTIES of GREAT BRITAIN.

TTERE the BRITISH government proposed as a fubject of speculation, one would immediately perceive in it a fource of division and party, which it would be almost impossible for it, under any administration. to avoid. The just balance between the republican and monarchical part of our conflitution is really, in itfelf, fo extremely delicate and uncertain, that, when joined to men's paffions and prejudices, it is impoffible but different opinions must arise concerning it, even among perfons of the beft understanding. Those of mild tempers, who love peace and order, and deteft fedition and civil wars, will always entertain more favourable fentiments of monarchy, than men of bold and generous fpirits, who are passionate lovers of liberty, and think no evil comparable to fubjection and flavery. And though all reafonable men agree in general to preferve our mixed government; yet, when they come to particulars, fome will incline to truft greater powers to the crown, to beftow on it more influence, and to guard against its encroachments with lefs caution, than others who are terrified ar the most distant approaches of tyranny and despotic power. Thus are there parties of PRINCIPLE involved in the very nature of our conflictution, which may properly enough be denominated those of COURT and COUNTRY. VOL. I. F The

66

The ftrength and violence of each of these parties will much depend upon the particular administration. An administration may be so bad, as to throw a great majority into the opposition; as a good administration will reconcile to the court many of the most passionate lovers of liberty. But however the nation may fluctuate between them, the parties themselves will always subsist, so long as we are governed by a limited monarchy.

But, belides this difference of Principle, those parties are very much fomented by a difference of INTEREST, without which they could fcatcely ever be dangerous or The crown will naturally beftow all truft and violent. power upon those, whose principles, real or pretended, are most favourable to monarchical government; and this temptation will naturally engage them to go greater lengths than their principles would otherwife carry them. Their antagonists, who are disappointed in their ambitious aims, throw themfelves into the party whofe fentiments incline them to be most jealous of royal power, and naturally carry those fentiments to a greater height than found politics will justify. Thus Court and Country, which are the genuine offspring of the BRITISH government, are a kind of mixed parties, and are influenced both by principle and by interest. The heads of the factions are commonly most governed by the latter motive; the inferior members of them by the former.

As to ecclefiaftical parties; we may obferve, that, in all ages of the world, priefts have been enemies to liberty; and it is certain, that this fleady conduct of theirs muft have been founded on fixed reafons of intereft and ambition. Liberty of thinking, and of expressing our thoughts, is always fatal to prieftly power, and to those pious frauds, on which it is commonly founded; and, by an infall. le connexion, which prevails among all kinds of liberty, this privilege can never be enjoyed, at leaft has never yet been enjoyed, but in a free government: Hence it must happen, in such a constitution as that of GREAT BRITAIN, that the established clergy, while things are in their natural fituation, will always be of the Court-party; as, on the contrary, differenters of all kinds will be of the Country-party; fince they can never hope for that toleration, which they fland in need of, but by means of our free government. All princes, that have aimed at despotic power, have known of what importance it was to gain the established clergy: As the clergy, on their part, have fhewn a great facility in entering into the views of fuch princes *. GUSTAVUS VAZA wasa perhaps, the only ambitious monarch that ever depressed the church, at the fame time that he difcouraged liberty. But the exorbitant power of the bishops in Sweden, who, at that time, overtopped the crown itfelf, together with their attachment to a foreign family, was the reason of his embracing fuch an unufual fystem of politics.

The PARTIES OF GREAT BRITAIN. 67

This observation, concerning the propensity of priefts to the government of a fingle perfon, is not true with regard to one fect only. ' The Presbyterian and Calvinistic clergy in HOLLAND were professed friends to the family of ORANGE; as the Arminians, who were effected heretics, where of the LOUVESTEIN faction, and zealous for liberty. But if a prince have the choice of both, it is easy to see, that he will prefer the episcopal to the prefbyterian form of government, both because of the greater affinity between monarchy and epifcopacy, and becaufe of the facility, which he will find, in fuch a government, of ruling the clergy, by means of their ecclefiaftical fuperiors *.

* Judzi fibi ipfi reges impoluere ; qui mobilitate vulgi expulfi, refumpta, per arma dominatione; fugas civium, urbium everfiones, fratrum, conjugum. parentum neces, aliaque folita regibus aufi, superstitionem fovebant; quia honor facerdatii firmamentum potentiæ affumebatur. TACIT. biff. lib. v. F affinity

If we confider the first rife of parties in ENGLAND. during the great rebellion, we shall observe, that it was conformable to this general theory, and that the fpecies of government gave birth to them, by a regular and infallible operation. The ENGLISH conftitution, before that period, had lain in a kind of confusion; yet fo, as that the fubjects poffeffed many noble privileges, which, though not exactly bounded and fecured by law, were univerfally deemed, from long pofferiion, to belong to them as their birth-right. An ambitious, or rather a mifguided, prince arole, who deemed all these privileges to be conceffions of his predeceffors, revocable at pleafure; and, in profecution of this principle, he openly acted in violation. of liberty, during the courfe of feveral years. Neceffity, at laft, conftrained him to call a parliament: The fpirit of liberty arofe and fpread itfelf: The prince, being without any fupport, was obliged to grant every thing required of him: And his enemies, jealous and implacable, fet no bounds to their pretenfions. Here then began those contests, in which it was no wonder, that men of that age were divided into different parties; fince. even at this day, the impartial are at a lofs to decide. concerning the juffice of the quarrel. The pretenfions of the parliament, if yielded to, broke the balance of the conftitution, by rendering the government almost entirely republican. If not yielded to, the nation was, perhaps, still in danger of absolute power, from the settled principles and inveterate habits of the king, which had plainly appeared in every conceffion that he had been con-

* Populi imperium juxta libertatem : paucorum dominatio regiæ libidini proprior eft. TACIT. Ann. lib. vi.

Arained

ł

5

'n

21--72

×

•;

۰ð

ų, t₁

The PARTIES of GREAT BRITAIN. 69

: of nt.

ſu-

D,

123

ies

1]- bat

he gh

:-

as а,

n-

in.

m ehe ng

ng

2-en

3(

e, le

65 зe

]F

5,

!-

1-

-

zi

3

ftrained to make to his people. In this question, fo delicate and uncertain, men naturally fell to the fide which was most conformable to their usual principles; and the more passionate favourers of monarchy declared for the king, as the zealous friends of liberty fided with the parliament. The hopes of fuccefs being nearly equal on both fides, interest had no general influence in this conteft: So that ROUND-HEAD and CAVALIER were merely parties of principle; neither of which difowned either monarchy or liberty; but the former party inclined most to the republican part of our government, the latter to the monarchical. In this refpect, they may be confidered as court and country-party, enflamed into a civil war, by an unhappy concurrence of circumstances, and by the turbulent fpirit of the age. The commonwealth's men, and the partizans of abfolute power, lay concealed in both parties, and formed but an inconfiderable part of them.

The clergy had concurred with the king's arbitrary defigns; and, in return, were allowed to perfecute their adverfaries, whom they called heretics and fchifmatics. The established clergy were episcopal; the non-conformists presbyterian: So that all things concurred to throw the former, without referve, into the king's party; and the latter into that of the parliament.

Every one knows the event of this quarrel; fatal to the king first, to the parliament afterwards. After many confusions and revolutions, the royal family was at last reftored, and the ancient government re-established. CHARLES II. was not made wifer by the example of his father; but profecuted the fame measures, though, at first, with more fecrecy and caution. New parties arole, under the appellation of Whig and Tory, which have continued ever fince to confound and diffract our govern-F ment.

ment. To determine the nature of these parties is, perhaps, one of the most difficult problems that can be met with, and is a proof that history may contain questions, as uncertain as any to be found in the most abstract fciences. We have seen the conduct of the two parties, during the course of seventy years, in a vast variety of circumstances, possessing war: Persons, who profess themselves of one fide or other, we meet with every hour, in company, in our pleasures, in our ferious occupations: We ourselves are constrained, in a manner, to take party; and living in a country of the highest liberty, every one may openly declare all his fentiments and opinions: Yet are we at a loss to tell the nature, pretenfions, and principles of the different factions.

When we compare the, parties of WHIG and TORY with those of ROUND-HEAD and CAVALIER, the most obvious difference, that appears between them, confifts in the principles of paffive obedience, and indefeasible right, which were but little heard of among the CAVALIERS, but became the universal doctrine, and were effeemed the true characteristic of a TORY. Were these principles pufhed into their most obvious consequences, they imply a formal renunciation of all our liberties, and an avowal, of abfolute monarchy; fince nothing can be a greater abfurdity than a limited power, which must not be refifted, even when it exceeds its limitations. But as the most rational principles are often but a weak counterpoife to paffion; it is no wonder that thefe abfurd principles were found too weak for that effect. The To-RIES, as men, were enemies to oppression; and also as ENGLISHMEN, they were enemies to arbitrary power. Their zeal for liberty, was, perhaps, lefs fervent than that of their antagonists; but was sufficient to make them them forget all their general principles, when they faw themfelves openly threatened with a fubversion of the ancient government. From these sentiments arose the revolution; an event of mighty consequence, and the firmest foundation of BRITISH liberty. The conduct of the TORIES, during that event, and after it, will afford us a true insight into the nature of that party.

70

The PARTIES of GREAT BRITAIN. 71

In the first place, they appear to have had the genuine sentiments of BRITONS in their affection for liberty, and in their determined refolution not to facrifice it to any abstract principle whatsoever, or to any imaginary rights of princes. This part of their character might justly have been doubted of before the revolution, from the obvious tendency of their avowed principles, and from their compliances with a court, which feemed to make little fecret of its arbitrary defigns. The revolution fhewed them to have been, in this refpect, nothing, but a genuine court party, fuch as might be expected in a BRITISH government: That is, Lovers of liberty, but greater lovers of monarchy. It must, however, be confessed, that they carried their monarchical principles farther,. even in practice, but more fo in theory, than was, in any degree, confistent with a limited government.

ł

n

t, ĸ

¢

ð

h

님

5

ç.

Ŀ

1

Ē.

0e

ź

1

21

ين التر Secondly, Neither their principles nor affections concurred, entirely or heartily, with the fettlement made at the revolution, or with that which has fince taken place. This part of their character may feem oppofite to the former; fince any other fettlement, in those circumftances of the nation, must probably have been dangerous, if not fatal to liberty. But the heart of man is made to reconcile contradictions; and this contradiction is not greater than that between paffeve obedience, and the refiftance employed at the revolution. A TORY, therefore,

F 4

Digitized by Google

fore, fince the revolution, may be defined in a few words, to be a lover of monarchy, though without abandoning liberty; and a partizan of the family of STUART. As a WHIG may be defined to be a lover of liberty, though without renouncing monarchy; and a friend to the fettlement in the PROTESTANT line.

These different views, with regard to the settlement of the crown, were accidental, but natural additions to the principles of the court and country parties, which are the genuine divisions in the BRITISH government. A passionate lover of monarchy is apt to be displeased at any change of the fuccession; as favouring too much of a commonwealth: A passionate lover of liberty is apt to think that every part of the government ought to be fubordinate to the interests of liberty.

Some, who will not venture to affert, that the real difference between WHIG and TORY was loft at the revolution, feem inclined to think, that the difference is now abolished, and that affairs are so far returned to their natural state, that there are at present no other parties among us but court and country; that is, men, who, by interest or principle, are attached either to monarchy or liberty. The TORIES have been to long obliged to talk in the republican flyle, that they feem to have made converts of themselves by their hypocrify, and to have embraced the fentiments, as well as language of their adversaries. There are, however, very confiderable remains of that party in ENGLAND, with all their old prejudices; and a proof that court and country are not our only parties, is, that almost all the diffenters fide with the court, and the lower clergy, at leaft, of the church of ENGLAND, with the opposition. This may may convince us, that fome bias ftill hangs upon our conflitution, fome extrinfic weight, which turns it from its natural course, and causes a confusion in our parties*.

72:

The PARTIES of GREAT BRITAIN. 73

• Some of the opinions delivered in these Estays, with regard to the public transactions in the last century, the Author, on more accurate examination, found reason to retract in his Histery of GREAT BRITAIN. And as he would not enslave himself to the systems of either party, neither would he fetter his judgment by his own preconceived opinions and principles; nor is he assumed to acknowledge his mistakes. These mistakes were indeed, at that time, almost universal in this kingdom.

(75)

ESSAY X,

Of Superstition and Enthusiasm.

T HAT the corruption of the best things produces the worst, is grown into a maxim, and is commonly proved, among other instances, by the pernicious effects of superstition and enthusias, the corruptions of true religion.

These two species of false religion, though both pernicious, are yet of a very different, and even of a contrary nature. The mind of man is fubject to certain unaccountable terrors and apprehenfions, proceeding either from the unhappy fituation of private or public affairs, from ill health, from a gloomy and melancholy disposition, or from the concurrence of all these circum-In fuch a state of mind, infinite unknown evils Aances. are dreaded from unknown agents; and where real objects of terror are wanting, the foul, active to its own prejudice, and fostering its predominant inclination, finds imaginary ones, to whole power and malevolence it fets no limits. As these enemies are entirely invisible and unknown, the methods taken to appeale them are equally unaccountable, and confift in ceremonies, obfervances. 6 fervances, mortifications, facrifices, prefents, or in any practice, however abfurd or frivolous, which either folly or knavery recommends to a blind and terrified credulity: Weaknefs, fear, melancholy, together with ignorance, are, therefore, the true fources of SUPERSTITION.

But the mind of man is also subject to an unaccountable elevation and prefumption, arifing from profperous fuccefs, from luxuriant health, from ftrong spirits, or from a bold and confident disposition. In such a stateof mind, the imagination fwells with great, but confufed conceptions, to which no fublunary beauties or enjoyments can correspond. Every thing mortal and perishable vanishes as unworthy of attention. And a full range is given to the fancy in the invisible regions, or world of fpirits, where the foul is at liberty to indulge itfelf in every imagination, which may best fuit its present tafte and difpolition. Hence arife raptures, transports, and furprifing flights of fancy; and confidence and prefumption still encreasing, these raptures, being altogether unaccountable, and feeming quite beyond the reach of our ordinary faculties, are attributed to the immediate infpiration of that Divine Being, who is the object of devotion. In a little time, the infpired perfon comes to regard himfelf as a diffinguished favourite of the Divinity; and when this frenzy once takes place, which is the fummit of enthufiaim, every whimfy is confectated : Human reason, and even morality, are rejected as fallacious guides : And the fanatic madman delivers himfelf over, blindly, and without referve, to the fuppofed illapfes of the fpirit, and to infpiration from above. Hope, pride, presumption, a warm imagination, together with ignorance, are, therefore, the true fources of ENTHU-SIASM.

Digitized by Google

Thefe

Of SUPERSTITION and ENTHUSIASM. 77

These two species of false religion might afford occafion to many speculations; but I shall confine myself, at present, to a few reflections concerning their different influence on government and society.

My first reflection is, That superstition is favourable to priefly power, and enthusiasm not less or rather more contrary to it, than found reason and philosophy. As superstition is founded on fear, forrow, and a depression of spirits, it reprefents the man to himfelf in fuch defpicable colours, that he appears unworthy, in his own eyes, of approaching the divine prefence, and naturally has recourfe to any other person, whose fanctity of life, or, perhaps, impudence and cunning, have made him be fuppofed more favoured by the Divinity. To him the fuperftitious entrust their devotions : To his care they recommend their prayers, petitions, and facrifices : And by his means, they hope to render their addreffes acceptable to their incenfed Deity. Hence the origin of PRIESTS. who may justly be regarded as an invention of a timorous and abject superstition, which, ever diffident of itself, dares not offer up its own devotions, but ignorantly thinks to recommend itfelf to the Divinity, by the mediation of his fuppofed friends and fervants. As fuperflition is a confiderable ingredient in almost all religions, even the most fanatical; there being nothing but philofophy able entirely to conquer these unaccountable terrors; hence it proceeds, that in almost every fect of religion there are priefts to be found : But the stronger mixture there is of fuperstition, the higher is the authority of the priefthood.

On the other hand, it may be observed, that all enthusiasts have been free from the yoke of ecclesiastics, and

5

EŚŚAY X.

and have expressed great independence in their devotion ; with a contempt of forms, ceremonies, and traditions; The quakers are the most egregious, though, at the fame time, the most innocent enthusiasts that have yet been known; and are, perhaps, the only feet, that have never admitted priests amongst them. The independents, of all the ENGLISH fectaries, approach nearest to the quakers in fanaticism, and in their freedom from priestly bondage. The presbyterians follow after, at an equal distance in both particulars. In fhort, this observation is founded in experience; and will also appear to be founded in reason, if we confider, that, as enthusiasm arises from a prefumptuous pride and confidence, it thinks itfelf fufficiently qualified to approach the Divinity, without any human mediator. Its rapturous devotions are fo fervent, that it even imagines itfelf actually to approach him by the way of contemplation and inward converse; which makes it neglect all those outward ceremonies and observances, to which the affiftance of the priefts appears to requilite in the eyes of their superstitious votaries. The fanatic confecrates himfelf, and bestows on his own perfon a facred character, much superior to what forms and ceremonious inftitutions can confer on any other.

My fecond reflection with regard to these species of false religion is, that religions, which partake of enthusias, are, on their first rise, more furious and violent than those which partake of superstition; but in a little time become more gentle and moderate. The violence of this species of religion, when excited by novelty, and animated by opposition, appears from numberless instances; of the anabaptists in GERMANY, the camisars in FRANCE, the levellers and other fanatics in ENGLAND, and the covenanters in SCOTLAND. Enthusias being founded on ftrong ftrong fpirits, and a prefumptuous boldnefs of character, it naturally begets the most extreme resolutions; especially after it rifes to that height as to infpire the deluded fanatic with the opinion of divine illuminations, and with a contempt for the common rules of reason, morality, and prudence.

Of SUPERSTITION and ENTHUSIASM. 79

It is thus enthulialm produces the most cruel diforders in human fociety; but its fury is like that of thunder and tempeft, which exhaust themselves in a little time, and leave the air more calm and ferene than before. When the first fire of enthusiafm is spent, men naturally, in all fanatical fects, fink into the greatest remisfiness and coolnefs in facred matters; there being no body of men among them, endowed with fufficient authority, whofe intereft is concerned to fupport the religious fpirit: No rites, no ceremonies, no holy observances, which may enter into the common train of life, and preferve the Superstition, on the facred principles from oblivion. contrary, fteals in gradually and infenfibly; renders men tame and fubmiffive ; is acceptable to the magistrate, and feems inoffensive to the people : Till at last the priest, having firmly established his authority, becomes the tyrant and diffurber of human fociety, by his endlefs contentions, persecutions, and religious wars. How fmoothly did the ROMISH church advance in her acquifition of power? But into what difmal convultions did fhe throw all EUROPE, in order to maintain it ? On the other hand, our fectaries, who were formerly fuch dangerous bigots, are now become very free reasoners; and the quakers feem to approach nearly the only regular body of deifts in the universe, the literati, or the disciples of CONFUCIUS in CHINA *.

The CHINESE Literati have no priefts or ecclesiaftical establishment.

Мy

ESSAY X.

My third observation on this head is, that superstition is an enemy to civil liberty, and entbusias for a friend to it. As fuperstition groans under the dominion of priests, and enthusiasm is destructive of all ecclesiastical power, this fufficiently accounts for the prefent observation. Not to mention, that enthusiafm, being the infirmity of bold and ambitious tempers, is naturally accompanied with a spirit of liberty; as superstition, on the contrary, renders men tame and abject, and fits them for flavery. We learn from ENGLISH hiftory, that, during the civil wars, the independents and deists, though the most opposite in their religious principles; yet were united in their political ones, and were alike paffionate for a commonwealth. And fince the origin of whig and tory, the leaders of the whigs have either been deifts or profest latitudinarians in their principles; that is, friends to toleration, and indifferent to any particular fect of christians: While the fectaries, who have all a ftrong tincture of enthufiaim, have always, without exception, concurred with that party, in defence of civil liberty. The refemblance in their fuperstitions long united the high-church tories, and the Roman catholics, in support of prerogative and kingly power; though experience of the tolerating spirit of the whigs seems of late to have reconciled the catholics to that party.

The molinifs and janfenifts in FRANCE have a thoufand unintelligible difputes, which are not worthy the reflection of a man of fenfe: But what principally diftinguistic these two fects, and alone merits attention, is the different spirit of their religion. The molinifts conducted by the jefuits, are great friends to superstition, rigid observers of external forms and ceremonies, and devoted devoted to the authority of the priefts, and to tradition. The janfenifts are enthuliafts, and zealous promoters of the paffionate devotion, and of the inward life; little influenced by authority; and, in a word, but half catholics. The confequences are exactly conformable to the foregoing reafoning. The jefuits are the tyrants of the people, and the flaves of the court: And the janfenifts preferve alive the fmall fparks of the love of liberty, which are to be found in the FRENCH pation.

Digitized by Google

Of Superstition and Enthusiasm. 81

Digitized by Google

VOL. I.

ESSAY XI.

Of the DIGNITY OF MEANNESS OF HUMAN NATURE.

HERE are certain fects, which fecretly form themselves in the learned world, as well as factions in the political; and though fometimes they come not to an open rupture, they give a different turn to the ways of thinking of those who have taken part on either fide. The most remarkable of this kind are the fects. founded on the different fentiments with regard to the dignity of buman nature; which is a point that feems to have divided philosophers and poets, as well as divines, from the beginning of the world to this day. Some exalt our species to the skies, and represent man as a kind of human demigod, who derives his origin from heaven, and retains evident marks of his lineage and descent. Others infift upon the blind fides of human nature, and can difcover nothing, except vanity, in which man furpasses the other animals, whom he affects fo much to defpife. If an author poffefs the talent of rhetoric and declamation, he commonly takes part with the former; If his turn lie towards irony and ridicule, he naturally throws himfelf into the other extreme.

G 2

I am

I am far from thinking, that all those, who have depreciated our species, have been enemies to virtue, and have exposed the frailties of their fellow-creatures with any bad intention. On the contrary, I am fenfible that a delicate fense of morals, especially when attended with a folenctic temper, is apt to give a man a difgust of the world, and to make him confider the common course of human affairs with too much indignation. I muft, however, be of opinion, that the fentiments of those, who are inclined to think favourably of mankind, are more advantageous to virtue, than the contrary principles, which give us a mean opinion of our nature. When a man is prepoffeffed with a high notion of his rank and character in the creation, he will naturally endeavour to act up to it, and will fcorn to do a base or vicious action, which might fink him below that figure which he makes in his own imagination. Accordingly we find, that all our polite and fashionable moralists infist upon this topic, and endeavour to represent vice as unworthy of man, as well as odious in itfelf.

We find few difputes, that are not founded on fome ambiguity in the expression; and I am perfuaded, that the present dispute, concerning the dignity or meanness of human nature, is not more exempt from it than any other. It may, therefore, be worth while to confider, what is real, and what is only verbal, in this controversy.

That there is a natural difference between merit and demerit, virtue and vice, wifdom and folly, no reafonable man will deny: Yet is it evident, that in affixing the term, which denotes either our approbation or blame, we are commonly more influenced by comparifon than by any fixed unalterable ftandard in the nature of things.

DIGNITY OF MEANNESS OF HUMAN NATURE. 85

things. In like manner, quantity, and extension, and bulk, are by every one acknowledged to be real things: But when we call any animal great or little, we always form a fecret comparison between that animal and others of the fame species; and it is that comparison which regulates our judgment concerning its greatness. A dog and a horse may be of the very fame fize, while the one is admired for the greatness of its bulk, and the other for the smallness. When I am present, therefore, at any dispute, I always consider with myself, whether it be a question of comparison or not that is the subject of the controvers is to great the other the disputants compare the same objects together, or talk of things that are widely different.

In forming our notions of human nature, we are apt to make a comparison between men and animals, the only creatures endowed with thought that fall under our fenfes. Certainly this comparison is favourable to man-On the one hand, we fee a creature, whole kind. thoughts are not limited by any narrow bounds, either of place or time; who carries his refearches into the most diftant regions of this globe, and beyond this globe, to the planets and heavenly bodies; looks backward to confider the first origin, at least, the history of human race; cafts his eye forward to fee the influence of his actions upon posterity, and the judgments which will be formed of his character a thousand years hence; a creature, who traces caules and effects to a great length and intricacy; extracts general principles from particular appearances; improves upon his discoveries; corrects his miltakes; and makes his very errors profitable. On the other hand, we are prefented with a creature

G 3

Digitized by Google

creature the very reverse of this; limited in its observations and reasonings to a few sensible objects which surround it; without curiosity, without foresight; blindly conducted by inftinct, and attaining, in a short time, its utmost perfection, beyond which it is never able to advance a single step. What a wide difference is there between these creatures! And how exalted a notion must we entertain of the former, in comparison of the latter !

There are two means commonly employed to deftroy this conclusion : Firft, By making an unfair representation of the cafe, and infifting only upon the weakneffes of human nature. And fecondly, By forming a new and fecret comparison between man and beings of the most perfect wildom. Among the other excellencies of man, this is one, that he can form an idea of perfections much beyond what he has experience of in himfelf; and is not limited in his conception of wildom and virtue. He can eafily exalt his notions and conceive a degree of knowledge, which, when compared to his own, will make the latter appear very contemptible, and will caufe the difference between that and the fagacity of animals, in a manner, to difappear and vanish. Now this being a point, in which all the world is agreed, that human understanding falls infinitely short of perfect wildom; it is proper we should know when this comparison takes . place. that we may not difpute where there is no real difference in our fentiments. Man falls much more fhort of perfect wifdom, and even of his own ideas of perfect wifdom, than animals do of man; yet the latter difference is fo confiderable, that nothing but a comparifon with the former can make it appear of little moment.

Digitized by Google

It

DIGNITY OF MEANNESS OF HUMAN NATURE. 87

It is also usual to compare one man with another; and finding very few whom we can call wife or virtuous, we are apt to entertain a contemptible notion of our species in general. That we may be fensible of the fallacy of this way of reasoning, we may observe, that the honourable appellations of wife and virtuous, are not annexed to any particular degree of those qualities of wifdom and virtue ; but arife altogether from the comparison we make between one man and another. When we find a man, who arrives at fuch a pitch of wildom as is very uncommon, we pronounce him a wife man: So that to fay, there are few wife men in the world, is really to fay nothing : fince it is only by their fcarcity, that they merit that appellation. Were the loweft of our species as wife as TULLY, or lord BACON, we should still have reason to fay that there are few wife men. For in that cafe we should exalt our notions of wildom, and fhould not pay a fingular honour to any one, who was not fingularly diffinguished by his talents. In like manner, I have heard it observed by thoughtless people, that there are few women poffeffed of beauty, in comparison of those who want it; not confidering, that we beltow the epithet of beautiful only on fuch as poffers a degree of beauty, that is common to them with a few. The fame degree of beauty in a woman is called deformity, which is treated as real beauty in one of our fex.

As it is ufual, in forming a notion of our fpecies, to compare it with the other fpecies above or below it, or to compare the individuals of the fpecies among themfelves; fo we often compare together the different motives or actuating principles of human nature, in order to regulate our judgment concerning it. And, indeed, this is $G \not\equiv$ the the only kind of comparison, which is worth our attention, or decides any thing in the prefent queffion. Were our felfish and vicious principles fo much predominant above our focial and virtuous, as is afferted by fome philosophers, we ought undoubtedly to entertain a contemptible notion of human nature.

There is much of a dispute of words in all this controverfy. When a man denies the fincerity of all public fpirit or affection to a country and community, I am at a lofs what to think of him. Perhaps he never felt this paffion in fo clear and diffinct a manner as to remove all his doubts concerning its force and reality. But when he proceeds afterwards to reject all private friendship, if no interest or self-love intermix itself; I am then confident that he abuses terms, and confounds the ideas of things; fince it is impossible for any one to be fo felfish, or rather fo flupid, as to make no difference between one man and another, and give no preference to qualities, which engage his approbation and effeem. Is he alfo, fay I, as infenfible to anger as he pretends to be to friendship? And does injury and wrong no more affect him than kindness or benefits? Impossible : He does not know himself: He has forgotten the movements of his heart; or rather he makes use of a different language from the reft of his countrymen, and calls not things by their proper names. What fay you of natural affection? (I fubjoin) Is that also a species of felf-love ? Yes : All is felflove. Your children are loved only becaufe they are yours : Your friend for a like reafon : And your country engages you only fo far as it has a connexion with yourfelf: Were the idea of felf removed, nothing would affect you : You would be altogether unactive and infenfible: Or, if you ever gave yourfelf any movement, it would would only be from vanity, and a defire of fame and reputation to this fame felf. I am willing, reply I, to receive your interpretation of human actions, provided you admit the facts. That fpecies of felf-love, which difplays itself in kindness to others, you must allow to have great influence over human actions, and even greater, on many occasions, than that which remains in its original shape and form. For how few are there, who, having a family, children, and relations, do not fpend more on the maintenance and education of these than on their own pleasures? This, indeed, you juftly observe, may proceed from their felf-love, fince the prosperity of their family and friends is one, or the chief of their pleasures, as well as their chief honour. Be you also one of these felfish men, and you are sure of every one's good opinion and good will; or, not to flock your ears with these expressions, the felf-love of every one, and mine among the reft, will then incline us to ferve you, and speak well of you.

DIGNITY OF MEANNESS OF HUMAN NATURE. 89

In my opinion, there are two things which have led aftray those philosophers, that have infisted so much on the felfishness of man. In the fir/t place, they found, that every act of virtue or friendship was attended with a fecret pleasure; whence they concluded, that friendship and virtue could not be difinterested. But the fallacy of this is obvious. The virtuous sentiment or passion produces the pleasure, and does not arise from it. I feel a pleasure in doing good to my friend, because I love him; but do not love him for the sake of that pleasure.

In the fecond place, it has always been found, that the virtuous are far from being indifferent to praife; and therefore they have been reprefented as a fet of vain-glorious men, who had nothing in view but the applaufes of others. But this also is a fallacy. It is very unjust in the world, when they find any tincture of vanity in a laudable action, to depreciate it upon that account, or afcribe it entirely to that motive. The cafe is not the fame with vanity, as with other paffions. Where avarice or revenge enters into any feemingly virtuous action. it is difficult for us to determine how far it enters, and it is natural to suppose it the sole actuating principle. But vanity is fo clofely allied to virtue, and to love the fame of laudable actions approaches fo near the love of laudable actions for their own fake, that these passions are more capable of mixture, than any other kinds of affection; and it is almost impossible to have the latter without fome degree of the former. Accordingly, we find, that this passion for glory is always warped and varied according to the particular tafte or disposition of the mind on which it falls. NERO had the fame vanity in driving a chariot, that TRAJAN had in governing the empire with juffice and ability. To love the glory of virtuous deeds is a fure proof of the love of virtue.

of

Digitized by Google

(91)

ESSAY XII.

Of CIVIL LIBERTY,

HOSE who employ their pens on political fubjects, free from party-rage, and party-prejudices, cultivate a science, which, of all others, contributes most to public utility, and even to the private fatisfaction of thofe who addict themselves to the study of it. I am apt, however, to entertain a fuspicion, that the world is still too young to fix many general truths in politics, which will remain true to the latest posterity. We have not as yet had experience of three thousand years; fo that not only the art of reafoning is still imperfect in this science, as in all others, but we even want fufficient materials upon which we can reason. It is not fully known, what degree of refinement, either in virtue or vice, human nature is fusceptible of; nor what may be expected of mankind from any great revolution in their education. cuftoms, or principles. MACHIAVEL was certainly a great genius; but having confined his fludy to the furious and tyrannical governments of ancient times, or to the little diforderly principalities of ITALY, his reafonings, especially upon monarchical government, have been found extremely defective; and there fcarcely is any maxim in his Prince, which fubsequent experience has not entirely refuted. A weak prince, fays he, is incapable of receiving good counfel; for if he confult with feveral, be will not be able to choose among their different counsels. h

ESSAY. XII.

ġŻ

be abandon himfelf to one, that minifler may, perhaps, have capacity; but he will not long be a minifler: He will be fure to difpoffels his mafter, and place himfelf and his family upon the throne. I mention this, among many inflances of the errors of that politician, proceeding, in a great measure, from his having lived in too early an age of the world, to be a good judge of political truth. Almost all the princes of EUROPE are at present governed by their ministers; and have been so for near two centuries; and yet no such event has ever happened, or can possibly happen. SEJANUS might project dethroning the CÆ-SARS; but FLEURY, though ever so vicious, could not, while in his sense, entertain the least hopes of disposfeffing the BOURBONS.

Trade was never effeemed an affair of flate till the laft century; and there fcarcely is any ancient writer on politics, who has made mention of it*. Even the ITA-LIANS have kept a profound filence with regard to it, though it has now engaged the chief attention, as well of minifters of flate, as of fpeculative reafoners. The great opulence, grandeur, and military atchievements of the two maritime powers feem first to have instructed mankind in the importance of an extensive commerce.

Having, therefore, intended in this effay to make a full comparison of civil liberty and absolute government, and to show the great advantages of the former above the latter; I began to entertain a sufficient, that no man in this age was sufficiently qualified for such an undertaking; and that whatever any one should advance on that head would, in all probability, be refuted by further experience, and be rejected by posterity. Such mighty revolutions

• ΧΕΝΟΡΗΟΝ mentions it; but with a doubt if it be of any advantage to a flate. Eld: και μωτορία εφέλει τι πόλίν, &c. ΧΕΝ. ΗΙΕΠΟ. ΡΙΑΤΟ totally excludes it from his imaginary republic. De legibus, lib. iv.

revolutions have happened in human affairs, and fo many events have arifen contrary to the expectation of the ancients, that they are fufficient to beget the fufpicion of fill further changes.

It had been observed by the ancients, that all the arts and fciences arofe among free nations; and, that the PERSIANS and EGYPTIANS, notwithstanding their eafe. opulence, and luxury, made but faint efforts towards a relish in those finer pleasures, which were carried to such perfection by the GREEKS, amidft continual wars, attended with poverty, and the greatest fimplicity of life and manners. It had also been observed, that, when the GREEKS loft their liberty, though they increased mightily in riches, by means of the conquests of ALEX-ANDER; yet the arts, from that moment, declined among them, and have never fince been able to raife their head in that climate. Learning was transplanted to ROME, the only free nation at that time in the univerfe; and having met with fo favourable a foil, it made prodigious fhoots for above a century; till the decay of liberty produced also the decay of letters, and spread a total barbarifm over the world. From these two experiments, of which each was double in its kind, and shewed the fall of learning in absolute governments, as well as its rife in popular ones, LONGINUS thought himself sufficiently justified, in afferting, that the arts and sciences could never flourish, but in a free government: And in this opinion, he has been followed by feveral eminent writers * in our own country, who either confined their view merely to ancient facts, or entertained too great a partiality in favour of that form of government, established amongst us.

* Mr. ADDISON and LORD SHAFTESBURY.

But

Google

But what would these writers have faid, to the instances of modern ROME and of FLORENCE? Of which the former carried to perfection all the finer arts of fculpture, painting, and mufic, as well as poetry, though it groaned under tyranny, and under the tyranny of priefts : While the latter made its chief progrefs in the arts and fciences, after it began to lofe its liberty by the ufurpation of the family of MEDICI. ARIOSTO, TASSO, GA-LILEO, more than RAPHAEL, and MICHAEL ANGELO, were not born in republics. And though the LOMBARD fchool was famous as well as the ROMAN, yet the VENE-TIANS have had the smallest share in its honours, and feem rather inferior to the other ITALIANS, in their genius for the arts and sciences. RUBENS established his fchool at ANTWERP, not at AMSTERDAM: DRESDEN, not HAMBURG, is the centre of politeness in GER-MANY.

But the most eminent instance of the flourishing of learning in absolute governments, is that of FRANCE, which fcarcely ever enjoyed any established liberty, and yet has carried the arts and fciences as near perfection as any other nation. The ENGLISH are, perhaps, greater philosophers; the ITALIANS better painters and musicians; the ROMANS were greater orators: But the FRENCH are the only people, except the GREEKS, who have been at once philosophers, poets, orators, historians, painters, architects, fculptors, and musicians. With regard to the stage, they have excelled even the GREEKS, who far excelled the ENGLISH. And, in common life, they have, in a great measure, perfected that art, the most useful and agreeable of any, l'Art de Vivre, the art of fociety and conversation.

Digitized by Google

94

Įf

If we confider the flate of the fciences and polite arts in our own country, HORACE's observation, with regard to the ROMANS, may, in a great measure, be applied to the BRITISH.

----- Sed in longum tamen ævum Manserunt, hodieque manent vestigia ruris.

The elegance and propriety of ftyle have been very much neglected among us. We have no dictionary of our language, and fcarcely a tolerable grammar. The first polite prose we have, was writ by a man who is still alive *. As to SPRAT, LOCKE, and even TEMPLE, they knew too little of the rules of art to be efteemed elegant The profe of BACON, HARRINGTON, and writers. MILTON, is altogether fliff and pedantic; though their fense be excellent. Men, in this country, have been fo much occupied in the great difputes of Religion, Politics, and Philosophy, that they had no relish for the feemingly minute observations of grammar and criticism. And though this turn of thinking must have confiderably improved our fense and our talent of reasoning; it must be confessed, that, even in those fciences above-mentioned, we have not any flandard-book, which we can transmit to posterity: And the utmost we have to boast of, are a few effays towards a more just philosophy; which, indeed, promife well, but have not, as yet, reached any degree of perfection.

It has become an established opinion, that commerce can never flourish but in a free government; and this opinion feems to be founded on a longer and larger experience than the foregoing, with regard to the arts and sciences. If we trace commerce in its progress through TYRE, ATHENS, SYRACUSE, CARTHAGE, VENICE, FLO-

* Dr. Swirt.

· Digitized by Google

BENCE,

95 arts RENCE, GENOA, ANTWERP, HOLLAND, ENGLAND, &c: we fhall always find it to have fixed its feat in free governments. The three greateft trading towns now in Europe, are LONDON, AMSTERDAM, and HAM-BURGH; all free cities, and proteftant cities; that is, enjoying a double liberty. It muft, however, be obferved, that the great jealoufy entertained of late, with regard to the commerce of FRANCE, feems to prove, that this maxim is no more certain and infallible than the foregoing, and that the fubjects of an abfolute prince may become our rivals in commerce, as well as in learning.

Durft I deliver my opinion in an affair of fo much uncertainty, I would affert, that, notwithstanding the efforts of the FRENCH, there is fomething hurtful to commerce inherent in the very nature of absolute government, and inseparable from it : Though the reason I fhould affign for this opinion, is fomewhat different from that which is commonly infifted on. Private property feems to me almost as fecure in a civilized EURO-PEAN monarchy, as in a republic; nor is danger much apprehended in fuch a government, from the violence of the fovereign; more than we commonly dread harm from thunder, or earthquakes, or any accident the most unufual and extraordinary. Avarice, the fpur of industry, is fo obstinate a passion, and works its way through fo many real dangers and difficulties, that it is not likely to be fcared by an imaginary danger, which is fo fmall, that it fcarcely admits of calculation. Commerce, therefore, in my opinion, is apt to decay in absolute governments, not because it is there less secure, but because it is less honourable. A fubordination of ranks is abfolutely neceffary to the fupport of monarchy. Birth, titles, and place, must be honoured above industry and riches. And

96

Of CIVIL LIEERTY.

And while these notions prevail, all the confiderable traders will be tempted to throw up their commerce, in order to purchase some of those employments, to which privileges and honours are annexed.

Since I am upon this head, of the alterations which time has produced, or may produce in politics, 1 must observe, that all kinds of government, free and absolute, feem to have undergone, in modern times, a great change for the better, with regard both to foreign and domeffic management. The balance of power is a fecret in politics, fully known only to the prefent age; and I muft add, that the internal POLICE of states has also received great improvements within the laft century. We are informed by SALLUST, that CATILINE's army was much augmented by the accession of the highwaymen about ROME : though I believe, that all of that profession. who are at prefent dispersed over EUROPE, would not amount to a regiment. In CICERO's pleadings for MILO, I find this argument, among others, made use of to prove, that his client had not affaffinated CLODIUS. Had MILO. faid he, intended to have killed CLODIUS, he had not attacked him in the day-time, and at fuch a diffance from the city : He had way-laid him at night, near the fuburbs, where it might have been pretended, that he was killed by robbers; and the frequency of the accident would have favoured the deceit. This is a furprizing proof of the loofe police of ROME, and of the number and force of these robbers; fince CLODIUS* was at that time attended by thirty flaves, who were completely armed, and fufficiently accustomed to blood and danger in the frequent tumults excited by that feditious tribune.

Vol. I.

* Vide Ajc, Ped. in Orat. pro Milone. H

Digitized by Google

But

But though all kinds of government be improved in modern times, yet monarchical government feems to have made the greatest advances towards perfection. It may now be affirmed of civilized monarchies, what was formerly faid in praise of republics alone, that they are a government of Laws, not of Men. They are found fufceptible of order, method, and conftancy, to a furprifing degree. Property is there fecure ; industry encouraged ; the arts flourish ; and the prince lives fecure among his fubjects, like a father among his children. There are, perhaps, and have been for two centuries. near two hundred abfolute princes, great and fmall, in EUROPE; and allowing twenty years to each reign, we may fuppofe, that there have been in the whole two thousand monarchs or tyrants, as the GREEKS would have called them : Yet of these there has not been one. not even Philip II. of Spain, fo bad as Tiberius. CALIGULA, NERO, or DOMITIAN, who were four in twelve amongst the ROMAN emperors. It must, however, be confessed, that, though monarchical governments have approached nearer to popular ones, in gentlenefs and ftability; they are still inferior. Our modern education and cuftoms inftil more humanity and moderation than the ancient; but have not as yet been able to overcome entirely the difadvantages of that form of government.

But here I must beg leave to advance a conjecture, which feems probable, but which posterity alone can fully judge of. I am apt to think, that, in monarchical governments there is a fource of improvement, and in popular governments a fource of degeneracy, which in time will bring these species of civil polity fill nearer an equality. The greatest abuses, which arise in FRANCE, the most perfect model of pure monarchy, proceed not S

OF CIVIL LIBERTY.

n

to ł

35

4

ſ.

ri-

une

n.

:5,

in ve

٢O

uld

ne,

US, r in

)7.

erntledern

ode• able

ı Cİ

ure,

can

nical

l in

Ьin

r an

CE, not and and from the number or weight of the taxes, beyond what are to be met with in free countries; but from the expenfive, unequal, arbitrary, and intricate method of levying them, by which the industry of the poor, efpecially of the peafants and farmers, is, in a great meafure, difcouraged, and agriculture rendered a beggarly and flavish employment. But to whose advantage do these abufes tend ? If to that of the nobility, they might be efteemed inherent in that form of government; fince the nobility are the true fupports of monarchy; and it is natural their interest should be more confulted, in such a conflitution, than that of the people. But the nobility are, in reality, the chief lofers by this oppression ; fince it ruins their estates, and beggars their tenants. The only gainers by it are the Financiers, a race of men rather odious to the nobility and the whole kingdom. If a prince or minister, therefore, should arise, endowed with fufficient difcernment to know his own and the public interest, and with fufficient force of mind to break through ancient cuftoms, we might expect to fee thefe abuses remedied; in which case, the difference between that abfolute government and our free one, would not appear fo confiderable as at prefent.

The fource of degeneracy, which may be remarked in free governments, confifts in the practice of contracting debt, and mortgaging the public revenues, by which taxes may, in time, become altogether intolerable, and all the property of the state be brought into the hands of the public. This practice is of modern date. The ATHENIANS, though governed by a republic, paid near two hundred per Cent. for those fums of money, which any emergence made it neceffary for them to borrow; H 2 as

99

as we learn from XENOPHON*. Among the moderney, the DUTCH first introduced the practice of borrowing great fums at low interest, and have well nigh ruined themfelves by it. Absolute princes have also contracted debt; but as an absolute prince may make a bankruptcy when he pleafes, his people can never be oppreffed by his In popular governments, the people, and chiefly debts. those who have the highest offices, being commonly the public creditors, it is difficult for the flate to make ufe of this remedy, which, however it may fometimes be neceffary, is always cruel and barbarous. This, therefore, feems to be an inconvenience, which nearly threatens all free governments; especially our own, at the present juncture of affairs. And what a strong motive is this, to encrease our frugality of public money; left, for want of it, we be reduced, by the multiplicity of taxes. or what is worfe, by our public impotence and inability for defence, to curfe our very liberty, and with ourfelves in the fame flate of fervitude with all the nations that furround us ?

Κατίστιν δὶ ἀπ' «ἰδινὸς ἀν «ὑτω καλὰν κτέσαιντο ῶσπερ ἀφ οῦ ἀνπεθελέσωσιν εἰς την ἀξόςμην—οἰ δὶ γε αλέιςοι Αδηναίων πλέινκα λήψαθαι κατ' ἐνιαυθα ἢ ὅσω ἕν εἰστυέγκοσιν, οἱ γὰς μνῶν προθελέσαντις, ἐγγύς δωῦν μναῖν αφέσεδιν ἐξυσι ἡ δίκει τῶν ἀνδεοπίνων ἀσφαλές ατὸν τε καὶ σούλυχεοιῶτατον ἔιναι. ΚΙΚ. ΚΙΟΡΟΙ.

Digitized by Google

(101)

ESSAY XIII.

Of ELOQUENCE.

HOSE, who confider the periods and revolutions of human kind, as reprefented in hiftory, are entertained with a spectacle full of pleasure and variety, and fee, with furprize, the manners, cuftoms, and opinions of the fame fpecies fusceptible of fuch prodigious changes in different periods of time. It may, however, be observed, that, in civil history, there is found a much greater uniformity than in the hiftory of learning and science, and that the wars, negociations, and politics of one age, refemble more those of another, than the tafte, wit, and speculative principles. Interest and ambition, honour and shame, friendship and enmity, gratitude and revenge, are the prime movers in all public transactions ; and these passions are of a very stubborn and intractable nature, in comparison of the sentiments and understanding, which are eafily varied by education and example. The GOTHS were much more inferior to the ROMANS, in tafte and science, than in courage and virtue.

But not to compare together nations fo widely different; it may be observed, that even this later period of human learning is, in many respects, of an opposite character to the ancient; and that, if we be superior in philosophy, we are still, notwithstanding all our refinements, much inferior in eloquence.

H 3

philo-

In ancient times, no work of genius was thought to require fo great parts and capacity, as the fpeaking in public ; and fome eminent writers have pronounced the talents, even of a great poet or philosopher, to be of an inferior nature to those which are requisite for such an undertaking. GREECE and ROME produced, each of them, but one accomplished orator; and whatever . praifes the other celebrated fpeakers might merit, they were still esteemed much inferior to these great models of It is observable, that the ancient critics eloquence. could fcarcely find two orators in any age, who deferved to be placed precifely in the fame rank, and poffeffed the fame degree of merit. CALVUS, CÆLIUS, CURIO, HORTENSIUS, CÆSAR, role one above another : But the greatest of that age was inferior to CICERO, the most eloquent speaker that had ever appeared in ROME. Those of fine tafte, however, pronounced this judgment of the ROMAN orator, as well as of the GRECIAN, that both of them furpaffed in eloquence all that had ever appeared, but that they were far from reaching the perfection of their art, which was infinite, and not only exceeded human force to attain, but human imagination to conceive. CICERO declares himfelf diffatisfied with his own performances; nay, even with those of DEMO-Ita funt avidæ & capaces meæ aures, fays he, STHENES. & semper aliquid immensum, infinitumque desiderant.

Of all the polite and learned nations, ENGLAND alone poffeffes a popular government, or admits into the legiflature fuch numerous affemblies as can be fuppofed to lie under the dominion of eloquence. But what has ENGLAND to boaft of in this particular ? In enumerating the

102

Digitized by Google

Of ELOQUENCE.

the great men, who have done honour to our country, we exult in our poets and philosophers; but what orators are ever mentioned? Or where are the monuments of their genius to be met with ? There are found, indeed, in our hiftories, the names of feveral, who directed the resolutions of our parliament : But neither themselves nor others have taken the pains to preferve their speeches; and the authority, which they possefield, seems to have been owing to their experience, wildom, or power, more than to their talents for oratory. At prefent, there are above half a dozen speakers in the two houses, who, in the judgment of the public, have reached very near the fame pitch of eloquence; and no man pretends to give any one the preference above the reft. This feems to me a certain proof, that none of them have attained much beyond a mediocrity in their art, and that the species of eloquence, which they aspire to, gives no exercise to the fublimer faculties of the mind, but may be reached by ordinary talents and a flight application. A hundred cabinet-makers in LONDON can work a table or a chair equally well; but no one poet can write verfes with fuch spirit and elegance as Mr. POPE.

We are told, that, when DEMOSTHENES was to plead, all ingenious men flocked to ATHENS from the most remote parts of GREECE, as to the most celebrated spectacle of the world*. At LONDON you may see men fauntering in the court of requests, while the most im-

* Ne illud quidem intelligunt, non modo ita memorim proditum effe, fed ita neceffe fuiffe, cum DEMOSTHENES dicturus effety ut concurfus, audiendi caufa, ex tota GRECIA fierent. At cum ifti ATTICI dicunt, non modo a corona (quod eft ipfum miferabile) fed etiam ab advocatis relinquuntur.

.H 4

CICERO de Claris Oratoribus,

Digitized by Google

portant

portant debate is carrying on in the two houfes; and many do not think themfelves fufficiently compenfated, for the lofing of their dinners, by all the eloquence of our most celebrated speakers. When old CIBBER is to act, the curiosity of several is more excited, than when our prime minister is to defend himself from a motion for his removal or impeachment.

Even a perfon, unacquainted with the noble remains of ancient orators, may judge, from a few ftrokes, that the ftyle or species of their eloquence was infinitely more fublime than that which modern orators aspire to. How abfurd would it appear, in our temperate and calm speakers, to make use of an Apostrophe, like that noble one of DEMOSTHENES, fo much celebrated by QUIN-TILIAN and LONGINUS, when justifying the unfuccessful battle of CHÆRONEA, he breaks out, No, my Fellow-Citizens, No: You have not erred. I fwear by the manes of those heroes, who fought for the same cause in the plains of MARATHON and PLATÆA. Who could now endure fuch a bold and poetical figure, as that which CICERO employs, after defcribing in the most tragical terms the crucifixion of a ROMAN citizen : Should I paint the horrors of this scene, nat to ROMAN citizens, not to the allies of our state, not to those who have ever heard of the ROMAN Name, not even to men, but to brute-creatures; or, to go farther, should I lift up my voice in the most desolate solitude, to the rocks and mountains, yet should I surely see those rude and inanimate parts of nature moved with horror and indignation at the recital of fo enormous an action*. With what

* The criginal is; Quod fi hæc non ad cives Romanos, non ad aliques amicos nostræ civitatis, non ad eos qui populi Romani nomen audissent; denique, fi non ad homines, verùm ad bestias; aut etiam, ut longius progrediar, what a blaze of eloquence must fuch a fentence be furrounded to give it grace, or cause it to make any impression on the hearers? And what noble art and sublime talents are requisite to arrive, by just degrees, at a sentiment so bold and excessive: To inflame the audience, so as to make them accompany the speaker in such violent passions, and such elevated conceptions: And to conceal, under a torrent of eloquence, the artifice, by which all this is effectuated! Should this sentiment even appear to us excessive, as perhaps it justly may, it will at least ferve to give an idea of the style of ancient eloquence, where such swere not rejected as. wholly monstrous and gigantic.

. Digitized by Google

Of ELOQUENCE.

Suitable to this vehemence of thought and expression, was the vehemence of action, observed in the ancient orators. The fupplosio pedis, or ftamping with the foot, was one of the most usual and moderate gestures which they made use of *; though that is now esteemed too violent, either for the fenate, bar, or pulpit, and is only admitted into the theatre, to accompany the most violent passions, which are there represented,

One is fomewhat at a lofs to what caufe we may afcribe fo fenfible a decline of eloquence in later ages. The genius of mankind, at all times, is, perhaps, equal: The moderns have applied themfelves, with great grediar, fi in aliqua defertiffima folitudine, ad faxa & ad fcopulos hæc conqueri & deplorare vellem, tamen omnia muta atque inanima, tanta & tam indigna rerum atrositate commoverentur. C1c. in Ver.

* Ubi dolor? Ubi ardor animi, qui etiam ex infantium ingeniis elicere yoces & querelas folet? nulla perturbatio animi, nulla corporis: frona non percuffa, non femur; pedis (quod minimum eff) nulla fupplofio. Itaque eantum abfuit ut inflammare nostros animos; fomnum isto loco vix tenebamus. Cicrno de Claris Oratoribus.

Digitized by Google

industry

industry and fucces, to all the other arts and fciences: And a learned nation possesses a popular government; a circumstance which feems requisite for the full display of these noble talents: But notwithstanding all these advantages, our progress in eloquence is very inconfiderable, in comparison of the advances, which we have made in all other parts of learning.

Shall we affert, that the firains of ancient eloquence are unfuitable to our age, and ought not to be imitated by modern orators? Whatever reafons may be made ufe of to prove this, I am perfuaded they will be found, upon examination, to be unfound and unfatisfactory.

Firft, it may be faid, that, in ancient times, during the flourishing period of GREEK and ROMAN learning, the municipal laws, in every state, were but few and fimple, and the decision of causes was, in a great measure, left to the equity and common sense of the judges. The fludy of the laws was not then a laborious occupation, requiring the drudgery of a whole life to finish it, and incompatible with every other study or profession. The great statesmen and generals among the ROMANS were all lawyers; and CICERO, to fhew the facility of acquiring this fcience, declares, that, in the midft of all his occupations, he would undertake, in a few days, to make himself a complete civilian. Now. where a pleader addresses himself to the equity of his judges, he has much more room to difplay his eloquence. than where he must draw his arguments from strict laws, statutes, and precedents. In the former cafe, many circumstances must be taken in; many perfonal confiderations regarded; and even favour and inclination, which it belongs to the orator, by his art and eloquence, to conciliate, may be difguifed under the appearance of equity, equity. But how shall a modern lawyer have leifure to quit his toilfome occupations, in order to gather the flowers of PARNASSUS? Or what opportunity shall he have of displaying them, amidst the rigid and subtle arguments, objections, and replies, which he is obliged to make use of? The greatest genius, and greatest orator, who should pretend to plead before the Chancellor, after a month's study of the laws, would only labour to make himself ridiculous.

Of ELOQUENCE.

I am ready to own, that this circumstance, of the multiplicity and intricacy of laws, is a difcouragement to eloquence in modern times : But I affert, that it will not entirely account for the decline of that noble art. Īŧ may banish oratory from WESTMINSTER-HALL, but not from either house of parliament. Among the ATHENIANS, the AREOPAGITES expressly forbad all allurements of eloquence; and fome have pretended that in the GREEK orations, written in the judiciary form, there is not fo bold and rhetorical a ftyle, as appears in the ROMAN. But to what a pitch did the ATHENIANS carry their eloquence in the deliberative kind, when affairs of ftate were canvalled, and the liberty, happinefs, and honour of the republic were the fubject of debate? Difputes of this nature elevate the genius above all others, and give the fulleft fcope to eloquence; and fuch difputes are very frequent in this nation.

Secondly, It may be pretended that the decline of eloquence is owing to the fuperior good fenfe of the moderns, who reject with difdain all those rhetorical tricks, employed to feduce the judges, and will admit of nothing but folid argument in any debate of deliberation. If a man be accused of murder, the fact must be proved by witneffes and evidence; and the laws will afterwards determine determine the punifhment of the criminal. It would be ridiculous to defcribe, in ftrong colours, the horror and cruelty of the action : To introduce the relations of the dead; and, at a fignal, make them throw themfelves at the feet of the judges, imploring juftice with tears and lamentations : And ftill more ridiculous would it be, to employ a picture reprefenting the bloody deed, in order to move the judges by the difplay of fo tragical a fpectacle : Though we know, that this artifice was fometimes practifed by the pleaders of old *. Now, banifh the pathetic from public difcourfes, and you reduce the fpeakers merely to modern eloquence; that is, to good fenfe, delivered in proper exprefion.

Perhaps it may be acknowledged, that our modern cuftoms, or our superior good sense, if you will, should make our orators more cautious and referved than the ancient, in attempting to inflame the paffions, or elevate the imagination of their audience : But, I fee no reason, why it fhould make them defpair abfolutely of fucceeding in that attempt. It fhould make them redouble their art, not abandon it entirely. The ancient orators feem alfo to have been on their guard against this jealousy of their audience; but they took a different way of eluding They hurried away with fuch a torrent of fublime iť +. and pathetic, that they left their hearers no leifure to perceive the artifice, by which they were deceived. Nay, to confider the matter aright, they were not deceived by any artifice. The orator, by the force of his own genius and eloquence, first inflamed himself with anger, indignation, pity, forrow; and then communicated those impetuous movements to his audience.

Digitized by Google

• QUINTIL. lib. vi. cap. 1. + LONGINUS, cap. 15. 2

Does

Of ELOQUENCE.

Does any man pretend to have more good fense than JULIUS CÆSAR? yet that haughty conqueror, we know, was fo subdued by the charms of CICERO's eloquence, that he was, in a manner, confirained to change his settled purpose and resolution, and to absolve a criminal, whom, before that orator pleaded, he was determined to condemn.

Some objections, I own, notwithftanding his vaft fuccefs, may lie against some passages of the ROMAN orator. He is too florid and rhetorical: His figures are too flriking and palpable: The divisions of his discourse are drawn chiefly from the rules of the fchools: And his wit difdains not always the artifice even of a pun, rhyme, or The GRECIAN addreffed himfelf to an ingle of words. audience much less refined than the ROMAN senate or judges. The lowest vulgar of ATHENS were his fovereigns, and the arbiters of his eloquence *. Yet is his manner more chaste and austere than that of the other. Could it be copied, its fuccefs would be infallible over a modern affembly. It is rapid harmony, exactly adjusted to the fense: It is vehement reasoning, without any appearance of art: It is difdain, anger, boldnefs, freedom, involved in a continued ftream of argument: And of all human productions, the orations of DEMO-STHENES prefent to us the models, which approach the nearest to perfection.

Thirdly, It may be pretended, that the diforders of the ancient governments, and the enormous crimes, of which the citizens were often guilty, afforded much ampler matter for eloquence than can be met with among the moderns. Were there no VERRES or CATILINE, there

* See NOTE [D].

Digitized by Google

would

110

would be no CICERO. But that this reason can have no great influence, is evident. It would be easy to find a PHILIP in modern times; but where shall we find a DEMOSTHENES?

What remains, then, but that we lay the blame on the want of genius, or of judgment in our speakers, who either found themselves incapable of reaching the heights of ancient eloquence, or rejected all fuch endeavours, as unfuitable to the fpirit of modern affemblies? A few fuccessful attempts of this nature might rouze the genius of the nation, excite the emulation of the youth, and accustom our ears to a more sublime and more pathetic elocution, than what we have been hitherto entertained with. There is certainly fomething accidental in the first rife and the progress of the arts in any nation. T doubt whether a very fatisfactory reason can be given. why ancient ROME, though it received all its refinements from GREECE, could attain only to a relifh for flatuary, painting and architecture, without reaching the practice of these arts : While modern ROME has been excited by a few remains found among the ruins of antiquity, and has produced artifts of the greatest eminence and diffinction. Had fuch a cultivated genius for oratory, as WALLER's for poetry, arifen, during the civil wars, when liberty began to be fully established, and popular affemblies to enter into all the most material points of government; I am perfuaded fo illustrious an example would have given a quite different turn to BRITISH eloquence, and made us reach the perfection of the ancient model. Our orators would then have done honour to their country, as well as our poets, geometers, and philosophers, and BRITISH CICEROS have appeared, as well as BRITISH ARCHIMEDESES and VIRGILS.

Digitized by Google

It

Of ELOQUENCE.

It is feldom or never found, when a false taste in poetry or eloquence prevails among any people, that it has been preferred to a true, upon comparison and re-It commonly prevails merely from ignorance flection. of the true, and from the want of perfect models, to lead men into a juster apprehension, and more refined relish of those productions of genius. When these appear, they foon unite all fuffrages in their favour, and, by their natural and powerful charms, gain over, even the most prejudiced, to the love and admiration of them. The principles of every paffion, and of every fentiment, is in every man; and when touched properly, they rife to life, and warm the heart, and convey that fatisfaction, by which a work of genius is diffinguished from the adulterate beauties of a capricious wit and fancy. And if this observation be true, with regard to all the liberal arts, it must be peculiarly so, with regard to eloquence; which, being merely calculated for the public, and for men of the world, cannot, with any pretence of reafon, appeal from the people to more refined judges; but must fubmit to the public verdict, without referve or limi-Whoever, upon comparison, is deemed by a tation. common audience the greatest orator, ought most certainly to be pronounced fuch, by men of fcience and erudition. And though an indifferent speaker may triumph for a long time, and be effeemed altogether perfect by the vulgar, who are fatisfied with his accomplifhments, and know not in what he is defective : Yet, whenever the true genius arifes, he draws to him the attention of every one, and immediately appears fuperior to his rival.

Now to judge by this rule, ancient eloquence, that is, the fublime and paffionate, is of a much jufter tafte than the modern, or the argumentative and rational; and, if properly executed, will always have more command and

ESSAY XIII.

and authority over mankind. We are fatisfied with our mediocrity, because we have had no experience of any thing better: But the ancients had experience of both. and, upon comparison, gave the preference to that kind of which they have left us fuch applauded models. For, if I mistake not, our modern eloquence is of the fame ftyle or fpecies with that which ancient critics denominated ATTIC eloquence, that is, calm, elegant, and fubtile, which instructed the reason more than affected the paffions, and never raifed its tone above argument or common discourse. Such was the eloquence of Lysias among the ATHENIANS, and of CALVUS among the These were esteemed in their time: ROMANS. but when compared with DEMOSTHENES and CICERO, were eclipfed like a taper when fet in the rays of a meridian Those latter orators posselled the fame elegance. fun. and fubtility, and force of argument, with the former; but what rendered them chiefly admirable, was that pathetic and fublime, which, on proper occasions, they threw into their difcourfe, and by which they commanded the refolution of their audience.

Of this fpecies of eloquence we have fcarcely had any inftance in ENGLAND, at leaft in our public fpeakers. In our writers, we have had fome inftances, which have met with great applaufe, and might affure our ambitious youth of equal or fuperior glory in attempts for the revival of ancient eloquence. Lord BOLINGBROKE's productions, with all their defects in argument, method, and precifion, contain a force and energy, which our orators fcarcely ever aim at; though it is evident, that fuch an elevated ftyle has much better grace in a fpeaker than in a writer, and is affured of more prompt and more aftonifhing fuccefs. It is there feconded by the graces of voice and action: The movements are mutually communicated nicated between the orator and the audience : And the very aspect of a large assembly, attentive to the discourse of one man, must inspire him with a peculiar elevation, fufficient to give a propriety to the strongest figures and expressions. It is true, there is a great prejudice against fet speeches; and a man cannot escape ridicule, who repeats a discourse as a school-boy does his lesson, and takes no notice of any thing that has been advanced in the courfe of the debate. But where is the necessity of falling into this abfurdity ? A public fpeaker must know beforehand the question under debate. He may compose all the arguments, objections, and answers, such as he thinks will be most proper for his discourse *. If any thing new occur, he may fupply it from his invention; nor will the difference be very apparent between his elaborate and his extemporary compositions. The mind naturally continues with the fame impetus or force, which it has acquired by its motion; as a veffel, once impelled by the oars, carries on its course for some time, when the original impulse is fuspended.

Digitized by Google

Of ELOQUENCE.

I fhall conclude this fubject with obferving, that, even though our modern orators fhould not elevate their ftyle, or afpire to a rivalfhip with the ancient; yet is there, in most of their speeches, a material defect, which they might correct, without departing from that composed air of argument and reasoning, to which they limit their ambition. Their great affectation of extemporary discourses has made them reject all order and method, which seems fo requisite to argument, and without which it is forarcely possible to produce an entire conviction on the

* The first of the ATHINIANS, who composed and wrote his speeches, was PERICLES, a man of business and a man of sense, if ever there was one, newro-yearild hope is dixacress rain orge eyed orged follow, Suidas in Inselwhy.

Digitized by Google

VOL. I.

ŝ

ł

$

.

ð

.

3

ŀ

ć.

į.

mind.

mind. It is not, that one would recommend many divisions in a public discourse, unless the subject very evidently offer them: But it is easy, without this formality, to observe a method, and make that method confpicuous to the hearers, who will be infinitely pleased to see the arguments rise naturally from one another, and will retain a more thorough persuasion, than can arise from the strongest reasons, which are thrown together in confusion.

Digitized by Google

(115)

E S S A Y XIV.

Of the RISE and PROGRESS of the ARTS and SCIENCES.

TOTHING requires greater nicety, in our enquiries concerning human affairs, than to diffinguifh exactly what is owing to chance, and what proceeds from caules; nor is there any fubject, in which an author is more liable to deceive himfelf by falfe fubtilties and refinements. To fay, that any event is derived from chance, cuts fhort all farther enquiry concerning it, and leaves the writer in the fame flate of ignorance with the But when the event is fuppofed to reft of mankind. proceed from certain and stable causes, he may then difplay his ingenuity, in affigning these causes; and as a man of any fubtility can never be at a lofs in this particular, he has thereby an opportunity of fwelling his volumes, and discovering his profound knowledge, in observing what escapes the vulgar and ignorant.

The diffinguishing between chance and causes must depend upon every particular man's fagacity, in confidering every particular incident. But, if I were to affign any general rule to help us in applying this diffinction, it would be the following, What depends upon a few perfons is, in a great measure, to be ascribed to chance, or fecret and unknown eauses: What arises from a great num-I 2 ber, may often be accounted for by determinate and known causes.

Two natural reafons may be affigned for this rule. First, If you suppose a dye to have any bias, however small, to a particular fide, this bias, though, perhaps, it may not appear in a few throws, will certainly prevail in a great number, and will cast the balance entirely to that fide. In like manner, when any causes beget a particular inclination or passion, at a certain time, and among a certain people; though many individuals may escape the contagion, and be ruled by passions peculiar to themselves; yet the multitude will certainly be feized by the common affection, and be governed by it in all their actions.

Secondly, Those principles or causes, which are fitted to operate on a multitude, are always of a großler and more flubborn nature, less subject to accidents, and less influenced by whim and private fancy, than those which operate on a few only. The latter are commonly so delicate and refined, that the smallest incident in the health, education, or fortune of a particular person, is sufficient to divert their course, and retard their operation; nor is it possible to reduce them to any general maxims or observations. Their influence at one time will never affure us concerning their influence at another; even though all the general circumstances should be the same in both cases.

To judge by this rule, the domeftic and the gradual revolutions of a flate muft be a more proper fubject of reafoning and obfervation, than the foreign and the violent, which are commonly produced by fingle perfons, and are more influenced by whim, folly, or caprice, than by general paffions and interefts. The depreffion of the lords, and rife of the commons in ENGLAND, after the flatutes ftatutes of alienation and the encrease of trade and industry, are more easily accounted for by general principles; than the depression of the SPANISH, and rife of the FRENCH monarchy, after the death of CHARLES QUINT. Had HARRY IV. Cardinal RICHLIEU, and LOUIS XIV. been SPANIARDS; and PHILIP II. III. and IV. and CHARLES II. been FRENCHMEN, the history of these two nations had been entirely reversed.

The Rise of Arts and Sciences.

117

For the fame reason, it is more easy to account for the rife and progrefs of commerce in any kingdom, than for that of learning; and a ftate, which fhould apply itfelf to the encouragement of the one, would be more affured of fuccefs, than one which fhould cultivate the other. Avarice, or the defire of gain, is an universal paffion, which operates at all times, in all places, and upon all perfons: But curiofity, or the love of knowledge, has a very limited influence, and requires youth, leifure, education, genius, and example, to make it govern any perfon. You will never want bookfellers, while there are buyers of books: But there may frequently be readers where there are no authors. Multitudes of people, neceffity and liberty, have begotten commerce in But fludy and application have fearcely Holland: produced any eminent writers.

¢

;

ı

ł

ú ź

h

е. Ь,

0

6 d.

Ľ?

ųż.

ΰġ

12 ł

j) οĎ

li.

1

يەر. س

- 10

We may, therefore; conclude; that there is no fubject, in which we muft proceed with more caution, than in tracing the hiftory of the arts and fciences; left we affign caufes which never existed; and reduce what is merely contingent to stable and universal principles. Those who cultivate the sciences in any state, are always few in number : The passion, which governs them; limited : Their taste and judgment delicate and easily perverted : And their application diffurbed with the smallest accident. Chance, therefore; or scient and un-I a known known caules, muft have a great influence on the rife and progress of all the refined arts.

Digitized by Google

But there is a reason, which induces me not to afcribe the matter altogether to chance. Though the perfons, who cultivate the fciences with fuch aftonifhing fuccefs. as to attract the admiration of posterity, be always few, in all nations and all ages; it is impossible but a share of the fame spirit and genius must be antecedently diffused throughout the people among whom they arife, in order to produce, form, and cultivate, from their earlieft infancy, the taffe and judgment of those eminent writters. The mais cannot be altogether inlipid, from which fuch refined spirits are extracted. There is a God within us. fays OVID, who breathes that divine fire, by which we are animated*. Poets, in all ages, have advanced this claim There is not, however, any thing fuperto infpiration. Their fire is not kindled from natural in the cafe. heaven. It only runs along the earth; is caught from one breaft to another; and burns brighteft, where the materials are best prepared, and most happily disposed. The question, therefore, concerning the rife and progrefs of the arts and fciences, is not altogether a question concerning the tafte, genius, and fpirit of a few, but concerning those of a whole people; and may, therefore, be accounted for, in fome measure, by general causes and principles. I grant, that a man, who'fhould enquire, why fuch a particular poet, as HOMER, for inftance, existed, at fuch a place, in fuch a time, would throw himfelf headlong into chimzera, and could never treat of fuch a fubject, without a multitude of falle fubtilities and refinements. He might as well pretend to give a reason, why such particular > * Eft Deus in nobis; agitante calefcimus illo : Impetus hic, tacræ femina mentis habet.

> > Digitized by Google

Ovid: F.f. lib. i. generals, generals, as FABIUS and SCIPIO, lived in ROME at fuch a time, and why FABIUS came into the world before SEIPIO. For fuch incidents as thefe, no other reafon can be given than that of HORACE :

Scit genius, natale comes, qui temperat aftrum, Naturæ Deus humanæ, mortalis in unum ----- Quodque caput, vultu mutabilis, albus & ater.

But I am perfuaded, that in many cafes good reafons might be given, why fuch a nation is more polite and learned, at a particular time, than any of its neighbours. At least, this is fo curious a fubject, that it were a pity to abandon it entirely, before we have found whether it be fusceptible of reasoning, and can be reduced to any general principles.

My first observation on this head is, That it is impossible for the arts and sciences to arise, at first, among any people, unless that people enjoy the blessing of a free government.

In the first ages of the world, when men are as yet barbarous and ignorant, they feek no farther fecurity against mutual violence and injustice, than the choice of fome rulers, few or many, in whom they place an implicit confidence, without providing any fecurity, by laws or political inftitutions, against the violence and injustice of these rulers. If the authority be centered in a fingle perfon, and if the people, either by conquest, or by the ordinary course of propagation, encrease to a great multitude, the monarch, finding it impossible, in h s own person. to execute every office of fovereignty, in every place, must delegate his authority to inferior magistrates, who preferve peace and order in their respective districts. As experience and education have not yet refined the judgments of men to any confiderable degree, the prince, who is himfelf unreftrained, never dreams of reftraining his

j

ł

IC.

k

ľ

I.4

Digitized by Google

his ministers, but delegates his full authority to every one, whom he fets over any portion of the people. All general laws are attended with inconveniencies, when applied to particular cases; and it requires great penetration and experience, both to perceive that these inconveniencies are fewer than what refult from full difcre-, tionary powers in every magistrate; and also to difcern what general laws are, upon the whole, attended with fewest inconveniencies. This is a matter of so great difficulty, that men may have made fome advances, even in the fublime arts of poetry and eloquence, where a rapidity of genius and imagination affifts their progrefs. before they have arrived at any great refinement in their municipal laws, where frequent trials and diligent obfervation can alone direct their improvements. It is not, therefore, to be supposed, that a barbarous monarch, unrestrained and uninstructed, will ever become a legislator, or think of reftraining his Balhaws, in every province, or even his Cadis in every village. We are told, that the late Czar, though actuated with a noble genius, and imit with the love and admiration of EUROPEAN arts; yet professed an effeem for the TURKISH policy in this particular, and approved of fuch fummary decifions of causes, as are practifed in that barbarous monarchy, where the judges are not reftrained by any methods, forms, or laws. He did not perceive, how contrary fuch a practice would have been to all his other endeavours for refining his people. Arbitrary power, in all cafes, is fomewhat oppreflive and debafing; but it is altogether ruinous and intolerable, when contracted into a small compais; and becomes still worse, when the person, who posselies it, knows that the time of his authority is limited and uncertain. Habet subjectos tanquam suos; viles, úÌ ut alienos^{*}. He governs the fubjects with full authority, as if they were his own; and with negligence or tyranny, as belonging to another. A people, governed after fuch a manner, are flaves in the full and proper fenfe of the word; and it is impossible they can ever aspire to any refinements of taste or reason. They dare not fo much as pretend to enjoy the necessiries of life in plenty or fecurity.

To expect, therefore, that the arts and fciences fhould take their first rife in a monarchy, is to expect a contradiction. Before these refinements have taken place, the monarch is ignorant and uninftructed; and not having knowledge fufficient to make him fenfible of the neceffity of balancing his government upon general laws, he delegates his full power to all inferior magistrates. This barbarous policy debafes the people, and for ever prevents all improvements. Were it possible, that, before science were known in the world, a monarch could possifies for much wildom as to become a legiflator, and govern his people by law, not by the arbitrary will of their fellowfubjects, it might be possible for that species of government to be the first nursery of arts and sciences. But that supposition feems scarcely to be confistent or rational.

It may happen, that a republic, in its infant flate, may be fupported by as few laws as a barbarous monarchy, and may entrust as unlimited an authority to its magifirates or judges. But, befides that the frequent elections by the people are a confiderable check upon authority; it is impossible, but, in time, the negessity of reftraining the magisfrates, in order to preferve liberty,

* TACIT, hift. lib. i.

muft

d by Google

must at last appear, and give rife to general laws and statutes. The ROMAN Confuls, for some time, decided all caufes, without being confined by any politive flatutes, till the people, bearing this yoke with impatience, created the decenvirs, who promulgated the twelve tables; a body of laws, which, though, perhaps, they were not equal in bulk to one ENGLISH act of parliament, were almost the only written rules, which regulated property and punifiment, for fome ages, in that famous republic. They were, however, fufficient, together with the forms of a free government, to fecure the lives and properties of the citizens; to exempt one man from the dominion of another : and to protect every one against the violence or tyranny of his fellow-citizens. In fuch a fituation the fciences may raife their heads and flourish : But never can have being amidst fuch a fcene of oppression and flavery, as always refults from barbarous monarchies, where the people alone are reftrained by the authority of the magistrates, and the magistrates are not restrained by any law or flatute. An unlimited despotism of this nature, while it exists, effectually puts a stop to all improvements, and keeps men from attaining that knowledge, which is requisite to instruct them in the advantages, arifing from a better police, and more moderate authority.

Here then are the advantages of free flates. Though a republic fhould be barbarous, it neceflarily, by an infallible operation, gives rife to LAW, even before mankind have made any confiderable advances in the other fciences. From law arifes fecurity: From fecurity curiofity: And from cuaiofity knowledge. The latter fleps of this progrefs may be more accidental; but the former are altogether neceflary. A republic without laws can never have have any duration. On the contrary, in a monarchical government, law arifes not necessarily from the forms of government. Monarchy, when absolute, contains even something repugnant to law. Great wildom and reflexion can alone reconcile them. But such a degree of wildom can never be expected, before the greater refinements and improvements of human reason. These refinements require curiosity, fecurity, and law. The first growth, therefore, of the arts and sciences can never be expected in despotic governments.

122

Digitized by Google

There are other caufes, which difcourage the rife of the refined arts in defpotic governments; though I take the want of laws, and the delegation of full powers to every petty magiftrate, to be the principal. Eloquence certainly fprings up more naturally in popular governments : Emulation too, in every accompliftment, must there be more animated and enlivened : And genius and capacity have a fuller fcope and career. All these caufes render free governments the only proper nurfery for the arts and fciences.

The next observation, which I shall make on this head, is, That nothing is more favourable to the rife of politenefs and learning, than a number of neighbouring and independent flates, connected together by commerce and policy. The emulation, which naturally ariles among those neighbouring flates, is an obvious fource of improvement: But what I would chiefly infist on is the stop, which such limited territories give both to power and to authority.

Extended governments, where a fingle perfon has great influence, foon become abfolute; but fmall ones change naturally into commonwealths. A large government is accuftomed by degrees to tyranny; becaufe each act of violence is at first performed upon a part, which, being diftant from the majority, is not taken notice of, nor excites any violent ferment. Befides, a large government.

1

۴Ĉ

ment, though the whole be discontented, may, by a little art, be kept in obedience; while each part, ignorant of the resolutions of the rest, is astraid to begin any commotion or infurrection. Not to mention, that there is a superstitious reverence for princes, which mankind naturally contract when they do not often see the fovereign, and when many of them become not acquainted with him so as to perceive his weakness. And as large states can afford a great expence, in order to support the pomp of majesty; this is a kind of fascination on men, and naturally contributes to the enflaving of them.

In a small government, any act of oppression is immediately known throughout the whole: The murmurs and discontents, proceeding from it, are eafily communicated: And the indignation arifes the higher, becaufe the fubjects are not apt to apprehend, in fuch flates, that the diffance is very wide between themfelves and their fovereign. " No " man," faid the prince of CONDE, " is a hero to his It is certain that admiration and " Valet de Chambre." acquaintance are altogether incompatible towards any mortal creature. Sleep and love convinced even ALEX-ANDER himself that he was not a God: But I suppose that fuch as daily attended him could eafily, from the numberless weaknesses to which he was subject, have given him many still more convincing proofs of his humanity.

But the divisions into fmall states are favourable to learning, by stopping the progress of authority as well as that of power. Reputation is often as great a fascination upon men as fovereignty, and is equally destructive to the freedom of thought and examination. But where a number of neighbouring states have a great intercours of arts and commerce, their mutual jealous keeps them from receiving too lightly the law from each other, in matters of taske and of reasoning, and makes them examine mine every work of art with the greatest care and accuracy. The contagion of popular opinion fpreads not fo easily from one place to another. It readily receives a check in fome state or other, where it concurs not with the prevailing prejudices. And nothing but nature and reason, or, at least, what bears them a strong refemblance, can force its way through all obstacles, and unite the most rival nations into an esteem and admiration of it.

Digitized by Google

GREECE was a clufter of little principalities, which foon became republics; and being united both by their near neighbourhood, and by the ties of the fame language and they entered into the closeft intercourse of intereft. commerce and learning. There concurred a happy climate, a foil not unfertile, and a most harmonious and comprehensive language; fo that every circumstance among that people feemed to favour the rife of the arts and sciences. Each city produced its several artists and philosophers, who refused to yield the preference to those of the neighbouring republics: Their contention and debates sharpened the wits of men : A variety of objects was prefented to the judgment, while each challenged the preference to the reft : and the fciences, not being dwarfed by the reftraint of authority, were enabled to make fuch confiderable shoots, as are, even at this time, the objects of our admiration. After the ROMAN christian, or catholic church had foread itfelf over the civilized world, and had engroffed all the learning of the times; being really one large flate within itfelf, and united under one head; this variety of fects immediately disappeared, and the PERIPATETIC philofophy was alone admitted into all the fchools, to the utter depravation of every kind of learning. But mankind, having at length thrown off this yoke, affairs are now returned nearly to the fame fituation as before, and EUROPE is at present a copy at large, of what GREECE was was formerly a pattern in miniature. We have feen the advantage of this fituation in feveral infrances. What checked the progress of the CARTESIAN philosophy, to which the FRENCH nation shewed fuch a strong propenfity towards the end of the last century, but the opposition made to it by the other nations of EUROPE, who soon discovered the weak fides of that philosophy? The fevereft fcrutiny, which NEWTON's theory has undergone, proceeded not from his own countrymen, but from foreigners; and if it can overcome the obftacles, which it meets with at prefent in all parts of EUROPE, it will probably go down triumphant to the latest posterity. The ENGLISH are become fenfible of the fcandalous licentioufnefs of their ftage, from the example of the FRENCH decency and morals. The FRENCH are convinced, that their theatre has become fomewhat effeminate, by too much love and gallantry; and begin to approve of the more majculine tafte of fome neighbouring nations.

Digitized by Google

126

In CHINA, there feems to be a pretty confiderable flock of politene's and fcience, which, in the courfe of fo many centuries, might naturally be expected to ripen into fomething more perfect and finished, than what has yet arisen from them. But CHINA is one vast empire, speaking one language, governed by one law, and fympathizing in the fame manners. The authority of any teacher, such as CONFUCIUS, was propagated easily from one corner of the empire to the other. None had courage to result the torrent of popular opinion. And posserity was not bold enough to dispute what had been universally received by their ancestors. This feems to be one natural reason, why the sciences have made fo show a progress in that mighty empire *.

* See NOTE [E].

Digitized by Google

If we confider the face of the globe, EUROPE, of all the four parts of the world, is the most broken by feas, rivers, and mountains; and GREECE of all countries of EUROPE. Hence these regions were naturally divided into several distinct governments. And hence the sciences arose in GREECE; and EUROPE has been hitherto the most constant habitation of them.

I have fometimes been inclined to think, that interruptions in the periods of learning, were they not attended with such a destruction of ancient books, and the records of hiftory, would be rather favourable to the arts and fciences, by breaking the progress of authority, and dethroning the tyrannical usurpers over human reason. In this particular, they have the fame influence, as interruptions in political governments and focieties. Confider the blind submission of the ancient philosophers to the feveral mafters in each fchool, and you will be convinced. that little good could be expected from a hundred conturies of fuch a fervile philosophy. Even the ECLECTICS. who arole about the age of AUGUSTUS, notwithstanding their profeffing to chuse freely what pleafed them from every different lect, were yet, in the main, as flavish and dependent as any of their brethren; fince they fought for truth not in nature, but in the feveral fchools; where they supposed the must necessarily be found, though not united in a body, yet dispersed in parts. Upon the revival of learning, those fects of STOICS and EPICUREANS. PLATONISTS and PYTHAGORICIANS, could never regain any credit or authority; and, at the fame time, by the example of their fall, kept men from fubmitting, with fuch blind deference, to those new fects, which have attempted to gain an afcendant over them.

The third observation, which I shall form on this head, of the rife and progress of the arts and sciences, is, That lí

That though the only proper Nursery of these noble plants be a free flate; yet may they be transplanted into any government; and that a republic is most favourable to the growth of the sciences, a civilized monarchy to that of the polite arts.

To balance a large flate or fociety, whether monarchical or republican, on general laws, is a work of fo great difficulty, that no human genius, however comprehenfive, is able, by the mere dint of reafon and reflection, to effect it. The judgments of many must unite in this work : Experience must guide their labour : Time must bring it to perfection : And the feeling of inconveniencies must correct the mistakes, which they inevitably fall into, in their first trials and experiments. Hence appears the impoffibility, that this undertaking fhould be begun and carried on in any monarchy; fince fuch a form of government, ere civilized, knows no other fecret or policy, than that of entrusting unlimited powers to every governor or magistrate, and subdividing the people into fo many claffes and orders of flavery. From fuch a fituation. no improvement can ever be expected in the fciences, in the liberal arts, in laws, and fcarcely in the manual arts and manufactures. The fame barbarifm and ignorance, with which the government commences, is propagated to all posterity, and can never come to a period by the efforts or ingenuity of fuch unhappy flaves.

But though law, the fource of all fecurity and happinefs, arifes late in any government, and is the flow product of order and of liberty, it is not preferved with the fame difficulty with which it is produced; but when it has once taken root, is a hardy plant, which will fearcely ever perifh through the ill culture of men, or the rigour of the feafons. The arts of luxury, and much more the liberal arts, which depend on a refined tafte or fentiment, ment, are eafily loft; becaufe they are always relified by a few only, whole leifure, fortune, and genius fit them for fuch amufements. But what is profitable to every mortal, and in common life, when once discovered, can fcarcely fall into oblivion, but by the total fubverfion of fociety, and by fuch furious inundations of barbarous invaders, as obliterate all memory of former arts and civility. Imitation also is apt to transport these coarser and more useful arts from one climate to another, and make them precede the refined arts in their progrefs; though perhaps they fprang after them in their first rife and pro-From thefe caufes proceed civilized mopagation. narchies; where the arts of government, first invented in free states, are preferved to the mutual advantage and fecurity of fovereign and fubject.

Digitized by Google

However perfect, therefore, the monarchical form may appear to fome politicians, it owes all its perfection to the republican; nor is it poffible, that a pure defpotifm, eftablifhed among a barbarous people, can ever, by its native force and energy, refine and polifh itfelf. It muft borrow its laws, and methods, and inftitutions, and confequently its ftability and order, from free governments. Thefe advantages are the fole growth of republics. The extensive defpotifm of a barbarous monarchy, by entering into the detail of the government, as well as into the principal points of administration, for ever prevents all fuch improvements.

In a civilized monarchy, the prince alone is unreftrained in the exercise of his authority, and possefiles alone a power, which is not bounded by any thing but custom, example, and the fense of his own interest. Every minister or magistrate, however eminent, must submit to the general laws which govern the whole fociety, and must exert the authority delegated to him after the YOL. I. K manner

Digitized by Google

jl,

ESSAY XIV.

manner which is prefcribed. The people depend on none but their fovereign, for the fecurity of their property. He is fo far removed from them, and is fo much exempt from private jealoufies or interefts, that this dependence is fearcely felt. And thus a fpecies of government arifes, to which, in a high political rant, we may give the name of Tyranny; but which, by a juft and prudent administration, may afford tolerable fecurity to the people, and may answer most of the ends of political fociety.

But though in a civilized monarchy, as well as in a republic, the people have fecurity for the enjoyment of their property; yet in both these forms of government. those who posses the supreme authority have the disposal of many honours and advantages, which excite the ambition and avarice of mankind. The only difference is. that, in a republic, the candidates for office must look downwards, to gain the fuffrages of the people; in a monarchy, they must turn their attention upwards, to court the good graces and favour of the great. To be fuccessful in the former way, it is necessary for a man to make himself uleful, by his industry, capacity, or knowledge: To be prosperous in the latter way, it is requisite for him to render himfelf agreeable, by his wit, complaifance, or civility. A ftrong genius fucceeds beft in republics: A refined tafte in monarchies. And, confequently, the fciences are the more natural growth of the one, and the polite arts of the other.

Not to mention, that monarchies, receiving their chief ftability from a fuperflitious reverence to priefts and princes, have commonly abridged the liberty of reafoning, with regard to religion and politics, and confequently metaphyfics and morals. All these form the most confiderable branches of fcience. Mathematics and and natural philosophy, which only remain, are not half fo valuable.

Among the arts of conversation, no one pleases more than mutual deference or civility, which leads us to refign our own inclinations to those of our companion. and to curb and conceal that prefumption and arrogance. fo natural to the human mind. A good-natured man. who is well educated, practifes this civility to every mortal, without premeditation or interest. But in order to render that valuable quality general among any people. it feems necessary to affift the natural disposition by fome general motive. Where power rifes upwards from the people to the great, as in all republics, fuch refinements of civility are apt to be little practifed; fince the whole flate is, by that means, brought near to a level, and every member of it is rendered, in a great measure, independent of another. The people have the advantage, by the authority of their fuffrages: The great, by the fuperiority of their station. But in a civilized monarchy. there is a long train of dependence from the prince to the peafant, which is not great enough to render property precarious, or deprefs the minds of the people; but is fufficient to beget in every one an inclination to pleafe his fuperiors, and to form himfelf upon those models. which are most acceptable to people of condition and education. Politeness of manners, therefore, arises most naturally in monarchies and courts; and where that flourishes, none of the liberal arts will be altogether neglected or defpifed.

The republics in EUROPE are at prefent noted for want of politeness. The good-manners of a SWISS civilized in HOLLAND *, is an expression for rufficity among the > • C'est la politesse d'un Suisse En Hollande civilisé.

K 2

Digitized by Google

Rousseau. FRENCH. ESSAY XIV.

FRENCH. The ENGLISH, in fome degree, fall under the fame cenfure, notwithstanding their learning and genius. And if the VENETIANS be an exception to the rule, they owe it, perhaps, to their communication with the other ITALIANS, most of whose governments beget a dependence more than fufficient for civilizing their manners.

It is difficult to pronounce any judgment concerning the refinements of the ancient republics in this particular :-But I am apt to suspect, that the arts of conversation were not brought fo near to perfection among them as the arts of writing and composition. The fcurrility of the ancient orators, in many inftances, is quite flocking, and exceeds all belief. Vanity too is often not a little offensive in authors of those ages *; as well as the common licentiousness and immodesty of their style, Quicunque impudicus, adulter, ganeo, manu, ventre, pene, bona patria laceraverat, fays SALLUST in one of the gravest and most moral passages of his history. Nam fuit ante Helenam Cunnus, teterrima belli caula, is an expression of HORACE. in tracing the origin of moral good and evil. OVID and LUCRETIUS + are almost as licentious in their style as Lord ROCHESTER; though the former were fine gentlemen and delicate writers, and the latter, from the corruptions of that court, in which he lived, feems to have thrown off all regard to fhame and decency. JUVENAL inculcates modefly with great zeal; but fets a very bad ex-

* It is needlefs to cite CICERO OF PLINY on this head: They are too much noted: But one is a little furprized to find ARRIAN, a very grave, judicious writer, interrupt the thread of his narration all of a fudden, to tell his readers that he himfelf is as eminent among the GREEKS for eloquence, as ALEMANDER was for arms. Lib. i.

+ This poet (See lib. iv. 1165.) recommends a very extraordinary cure for love, and what one expects not to meet with in fo elegant and philosophical a poem. It feems to have been the original of fome of Dr.'Swirr's images. The elegant CATULLUS and PHEDRUS fall under the fame centure.

Digitized by Google

ample ample of it, if we confider the impudence of his expreffions.

I fhall also be bold to affirm, that among the ancients, there was not much delicacy of breeding, or that polite deference and respect, which civility obliges us either to express or counterfeit towards the perfons with whom we converfe. CICERO was certainly one of the fineft gentlemen of his age; yet I must confess I have frequently been flocked with the poor figure under which he represents his friend ATTICUS, in those dialogues, where he himfelf is introduced as a fpeaker. That learned and virtuous ROMAN, whole dignity, though he was only a private gentleman, was inferior to that of no one in ROME, is there shewn in rather a more pitiful light than PHILALETHES's friend in our modern dialogues. He is a humble admirer of the orator, pays him frequent compliments, and receives his inftructions, with all the deference which a scholar owes to his master*. Even CATO is treated in fomewhat of a cavalier manner in the dialogues De Finibus.

One of the most particular details of a real dialogue, which we meet with in antiquity, is related by POLYBIUS †; when PHILIP, king of MACEDON, a prince of wit and parts, met with TITUS FLAMININUS, one of the politeft of the ROMANS, as we learn from PLUTARCH ‡, accompanied with ambaffadors from almost all the GREEK cities. The ÆTOLIAN ambaffador very abruptly tells the king, that he talked like a fool or a madman (Ampein). That's evident, fays his majefty, even to a blind man; which • ATT. Non mihi videtur ad beate vivendum fatis effe virtutem. MARA At hercule BRUTO meo videtur; cujus ego judicium, pace tua dixerim, longè antepono tuo. Tusc. Quæft. lib. v.

+ Lib. xvii.

4. .

1 In vita FLAMIN.

. K 3

Digitized by Google

Was

was a raillery on the blindnefs of his excellency. Yet all this did not pass the usual bounds : For the conference was not difturbed; and FLAMININUS was very well diverted with these strokes of humour. At the end, when PHILIP craved a little time to confult with his friends, of whom he had none prefent, the ROMAN general, being defirous also to shew his wit, as the historian fays, tells him, that perhaps the reason, why he had none of his friends with him, was because he had murdered them all; which was actually the cafe. This unprovoked piece of rufficity is not condemned by the hiftorian; caufed no farther refentment in PHILIP, than to excite a SARDONIAN fmile, or what we call a grin; and hindered him not from renewing the conference next day. PLUTARCH* too mentions this raillery amongst the witty and agreeable > fayings of FLAMININUS.

Cardinal WOLSEY apologized for his famous piece of infolence, in faying, EGO ET REX MEUS, I and my king, by observing, that this expression was conformable to the Latin idiom, and that a ROMAN always named himfelf before the perfon to whom, or of whom, he fpake. Yet this feems to have been an inftance of want of civility among that people. The ancients made it a rule, that the perfon of the greatest dignity should be mentioned first in the discourse; infomuch, that we find the spring of a quarrel and jealoufy between the ROMANS and ÆTOLIANS, to have been a poet's naming the ÆTO-LIANS before the ROMANS, in celebrating a victory gained by their united arms over the MACEDONIANS +. Thus LIVIA difgufted TIBERIUS by placing her own name before his in an infeription 1.

Digitized by Google

* PLUT. in vita FLAMIN.

+ Ibid.

No

1 TACIT. Ann. lib. iii. cap. 64.

No advantages in this workl are pure and unmixed. In like manner, as modern politenefs, which is naturally fo ornamental, runs often into affectation and foppery, difguife and infincerity; fo the ancient fimplicity, which is naturally fo amiable and affecting, often degenerates into rufficity and abufe, fourrility and obfcenity.

If the fuperiority in politeness fhould be allowed to modern times, the modern notions of gallantry, the natural produce of courts and monarchies, will probably be affigned as the causes of this refinement. No one denies this invention to be modern*: But fome of the more zealous partizans of the ancients, have afferted it to be foppish and ridiculous, and a reproach, rather than a credit, to the prefent age \dagger . It may here be proper to examine this question.

Nature has implanted in all living creatures an affection between the fexes, which, even in the fierceft and moft rapacious animals, is not merely confined to the fatisfaction of the bodily appetite, but begets a friendihip and mutual fympathy, which runs through the whole tenor of their lives. Nay, even in those species, where nature limits the indulgence of this appetite to one feason and to one object, and forms a kind of marriage or affociation between a fingle male and female, there is yet a visible complacency and benevolence, which extends farther, and mutually softens the affections of the fexes towards each other. How much more must this have place in man, where the confinement of the appetite is not natural; but either is derived accidentally from some strong charm of love, or arises from reflections on

* In the Self Tormentor of TERENCE, CLINIAS, whenever he comes to town, inflead of waiting on his miftrefs, fends for her to come to him.

+ Lord SHAFTESBURY, fee Lis Moralifis.

Κ4

Digitized by Google

duty

ESSAY XIV.

duty and convenience? Nothing, therefore, can proceed lefs from affectation than the paffion of gallantry. It is natural in the higheft degree. Art and education, in the most elegant courts, make no more alteration on it, than on all the other laudable paffions. They only turn the mind more towards it; they refine it; they polish it; and give it a proper grace and expression.

But gallantry is as generous as it is natural. To correct fuch gross vices, as lead us to commit real injury on others, is the part of morals, and the object of the most ordinary education. Where that is not attended to, in fome degree, no human fociety can fubfist. But in order to render conversation, and the intercourse of minds more eafy and agreeable, good-manners have been invented, and have carried the matter fomewhat farther. Whereever nature has given the mind a propenfity to any vice, or to any paffion difagreeable to others, refined breeding has taught men to throw the biafs on the oppofite fide, and to preferve, in all their behaviour, the appearance of fentiments different from those to which they naturally incline. Thus, as we are commonly proud and felfifh, and apt to assume the preference above others, a polite man learns to behave with deference towards his companions, and to yield the fuperiority to them in all the common incidents of fociety. In like manner, wherever a perfon's fituation may naturally beget any difagreeable fuspicion in him, it is the part of good-manners to prevent it, by a fludied difplay of fentiments, directly contrary to those of which he is apt to be jealous. Thus, old men know their infirmities, and naturally dread contempt from the youth : Hence, well-educated youth redouble the inftances of respect and deference to their elders, Strangers and foreigners are without protection ; Hence, in

The RISE of ARTS and SCIENCES. 137

h

in all polite countries, they receive the higheft civilities, and are entitled to the first place in every company. man is lord in his own family, and his guests are, in a manner, fubject to his authority : Hence, he is always the lowest perfon in the company; attentive to the wants of every one; and giving himfelf all the trouble, in order to pleafe, which may not betray too visible an affectation. or impose too much constraint on his guests *. Gallantry is nothing but an inftance of the fame generous attention. As nature has given man the superiority above woman, by endowing him with greater ftrength both of mind and body; it is his part to alleviate that fuperiority, as much as poffible, by the generofity of his behaviour, and by a fludied deference and complaifance for all her inclinations and opinions. Barbarous nations difplay this fuperiority, by reducing their females to the most abject flavery; by confining them, by beating them, by felling them, by killing them. But the male fex, among a polite people, discover their authority in a more generous, though not a lefs evident manner; by civility, by respect, by complaifance, and, in a word, by gallantry. In good company, you need not afk, Who is the mafter of the feast? The man, who fits in the lowest place, and who is always industrious in helping every one, is certainly the perfon. We must either condemn all fuch inftances of generofity, as foppifh and affected, or admit of gallantry among the reft. The ancient MUSCOVITES wedded their wives with a whip, instead of a ring. The fame people, in their own houses, took always the pre-

* The frequent mention in ancient authors of that ill-bred cuftom of the mafter of the family's cating better bread or drinking better wine at table, than he afforded his guefts, is but ani ndifferent mark of the civility of those ages. See JUVENAL, fat. 5. PLINIT lib. xiv. C1P. 13. Alfo PLINIT Epift. Lucian de mercede conductis, Saturnalia, &cc. There is fearcely any part of EUROPE at prefent fo uncivilized as to admit of fuch a cuftom.

Digitized by Google

cedency

cedency above foreigners, even * foreign ambaffadors. These two instances of their generosity and politeness are much of a piece.

Gallantry is not lefs compatible with wildom and prudence, than with nature and generofity; and when under proper regulations, contributes more than any other invention, to the entertainment and improvement of the youth of both fexes. Among every fpecies of animals, nature has founded on the love between the fexes their fweeteft and beft enjoyment. But the fatisfaction of the bodily appetite is not alone fufficient to gratify the mind; and even among brute-creatures, we find, that their play and dalliance, and other expressions of fondness, form the greateft part of the entertainment. In rational beings, we must certainly admit the mind for a confiderable share. Were we to rob the feast of all its garniture of reason, difcourfe, fympathy, friendfhip, and gaiety, what remains would fcarcely be worth acceptance, in the judgment of the truly elegant and luxurious.

What better fchool for manners, than the company of virtuous women ; where the mutual endeavour to pleafe must infensibly polish the mind, where the example of the female fostness and modesty must communicate itself to their admirers, and where the delicacy of that fex puts every one on his guard, left he give offence by any breach of decency?

Among the ancients, the character of the fair-fex was confidered as altogether domeftic; nor were they regarded as part of the polite world, or of good company. This, perhaps, is the true reafon why the ancients have not left us one piece of pleafantry that is excellent (unlefs one may except the Banquet of XENOPHON, and the Dia-

* See Relation of three Embaffies, by the Earl of CARLISLE.

Digitized by Google

logues

The RISE of ARTS and SCIENCES. 139

logues of LUCIAN), though many of their ferious compolitions are altogether inimitable. HORACE condemns the coarle railleries and cold jefts of PLAUTUS: But, though the moft eafy, agreeable, and judicious writer in the world, is his own talent for ridicule very ftriking or refined? This, therefore, is one confiderable improvement, which the polite arts have received from gallantry, and from courts, where it firft arofe.

But, to return from this digreffion, I fhall advance it as a fourth observation on this subject, of the rife and progrefs of the arts and sciences, That when the arts and fciences come to perfection in any state, from that moment they naturally or rather necessarily decline, and feldom or never revive in that nation, where they formerly flourished.

It must be confessed, that this maxim, though conformable to experience, may, at first fight, be esteemed contrary to reason. If the natural genius of mankind be the fame in all ages, and in almost all countries (as feems to be the truth), it must very much forward and cultivate this genius, to be poffeffed of patterns in every art, which may regulate the tafte, and fix the objects of imitation. The models left us by the ancients gave birth to all the arts about 200 years ago, and have mightily advanced their progrefs in every country of EUROPE: Why had they not a like effect during the reign of TRAJAN and his fucceffors; when they were much more entire, and were still admired and studied by the whole world? So late as the emperor JUSTINIAN, the POET, by way of diffinction, was underflood, among the GREEKS, to be HOMER; among the ROMANS, VIR-GIL. Such admiration still remained for these divine geniufes; though no poer had appeared for many centuries, who could juffly pretend to have imitated them.

A man's

A man's genius is always, in the beginning of life. as much unknown to himfelf as to others; and it is only after frequent trials, attended with fuccefs, that he dares think himfelf equal to those undertakings, in which those, who have fucceeded, have fixed the admiration of mankind. If his own nation be already posselied of many models of eloquence, he naturally compares his own juvenile exercifes with thefe; and being fenfible of the great disproportion, is discouraged from any farther attempts, and never aims at a rivalfhip with those authors, whom he fo much admires. A noble emulation is the fource of every excellence. Admiration and modefly naturally extinguish this emulation. And no one is fo liable to an excess of admiration and modefly, as a truly great genius.

Next to emulation, the greatest encourager of the noble arts is praife and glory. A writer is animated with new force, when he hears the applauses of the world for his former productions; and, being roufed by fuch a motive, he often reaches a pitch of perfection, which is equally furprizing to himfelf and to his readers. But when the posts of honour are all occupied, his first attempts are but coldly received by the public; being compared to productions, which are both in themselves more excellent. and have already the advantage of an established reputa-Were MOLIERE and CORNEILLE to bring upon tion. the ftage at prefent their early productions, which were formerly fo well received, it would difcourage the young poets, to fee the indifference and difdain of the public. The ignorance of the age alone could have given admiffion to the Prince of TYRE; but it is to that we owe the Moor : Had Every man in his humour been rejected, we had never feen VOLPONE.

Perhaps,

The RISE of ARTS and SCIENCES. 141

Perhaps, it may not be for the advantage of any nation to have the arts imported from their neighbours in too great perfection. This extinguishes emulation, and finks the ardour of the generous youth. So many models of ITALIAN painting brought into ENGLAND, inflead of exciting our artifts, is the cause of their small progress in that noble art. The same, perhaps, was the case of ROME, when it received the arts from GREECE. That multitude of polite productions in the FRENCH language, dispersed all over GERMANY and the NORTH, hinder these nations from cultivating their own language, and keep them still dependent on their neighbours for those elegant entertainments.

It is true, the antients had left us models in every kind of writing, which are highly worthy of admiration. But befides that they were written in languages, known only to the learned; befides this, I fay, the comparison is not so perfect or entire between modern wits, and those who lived in foremote an age. Had WALLER been born in ROME, during the reign of TIBERIUS, his first productions had been despised, when compared to the finished odes of HORACE. But in this island, the superiority of the ROMAN poet diminished nothing from the fame of the ENGLISH. We esteemed ourselves sufficiently happy, that our climate and language could produce but a faint copy of so excellent an original.

In fhort, the arts and fciences, like fome plants, require a frefh foil; and however rich the land may be, and however you may recruit it by art or care, it will never, when once exhausted, produce any thing that is perfect or finished in the kind.

Digitized by Google

-4-

. . Digitized by Google

(143)

ESSAY XV.

The EPICUREAN*.

I T is a great mortification to the vanity of man, that his utmost art and industry can never equal the meanest of nature's productions, either for beauty or value. Art is only the under-workman, and is employed to give a few strokes of embellishment to those pieces, which come from the hand of the master. Some of the drapery may be of his drawing; but he is not allowed to touch the principal figure. Art may make a fuit of clothes: But nature must produce a man.

Even in those productions, commonly denominated works of art, we find that the nobleft of the kind are beholden for their chief beauty to the force and happy influence of nature. To the native enthusiafm of the poets, we owe whatever is admirable in their productions. The greatest genius, where nature at any time fails him (for she is not equal), throws aside the lyre, and hopes not, from the rules of art, to reach that divine harmony,

• Or, The man of elegance and pleafure. The intention of this and the three following Effays is not fo much to explain accurately the fentiments of the ancient fects of philosophy, as to deliver the fentiments of fects, that naturally form themselves in the world, and entertain different ideas of human life and of happines. I have given each of them the name of the philosophical sect, to which it bears the greatest affinity.

Digitized by Google

which

which must proceed from her infpiration alone. How poor are those songs, where a happy flow of fancy has not furnished materials for art to embellish and refine!

But of all the fruitless attempts of art, no one is fo ridiculous, as that which the fevere philosophers have undertaken, the producing of an artificial happines, and making us be pleafed by rules of reafon, and by reflection. Why did none of them claim the reward, which XERXES promised to him, who should invent a new pleasure ? Unlefs, perhaps, they invented fo many pleafures for their own use, that they despised riches, and stood in no need of any enjoyments, which the rewards of that monarch could procure them. I am apt, indeed, to think, that they were not willing to furnish the PERSIAN court with a new pleafure, by prefenting it with fo new and unufual an object of ridicule. Their speculations, when confined to theory, and gravely delivered in the schools of GREECE, might excite admiration in their ignorant pupils : But the attempting to reduce fuch principles to practice would foon have betrayed their abfurdity.

You pretend to make me happy by reason, and by rules of art. You must, then, create me anew by rules of art. For on my original frame and structure does my happines depend. But you want power to effect this; and skill too, I am asraid: Nor can I entertain a less opinion of nature's wisdom than of yours. And let her conduct the machine, which she has fo wisely framed. I find, that I should only spoil it by my tampering.

To what purpole fhould I pretend to regulate, refine, or invigorate any of those fprings or principles, which nature has implanted in me? Is this the road by which I must reach happines? But happines implies ease, contentment;

Digitized by Google

• ر

The EPICUREAN.

tentment, repole, and pleafure; not watchfulnefs, care, and fatigue. The health of my body confifts in the facility, with which all its operations are performed. The ftomach digefts the aliments: The heart circulates the blood: The brain feparates and refines the fpirits: And all this without my concerning myfelf in the matter. When by my will alone I can ftop the blood, as it runs with impetuofity along its canals, then may I hope to change the courfe of my fentiments and paffions. In vain fhould I ftrain my faculties, and endeavour to receive pleafure from an object, which is not fitted by nature to affect my organs with delight. I may give myfelf pain by my fruitlefs endeavours; but fhall never reach any pleafure.

Away then with all those vain pretences of making ourfelves happy within ourfelves, of feafting on our own thoughts, of being fatisfied with the confcioufnefs of well-doing, and of defpifing all affiftance and all fupplies from external objects. This is the voice of PRIDE, not of NATURE. And it were well, if even this pride could support itself, and communicate a real inward pleasure, however melancholy or fevere. But this impotent pride can do no more than regulate the outfide; and with infinite pains and attention compose the language and countenance to a philosophical dignity, in order to deceive the ignorant vulgar. The heart, mean while, is empty of all enjoyment: And the mind, unfupported by its proper objects, finks into the deepest forrow and dejection. Miferable, but vain mortal! Thy mind be happy within itself! With what resources is it endowed to fill so immenfe a void, and fupply the place of all thy bodily fenfes and faculties ? Can thy head fubfift without thy other members? In fuch a fituation,

Vol. I.

L

Digitized by Google

What

14Š

ESSAY XV.

What foolifb figure must it make? Do nothing elfe but fleep and ake.

Into fuch a lethargy, or fuch a melancholy, must thy mind be plunged, when deprived of foreign occupations and enjoyments.

Keep me, therefore, no longer in this violent conftraint. Confine me not within myfelf; but point out to me those objects and pleasures, which afford the chief enjoyment. But why do I apply to you, proud and ignorant fages, to shew me the road to happines? Let me confult my own passions and inclinations. In them must I read the dictates of nature; not in your frivolous discourses.

But fee, propitious to my wifnes, the divine, the amiable PLEASURE *, the fupreme love of GODS and men, advances towards me. At her approach, my heart beats with genial heat, and every fenfe and every faculty is diffolved in joy; while the pours around me all the embellishments of the spring, and all the treasures of the autumn. The melody of her voice charms my ears with the foftest music, as the invites me to partake of those delicious fruits, which, with a fmile that diffuses a glory on the heavens and the earth, the prefents to me. The fportive CUPIDS, who attend her, or fan me with their odoriferous wings, or pour on my head the most fragrant oils. or offer me their fparkling nectar in golden goblets. 0! for ever let me fpread my limbs on this bed of roles, and thus, thus feel the delicious moments, with foft and downy steps, glide along. But cruel chance ! Whither do you fly fo faft ? Why do my ardent wifhes, and that load of pleafures, under which you labour, rather haften

Digitized by Google

* Dia Voluptas. LUCALT.

than

The EPICUREAN.

than retard your unrelenting pace? Suffer me to enjoy this foft repole, after all my fatigues in fearch of happinefs. Suffer me to fatiate myfelf with these delicacies, after the pains of fo long and fo foolish an abstinence.

But it will not do. The roles have loft their hue : The fruit its flavour : And that delicious wine, whose fumes, fo late, intoxicated all my fenfes with fuch delight, now folicits in vain the fated palate. Pleasure fmiles at my languor. She beckons her fifter, Virtue, to come to her affiftance. The gay, the frolic Virtue obferves the call, and brings along the whole troop of my jovial friends. Welcome, thrice welcome, my ever dear companions, to thefe fhady bowers, and to this luxurious repail. Your prefence has reftored to the role its hue. and to the fruit its flavour. The vapours of this fprightly nectar now again play around my heart; while you partake of my delights, and discover, in your cheerful looks, the pleafure which you receive from my happiness and fatisfaction. The like do I receive from yours; and encouraged by your joyous prefence, shall again renew the feast, with which, from too much enjoyment, my fenfes were well nigh fated; while the mind kept not pace with the body, nor afforded relief to her o'er-burthened partner.

In our cheerful difcourfes, better than in the formal reafonings of the fchools, is true wifdom to be found. In our friendly endearments, better than in the hollow debates of ftatefmen and pretended patriots, does true virtue difplay itfelf. Forgetful of the paft, fecure of the future, let us here enjoy the prefent; and while we yet poffefs a being, let us fix fome good, beyond the power of fate or fortune. To-morrow will bring its own pleafures, along with it: Or fhould it difappoint our fond L 2 wifhes. wifhes, we fhall at least enjoy the pleasure of reflecting on the pleasures of to-day.

Fear not, my friends, that the barbarous diffonance of BACCHUS, and of his revellers, fhould break in upon this entertainment, and confound us with their turbulent and clamorous pleafures. The fprightly mufes wait around; and with their charming fymphony, fufficient to foften the wolves and tygers of the favage defert, infpire a foft joy into every bofom. Peace, harmony, and concord reign in this retreat; nor is the filence ever broken but by the mufic of our fongs, or the cheerful accents of our friendly voices.

But hark ! the favourite of the muses, the gentle DA-MON ftrikes the lyre; and while he accompanies its harmonious notes with his more harmonious fong, he infpires us with the fame happy debauch of fancy, by which he is himfelf transported. "Ye happy youth," he fings, "Ye favoured of heaven*, while the wanton " fpring pours upon you all her blooming honours, let " not glory feduce you, with her delufive blaze, to pafs " in perils and dangets this delicious feafon, this prime " of life. Wildom points out to you the road to plea-" fure: Nature too beckons you to follow her in that " fmooth and flowery path. Will you flut your ears to " their commanding voice ? Will you harden your heart " to their foft allurements ? Oh, deluded mortals ! thus " to lofe your youth, thus to throw away fo invaluable a " prefent, to trifle with fo perifhing a bleffing. Con-" template well your recompence. Confider that glory,

* An imitation of the SYRENS fong in TASSO:

" O Giovinetti, mentre Aprile & MAGGIO

" V' ammantan di fiorité & verde spoglie," &c.

Gierusalemme liberata, Canto 14.

Digitized by Google

" which

" which fo allures your proud hearts, and feduces you " with your own praifes. It is an echo, a dream, nay " the fhadow of a dream, diffipated by every wind, and " loft by every contrary breath of the ignorant and ill-" judging multitude. You fear not that even death it-" felf shall ravish it from you. But behold ! while you " are yet alive, calumny bereaves you of it; ignorance " neglects it; nature enjoys it not; fancy alone, re-" nouncing every pleafure, receives this airy recom-" pence, empty and unstable as herfelf."

Thus the hours pass unperceived along, and lead in their wanton train all the pleasures of fense, and all the joys of harmony and friendship. Smiling innocence closes the proceffion; and while fhe prefents herfelf to our ravished eyes, the embellishes the whole scene, and renders the view of these pleasures as transporting, after they have past us, as when, with laughing countenances, they were yet advancing towards us.

But the fun has funk below the horizon; and darknefs, ftealing filently upon us, has now buried all nature in an universal shade. " Rejoice, my friends, continue " your repair, or change it for foft repole. Though " absent, your joy or your tranquillity shall still be " mine." But whither do you go? Or what new pleasures call you from our fociety? Is there aught agreeable without your friends? And can aught please, in which we partake not? "Yes, my friends; the joy which I now feek, " admits not of your participation. Here alone I wifh " your absence : And here alone can I find a sufficient " compensation for the loss of your fociety."

But I have not advanced far through the fhades of the thick wood, which fpreads a double night around me, ere, methinks, I perceive through the gloom, the charming

Digitized by Google

L3

ing CÆLIA, the mistress of my wishes, who wanders impatient through the grove, and, preventing the appointed hour, filently chides my tardy steps. But the joy, which the receives from my prefence, best pleads my excufe; and, diffipating every anxious and every angry thought, leaves room for nought but mutual joy and rapture. With what words, my fair one, shall I express my tendernefs, or defcribe the emotions which now warm my transported bosom ! Words are too faint to describe my love; and if, alas! you feel not the fame flame within you, in vain shall I endeavour to convey to you a just conception of it. But your every word and every motion suffice to remove this doubt; and, while they express your passion, serve also to enflame mine. How amiable this folitude, this filence, this darkness ! No objects now importune the ravished foul. The thought, the fenfe, all full of nothing but our mutual happines, wholly possess the mind, and convey a pleasure, which deluded mortals vainly feek for in every other enjoyment. -

But why does your bofom heave with these fighs, while tears bathe your glowing cheeks? Why distract your heart with such vain anxieties? Why so often ask me, How long my love shall yet endure? Alas! my CÆLIA, can I resolve this question? Do I know how long my life shall yet endure? But does this also disturb your tender breast? And is the image of our frail mortality for ever present with you, to throw a damp on your gayest hours, and poison even those joys which love inspires? Confider rather, that if life be frail, if youth be transitory, we should well employ the present moment, and lose no part of so perissed an existence. Yet a little moment, and these shall be no more. We shall be, as if we had never been, been. Not a memory of us be left upon earth; and even the fabulous shades below will not afford us a habitation. Our fruitless anxieties, our vain projects, our uncertain speculations shall all be swallowed up and lost. Our prefent doubts, concerning the original caufe of all things, must never, alas! be refolved. This alone we may be certain of, that if any governing mind prefide, he must be pleased to see us fulfil the ends of our being, and enjoy that pleafure, for which alone we were created. Let this reflection give eafe to your anxious thoughts ; but render not your joys too ferious, by dwelling for ever upon it. It is sufficient, once, to be acquainted with this philosophy, in order to give an unbounded loofe to love and jollity, and remove all the fcruples of a vain superstition : But while youth and passion, my fair one, prompt our eager desires, we must find gayer subjects of discourse, to intermix with these amorous careffes.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

(153)

E S S A Y XVI.

The STOIC*.

THERE is this obvious and material difference in the conduct of nature, with regard to man and other animals, that, having endowed the former with a fublime celeftial fpirit, and having given him an affinity with fuperior beings, fhe allows not fuch noble faculties to lie lethargic or idle; but urges him, by neceffity, to employ, on every emergence, his utmost art and industry. Brute-creatures have many of their neceffities fupplied by nature, being cloathed and armed by this beneficent parent of all things : And where their own industry is requisite on any occasion, nature, by implanting inftincts, ftill fupplies them with the art, and guides them to their good, by her unerring precepts. But man, exposed naked and indigent to the rude elements, rifes flowly from that helpless flate, by the care and vigilance of his parents; and, having attained his utmost growth and perfection, reaches only a capacity of fublifting, by his own care and vigilance. Every thing is fold to skill and labour; and where nature furnishes the materials, they are still rude and unfinished, till industry, ever active

.* Or the man of action and virtue,

and

Digitized by Google

154

and intelligent, refines them from their brute state, and fits them for human use and convenience.

Acknowledge, therefore, O man! the beneficence of nature; for fhe has given the that intelligence which fupplies all thy neceffities. But let not indolence, under the falfe appearance of gratitude, perfuade thee to reft contented with her prefents. Wouldeft thou return to the raw herbage for thy food, to the open fky for thy covering, and to ftones and clubs for thy defence againft the ravenous animals of the defert? Then return alfo to thy favage manners, to thy timorous fuperfition, to thy brutal ignorance; and fink thyfelf below those animals, whose condition thou admireft, and wouldeft fo fondly imitate.

Thy kind parent, nature, having given thee art and intelligence, has filled the whole globe with materials to employ these talents: Hearken to her voice, which so plainly tells thee, that thou thyself shouldess also be the object of thy industry, and that by art and attention alone thou canss acquire that ability, which will raise thee to thy proper station in the universe. Behold this artizan, who converts a rude and shapeless should this artizan, who converts a rude and shapeless should this demetal; and moulding that metal by his cunning hands, creates, as it were by magic, every weapon for his defence, and every utensil for his convenience. He has not this skill from nature: Use and practice have taught it him : And if thou wouldess emulate his success, thou must follow his laborious foot-steps.

But while thou ambitioufly afpireft to perfecting thy bodily powers and faculties, would ft thou meanly neglect thy mind, and, from a prepofterous floth, leave it ftill rude and uncultivated, as it came from the hands of nature?

Digitized by Google

ture? Far be fuch folly and negligence from every rational being. If nature has been frugal in her gifts and endowments, there is the more need of art to fupply her detects. If the has been generous and liberal, know that the ftill expects industry and application on our part, and revenges herfelf in proportion to our negligent ingratitude. The richeft genius, like the most fertile foil, when uncultivated, thoots up into the rankeft weeds; and inftead of vines and olives for the pleafure and use of man, produces, to its flothful owner, the most abundant crop of poisons.

The great end of all human industry, is the attainment of happinefs. For this were arts invented, fciences cultivated, laws ordained, and focieties modelled, by the most protound wildom of patriots and legislators. Even the lonely favage, who lies exposed to the inclemency of the elements, and the fury of wild beafts, forgets not. for a moment, this grand object of his being. Ignorant as he is of every art of life, he still keeps in view the end of all those arts, and eagerly seeks for felicity amidst that darknefs with which he is environed. But as much as the wildest favage is inferior to the polifhed citizen. who, under the protection of laws, enjoys every convenience which industry has invented; fo much is this citizen himfelf inferior to the man of virtue, and the true philosopher, who governs his appetites, subdues his paffions, and has learned, from reason, to set a just value on every purfuit and enjoyment. For is there an art and apprenticeship necessary for every other attainment? And is there no art of life, no rule, no precepts to direct us in this principal concern? Can no particular pleasure be attained without skill; and can the whole be regulated, without reflection or intelligence, by the blin₫ blind guidance of appetite and inflinct? Surely then no miftakes are ever committed in this affair? but every man, however diffolute and negligent, proceeds in the purfuit of happinefs with as unerring a motion, as that which the celeftial bodies obferve, when, conducted by the hand of the Almighty, they roll along the ethereal plains. But if miftakes be often, be inevitablý committed, let us register these miftakes; let us confider their causes; let us weigh their importance; let us enquire for their remedies. When from this we have fixed all the rules of conduct, we are philosophers: When we have reduced these rules to practice, we are source fages.

Like many fubordinate artifts, employed to form the feveral wheels and fprings of a machine: Such are those who excel in all the particular arts of life. He is the master workman who puts those feveral parts together; moves them according to just harmony and proportion; and produces true felicity as the result of their confpiring order.

While thou haft fuch an alluring object in view, fhall that labour and attention, requifite to the attainment of thy end, ever feem burdenfome and intolerable ? Know, that this labour itfelf is the chief ingredient of the felicity to which thou afpireft, and that every enjoyment foon becomes infipid and diftafteful, when not acquired by fatigue and induftry. See the hardy hunters rife from their downy couches, fhake off the flumbers which ftill weigh down their heavy eye-lids, and, ere Aurora has yet covered the heavens with her flaming mantle, haften to the foreft. They leave behind, in their own houfes, and in the neighbouring plains, animals of every kind, whole fleft furnifhes the most delicious fare, and 3.

Digitized by Google

The STOIC.

which offer themfelves to the fatal ftroke. Laborious man difdains fo eafy a purchafe. He feeks for a prey, which hides itfelf from his fearch, or flies from his purfuit, or defends itfelf from his violence. Having exerted in the chafe every paffion of the mind, and every member of the body, he then finds the charms of repofe, and with joy compares its pleafures to those of his engaging labours.

And can vigorous industry give pleasure to the pursuit even of the most worthless prey, which frequently escapes our toils? And cannot the fame industry render the cultivating of our mind, the moderating of our paffions. the enlightening of our reason, an agreeable occupation ; while we are every day fenfible of our progress, and behold our inward features and countenance brightening incefantly with new charms ? Begin by curing yourfelf of this lethargic indolence; the tafk is not difficult; You need but tafte the fweets of honeft labour. Proceed to learn the just value of every purfuit; long fludy is not requisite: Compare, though but for once, the mind to the body, virtue to fortune, and glory to pleafure. You will then perceive the advantages of industry : You will then be fenfible what are the proper objects of your induftry.

In vain do you feek repole from beds of roles: In vain do you hope for enjoyment from the most delicious wines and fruits. Your indolence itself becomes a fatigue: Your pleasure itself creates difgust. The mind, unexercised, finds every delight inspin and loathsome; and ere yet the body, full of noxious humours, feels the torment of its multiplied difeases, your nobler part is sensible of the invading poison, and seeks in vain to relieve lieve its anxiety by new pleafures, which ftill augment the fatal malady.

Digitized by Google

I need not tell you, that, by this eager purfuit of pleafure, you more and more expole yourfelf to fortune and accidents, and rivet your affections on external objects, which chance may, in a moment, ravifh from you. I fhall fuppole, that your indulgent flars favour you ftill with the enjoyment of your riches and polleffions. I prove to you, that even in the midft of your luxurious pleafures, you are unhappy; and that by too much indulgence, you are incapable of enjoying what profperous fortune ftill allows you to pollefs.

But furely the inftability of fortune is a confideration not to be overlooked or neglected. Happinefs cannot poffibly exift, where there is no fecurity; and fecurity can have no place, where fortune has any dominion. Though that unftable deity fhould not exert her rage againft you, the dread of it would ftill torment you; would difturb your flumbers, haunt your dreams, and throw a damp on the jollity of your most delicious banquets.

The temple of wildom is feated on a rock, above the rage of the fighting elements, and inacceffible to all the malice of man. The rolling thunder breaks below; and thole more terrible inftruments of human fury reach not to fo fublime a height. The fage, while he breathes that ferene air, looks down with pleafure, mixed with compafiion, on the errors of miftaken mortals, who blindly feek for the true path of life, and purfue riches, nobility, honour, or power, for genuine felicity. The greater part he beholds difappointed of their fond wifthes: Some lament, that having once poffeffed posses possible the object of their defires, it is ravished from them by envious fortune: And all complain, that even their own vows, though granted, cannot give them happines, or relieve the anxiety of their distracted minds.

158

Digitized by Google

The STOIC.

But does the fage always preferve himfelf in this philofophical indifference, and reft contented with lamenting the miferies of mankind, without ever employing himfelf for their relief? Does he constantly indulge this fevere wifdom, which, by pretending to elevate him above human accidents, does in reality harden his heart, and render him careless of the interests of mankind, and of fociety ? No; he knows that in this fullen Apathy, neither true wildom nor true happinels can be found. He feels too ftrongly the charm of the focial affections ever to counteract fo fweet, fo natural, fo virtuous a propenfity. Even when, bathed in tears, he laments the miferies of human race, of his country, of his friends, and unable to give fuccour, can only relieve them by compassion; he yet rejoices in the generous disposition, and feels a fatisfaction 'fuperior to that of the most indulged fense. So engaging are the fentiments of humanity, that they brighten up the very face of forrow. and operate like the fun, which, fhining on a dufky cloud or falling rain, paints on them the most glorious colours which are to be found in the whole circle of nature.

But it is not here alone, that the focial virtues difplay their energy. With whatever ingredient you mix them, they are flill predominant. As forrow cannot overcome them, fo neither can fenfual pleafure obfcure them. The joys of love, however 'tumultuous, banifh not the tender

T

Digitized by Google

tender fentiments of fympathy and affection. They even derive their chief influence from that generous paffion; and when prefented alone, afford nothing to the unhappy mind but laffitude and difguft. Behold this fprightly debauchee, who profeffes a contempt of all other pleafures but those of wine and jollity: Separate him from his companions, like a spark from a fire, where before it contributed to the general blaze: His alacrity fuddenly extinguishes; and, though furrounded with every other means of delight, he lothes the fumptuous banquet, and prefers even the most abstracted study and speculation, as more agreeable and entertaining.

But the focial paffions never afford fuch transporting pleafures, or make fo glorious an appearance in the eyes both of GOD and man, as when, fhaking off every earthly mixture, they affociate themfelves with the fentiments of virtue, and prompt us to laudable and worthy actions. As harmonious colours mutually give and receive a luftre by their friendly union; fo do thefe ennobling fentiments of the human mind. See the triumph of nature in parental affection! What felfifh paffion; what fenfual delight is a match for it ! Whether a man exults in the prosperity and virtue of his offspring, or flies to their fuccour, through the most threatening and tremendous dangers?

Proceed ftill in purifying the generous paffion, you will ftill the more admire its fhining glories. What charms are there in the harmony of minds, and in a friendfhip founded on mutual efteem and gratitude ! What fatisfaction in relieving the diffreffed, in comforting the afflicted, in raifing the fallen, and in ftopping the career of cruel fortune, or of more cruel man, in their infults over the good and virtuous ! But what fupreme preme joy in the victories over vice as well as milerva when, by virtuous example or wife exhortation, our fellow-creatures are taught to govern their paffions, reform their vices, and fubdue their worft enemies, which inhabit within their own bosoms ?

The STOIC.

But these objects are still too limited for the human mind, which, being of celestial origin, swells with the divinest and most enlarged affections, and, carrying its attention beyond kindred and acquaintance, extends its benevolent wifnes to the most distant posterity. It views liberty and laws as the fource of human happinefs, and devotes itfelf, with the utmost alacrity, to their guardianship and protection. Tolls, dangers, death itself carry their charms, when we brave them for the public good, and ennoble that being, which we generously facrifice for the interests of our country. Happy the man, whom indulgent fortune allows to pay to virtue what he owes to nature, and to make a generous gift of what must otherwise be ravished from him by cruel neceffity !

In the true fage and patriot are united whatever can distinguish human nature, or elevate mortal man to a refemblance with the divinity. The foftest benevolence. the most undaunted resolution, the tenderest fentiments. the most fublime love of virtue, all these animate fucceffively his transported bosom. What fatisfaction. when he looks within, to find the most turbulent raffions tuned to just harmony and concord, and every jarring found banished from this enchanting music ! If the contemplation, even of inanimate beauty, is fo delightful; if it ravifhes the fenfes, even when the fair form is foreign to us : What must be the effects of moral beauty? And what influence must it have, when it em-VOL. I.

Μ

bellifhes

16t

r62

bellishes our own mind, and is the result of our own reflection and industry ?

But where is the reward of virtue? And what recompence has nature provided for such important sacrifices, as those of life and fortune, which we must often make to it? Oh, fons of earth ! Are ye ignorant of the value of this celeftial And do ye meanly enquire for her portion. mistres? when ye observe her genuine charms ? But know, that nature has been indulgent to human weakness, and has not left this favourite child, naked and unendowed. She has provided virtue with the richest dowry; but being careful, left the allurements of intereft fhould engage fuch fuitors, as were infenfible of the native worth of fo divine a beauty, she has wifely provided, that this dowry can have no charms but in the eyes of those who are already transported with the love of virtue. GLORY is the portion of virtue, the fweet reward of honourable toils, the triumphant crown, which covers the thoughtful head of the difinterested patriot, or the dusty brow of the victorious warrior. Elevated by fo fublime a prize, the man of virtue looks down with contempt on all the allurements of pleafure, and all the menaces of danger. Death itself loses its terrors, when he confiders, that its dominion extends only over a part of him, and that, in fpite of death and time, the rage of the elements, and the endless viciflitude of human affairs, he is affured of an immortal fame among all the fons of men.

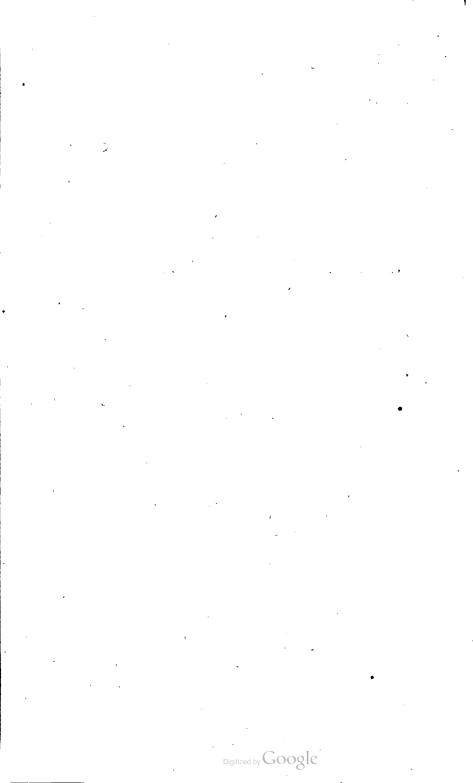

There furely is a being who prefides over the univerfe; and who, with infinite wildom and power, has reduced the jarring elements into juft order and proportion. Let fpeculative reasoners dispute, how far this beneficent being extends his care, and whether he prolongs our existence beyond the grave, in order to bestow on virtue its just reward, and render it fully triumphant. The man of morals, without deciding any thing on so dubious a fubject, is fatisfied with the portion, marked out to him by the supreme disposer of all things. Gratefully he accepts of that farther reward prepared for him; but if disappointed, he thinks not virtue an empty name; but, justly esteeming it its own reward, he gratefully acknowledges the bounty of his creator, who, by calling him into existence, has thereby afforded him an opportunity of once acquiring so invaluable a possible.

Digitized by Google

M 2

Digitized by Google

ESSAY XVII.

The PLATONIST*.

TO fome philosophers it appears matter of furprize, that all mankind, posseffing the fame nature, and being endowed with the fame faculties, fhould yet differ fo widely in their purfuits and inclinations, and that one fhould utterly condemn what is fondly fought after by another. To fome it appears matter of still more furprize, that a man should differ so widely from himself at different times; and, after possession, reject with difdain what, before, was the object of all his vows and withes. To me this feverifh uncertainty and irrefolution, in human conduct, feems altogether unavoidable; nor can a rational foul, made for the contemplation of the Supreme' Being, and of his works, ever enjoy tranquillity or fatisfaction, while detained in the ignoble purfuits of fenfual pleafure or popular applause. The divinity is a boundlefs ocean of blifs and glory : Human minds are smaller streams, which, arising at first from this ocean, feek still, amid all their wanderings, to return to it, and to lofe themfelves in that immenfity of perfection. When checked in this natural courfe, by vice or folly, they become furious and enraged; and,

* Or, the man of contemplation, and philosophical devotion.

Μ3

fwelling

Digitized by Google

welling to a torrent, do then fpread horror and devastation on the neighbouring plains.

In vain, by pompous phrase and passionate expression, each recommends his own pursuit, and invites the credulous hearers to an imitation of his life and manners. The heart belies the countenance, and fenfibly feels, even amid the highest fuccess, the unfatisfactory nature of all those pleasures, which detain it from its true object. I examine the voluptuous man before enjoyment; I measure the vehemence of his defire, and the importance of his object; I find that all his happiness proceeds only from that hurry of thought, which takes him from himfelf, and turns his view from his guilt and miferv. I confider him a moment after; he has now enjoyed the pleafure, which he fondly fought after. The fenfe of his guilt and milery returns upon him with double anguish : His mind tormented with fear and remorfe; his body depreffed with difgust and fatiety.

But a more august, at least a more haughty personage, prefents himself boldly to our censure; and, afsuming the title of a philosopher and man of morals, offers to submit to the most rigid examination. He challenges, with a visible, though concealed impatience, our approbation and applause; and seems offended, that we should hesistate a moment before we break out into admiration of his virtue. Seeing this impatience, I hesistate still more : I begin to examine the motives of his seeming virtue : But behold ! ere I can enter upon this enquiry, he shings himself from me; and, addressing his discourse to that crowd of heedless auditors, fondly abuses them by his magnificent pretensions.

O philo-

The PLATONIST.

O philosopher! thy wisdom is vain, and thy virtue unprofitable. Thou seekest the ignorant applauses of men, not the folid reflections of thy own confcience, or the more folid approbation of that being, who, with one regard of his all-feeing eye, penetrates the univerfe. Thou furely art confcious of the hollownels of thy pretended probity, whilst calling thyself a citizen, a fon, a friend, thou forgettest thy higher fovereign, thy true father, thy greatest benefactor. Where is the adoration due to infinite perfection, whence every thing good and valuable is derived ? Where is the gratitude, owing to thy creator, who called thee forth from nothing, who placed thee in all these relations to thy fellow-creatures. and requiring thee to fulfil the duty of each relation. forbids thee to neglect what thou owest to himself, the most perfect being, to whom thou art connected by the closeft tye?

But thou art thyfelf thy own idol: Thou worfhippeft thy imaginary perfections: Or rather, fensible of thy real imperfections, thou feekeft only to deceive the world, and to pleafe thy fancy, by multiplying thy ignorant admirers. Thus, not content with neglecting what is most excellent in the universe, thou defirest to subfitute in his place what is most vile and contemptible.

Confider all the works of men's hands; all the inventions of human wit, in which thou affecteft fo nice a differnment: Thou wilt find, that the moft perfect production fill proceeds from the moft perfect thought, and that it is MIND alone, which we admire, while we beftow our applause on the graces of a well-proportioned statue, or the fymmetry of a noble pile. The statuary, M a the 167.

Digitized by Google

the architect comes still in view, and makes us reflect on the beauty of his art and contrivance, which, from a heap of unformed matter, could extract fuch expressions and proportions. This fuperior beauty of thought and intelligence thou thyself acknowledgest, while thou invitest us to contemplate, in thy conduct, the harmony of affections, the dignity of fentiments, and all those graces of a mind, which chiefly merit our attention. But why floppest thou short ? Seeft thou nothing farther that is valuable ? Amid thy rapturous applaufes of beauty and order, art thou still ignorant where is to be found the most confummate beauty? the most perfect order? Compare the works of art with those of nature. The one are but imitations of the other. The nearer art approaches to nature, the more perfect is it efteemed. But fill, how wide are its nearest approaches, and what an immense interval may be observed between them? Art copies only the outfide of nature, leaving the inward and more admirable forings and principles; as exceeding her imitation; as beyond her comprehension. Art copies only the minute productions of nature, defpairing to reach that grandeur and magnificence, which are fo aftonishing in the masterly works of her original. Can we then be fo blind as not to difcover an intelligence and a defign in the exquisite and most stupendous contrivance of the universe? Can we be fo stupid as not to feel the warmest raptures of worship and adoration, upon the contemplation of that intelligent being, fo infinitely good and wife ?

The most perfect happiness, furely, must arise from the contemplation of the most perfect object. But what more perfect than beauty and virtue? And where is beauty to be found equal to that of the universe? Or virtue, virtue, which can be compared to the benevolence and juffice of the Deity? If aught can diminish the pleasure of this contemplation, it must be either the narrowness of our faculties, which conceals from us the greatest part of these beauties and perfections; or the shortness of our lives, which allows not time sufficient to instruct us in them. But it is our comfort, that, if we employ worthily the faculties here affigned us, they will be enlarged in another state of existence, fo as to render us more suitable worshippers of our maker: And that the task, which can never be finished in time, will be the business of an eternity.

Digitized by Google

The PLATONIST.

Digitized by Google

(171)

E S S A Y XVIII.

The SCEPTIC.

T HAVE long entertained a fufpicion, with regard to the decifions of philosophers upon all subjects, and found in myself a greater inclination to difpute, than affent to their conclusions. There is one mistake, to which they feem liable, almost without exception; they confine too much their principles, and make no account of that vaft variety, which nature has fo much affected in all her operations. When a philosopher has once laid hold of a favourite principle, which perhaps accounts for many natural effects, he extends the fame principle over the whole creation, and reduces to it every phænomenon, though by the most violent and absurd reasoning. Our own mind being narrow and contracted, we cannot extend our conception to the variety and extent of nature; but imagine, that the is as much bounded in her operations, as we are in our fpeculation.

But if ever this infirmity of philosophers is to be fulpected on any occasion, it is in their reasonings concerning human life, and the methods of attaining happines. In that case, they are led astray, not only by the narrowness of their understandings, but by that also of their passions. Almost every one has a predominant inclination,

tion, to which his other defires and affections fubmit, and which governs him, though, perhaps, with fome intervals, through the whole courfe of his life. It is difficult for him to apprehend, that any thing, which appears totally indifferent to him, can ever give enjoyment to any perfon, or can possible charms, which altogether escape his observation. His own pursuits are always, in his account, the most engaging: The objects of his passion, the most valuable: And the road, which he pursues, the only one that leads to happines.

But would these prejudiced reasoners reflect a moment, there are many obvious instances and arguments, fufficient to undeceive them, and make them enlarge their Do they not fee the vaft variety maxims and principles. of inclinations and purfuits among our fpecies; where each man feems fully fatisfied with his own course of life, and would efteem it the greatest unhappiness to be confined to that of his neighbour ? Do they not feel in themfelves, that what pleafes at one time, difpleafes at another, by the change of inclination; and that it is not in their power, by their utmost efforts, to recall that taste or appetite, which formerly beftowed charms on what now appears indifferent or difgreeable? What is the meaning therefore of those general preferences of the town or country life, of a life of action or one of pleafure, of retirement or fociety; when, befides the different inclinations of different men, every one's experience may convince him, that each of these kinds of life is agreeable in its turn, and that their variety or their judicious mixture chiefly contributes to the rendering all of them agreeable ?

But shall this business be allowed to go altogether at adventures? And must a man consult only his humour and inclination, in order to determine his courfe of life, without employing his reason to inform him what road is preferable, and leads most furely to happines? Is there no difference then between one man's conduct and another?

Digitized by Google

I answer, there is a great difference. One man, following his inclination, in chufing his courfe of life, may employ much furer means for fucceeding than another, who is led by his inclination into the fame courfe of life, and purfues the fame object. Are riches the chief object of your defires? Acquire skill in your profession; be diligent in the exercise of it; enlarge the circle of your friends and acquaintance; avoid pleafure and expence; and never be generous, but with a view of gaining more than you could fave by frugality. Would you acquire the public efteem? Guard equally against the extremes of arrogance and fawning. Let it appear that you fet a value upon yourfelf, but without defpifing others. If you fall into either of the extremes, you either provoke men's pride by your infolence, or teach them to defpife you by your timorous fubmiffion, and by the mean opinion which you feem to entertain of yourfelf.

Thefe, you fay, are the maxims of common prudence, and difcretion; what every parent inculcates on his child, and what every man of fenfe purfues in the courfe of life, which he has chofen.—What is it then you defire more? Do you come to a philofopher as to a cunning man, to learn fomething by magic or witchraft, beyond what can be known by common prudence and difcretion?—Yes; we come to a philofopher to be inftructed, how we fhall chufe our ends, more than the means for attaining thefe ends: We want to know what defire we fhall gratify, what paffion we fhall comply with, with, what appetite we shall indulge. As to the rest, we trust to common sense, and the general maxims of the world for our instruction.

Digitized by Google

I am forry then, I have pretended to be a philofopher: For I find your queftions very perplexing; and am in danger, if my answer be too rigid and fevere, of paffing for a pedant and scholassic; if it be too easy and free, of being taken for a preacher of vice and immorality. However, to fatisfy you, I shall deliver my opinion upon the matter, and shall only defire you to essentiate the consequence as I do myself. By that means you will neither think it worthy of your ridicule nor your anger.

If we can depend upon any principle, which we learn from philofophy, this, I think, may be confidered as certain and undoubted, that there is nothing, in itfelf, valuable or defpicable, defirable or hateful, beautiful or deformed; but that these attributes arise from the particular conftitution and fabric of human sentiment and affection. What seems the most delicious food to one animal, appears loathsome to another: What affects the feeling of one with delight, produces uneafiness in another. This is confessed the case with regard to all the bodily senses: But if we examine the matter more accurately, we shall find, that the same observation holds even where the mind concurs with the body, and mingles its sentiment with the exterior appetite.

Defire this paffionate lover to give you a character of his miftrefs: He will tell you, that he is at a lofs for words to defcribe her charms, and will afk you very ferioufly, if ever you were acquainted with a goddefs or an angel? If you anfwer that you never were: He will then fay, that it is impossible for you to form a conception tion of fuch divine beauties as thole which his charmer poffeffes; fo complete a fhape; fuch well-proportioned features; fo engaging an air; fuch fweetnefs of difpofition; fuch gaiety of humour. You can infer nothing, however, from all this difcourfe, but that the poor man is in love; and that the general appetite between the fexes, which nature has infufed into all animals, is in him determined to a particular object by fome qualities, which give him pleafure. The fame divine creature, not only to a different animal, but alfo to a different man, appears a mere mortal being, and is beheld with the utmoft indifference.

Digitized by Google

Nature has given all animals a like prejudice in favour of their offspring. As foon as the helples infant fees the light, though in every other eye it appears a despicable and a miserable creature, it is regarded by its fond parent with the utmost affection, and is preferred to every other object, however perfect and accomplished. The passion alone, arising from the original structure and formation of human nature, bestows a value on the most infignificant object.

We may pufh the fame obfervation further, and may conclude, that, even when the mind operates alone, and feeling the fentiment of blame or approbation, pronounces one object deformed and odious, another beautiful and amiable : I fay, that, even in this cafe, thofe qualities are not really in the objects, but belong entirely to the fentiment of that mind which blames or praifes. I grant, that it will be more difficult to make this proposition evident, and, as it were, palpable, to negligent thinkers; because nature is more uniform in the fentiments of the mind than in most feelings of the body, and produces a nearer refemblance in the inward than than in the outward part of human kind. There is fomething approaching to principles in mental tafte; and critics can reafon and difpute more plaufibly than cooks or perfumers. We may observe, however, that this uniformity among human kind, hinders not, but that there is a confiderable diverfity in the fentiments of beauty and worth, and that education, cuftom, prejudice, caprice, and humour, frequently vary our tafte of this kind. You will never convince a man, who is not accustomed to ITALIAN music, and has not an ear to follow its intricacies, that a SCOTCH tune is not preferable. You have not even any fingle argument, beyond your own tafte, which you can employ in your behalf : And to your antagonist, his particular taste will always appear a more convincing argument to the contrary. If you be wife, each of you will allow, that the other may be in the right; and having many other inftances of this diverfity of tafte, you will both confess, that beauty and worth are merely of a relative nature, and confift in an agreeable fentiment, produced by an object in a particular mind, according to the peculiar ftructure and conftitution of that mind.

176

By this diverfity of fentiment, obfervable in human kind, nature has, perhaps, intended to make us fenfible of her authority, and let us fee what furprizing changes fhe could produce on the paffions and defires of mankind, merely by the change of their inward fabric, without any alteration on the objects. The vulgar may even be convinced by this argument. But men, accuftomed to thinking, may draw a more convincing, at leaft a more general argument, from the very nature of the fubject.

In the operation of reasoning, the mind does nothing but run over its objects, as they are supposed to stand

Digitized by Google

in

in reality, without adding any thing to them, or diminifhing any thing from them. If I examine the PTOLO-MAIC and COPERNICAN fyftems, I endeavour only, by my enquiries, to know the real fituation of the planets; that is, in other words, I endeavour to give them, in my conception, the fame relations, that they bear towards each other in the heavens. To this operation of the mind, therefore, there feems to be always a real, though often an unknown flandard, in the nature of things; nor is truth or falfehood variable by the various apprehensions of mankind. Though all human race should for ever conclude, that the fun moves, and the earth remains at reft, the fun flirs not an inch from his place for all these reasonings; and fuch conclusions are eternally false and erroneous.

But the cafe is not the fame with the qualities of beautiful and deformed, defirable and odious, as with truth and falsehood. In the former case, the mind is not content with merely furveying its objects, as they fland in themfelves : It also feels a fentiment of delight or uneafinefs. approbation on blame, confequent to that furvey : and this fentiment determines it to affix the epithet beautiful er deformed, desirable or odious. Now, it is evident, that this fentiment must depend upon the particular fabric or structure of the mind, which enables fuch particular forms to operate in fuch a particular manner, and produces a fympathy or conformity between the mind and its objects. Vary the ftructure of the mind or inward. organs, the fentiment no longer follows, though the form remains the fame. The fentiment being different from the object, and arifing from its operation upon the organs. of the mind, an alteration upon the latter must vary the effect, nor can the fame object, prefented to a mind totally different, produce the fame fentiment.

VOL, I.

N

This

This conclusion every one is apt to draw of himfelf, without much philosophy, where the fentiment is evidently diftinguishable from the object. Who is not fenfible, that power, and glory, and vengeance, are not defirable of themselves, but derive all their value from the ftructure of human passions, which begets a defire towards such particular pursuits? But with regard to beauty, either natural or moral, the case is commonly supposed to be different. The agreeable quality is thought to lie in the object, not in the fentiment; and that merely because the fentiment is not fo turbulent and violent as to diffinguish itself, in an evident manner, from the perception of the object.

But a little reflection fuffices to diffinguish them. Α man may know exactly all the circles and ellipses of the COPERNICAN fystem, and all the irregular spirals of the PTOLOMAIC, without perceiving that the former is more beautiful than the latter. EUCLID has fully explained every quality of the circle, but has not, in any proposition, faid a word of its beauty. The reason is evident. Beauty is not a quality of the circle. It lies not in any part of the line, whole parts are all equally diftant from a common center. It is only the effect, which that figure produces upon a mind, whofe particular fabric or ftructure renders it fusceptible of fuch fentiments. In vain would you look for it in the circle, or feek it. either by your fenfes, or by mathematical reafonings, in all the properties of that figure.

The mathematician, who took no other pleasure in reading VIRGIL, but that of examining ENEAS's voyage by the map, might perfectly understand the meaning of every Latin word, employed by that divine author; and, confequently, might have a diffinct idea of the whole narration.

Digitized by Google

The SCEPTIC.

ration. He would even have a more diffinct idea of it, than they could attain who had not fludied fo exactly the geography of the poem. He knew, therefore, every thing in the poem: But he was ignorant of its beauty; becaufe the beauty, properly fpeaking, lies not in the poem, but in the fentiment or tafte of the reader. And where a man has no fuch delicacy of temper, as to make him feel this fentiment, he must be ignorant of the beauty, though posseful of the fcience and understanding of an angel *.

The inference upon the whole is, that it is not from the value or worth of the object, which any perfon purfues, that we can determine his enjoyment, but merely from the paffion with which he purfues it, and the fuccefs which he meets with in his purfuit. Objects have abfolutely no worth or value in themfelves. They derive their worth merely from the paffion. If that be ftrong, and fleady, and fuccefsful, the perfon is happy. It cannot reafonably be doubted, but a little mifs, dreffed in a new gown for a dancing-fchool ball, receives as complete enjoyment as the greateft orator, who triumphs in the fplendor of his eloquence, while he governs the paffions and refolutions of a numerous affembly.

All the difference, therefore, between one man and another with regard to life, confifts either in the paffion, or in the enjoyment: And these differences are sufficient to produce the wide extremes of happines and mitery.

To be happy, the paffion must neither be too violent nor too remifs. In the first case, the mind is in a perpetual hurry and tumult; in the second, it finks into a difagreeable indolence and lethargy.

* See NOTE [F]. N 2

To be happy, the paffion muft be benign and focial; not rough or fierce. The affections of the latter kind are not near fo agreeable to the feeling, as those of the former. Who will compare rancour and animolity, envy and revenge, to friendship, benignity, clemency, and gratitude?

To be happy, the pation must be cheerful and gay, not gloomy and melancholy. A propenfity to hope and joy is real riches: One to fear and forrow, real poverty.

Some paffions or inclinations, in the enjoyment of their object, are not fo fleady or conftant as others, nor convey fuch durable pleafure and fatisfaction. Philofophical devotion, for inftance, like the enthuliafm of a poet, is the transitory effect of high spirits, great leifure, a fine genius, and a habit of study and contemplation: But notwithstanding all these circumstances, an abstract, invisible object, like that which natural religion alone prefents to us, cannot long actuate the mind, or be of any moment in his. To render the passion of continuance, we must find fome method of affecting the fenses and imagination, and must embrace fome bistorical, as well as philofophical account of the divinity. Popular superstitions and obfervances are even found to be of use in this particular.

Though the tempers of men be very different, yet we may fafely pronounce in general, that a life of pleafure cannot fupport itfelf fo long as one of bufinefs, but is much more fubject to fatiety and difguft. The amufements, which are the most durable, have all a mixture of application and attention in them; fuch as gaming and hunting. And in general, bufinefs and action fill up all the great vacancies in human life.

But where the temper is the best disposed for any enjoyment, the object is often wanting: And in this respect, be passions, which pursue external objects, contribute not not fo much to happinefs, as those which reft in ourfelves; fince we are neither to certain of attaining fuch objects, nor fo fecure in possessing them. A passion for learning is preferable, with regard to happinefs, to one for riches.

Digitized by Google

The SCEPTIC.

Some men are possessed of great strength of mind; and even when they purfue external objects, are not much affected by a difappointment, but renew their application and industry with the greatest cheerfulness. Nothing contributes more to happiness than such a turn of mind.

According to this fhort and imperfect fletch of human life, the happiest disposition of mind is the virtuous; or, in other words, that which leads to action and employment, renders us fenfible to the focial paffions, fteels the heart against the affaults of fortune, reduces the affections to a just moderation, makes our own thoughts an entertainment to us, and inclines us rather to the pleafures of fociety and conversation, than to those of the senses. This, in the mean time, must be obvious to the most carelefs reasoner, that all dispositions of mind are not alike favourable to happines, and that one passion or humour may be extremely defirable, while another is equally difagreeable. And indeed, all the difference between the conditions of life depends upon the mind; nor is there any one fituation of affairs, in itfelf, preferable to another. Good and ill, both natural and moral, are entirely relative to human fentiment and affection. No man would ever be unhappy, could he alter his feelings. PROTEUS-like, he would elude all attacks, by the continual alterations of his fhape and form.

But of this refource nature has, in a great measure, deprived us. The fabric and conftitution of our mind no more depends on our choice, than that of our body. The

Digitized by Google

N 3

The generality of men have not even the smalleft notion, that any alteration in this respect can ever be defirable. As a fireatn neceffarily follows the feveral inclinations of the ground on which it runs; fo are the ignorant and thoughtless part of mankind actuated by their natural Such are effectually excluded from all propenfities. pretenfions to philosophy, and the medicine of the mind, fo much boasted. But even upon the wife and thoughtful. nature has a prodigious influence; nor is it always in a man's power, by the utmost art and industry, to correct his temper, and attain that virtuous character, to which he afpires. The empire of philosophy extends over a few ; and with regard to thele too, her authority is very weak and limited. Men may well be fenfible of the value of virtue, and may defire to attain it; but it is not always certain, that they will be fuccefsful in their wifhes,

Whoever confiders, without prejudice, the course of human actions, will find, that mankind are almost entirely guided by conftitution and temper, and that general maxims have little influence, but fo far as they affect our tafte or fentiment. If a man have a lively fense of honour and virtue, with moderate passions, his conduct will always be conformable to the rules of morality; or if he depart from them, his return will be eafy and expeditious. On the other hand, where one is born of fo perverse a frame of mind, of fo callous and infenfible a disposition, as to have no relish for virtue and humanity, no fympathy with his fellow-creatures, no defire of efteem and applause; such a one must be allowed entirely incurable, nor is there any remedy in philosophy. He reaps no fatisfaction but from low and fenfual objects, or from the indulgence of malignant paffions : He feels no remorfe to controul his vicious inclinations : He has not not even that fense or taste, which is requisite to make him defire a better character : For my part, I know not how I should address myself to such a one, or by what arguments I should endeavour to reform him. Should I tell him of the inward fatisfaction which refults from laudable and humane actions, the delicate pleasure of difinterested love and friendship, the lasting enjoyments of a good name and an established character, he might still reply, that these were, perhaps, pleasures to fuch as were fusceptible of them; but that, for his part, he finds himfelf of a quite different turn and disposition. I must repeat it; my philosophy affords no remedy in fuch a cafe, nor could I do any thing but lament this perfon's unhappy condition. But then I ask, If any other philofophy can afford a remedy; or if it be poffible, by any system, to render all mankind virtuous, however perverse may be their natural frame of mind? Experience will foon convince us of the contrary; and I will venture to affirm, that, perhaps, the chief benefit, which refults from philosophy, arifes in an indirect manner, and proceeds more from its fecret, infenfible influence, than from its immediate application.

Digitized by Google

The SCEPTIC.

It is certain, that a ferious attention to the fciences and liberal arts foftens and humanizes the temper, and cherishes those fine emotions, in which true virtue and honour confift. It rarely, very rarely happens, that a man of tafte and learning is not, at leaft, an honeft man, whatever frailties may attend him. The bent of his mind to speculative studies must mortify in him the paffions of interest and ambition, and must, at the fame time, give him a greater fenfibility of all the decencies and duties of life. He feels more fully a moral diffinction in characters and manners; nor is his fense of this N 4 kind kind diminished, but, on the contrary, it is much encreased, by speculation.

ESSAY XVIII.

184

Befides fuch infenfible changes upon the temper and difpofition, it is highly probable, that others may be produced by fludy and application. The prodigious effects of education may convince us, that the mind is not altogether flubborn and inflexible, but will admit of many alterations from its original make and flructure. Let a man propose to himfelf the model of a character, which he approves: Let him be well acquainted with those particulars, in which his own character deviates from this model: Let him keep a conftant watch over himfelf, and bend his mind, by a continual effort, from the vices, towards the virtues; and I doubt not but, in time, he will find, in his temper, an alteration for the better.

Habit is another powerful means of reforming the mind, and implanting in it good difpolitions and inclinations. A man, who continues in a courfe of fobriety and temperance, will hate riot and diforder: If he engage in bufinels or ftudy, indolence will feem a punifhment to him: If he conftrain himfelf to practife beneficence and affability, he will foon abhor all inftances of pride and violence. Where one is thoroughly convinced that the virtuous courfe of life is preferable; if he have but refolution enough, for fome time, to impose a violence on himfelf; his reformation needs not be defpaired of. The misfortune is, that this conviction and this refolution never can have place, unlefs a man be, before-hand, tolerably virtuous.

Here then is the chief triumph of art and philosophy: It infensibly refines the temper, and it points out to us those dispositions which we should endeavour to attain, by a constant bent of mind, and by repeated habit. Beyond this this I cannot acknowledge it to have great influence; and I muft entertain doubts concerning all those exhortations and confolations, which are in fuch vogue among speculative reasoners.

We have already observed, that no objects are, in themselves, desirable or odious, valuable or despicable; but that objects acquire these qualities from the particular character and constitution of the mind, which surveys them. To diminish, therefore, or augment any person's value for an object, to excite or moderate his passions, there are no direct arguments or reasons, which can be employed with any force or influence. The catching of flies, like DOMITIAN, if it give more pleasure, is preferable to the hunting of wild beasts, like WILLIAM RUFUS, or conquering of kingdoms, like ALBXANDER.

But though the value of every object can be determined only by the fentiment or paffion of every individual, we may obferve, that the paffion, in pronouncing its verdict, confiders not the object fimply, as it is in itfelf, but furveys it with all the circumftances, which attend it. A man transported with joy, on account of his posseffing a diamond, confines not his view to the glissering frome before him: He also confiders its rarity, and thence chiefly arises his pleasure and exultation. Here therefore a philosopher may step in, and suggest particular views, and confiderations, and circumstances, which otherwise would have escaped us; and, by that means, he may either moderate or excite any particular passion.

It may feem unreasonable absolutely to deny the authority of philosophy in this respect: But it must be confessed, that there lies this strong presumption against it, that, if these views be natural and obvious, they would have occurred of themselves, without the affistance of philosophy; 186 philosophy; if they be not natural, they never can have any influence on the affections. These are of a very delicate nature, and cannot be forced or constrained by the utmost art or industry. A confideration, which we feek for on purpose, which we enter into with difficulty. which we cannot retain without care and attention, will never produce those genuine and durable movements of paffion, which are the refult of nature, and the conftitution of the mind. A man may as well pretend to cure himself of love, by viewing his mistress through the artificial medium of a microfcope or prospect, and beholding there the coarseness of her skin, and monstrous disproportion of her features, as hope to excite or moderate any passion by the artificial arguments of a SENECA or an EPICTETUS, The remembrance of the natural aspect and fituation of the object, will, in both cafes, still recurupon him. The reflections of philosophy are too fubtile and distant to take place in common life, or eradicate any affection. The air is too fine to breathe in, where it is above the winds and clouds of the atmosphere.

Another defect of those refined reflections, which philosophy suggests to us, is, that commonly they cannot diminish or extinguishing fuch as are virtuous, and rendering the mind totally indifferent and unactive. They are, for the most part, general, and are applicable to all our affections. In vain do we hope to direct their influence only to one fide. If by incessant fludy and meditation we have rendered them intimate and present to us, they will operate throughout, and spread an universal infensibility over the mind. When we destroy the nerves, we extinguish the sense of pleasure, together with that of pain, in the human body.

Įţ

It will be eafy, by one glance of the eye, to find one or other of these defects in most of those philosophical reflections, fo much celebrated both in ancient and modern times. Let not the injuries or violence of men, fay the philosophers*, ever discompose you by anger or batred. Would you be angry at the ape for its malice, or the tyger for its ferocity? This reflection leads us into a bad opinion of human nature, and must extinguish the social affections. It tends also to prevent all remorfe for a man's own crimes; when he confiders, that vice is as natural to mankind, as the particular inftincts to brute-creatures.

All ills arife from the order of the universe, which is abfolutely perfect. Would you wish to disturb so divine an order for the sake of your own particular interest? What if the ills I fuffer arise from malice or oppression? But the views and imperfections of men are also comprehended in the order of the universe:

If plagues and earthquakes break not heav'n's defign, Why then a BORGIA or a CATILINE?

Let this be allowed; and my own vices will also be a part of the fame order.

To one who faid, that none were happy, who were not above opinion, a SPARTAN replied, then none are happy but knaves and robbers \dagger .

Man is born to be miferable; and is he furprized at any particular misfortune? And can he give way to forrow and lamentation upon account of any difaster? Yes: He very reasonably laments, that he should be born to be miserable. Your confolation presents a hundred ills for one, of which you pretend to ease him.

Digitized by Google

* PLUT. De ira cobikenda. + PLUT. Lacon. Apophtheg.

You

You should always have before your eyes death, difeafe, poverty, blindnefs, exile, calumny, and infamy, as ills which are incident to human nature. If any one of these ills fall to your lot, you will bear it the better, when you have reckoned upon it. I answer, if we confine ourselves to a general and diffant reflection on the ills of human life, that can have no effect to prepare us for them. If by close and intense meditation we render them present and intimate to us, that is the true secret for possioning all our pleasures, and rendering us perpetually miserable.

Your forrow is fruitlefs, and will not change the course of definy. Very true: And for that very reason I am forry.

Cicero's confolation for deafnels is fomewhat curious. How many languages are there, fays he, which you do not understand? The PUNIC, SPANISH, GALLIC, ÆGYP-TIAN, &c. With regard to all these, you are as if you were deaf, yet you are indifferent about the matter. Is it then so great a missfortune to be deaf to one language more *?

I like better the repartee of ANTIPATER the CYRE, NIAC, when fome women were condoling with him for his blindnefs : What! fays he, Do you think there are ng pleafures in the dark?

Nothing can be more destructive, fays FONTENELLE, to ambition, and the passion for conquest, than the true system of astronomy What a poor thing is even the whole globe in comparison of the infinite extent of nature? This confideration is evidently too distant ever to have any effect. Or, if it had any, would it not destroy patriotism as well as ambition? The same gallant author adds with some reason, that the bright eyes of the ladies are the only objects, which lose nothing of their lustre or value from

* Tusc. Queft. lib. v.

Digitized by Google

the

the most extensive views of astronomy, but stand proof against every system. Would philosophers advise us to limit our affection to them ?

Exile, fays PLUTARCH to a friend in banishment, is no evil: Mathematicians tell us, that the whole earth is but a point, compared to the heavens. To change one's country then is little more than to remove from one fireet to another. Man is not a plant, rooted to a certain spot of earth : All foils and all climates are alike fuited to him*. These topics are admirable, could they fell only into the hands of banished perfons. But what if they come also to the knowledge of those who are employed in public affairs, and destroy all their attachment to their native country ? Or will they operate like the quack's medicine, which is equally good for a diabetes and a dropfy ?

It is certain, were a fuperior being thruft into a human body, that the whole of life would to him appear fo mean, contemptible, and puerile, that he never could be induced to take part in any thing, and would fcarcely give attention to what paffes around him. To engage him to fuch a condescension as to play even the part of a PHILIP with zeal and alacrity, would be much more difficult. than to conftrain the fame PHILIP, after having been a king and a conqueror during fifty years, to mend old fhoes with proper care and attention; the occupation which LUCIAN affigns him in the infernal regions. Now all the fame topics of difdain towards human affairs. which could operate on this fuppofed being, occur alfo to a philosopher; but being, in some measure, difproportioned to human capacity, and not being fortified by the experience of any thing better, they make not a full impression on him. He sees, but he feels not fufficiently their truth; and is always a fublime philosopher,

* De exilia.

Digitized by Google

lofopher, when he needs not; that is, as long as nothing diffurbs him, or rouzes his affections. While others play, he wonders at their keennefs and ardour; but he no fooner puts in his own ftake, than he is commonly transported with the fame paffions, that he had fo much condemned, while he remained a fimple spectator.

There are two confiderations chiefly, to be met with in books of philosophy, from which any important effect is to be expected, and that becaufe these confiderations are drawn from common life, and occur upon the most superficial view of human affairs. When we reflect on the fhortness and uncertainty of life, how defpicable feem all our purfuits of happiness ? And even, if we would extend our concern beyond our own life, how frivolous appear our most enlarged and most generous projects : when we confider the inceffant changes and revolutions of human affairs, by which laws and learning, books and governments are hurried away by time, as by a rapid ftream, and are loft in the immense ocean of matter ? Such a reflection certainly tends to mortify all our paffions : But does it not thereby counterwork the artifice of nature, who has happily deceived us into an opinion, that human life is of fome importance? And may not fuch a reflection be employed with fuccefs by voluptuous reasoners, in order to lead us, from the paths of action and virtue, into the flowery fields of indolence and pleafure ?

We are informed by THUCYDIDES, that, during the famous plague of ATHENS, when death feemed prefent to every one, a diffolute mirth and gaiety prevailed among the people, who exhorted one another to make the most of life as long as it endured. The fame observation is made by BOCCACE with regard to the plague of FLO-RENCE. A like principle makes foldiers, during war, be be more addicted to riot and expence, than any other race of men. Prefent pleafure is always of importance; and whatever diminishes the importance of all other objects must bestow on it an additional influence and value.

Digitized by Google

The fecond philosophical confideration, which may often have an influence on the affections, is derived from a comparison of our own condition with the condition of This comparison we are continually making, others. even in common life; but the misfortune is, that we are rather apt to compare our fituation with that of our fuperiors, than with that of our inferiors. A philosopher corrects this natural infirmity, by turning his view to the other fide, in order to render himfelf eafy in the fituation to which fortune has confined him. There are few people, who are not fusceptible of some consolation from this reflection, though, to a very good-natured man, the view of human miferies fhould rather produce forrow than comfort, and add, to his lamentations for his own misfortunes, a deep compassion for those of others. Such is the imperfection, even of the best of these philosophical topics of confolation *.

I fhall conclude this fubject with obferving, that, though virtue be undoubtedly the beft choice, when it is attainable; yet fuch is the diforder and confusion of human affairs, that no perfect or regular distribution of happiness and misery is ever, in this life, to be expected. Not only the goods of fortune, and the endowments of: the body (both of which are important), not only these advantages, I fay, are unequally divided between the virtuous and vicious, but even the mind itself partakes, in fome degree, of this diforder, and the most worthy character.

* See NOTE [G].

I

Digitized by Google

character, by the very conflitution of the paffions, enjoys not always the highest felicity.

It is observable, that though every bodily pain proceeds from fome diforder in the part or organ, yet the pain is not always proportioned to the diforder; but is greater or lefs, according to the greater or lefs fenfibility of the part, upon which the noxious humours exert their influence. A tooth-ach produces more violent convultions of pain than a phthis or a dropsy. In like manner, with regard to the æconomy of the mind, we may obferve, that all vice is indeed pernicious; yet the diffurbance or pain is not measured out by nature with exact proportion to the degree of vice, nor is the man of higheft virtue, even abstracting from external accidents, always the most happy. A gloomy and melancholy disposition is certainly, to our fentiments, a vice or imperfection ; but as it may be accompanied with great fenfe of honour and great integrity, it may be found in very worthy characters; though it is fufficient alone to imbitter life, and render the perfon affected with it completely miferable. On the other hand, a felfish villain may poffes a fpring and alacrity of temper, a certain gaiety of heart, which is indeed a good quality, but which is rewarded much beyond its merit, and when attended with good fortune, will compensate for the uneasiness and remorfe arifing from all the other vices.

I fhall add, as an obfervation to the fame purpole, that, if a man be liable to a vice or impetfection, it may often happen, that a good quality, which he poffeffes along with it, will render him more miferable, than if he were completely vicious. A perfon of fuch imbecility of temper as to be eafily broken by affliction, is more unhappy for being endowed with a generous and friendly difpofition, which gives him a lively concern for others, and

Digitized by Google

192

The SCEPTIC.

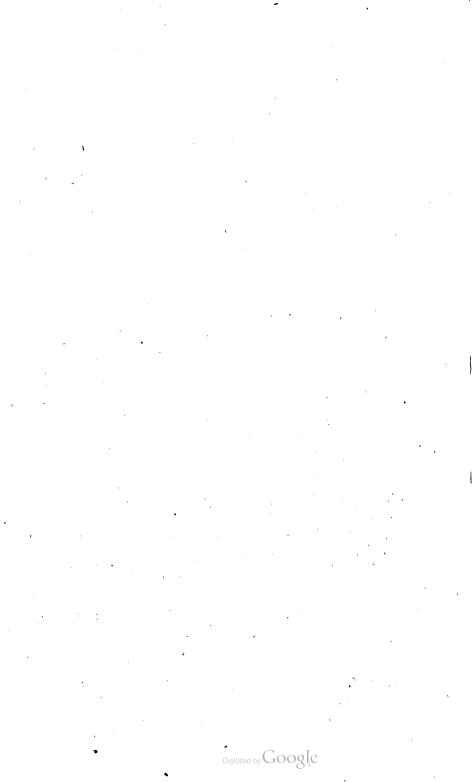

193

and exposes him the more to fortune and accidents. A fense of shame, in an imperfect character, is certainly a virtue; but produces great uneassiness and remorfe, from which the abandoned villain is entirely free. A very amorous complexion, with a heart incapable of friendship, is happier than the same excess in love, with a generosity of temper, which transports a man beyond himself, and renders him a total flave to the object of his paffion.

In a word, human life is more governed by fortune than by reafon; is to be regarded more as a dull paftime than as a ferious occupation; and is more influenced by particular humour, than by general principles, Shall we engage ourfelves in it with paffion and anxiety? It is not worthy of fo much concern. Shall we be indifferent about what happens? We lofe all the pleafure of the game by our phlegm and carelefnefs. While we are reasoning concerning life, life is gone; and death, though perhaps they receive him differently, yet treats alike the fool and the philosopher. To reduce life to exact rule and method, is commonly a painful, oft a fruitless occupation : And is it not also a proof, that we overvalue the prize for which we contend? Even to reason fo carefully concerning it, and to fix with accuracy its just idea, would be overvaluing it, were it not that, to fome tempers, this occupation is one of the most amufing, in which life could poffibly be employed.

Vol. I.

Q

(195)

E S S A Y XIX.

Of POLYGAMY and DIVORCES.

A S marriage is an engagement entered into by mutual confent, and has for its end the propagation of the fpecies, it is evident, that it must be fusceptible of all the variety of conditions which confent establishes, provided they be not contrary to this end.

A man, in conjoining himfelf to a woman, is bound to her according to the terms of his engagement: In begetting children, he is bound, by all the ties of nature and humanity, to provide for their fubfiftence and education. When he has performed thefe two parts of duty, no one can reproach him with injuftice or injury. And as the terms of his engagement, as well as the methods of fubfifting his offspring, may be various, it is mere fuperfition to imagine, that marriage can be entirely uniform, and will admit only of one mode or form. Did not human Taws reftrain the natural liberty of men, every particular marriage would be as different as contracts or bargains of any other kind or fpecies.

As circumftances vary, and the laws propose different advantages, we find, that, in different times and places, they impose different conditions on this important contract. In TONQUIN, it is usual for the failors, when the fhips come into harbour, to marry for the seafon; and O 2 notwithstanding notwithftanding this precarious engagement, they are affured, it is faid, of the flricteft fidelity to their bed, as well as in the whole management of their affuirs, from those temporary spouses.

Digitized by

Google

I cannot, at prefent, recollect my authorities; but I have fomewhere read, that the republic of ATHENS, having loft many of its citizens by war and peftilence, allowed every man to marry two wives, in order the fooner to repair the wafte which had been made by thefe calamities. The poet BURIPIDES happened to be coupled to two noify Vixens, who fo plagued him with their jealoufies and quarrels, that he became ever after a profeffed woman-bater; and is the only theatrical writer, perhaps the only poet, that ever entertained an averfion to the fex.

In that agreeable romance, called the Hiftory of the SEVARAMBIANS, where a great many men and a few women are fuppoied to be fhipwrecked on a defert coaft; the captain of the troop; in order to obviate those endless quarrels which arose, regulates their marriages after the following manner: He takes a handfome female to himfelf alone; affigns one to every couple of inferior officers; and to five of the lowest rank he gives one wife in common.

The ancient BRITONS had a fingular kind of marriage, to be met with among no other people. Any number of them, as ten or a dozen, joined in a fociety together, which was perhaps requifite for mutual defence in those barbarous times. In order to link this fociety the closer, they took an equal number of wives in common; and whatever children were born, were reputed to belong to all of them, and were accordingly provided for by the whole community.

Among

Of POLYGAMY and DIVORCES. 197

Among the inferior creatures, nature herfelf, being the fupreme legiflator, prefcribes all the laws which regulate their marriages, and varies those laws according to the different circumstances of the creature. Where fhe furnishes, with ease, food and defence to the newborn animal, the prefent embrace terminates the marriage; and the care of the offspring is committed entirely to the female. Where the food is of more difficult purchafe, the marriage continues for one feafon, till the common progeny can provide for itfelf; and then the union immediately diffolves, and leaves each of the parties free to enter into a new engagement at the enfuing feason. But nature, having endowed man with reason, has not so exactly regulated every article of his marriage contract, but has left him to adjust them, by his own prudence, according to his particular circumftances and fituation. Municipal laws are a fupply to the wifdom of each individual; and, at the fame time, by reftraining the natural liberty of men, make private intereft fubmit to the interest of the public. All regulations, therefore, on this head are equally lawful, and equally conformable to the principles of nature; though they are not all equally convenient, or equally useful to fociety. The laws may allow of polygamy, as among the Eastern nations; or of voluntary divorces, as among the GREEKS and ROMANS; or they may confine one man to one woman, during the whole course of their lives, as among the modern EUROPEANS. It may not be difagreeable to confider the advantages and difadvantages, which refult from each of these institutions.

The advocates for polygamy may recommend it as the only effectual remedy for the diforders of love, and the only expedient for freeing men from that flavery to the O 3 females, females, which the natural violence of our paffions has impofed upon us. By this means alone can we regain our right of fovereignty; and, fating our appetite, reeffablifh the authority of reafon in our minds, and, of confequence, our own authority in our families. Man, like a weak fovereign, being unable to fupport himfelf againft the wiles and intrigues of his fubjects, muft play one faction againft another, and become abfolute by the mutual jealoufy of the females. To divide and to govern is an univerfal maxim; and by neglecting it, the EURO-PEANS undergo a more grievous and a more ignominious flavery than the TURKS or PERSIANS, who are fubjected indeed to a fovereign, that lies at a diftance from them, but in their domeftic affairs rule with an uncontroulable fway.

ESSAY XIX.

On the other hand, it may be urged with better reafon, that this fovereignty of the male is a real ufurpation, and deftroys that nearnefs of rank, not to fay equality, which nature has eftablished between the fexes. We are, by nature, their lovers, their friends, their patrons: Would we willingly exchange fuch endearing appellations, for the barbarous title of master and tyrant?

In what capacity fhall we gain by this inhuman proceeding? As lovers, or as hufbands? The lover, is totally annihilated; and courtfhip, the most agreeable fcene in life, can no longer have place, where women have not the free disposal of themselves, but are bought and fold, like the meanest animal. The busband is as little a gainer, having found the admirable fecret of extinguishing every part of love, except its jealously. No rose without its thorn; but he must be a foolish wretch indeed, that throws away the rose and preferves only the thorn.

But.

OF POLYGAMY and DIVORCES.

But the ASIATIC manners are as deftructive to friendfhip as to love. Jealoufy excludes men from all intimacies and familiarities with each other. No one dares bring his friend to his houfe or table, left he bring a lover to his numerous wives. Hence all over the eaft, each family is as much feparate from another, as if they were fo many diftinct kingdoms. No wonder then, that SOLO-MON, living like an eaftern prince, with his feven hundred wives, and three hundred concubines, without one friend, could write fo pathetically concerning the vanity of the world. Had he tried the fecret of one wife or miftrefs, a few friends, and a gre at many companions, he might have found life fomewhat more agreeable. Deftroy love and friendfhip; what remains in the world worth accepting ?

The bad education of children, efpecially children of condition, is another unavoidable confequence of thefe eaftern inftitutions. Those who pass the early part of life among flaves, are only qualified to be, themselves, flaves and tyrants; and in every future intercourse, either with their inferiors or superiors, are apt to forget the natural equality of mankind. What attention, too, can it be supposed a parent, whose feraglio affords him fifty fons, will give to instilling principles of morality or science into a progeny, with whom he himself is fearcely acquainted, and whom he loves with so divided an affection, Barbarism, therefore, appears, from reason as well as experience, to be the infeparable attendant of polygamy.

To render polygamy more odious, I need not recount the frightful effects of jealoufy, and the conftraint in which it holds the fair-fex all over the eaft. In those countries men are not allowed to have any commerce with

04

Digitized by Google

the

the females, not even phylicians, when fickness may be fupposed to have extinguished all wanton passions in the bosoms of the fair, and, at the fame time, has rendered them unfit objects of defire. TOURNEFORT tells us, that, when he was brought into the grand fignior's feraglio as a phylician. he was not a little furprized, in looking along a gallery, to fee a great number of naked arms, flanding out from the fides of the room. He could not imagine what this could mean; till he was told, that those arms, belonged to bodies, which he must cure, without knowing any more about them, than what he could learn from the arms. He was not allowed to alk a question of the patient, or even of her attendants, left he might find it neceffary to enquire concerning circumstances, which the delicacy of the feraglio allows not to be revealed. Hence phyficians in the east pretend to know all difeafes from the pulle; as our quacks in EUROPE undertake to cure a perfon merely from feeing his water. I fuppofe, had Monfieur TOURNEFORT been of this latter kind, he would not, in CONSTANTINOPLE, have been allowed by the jealous TURKS to be furnished with materials requisite for exercifing his art.

In another country, where polygamy is also allowed, they render their wives cripples, and make their feet of no use to them, in order to confine them to their own houses. But it will, perhaps, appear strange, that, in a EUROPEAN country, jealousy can yet be carried to such a height, that it is indecent fo much as to suppose that a woman of rank can have feet or legs. Witness the following story, which we have from very good authority \dagger . When the mother of the late king of SPAIN was

+ Memoires de la cour d'ESPACNE, par Madame d'AUNOY.

Digitized by Google

on

Of POLYGAMY and DIVORCES.

on her road towards MADRID, fhe paffed through a little town in SPAIN, famous for its manufactory of gloves and flockings. The magistrates of the place thought they could not better express their joy for the reception of their new queen, than by prefenting her with a fample of those commodities, for which alone their town was remarkable. The major domo, who conducted the princefs, received the gloves very graciously : But when the flockings were prefented, he flung them away with great indignation, and feverely reprimanded the magiftrates for this egregious piece of indecency. Know, fays he, that a queen of SPAIN has no legs. The young queen, who, at that time, understood the language but imperfectly, and had . often been frightened with stories of SPANISH jealousy. imagined that they were to cut off her legs. Upon which the fell a crying, and begged them to conduct her. back to GERMANY; for that the never could endure the operation: And it was with fome difficulty they could appeafe her. PHILIP IV. is faid never in his life to have laughed heartily, but at the recital of this flory.

Having rejected polygamy, and matched one man with one woman, let us now confider what duration we fhall affign to their union, and whether we fhall admit of those voluntary divorces, which were customary among the GREEKS and ROMANS. Those who would defend this practice may employ the following reasons.

How often does difguft and averfion arife after marriage, from the moft trivial accidents, or from an incompatibility of humour; where time, inftead of curing the wounds, proceeding from mutual injuries, fefters them every day the more, by new quarrels and reproaches? Let us feparate hearts, which were not made to affociate together. Each of them may, perhaps, find find another for which it is better fitted. At leaft, nor thing can be more cruel than to preferve, by violence, an union, which, at first, was made by mutual love, and is now, in effect, diffolved by mutual hatred.

Digitized by Google

But the liberty of divorces is not only a cure to hatred and domeffic quarrels : It is also an admirable prefervative against them, and the only fecret for keeping alive that love, which first united the married couple. The heart of man delights in liberty: The very image of conftraint is grievous to it: When you would confine it by violence, to what would otherwife have been its choice, the inclination immediately changes, and defire is turned into averfion. If the public interest will not allow us to enjoy in polygamy that variety, which is fo agreeable in love : at least, deprive us not of that liberty, which is fo effentially requifite. In vain you tell me, that I had my choice of the perfon, with whom I would conjoin myself. I had my choice, it is true, of my prifon; but this is but a fmall comfort, fince it muft ftill be a prifon.

Such are the arguments which may be urged in favour of divorces: But there feem to be thefe three unanfwerable objections against them. Firft, What must become of the children, upon the feparation of the parents? Must they be committed to the care of a stepmother; and instead of the fond attention and concern of a parent, feel all the indifference or hatred of a stranger or an enemy? These inconveniencies are sufficiently felt, where nature has made the divorce by the doom inevitable to all mortals: And shall we seek to multiply those inconveniencies, by multiplying divorces; and putting it in the power of parents, upon every cat price, to render their posterity miserable.

Digitized by Google

Secondly.

5

Of POLYGAMY and DIVORCES.

Secondly, If it be true, on the one hand, that the heart of man naturally delights in liberty, and hates every thing to which it is confined; it is alfo true, on the other, that the heart of man naturally fubmits to neceffity, and foon lofes an inclination, when there appears an absolute impossibility of gratifying it. These principles of human nature, you'll fay, are contradictory : But what is man but a heap of contradictions ! Though it is remarkable, that where principles are, after this manner, contrary in their operation, they do not always deftroy each other; but the one or the other may predominate on any particular occasion, according as circumftances are more or lefs favourable to it. For inftance, love is a reftlefs and impatient paffion, full of caprices and variations : arifing in a moment from a feature, from an air, from nothing, and fuddenly extinguishing after the fame manner. Such a paffion requires liberty above all things; and therefore ELOISA had reason, when, in order to preferve this paffion, the refuted to marry her beloved ABE-LARD.

How oft, when preft to marriage, have I faid, Curfe on all laws but those which love has made: Love, free as air, at fight of human ties, Spreads his light wings, and in a moment flies.

But friend/bip is a calm and fedate affection, conducted by reafon and cemented by habit; fpringing from long acquaintance and mutual obligations; without jealoufies or fears, and without those feverish fits of heat and cold, which cause fuch an agreeable torment in the amorous passion. So fober an affection, therefore, as friendship, rather thrives under constraint, and never rifes rifes to fuch a height, as when any firong interest or receffity binds two perfons together, and gives them fome common object of purfuit. We need not, therefore, be afraid of drawing the marriage-knot, which chiefly fubfists by friendship, the clotest possible. The amity between the perfons, where it is folid and fincere, will rather gain by it: And where it is wavering and uncertain, this is the best expedient for fixing it. How many frivolous quarrels and difgusts are there, which people of common prudence endeavour to forget, when they lie under a necessity of passing their lives together; but which would foon be inflamed into the most deadly hatred, were they purfued to the utmost, under the prostore of an eafy feparation?

In the third place, we muft confider, that nothing is more dangerous than to unite two perfons fo clofely in all their interefts and concerns, as man and wife, without rendering the union entire and total. The leaft poffibility of a feparate intereft muft be the fource of endlefs quarrels and fufpicions. The wife, not fecure of her eftablifhment, will ftill be driving fome feparate end or project; and the hufband's felfifhnefs, being accompanied with more power, may be ftill more dangerous.

Should these reasons against voluntary divorces be deemed infufficient, I hope no body will pretend to refuse the testimony of experience. At the time when divorces were most frequent among the ROMANS, marriages were most rare; and AUGUSTUS was obliged, by penal laws, to force men of fashion into the married state : A circumstance which is fearcely to be found in any other age or nation. The more ancient laws of ROME, which prohibited divorces, are extremely praifed by by DIONYSIUS HALYCARNASS EUS*. Wonderful was the harmony, fays the hiftorian, which this infeparable union of interests produced between married perfons; while each of them confidered the inevitable necessfity by which they were linked together, and abandoned all prospect of any other choice or establishment.

Digitized by Google

Of POLYGAMY and DIVORCES. 205

The exclusion of polygamy and divorces fufficiently recommends our prefent EUROPEAN practice with regard to marriage.

* Lib. ii.

(207)

ESSAY XX.

Of SIMPLICITY and REFINEMENT in WRITING,

F INE writing, according to Mr. ADDISON, confifts of fentiments, which are natural, without being obvious. There cannot be a jufter, and more concife definition of fine writing.

Sentiments, which are merely natural, affect not the mind with any pleafure, and feem not worthy of our attention. The pleafantries of a waterman, the observations of a peafant, the ribaldry of a porter or hackney coachman, all of these are natural, and difagreeable. What an infipid comedy fhould we make of the chit-chat of the tea-table, copied faithfully and at full length? Nothing can pleafe perfons of tafte, but nature drawn with all her graces and ornaments, la belle nature; or if we copy low life, the ftrokes must be ftrong and remarkable, and must convey a lively image to the mind. The abfurd naïveté of Sancho Pancho is represented in fuch inimitable colours by CERVANTES, that it entertains as much as the picture of the most magnanimous hero or fofteft lover.

The cafe is the fame with orators, philosophers, critics, or any author who speaks in his own person, without out introducing other fpeakers or actors. If his language be not elegant, his obfervations uncommon, his fenfe ftrong and mafculine, he will in vain boaft his nature and fimplicity. He may be correct; but he never will be agreeable. It is the unhappinels of fuch authors, that they are never blamed or cenfured. The good fortune of a book, and that of a man, are not the fame. The fecret deceiving path of life, which HORACE talks of, fallentis femita vitæ, may be the happieft lot of the one; but is the greateft misfortune, which the other can poffibly fall into.

On the other hand, productions, which are merely furprifing, without being natural, can never give any lafting entertainment to the mind. To draw chimeras, is not, properly speaking, to copy or imitate. The justnefs of the reprefentation is loft, and the mind is difpleafed to find a picture, which bears no refemblance to any original. Nor are fuch exceffive refinements more agreeable in the epiftolary or philosophic flyle, than in the epic or tragic. Too much ornament is a fault in every kind of production. Uncommon expressions, ftrong flashes of wit, pointed fimilies, and epigrammatic turns, especially when they recur too frequently, are a disfigurement, rather than any embellishment of difcourfe. As the eye, in furveying a GOTHIC building, is diffracted by the multiplicity of ornaments, and lofes the whole by its minute attention to the parts; fo the mind, in perufing a work overftocked with wit, is fatigued and difgusted with the constant endeavour to shine and furprife. This is the cafe where a writer overabounds in wit, even though that wit, in itfelf, fhould be just and agreeable. But it commonly happens to fuch writers, that they feek for their favourite ornaments, even where the fubject does not afford them; and by that that means, have twenty infipid conceits for one thought which is really beautiful.

Digitized by Google

Of SIMPLICITY and REFINEMENT. 209

There is no fubject in critical learning more copious, than this of the just mixture of fimplicity and refinement in writing; and therefore, not to wander in too large a field, I fhall confine myself to a few general observations on that head.

First, I observe, That though excesses of both kinds are to be avoided, and though a proper medium ought to be fludied in all productions; yet this medium lies not in a point, but admits of a confiderable latitude. Confider the wide diftance, in this respect, between Mr. POPE and LUCRETIUS. These seem to lie in the two greatest extremes of refinement and fimplicity, in which a poet can indulge himfelf, without being guilty of any blameable excess. All this interval may be filled with poets, who may differ from each other, but may be equally admirable, each in his peculiar style and manner. CORNEILLE and CON-GREVE, who carry their wit and refinement fomewhat farther than Mr. POPE (if poets of fo different a kind can be compared together), and SOPHOCLES and TE-RENCE, who are more fimple than LUCRETIUS, feem to have gone out of that medium, in which the most perfect productions are found, and to be guilty of fome excess in these opposite characters. Of all the great poets, VIR-GIL and RACINE, in my opinion, lie nearest the center, and are the farthest removed from both the extremities.

My fecond observation on this head is, That it is very difficult, if not impossible, to explain by words, where the just medium lies between the excesses of simplicity and refinement, or to give any rule by which we can know precisely the bounds between the fault and the beauty. A critic may not only discourse very judiciously on this head, without instructing his readers, but even without understanding the Vol. I. P matter matter perfectly himself. There is not a finer piece of criticism than the differtation on pastorals by FONTENELLE: in which, by a number of reflections and philosophical reasonings, he endeavours to fix the just medium, which is fuitable to that species of writing. But let any one read the paftorals of that author, and he will be convinced, that this judicious critic, notwithstanding his fine reasonings, had a false tafte, and fixed the point of perfection much nearer the extreme of refinement than paftoral poetry will admit of. The fentiments of his fhepherds are better fuited to the toilettes of PARIS, than to the forefts of ARCADIA. But this it is impossible to discover from his critical reasonings. He blames all exceffive painting and ornament as much as VIRGIL could have done, had that great poet writ a differtation on this fpecies of poetry. However different the taftes of men, their general difcourse on these subjects is commonly the fame. No criticism can be instructive, which descends not to particulars, and is not full of examples and illustra-It is allowed on all hands, that beauty, as well as tions. virtue, always lies in a medium; but where this medium is placed, is a great question, and can never be fufficiently explained by general reafonings.

I fhall deliver it as a third observation on this subject, That we ought to be more on our guard against the excess of refinement than that of simplicity; and that because the former excess is both less beautiful, and more dangerous than the latter.

It is a certain rule, that wit and passion are entirely incompatible.' When the affections are moved, there is no place for the imagination. The mind of man being naturally limited, it is imposfible that all its faculties can operate at once: And the more any one predominates, the lefs room is there for the others to exert their vigour.

210

Digitized by Google

Of SIMPLICITY and REFINEMENT. 211

vigour. For this reason, a greater degree of fimplicity is required in all compositions, where men, and actions, and paffions are painted, than in such as confist of reflections and observations. And as the former species of writing is the more engaging and beautiful, one may fafely, upon this account, give the preference to the extreme of fimplicity above that of refinement.

We may also observe, that those compositions, which we read the ofteneft, and which every man of taffe has got by heart, have the recommendation of fimplicity, and have nothing furprifing in the thought, when divested of that elegance of expression, and harmony of numbers, with which it is clothed. If the merit of the composition lie in a point of wit, it may strike at first : but the mind anticipates the thought in the fecond perufal, and is no longer affected by it. When I read an epigram of MARTIAL, the first line recalls the whole : and I have no pleafure in repeating to myfelf what I know already. But each line, each word in CATULLUS. has its merit; and I am never tired with the perufal of him. It is fufficient to run over COWLEY once : But PARNEL, after the fiftieth reading, is as fresh as at the Befides, it is with books as with women, where firft. a certain plainnefs of manner and of drefs is more engaging, than that glare of paint and airs and apparel. which may dazzle the eye, but reaches not the affections. TERENCE is a modeft and bashful beauty, to whom we grant every thing, becaufe he affumes nothing, and whofe purity and nature make a durable, though not a violent impreffion on us.

But refinement, as it is the lefs beautiful, fo is it the more dangerous extreme, and what we are the apteft to fall into. Simplicity paffes for dulnefs, when it is not P_2 accompanied accompanied with great elegance and propriety. 'On the contrary, there is fomething furprifing in a blaze of wit 'and conceit. Ordinary readers are mightily ftruck with it, and falfely imagine it to be the moft difficult, as well as moft excellent way of writing. SENECA abounds with agreeable faults, fays QUINTILIAN, abundat dulcibus vitiis; and for that reafon is the more dangerous, and the more apt to pervert the tafte of the young and inconfiderate.

I fhall add, that the excess of refinement is now more to be guarded against than ever; because it is the extreme, which men are the most apt to fall into, after learning has made some progress, and after eminent writers have appeared in every species of composition. The endeavour to please by novelty leads men wide of simplicity and nature, and fills their writings with affectation and conceit. It was thus the ASIATIC eloquence degenerated fo much from the ATTIC: It was thus the age of CLAU-DIUS and NERO became so much inferior to that of AU-GUSTUS in taste and genius: And perhaps there are, at present, some symptoms of a like degeneracy of taste, in FRANCE as well as in ENGLAND.

Digitized by Google

(213)

ESSAY XXI.

Of NATIONAL CHARACTERS.

THE vulgar are apt to carry all national characters to extremes; and having once established it as a principle, that any people are knavish, or cowardly, or ignorant, they will admit of no exception, but comprehend every individual under the fame cenfure. Men of fense condemn these undiftinguishing judgments: Though at the fame time, they allow, that each nation has a peculiar fet of manners, and that fome particular qualities are more frequently to be met with among one people than among their neighbours. The common people in SWITZERLAND have probably more honefty than those of the fame rank in IRELAND; and every prudent man will, from that circumstance alone, make a difference in the truft which he repofes in each. We have reason to expect greater wit and gaiety in a FRENCHMAN than in a SPANIARD; though CERVANTES was born in SPAIN. An ENGLISMAN will naturally be supposed to have more knowledge than a DANE; though TYCHO BRAHE was a native of DENMARK.

Different reasons are affigned for these national characters; while some account for them from moral, others from physical causes. By moral causes, I mean all cir-P 3 cumstances, cumftances, which are fitted to work on the mind as motives or reafons, and which render a peculiar fet of manners habitual to us. Of this kind are, the nature of the government, the revolutions of public affairs, the plenty or penury in which the people live, the fituation of the nation with regard to its neighbours, and fuch like circumftances. By phyfical caufes, I mean thofe qualities of the air and climate which are fuppofed to work infenfibly on the temper, by altering the tone and habit of the body, and giving a particular complexion, which, though reflection and reafon may fometimes overcome it, will yet prevail among the generality of mankind, and have an influence on their manners.

That the character of a nation will much depend on moral caufes, muft be evident to the moft fuperficial obferver; fince a nation is nothing but a collection of individuals, and the manners of individuals are frequently determined by thefe caufes. As poverty and hard labour debafe the minds of the common people, and render them unfit for any fcience and ingenious profeffion; fo where any government becomes very oppreffive to all its fubjects, it muft have a proportional effect on their temper and genius, and muft banifh all the liberal arts from among them.

The fame principle of moral caufes fixes the character of different profeffions, and alters even that difpofition, which the particular members receive from the hand of nature. A foldier and a prieft are different characters, in all nations, and all ages; and this difference is founded on circumftances, whole operation is eternal and unalterable.

The uncertainty of their life makes foldiers lavish and generous, as well as brave: Their idleness, together with

Of NATIONAL CHARACTERS.

with the large focieties, which they form in camps or garrifons, inclines them to pleafure and gallantry: By their frequent change of company, they acquire good breeding and an opennefs of behaviour: Being employed only against a public and an open enemy, they become candid, honess, and undefigning: And as they use more the labour of the body than that of the mind, they are commonly thoughtless and ignorant *,

It is a trite, but not altogether a falfe maxim, that priefts of all religions are the fame; and though the character of the profession will not, in every instance, prevail over the perfonal character, yet is it fure always to predominate with the greater number. For as chymists observe, that spirits, when raised to a certain height, are all the fame, from whatever materials they be extracted; so these men, being elevated above humanity, acquire a uniform character, which is entirely their own, and which, in my opinion, is, generally speaking, not the most amiable that is to be met with in human society. It is, in most points, opposite to that of a foldier; as is the way of life, from which it is derived +.

As to phyfical caufes, I am inclined to doubt altogether of their operation in this particular; nor do I think, that men owe any thing of their temper or genius to the air, food, or climate. I confefs, that the contrary opinion may juftly, at first fight, feem probable; fince we find, that these circumstances have an influence over every other animal, and that even those creatures, which are fitted to live in all climates, such as dogs, horses, &c. do not attain the fame perfection in all. The courage

> * See NOTE [H]. † See NOTE [I]. P 4

> > Digitized by Google

of

of bull-dogs and game-cocks feems peculiar to ENG-LAND. FLANDERS is remarkable for large and heavy horfes: SPAIN for horfes light, and of good mettle. And any breed of thefe creatures, transplanted from one country to another, will foon lose the qualities, which they derived from their native climate. It may be asked, why not the same with men*?

There are few queftions more curious than this, or which will oftener occur in our enquiries concerning human affairs; and therefore it may be proper to give it a full examination.

The human mind is of a very imitative nature; nor is it possible for any fet of men to converse often together. without acquiring a fimilitude of manners, and communicating to each other their vices as well as virtues. The propenfity to company and fociety is ftrong in all rational creatures; and the fame disposition, which gives us this propenfity, makes us enter deeply into each other's fentiments, and causes like passions and inclinations to run, as it were, by contagion, through the whole club or knot of companions. Where a number of men are united into one political body, the occafions of their intercourse must be so frequent, for defence, commerce, and government, that, together with the fame fpeech or language, they must acquire a refemblance in their manners, and have a common or national character, as well as a perfonal one, peculiar to each individual. Now though nature produces all kinds of temper and understanding in great abundance, it does not follow, that fhe always produces them in like proportions, and that in every fociety the ingredients of industry and indolence, valour

* See NOTE [K].

Digitized by Google

and

Of NATIONAL CHARACTERS.

and cowardice, humanity and brutality, wifdom and folly, will be mixed after the fame manner. In the infancy of fociety, if any of these dispositions be found in greater abundance than the reft, it will naturally prevail in the composition, and give a tincture to the national character. Or should it be afferted, that no species of temper can reasonably be presumed to predominate, even in those contracted focieties, and that the fame proportions will always be preferved in the mixture; yet furely the perfons in credit and authority, being still a more contracted body, cannot always be prefumed to be of the fame character; and their influence on the manners of the people, must, at all times, be very confiderable. If. on the first establishment of a republic, a BRUTUS should be placed in authority, and be transported with such an enthufiaim for liberty and public good, as to overlook all the ties of nature, as well as private interest, such an illustrious example will naturally have an effect on the whole fociety, and kindle the fame paffion in every bofom. Whatever it be that forms the manners of one generation. the next must imbibe a deeper tincture of the fame dye ; men being more fusceptible of all impressions during infancy, and retaining these impressions as long as they remain in the world. I affert, then, that all national characters, where they depend not on fixed moral caufes, proceed from fuch accidents as thefe, and that phyfical causes have no discernible operation on the human mind. It is a maxim in all philosophy, that causes, which do not appear, are to be confidered as not exifting.

If we run over the globe, or revolve the annals of hiftory, we fhall difcover every where figns of a fympathy or contagion of manners, none of the influence of air or climate.

$

Firft.

Digitized by Google

First. We may observe, that, where a very extensive government has been established for many centuries, it spreads a national character over the whole empire, and communicates to every part a similarity of manners. Thus the CHINESE have the greatest uniformity of character imaginable: Though the air and climate, in different parts of those vast dominions, admit of very confiderable variations.

Secondly. In fmall governments, which are contiguous, the people have notwithftanding a different character, and are often as diftinguifhable in their manners as the moft diftant nations. ATHENS and THEBES were but a fhort day's journey from each other; though the ATHENIANS were as remarkable for ingenuity, politenefs, and gaiety, as the THEBANS for dulnefs, rufficity, and a phlegmatic temper. PLUTARCH, difcourfing of the effects of air on the minds of men, obferves, that the inhabitants of the PIRÆUM poffelfed very different tempers from thofe of the higher town in ATHENS, which was diftant about four miles from the former: But I believe no one attributes the difference of manners, in WAPPING and St. JAMES'S, to a difference of air or climate.

Thirdly. The fame national character commonly follows the authority of government to a precife boundary; and upon croffing a river or paffing a mountain, one finds a new fet of manners, with a new government. The LANGUEDOCIANS and GASCONS are the gayeft people in FRANCE; but whenever you pafs the PYRE-NEES, you are among SPANIARDS. Is it conceivable, that the qualities of the air fhould change exactly with the limits of an empire, which depend fo much on the accidents of battles, negociations, and marriages ?

Digitized by Google

Fourthly.

Of NATIONAL CHARACTERS.

Fourthly. Where any fet of men, fcattered over diftant nations, maintain a close fociety or communication together, they acquire a fimilitude of manners, and have but little in common with the nations amongft whom they live. Thus the JEWS in EUROPE, and the AR-MENIANS in the eaft, have a peculiar character; and the former are as much noted for fraud, as the latter for probity*. The Jefuits, in all Roman-catholic countries, are alfor observed to have a character peculiar to themfelves.

Fifthly. Where any accident, as a difference in language or religion, keeps two nations, inhabiting the fame country, from mixing with each other, they will preferve, during feveral centuries, a diffinct and even opposite fet of manners. The integrity, gravity, and bravery of the TURKS, form an exact contrast to the deceit, levity, and cowardice of the modern GREEKS.

Sixibly. The fame fet of manners will follow a nation, and adhere to them over the whole globe, as well as the fame laws and language. The SPANISH, ENG-LISH, FRENCH and DUTCH colonies, are all diffinguishable even between the tropics.

Seventhly. The manners of a people change very confiderably from one age to another; either by great alterations in their government, by the mixtures of new people, or by that inconftancy, to which all human affairs are fubject. The ingenuity, industry, and activity of the ancient GREEKS have nothing in common with the flupidity and indolence of the prefent inhabitants of those regions. Candour, bravery, and love of liberty formed the character of the ancient ROMANS; as

* See NOTE [L].

Digitized by Google

fubtilty,

fubtilty, cowardice, and a flavish disposition do that of the modern. The old SPANIARDS were reftless, turbulent. and fo addicted to war, that many of them killed them-- felves, when deprived of their arms by the ROMANS *. One would find an equal difficulty at prefent (at leaft one would have found it fifty years ago), to rouze up the modern SPANIARDS to arms. The BATAVIANS were all foldiers of fortune, and hired themfelves into the Ro-Their posterity make use of foreigners for MAN armies. the fame purpose that the ROMANS did their ancestors. Though some few strokes of the FRENCH character be the fame with that which CÆSAR has afcribed to the GAULS ; yet what comparison between the civility, humanity, and knowledge of the modern inhabitants of that country, and the ignorance, barbarity, and groffnefs of the ancient ? Not to infift upon the great difference between the present possessors of BRITAIN, and those before the ROMAN conquest; we may observe that our ancestors, a few centuries ago, were funk into the most abject superstition; last century they were inflamed with the most furious enthusiasm, and are now settled into the most cool indifference with regard to religious matters, that is to be found in any nation of the world.

Eighthly. Where feveral neighbouring nations have a very clofe communication together, either by policy, commerce, or travelling, they acquire a fimilitude of manners, proportioned to the communication. Thus all the FRANKS appear to have a uniform character to the eaftern nations. The differences among them are like the peculiar accents of different provinces, which are not diffinguishable, except by an ear accustomed to them, and which commonly escape a foreigner.

Digitized by Google

* TIT. LIVII, lib. xxxiv. cap. 17

Ninthly.

Of NATIONAL CHARACTERS.

Nintbly. We may often remark a wonderful mixture of manners and characters in the fame nation, fpeaking the fame language, and fubject to the fame government : And in this particular the ENGLISH are the most remarkable of any people that perhaps ever were in the world. Nor is this to be afcribed to the mutability and uncertainty of their climate, or to any other phylical causes; fince all these causes take place in the neighbouring country of SCOTLAND, without having the fame effect. Where the government of a nation is altogether republican, it is apt to beget a peculiar fet of manners. Where it is altogether monarchical, it is more apt to have the fame effect; the imitation of fuperiors fpreading the national manners fafter among the people. If the governing part of a ftate confift altogether of merchants, as in HOLLAND, their uniform way of life will fix their character. If it confifts chiefly of nobles and landed gentry, like GERMANY, FRANCE, and SPAIN, the fame effect follows. The genius of a particular fect or religion is also apt to mould the manners of a people. But the ENGLISH government is a mixture of monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy. The people in authority are composed of gentry and merchants. All fects of religion are to be found among them. And the great liberty and independency, which every man enjoys, allows him to difplay the manners peculiar to him. Hence the ENGLISH, of any people in the universe, have the leaft of a national character; unless this very fingularity may pais for fuch.

If the characters of men depended on the air and climate, the degrees of heat and cold fhould naturally be expected to have a mighty influence; fince nothing has a greater effect on all plants and irrational animals. And indeed indeed there is fome reafon to think, that all the nations, which live beyond the polar circles or between the tropics, are inferior to the reft of the fpecies, and are incapable of all the higher attainments of the human mind. The poverty and mifery of the northern inhabitants of the globe, and the indolence of the fouthern, from their few neceffities, may, perhaps, account for this remarkable difference, without our having recourfe to phyfical caufes. This however is certain, that the characters of nations are very promifcuous in the temperate climates, and that almost all the general observations, which have been formed of the more fouthern or more northern people in these climates, are found to be uncertain and fallacious +.

Digitized by Google

Shall we fay, that the neighbourhood of the fun inflames the imagination of men, and gives it a peculiar spirit and vivacity? The FRENCH, GREEKS, EGYP-TIANS, and PERSIANS are remarkable for gaiety. The SPANIARDS TURKS, and CHINESE are noted for gravity and a ferious deportment, without any fuch difference of climate as to produce this difference of temper.

The GREEKS and ROMANS, who called all other nations barbarians, confined genius and a fine underflanding to the more fouthern climates, and pronounced the northern nations incapable of all knowledge and civility. But our ifland has produced as great men, either for action or learning, as GREECE or ITALY has to boaft of.

It is pretended, that the fentiments of men become more delicate as the country approaches nearer to the fun; and that the tafte of beauty and elegance receives propor-

Digitized by Google

+ See NOTE [M].

tional

Of NATIONAL CHARACTERS. 223

tional improvements in every latitude; as we may particularly observe of the languages, of which the more fouthern are fmooth and melodious, the northern harfh and untuneable. But this observation holds not univer-The ARABIC is uncouth and difagreeable: The faily. MUSCOVITE foft and mufical. Energy, ftrength, and harfhneis form the character of the LATIN tongue: The ITALIAN is the most liquid, fmooth, and effeminate language that can possibly be imagined. Every language will depend formewhat on the manners of the people; but much more on that original flock of words and founds, which they received from their anceftors, and which remain unchangeable, even while their manners admit of the greatest alterations. Who can doubt, but the ENGLISH are at prefent a more polite and knowing people than the GREEKS were for feveral ages after the fiege of TROY? Yet is there no comparison between the language of MILTON and that of HOMER. Nav. the greater are the alterations and improvements, which happen in the manners of a people, the lefs can be expected in their language. A few eminent and refined geniuses will communicate their tafte and knowledge to a whole people, and produce the greatest improvements; but they fix the tongue by their writings, and prevent, in fome degree, its farther changes.

Lord BACON has obferved, that the inhabitants of the fouth are, in general, more ingenious than those of the north; but that, where the native of a cold climate has genius, he rifes to a higher pitch than can be reached by the fouthern wits. This observation a late * writer confirms, by comparing the fouthern wits to cucumbers, which are commonly all good in their kind; but at best

* Dr. Berkley : Minute Philosopher.

Digitized by Google

are

ESSAY XXI.

are an infipid fruit: While the northern geniufes are like melons, of which not one in fifty is good : but when it is fo, it has an exquisite relish. I believe this remark may be allowed juft, when confined to the EUROPEAN nations, and to the prefent age, or rather to the preceding one: But I think it may be accounted for from moral causes. All the sciences and liberal arts have been imported to us from the fouth ; and it is eafy to imagine. that, in the first order of application, when excited by emulation and by glory, the few, who were addicted to them, would carry them to the greatest height, and ftretch every nerve, and every faculty, to reach the pinnacle of perfection. Such illustrious examples spread knowledge every where, and begot an universal effeem for the sciences: After which, it is no wonder, that industry relaxes; while men meet not with fuitable encouragement, nor arrive at fuch diffinction by their attainments. The universal diffusion of learning among a people, and the entire banishment of gross ignorance and rufficity, is, therefore, feldom attended with any remarkable perfection in particular perfons. It feems to be taken for granted in the dialogue de Oratoribus, that knowledge was much more common in VESPASIAN'S age than in that of CICERO and AUGUSTUS. QUINTI-LIAN alfo complains of the profanation of learning, by its becoming too common. " Formerly," fays JUVE-NAL, " fcience was confined to GREECE and ITALY. * Now the whole world emulates ATHENS and ROME. « Eloquent GAUL has taught BRITAIN, knowing in " the laws. Even THULE entertains thoughts of " hiring rhetoricians for its inftruction *." This flate of learning

• " Sed Cantaber unde

Digitized by Google

Stoicus ? antiqui præfertim ætate Metelli. Nunc totus GRAIAS, noftrafque habet orbis ATHENAS.

GALLIA

OF NATIONAL CHARACTERS. 225

learning is remarkable; because JUVENAL is himself the last of the ROMAN writers, that possessed any degree of genius. Those, who succeeded, are valued for nothing but the matters of fact, of which they give us information. I hope the late conversion of Muscovy to the fludy of the feiences will not prove a like prognoftic to the prefent period of learning.

Cardinal BENTIVOGLIO gives the preference to the northern nations above the fouthern with regard to candour and fincerity; and mentions, on the one hand, the SPANIARDS and ITALIANS, and on the other, the FLEMINGS and GERMANS. But I am apt to think, that this has happened by accident. The ancient ROMANS feem to have been a candid fincere people, as are the modern TURKS. But if we must needs suppose, that this event has arifen from fixed caufes, we may only conclude from it, that all extremes are apt to concur. and are commonly attended with the fame confequences. Treachery is the ufual concomitant of ignorance and barbarism; and if civilized nations ever embrace subtle and crooked politics, it is from an excels of refinement, which makes them difdain the plain direct path to power and glory.

Most conquests have gone from north to fouth ; and it has hence been inferred, that the northern nations pollefs a fuperior degree of courage and ferocity. But it would have been juster to have faid, that most conquests are made by poverty and want upon plenty and riches. The SARACENS, leaving the deferts of ARABIA, carried their conquests northwards upon all the fertile provinces of the ROMAN empire; and met the TURKS half way, GALLIA caufidicos docuit facunda BRITANNOS Sat. 15. De conducendo loquitur jam rhetore THULL." Vot. I. who who were coming fouthwards from the deferts of TAR-TARY.

An eminent writer * has remarked, that all courageous animals are alfo carnivorous, and that greater courage is to be expected in a people, fuch as the ENGLISH, whole food is ftrong and hearty, than in the half-ftarved commonalty of other countries. But the SWEDES, notwithftanding their difadvantages in this particular, are not inferior, in martial courage, to any nation that ever was in the world.

In general, we may observe, that courage, of all national qualities, is the most precarious; because it is exerted only at intervals, and by a few in every nation; whereas industry, knowledge, civility, may be of conflant and universal use, and, for several ages, may become habitual to the whole people. If courage be preserved, it must be by discipline, example, and opinion. The tenth legion of CÆSAR, and the regiment of PI-CARDY in FRANCE were formed promissionally from among the citizens: but having once entertained a notion, that they were the best troops in the fervice, this very opinion really made them such.

As a proof how much courage depends on opinion, we may observe, that, of the two chief tribes of the GREEKS, the DORIANS and IONIANS, the former were always effected, and always appeared more brave and manly than the latter; though the colonies of both the tribes were interspersed and intermingled throughout all the extent of GREECE, the Leffer ASIA, SICILY, ITALY, and the islands of the ÆGEAN fea. The ATHENIANS were the only IONIANS that ever had any reputation for valour or military atchievements; though even these

* Sir WII LLAN TEMPLE'S Account of the Netherlands.

Digitized by Google

were

Of NATIONAL CHARACTERS. 227

were deemed inferior to the LACEDEMONIANS the braveft of the DORIANS.

The only observation, with regard to the difference of men in different climates, on which we can reft any weight, is the vulgar one, that people in the northern regions have a greater inclination to firong liquors, and those in the southern to love and women. One can affign a very probable physical cause for this difference: Wine and diffilled waters warm the frozen blood in the colder climates, and fortify men against the injuries of the weather: As the genial heat of the sun, in the countries exposed to his beams, inflames the blood, and exalts the paffion between the fexes.

Perhaps too, the matter may be accounted for by moral caufes. All ftrong liquors are rarer in the north, and confequently are more coveted. Dioborus Siculus #" tells us, that the GAULS in his time were great drunkards, and much addicted to wine; chiefly, I fuppole, from its rarity and novelty. On the other hand, the heat in the fouthern climates, obliging men and women to go half naked, thereby renders their frequent commerce more dangerous, and inflames their mutual paffion. This makes parents and hufbands more jealous and referved : which still farther inflames the passion. Not to mention, that, as women ripen fooner in the fouthern regions, it is necellary to observe greater jealousy and care in their education; it being evident, that a girl of twelve cannot poffefs equal diferetion to govern this paffion, with one who feels not its violence till the be feventeen or eighteen. Nothing to much encourages the paffion of love

• Lib. v. The fame author afcribes taciturnity to that people; a new proof that national characters may alter very much. Taciturnity, as a national character, implies unfociablencis. ARISTOTLE, in his Politics, book ii. cap. 2. fays, that the GAUES are the only warlike nation, who are melligent of women.

Digitized by Google

as eafe and leifure, or is more deftructive to it than induftry and hard labour; and as the neceffities of men are evidently fewer in the warm climates than in the cold ones, this circumftance alone may make a confiderable difference between them.

But perhaps the fact is doubtful, that nature has, either from moral or phylical caules, distributed these respective inclinations to the different climates. The ancient GREEKS. though born in a warm climate, feem to have been much addicted to the bottle; nor were their parties of pleafure any thing but matches of drinking among men, who paffed their time altogether apart from the fair. Yet when ALERANDER led the GREEKS into PERSIA, a still more fouthern climate, they multiplied their debauches of this kind, in imitation of the PERSIAN manners *. So honourable was the character of a drunkard among the PERSIANS, that CYRUS the younger, foliciting the fober LACEDEMONIANS for fuccour against his brother ARTAXERXES, claims it chiefly on account of his fuperior endowments, as more valorous, more bountiful, and a better drinker +. DARIUS HYSTASPES made it be infcribed on his tomb-ftone, among his other virtues and princely qualities, that no one could bear a greater quantity of liquor. You may obtain any thing of the NE-GROES by offering them ftrong drink; and may eafily prevail with them to fell, not only their children, but their wives and mittreffes, for a cafk of brandy. In FRANCE and ITALY few drink pure wine, except in the greatest beats of fummer; and, indeed, it is then almost as neceffary, in order to recruit the fpirits, evaporated by heat, as it is in Sweden, during the winter, in order to warm the bodies congealed by the rigour of the feafon.

* BABYLONII maxime in vinum, & que ebrietatem sequentur, effus funt. QUINT. CBR. lib. v. cap. z.

Digitized by Google

+ PLUT. SYMP. lib.i. quaft. 4.

OF NATIONAL CHARACTERS. 229

If jealoufy be regarded as a proof of an amorous difpolition, no people were more jealous than the Musco-VITES, before their communication with EUROPE had fomewhat altered their manners in this particular.

But fuppoing the fact true, that nature, by phyfical principles, has regularly diffributed thefe two paffions, the one to the northern, the other to the fouthern regions; we can only infer, that the climate may affect the groffer and more bodily organs of our frame; not that it can work upon those finer organs, on which the operations of the mind and understanding depend. And this is agreeable to the analogy of nature. The races of animals never degenerate when carefully tended; and horfes, in particular, always show their blood in their fhape, spirit, and swiftness: But a coxcomb may beget a philosopher; as a man of virtue may leave a worthless progeny.

I fhall conclude this fubject with observing, that though the paffion for liquor be more brutal and debafing than love, which, when properly managed, is the fource of all politeness and refinement; yet this gives not fo great an advantage to the fouthern climates, as we may be apt, at first fight, to imagine. When love goes beyond a certain pitch, it renders men jealous, and cuts off the free intercourse between the fexes, on which the politenefs of a nation will commonly much depend. And if we would fubtilize and refine upon this point, we might observe, that the people, in very temperate climates, are the most likely to attain all forts of improvement; their blood not being fo inflamed as to render them jealous, and yet being warm enough to make them fet a due value on the charms and endowments of the fair fex.

Q 3

(231)

E S S A Y XXII.

Of TRAGEDY.

T feems an unaccountable pleasure, which the spece 1 tators of a well-written tragedy receive from forrow, terror, anxiety, and other paffions, that are in themfelves difagreeable and uneafy. The more they are touched and affected, the more are they delighted with the fpectacle; and as foon as the uneafy paffions ceafe to operate, the piece is at an end. One fcene of full joy and contentment and fecurity, is the utmost that any composition of this kind can bear; and it is fure always to be the, concluding one. If, in the texture of the piece, there be interwoven any scenes of fatisfaction, they afford only faint gleams of pleafure, which are thrown in by way of variety, and in order to plunge the actors into deeper diffress, by means of that contrast and disappointment. The whole art of the poet is employed, in rouzing and fupporting the compassion and indignation, the anxiety and refentment of his audience. They are pleafed in proportion as they are afflicted, and never are fo happy as when they employ tears, fobs, and cries to give vent to their forrow, and relieve their heart, fwoln with the. tendereft fympathy and compaffion.

The few critics who have had fome tincture of philofophy, have remarked this fingular phænomenon, and have endeavoured to account for it.

Q.4

Digitized by Google

L'Abbé

L'Abbé DUBOS, in his reflections on poetry and painting, afferts, that nothing is in general fo difagree, able to the mind as the languid, liftlefs flate of indolence, into which it falls upon the removal of all paffion and occupation. To get rid of this painful fituation, it feeks every amufement and purfuit; bufinefs, gaming, fhews, executions; whatever will rouze the paffions, and take its attention from itfelf. No matter what the paffion is: Let it be difagreeable, afflicting, melancholy, difordered; it is ftill better than that infipid languor, which arifes from perfect tranquillity and repofe.

It is impossible not to admit this account, as being, at leaft in part, fatisfactory. You may observe, when there are several tables of gaming, that all the company run to those, where the deepess play is, even though they find not there the best players. The view, or, at leaft, imagination of high passions, arising from great loss or gain, affects the spectator by sympathy, gives him fome touches of the same passions, and ferves him for a momentary entertainment. It makes the time pass the easier with him, and is some relief to that oppression, under which men commonly labour, when lest entirely to their own thoughts and meditations,

We find that common liars always magnify, in their narrations, all kinds of danger, pain, diffrefs, ficknefs, deaths, murders, and cruelties; as well as joy, beauty, mirth, and magnificence. It is an abfurd fecret, which they have for pleafing their company, fixing their attention, and attaching them to fuch marvellous relations, by the paffions and emotions which they excite.

There is, however, a difficulty in applying to the prefent subject, in its sull extent, this folution, however ingenious and fatisfactory it may appear. It is certain, that the same object of distress, which pleases in a tragedya gedy, were it really fet before us, would give the moft unfeigned uneafinefs; though it be then the moft effectual cure to languor and indolence. Monfieur FONTE-NELLE feems to have been fenfible of this difficulty; and accordingly attempts another folution of the phænomenon; at leaft makes fome addition to the theory above mentioned #.

" Pleasure and pain," fays he, " which are two fen-" timents fo different in themselves, differ not fo much " in their cause. From the instance of tickling, it " appears, that the movement of pleafure, pufhed a little " too far, becomes pain; and that the movement of " pain, a little moderated, becomes pleasure. Hence it " proceeds, that there is fuch a thing as a forrow, foft " and agreeable: It is a pain weakened and diminished. " The heart likes naturally to be moved and affected. " Melancholy objects fuit it, and even difaftrous and " forrowful, provided they are foftened by fome circum-" ftance. It is certain, that, on the theatre, the re-" prefentation has almost the effect of reality; yet it has " not altogether that effect. However we may be hurf ried away by the spectacle; whatever dominion the " fenses and imagination may usurp over the reason. " there still lurks at the bottom a certain idea of false-" hood in the whole of what we fee. This idea, though " weak and difguised, suffices to diminish the pain which " we fuffer from the misfortunes of those whom we love, " and to reduce that affliction to fuch a pitch as converts " it into a pleasure. We weep for the misfortune of a " hero, to whom we are attached. In the fame inftant " we comfort ourfelves, by reflecting, that it is nothing. " but a fiction: And it is precifely that mixture of fen-

Reflexions fur la poëtique, § 36.

Digitized by Google

f timents,

"timents, which composes an agreeable forrow, and tears that delight us. But as that affliction, which is caused by exterior and fensible objects, is ftronger than the confolation which arises from an internal reflection, they are the effects and symptoms of forrow, that ought to predominate in the composition."

This folution feems just and convincing ; but perhaps it wants still fome new addition, in order to make it anfwer fully the phænomenon, which we here examine. All the paffions, excited by eloquence, are agreeable in the higheft degree, as well as those which are moved by painting and the theatre. The epilogues of CICERO are. on this account chiefly, the delight of every reader of tafte; and it is difficult to read fome of them without the deepest sympathy and forrow. His merit as an orator, no doubt, depends much on his fuccess in this particular. When he had raifed tears in his judges and all his audience, they were then the most highly delighted, and expressed the greatest fatisfaction with the pleader. The pathetic description of the butchery, made by VERRES of the SICILIAN captains, is a mafterpiece of this kind : But I believe none will affirm, that the being prefent at a melancholy scene of that nature would afford Neither is the forrow here foftened any entertainment. by fiction: For the audience were convinced of the reality of every circumstance. What is it then, which in this cafe raifes a pleafure from the bosom of uneafiness. fo to fpeak; and a pleafure, which still retains all the features and outward fymptoms of diffrefs and forrow ?

I answer: This extraordinary effect proceeds from that very eloquence, with which the melancholy fcene is represented. The genius required to paint objects in a lively manner, the art employed in collecting all the pathetic circumstances, the judgment displayed in difposing poling them: the exercise, I say, of these noble talents, together with the force of expression, and beauty of oratorial numbers, diffuse the highest fatisfaction on the audience, and excite the most delightful movements. By this means, the uneafine's of the melancholy paffions is not only overpowered and effaced by fomething ftronger of an oppofite kind; but the whole impulse of those paffions is converted into pleafure, and fwells the delight which the eloquence raifes in us. The fame force of oratory, employed on an uninterefting fubject, would. not pleafe half fo much, or rather would appear altogether ridiculous; and the mind, being left in abfolute calmnefs and indifference, would relifh none of those beauties of imagination or expression, which, if joined to passion, give it fuch exquisite entertainment. The impulse or vehemence, arifing from forrow, compassion, indignation, receives a new direction from the fentiments of beauty. The latter, being the predominant emotion, feize the whole mind, and convert the former into themfelves, at least tincture them fo strongly as totally to alter their nature. And the foul, being, at the fame time, rouzed by paffion, and charmed by eloquence, feels on the whole a strong movement, which is altogether delightful,

234

The fame principle takes place in tragedy; with this addition, that tragedy is an imitation; and imitation is always of itfelf agreeable. This circumftance ferves ftill farther to fmooth the motions of paffion, and convert the whole feeling into one uniform and ftrong enjoyment. Objects of the greateft terror and diffrefs pleafe in painting, and pleafe more than the most beautiful objects, that appear calm and indifferent *. The affection, rouzing the mind, excites a large flock of fpirit and yehemence; which is all transformed into pleafure by * See NOTE [N].

Digitized by Google

the

236 E S S A Y XXH.

the force of the prevailing movement. It is thus the fiction of tragedy foftens the paffion, by an infufion of a new feeling, not merely by weakening or diminishing the forrow. You may by degrees weaken a real forrow, till it totally disappears; yet in none of its gradations will it ever give pleasure; except, perhaps, by accident, to a man funk under lethargic indolence, whom it rouzes from that languid ftate.

To confirm this theory, it will be fufficient to produce other inftances, where the fubordinate movement is converted into the predominant, and gives force to it, though of a different, and even fometimes though of a contrary nature.

Novelty naturally rouzes the mind, and attracts our attention; and the movements, which it caufes, are always converted into any paffion belonging to the object, and join their force to it. Whether an event excite joy or forrow, pride or fhame, anger or good-will, it is fure to produce a fironger affection, when new or unufual. And though novelty of itfelf be agreeable, it fortifies the painful, as well as agreeable paffions.

Had you any intention to move a perfon extremely by the narration of any event, the beft method of encreasing its effect would be artfully to delay informing him of it, and first to excite his curiofity and impatience before you lethim into the fecret. This is the artifice practified by IAGO in the famous scene of SHAKESPEARE; and every spectator is sensible, that OTHELLO's jealously acquires additional force from his preceding impatience, and that the subordinate passion is here readily transformed into the predominant one.

Difficulties encrease passions of every kind; and by rouzing our attention, and exciting our active powers, they they produce an emotion, which nourifhes the prevailing affection.

Parents commonly love that child moft, whole fickly infirm frame of body has occasioned them the greatest pains, trouble, and anxiety in rearing him. The agreeable fentiment of affection here acquires force from fentiments of uneafine is.

Nothing endears fo much a friend as forrow for his death. The pleasure of his company has not so powerful an influence.

Jealoufy is a painful paffion; yet without fome there of it, the agreeable affection of love has difficulty to fubfift in its full force and violence. Abfence is also a great fource of complaint among lovers, and gives them the greateft uneafinefs: Yet nothing is more favourable to their mutual paffion than thort intervals of that kind. And if long intervals often prove fatal, it is only becaufe, through time, men are accustomed to them, and they ceafe to give uneafinefs. Jealoufy and abfence in love compole the dolce peccante of the ITALIANS, which they fuppole fo effential to all pleafure.

There is a fine observation of the elder PLINY, which illustrates the principle here infisted on. It is very remarkable, fays he, that the last works of celebrated artists, which they left imperfect, are always the most prized, such as the IRIS of ARISTIDES, the TYNDARIDES of NICO-MACHUS, the MEDEA of TIMOMACHUS, and the VERUS of APELLES. These are valued even above their similar productions: The broken lineaments of the piece, and the balfformed idea of the painter are carefully studied; and our very grief for that curious hand, which had been stopped by death, is an additional encrease to our pleasure *.

Thefe

* Illud vero perquam rarum ac memoris dignum, etiam fuprema opera artificum, imperfectalque tabulas, ficut, IRIN ARTSTIDIS, TYNDARIDAS NIGOMACHI,

ESSAY XXII.

These instances (and many more might be collected) are fufficient to afford us fome infight into the analogy of nature, and to fhow us, that the pleafure, which poets, orators, and mulicians give us, by exciting grief, forrow, indignation, compation, is not fo extraordinary or paradoxical, as it may at first fight appear. The force of imagination, the energy of expression, the power of numbers, the charms of imitation; all these are naturally, of themfelves, delightful to the mind : And when the object prefented lays also hold of fome affection, the pleafure still rifes upon us, by the conversion of this fubordinate movement into that which is predominant. The passion, though, perhaps, naturally, and when ex-. cited by the fimple appearance of a real object, it may be painful; yet is fo fmoothed, and foftened, and mollified, when raifed by the finer arts, that it affords the highest entertainment.

To confirm this reasoning, we may observe, that if the movements of the imagination be not predominant above those of the passion, a contrary effect follows; and the former, being now subordinate, is converted into the latter, and still farther encreases the pain and affliction of the sufferer.

Who could ever think of it as a good expedient for comforting an afflicted parent, to exaggerate, with all the force of elocution, the irreparable lofs, which he has met with by the death of a favourite child ? The more power of imagination and expression you here employ, the more you encrease his despair and affliction.

NICOMACHI, MEDEAM TIMOMACHI, & quam diximus VENEREM ASELLIS, in majori admiratione esse quam perfecta. Quippe in ile lineamenta reliqua, ipfæque cogitationes artificum spectrutur, atque in lenochio commendationis dolor est manus, cum id ageret, extinctæ. Lib. xxxv. esp. Es.

Digitized by Google

The

Of TRAGEDY.

The fhame, confusion, and terror of VERRES, no doubt, role in proportion to the noble eloquence and vehemence of CICERO: So also did his pain and uneafiness. These former passions were too strong for the pleafure arising from the beauties of elocution; and operated, though from the fame principle, yet in a contrary manner, to the fympathy, compassion, and indignation of the audience.

Lord CLARENDON, when he approaches towards the cataftrophe of the royal party, fuppofes, that his narration must then become infinitely difagreeable; and he hurries over the king's death, without giving us one circumftance of it. He confiders it as too horrid a fcene to be contemplated with any fatisfaction, or even without the utmost pain and averfion. He himfelf, as well as the readers of that age, were too deeply concerned in the events, and felt a pain from fubjects, which an biftorian and a reader of another age would regard as the most pathetic and most interesting, and, by confequence, the most agreeable.

An action, reprefented in tragedy, may be too bloody and atrocious. It may excite fuch movements of horror as will not foften into pleafure; and the greatest energy of expression, bestowed on descriptions of that nature, ferves only to augment our uneafines. Such is that action represented in the Ambitious Stepmother, where a venerable old man, raifed to the height of fury and despair, rushes against a pillar, and striking his head upon it, bestmears it all over with mingled brains and gore. The ENGLISH theatre abounds too much with such shocking images.

Even the common fentiments of compaffion require to be fostened by fome agreeable affection, in order to give a thorough fatisfaction to the audience. The mere fuf-

Digitized by Google

fering

fering of plaintive virtue, under the triumphant tyranny and oppreffion of vice, forms a difagreeable spectacle; and is carefully avoided by all masters of the drama. In order to difmifs the audience with entire fatisfaction and contentment, the virtue must either convert itself into a noble courageous despair, or the vice receive its proper punishment.

Most painters appear in this light to have been very unhappy in their subjects. As they wrought much for churches and convents, they have chiefly reptatented fuch horrible subjects as crucifixions and martyrdoms, where nothing appears but tortures, wounds, executions, and passive suffering, without any action or affection, When they turned their pencil from this ghastly mythology, they had commonly recourse to OVID, whole fictions, though passionate and agreeable, are fearcely natural or probable enough for painting.

The fame invertion of that principle, which is here infifted on, displays itself in common life, as in the effects of oratory and poetry. Raife fo the subordinate passion that it becomes the predominant, it swallows up that affection which it before nourished and encreased. Too much jealous extinguishes love: Too much difficulty renders us indifferent: Too much fickness and infirmity digusts a felfish and unkind parent.

What fo difagreeable as the difmal, gloomy, difaftrous ftories, with which melancholy people entertain their companions? The uneafy paffion being there raifed alone, unaccompanied with any fpirit, genius, or eloquence, conveys a pure uneafinefs, and is attended with nothing that can foften it into pleafure or fatisfaction. 4

(241.)

ESSAY XXIII.

Of the STANDARD of TASTS.

THE great variety of Tafte, as well as of opinion, which prevails in the world, is too obvious not to have fallen under every one's observation. Men of the most confined knowledge are able to remark a difference of tafte in the narrow circle of their acquaintance, even where the perfons have been educated under the fame government, and have early imbibed the fame prejudices. But those, who can enlarge their view to contemplate diffant nations and remote ages, are still more furprifed at the great inconfiftence and contrariety. We are apt to call barbarous whatever departs widely from our own tafte and apprehension : But soon find the epithet of reproach retorted on us. And the higheft arrogance and felf-conceit is at last startled, on observing an equal affurance on all fides, and foruples, amidft fuch a contest of fentiment, to pronounce positively in its own favour.

As this variety of taffe is obvious to the most carelefs enquirer; fo will it be found, on examination, to be ftill greater in reality than in appearance. The fentiments of men often differ with regard to beauty and deformity of all kinds, even while their general difcourfe is the fame. There are certain terms in every language, which import blame, and others praife; and all men, who ufe the Vor. I. R fame fame tongue, must agree in their application of them. Every voice is united in applauding elegance, propriety, fimplicity, fipirit in writing; and in blaming fustian, affectation, coldnefs, and a falfe brilliancy: But when critics come to particulars, this feeming unanimity vanishes; and it is found, that they had affixed a very different meaning to their expressions. In all matters of opinion and science, the case is opposite: The difference among men is there oftener found to lie in generals than in particulars; and to be less in reality than in appearance. An explanation of the terms commonly ends the controversy; and the disputants are supprised to find, that they had been quarrelling, while at bottom they agreed in their judgment.

 $\mathbf{E} \quad \mathbf{E} \quad \mathbf{S} \quad \mathbf{S} \quad \mathbf{A} \quad \mathbf{Y} \quad \mathbf{X} \mathbf{X} \mathbf{I} \mathbf{I} \mathbf{I}.$

Those who found morality on sentiment, more than on reason, are inclined to comprehend ethics under the Former observation, and to maintain, that, in all queftions, which regard conduct and manners, the difference among men is really greater than at first fight it appears. It is indeed obvious, that writers of all nations and all ages concur in applauding justice, humanity, magnanimity, prudence, veracity; and in blaming the oppofite qualities. Even poets and other authors, whole compositions are chiefly calculated to pleafe the imagination, are yet found, from HOMER down to FENELON, to inculcate the fame moral precepts, and to befrow their applaufe and blame on the fame virtues and vices. This great unanimity is ufually afcribed to the influence of plain reafon; which, in all these cases, maintains similar sentiments in all men, and prevents those controversies, to which the abstract sciences are fo much expesed. So far as the unanimity is real, this account may be admitted as fatiffactory: But we must also allow, that some part of the seeming harmony in morals may be accounted for from the very very nature of language. The word virtue, with its equivalent in every tongues implies praise; as that of vice does blame: And no one, without the most obvious and groffeft impropriety, could affix reproach to a term, which in general acceptation is underftood in a good fenfe; or bestow applause, where the idiom requires disapprobation. HOMER's general precepts, where he delivers any fuch. will never be controverted; but it is obvious, that, when he draws particular pictures of manners, and reprefents heroism in ACHILLES and prudence in ULYSSES, he intermixes a much greater degree of ferocity in the former, and of cunning and fraud in the latter, than FENELON would admit of. The fage ULYSSES in the GREEK poct feems to delight in lies and fictions, and often employs them without any necessity or even advantage : But his more fcrupulous fon, in the FRENCH epic writer, exposes himfelf to the most imminent perils, rather than depart from the most exact line of truth and veracity.

Of the STANDARD of TASTE.

The admirers and followers of the ALCORAN infift on the excellent moral precepts intersperied throughout that wild and abfurd performance. But it is to be supposed, that the ARABIC words, which correspond to the ENG-LISH, equity, justice, temperance, meekness, charity, were such as, from the constant use of that tongue, must always be taken in a good fenfe; and it would have argued the greatest ignorance, not of morals, but of language, to have mentioned them with any epithets, belides those of applause and approbation. But would we know, whether the pretended prophet had really attained a just fentiment of morals? Let us attend to his narration; and we thall foon find, that he bestows praise on fuch inftances of treachery, inhumanity, cruelty, revenge, bigotry, as are utterly incompatible with civilized fociety. No fleady rule of right feems there to be attended R 2 tended to; and every action is blamed or praifed, to far only as it is beneficial or hurtful to the true believers.

Digitized by Google

144 ESSAY XXIII.

The merit of delivering true general precepts in ethics is indeed very fmall. Whoever recommends any moral virtues, really does no more than is implied in the terms themfelves. That people, who invented the word charity, and ufed it in a good fenfe, inculcated more clearly and much more efficacioufly, the precept, be charitable, than any pretended legislator or prophet, who fhould infert fuch a maxim in his writings. Of all exprefiions, thofe, which, together with their other meaning, imply a degree either of blame or approbation, are the least liable to be perverted or miftaken.

It is natural for us to feek a Standard of Tafle; a rule, by which the various fentiments of men may be reconciled; at leaft, a decision afforded, confirming one fentiment, and condemning another.

There is a species of philosophy, which cuts off all hopes of fuccels in fuch an attempt, and reprefents the impoffibility of ever attaining any ftandard of tafte. The difference, it is faid, is very wide between judgment and fentiment. All sentiment is right; because sentiment has a reference to nothing beyond itfelf, and is always real, wherever a man is confcious of it. But all determinations of the understanding are not right; becaufe they have a reference to fomething beyond themfelves, to wit, real matter of fact; and are not always conformable to that flandard. Among a thousand different opinions which different men may entertain of the fame fubject, there is one, and but one, that is just and true; and the only difficulty is to fix and afcertain it. On the contrary, a thousand different fentiments, excited by the fame object, are all right: Becaufe no fentiment reprefents what is really in the object. It only marks a certain conformity or relation between the object and the organs or faculties of the mind; and if that conformity did not really exist, the sentiment could never possibly have being. Beauty is no quality in things themselves : It exifts merely in the mind which contemplates them; and each mind perceives a different beauty. One perfon may even perceive deformity, where another is fenfible ' of beauty; and every individual ought to acquiefce in his own fentiment, without pretending to regulate those of others. To feek the real beauty, or real deformity, is as fruitless an enquiry, as to pretend to afcertain the real fweet or real bitter. According to the disposition of the organs, the fame object may be both fweet and bitter: and the proverb has justly determined it to be fruitless to difpute concerning taftes. It is very natural, and even quite neceffary, to extend this axiom to mental, as well as bodily tafte; and thus common fenfe, which is fo often at variance with philosophy, especially with the fceptical kind, is found, in one inftance at least, to agree in pronouncing the fame decifion.

Digitized by Google

But though this axiom, by paffing into a proverb, feems to have attained the fanction of common fenfe; there is certainly a fpecies of common fenfe which oppofes it, at leaft ferves to modify and reftrain it. Whoever would affert an equality of genius and elegance between OGILBY and MILTON, or BUNYAN and ADDISON, would be thought to defend no lefs an extravagance, than if he had maintained a mole-hill to be as high as TENERIFFE, or a pond as extensive as the ocean. Though there may be found perfons, who give the preference to the former authors; no one pays attention to fuch a taffe; and we pronounce, without fcruple, the fentiment of these pretended critics to be abfurd and ridiculous, The principle of the natural equality of taftes is then totally forgot, and while we admit it on fome occasions, where the objects feem near an equality, it appears an extravagant paradox, or rather a palpable abfurdity, where objects so disproportioned are compared together.

R 3

is

It is evident that none of the rules of composition are fixed by reasonings a priori, or can be esteemed abstract conclusions of the understanding, from comparing those habitudes and relations of ideas, which are eternal and immutable. Their foundation is the fame with that of all the practical fciences, experience; nor are they any thing but general observations, concerning what has been univerfally found to pleafe in all countries and in all ages. Many of the beauties of poetry, and even of eloquence, are founded on falsehood and fiction, on hyperboles, metaphors, and an abule or perversion of terms from their natural meaning. To check the fallies of the imagination, and to reduce every expression to geometrical truth and exactness, would be the most contrary to the laws of criticism: because it would produce a work, which, by universal experience, has been found the most infipid and difagreeable. But though poetry can never fubmit to exact truth, it must be confined by rules of art, difcovered to the author either by genius or observation. If fome negligent or irregular writers have pleafed, they have not pleafed by their transgreffions of rule or order, but in spite of these transgressions: They have possessed other beauties, which were conformable to just criticism; and the force of these beauties has been able to overpower cenfure, and give the mind a fatisfaction fuperior to the difguft arising from the blemishes. ARIOSTO pleafes; but not by his monftrous and improbable fictions, by his bizarre mixture of the ferious and comic flyles, by the want of coherence in his flories, or bv by the continual interruptions of his narration. He charms by the force and clearnefs of his expression, by the readine's and variety of his inventions, and by his natural pictures of the paffions, especially those of the gay and amorous kind: And however his faults may diminish our fatisfaction, they are not able entirely to destroy it. Did our pleasure really arise from those parts of his poem, which we denominate faults, this would be no objection to criticism in general: It would only be an objection to those particular rules of criticism, which would establish fuch circumstances to be faults. and would represent them as universally blameable. If they are found to pleafe, they cannot be faults; let the pleafure, which they produce, be ever fo unexpected and unaccountable.

But though all the general rules of art are founded only on experience, and on the observation of the common fentiments of human nature, we must not imagine, that, on every occasion, the feelings of men will be conformable to these rules. Those finer emotions of the mind are of a very tender and delicate nature, and require the concurrence of many favourable circumstances to make them play with facility and exactness, according to their general and established principles. The least exterior hindrance to fuch finall fprings, or the leaft internal diforder, diffurbs their motion, and confounds the operation of the whole machine. When we would make an experiment of this nature, and would try the force of any beauty or deformity, we must choose with care a proper time and place, and bring the fancy to a fuitable fituation and disposition. A perfect ferenity of mind, a recollection of thought, a due attention to the object; if any of these circumstances be wanting, our experiment will be fallacious, fallacious, and we shall be unable to judge of the catholic and universal beauty. The relation, which nature has placed between the form and the sentiment, will at least be more obscure; and it will require greater accuracy to trace and discern it. We shall be able to ascertain its influence, not so much from the operation of each particular beauty, as from the durable admiration, which attends those works, that have survived all the caprices of mode and fashion, all the mistakes of ignorance and envy.

R 1

Digitized by Google

The fame HOMER, who pleased at ATHENS and ROME two thousand years ago, is still admired at PARIS and at LONDON. All the changes of climate, government, religion, and language, have not been able to obscure his glory. Authority or prejudice may give a temporary vogue to a bad poet or orator; but his reputation will never be durable or general. When his compolitions are examined by posterity or by foreigners, the enchantment is diffipated, and his faults appear in their true colours. On the contrary, a real genius, the longer his works endure, and the more wide they are fpread, the more fincere is the admiration which he meets with. Envy and jealoufy have too much place in a narrow circle; and even familiar acquaintance with his perfon may diminifh the applause due to his performances: But when these obstructions are removed, the beauties, which are naturally fitted to excite agreeable fentiments, immediately difplay their energy; and while the world endures, they maintain their authority over the minds of men.

It appears then, that, amidft all the variety and caprice of tafte, there are certain general principles of approbation or blame, whole influence a careful eye may trace in all operations of the mind. Some particular forms or qualities, from the original ftructure of the internal fabric, bric, are calculated to pleafe, and others to difpleafe : and if they fail of their effect in any particular inftance, it is from fome apparent defect or imperfection in the organ. A man in a fever would not infift on his palate as able to decide concerning flavours; nor would one, affected with the jaundice, pretend to give a verdict with regard to colours. In each creature, there is a found and a defective ftate; and the former alone can be fuppoled to afford us a true standard of taste and sentiment. If, in the found state of the organ, there be an entire or a confiderable uniformity of fentiment among men, we may thence derive an idea of the perfect beauty; in like manner as the appearance of objects in day-light, to the eye of a man in health, is denominated their true and real colour, even while colour is allowed to be merely a phantafm of the fenfes.

Digitized by Google

Many and frequent are the defects in the internal organs, which prevent or weaken the influence of those general principles, on which depends our fentiment of beauty or deformity. Though fome objects, by the ftructure of the mind, be naturally calculated to give pleasure, it is not to be expected, that in every individual the pleasure will be equally felt. Particular incidents and fituations occur, which either throw a false light on the objects, or hinder the true from conveying to the imagination the proper fentiment and perception.

One obvious caufe, why many feel not the proper fentiment of beauty, is the want of that delicacy of imagination, which is requifite to convey a fenfibility of those finer emotions. This delicacy every one pretends to: Every one talks of it; and would reduce every kind of tafte or fentiment to its flandard. But as our intention in this effay is to mingle fome light of the underftanding ftanding with the feelings of fentiment, it will be proper to give a more accurate definition of delicacy, than has hitherto been attempted. And not to draw our philosophy from too profound a fource, we shall have recourse to a noted ftory in DON QUIXOTE.

Digitized by Google

It is with good reafon, fays SANCHO to the fquire with the great nofe, that I pretend to have a judgment in wine : This is a quality hereditary in our family. Two of my kinimen were once called to give their opinion of a hogshead, which was supposed to be excellent, being old and of a good vintage. One of them taftes it : confiders it : and after mature reflection pronounces the wine to be good, were it not for a finiall tafte of leather, which he perceived in it. The other, after using the fame precautions, gives also his verdict in favour of the wine; but with the referve of a tafte of iron, which he could eafily diftinguish. You cannot imagine how much they were both ridiculed for their judgment. But who laughed in the end? On emptying the hogfhead, there was found at the bottom, an old key with a leathern thong tied to it.

The great refemblance between mental and bodily tafte will eafily teach us to apply this flory. Though it be certain, that beauty and deformity, more than fweet and bitter, are not qualities in objects, but belong entirely to the fentiment, internal or external; it muft be allowed, that there are certain qualities in objects, which are fitted by nature to produce those particular feelings. Now as these qualities may be found in a small degree, or may be mixed and confounded with each other, it often happens, that the taste is not affected with fuch minute qualities, or is not able to diffinguish all the particular flavours, amids the diforder in which they are prefented.

prefented. Where the organs are fo fine, as to allow nothing to escape them; and at the fame time fo exact. as to perceive every ingredient in the composition : This we call delicacy of tafte, whether we employ these terms in the literal or metaphorical fense. Here then the general rules of beauty are of use; being drawn from established models, and from the observation of what pleafes or difpleafes, when prefented fingly and in a high degree : And if the same qualities, in a continued compolition and in a smaller degree, affect not the organs with a fenfible delight or uneafinefs, we exclude the perfon from all pretentions to this delicacy. To produce these general rules or avowed patterns of composition, is like finding the key with the leathern thong; which justified the verdict of SANCHO's kinfmen, and confounded those pretended judges who had condemned them. Though the hogfhead had never been emptied, the tafte of the one was still equally delicate, and that of the other equally dull and languid: But it would have been more difficult to have proved the fuperiority of the former, to the conviction of every by-ftander. In like manner, though the beauties of writing had never been methodized, or reduced to general principles; though no excellent models had ever been acknowledged; the different degrees of tafte would still have fublished, and the judgment of one man been preferable to that of another; but it would not have been fo eafy to filence the bad critic, who might always infift upon his particular fentiment, and refuse to submit to his antagonist. But when we flow him an avowed principle of art; when we illustrate this principle by examples, whole operation, from his own particular tafte, he acknowledges to be comformable to the principle; when we prove, that the same principle may be applied to the prefent cafe, where where he did not perceive or feel its influence: He muft conclude, upon the whole, that the fault lies in himfelf, and that he wants the delicacy, which is requisite to make him fensible of every beauty and every blemiss, in any composition or difcourse.

It is acknowledged to be the perfection of every fenfe or faculty, to perceive with exactness its most minute objects, and allow nothing to escape its notice and obser-The fmaller the objects are, which become vation. fenfible to the eye, the finer is that organ, and the more elaborate its make and composition. A good palate is not tried by ftrong flavours; but by a mixture of imall ingredients, where we are still fensible of each part, notwithstanding its minuteness and its confusion with the reft. In like manner a quick and acute perception of beauty and deformity must be the perfection of our mental tafte; nor can a man be fatisfied with himfelf while he fuspects, that any excellence or blemish in a discourse has paffed him unobferved. In this cafe, the perfection of the man, and the perfection of the fenfe or feeling, are found to be united. A very delicate palate, on many occasions, may be a great inconvenience both to a man himfelf and to his friends, But a delicate tafte of wit or beauty must always be a defirable quality; because it is the fource of all the finest and most innocent enjoyments, of which human nature is fusceptible. In this decision the fentiments of all mankind are agreed. Wherever you can ascertain a delicacy of tafte, it is fure to meet with approbation; and the beft way of afcertaining it is to appeal to those models and principles, which have been established by the uniform confent and experience of nations and ages.

But though there be naturally a wide difference in point of delicacy between one perfon and another, 6 nothing nothing tends further to encrease and improve this talent. than practice in a particular art, and the frequent furvey or contemplation of a particular species of beauty. When objects of any kind are first prefented to the eve or imagination, the fentiment, which attends them, is obscure and confused; and the mind is, in a great measure, incapable of pronouncing concerning their merits or defects. The talke cannot perceive the leveral excellencies of the performance; much lefs diffinguish the particular character of each excellency, and afcertain its quality and degree. If it pronounce the whole in general to be beautiful or deformed, it is the utmost that can be expected; and even this judgment, a perfon, fo unpractifed, will be apt to deliver with great hefitation and referve. But allow him to acquire experience in those objects, his feeling becomes more exact and nice : He not only perceives the beauties and defects of each part, but marks the diffinguishing species of each quality, and affigns it fuitable praife or blame. A clear and diffinct fentiment attends him through the whole furvey of the objects; and he differns that very degree and kind of approbation or difpleafure, which each part is naturally fated to produce. The mift diffipates, which feemed formerly to hang over the object : The organ acquires greater perfection in its operations; and can pronounce. without danger of miftake, concerning the merits of every performance. In a word, the fame address and dexterity, which practice gives to the execution of any work, is also acquired by the fame means, in the judging of it.

Digitized by Google

So advantageous is practice to the difcernment of beauty, that, before we can give judgment on any work of importance, it will even be requifite, that that very individual performance be more than once perufed by as, and

Digitized by Google

and be furveyed in different lights with attention and deliberation. There is a flutter or hurry of thought which attends the first perufal of any piece, and which confounds the genuine fentiment of beauty. The relation of the parts is not difcerned: The true characters of ftyle are little diffinguished: The feveral perfections and defects feem wrapped up in a species of confusion, and prefent themselves indistinctly to the imagination. Not to mention, that there is a species of beauty, which, as it is florid and superficial, pleases at first; but being found incompatible with a just expression either of reason or passion, foon palls upon the taste, and is then rejected with difdain, at least rated at a much lower value.

It is impossible to continue in the practice of contemplating any order of beauty, without being frequently obliged to form comparisons between the feveral species and degrees of excellence, and effimating their proportion to each other. A man, who has had no opportunity of comparing the different kinds of beauty, is indeed totally unqualified to pronounce an opinion with regard to any object prefented to him. By comparison alone we fix the epithets of praise or blame, and learn how to affign the due degree of each. The coarfest daubing contains a certain luftre of colours and exactness of imitation. which are fo far beauties, and would affect the mind of a peafant or Indian with the highest admiration. The most vulgar ballads are not entirely destitute of harmony or nature : and none but a perfon, familiarized to superior beauties, would pronounce their numbers harfh, or narration uninteresting. A great inferiority of beauty gives pain to a perfon converfant in the higheft excellence of the kind, and is for that reason pronounced a deformity: As the most finished object, with which we are acquainted, is naturally supposed to have reached the pinnacle pinnacle of perfection, and to be entitled to the higheft applaufe. One accuftomed to fee, and examine, and weigh the feveral performances, admired in different ages and nations, can alone rate the merits of a work exhibited to his view, and affign its proper rank among the productions of genius.

Digitized by Google

But to enable a critic the more fully to execute this undertaking, he must preferve his mind free from all prejudice, and allow nothing to enter into his confideration, but the very object which is submitted to his exami-We may observe, that every work of art, in nation. order to produce its due effect on the mind, must be furveyed in a certain point of view, and cannot be fully relished by persons, whose situation, real or imaginary, is not conformable to that which is required by the performance. An orator addreffes himfelf to a particular audience, and must have a regard to their particular genius, interests, opinions, passions, and prejudices; otherwise he hopes in vain to govern their refolutions, and inflame their affections. Should they even have entertained fome preposieflions against him, however unreasonable, he must not overlook this disadvantage; but, before he enters upon the fubject, must endeavour to conciliate their affection, and acquire their good graces. A critic of a different age or nation, who should peruse this discourse, must have all these circumstances in his eye, and must place himself in the same situation as the audience, in order to form a true judgment of the ora-In like manner, when any work is addreffed to tion. the public, though I should have a friendship or enmity with the author, I must depart from this fituation; and confidering myfelf as a man in general, forget, if poffible, my individual being and my peculiar circumftances. A perfon influenced by prejudice, complies not with this this condition; but obstinately maintains his natural polition, without placing himfelf in that point of view, which the performance supposes. If the work he addreffed to perfons of a different age or nation, he makes no allowance for their peculiar views and prejudices; but, full of the manners of his own age and country, rafhly condemns what feemed admirable in the eyes of those for whom alone the discourse was calculated. If the work be executed for the public, he never fufficiently enlarges his comprehension, or forgets his interest as a friend or enemy, as a rival or commentator. By this means, his fentiments are perverted; nor have the fame beauties and blemishes the fame influence upon him, as if he had imposed a proper violence on his imagination, and had forgotten himfelf for a moment. So far his tafte evidently departs from the true standard; and of confequence loses all credit and authority.

It is well known, that in all questions, submitted to the understanding, prejudice is destructive of found judgment, and perverts all operations of the intellectual faculties : It is no lefs contrary to good tafte ; nor has it lefs influence to corrupt our fentiment of beauty. Τŕ belongs to good fenfe to check its influence in both cafes ; and in this refpect, as well as in many others, reason, if not an effential part of tafte, is at least requisite to the operations of this latter faculty. In all the nobler productions of genius, there is a mutual relation and correspondence of parts; nor can either the beauties or blemishes be perceived by him, whose thought is not capacious enough to comprehend all those parts, and compare them with each other, in order to perceive the confistence and uniformity of the whole. Every work of art has alfo a certain end or purpofe, for which it is calculated ; and is to be deemed more or lefs perfect, as it is

256

Digitized by Google

is more or lefs fitted to attain this end. The object of eloquence is to perfuade, of hiftory to inftruct, of poetry to pleafe, by means of the paffions and the imagination. These ends we must carry constantly in our view, when we peruse any performance; and we must be able to judge how far the means employed are adapted to their respective purposes. Besides, every kind of composition, even the most poetical, is nothing but a chain of propofitions and reasonings; not always, indeed, the justeft and most exact, but still plausible and specious, however difguifed by the colouring of the imagination. The perfons introduced in tragedy and epic poetry, muft be reprefented as reafoning, and thinking, and concluding, and acting, fuitably to their character and circumstances; and without judgment, as well as tafte and invention; a poet can never hope to fucceed in fo delicate an undertaking. Not to mention, that the fame excellence of faculties which contributes to the improvement of reafon, the fame clearnels of conception, the fame exactnels of diffinction, the fame vivacity of apprehension, are effential to the operations of true tafte, and are its infallible concomitants. It feldom, or never happens, that a man v of fenfe, who has experience in any art, cannot judge of its beauty; and it is no lefs rare to meet with a man who has a just taste without a found understanding.

Thus, though the principles of taffe be univerfal, and nearly, if not entirely the fame in all men; yet few are qualified to give judgment on any work of art, or effablifh their own fentiment as the ftandard of beauty. The organs of internal fenfation are feldom fo perfect as to allow the general principles their full play, and produce a feeling correspondent to those principles. They either labour under fome defect, or are vitiated by fome diforder; and by that means, excite a fentiment, which may Vol. I. S be be pronounced erroneous. When the critic has no delicacy, he judges without any diffinction, and is only affected by the groffer and more palpable qualities of the object : The finer touches pass unnoticed and difregarded. Where he is not aided by practice, his verdict is attended with confusion and hesitation. Where no comparison has been employed, the most frivolous beauties, such as rather merit the name of defects, are the object of his Where he lies under the influence of preadmiration. judice. all his natural fentiments are perverted. Where good fense is wanting, he is not qualified to discern the beauties of defign and reafoning, which are the higheft and most excellent. Under some or other of these imperfections, the generality of men labour; and hence a true judge in the finer arts is observed, even during the most polified ages, to be fo rare a character: Strong fenfe, united to delicate fentiment, improved by practice, perfected by comparison, and cleared of all prejudice. can alone entitle critics to this valuable character; and the joint verdict of fuch, wherever they are to be found, is the true standard of taste and beauty.

Digitized by Google

E S S A Y XXIII.

But where are fuch critics to be found? By what marks are they to be known? How diffinguish them from pretenders? These questions are embarrassing; and seem to throw us back into the same uncertainty, from which, during the course of this essay, we have endeavoured to extricate ourselves.

But if we confider the matter aright, these are questions of fact, not of fentiment. Whether any particular perfon be endowed with good fense and a delicate imagination, free from prejudice, may often be the subject of dispute, and be liable to great discussion and enquiry: But that such a character is valuable and estimable will be agreed in by all mankind. Where these doubts occur, men can do no more than in other disputable questions, which which are fubmitted to the underftanding: They muft produce the heft arguments, that their invention fuggefts to them; they muft acknowledge a true and decifive ftandard to exift fomewhere, to wit, real exiftence and matter of fact; and they muft have indulgence to fuch as differ from them in their appeals to this ftandard. It is fufficient for our prefent purpofe, if we have proved, 'that the tafte of all individuals is not upon an equal footing, and that fome men in general, however difficult to be particularly pitched upon, will be acknowledged by univerfal fentiment to have a preference above others.

Digitized by Google

But in reality the difficulty of finding, even in particulars, the standard of taste, is not fo great as it is re-Though in fpeculation, we may readily avow prefented. a certain criterion in fcience, and deny it in fentiment, the matter is found in practice to be much more hard to afcertain in the former cafe than in the latter. Theories . of abstract philosophy, fystems of profound theology, have prevailed during one age: In a fucceffive period, thefe have been univerfally exploded : Their abfurdity has been detected : Other theories and fyftems have fupplied their place, which again gave place to their fucceffors: And nothing has been experienced more liable to the revolutions of chance and fashion than these pretended decisions of science. The case is not the same with the beauties of eloquence and poetry. Juft expreffions of paffion and nature are fure, after a little time, togain public applaufe, which they maintain for ever. ARI-STOTLE, and PLATO, and EPICURUS, and DESCARTES, may fucceffively yield to each other : But TERENCE and -VIRGIL maintain an universal, undisputed empire over the minds of men. The abstract philosophy of CICERO has loft its credit : The vehemence of his oratory is ftill the object of our admiration.

Though

· Digitized by Google

259

E S S A Y XXIIIP

Though men of delicate tafte be rare, they are eafily to be diffinguished in fociety, by the foundness of their understanding, and the superiority of their faculties above The afcendant, which they the reft of mankind. acquire, gives a prevalence to that lively approbation, with which they receive any productions of genius, and renders it generally predominant. Many men, when left to themfelves, have but a faint and dubious perception of beauty, who yet are capable of relifning any fine ftroke which is pointed out to them. Every convert to the admiration of the real poet or orator is the caufe of fome new conversion. And though prejudices may prevail for a time, they never unite in celebrating any rival to the true genius, but yield at laft to the force of nature and just fentiment. Thus, though a civilized nation may eafily be miftaken in the choice of their admired philosopher, they never have been found long to err, in their affection for a favourite epic or tragic author.

But notwithstanding all our endeavours to fix a standard of tafte, and reconcile the difcordant apprehenfions of men, there still remain two fources of variation, which are not fufficient indeed to confound all the boundaries of beauty and deformity, but will often ferve to produce a difference in the degrees of our approbation or blame. The one is the different humours of particular men; the other, the particular manners and opinions of our age and country. The general principles of tafte are uniform in human nature : Where men vary in their judgments, fome defect or perversion in the faculties may commonly be remarked; proceeding either from prejudice, from want of practice, or want of delicacy : and there is just reason for approving one taste, and condemning another. But where there is fuch a diverfity in the internal frame or external fituation as is entirely blamelefs

on

Digitized by Google

on both fides, and leaves no room to give one the preference above the other; in that cafe, a certain degree of diversity in judgment is unavoidable, and we feek in vain for a ftandard, by which we can reconcile the contrary fentiments.

A young man, whole paffions are warm, will be more fenfibly touched with amorous and tender images, than a man more advanced in years, who takes pleafure in wife, philosophical reflections concerning the conduct of life and moderation of the paffions. At twenty, OVID may be the favourite author; HORACE at forty; and perhaps TACITUS at fifty. Vainly would we, in fuch cafes, endeavour to enter into the fentiments of others, and divest ourselves of those propensities, which are natural to us. We choose our favourite author as we do our friend, from a conformity of humour and difpolition. Mirth or passion, sentiment or reflection; whichever of these most predominates in our temper, it gives us a peculiar fympathy with the writer who refembles us.

One perfon is more pleafed with the fublime; another with the tender; a third with raillery. One has a ftrong fenfibility to blemishes, and is extremely studious of correctnefs: Another has a more lively feeling of beauties, and pardons twenty abfurdities and defects for one elevated or pathetic ftroke. The ear of this man is entirely turned towards concifeness and energy; that man is delighted with a copious, rich, and harmonious expref-Simplicity is affected by one; ornament by anofion. Comedy, tragedy, fatire, odes, have each its ther. partizans, who prefer that particular fpecies of writing to all others. It is plainly an error in a critic, to confine his approbation to one fpecies or ftyle of writing, and condemn all the reft. But it is almost impossible not to feel feel a predilection for that which fuits our particular turn and difpofition. Such preferences are innocent and unavoidable, and can never reafonably be the object of difpute, becaufe there is no ftandard, by which they can be decided.

Digitized by Google

For a like reafon, we are more pleafed, in the course of our reading, with pictures and characters that refemble · objects which are found in our own age or country, than with those which describe a different set of customs. It is not without fome effort, that we reconcile ourfelves to the fimplicity of ancient manners, and behold princeffes carrying water from the fpring, and kings and heroes dreffing their own victuals. We may allow in general, that the representation of fuch manners is no fault in the author, nor deformity in the piece; but we are not fo fenfibly touched with them. For this reafon, comedy is not eafily transferred from one age or nation to A FRENCHMAN OF ENGLISHMAN is not pleafed another. with the ANDRIA of TERENCE, or CLITIA of MACHIA-VEL ; where the fine lady, upon whom all the play turns, never once appears to the fpectators, but is always kept behind the scenes, fuitably to the referved humour of the ancient GREEKS and modern ITALIANS. A man of learning and reflection can make allowance for these peculiarities of manners; but a common audience can never divest themselves so far of their usual ideas and fentiments, as to relifh pictures which no wife refemble them.

But here there occurs a reflection, which may, perhaps, be useful in examining the celebrated controverfy concerning ancient and modern learning; where we often find the one fide excufing any feeming abfurdity in the ancients from the manners of the age, and the other refufing

Digitized by Google

refusing to admit this excuse, or at least admitting it only as an apology for the author, not for the performance. In my opinion, the proper boundaries in this fubject have feldom been fixed between the contending parties. Where any innocent peculiarities of manners are represented, fuch as those above mentioned, they ought certainly to be admitted; and a man, who is shocked with them, gives an evident proof of falfe delicacy and refinement. The poet's monument more durable than brass, must fall to the ground like common brick or clay, were men to make no allowance for the continual revolutions of manners and cuftoms, and would admit of nothing but what was fuitable to the prevailing fashion. Muft, we throw afide the pictures of our anceftors, becaufe of their ruffs and fardingales ? But where the ideas of morality and decency alter from one age to another, and where vicious manners are defcribed, without being marked with the proper characters of blame and difapprobation; this must be allowed to disfigure the poem, and to be a real deformity. I cannot, nor is it proper I fhould, enter into fuch fentiments; and however I may excufe the poet, on account of the manners of his age. I never can relish the composition. The want of humanity and of decency, fo confpicuous in the characters drawn by feveral of the ancient poets, even fometimes by Ho-MER and the GREEK tragedians, diminishes confiderably the merit of their noble performances, and gives modern authors an advantage over them. We are not interested in the fortunes and fentiments of fuch rough heroes: We are difpleafed to find the limits of vice and virtue fo much confounded : And whatever indulgence we may give to the writer on account of his prejudices, we cannot prevail on ourfelves to enter into his fentiments, or bear an affection affection to characters, which we plainly discover to be blameable.

S 4

Digitized by Google

The cafe is not the fame with moral principles, as with fpeculative opinions of any kind. Thefe are in continual flux and revolution. The fon embraces a different fystem from the father. Nay, there fcarcely is any man, who can boast of great constancy and uniformity in this particular. Whatever speculative errors may be found in the polite writings of any age or country, they detract but little from the value of those compofitions. There needs but a certain turn of thought or imagination to make us enter into all the opinions, which then prevailed, and relifh the fentiments or conclusions But a very violent effort is requisite derived from them. to change our judgment of manners, and excite fentiments of approbation or blame, love or hatred, different from those to which the mind from long cuftom has been familiarized. And where a man is confident of the rectitude of that moral standard, by which he judges, he is justly jealous of it, and will not pervert the fentiments of his heart for a moment, in complaifance to any writer whatfoever.

Of all fpeculative errors, thofe, which regard religion, are the moft excutable in compositions of genius; nor is it ever permitted to judge of the civility or wisdom of any people, or even of fingle perfons, by the groffnefs or refinement of their theological principles. The fame good fenfe, that directs men in the ordinary occurrences of life, is not hearkened to in religious matters, which are fupposed to be placed altogether above the cognizance of human reason. On this account, all the abfurdities of the pagan fystem of theology must be overlooked by every critic, who would pretend to form a just notion of ancient poetry; and our posterity, in their turn, must have have the fame indulgence to their forefathers. No religious principles can ever be imputed as a fault to any poet, while they remain merely principles, and take not fuch ftrong possession of his heart, as to lay him under the imputation of bigotry or fuperstition. Where that happens, they confound the fentiments of morality, and alter the natural boundaries, of vice and virtue. They are therefore eternal blemiss, according to the principle above mentioned; nor are the prejudices and false opinions of the age fufficient to justify them.

265

It is effential to the ROMAN catholic religion to infpire a violent hatred of vevery other worship, and to represent all pagans, mahometans, and heretics, as the objects of divine wrath and vengeance. Such fentiments, though they are in reality very blameable, are confidered as virtues by the zealots of that communion, and are reprefented in their tragedies and epic poems as a kind of divine heroifm. This bigotry has disfigured two very fine tragedies of the FRENCH theatre, POLIEUCTE and ATHALIA; where an intemperate zeal for particular modes of worfhip is fet off with all the pomp imaginable. and forms the predominant character of the heroes. "What is this," fays the fublime JOAD to JOSABET. finding her in difcourse with MATHAN, the priest of BAAL, " Does the daughter of DAVID fpeak to this " traitor ? Are you not afraid, left the earth fhould " open and pour forth flames to devour you both ? Or, " left these holy walls should fall and crush you toge-" ther? What is his purpose? Why comes that enemy " of GOD hither to poifon the air, which we breathe " with his horrid prefence ?" Such fentiments are received with great applaufe on the theatre of PARIS; but at LONDON the fpectators would be full as much pleafed to hear ACHILLES tell AGAMEMNON, that he was a dog dog in his forehead, and a deer in his heart; or JUPITER threaten JUNO with a found drubbing, if fhe will not be quiet.

RELIGIOUS principles are also a blemish in any polite composition, when they rife up to superstition, and intrude themselves into every sentiment, however remote from any connection with religion. It is no excuse for the poet, that the customs of his country had burthened life with so many religious ceremonies and observances, that no part of it was exempt from that yoke. It must for ever be ridiculous in PETRARCH to compare his missers, LAURA, to JESUS CHRIST. Nor is it lefs ridiculous in that agreeable libertine, BOCCACE, very feriously to give thanks to GOD ALMIGHTY and the ladies, for their assistance in defending him against his enemics.

Google

E S S A Y S, MORAL, POLITICAL,

AND LITERARY.

PART II.*

* PUBLISHED in 1752.

Digitized by Google

(269)

ESSAY

Of COMMERCE.

T HE greater part of mankind may be divided inte two claffes; that of fhallow thinkers, who fall thort of the truth; and that of abstruse thinkers, who ge beyond it. The latter clafs are by far the most rare: and I may add, by far the most useful and valuable. They fuggest hints, at least, and start difficulties, which they want, perhaps, skill to purfue; but which may produce fine discoveries, when handled by men who have a more just way of thinking. At worst, what they fay is uncommon; and if it should cost fome pains to comprehend it, one has, however, the pleasure of hearing fomething that is new. An author is little to be valued, whe tells us nothing but what we can learn from every coffeehouse conversation.

All people of fballow thought are apt to decry even those of folid understanding, as abstruse thinkers, and metaphysicians, and refiners; and never will allow any thing to be just which is beyond their own weak conceptions. There are some cases, I own, where an extraordinary refinement affords a strong presumption of falsehood, and where no reasoning is to be trusted but what is natural and easy. When a man deliberates concerning his conduct in any particular affair, and forms schemes in politics.

· Digitized by Google

politics, trade, œconomy, or any business in life, he never ought to draw his arguments too fine, or connect too long a chain of confequences together. Something is fure to happen, that will difconcert his reafoning, and produce an event different from what he expected. But when we reason upon general subjects, one may justly affirm, that our speculations can scarcely ever be too fine. provided they be just; and that the difference between a common man and a man of genius, is chiefly feen in the shallowness or depth of the principles upon which they proceed. General reafonings feem intricate, merely becaufe they are general; nor is it eafy for the bulk of mankind to diffinguish, in a great number of particulars, that common circumftance in which they all agree, or to extract it, pure and unmixed, from the other fuperfluous circumstances. Every judgment or conclusion, with them, is particular. They cannot enlarge their view to those universal propositions, which comprehend under them an infinite number of individuals, and include a whole fcience in a fingle theorem. Their eye is confounded with fuch an extensive prospect; and the conclusions, derived from it, even though clearly expressed, feem intricate and obscure. But however intricate they may feem, it is certain, that general principles, if just and found, must always prevail in the general course of things, though they may fail in particular cases; and it is the chief bufiness of philosophers to regard the general course of things. I may add, that it is also the chief business of politicians; especially in the domestic government of the state, where the public good, which is, or ought to be their object, depends on the concurrence of a multitude of causes; not, as in foreign politics, on accidents and chances, and the caprices of a few perfons. This therefore makes the difference between particular deliberations and and general reafonings, and renders fubtility and refinement much more fuitable to the latter than to the former.

I thought this introduction neceffary before the following difcourfes on commerce, money, intereft, balance of trade, &c. where, perhaps, there will occur fome principles which are uncommon, and which may feem too refined and fubtile for fuch vulgar fubjects. If false, let them be rejected: But no one ought to entertain a prejudice against them, merely because they are out of the common road.

The greatness of a state, and the happiness of its subjects, how independent foever they may be supposed in fome refpects, are commonly allowed to be infeparable with regard to commerce; and as private men receive greater fecurity, in the poffeifion of their trade and riches, from the power of the public, fo the public becomes powerful in proportion to the opulence and extensive commerce of private men. This maxim is true in general; though I cannot forbear thinking, that it may peffibly admit of exceptions, and that we often eftablish it with too little referve and limitation. There may be fome circumstances, where the commerce and riches and luxury of individuals, inflead of adding firength to the public, will ferve only to thin its armies, and diminifh its authority among the neighbouring nations. Man is a very variable being, and fusceptible of many different opinions, principles, and rules of conduct. What may be true, while he adheres to one way of thinking, will be found false, when he has embraced an opposite fet of manners and opinions.

The bulk of every flate may be divided into bufbandmen and manufacturers. The former are employed in the culture of the land; the latter works up the materials furnished ESSAY I.

furnished by the former, into all the commodities which are neceffary or ornamental to human life. As soon as men quit their favage state, where they live chiefly by hunting and fishing, they must fall into these two classes; though the arts of agriculture employ at first the most numerous part of the society. Time and experience improve so much these arts, that the land may easily maintain a much greater number of men, than those who are immediately employed in its culture, or who furnish the more necessary manufactures to such as are so employed.

If these superfluous hands apply themselves to the finer arts, which are commonly denominated the arts of luxury, they add to the happinels of the ftate; fince they afford to many the opportunity of receiving enjoyments, with which they would otherwife have been unacquainted. But may not another scheme be proposed for the employment of these superfluous hands? May not the sovereign lay claim_to them, and employ them in fleets and armies. to encrease the dominions of the state abroad, and spread its fame over diftant nations? It is certain that the fewer defires and wants are found in the proprietors and labourers of land, the fewer hands do they employ; and confequently the fuperfluities of the land, inflead of maintaining tradefmen and manufacturers, may support fleets and armies to a much greater extent, than where a great many arts are required to minister to the luxury

• Monf. MELON, in his political effay on commerce, afferts, that even at prefent, if you divide FRANCE into 20 parts, 16 are labourers of peafants; two only artizans; one belonging to the law, church, and military; and one inerchants, financiers, and bourgeois. This calculation is certainly very erroneous. In FRANCE, ENGLAND, and indeed moft parts of EUROPE, half of the inhabitants live in cities; and even of those who live in the sountry, a great number are artizans, perhaps above a third.

Digitized by Google

of

Of COMMERCE.

of particular perfons. Here therefore feems to be a kind of oppofition between the greatness of the flate and the happiness of the subject. A state is never greater than when all its superfluous hands are employed in the fervice of the public. The ease and convenience of private perfons require, that these hands should be employed in their fervice. The one can never be fatisfied but at the expense of the other. As the ambition of the fovereign must entrench on the luxury of individuals; fo the luxury of individuals must diminish the force, and check the ambition, of the fovereign.

Nor is this reasoning merely chimerical; but is founded on hiftory and experience. The republic of SPARTA was certainly more powerful than any flate now in the world, confifting of an equal number of people ; and this was owing entirely to the want of commerce and luxury. The HELOTES were the labourers: The SPARTANS were the foldiers or gentlemen. It is evident, that the labour of the HELOTES could not have maintained for great a number of SPARTANS, had thefe latter lived in ease and delicacy, and given employment to a great variety of trades and manufactures. The like policy may be remarked in ROME. And, indeed, throughout all ancient hiftory, it is observable, that the smallest republics raifed and maintained greater armies, than flates, confifting of triple the number of inhabitants, are able to fupport at prefent. It is computed, that, in all EURO-PEAN nations, the proportion between foldiers and people does not exceed one to a hundred. But we read, that the city of ROME alone, with its fmall territory, raifed and maintained, in early times, ten legions against the LA-TINS. ATHENS, the whole of whole dominions was not larger than YORKSHIRE, fent to the expedition against Vor. I. Т SIGILY

SICILY near forty thousand men*. DIONYSIUS the elder, it is faid, maintained a ftanding army of a hundred thousand foot and ten thousand horse, besides a large fleet of four hundred fail +; though his territories extended no farther than the city of SYRACUSE, about a third of the island of SICILY, and fome fea-port towns and garrifons on the coaft of ITALY and ILLYRICUM. It is true, the ancient armies, in time of war, fublished much upon plunder: But did not the enemy plunder in their turn? which was a more ruinous way of levying a tax, than any other that could be devised. In fhort, no probable reafon can be affigned for the great power of the more ancient states above the modern, but their want of commerce and luxury. Few artizans were maintained by the labour of the farmers, and therefore more foldiers might live upon it. LIVY fays, that ROME, in his time, would find it difficult to raife as large an army as that which, in her early days, fhe fent out against the GAULS and LATINS t. Inftead of those foldiers who fought for liberty and empire in CAMILLUS's time, there were, in Augustus's days, muficians, painters, cooks, players, and tailors ; and if the land was equally cultivated at both periods, it could certainly maintain equal numbers in the one profession as in the other. Thev added nothing to the mere necessaries of life, in the latter period more than in the former.

It is natural on this occasion to ask, whether fovereigns may not return to the maxims of ancient policy, and

* TAUCYDIDES, lib. vii.

+ DIOD. SIC. lib. vii. This account, I own, is formewhat fufpicious, not to fay worfe; chiefly becaufe this army was not composed of citizens, but of mercenary forces.

TITI LIVII, lib. vii. cap. 24. " Adeo in quæ laboramus," fays he, 6 fola crevimus, divitias luxuriamque."

Digitized by Google

confuls

confult their own interest in this respect, more than the happiness of their subjects? I answer, that it appears to me almost impossible; and that because ancient policy was violent, and contrary to the more natural and usual course of things. It is well known with what peculiar laws SPARTA was governed, and what a prodigy that republic is justly effeemed by every one, who has confidered human nature, as it has difplayed itself in other nations, and other ages. Were the testimony of history lefs politive and circumstantial, fuch a government would appear a mere philosophical whim or fiction, and impoffible ever to be reduced to practice. And though the ROMAN and other ancient republics were supported on principles somewhat more natural, yet was there an extraordinary concurrence of circumstances to make them fubmit to fuch grievous burthens. They were free states: they were small ones; and the age being martial, all their neighbours were continually in arms. Freedom naturally begets public fpirit, efpecially in finall flates; and this public fpirit, this amor patria, must encrease, when the public is almost in continual alarm, and men are obliged, every moment, to expose themselves to the greatest dangers for its defence. A continual fuccession of wars makes every citizen a foldier : He takes the field in his turn : And during his fervice he is chiefly maintained by himfelf. This fervice is indeed equivalent to a heavy tax; yet is it lefs felt by a people addicted to arms, who fight for honour and revenge more than pay, and are unacquainted with gain and industry as well as pleasure *. Not to mention the great equality of fortunes among the inhabitants of the ancient republics, where every field, belonging to a different proprietor, was able to maintain a family, and rendered the numbers of citizens very confiderable, even without trade and manufactures.

See NOTE [O]. T_2

maintain

Digitized by GOOGLC

But though the want of trade and manufactures, among a free and very martial people, may fometimes have no other effect than to render the public more powerful, it is certain, that, in the common course of human affairs. it will have a quite contrary tendency. Sovereigns muft take mankind as they find them, and cannot pretend to introduce any violent change in their principles and ways of thinking. A long course of time, with a variety of accidents and circumstances, are requisite to produce those great revolutions, which fo much diversify the face of human affairs. And the lefs natural any fet of principles are, which fupport a particular fociety, the more difficulty will a legiflator meet with in raising and cultivating them. It is his best policy to comply with the common bent of mankind, and give it all the improvements of which it is fusceptible. Now, according to the most natural course of things, industry and arts and trade increase the power of the fovereign, as well as the happiness of the subjects; and that policy is violent, which aggrandizes the public by the poverty of individuals. This will eafily appear from a few confiderations. which will prefent to us the confequences of floth and barbarity.

Where manufactures and mechanic arts are not cultivated, the bulk of the people muft apply themfelves to agriculture; and if their fkill and induftry encreafe, there muft arife a great fuperfluity from their labour, beyond what fuffices to maintain them. They have no temptation, therefore, to encreafe their fkill and induftry; fince they cannot exchange that fuperfluity for any commodities, which may ferve either to their pleafure or vanity. A habit of indolence naturally prevails. The greater greater part of the land lies uncultivated. What is cultivated, yields not its utmoft for want of fkill and affiduity in the farmers. If at any time the public exigencies require, that great numbers fhould be employed in the public fervice, the labour of the people furnifhes now no fuperfluities, by which thefe numbers can be maintained. The labourers cannot encreafe their fkill and induftry on a fudden. Lands uncultivated cannot be brought into tillage for fome years. The armies, mean while, muft either make fudden and violent conquefts, or difband for want of fubfiftence. A regular attack or defence, therefore, is not to be expected from fuch a people, and their foldiers muft be as ignorant and unfkilful as their farmers and manufacturers.

Digitized by Google

OF COMMERCE.

Every thing in the world is purchased by labour; and our paffions are the only caufes of labour. When a nation abounds in manufactures and mechanic arts, the proprietors of land, as well as the farmers, fludy agriculture as a science, and redouble their industry and attention. The fuperfluity, which arifes from their labour, is not loft; but is exchanged with manufactures for those commodities, which men's luxury now makes them covet. By this means, land furnishes a great deal more of the neceffaries of life, than what fuffices for those who cultivate it. In times of peace and tranquillity, this fuperfluity goes to the maintenance of manufacturers, and the improvers of liberal arts. But it is eafy for the public to convert many of these manufacturers into foldiers, and maintain them by that fuperfluity, which arifes from the labour of the farmers. Accordingly we find, that this is the cafe in all civilized governments. When the fovereign raifes an army, what is the confequence? He impofes a tax. This tax obliges all the people to retrench what is least necessary to their subfissence. T 3 Thofe.

Thofe, who labour in fuch commodities, muft either enlift in the troops, or turn themfelves to agriculture, and thereby oblige fome labourers to enlift for want of bufinefs. And to confider the matter abstractedly, manufactures encrease the power of the state only as they store up fo much labour, and that of a kind to which the public may lay claim, without depriving any one of the mecessary life. The more labour, therefore, is employed beyond mere necessary the more powerful is any state; fince the perfors engaged in that labour may easily be converted to the public fervice. In a state without manufactures, there may be the same number of hands; but there is not the same quantity of labour, nor of the fame kind. All the labour is there bestowed upon necesfaries, which can admit of-little or no abatement.

Thus the greatness of the fovereign and the happiness of the flate are, in a great measure, united with regard to trade and manufactures. It is a violent method, and in most cases impracticable, to oblige the labourer to toil, in order to raife from the land more than what fubfilts himself and family. Furnish him with manufactures and commodities, and he will do it of himfelf. Afterwards you will find it eafy to feize fome part of his fuperfluous labour, and employ it in the public fervice, without giving him his wonted return. Being accuftomed to induftry, he will think this lefs grievous, than if, at once, you obliged him to an augmentation of labour without any reward. The cafe is the fame with regard to the other members of the state. The greater is the stock of labour of all kinds, the greater quantity may be taken from the heap, without making any fenfible alteration in it.

A public granary of corn, a ftorehouse of cloth, a magazine of arms; all these must be allowed real riches and

Digitized by Google

and firenoth in any flate. Trade and industry are really nothing but a flock of labour, which, in times of peace and tranquillity, is employed for the eafe and fatisfaction of individuals; but in the exigencies of state, may, in part, be turned to public advantage. Could we convert a city into a kind of fortified camp, and infuse into each breaft fo martial a genius, and fuch a passion for public good, as to make every one willing to undergo the greatest hardfhips for the fake of the public; these affections might now, as in ancient times, prove alone a fufficient four to industry, and support the community. It would then be advantageous, as in camps, to banish all arts and luxury; and, by reftrictions on equipage and tables, make the provisions and forage last longer than if the army were loaded with a number of fuperfluous retainers. But as these principles are too difinterested and too difficult to fupport, it is requisite to govern men by other paffions, and animate them with a fpirit of avarice and industry, art and luxury. The camp is, in this cafe, loaded with a fuperfluous retinue; but the provisions flow in proportionably larger. The harmony of the whole is still supported; and the natural bent of the mind being more complied with, individuals, as well as the public, find their account in the observance of those máxims.

The fame method of reafoning will let us fee the advantage of foreign commerce, in augmenting the power of the flate, as well as the riches and happinels of the fubject. It encreafes the flock of labour in the nation; and the fovereign may convert what flare of it he finds neceffary to the fervice of the public. Foreign trade, by its imports, furnifhes materials for new manufactures; and by its exports, it produces labour in particular commodities, which could not be confumed at home. In T_4

Digitized by Google

thort, a kingdom, that has a large import and export, muft abound more with induftry, and that employed upon delicacies and luxuries, than a kingdom which refts contented with its native commodities. It is, therefore, more powerful, as well as richer and happier. The individuals reap the benefit of these commodities, fo far as they gratify the sense and appetites. And the public is alfo a gainer, while a greater flock of labour is, by this means, flored up against any public exigency : that is, a greater number of laborious men are maintained, who may be diverted to the public fervice, without robbing any one of the necessaries, or even the chief conveniencies of life.

If we confult hiftory, we shall find, that, in most nations, foreign trade has preceded any refinement in home manufactures, and given birth to domeftic luxury. The temptation is ftronger to make use of foreign commodities, which are ready for use and which are entirely new to us, than to make improvements on any domeftic commodity, which always advance by flow degrees, and never affect us by their novelty. The profit is alfo very great, in exporting what is fuperfluous at home, and what bears no price, to foreign nations, whole foil or climate is not favourable to that commodity. Thus men become acquainted with the pleasures of luxury and the profits of commerce; and their delicacy and industry, being once awakened, carry them on to farther improvements, in every branch of domestic as well as foreign trade. And this perhaps is the chief advantage which arifes from a commerce with ftrangers. It roufes men from their indolence; and prefenting the gayer and more opulent part of the nation with objects of luxury, which they never before dreamed of, raifes in them a defire of a more fplendid way of life than what their anceftors enjoyed. And at

Of COMMERCE,

at the fame time, the few merchants, who posses the fecret of this importation and exportation, make great profits; and becoming rivals in wealth to the ancient nobility, temptother adventurers to become their rivals in commerce. Imitation foon diffuses all those arts; while domestic manufactures emulate the foreign in their improvements, and work up every home commodity to the utmost perfection of which it is fusceptible. Their own fteel and iron, in fuch laborious hands, become equal to the gold and rubies of the INDIES.

When the affairs of the fociety are once brought to this fituation, a nation may lofe most of its foreign trade, and yet continue a great and powerful people. If ftrangers will not take any particular commodity of ours, we must cease to labour in it. The same hands will turn themselves towards some refinement in other commodities, which may be wanted at home. And there must always be materials for them to work upon; till every perfon in the flate, who poffess riches, enjoys as great plenty of home commodities, and those in as great perfection, as he defires : which can never poffibly hap-CHINA is reprefented as one of the most flourishpen. ing empires in the world; though it has very little commerce beyond its own territories.

It will not, I hope, be confidered as a fuperfluous digreffion, if I here obferve, that, as the multitude of mechanical arts is advantageous, fo is the great number of perfons to whofe thare the productions of thefe arts fall. A too great difproportion among the citizens weakens any ftate. Every perfon, if poffible, ought to enjoy the fruits of his labour, in a full poffeffion of all the neceffaries, and many of the conveniencies of life. No one can doubt, but fuch an equality is most fuitable to human nature, and diminishes much lefs from the happiness of the rich, rich, than it adds to that of the poor. It also augments the power of the flate, and makes any extraordinary taxes or impositions be paid with more chearfulnes. Where the riches are engroffed by a few, these must contribute very largely to the supplying of the public necessfities. But when the riches are dispersed among multitudes, the burthen feels light on every shoulder, and the taxes make not a very sensible difference on any one's way of living.

Add to this, that, where the riches are in few hands, these must enjoy all the power, and will readily confpire to lay the whole burthen on the poor, and oppress them still farther, to the discouragement of all industry.

In this circumftance confifts the great advantage of ENGLAND above any nation at prefent in the world, or that appears in the records of any flory. It is true, the ENGLISH feel fome difadvantages in foreign trade by the high price of labour, which is in part the effect of the riches of their artizans as well as of the plenty of money: But as foreign trade is not the most material circumfance, it is not to be put in competition with the happinels of fo many millions. And if there were no more to endear to them that free government under which they live, this alone were fufficient. The poverty of the common people is a natural, if not an infallible effect of absolute monarchy; though I doubt, whether it be always true, on the other hand, that their riches are an infallible refult of liberty. Liberty mult be attended with particular accidents, and a certain turn of thinking, in order to produce that effect. Lord BACON, accounting for the great advantages obtained by the ENGLISH in their wars with FRANCE, afcribes them chiefly to the fuperior eafe and plenty of the common people among ft the former; yet the government of the two kingdoms was, at

Of COMMERCE.

at that time, pretty much alike. Where the labourers and artifans are accuftomed to work for low wages, and to retain but a fmall part of the fruits of their labour, it is difficult for them, even in a free goventment, to better their condition, or confpire among themfelves to heighten their wages. But even where they are accuftomed to a more plentiful way of life, it is eafy for the rich, in an arbitrary government, to confpire againft them, and throw the whole burthen of the taxes on their fhoulders.

It may feem an odd position, that the poverty of the common people in FRANCE, ITALY, and SPAIN, is, in fome measure, owing to the superior riches of the soil and happinefs of the climate; yet there want not reafons In fuch a fine mould or foil as to justify this paradox. that of those more fouthern regions, agriculture is an easy art; and one man, with a couple of forry horfes, will be able, in a feason, to cultivate as much land as will paya pretty confiderable rent to the proprietor. All the art, which the farmer knows, is to leave his ground fallow for a year, as foon as it is exhausted; and the warmth of the fun alone and temperature of the climate enrich it, and reftore its fertility. Such poor peafants, therefore, require only a fimple maintenance for their labour. They have no flock or riches, which claim more; and at the fame time, they are for ever dependant on their landlord, who gives no leafes, nor fears that his land will be fpoiled by the ill methods of cultivation. In Eng-LAND, the land is rich, but coarfe; must be cultivated at a great expence; and produces flender crops, when not carefully managed, and by a method which gives not the full profit but in a courfe of feveral years. A farmer, therefore, in ENGLAND must have a confiderable flock, and a long leafe; which beget proportional profits.

fits. The fine vineyards of CHAMPAGNE and BUR-GUNDY, that often yield to the landlord above five pounds per acre, are cultivated by peafants, who have fcarcely bread: The reason is, that such peasants need no flock but their own limbs, with inftruments of hufbandry, which they can buy for twenty shillings. The farmers are commonly in some better circumstances in those countries. But the grafiers are most at their ease of all those who cultivate the land. The reason is still the fame. Men must have profit proportionable to their expence and hazard. Where fo confiderable a number of the labouring poor as the peafants and farmers are in very low circumstances, all the rest must partake of their poverty, whether the government of that nation be monarchical or republican.

We may form a fimilar remark with regard to the general history of mankind. What is the reason, why no people, living between the tropics, could ever yet attain to any art or civility, or reach even any police in their government, and any military difcipline; while few nations in the temperate climates have been altogether deprived of these advantages? It is probable that one caufe of this phænomenon is the warmth and equality of weather in the torrid zone, which render clothes and houses less requisite for the inhabitants, and thereby remove, in part, that neceffity, which is the great fpur to industry and invention. Curis acuens mortalia corda. Not to mention, that the fewer goods or poffeffions of this kind any people enjoy, the fewer quarrels are likely to arife amongft them, and the lefs necessity will there be for a fettled police or regular authority, to protect and defend them from foreign enemies, or from each other.

(285)

ESSAYI

Of REFINEMENT in the ARTS.

UXURY is a word of an uncertain fignification, and may be taken in a good as well as in a bad fense. In general, it means great refinement in the gratification of the fenfes; and any degree of it may be innocent or blameable, according to the age, or country, or condition of the perfon. The bounds between the virtue and the vice cannot here be exactly fixed, more than in other moral fubjects. To imagine, that the gratifying of any fenfe, or the indulging of any delicacy in meat, drink, or apparel, is of itself a vice, can never enter into a head, that is not difordered by the frenzies of enthusiasm. I have, indeed, heard of a monk abroad, who, because the windows of his cell opened upon a noble prospect, made a covenant with his eyes never to turn that way, or receive fo fenfual a gratification. And fuch is the crime of drinking CHAMPAGNE or BUR-GUNDY, preferably to fmall beer or porter. Thefe indulgences are only vices, when they are purfued at the expence of fome virtue, as liberality or charity; in like manner as they are follies, when for them a man ruins his fortune, and reduces himfelf to want and beggary, Where they entrench upon no virtue, but leave ample fubject whence to provide for friends, family, and every proper proper object of generofity or compaffion, they are entirely innocent, and have in every age been acknowledged fuch by almost all moralifts. To be entirely occupied with the luxury of the table, for inftance, without any relifh for the pleasures of ambition, fludy, or conversation, is a mark of flupidity, and is incompatible with any vigour of temper or genius. To confine one's expence entirely to fuch a gratification, without regard to friends or family, is an indication of a heart defitute of humanity or benevolence. But if a man referve time fufficient for all laudable pursuits, and money fufficient for all generous purpose, he is free from every fladow of blame or reproach.

Since luxury may be confidered either as innocent or blameable, one may be furprifed at those preposterous opinions, which have been entertained concerning it; while men of libertine principles bestow praises even on vicious luxury, and represent it as highly advantageous to fociety; and on the other hand, men of severe morals blame even the most innocent luxury, and represent it as the source of all the corruptions, diforders, and factions, incident to civil government. We shall here endeavour to correct both these extremes, by proving, first, that the ages of refinement are both the happiest and most virtuous; facondly, that wherever luxury ceases to be innocent, it also ceases to be beneficial; and when carried a degree too far, is a quality pernicious, though perhaps not the most pernicious, to political fociety.

To prove the first point, we need but confider the effects of refinement both on private and on public life. Human happines, according to the most received notions, feems to confist in three ingredients; action, pleasure, and indolence i And though these ingredients ought to be he mixed in different proportions, according to the particular disposition of the person ; yet no one ingredient can be entirely wanting, without deftroying, in fome measure, the relish of the whole composition. Indolence or repose, indeed, seems not of itself to contribute much to our enjoyment; but, like fleep, is requifite as an indulgence to the weakness of human nature, which cannot support an uninterrupted course of business or pleasure. That guick march of the fpirits, which takes a man from himfelf, and chiefly gives fatisfaction, does in the end exhaust the mind, and requires some intervals of repole, which, though agreeable for a moment, yet, if prolonged, beget a languor and lethargy, that deftroy all enjoyment. Education, cuftom, and example, have a mighty influence in turning the mind to any of these purfuits : and it must be owned, that, where they promote a relish for action and pleasure, they are fo far favourable to human happines. In times when industry and the arts flourish, men are kept in perpetual occupation, and enjoy, as their reward, the occupation itself. as well as those pleasures which are the fruit of their la-The mind acquires new vigour; enlarges its bour. powers and faculties; and, by an affiduity in honeft industry, both fatisfies its natural appetites, and prevents the growth of unnatural ones, which commonly fpring up, when nourifhed by eafe and idlenefs. Banish those arts from fociety, you deprive men both of action and of pleafure; and, leaving nothing but indolence in their place, you even destroy the relish of indolence, which never is agreeable, but when it fucceeds to labour, and recruits the fpirits, exhausted by too much application and fatigue.

Digitized by Google

Of REFINEMENT in the ARTS.

Another advantage of industry and of refinements in the mechanical arts, is, that they commonly produce fome fome refinements in the liberal; nor can one be carried to perfection, without being accompanied, in fome degree, with the other. The fame age, which produces great philosophers and politicians, renowned generals and poets, ufually abounds with skilful weavers and fhip-carpenters. We cannot reafonably expect, that a piece of woollen cloth will be wrought to perfection in a nation, which is ignorant of aftronomy, or where ethics are neglected. The fpirit of the age affects all the arts : and the minds of men, being once roufed from their lethargy, and put into a fermentation, turn themselves on all fides, and carry improvements into every art and fcience. Profound ignorance is totally banished, and men enjoy the privilege of rational creatures, to think as well as to act, to cultivate the pleafures of the mind as well as those of the body.

Digitized by Google

The more these refined arts advance, the more fociable men become : Nor is it possible, that, when enriched with science, and possessed of a fund of conversation. they should be contented to remain in folitude, or live with their fellow-citizens in that diftant manner, which is peculiar to ignorant and barbarous nations. They flock into cities; love to receive and communicate knowledge ; to flow their wit or their breeding ; their tafte in conversation or living, in clothes or furniture. Curiofity allures the wife; vanity the foolifh; and pleafure both. Particular clubs and focieties are every where formed : Both fexes meet in an eafy and fociable manner; and the tempers of men, as well as their behaviour, refine apace. So that, befide the improvements which they receive from knowledge and the liberal arts, it is impossible but they must feel an encrease of humanity, from the very habit of conversing together, and contributing to each other's pleasure and entertainment. Thus

Of REFINEMENT in the ARTS.

Thus industry, knowledge, and humanity, are linked together by an indiffoluble chain, and are found, from experience as well as reason, to be peculiar to the more polifhed, and, what are commonly denominated, the more luxurious ages.

Nor are these advantages attended with difadvantages that bear any proportion to them. The more men refine upon pleasure, the less will they indulge in excesses of any kind; becaufe nothing is more deftructive to true pleafure than fuch exceffes. One may fafely affirm, that the TARTARS are oftener guilty of beaftly gluttony, when they feaft on their dead horfes, than EUROPEAN courtiers with all their refinements of cookery. And if libertine love, or even infidelity to the marriage-bed, be more frequent in polite ages, when it is often regarded only as a piece of gallantry; drunkennefs, on the other hand, is much lefs common : A vice more odious; and more pernicious both to mind and body. And in this matter I would appeal, not only to an OVID or a PETRONIUS, but to a SENECA or a CATO. We know, that CÆSAR. during CATILINE's confpiracy, being necessitated to put into CATO's hands a billet-doux, which discovered an intrigue with SERVILIA, CATO's own fifter, that ftern philosopher threw it back to him with indignation; and, in the bitternefs of his wrath, gave him the appellation of drunkard, as a term more opprobrious than that with which he could more juftly have reproached him.

But industry, knowledge, and humanity, are not advantageous in private life alone: They diffuse their beneficial influence on the public, and render the government as great and flourishing as they make individuals happy and prosperous. The encrease and confumption of all the commodities, which ferve to the ornament and plea-Vol. I. U fure fure of life, are advantageous to fociety; becaule, at the fame time that they multiply those innocent gratifications to individuals, they are a kind of florehouse of labour, which, in the exigencies of flate, may be turned to the public fervice. In a nation, where there is no demand for fuch fuperfluities, men fink into indolence, lose all enjoyment of life, and are useles to the public, which cannot maintain or fupport its fleets and armies, from the industry of fuch flothful members.

Digitized by Google

The bounds of all the EUROPEAN kingdoms are, at prefent, nearly the fame they were two hundred years ago: But what a difference is there in the power and grandeur of those kingdoms? Which can be ascribed to nothing but the encrease of art and industry. When CHARLES VIII. of FRANCE invaded ITALY, he carried with him about 20,000 men: Yet this armament fo exhausted the nation, as we learn from GUICCIARDIN, that for some years it was not able to make so great an effort. The late king of FRANCE, in time of war, kept in pay above 400,000 men*; though from MAZARINE's death to his own, he was engaged in a course of wars that lasted near thirty years.

This induftry is much promoted by the knowledge infeparable from ages of art and refinement; as, on the other hand, this knowledge enables the public to make the beft advantage of the induftry of its fubjects. Laws, order, police, difcipline; thefe can never be carried to any degree of perfection, before human reafon has refined itfelf by exercife, and by an application to the more vulgar arts, at leaft, of commerce and manufacture. Can we expect, that a government will be well-modelled by

* The infeription on the PLACE-DE-VENDOME fays 440,000.

Digitized by Google

a people,

Í

OF REFINEMENT in the ARTS.

a people, who know not how to make a fpinning-wheel, or to employ a loom to advantage? Not to mention, that all ignorant ages are infeffed with fuperfitition, which throws the government off its bias, and diffurbs men in the purfuit of their interest and happinels.

Knowledge in the arts of government naturally begets mildnefs and moderation, by inftructing men in the advantages of humane maxims above rigour and feverity; which drive fubjects into rebellion; and make the return to fubmiffion impracticable, by cutting off all hopes of pardon. When the tempers of men are foftened as well as their knowledge improved, this humanity appears ftill more confpicuous, and is the chief characteriftic which diftinguifhes a civilized age from times of barbarity and ignorance. Factions are then lefs inveterate; revolutions lefs tragical, authority lefs fevere, and feditions lefs frequent. Even foreign wars abate of their cruelty; and after the field of battle, where honour and intereft fteel men againft compafion as well as fear, the combatants diveft themfelves of the brute, and refume the man.

Nor need we fear, that men, by lofing their ferocity, will lofe their martial fpirit, or become lefs undaunted and vigorous in defence of their country or their liberty. The arts have no fuch effect in enervating either the mind or body. On the contrary, induftry, their infeparable attendant, adds new force to both. And if anger; which is faid to be the whetftone of courage, lofes fomewhat of its afperity, by politenefs and refinement; a fenfe of honour, which is a ftronger, more conftant, and more governable principle, acquires frefh vigour by that elevation of genius which arifes from knowledge and a good education. Add to this, that courage can neither bave any duration, nor be of any ufe, when not accom- $\mathbf{U} \mathbf{z}$ panied panied with discipline and martial skill, which are feldom found among a barbarous people. The ancients remarked, that DATAMES was the only barbarian that ever knew the art of war. And PYRRHUS, feeing the ROMANS marshal their army with fome art and skill, faid with furprize, Thefe barbarians have nothing barbarous in their discipline! It is observable, that, as the old Ro-MANS, by applying themfelves folely to war, were almost the only uncivilized people that ever possessed military difcipline; fo the modern ITALIANS are the only civilized people, among EUROPEANS, that ever wanted courage and a martial fpirit. Those who would ascribe this effeminacy of the ITALIANS to their luxury, or politenefs, or application to the arts, need but confider the FRENCH and ENGLISH, whole bravery is as uncontestable, as their love for the arts, and their asiduity in commerce. The ITALIAN historians give us a more fatisfactory reafon for this degeneracy of their country-They fhew us how the fword was dropped at men. once by all the ITALIAN fovereigns; while the VENE-TIAN ariftocracy was jealous of its fubjects, the FLOREN-TINE democracy applied itfelf entirely to commerce; ROME was governed by priefts, and NAPLES by women. War then became the bufinefs of foldiers of fortune, who fpared one another, and, to the allonifhment of the world, could engage a whole day in what they called a battle, and return at night to their camp, without the leaft bloodfned.

What has chiefly induced fevere moralifts to declaim against refinement in the arts, is the example of ancient ROME, which, joining to its poverty and rufticity; virtue and public fpirit, role to fuch a furprifing height of grandeur and liberty; but, having learned from its conquered provinces the ASIATIC luxury, fell into every kind, kind of corruption: whence arole fedition and civil wars. attended at last with the total loss of liberty. All the LA-TIN claffics, whom we peruse in our infancy, are full of thefe fentiments, and univerfally afcribe the ruin of their ftate to the arts and riches imported from the Eaft : Infomuch that SALLUST represents a tafte for painting as a vice, no lefs than lewdnefs and drinking. And fo popular were these sentiments, during the later ages of the republic, that this author abounds in praifes of the old rigid ROMAN virtue, though himfelf the most egregious inftance of modern luxury and corruption; fpeaks contemptuously of the GRECIAN eloquence, though the most elegant writer in the world; nay, employs prepofterous digreffions and declamations to this purpofe, though a model of taffe and correctness.

Of REFINEMENT in the ARTS. 293

But it would be eafy to prove, that these writers miftook the caufe of the diforders in the ROMAN flate. and afcribed to luxury and the arts, what really proceeded from an ill-modelled government, and the unlimited extent of conquests. Refinement on the pleafures and conveniencies of life has no natural tendency to beget venality and corruption. The value which all men put upon any particular pleafure, depends on comparison and experience; nor is a porter lefs greedy of money, which he fpends on bacon and brandy, than a courtier, who purchases champagne and ortolans. Riches are valuable at all times, and to all men; becaufe they always purchase pleasures, such as men are accustomed to, and defire : Nor can any thing reftrain or regulate the love of money, but a fense of honour and virtue; which, if it be not nearly equal at all times, will naturally abound most in ages of knowledge and refinement.

Of all EUROPEAN kingdoms, POLAND feems the most defective in the arts of war as well as peace, mechanical

U 3

Digitized by Google

ESSAY II.

as well as liberal; yet it is there that venality and corruption do most prevail. The nobles feem to have preferved their crown elective for no other purpose, than regularly to fell it to the highest bidder. This is almost the only species of commerce, with which that people are acquainted.

The liberties of ENCLAND, fo far from decaying fince the improvements in the arts, have never flourished fo much as during that period. And though corruption may feem to encrease of late years; this is chiefly to be ascribed to our established liberty, when our princes have found the impossibility of governing without parliaments, or of terrifying parliaments by the phantom of prerogative. Not to mention, that this corruption or venality prevails much more among the electors than the elected; and therefore cannot justly be ascribed to any refinements in luxury.

If we confider the matter in a proper light, we shall find, that a progress in the arts is rather favourable to liberty, and has a natural tendency to preferve, if not produce a free government. In rude unpolifhed nations, where the arts are neglected, all labour is bestowed on the cultivation of the ground; and the whole fociety is divided into two claffes, proprietors of land, and their vafials or tenants. The latter are neceffarily dependent, and fitted for flavery and fubjection; especially where they posses no riches, and are not valued for their knowledge in agriculture; as must always be the cafe where the arts are neglected. The former naturally erect themfelves into petty tyrants; and must either submit to an abfolute mafter, for the fake of peace and order; or if they will preferve their independency, like the ancient barons, they must fall into feuds and concefts among themfelves, and throw the whole fociety into fuch confufion, fion. as is perhaps worfe than the most despotic govern-But where luxury nourifhes commerce and inment. duftry, the peafants, by a proper cultivation of the land. become rich and independent : while the tradefmen and merchants acquire a fhare of the property, and draw authority and confideration to that middling rank of men. who are the best and firmest basis of public liberty. These fubmit not to flavery, like the peafants, from poverty and meannels of foirit; and having no hopes of tyrannizing. - over others, like the barons, they are not tempted, for the fake of that gratification, to fubmit to the tyranny of their fovereign. They covet equal laws, which may fecure their property, and preferve them from monarchical, as well as ariftocratical tyranny.

Of REFINEMENT in the ARTS. 205

The lower house is the support of our popular government; and all the world acknowledges, that it owed its chief influence and confideration to the encrease of commerce, which threw fuch a balance of property into the hands of the commons. How inconfistent then is it to blame fo violently a refinement in the arts, and to reprefent it as the bane of liberty and public fpirit!

To declaim against present times, and magnify the virtue of remote anceftors, is a propenfity almost inherent in human nature : And as the fentiments and opinions of civilized ages alone are transmitted to posterity, hence it is that we meet with fo many fevere judgments pronounced against luxury, and even science; and hence it is that at prefent we give fo ready an affent to them. But the fallacy is eafily perceived, by comparing different nations that are contemporaries; where we both judge more impartially, and can better fet in opposition those manners, with which we are fufficiently acquainted. Treachery and cruelty, the most pernicious and most odious of all vices, feem peculiar to uncivilized ages; and, , by

Ų4

. Digitized by Google

by the refined GREEKS and ROMANS, were afcribed to all the barbarous nations which furrounded them. They might juilly, therefore, have prefumed, that their own anceitors, fo highly celebrated, poffeffed no greater virtue, and were as much inferior to their pofterity in honour and humanity, as in tafte and fcience. An ancient FRANK or SAXON may be highly extolled: But I believe every man would think his life or fortune much lefs fecure in the hands of a MOOR or TARTAR, than in those of a FRENCH or ENGLISH gentleman, the rank of men the most civilized in the most civilized nations.

We come now to the fecond polition which we propofed to illuftrate, to wit, that, as innocent luxury, or a refinement in the arts and conveniencies of life, is advantageous to the public; fo wherever luxury ceafes to be innocent, it also ceafes to be beneficial; and when carried a degree farther, begins to be a quality pernicious, though, perhaps, not the most pernicious, to political fociety.

Let us confider what we call vicious luxury. No gratification, however fenfual, can of itfelf be efteemed vicious. A gratification is only vicious, when it engroffes all a man's expence, and leaves no ability for ' fuch acts of duty and generofity as are required by his fituation and fortune. Suppose, that he correct the vice, and employ part of his expence in the education of his children, in the support of his friends, and in relieving the poor; would any prejudice refult to fociety? On the contrary, the fame confumption would arife; and that labour, which, at prefent, is employed only in producing a flender gratification to one man, would relieve the neceffitous, and beftow fatisfaction on hundreds. The fame care and toil that raife a difh of peas at CHRISTMAS, would give bread to a whole family during during fix months. To fay, that, without a vicious luxury, the labour would not have been employed at all, is only to fay, that there is fome other defect in human nature, fuch as indolence, felfiftnnefs, inattention to others, for which luxury, in fome measure, provides a remedy; as one poifon may be an antidote to another. But virtue, like wholefome food, is better than poifons, however corrected.

Of REFINEMENT in the ARTS.

Suppose the same number of men, that are at present in GREAT BRITAIN, with the fame foil and climate; I afk, is it not possible for them to be happier, by the most perfect way of life that can be imagined, and by the greatest reformation that Omnipotence itfelf could work in their temper and difpolition ? To affert, that they cannot, appears evidently ridiculous. As the land is able to maintain more than all its prefent inhabitants, they could never, in fuch a UTOPIAN state, feel any other ills than those which arife from bodily ficknefs: and thefe are not the half of human miferies. All other ills fpring from fome vice, either in ourfelves or others; and even many of our difeases proceed from the same origin. Remove the vices, and the ills follow. You must only take care to remove all the vices. If you remove part, you may render the matter worfe. By banishing vicious luxury, without curing floth and an indifference to others, you only diminish industry in the state, and add nothing to men's charity or their generofity. Let us, therefore, reft contented with afferting, that two opposite vices in a flate may be more advantageous than either of them alone; but let us never pronounce vice in itself advantageous. Is it not very inconfistent for an author to affert in one page, that moral diffinctions are inventions of politicians for public intereft; and in the next page maintain, that vice is advantageous to the public *? And indeed it feems, · Fable of the Bees.

Digitized by Google

upon

upon any fystem of morality, little less than a contradiction in terms, to talk of a vice, which is in general beneficial to fociety.

I thought this reasoning necessary, in order to give fome light to a philosophical question, which has been much difputed in ENGLAND. I call it a philosophical queftion, not a political one. For whatever may be the confequence of fuch a miraculous transformation of mankind, as would endow them with every species of virtue, and free them from every species of vice; this concerns not the magistrate, who aims only at possibilities. He cannot cure every vice by fubflicating a virtue in its place. Very often he can only cure one vice by another; and in that cafe, he ought to prefer what is least pernicious to fociety. Luxury, when exceffive, is the fource of many ills; but is in general preferable to floth and idlenefs. which would commonly fucceed in its place, and are more hurtful both to private perfons and to the public. When floth reigns, a mean uncultivated way of life prevails amongft individuals, without fociety, without en-And if the fovereign, in fuch a fituation. ioyment. demands the fervice of his fubjects, the labour of the flate fuffices only to furnish the necessaries of life to the labourers, and can afford nothing to those who are employed in the public fervice.

· Digitized by Google

(299)

ESSAY III.

Of MONEY.

TONEY is not, properly fpeaking, one of the fubjects of commerce; but only the inftrument which men have agreed upon to facilitate the exchange of one commodity for another. It is none of the wheels of trade: It is the oil which renders the motion of the wheels more fmooth and eafy. If we confider any one kingdom by itfelf, it is evident, that the greater or lefs plenty of money is of no confequence; fince the prices of commodities are always proportioned to the plenty of money, and a crown in HARRY VII.'s time ferved the fame purpose as a pound does at present. It is only the public which draws any advantage from the greater plenty of money; and that only in its wars and negociations with foreign states. And this is the reason, why all rich and trading countries from CARTHAGE to GREAT BRITAIN and HOLLAND, have employed mercenary troops, which they hired from their poorer neighbours. Were they to make use of their native subjects they would find lefs advantage from their fuperior riches, and from their great plenty of gold and filver; fince the pay of all their fervants must rife in proportion to the public opulence. Our small army of 20,000 men is maintained at as great expence as a FRENCH army twice as numerous. The ENGLISH fleet, during the late war, required required as much money to fupport it as all the ROMAN legions, which kept the whole world in fubjection, during the time of the emperors *.

The greater number of people, and their greater induftry, are ferviceable in all cafes; at home and abroad, in private and in public. But the greater plenty of money is very limited in its ufe, and may even fometimes be a lofs to a nation in its commerce with foreigners.

There feems to be a happy concurrence of caufes in human affairs, which checks the growth of trade and riches, and hinders them from being confined entirely to one people; as might naturally at first be dreaded from the advantages of an established commerce. Where one nation has gotten the ftart of another in trade, it is very difficult for the latter to regain the ground it has loft ; because of the superior industry and skill of the former, and the greater flocks, of which its merchants are poffefled, and which enable them to trade on fo much fmaller profits. But these advantages are compensated, in some measure, by the low price of labour in every nation which has not an extensive commerce, and does not much abound in gold and filver. Manufactures, therefore, gradually thift their places, leaving those countries and provinces which they have already enriched, and flying to others, whither they are allured by the cheapnefs of provisions and labour; till they have enriched thefe alfo, and are again banished by the same causes. And, in general, we may observe, that the dearness of every thing, from plenty of money, is a difadvantage, which attends an eftablished commerce, and sets bounds to it in every country, by enabling the poorer flates to underfel the richer in all foreign markets.

* See NOTE [P].

Digitized by Google

This

Of MONEY.

This has made me entertain a doubt concerning the benefit of banks and paper-credit; which are fo generally effeemed advantageous to every nation. That provisions and labour fhould become dear by the encrease of trade and money, is, in many respects, an inconvenience; but an inconvenience that is unavoidable, and the effect of that public wealth and prosperity which are the end of all our wifhes. It is compenfated by the advantages, which we reap from the possession of these precious metals, and the weight, which they give the nation in all foreign wars and negociations. But there appears no reafon for encreasing that inconvenience by a counterfeit money, which foreigners will not accept of in any payment, and which any great diforder in the ftate will reduce to nothing. There are, it is true, many people in every rich flate, who having large fums of money, would prefer paper with good fecurity; as being of more eafy transport and more fafe cuftody. If the public provide not a bank, private bankers will take advantage of this circumftance : as the goldfmiths formerly did in LONDON, or as the bankers do at prefent in DUBLIN: And therefore it is better, it may be thought, that a public company fhould enjoy the benefit of that paper-credit, which always will have place in every opulent kingdom. But to endeavour artificially to encrease such a credit, can never be the interest of any trading nation; but must lay them under difadvantages, by encreasing money beyond its natural proportion to labour and commodities, and thereby heightening their price to the merchant and manufacturer. -And in this view, it must be allowed, that no bank could be more advantageous, than fuch a one as locked up all the money it received *, and never augmented the circulating

* This is the cafe with the bank of AMSTERDAM.

ESSAY III.

circulating coin, as is ufual, by returning part of its treafure into commerce. A public bank, by this expedient, might cut off much of the dealings of private bankers and money-jobbers; and though the flate bore the charge of falaries to the directors and tellers of this bank (for, according to the preceding fuppofition, it would have no profit from its dealings), the national advantage, refulting from the low price of labour and the deftruction of paper-credit, would be a fufficient compenfation. Not to mention, that fo large a fum, lying ready at command, would be a convenience in times of great public danger and diffrefs; and what part of it was ufed might be replaced at leifure, when peace and tranquillity was reftored to the nation.

But of this fubject of paper-credit we fhall treat more largely hereafter. And I fhall finish this estay on money, by proposing and explaining two observations, which may, perhaps, ferve to employ the thoughts of our speculative politicians.

It was a fhrewd obfervation of ANACHARSIS* the SCYTHIAN, who had never feen money in his own country, that gold and filver feemed to him of no ufe to the GREEKS, but to affift them in numeration and arithimetic. It is indeed evident, that money is nothing but the reprefentation of labour and commodities, and ferves only as a method of rating or effimating them. Where coin is in greater plenty; as a greater quantity of it is required to reprefent the fame quantity of goods; it can have no effect, either good or bad, taking a nation within itfelf; any more than it would make an alteration on a inerchant's books, if, infiead of the ARABIAN method

* PLUT. Suconado quis fues profestus in virtute femine poffit.

· Digitized by Google

of

Of MONEY.

of notation, which requires few characters, he fhould make use of the ROMAN, which requires a great many, Nav. the greater quantity of money, like the ROMAN characters, is rather inconvenient, and requires greater trouble both to keep and transport it. But notwithflanding this conclusion, which must be allowed just, it is certain. that. fince the discovery of the mines in AME-RICA. industry has encreased in all the nations of EUROPE. except in the possession of those mines; and this may iufily be ascribed, amongst other reasons, to the encrease of gold and filver. Accordingly we find, that, in every kingdom, into which money begins to flow in greater abundance than formerly, every thing takes a new face : labour and industry gain life; the merchant becomes more enterprifing, the manufacturer more diligent and skilful, and even the farmer follows his plough with greater alacrity and attention. This is not eafily to be accounted for, if we confider only the influence which a greater abundance of coin has in the kingdom itfelf. by heightening the price of commodities, and obliging every one to pay a greater number of these little vellow or white pieces for every thing he purchases. And as to foreign trade, it appears, that great plenty of money is rather difadvantageous, by raifing the price of every kind of labour.

To account, then, for this phenomenon, we must confider, that though the high price of commodities be a neceffary confequence of the encrease of gold and filver; yet it follows not immediately upon that encrease; but some time is required before the money circulates through the whole state, and makes its effect be felt on all ranks of people. At first, no alteration is perceived; by degrees the price rises, first of one commodity, then of another; till the whole at last reaches a just proportion with with the new quantity of fpecie which is in the kingdom. In my opinion, it is only in this interval or intermediate fituation, between the acquisition of money and rife of prices, that the encreafing quantity of gold and filver is favourable to industry. When any quantity of money is imported into a nation, it is not at first dispersed into many hands; but is confined to the coffers of a few perfons, who immediately feek to employ it to advantage. Here are a fet of manufacturers or merchants, we shall fuppofe, who have received returns of gold and filver for goods, which they fent to CADIZ. They are thereby enabled to employ more workmen than formerly, who never dream of demanding higher wages, but are glad of employment from fuch good paymasters. If workmen become scarce, the manufacturer gives higher wages, but at first requires an encrease of labour; and this is willingly fubmitted to by the artifan, who can now eat and drink better, to compensate his additional toil and fatigue. He carries his money to market, where he finds every thing at the fame price as formerly, but returns with greater quantity and of better kinds, for the use of his family. The farmer and gardener, finding that all their commodities are taken off, apply themfelves with alacrity to the raifing more; and at the fame time can afford to take better and more clothes from their tradefmen, whofe price is the fame as formerly, and their industry only whetted by fo much new gain. It is eafy to trace the money in its progrefs through the whole commonwealth; where we shall find, that it must first quicken the diligence of every individual, before it encreafe the price of labour.

And that the fpecie may encrease to a confiderable pitch, before it have this latter effect, appears, amongst-other

Of MONEY.

other inftances, from the frequent operations of the FRENCH king on the money; where it was always found, that the augmenting of the numerary value did not produce a proportional rife of the prices, at leaft for fome time. In the laft year of LOUIS XIV. money was raifed three-fevenths, but prices augmented only one. Corn in FRANCE is now fold at the fame price, or for the fame number of livres, it was in 1683; though filver was then at 30 livres the mark, and is now at 50*. Not to mention the great addition of gold and filver, which may have come into that kingdom fince the former period.

From the whole of this reafoning we may conclude. that it is of no manner of confequence, with regard to the domeftic happiness of a state, whether money be in a greater or lefs quantity. The good policy of the magistrate confists only in keeping it, if possible, still encreafing; because, by that means, he keeps alive a spirit of industry in the nation, and encreases the stock of labour, in which confifts all real power and riches. A nation, whole money decreases, is actually, at that time, weaker and more miferable than another nation, which possefiles no more money, but is on the encreasing hand. This will be eafily accounted for, if we confider, that the alterations in the quantity of money, either on one fide or the other, are not immediately attended with proportionable alterations in the price of commodities. There is always an interval before matters be adjusted to their new fituation; and this interval is as pernicious to induftry, when gold and filver are diminishing, as it is advantageous when thefe metals are encreafing. The workman has not the fame employment from the manufacturer

* See NOTE [Q].

X

VOL. I.

Digitized by Google

facturer and merchant; though he pays the fame price for every thing in the market. The farmer cannot difpofe of his corn and cattle; though he must pay the fame rent to his landlord. The poverty, and beggary, and sloth, which must ensue, are easily foreseen.

II. The fecond observation which I proposed to make with regard to money, may be explained after the following manner : There are fome kingdoms, and many provinces in EUROPE (and all of them were once in the fame condition), where money is fo fcarce, that the land-·lord can get none at all from his tenants; but is obliged to take his rent in kind, and either to confume it himfelf, , or transport it to places where he may find a market. In othofe countries, the prince can levy few or no taxes, but in the fame manner : And as he will receive small benefit from -impositions to paid, it is evident that such a kingdom has Hittle force even at home ; and cannot maintain fleets and armies to the fame extent, as if every part of it abounded - in gold and filver. There is furely a greater difproportion between the force of GERMANY, at prefent, and what it was three centuries ago *, than there is in its -industry, people, and manufactures. The AUSTRIAN dominions in the empire are in general well peopled and well cultivated, and are of great extent; but have not a proportionable weight in the balance of EUROPE: proceeding, as is commonly supposed, from the fearcity of money. How do all these facts agree with that principle of reason, that the quantity of gold and filver is in itfelf -altogether indifferent? According to that principle, wherever a fovereign has numbers of fubjects, and thefe

• The ITALIANS gave to the Emperor MAXIMILIAN, the nickname of POCCI-DANARI. None of the enterprises of that prince ever fucceeded, for want of money.

Digitized by Google

. have

:306

Of MONEY.

have plenty of commodities, he fhould of courfe be great and powerful, and they rich and happy, independent of "the greater or leffer abundance of the precious metals. Thefe admit of divisions and fubdivisions to a great "extent; and where the pieces might become to fmall'as to be in danger of being loft, it is easy to mix the gold or filver with a bafer metal, as is practifed in fome countries of EUROPE; and by that means raife the pieces to a bulk more fensible and convenient. They ffill ferve the fame purposes of exchange, whatever their number may be, or whatever colour they may be fupposed to have.

To these difficulties I answer, that the effect, here supposed to flow from scarcity of money, really arises from the manners and customs of the people; and that we mistake, as is too usual, a collateral effect for a cause. The contradiction is only apparent; but it requires fome thought and reflection to discover the principles, by which we can reconcile reason to experience.

It feems a maxim almost felf-evident, that the prices of every thing depend on the proportion between commodities and money, and that any confiderable alteration on either has the fame effect, either of heightening or lowering the price. Encrease the commodities, they become cheaper; encrease the money, they rife in their value. As, on the other hand, a diminution of the former, and that of the latter, have contrary tendencies.

It is also evident, that the prices do not fo much depend on the absolute quantity of commodities and that of money, which are in a nation, as on that of the commodities which come or may come to market, and of the money which circulates. If the coin be locked up X_2 in in chefts, it is the fame thing with regard to prices, as if it were annihilated; if the commodities be hoarded in magazines and granaries, a like effect follows. As the money and commodities, in these cases, never meet, they cannot affect each other. Were we, at any time, to form conjectures concerning the price of provisions, the corn, which the farmer must referve for feed and for the maintenance of himself and family, ought never to enter into the estimation. It is only the overplus, compared to the demand, that determines the value.

Digitized by Google

1

To apply these principles, we must confider, that, in the first and more uncultivated ages of any state, ere fancy has confounded her wants with those of nature, men. content with the produce of their own fields, or with those rude improvements which they themselves can work upon them, have little occasion for exchange, at least for money, which, by agreement, is the common The wool of the farmer's own measure of exchange. flock, fpun in his own family, and wrought by a neighbouring weaver, who receives his payment in corn or wool, fuffices for furniture and cloathing. The carpenter, the fmith, the mason, the tailor, are retained by wages of a like nature; and the landlord himfelf, dwelling in the neighbourhood, is content to receive his rent in the commodities raifed by the farmer. The greater part of these he confumes at home, in ruftic hospitality: The reft, perhaps, he disposes of for money to the neighbouring town, whence he draws the few materials of his expence and luxury.

But after men begin to refine on all these enjoyments, and live not always at home, nor are content with what can be raifed in their neighbourhood, there is more exchange and commerce of all kinds, and more money enters enters into that exchange. The tradefmen will not be paid in corn; because they want fomething more than barely to eat. The farmer goes beyond his own parish for the commodities he purchases, and cannot always carry his commodities to the merchant who fupplies him. The landlord lives in the capital, or in a foreign country; and demands his rent in gold and filver, which can eafily be transported to him. Great undertakers, and manufacturers, and merchants, arife in every commodity; and these can conveniently deal in nothing but fpecie. And confequently, in this fituation of in fociety, the coin enters into many more contracts, and by that means is much more employed than in the former.

. 308

Digitized by Google

Of MONEY.

The necessary effect is, that, provided the money encreafe not in the nation, every thing must become much cheaper in times of industry and refinement, than in rude, uncultivated ages. It is the proportion between the circulating money, and the commodities in the market, which determines the prices. Goods, that are confumed at home, or exchanged with other goods in the neighbourhood, never come to market; they affect not in the leaft the current specie; with regard to it they are as if totally annihilated; and confequently this method of using them finks the proportion on the fide of the commodities, and encreases the prices. But after money enters into all contracts and fales, and is every where the measure of exchange, the same national cash has a much greater task to perform; all commodities are then in the market; the fphere of circulation is enlarged; it is the fame cafe as if that individual fum were to ferve a larger kingdom; and therefore, the proportion being here leffened on the fide of the money, every

X 3

Digitized by Google

310 10

every thing must become cheaper, and the prices gra-

By the most exact computations, that have been formed all over EUROPE, after making allowance for the: alteration in the numerary value or the denomination, it is found, that the prices of all things have only rifen three, or, at most, four times, fince the discovery of the WEST INDIES. But will any one affert, that there is not much more than four times the coin in EUROPE, that was in the fifteenth century, and the centuries, preceding it? The SPANIARDS and PORTUGUESE from their mines, the ENGLISH, FRENCH, and DUTCH, by their AFRICAN trade, and by their interlopers in the WEST INDIES, bring home about fix millions a year, of which not above a third goes to the EAST INDIES. This fum alone, in ten years, would probably double. the ancient flock of money in EUROPE. And no other fatisfactory reason can be given, why all prices have not rifen to a much more exorbitant height, except that which is derived from a change of cuftoms and manners. Befides that more commodities are produced by additional industry, the fame commodities come more to market. after men depart from their ancient fimplicity of manners. And though this, encrease has not been equal to that of money, it has, however, been confiderable, and has preferved the proportion between coin and commodities nearer the ancient frandard.

Were the question proposed, Which of these methods of living in the people, the simple or refined, is the most advantageous to the state or public? I should, without much scruple, prefer the latter, in a view to politics at least; and should produce this as an additional reason for the encouragement of trade and manufactures.

Digitized by Google

3

While

While men live in the ancient fimple manner, and fupply all their necessaries from domestic industry or from the neighbourhood, the fovereign can levy no taxes in money from a confiderable part of his fubjects; and if he will impose on them any burthens, he must take pavment in commodities, with which alone they abound ; a method attended with fuch great and obvious inconveniencies, that they need not here be infifted on. All the . money he can pretend to raife, must be from his principal cities. where alone it circulates : and thefe, it is evident, cannot afford him fo much as the whole state could, did gold and filver circulate throughout the whole. But befides this obvious diminution of the revenue, there is another caufe of the poverty of the public in fuch a fituation. Not only the fovereign receives lefs money, but the fame money goes not fo far as in times of industry and general commerce. Every thing is dearer, where the gold and filver are supposed equal; and that because fewer commodities come to market, and the whole coin bears a higher proportion to what is to be purchased by it; whence alone the prices of every thing are fixed and, determined.

Here then we may learn the fallacy of the remark. often to be met with in hiftorians, and even in common conversation, that any particular state is weak, though, fertile, populous, and well cultivated, merely becaufe it wants money. It appears, that the want of money can never injure any state within itself : For men and commodities are the real ftrength of any community. It is the fimple manner of living which here hurts the public, by confining the gold and filver to few hands, and preventing its universal diffusion and circulation. On the contrary, industry and refinements of all kinds incorporate it with the whole state, however small its quantity may be: They digeft it into every vein, so to X fpeak :

Digitized by Google

fpeak; and make it enter into every transaction and contract. No hand is entirely empty of it. And as the prices of every thing fall by that means, the fovereign has a double advantage: He may draw money by his taxes from every part of the state; and what he receives, goes farther in every purchase and payment.

We may infer, from a comparison of prices, that money is not more plentiful in CHINA, than it was in EUROPE three centuries ago: But what immenfe power is that empire poffeffed of, if we may judge by the civil and military effablishment maintained by it? POLYBIUS * tells us, that provisions were fo cheap in ITALY during his time, that in fome places the flated price for a meal at the inns was a femis a head, little more than a farthing ! Yet the ROMAN power had even then fubdued the whole known world. About a century before that period, the CARTHAGINIAN ambaffador faid, by way of raillery, that no people lived more fociably amongst themselves than the ROMANS; for that, in every entertainment, which, as foreign ministers, they received, they still observed the fame plate at every table +. The abfolute quantity of the precious metals is a matter of great indifference. There are only two circumstances of any importance, namely, their gradual encrease, and their thorough concoction and circulation through the flate; and the influence of both those circumstances has here been explained.

In the following Effay we fhall fee an inftance of a like fallacy as that above mentioned; where a collateral effect is taken for a caufe, and where a confequence is afcribed to the plenty of money; though it be really owing to a change in the manners and cuftoms of the people.

> • Lib. ii. cap. 15. † PLIN. lib. xxxiii. cap. 11.

> > Digitized by Google

(313) ESSAY IV.

Of INTEREST.

NOTHING is effeemed a more certain fign of the flourifhing condition of any nation than the lownefs of intereft: And with reafon; though I believe the caufe is fomewhat different from what is commonly apprehended. Lownefs of intereft is generally afcribed to plenty of money. But money, however plentiful, has no other effect, if fixed, than to raife the price of labour. Silver is more common than gold; and therefore you receive a greater quantity of it for the fame commodities. But do you pay lefs intereft for it? Intereft in BATAVIA and JAMAICA is at 10 per cent. in PORTUGAL at 6; though thefe places, as we may learn from the prices of every thing, abound more in gold and filver than either LONDON or AMSTERDAM.

Were all the gold in ENGLAND annihilated at once, and one and twenty fhillings fubfituted in the place of every guinea, would money be more plentiful or interest lower? No furely: We fhould only use filver inftead of gold. Were gold rendered as common as filver, and filver as common as copper; would money be more plentiful or interest lower? We may affuredly give the fame answer. Our fhillings would then be yellow, and our halfpence white; and we should have no guineas. No other difference would ever be observed; no alteration on commerce, manufactures, navigation, or

Digitized by Google

or interest; unless we imagine, that the colour of the metal is of any confequence.

Now, what is fo visible in these greater variations of fcarcity or abundance in the precious metals, must hold in all inferior changes: If the multiplying of gold and filver fifteen times makes no difference, much less can the doubling or tripling them. All augmentation has no other effect than to heighten the price of labour and commodities; and even this variation is little more than that of a name. In the progress towards these changes, the augmentation may have some influence, by exciting industry; but after the prices are fettled, fuitably to the new abundance of gold and filver, it has no manner of influence.

An effect always holds proportion with its caufe. Prices have rifen near four times fince the diffeovery of the INDIES; and it is probable gold and filver have multiplied much more: But intereft has not fallen much above half. The rate of intereft, therefore, is not derived from the quantity of the precious metals.

Money having chiefly a ficitious value, the greater or lefs plenty of it is of no confequence, if we confider a pration within itfelf; and the quantity of fpecie, when a once fixed, though ever fo large, has no other effect, than to oblige every one to tell out a greater number of those fining, bits of metal, for clothes, furniture or equipage, without encreasing any one convenience of life. If a man borrow money to build a house, he then carries home a greater load; because the ftone, timber, lead, glafs, & c. with the labour of the masons and carpenters, are represented by a greater quantity of gold and filver. But as these metals are confidered chiefly as representations, there can no alteration arise, from their bulk or quantity, their weight or colour, either upon their real value value or their interest. The same interest, in all cases, bears the same proportion to the sum. And if you lent me so much labour and so many commodities; by receiving five per cent. you always receive proportional labour and commodities, however represented, whether by yellow or white coin, whether by a pound or an ounce. It is in vain, therefore, to look for the cause of the fall or rise of interest in the greater or less quantity of gold and filver, which is fixed in any nation.

Digitized by Google

Of INTEREST

High interest arises from three circumstances: A great demand for borrowing; little riches to supply that demand; and great profits arising from commerce: And these circumstances are a clear proof of the small advance of commerce and industry, not of the fearcity of gold and filver. Low interest, on the other hand, proceeds fromthe three opposite circumstances: A small demand for borrowing; great riches to supply that demand; and small profits arising from commerce: And these circumstances are all connected together, and proceed from the encrease of industry and commerce, not of gold and filver. We shall endeavour to prove these points; and shall begin with the causes and the effects of a great or fmall-demand for borrowing.

When a people have emerged ever so little from a favage ftate, and their numbers have encreased beyond the original multitude; there must immediately arise an inequality of property; and while some possible large tracks of land, others are confined within narrow limits; and fome are entirely without any landed property. Those who possible more land than they can labour, employ those who possible more, and agree to receive a determinate part of the product. Thus the landed interest is immediately established; nor is there any fettled government; however, rude; in which affairs are not on this footing.-

316

Of these proprietors of land, fome must presently difcover themselves to be of different tempers from others: and while one would willingly flore up the produce of his land for futurity, another defires to confume at prefent what fhould fuffice for many years. But as the fpending of a fettled revenue is a way of life entirely without occupation; men have fo much need of fomewhat to fix and engage them, that pleafures, fuch as they are, will be the pursuit of the greater part of the landholders, and the prodigals among them will always be more numerous than the mifers. In a ftate, therefore, where there is nothing but a landed intereft, as there is little frugality, the borrowers must be very numerous, and the rate of interest must hold proportion to it. The difference depends not on the quantity of money, but on the habits and manners which prevail. By this alone the demand for borrowing is encreased or diminished. Were money fo plentiful as to make an egg be fold for fixpence; fo long as there are only landed gentry and peafants in the flate, the borrowers must be numerous, and interest high. The rent for the fame farm would be heavier and more bulky: But the fame idlenefs of the landlord, with the higher price of commodities, would diffipate it in the fame time, and produce the fame necessity and demand for borrowing.

Nor is the cafe different with regard to the fecand circumftance which we proposed to confider, namely, the great or little riches to fupply the demand. This effect alfo depends on the habits and way of living of the people, not on the quantity of gold and filver. In order to have, in any ftate, a greater number of lenders, it is not fufficient nor requifite, that there be great abundance of the precious metals. It is only requisite, that the property or command of that quantity, which is in the ftate, whether ther great or small, should be collected in particular hands, fo as to form confiderable fums, or compose a great monied interest. This begets a number of lenders, and finks the rate of usury; and this, I shall venture to affirm, depends not on the quantity of specie, but on particular manners and customs, which make the specie gather into separate some or masses of confiderable value.

Digitized by Google

OF INTEREST.

For suppose, that, by miracle, every man in GREAT BRITAIN should have five pounds flipt into his pocket in one night; this would much more than double the whole money that is at prefent in the kingdom : yet there would not next day, nor for fome time, be any more lenders, nor any variation in the interest. And were there nothing but landlords and peafants in the state, this money, however abundant, could never gather into fums; and would only ferve to encrease the prices of every thing, without any farther confequence. The prodigal landlord diffipates it, as fast as he receives it; and the beggarly peafant has no means, nor view, nor ambition of obtaining above a bare livelihood. The overplus of borrowers above that of lenders continuing still the fame, there will follow no reduction of interest. That depends upon another principle; and muft proceed from an encrease of industry and frugality, of arts and commerce.

Every thing ufeful to the life of man arifes from the ground; but few things arife in that condition which is requifite to render them ufeful. There muft, therefore, befide the peafants and the proprietors of land, be another rank of men, who, receiving from the former the rude materials, work them into their proper form, and retain-part for their own use and subfiftence. In the infancy of fociety, these contracts between the artifans and the

° 317

\mathbf{E} : S. S. A. $\mathbf{Y} \rightarrow \mathbf{IV}$.

7 318

the peafants, and between one species of artifans and another, are commonly entered into immediately by the eperfons themfelves, who, being neighbours, are eafly acquainted with each other's necessities, and can lend their mutual affistance to supply them. But when men's - industry encreases, and their views enlarge, it is found, that the most remote parts of the state can assist each other as well as the more contiguous, and that this intercourse of good offices may be carried on to the greatest extent and intricacy. Hence the origin of merchants, one of the most useful races of men, who ferve as agents between those parts of the state, that are wholly unacquainted, and are ignorant of each other's necessities. Here are in a city fifty workmen in filk and linen, and a thousand customers; and these two ranks of men. fo neceffary to each other, can never rightly meet, till one man erects a shop, to which all the workmen and all the cuftomers repair. In this province, grafs rifes in abundance : The inhabitants abound in cheele, and butter, and cattle; but want bread and corn, which, in a neighbouring province, are in too great abundance for the use of the inhabitants. One man discovers this. He c brings corn from the one province, and returns with cattle; and, supplying the wants of both, he is, fo fare a common benefactor. As the people encrease in numbers and industry, the difficulty of their intercourse encreases: The business of the agency or merchandize becomes more intricate; and divides, fubdivides, compounds, and mixes to a greater variety. In all these transactions. it is neceffary, and reafonable, that a confiderable part of the commodities and labour fhould belong to the merchant, to whom, in a great measure, they are owing. And these commodities he will fometimes preferve in kind, or more commonly convert into money, which is their their common representation. If gold and filver have encreased in the flate together with the industry, it will require a great quantity of these metals to represent a great quantity of commodities and labour. If industry alone has encreased, the prices of every thing must fink, and a small quantity of specie will serve as a representation.

Of INTEREST.

There is no craving or demand of the human mind more constant and infatiable than that for exercise and employment; and this defire feems the foundation of most of our passions and pursuits. Deprive a man of all bufinels and ferious occupation, he runs reftlels from one amusement to another; and the weight and oppression, which he feels from idlenefs, is fo great, that he forgets the ruin which must follow him from his immoderate expences. Give him a more harmlefs way of employing his mind or body, he is fatisfied, and feels no longer that infatiable thirst after pleasure. But if the employment vou give him be lucrative, especially if the profit be attached to every particular exertion of industry, he has gain fo often in his eye, that he acquires, by degrees, a paffion for it, and knows no fuch pleafure as that of feeing the daily encrease of his fortune. And this is the reason- why trade encreases frugality, and why, among merchants, there is the fame overplus of mifers above prodigals, as, among the poffeffors of land, there is the contrary.

Commerce encreases industry, by conveying it readily from one member of the state to another, and allowing none of it to perifh or become useles. It encreases frugality, by giving occupation to men, and employing them in the arts of gain, which foon engage their affection, and remove all relish for pleasure and expence. It is an infallible confequence of all industrious professions. to beget frugality, and make the love of gain prevail over the love of pleafure. Among lawyers and phyficians who have any practice, there are many more who live within their income, than who exceed it, or even live up to it. But lawyers and phyficians beget no induftry; and it is even at the expence of others they acquire their riches; fo that they are fure to diminish the possessions of some of their fellow-citizens, as fast as they encrease their own. Merchants, on the contrary, beget industry, by ferving as canals to convey it through every corner of the flate : And at the fame time, by their frugality, they acquire great power over that industry, and collect a large property in the labour and commodities, which they are the chief inftruments in producing. There is no other profeffion, therefore, except merchandize, which can make the monied interest confiderable, or, in other words, can encreafe industry, and, by also encreasing frugality, give a great command of that industry to particular members of the fociety. Without commerce, the state must confist chiefly of landed gentry, whose prodigality and expence make a continual demand for borrowing; and of pealants, who have no fums to fupply The money never gathers into large that demand. ftocks or fums, which can be lent at intereft. It is difperfed into numberless hands, who either squander it in idle fhow and magnificence, or employ it in the purchase of the common necessaries of life. Commerce alone affembles it into confiderable fums; and this effect it has merely from the industry which it begets, and the frugality which it infpires, independent of that particular quantity of precious metal which may circulate in the fate.

Digitized by Google

is

Thus

Of INTEREST.

Thus an increase of commerce, by a necessary confequence, raises a great number of lenders, and by that means produces lownels of interest. We must now confider how far this encrease of commerce diminishes the profits arising from that profession, and gives rise to the third circumstance requisite to produce lownels of interest.

It may be proper to observe on this head, that low interest and low profits of merchandize are two events, that mutually forward each other, and are both originally derived from that extensive commerce, which produces opulent merchants, and renders the monied intereft confiderable. Where merchants posses great flocks, whether reprefented by few or many pieces of metal, it must frequently happen, that, when they either become -tired of bufinefs, or leave heirs unwilling or unfit to engage in commerce, 'a great proportion of these riches naturally feeks an annual and fecure revenue. The plenty diminifhes the price, and makes the lenders accept of a low interest. This confideration obliges many to keep their flock employed in trade, and rather be content with low profits, than difpole of their money at an undervalue. On the other hand, when commerce has become extensive, and employs large stocks, there must arife rivalships among the merchants, which diminish the profits of trade, at the fame time that they encrease the trade itself. The low profits of merchandize induce the merchants to accept more willingly of a low interest, when they leave off bufinefs, and begin to indulge themfelves in ease and indolence. It is needless, therefore, to enquire which of these circumstances, to wit, low intereft or low profits, is the cause, and which the effect? They both arife from an extensive commerce, and mu-Co Vol. I. tually Y tually forward each other. No man will accept of low profits, where he can have high intereft; and no man will accept of low intereft, where he can have high An extensive commerce, by producing large profits. ftocks, diminishes both interest and profits; and is always affifted, in its diminution of the one, by the proportional finking of the other. I may add, that, as low profits arile from the encrease of commerce and industry, they ferve in their turn to its farther encrease. by rendering the commodities cheaper, encouraging the confumption, and heightening the industry. And thus. if we confider the whole connexion of caufes and effects. interest is the barometer of the state, and its lowness is a fign almost infallible of the flourishing condition of a people. It proves the encrease of industry, and its prompt circulation through the whole ftate, little inferior to a demonstration. And though, perhaps, it may not be impossible but a fudden and a great check to commerce may have a momentary effect of the fame kind, by throwing fo many flocks out of trade; it must be at. tended with fuch mifery and want of employment in the poor, that, befides its fhort duration, it will not be poffible to miftake the one cafe for the other.

Digitized by Google

ĖSSAY IV.

Those who have afferted, that the plenty of money was the cause of low interest, seem to have taken a collateral effect for a cause; since the same industry, which finks the interest, commonly acquires great abundance of the precious metals. A variety of fine manufactures, with vigilant enterprising merchants, will soon draw money to a state, if it be any where to be found in the world. The same cause, by multiplying the conveniencies of life, and encreasing industry, collects great siches into the hands of persons, who are not proprietors of land, and produces, by that means, a lowness of intereft. But though both these effects, plenty of money and low interest, naturally arise from commerce and induftry, they are altogether independent of each other. For suppose a nation removed into the Pacific ocean. without any foreign commerce, or any knowledge of navigation : Suppofe, that this nation poffelles always the fame flock of coin, but is continually encreasing in its numbers and industry: It is evident, that the price of every commodity must gradually diminish in that kingdom; fince it is the proportion between money and any fpecies of goods, which fixes their mutual value : and, upon the prefent fuppolition, the conveniencies of life become every day more abundant, without any alteration in the current specie. A lefs quantity of money, therefore, among this people, will make a rich man, during the times of industry, than would fuffice to that purpose. in ignorant and flothful ages. Lefs money will build a house, portion a daughter, buy an estate, support a manufactory, or maintain a family and equipage. Thefe are the uses for which men borrow money; and therefore, the greater or lefs quantity of it in a flate has no influence on the interest. But it is evident, that the greater or lefs flock of labour and commodities must have a great influence : fince we really and in effect borrow thefe, when we take money upon interest. It is true, when commerce is extended all over the globe, the most industrious nations always abound most with the precious metals : So that low interest and plenty of money are in fact almost infeparable. But still it is of confequence to know the principle whence any phenomenon arifes, and to diffinguish between a cause and a concomitant effect. Befides that the fpeculation is curious, it may frequently be of use in the conduct of public affairs. At least, it must be owned, that nothing can be of more use than to Y 2 improve, improve, by practice, the method of reafoning on these fubjects, which of all others are the most important; though they are commonly treated in the loosess and most careless manner.

Digitized by Google .

OF INTEREST.

323

Digitized by Google

Another reason of this popular mistake with regard to the cause of low interest, seems to be the instance of some nations; where, after a sudden acquisition of money or of the precious metals, by means of foreign conquest, the interest has fallen, not only among them, but in all the neighbouring flates, as soon as that money was disperfed, and had infinuated itself into every corner. Thus, interest in SPAIN sell near a half immediately after the discovery of the WEST INDIES, as we are informed by GARCILASSO DE LA VEGA: And it has been ever fince gradually finking in every kingdom of EUROPE. Interest in ROME, after the conquest of EGYPT, fell from 6 to 4 per cent. as we learn from DION *.

The caufes of the finking of intereft, upon fuch an event, feem different in the conquering country and in the neighbouring flates; but in neither of them can we juftly afcribe that effect merely to the encreafe of gold and filver.

In the conquering country, it is natural to imagine, that this new acquifition of money will fall into a few hands, and be gathered into large fums, which feek a fecure revenue, either by the purchafe of land, or by intereft; and confequently the fame effect follows, for a little time, as if there had been a great acceffion of induftry and commerce. The increase of lenders above the borrowers finks the interest; and fo much the faster, if those, who have acquired those large fums, find no industry or commerce in the state, and no method of employing their money but by lending it at interest. But

* Lib. ii.

Digitized by Google

after

after this new mafs of gold and filver has been digefted, and has circulated through the whole flate, affairs will foon return to their former fituation; while the landlords and new money-holders, living idly, fquander above their income; and the former daily contrast debt, and the latter encroach on their flock till its final extinction. The whole money may flill be in the flate, and make itfelf felt by the increase of prices: But not being now collected into any large maftes or flocks, the difproportion between the borrowers and lenders is the fame as formerly, and confequently the high intereft returns.

Accordingly we find, in ROME, that, fo early as TIBE-RIUS'S time, intereft had again mounted to 6 * per cent. though no accident had happened to drain the empire of money. In TRAJAN'S time, money lent on mortgages in ITALY, bore 6 per cent. †; on common fecurities in BITHYNIA, 12 ‡. And if intereft in SPAIN has not rifen to its old pitch; this can be afcribed to nothing but the continuance of the fame caufe that funk it, to wit, the large fortunes continually made in the INDIES, which come over to SPAIN from time to time, and fupply the demand of the borrowers. By this accidental and extraneous caufe, more money is to be lent in SPAIN, that is, more money is collected into large fums, than would otherwife be found in a flate, where there are fo little commerce and induftry.

As to the reduction of interest, which has followed in ENGLAND, FRANCE, and other kingdoms of EUROPE, that have no mines, it has been gradual; and has not proceeded from the encrease of money, confidered merely in itself: but from that of industry, which is the natural > * COLUMELLA, lib. iii. cap. 3. † PLINII epiff. lib. vii. ep. 18. ‡ Id. lib. x. ep. 62.

> > Υ3

Digitized by Google

effect

effect of the former encrease, in that interval, before it raises the price of labour and provisions. For to return to the foregoing supposition; if the industry of ENGLAND had rifen as much from other caufes (and that rife might eafily have happened, though the flock of money had remained the fame), must not all the fame confequences have followed, which we observe at prefent? The fame people would, in that cafe, be found in the kingdom, the fame commodities, the fame industry, manufactures, and commerce; and confequently the fame merchants, with the fame flocks, that is, with the fame command over labour and commodities, only reprefented by a fmaller number of white or yellow pieces; which being a circumstance of no moment, would only affect the waggoner, porter, and trunk-maker. Luxury, therefore, manufactures, arts, industry, frugality, flourishing equally as at prefent, it is evident, that interest must also have been as low; fince that is the necesfary refult of all these circumstances; so far as they determine the profits of commerce, and the proportion between the borrowers and lenders in any flate.

Digitized by Google

(327)

ESSAY V.

Of the BALANCE of TRADE.

I T is very ufual, in nations ignorant of the nature of commerce, to prohibit the exportation of commodities, and to preferve among themfelves whatever they think valuable and ufeful. They do not confider, that, in this prohibition, they act directly contrary to their intention; and that the more is exported of any commodity, the more will be raifed at home, of which they themfelves will always have the first offer.

It is well known to the learned, that the ancient laws of ATHENS rendered the exportation of figs criminal; that being fuppofed a fpecies of fruit fo excellent in ATTICA, that the ATHENIANS deemed it too delicious for the palate of any foreigner. And in this ridiculous prohibition they were fo much in earneft, that informers were thence called fycophants among them, from two GREEK words, which fignify figs and *difcoverer. There are proofs in many old acts of parliament of the fame ignorance in the nature of commerce, particularly in the reign of EDWARD III. And to this day, in FRANCE, the exportation of corn is almoft always prohibited; in order, as they fay, to prevent famines; though it is evident, that nothing contributes more to

> • PLUT. De Curiofitate. Y 4

> > Digitized by Google

- the

the frequent famines, which fo much diffres that fertile country.

The fame jealous fear, with regard to money, has alfo prevailed among feveral nations; and it required both reafon and experience to convince any people, that thefe prohibitions ferve to no other purpofe than to raife the exchange against them, and produce a still greater exportation.

These errors, one may fay, are gross and palpable: But there still prevails, even in nations well acquainted with commerce, a strong jealous with regard to the balance of trade, and a fear, that all their gold and filver may be leaving them. This seems to me, almost in every case, a groundless apprehension; and I should as foon dread, that all our springs and rivers should be exhausted, as that money should abandon a kingdom where there are people and industry. Let us carefully preferve these latter advantages; and we need never be apprehensive of losing the former.

It is eafy to obferve, that all calculations concerning the balance of trade are founded on very uncertain facts and fuppofitions. The cuftom-houfe books are allowed to be an infufficient ground of reafoning; nor is the rate of exchange much better; unlefs we confider it with all nations, and know alfo the proportions of the feveral fums remitted; which one may fafely pronounce impoffible. Every man, who has ever reafoned on this fubject, has always proved his theory, whatever it was, by facts and calculations, and by an enumeration of all the commodities fent to all foreign kingdoms.

The writings of Mr. Gee ftruck the nation with an univerfal panic, when they faw it plainly demonstrated, by a detail of particulars, that the balance was against them them for fo confiderable a fum as must leave them without a fingle shilling in five or fix years. But luckily, twenty years have fince elapsed, with an expensive foreign war; yet is it commonly supposed, that money is still more plentiful among us than in any former period.

Nothing can be more entertaining on this head than Dr. SwIFT; an author fo quick in difcerning the miftakes and absurdities of others. He fays, in his fort view of the state of IRELAND, that the whole cash of that kingdom formerly amounted but to 500,0001.; that out of this the IRISH remitted every year a neat million to ENG-LAND, and had fcarcely any other fource from which they could compensate themselves, and little other foreign trade than the importation of FRENCH wines, for which. they paid ready money. The confequence of this fituation, which must be owned to be difadvantageous, was, that, in a course of three years, the current money of IRELAND, from 500,000 l. was reduced to lefs than And at prefent, I suppose, in a course of 30 years two. it is abfolutely nothing. Yet I know not how, that opinion of the advance of riches in IRELAND, which gave the Doctor fo much indignation, feems still to continue, and gain ground with every body.

In fhort, this apprehension of the wrong balance of trade, appears of fuch a nature, that it discovers itself, wherever one is out of humour with the ministry, or is in low spirits; and as it can never be refuted by a particular detail of all the exports, which counterbalance the imports, it may here be proper to form a general argument, that may prove the impossibility of this event, as long as we preferve our people and our industry.

Suppose four-fifths of all the money in GREAT BRITAIN to be annihilated in one night, and the nation reduced to the the fame condition, with regard to fpecie, as in the reigns of the HARRYS and EDWARDS, what would be the confequence? Muft not the price of all labour and commodities fink in proportion, and every thing be fold as cheap as they were in those ages? What nation could then dispute with us in any foreign market, or pretend to navigate or to fell manufactures at the fame price, which to us would afford fufficient profit? In how little time, therefore, muftthis bring back the money which we had loss, and raise us to the level of all the neighbouring nations? Where, after we have arrived, we immediately lose the advantage of the cheapness of labour and commodities; and the farther flowing in of money is ftopped by our fulnels and repletion.

Again, fuppofe, that all the money of GREAT BRITAIN were multiplied fivefold in a night, muft not the contrary effect follow? Muft not all labour and commodities rife to fuch an exorbitant height, that no neighbouring nations could afford to buy from us; while their commodities, on the other hand, became comparatively fo cheap, that, in fpite of all the laws which could be formed, they would be run in upon us, and our money flow out; till we fall to a level with foreigners, and lofe that great fuperiority of riches, which had laid us under fuch difadvantages?

Now, it is evident, that the fame caufes, which would correct these exorbitant inequalities, were they to happen miraculously, must prevent their happening in the common course of nature, and must for ever, in all neighbouring nations, preserve money nearly proportionable to the art and industry of each nation. All water, whereever it communicates, remains always at a level. Ask naturalists the reason; they tell you, that, were it to be raifed raifed in any one place, the fuperior gravity of that part not being balanced, must deprefs it, till it meet a counterpoife; and that the fame caufe, which redreffes the inequality when it happens, must for ever prevent it, without fome violent external operation *.

Digitized by Google

Can one imagine, that it had ever been poffible, by any laws, or even by any art or industry, to have kept all the money in SPAIN, which the galleons have brought from the INDIES? Or that all commodities could be fold in FRANCE for a tenth of the price which they would yield on the other fide of the PYRENEES, without finding their way thither, and draining from that immense treasure? What other reason, indeed, is there, why all nations, at present, gain in their trade with SPAIN and PORTUGAL; but because it is impossible to heap up money, more than any fluid, beyond its proper level? The fovereigns of these countries have shown, that they wanted-not inclination to keep their gold and filver to themsfelves, had it been in any degree practicable.

But as any body of water may be raifed above the level of the furrounding element, if the former has no communication with the latter; fo in money, if the communication be cut off, by any material or phyfical impediment (for all laws alone are ineffectual), there may, in fuch a cafe, be a very great inequality of money. Thus the immenfe diffance of CHINA, together with the monopolies of our INDIA companies, obftructing the communication, preferve in EUROPE the gold and filver, efpe-

* There is another caule, though more limited in its operation, which checks the wrong balance of trade, to every particular nation to which the kingdom trades. When we import more goods than we export, the exchange turns againft us, and this becomes a new encouragement to export; as much as the charge of carriage and infurance of the money which becomes doe would amount to. For the exchange can never rife but a little bigher than that fum,

Digitized by Google

cially

332

cially the latter, in much greater plenty than they are found in that kingdom. But, notwithstanding this great obstruction, the force of the causes above mentioned is ftill evident. The skill and ingenuity of EUROPE in general furpafies perhaps that of CHINA, with regard to manual arts and manufactures ; yet are we never able to trade thither without great difadvantage. And were it not for the continual recruits, which we receive from AMERICA. money would foon fink in EUROPE, and rife in CHINA, till it came nearly to a level in both places. Nor can any reasonable man doubt, but that industrious nation, were they as near us as POLAND or BARBARY, would drain us of the overplus of our specie, and draw to themfelves a larger fhare of the WEST INDIAN treasures. We need not have recourse to a physical attraction, in order to explain the neceffity of this operation. There is a moral attraction, arifing from the interests and passions of men, which is full as potent and infallible.

How is the balance kept in the provinces of every kingdom among themfelves, but by the force of this principle, which makes it impossible for money to lofe its level, and either to rife or fink beyond the proportion of the labour and commodities which are in each province? Did not long experience make people eafy on this head, what a fund of gloomy reflections might calculations afford to a melancholy YORKSHIREMAN, while he computed and magnified the fums drawn to LONDON by taxes, absentees, commodities, and found on comparifon the oppofite articles fo much inferior ? And no doubt, had the Heptarchy subsisted in ENGLAND, the legiflature of each flate had been continually alarmed by the fear of a wrong balance; and as it is probable that the mutual hatred of these states would have been extremely violent on account of their close neighbourhood. they

2

Digitized by Google

they would have loaded and opprefied all commetce, by a jealous and fuperfluous caution. Since the union has removed the barriers between SCOTLAND and ENGLAND, which of these nations gains from the other by this free commerce? Or if the former kingdom has received any encrease of riches, can it reasonably be accounted for by any thing but the encrease of its art and industry? It was a common apprehension in ENGLAND, before the union, as we learn from L'ABBE DU Bos +, that Scor-LAND would soon drain them of their treasure, were an open trade allowed; and on the other fide the TWEED a contrary apprehension prevailed: With what justice in both, time has shown.

What happens in fmall portions of mankind, muft take place in greater. The provinces of the ROMAN empire, no doubt, kept their balance with each other. and with ITALY, independent of the legislature ; as much as the feveral counties of GREAT BRITAIN, or the feveral parifhes of each county. And any man who travels over EUROPE at this day, may fee, by the prices of commodities, that money, in spite of the absurd jealousy of princes and flates, has brought itfelf nearly to a level : and that the difference between one kingdom and another is not greater in this respect, than it is often between different provinces of the fame kingdom. Men naturally flock to capital cities, fea-ports, and navigable rivers. There we find more men, more industry, more commodities, and confequently more money; but still the latter difference holds proportion with the former, and the level is preferved *.

+ Les interets d'ANGLETERRE mal entendus.

Digitized by Google

* See NOTE [R].

Our

334

Our jealoufy and our hatred of FRANCE are without bounds; and the former fentiment, at least, must be acknowledged reafonable and well-grounded. Thefe paffions have occasioned innumerable barriers and obftructions upon commerce, where we are accused of being commonly the aggreffors. But what have we gained by the bargain? We loft the FRENCH market for our woollen manufactures, and transferred the commerce of wine to SPAIN and PORTUGAL, where we buy worfe liquor at a higher price. There are few ENGLISHMEN who would not think their country abfolutely ruined, were FRENCH wines fold in ENGLAND fo cheap and in fuch abundance as to supplant, in some measure, all ale; and home-brewed liquors: But would we lay afide prejudice, it would not be difficult to prove, that nothing could be more innocent, perhaps advantageous. Each new acre of vineyard planted in FRANCE, in order to fupply ENGLAND with wine, would make it requisite for the FRENCH to take the produce of an ENGLISH acre, fown in wheat or barley, in order to fubfift themfelves; and it is evident, that we fhould thereby get command of the better commodity.

There are many edicits of the FRENCH king, prohibiting the planting of new vineyards, and ordering all those which are lately planted to be grubbed up: So fensible are they, in that country, of the fuperior value of corn, above every other product.

Mareschal VAUBAN complains often, and with reason, of the absurd duties which load the entry of those wines of LANGUEDOC, GUIENNE, and other southern provinces, that are imported into BRITANNY and NORMAN-DY. He entertained no doubt but these latter provinces could preferve their balance, notwithstanding the open commerce which he recommends. And it is evident, that that a few leagues more navigation to ENGLAND would make no difference; or if it did, that it must operate alike on the commodities of both kingdoms.

Digitized by Google

There is indeed one expedient by which it is poffible to fink, and another by which we may raife money beyond its natural level in any kingdom; but these cases, when examined, will be found to refolve into our general theory, and to bring additional authority to it.

I fcarcely know any method of finking money below its level, but those institutions of banks, funds, and papercredit, which are fo much practifed in this kingdom. These render paper equivalent to money, circulate it throughout the whole flate, make it fupply the place of gold and filver, raife proportionably the price of labour and commodities, and by that means either banish a great part of those precious metals, or prevent their farther encrease. What can be more short-fighted than our reasonings on this head ? We fancy, because an individual would be much richer, were his flock of money doubled. that the fame good effect would follow were the money of every one encreafed; not confidering, that this would raife as much the price of every commodity. and reduce every man in time to the fame condition as before. It is only in our public negociations and tranfactions with foreigners, that a greater flock of money is advantageous; and as our paper is there absolutely infignificant, we feel, by its means, all the ill effects arifing from a great abundance of money, without reaping any of the advantages *.

* We observed in Effay III. that money, when encreasing, gives encouregement to industry, during the interval between the encrease of money and rise of the prices. A good effect of this nature may follow too from papereredit; but it is dangerous to precipitate matters, at the risk of losing all by the failing of that credit, as must happen upon any violent shock in public affairs.

Digitized by Google

Suppofe

ESSAY V:

Suppose that there are 12 millions of paper, which circulate in the kingdom as money (for we are not to imagine, that all our enormous funds are employed in that fhape), and suppose the real cash of the kingdom to be 18 millions : Here is a flate which is found by experience to be able to hold a flock of 30 millions. I fay, if it be able to hold it, it must of necessity have acquired it in gold and filver, had we not obstructed the entrance of these metals by this new invention of paper. Whence would it have acquired that fum? From all the kingdoms of the world. But why? Becaufe, if you remove these 12 millions, money in this fate is below its level, compared with our neighbours; and we mult immediately draw from all of them, till we be full and faturate, fo to fpeak, and can hold no more. By our prefent politics we are as careful to fuff the nation with this fine commodity of bank-bills and chequer-notes, as if we were afraid of being overburthened with the precious metals.

It is not to be doubted, but the great plenty of bullion in FRANCE is, in a great measure, owing to the want of paper-credit. The FRENCH have no banks: Merchants bills do not there circulate as with us: Usury or lending on interest is not directly permitted; fo that many have large fums in their coffers: Great quantities of plate are used in private houses; and all the churches are full of it. By this means, provisions and labour still remain cheaper among them, than in nations that are not half fo rich in gold and filver. The advantages of this fituation, in point of trade as well as in great public emergencies, are too evident to be disputed.

The fame fashion a few years ago prevailed in GENOA, which still has place in ENGLAND and HOLLAND, of using fervices of CHINA-ware instead of plate; but the fenate, forefeeing the confequence, prohibited the use of that that brittle commodity beyond a certain extent; while the use of filver-plate was left unlimited. And I suppose, in their late distresses, they felt the good effect of this ordinance. Our tax on plate is, perhaps, in this view, fomewhat impolitic.

Before the introduction of paper-money into our colonies, they had gold and filver fufficient for their circulation. Since the introduction of that commodity, the leaft inconveniency that has followed is the total banifhment of the precious metals. And after the abolition of paper, can it be doubted but money will return, while these colonies posses manufactures and commodities, the only thing valuable in commerce, and for whose sake alone all men defire money ?

What pity LYCURCUS did not think of paper-credit, when he wanted to banish gold and filver from SPARTA! It would have ferved his purpole better than the lumps of iron he made use of as money; and would also have prevented more effectually all commerce with strangers, as being of so much less real and intrinsic value.

It must, however, be confessed, that, as all these queftions of trade and money are extremely complicated. there are certain lights, in which this fubject may be placed, fo as to reprefent the advantages of paper-credit and banks to be fuperior to their difadyantages. That they banish specie and bullion from a state is undoubtedly true; and whoever looks no farther than this circumflance does well to condemn them; but specie and bullion are not of fo great confequence as not to admit of a compensation, and even an overbalance from the encrease of industry and of credit, which may be promoted by the right use of paper-money. It is well known of what advantage it is to a merchant to be able to discount his bills V05. I. Z upon upon occasion; and every thing that facilitates this foecies of traffic is favourable to the general commerce of a state. But private bankers are enabled to give such credit by the credit they receive from the depositing of money in their fhops; and the bank of ENGLAND in the fame manner, from the liberty it has to iffue its notes in all payments. There was an invention of this kind, which was fallen upon fome years ago by the banks of EDIN-BURGH; and which, as it is one of the most ingenious ideas that has been executed in commerce, has also been thought advantageous to SCOTLAND. It is there called a BANK-CREDIT; and is of this nature. A man goes to the bank and finds furety to the amount, we shall suppose, of a thousand pounds. This money, or any part of it, he has the liberty of drawing out whenever he pleafes, and he pays only the ordinary interest for it, while it is in his hands. He may, when he pleafes, repay any fum fo fmall as twenty pounds, and the interest is difcounted from the very day of the repayment. The advantages, refulting from this contrivance, are manifold. As a man may find furety nearly to the amount of his fubstance, and his bank-credit is equivalent to ready money, a merchant does hereby in a manner coin his houses, his household furniture, the goods in his warehouse, the foreign debts due to him, his ships at sea; and can, upon occafion, employ them in all payments, as if they were the current money of the country. If a man borrow a thousand pounds from a private hand, besides that it is not always to be found when required, he pays intereft for it, whether he be using it or not: His bankcredit cofts him nothing except during the very moment in which it is of fervice to him : And this circumstance is of equal advantage as if he had borrowed money at much lower interest. Merchants, likewise, from this invention. 7 invention, acquire a great facility in fupporting each other's credit, which is a confiderable fecurity against bankruptcies. A man, when his own bank-credit is exhaufted, goes to any of his neighbours who is not in the fame condition; and he gets the money, which he replaces at his convenience.

Digitized by Google

After this practice had taken place during fome years at EDINBURGH, feveral companies of merchants at GLASGOW carried the matter farther. They affociated themfelves into different banks, and iffued notes to low as ten fhillings, which they used in all payments for goods. manufactures, tradefmen's labour of all kinds ; and thefe notes, from the established credit of the companies, passed as money in all payments throughout the country. By this means, a flock of five thousand pounds was able to perform the fame operations as if it were fix or feven ; and merchants were thereby enabled to trade to agreater extent. and to require lefs profit in all their transactions. But whatever other advantages refult from these inventions, it must still be allowed that, befides giving too great facility to credit, which is dangerous, they banish the precious metals; and nothing can be a more evident proof of it, than a comparison of the past and present condition of SCOTLAND in that particular. It was found, upon the recoinage made after the union, that there was near a million of fpecie in that country: But notwithstanding the great encrease of riches, commerce, and manufactures of all kinds, it is thought, that, even where there is no extraordinary drain made by ENGLAND, the current fpecie will not now amount to a third of that fum.

But as our projects of paper-credit are almost the only expedient, by which we can fink money below its level; fo, in my opinion, the only expedient by which we can raife money above it, is a practice which we fhould all exclaim against as destructive, namely, the gathering of large large fums into a public treasure, locking them up, and absolutely preventing their circulation. The fluid, not communicating with the neighbouring element, may, by fuch an artifice, be railed to what height we pleafe. To prove this, we need only return to our first supposition, of annihilating the half or any part of our cash; where we found, that the immediate confequence of fuch an event would be the attraction of an equal fum from all the neighbouring kingdoms. Nor does there feem to be any neceffary bounds fet, by the nature of things, to this practice of hoarding. A fmall city, like GENEVA, continuing this policy for ages, might ingrofs nine-tenths of the money in EUROPE. There feems, indeed, in the nature of man, an invincible obstacle to that immense growth of riches. A weak state, with an enormous treafure, will foon become a prey to fome of its poorer, but more powerful neighbours. A great state would diffipate its wealth in dangerous and ill-concerted projects; and probably deftroy, with it, what is much more valuable, the industry, morals, and numbers of its people. The fluid, in this cafe, raifed to too great a height, burfts and deftroys the vefiel that contains it; and mixing itfelf with the furrounding element, foon falls to its proper level.

Z 2

Digitized by Google

So little are we commonly acquainted with this principle, that, though all hiftorians agree in relating uniformly fo recent an event, as the immense treasfure amafied by HARRY VII. (which they make amount to 2,700,000 pounds) we rather reject their concurring testimony, than admit of a fact, which agrees so ill with our inveterate prejudices. It is indeed probable, that this fum might be three-fourths of all the money in ENG-LAND. But where is the difficulty in conceiving, that such a sum might be amassed in twenty years, by a cunning, rapacious, frugal, and almost absolute monarch? Nor is it probable, that the diminution of circulating money was ever ever fenfibly felt by the people, or ever did them any prejudice. The finking of the prices of all commodities would immediately replace it, by giving ENGLAND the advantage in its commerce with the neighbouring kingdoms.

Have we not an inftance, in the fmall republic of ATHENS with its allies, who, in about fifty years, between the MEDIAN and PELOPONNESIAN wars, amaffed a fum not much inferior to that of HARRY VII.? For all the GREEK hiftorians * and orators + agree, that the ATHE-NIANS collected in the citadel more than 10,000 talents, which they afterwards diffipated to their own ruin, in rash and imprudent enterprizes. But when this money was fet a running, and began to communicate with the furrounding fluid; what was the confequence ? Did it remain in the flate ? No. For we find, by the memorable cenfus mentioned by DEMOSTHENES ‡ and POLY-BIUS §, that, in about fifty years afterwards, the whole value of the republic, comprehending lands, houfes, commodities, flaves, and money, was lefs than 6000 talents.

What an ambitious high-fpirited people was this, to collect and keep in their treasury, with a view to conquests, a sum, which it was every day in the power of the citizens, by a single vote, to distribute among themfelves, and which would have gone near to triple the riches of every individual! For we must observe, that the numbers and private riches of the ATHENIANS are faid, by ancient writers, to have been no greater at the

1 Ties Supposedes

§ Lib. ii. cap. 62. beginning

Digitized by Google

- 341

^{*} THUCYDIDES, lib. ii, and DIOD. SIC. lib. xii.

[†] Vid. Æschinis a DEMOSTHENIS Epiff.

Z3

beginning of the PELOPONNESIAN war, than at the beginning of the MACEDONIAN.

Money was little more plentiful in GREECE during the age of PHILIP and PERSEUS, than in ENGLAND during that of HARRY VII. : Yet these two monarchs in thirty years * collected from the small kingdom of MA-CEDON, a larger treasure than that of the ENGLISH monarch. PAULUS ÆMILIUS brought to ROME about 1,700,000 pounds Starling +. PLINY fays, 2,400,000 ‡. And that was but a part of the MACEDONIAN treasure, The rest was diffipated by the resistance and slight of PERSEUS §.

We may learn from STANIAN, that the canton of BERNE had 300,000 pounds lent at intereft, and had above fix times as much in their treasury. Here then is a fum hoarded of 1,800,000 pounds Sterling, which is at least quadruple what should naturally circulate in such a petty flate; and yet no one, who travels in the PAIS DE VAUX, or any part of that canton, observes any want of money more than could be supposed in a country of that extent, foil, and situation. On the contrary, there are fcarce any inland provinces in the continent of FRANCE or GERMANY, where the inhabitants are at this time fo opulent, though that canton has vasily encreased its treasure fince 1714, the time when STANIAN wrote his judicious account of SWITZERLAND [].

The account given by APPIAN ¶ of the treasure of the PTOLEMIES, is fo prodigious, that one cannot admit of

* TITI LIVII, lib. xlv. cap. 40. † VEL. PATERC. lib. i. cap. 9.

‡ Lib. xxxiii. c2p. 3. § TITI l

§ TITI LIVII, ibid.

The poverty which STANIAN speaks of is only to be seen in the most mountainous cantons, where there is no commodity to bring money. And even there the people are not poorer than in the diocese of SALTSA pyrch on the one hand, or SAVOY on the other.

Digitized by Google

·· TPropp

İtj

312

it; and fo much the lefs, becaufe the hiftorian fays, that the other fuccessors of ALEXANDER were also frugal, and had many of them treasures not much inferior. For this faving humour of the neighbouring princes must neceffarily have checked the frugality of the EGYPTIAN monarchs, according to the foregoing theory. The fum he mentions is 740,000 talents, or 191,166,666 pounds 13 fhillings and 4 pence, according to Dr. ARBUTH-NOT's computation. And yet APPIAN fays, that he extracted his account from the public records; and he was himfelf a native of ALEXANDRIA.

From these principles we may learn what judgment we ought to form of those numberless bars, obstructions, and imposts, which all nations of EUROPE, and none more than ENGLAND, have put upon trade; from an exorbitant defire of amaffing money, which never will heap up beyond its level, while it circulates; or from an ill-grounded apprehension of losing their specie, which never will fink below it. Could any thing fcatter our riches, it would be fuch impolitic contrivances. But this general ill effect, however, refults from them, that they deprive neighbouring nations of that free communication and exchange which the Author of the world has intended, by giving them foils, climates, and geniufes, fo different from each other.

Our modern politics embrace the only method of banishing money, the using of paper-credit; they reject the only method of amaffing it, the practice of hoarding; and they adopt a hundred contrivances, which ferve to no purpose but to check industry, and rob ourselves and our neighbours of the common benefits of art and nature.

All taxes, however, upon foreign commodities, are not to be regarded as prejudicial or useles, but those only which

ΖŁ

Digitized by Google

ESSAY V.

which are founded on the jealoufy above-mentioned. A tax on German linen encourages home manufactures, and thereby multiplies our people and industry. A tax on brandy encreases the fale of rum, and supports our fouthern colonies. And as it is neceffary, that imposts fhould be levied for the fupport of government, it may be thought more convenient to lay them on foreign commodities, which can eafily be intercepted at the port, and fubjected to the impost. We ought, however, always to remmeber the maxim of Dr. Swift, That, in the arithmetic of the customs, two and two make not four, but often make only one. It can fcarcely be doubted, but if the duties on wine were lowered to a third, they would yield much more to the government than at present : Our people might thereby afford to drink commonly a better and more wholefome liquor; and no prejudice would enfue to the balance of trade, of which we are so jealous. The manufacture of ale beyond the agriculture is but inconfiderable, and gives employment to few hands. The transport of wine and corn would not be much inferior.

But are there not frequent inftances, you will fay, of ftates and kingdoms, which were formerly rich and opulent, and are now poor and beggarly? Has not the money left them, with which they formerly abounded? I anfwer, If they lofe their trade, induftry, and people, they cannot expect to keep their gold and filver : For these precious metals will hold proportion to the former advantages. When LISBON and AMSTERDAM got the EAST-INDIA trade from VENICE and GENOA, they alfo got the profits and money which arofe from it. Where the feat of government is transferred, where expensive armies are maintained at a diftance, where great funds are possed by foreigners; there naturally follows from from these causes a diminution of the specie. But these we may observe, are violent and forcible methods of carrying away money, and are in time commonly attended with the transport of people and industry. But where these remain, and the drain is not continued, the money always finds its way back again, by a hundred canals, of which we have no notion or fufpicion. What immenfe treasures have been spent, by so many nations, in FLAN-DERS. fince the revolution, in the course of three long wars ? More money perhaps than the half of what is at prefent in EUROPE, But what has now become of it? Is it in the narrow compais of the AUSTRIAN provinces? No. furely: It has most of it returned to the feveral countries whence it came, and has followed that art and industry, by which at first it was acquired. For above a thousand years, 'the money of EUROPE has been flowing to ROME, by an open and fenfible current; but it has been emptied by many fecret and infenfible canals : And the want of industry and commerce renders at present the papal dominions the poorest territory in all ITALY.

Digitized by Google

In fhort, a government has great reason to preferve with care its people and its manufactures. Its money, it may fafely truft to the course of human affairs, without fear or jealously. Or if it ever give attention to this latter circumstance, it ought only to be so far as it affects the former.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

(347)

ESSAY VI.

Of the JEALOUSY of TRADE.

TAVING endeavoured to remove one fpecies of illfounded jealoufy, which is fo prevalent among commercial nations, it may not be amifs to mention another, which feems equally groundlefs. Nothing is more usual, among states which have made some advances in commerce, than to look on the progress of their neighbours with a fufpicious eye, to confider all trading ftates as their rivals, and to fuppofe that it is impoffible for any of them to flourish, but at their expence. In oppolition to this narrow and malignant opinion. I will venture to affert, that the encrease of riches and commerce in any one nation, inflead of hurting, commonly promotes the riches and commerce of all its neighbours; and that a flate can fcarcely carry its trade and induftry very far, where all the furrounding flates are buried in ignorance, floth, and barbarifm.

It is obvious, that the domeflic induftry of a people cannot be hurt by the greatest prosperity of their neighbours; and as this branch of commerce is undoubtedly the most important in any extensive kingdom, we are fo far removed from all reason of jealously. But I go farther, and observe, that where an open communication is preferved among nations, it is impossible but the domestic

Digitized by Google

ESSAY VI.

meltic industry of every one must receive an encrease from the improvements of the others. Compare the situation of GREAT BRITAIN at present, with what it was two centuries ago. All the arts both of agriculture and manufactures were then extremely rude and imperfect. Every improvement, which we have fince made, has arisen from our imitation of foreigners; and we ought fo far to effeem it happy, that they had previoufly made advances in arts and ingenuity. But this intercourse is still upheld to our great advantage: Notwithstanding the advanced state of our manufactures, we daily adopt, in every art, the inventions and improvements of our neighbours. The commodity is first imported from abroad, to our great discontent, while we imagine that it drains us of our money : Afterwards, the art itfelf is gradually imported, to our visible advantage : Yet we continue still to repine, that our neighbours should possess any art, industry, and invention; forgetting that, had they not first instructed us, we should have been at prefent barbarians; and did they not still continue their instructions, the arts must fall into a state of languor, and lofe that emulation and novelty, which contribute fo much to their advancement.

The encrease of domestic industry lays the foundation of foreign commerce. Where a great number of commodities are raised and perfected for the home-market, there will always be found fome which can be experted with advantage. But if our neighbours have no art or cultivation, they cannot take them; because they will have nothing to give in exchange. In this respect, states are in the fame condition as individuals. A fingle man can fcarcely be industrious, where all his fellow-citizens are idle. The riches of the several members of a community contribute to encrease my riches, whatever profession feilion I may follow. They confume the produce of my industry, and afford me the produce of theirs in return.

Of the JEALOUSY of TRADE.

Nor needs any flate entertain apprehenfions, that their neighbours will improve to fuch a degree in every art and manufacture, as to have no demand from them. Nature. by giving a diversity of geniuses, climates, and foils, to different nations, has fecured their mutual intercourfe and commerce, as long as they all remain industrious and civilized. Nay, the more the arts encrease in any state, the more will be its demands from its industrious neigh-The inhabitants, having become opulent and hours. skilful, defire to have every commodity in the utmost perfection; and as they have plenty of commodities to give in exchange, they make large importations from every foreign country. The industry of the nations, from whom they import, receives encouragement: Their own is also encreased, by the sale of the commodities which they give in exchange.

But what if a nation has any ftaple commodity, fuch as the woollen manufacture is in ENGLAND? Muft not the interfering of our neighbours in that manufacture be a lofs to us? I answer, that, when any commodity is denominated the staple of a kingdom, it is supposed that this kingdom has fome peculiar and natural advantages for raifing the commodity; and if, notwithstanding these advantages, they lofe fuch a manufacture, they ought to blame their own idleness, or bad government, not the induftry of their neighbours. It ought also to be confidered. that, by the encrease of industry among the neighbouring nations, the confumption of every particular species of commodity is also encreased; and though foreign manufactures interfere with them in the market, the demand for their product may still continue, or even encrease. And thould it diminish, ought the confequence to be effeemed ſo fo fatal? If the spirit of industry be preferved, it may eafily be diverted from one branch to another ; and the manufacturers of wool, for inftance, be employed in linen, filk, iron, or any other commodities, for which there appears to be a demand. We need not apprehend, that all the objects of industry will be exhausted, or that our manufacturers, while they remain on an equal footing with those of our neighbours, will be in danger of wanting employment. The emulation among rival nations ferves rather to keep industry alive in all of them : And any people is happier who poffers a variety of manufactures, than if they enjoyed one fingle great manufacture, in which they are all employed. Their fituation is lefs precarious; and they will feel lefs fenfibly those revolutions and uncertainties, to which every particular branch of commerce will always be exposed.

The only commercial state, that ought to dread the improvements and industry of their neighbours, is such a one as the DUTCH, who enjoying no extent of land, nor possefing any number of native commodities, flourish only by their being the brokers, and factors, and carriers Such a people may naturally apprehend, that, of others. as foon as the neighbouring flates come to know and purfue their interest, they will take into their own hands the management of their affairs, and deprive their brokers of that profit, which they formerly reaped from it. Buť though this confequence may naturally be dreaded, it is very long before it takes place; and by art and industry it may be warded off for many generations, if not wholly eluded. The advantage of fuperior flocks and correfpondence is fo great, that it is not eafily overcome; and as all the transactions encrease by the encrease of industry in the neighbouring states, even a people whole commerce stands on this precarious basis, may at first reap a confiderable confiderable profit from the flourishing condition of their neighbours. The DUTCH, having mortgaged all their revenues, make not fuch a figure in political transactions as formerly; but their commerce is furely equal to what it was in the middle of the last century, when they were reckoned among the great powers of EUROPE.

Of the JEALOUSY of TRADE.

Were our narrow and malignant politics to meet with fuccefs, we should reduce all our neighbouring nations to the fame flate of floth and ignorance that prevails in MOROCCO and the coaft of BARBARY. But what would - be the confequence ? They could fend us no commodities : They could take none from us : Our domeffic commerce itfelf would languish for want of emulation, example, and inftruction : And we ourfelves should foon fall into the fame abject condition, to which we had reduced them. I shall therefore venture to acknowledge, that, not only as a man, but as a BRITISH subject, I pray for the flourishing commerce of GERMANY, SPAIN, ITALY, and even FRANCE itself. I am at least certain, that GREAT BRITAIN, and all those nations, would flourish more, did their fovereigns and ministers adopt fuch enlarged and benevolent fentiments towards each other.

Digitized by Google

(353)

E S S A Y VII.

Of the BALANCE of POWER.

I T is a queftion, whether the idea of the balance of power be owing entirely to modern policy, or whether the phrafe only has been invented in thefe later ages? It is certain that XENOPHON*, in his infitution of CYRUS, reprefents the combination of the ASIATIC powers to have arifen from a jealoufy of the encreafing force of the MEDES and PERSIANS; and though that elegant composition fhould be fuppofed altogether a romance, this fentiment, afcribed by the author to the eaftern princes, is at least a proof of the prevailing notion of ancient times.

In all the politics of GREECE, the anxiety, with regard to the balance of power, is apparent, and is expressly pointed out to us, even by the ancient historians. THUCYDIDES † represents the league, which was formed against ATHENS, and which produced the PELOPONNE-SIAN war, as entirely owing to this principle. And after the decline of ATHENS, when the THEBANS and LACE-DEMONIANS disputed for fovereignty, we find, that the ATHENIANS (as well as many other republics) always threw themselves into the lighter fcale, and endeavoured to preserve the balance. They supported THEBES against

* Lib. i. Vol. I.

A 2

SPARTA,

. Digitized by Google

+ Lib. i.

ESŠAY VÍI.

SPARTA, till the great victory gained by EPAMINONDAS at LEUCTRA; after which they immediately went over to the conquered, from generofity, as they pretended, but in reality from their jealoufy of the conquerors *.

Whoever will read DEMOSTHENES'S oration for the MEGALOPOLITANS, may fee the utmost refinements on this principle, that ever entered into the head of a VENE-TIAN OF ENGLISH speculatist. And upon the first rife of the MACEDONIAN power, this orator immediately discovered the danger, sounded the alarm throughout all GREECE, and at last assembled that confederacy under the banners of ATHENS, which fought the great and decisive battle of CHERONEA.

It is true, the GRECIAN wars are regarded by hiftorians as wars of emulation rather than of politics; and each fate feems to have had more in view the honour of leading the reft, than any well-grounded hopes of authority and dominion. If we confider, indeed, the finall number of inhabitants in any one republic, compared to the whole, the great difficulty of forming fieges in those times, and the extraordinary bravery and difcipline of every freeman among that noble people ; we faall conclude, that the balance of power was, of itfelf, fufficiently fecured in GREECE, and needed not to have been guarded with that caution which may be requisite in other ages. But whether we afcribe the fhifting of fides in all the GRECIAN republics to jealous emulation or cautious politics, the effects were alike, and every prevailing power was fure to meet with a confederacy against it, and that often composed of its former friends and allies.

The fame principle, call it envy or prudence, which produced the Oftraci/m of ATHENS, and Petalifm of Sy-

* XENOPH. Hill. GREC. lib. vi. & vil.

Digitized by Google

RACUSE

Of the BALANCE of POWER.

ACUSE; and expelled every citizen whole fame or power overtopped the reft; the fame principle; I fay, naturally difcovered itfelf in foreign politics; and foon railed enemies to the leading flate, however moderate in the exercife of its authority.

The PERSIAN monarch was really, in his force, a petty prince compared to the GRECIAN republics; and therefore it behoved him; from views of fafety more than from emulation, to intereft himfelf in their quarrels, and to fupport the weaker fide in every conteft. This was the advice given by ALCIBIADES to TISSAPHERNES *; and it prolonged, near a century, the date of the PERSIAN empire; till the neglect of it for a moment, after the first appearance of the afpiring genius of PHILIP, brought that lofty and frail edifice to the ground, with a rapidity of which there are few inftances in the hiftory of mankind.

The fucceffors of ALEXANDER flowed great jealoufy of the balance of power; a jealoufy founded on true politics and prudence, and which preferved diffinct for leveral ages the partition made after the death of that famous conqueror. The fortune and ambition of A_{N-} TIGONUS + threatened them anew with a univerfal monarchy; but their combination, and their victory at IPSUS faved them. And in fubfequent times, we find, that, as the Eaftern princes confidered the GREEKS and MA-CEDONIANS as the only real military force with whom they had any intercourfe, they kept always a watchful eye over that part of the world. The PTOLEMIES, in particular, fupported firft ARATUS and the ACHAEANS, and then CLEOMENES king of SPARTA, from no other view than as a counterbalance to the MACEDONIAN

THUCYD, Lib. viii.

•

Aa2

† Diop. Sic. lib. xx. monarchs.

monarchs. For this is the account which POLYBIUS gives of the EGYPTIAN politics *.

The reason, why it is supposed, that the ancients were entirely ignorant of the balance of power, feems to be drawn from the ROMAN hiftory more than the GRE-CIAN; and as the transactions of the former are generally more familiar to us, we have thence formed all our conclusions. It must be owned, that the ROMANS never met with any fuch general combination or confederacy against them, as might naturally have been expected from their rapid conquefts and declared ambition : but were allowed peaceably to fubdue their neighbours. one after another, till they extended their dominion over the whole known world. Not to mention the fabulous hiftory of their ITALIC wars; there was, upon HANNI-BAL's invation of the ROMAN state, a remarkable crifis, which ought to have called up the attention of all civilized nations. It appeared afterwards (nor was it difficult to be observed at the time) + that this was a conteff for universal empire; yet no prince or state seems to have been in the least alarmed about the event or iffue of the quarrel. PHILIP of MACEDON remained neuter. till he faw the victories of HANNIBAL; and then most imprudently formed an alliance with the conqueror, upon terms still more imprudent. He stipulated, that he was to affift the CARTHAGINIAN flate in their conquest of ITALY; after which they engaged to fend over forces into GREECE, to affift him in fubduing the GRECIAN commonwealths ±.

* Lib. ii. cap. 51.

' + It was observed by some, as appears by the speech of AGESILAUS of NAUTACTUM, in the general congress of GREECE. See POLYE, lib. v. cap. 104.

Digitized by Google

1 TITI LIVII, lib. xxiii. cap. 33.

The

Of the BALANCE of POWER.

The RHODIAN and ACHAEAN republics are much celebrated by ancient hiftorians for their wifdom and found policy; yet both of them affifted the ROMANS in their wars againft PHILIP and ANTIOCHUS. And what may be efteemed fill a ftronger proof, that this maxim was not generally known in those ages; no ancient author has remarked the imprudence of these measures, nor has even blamed that abfurd treaty above-mentioned, made by PHILIP with the CARTHAGINIANS. Princes and ftatesfmen, in all ages, may, before-hand, be blinded in their reasonings with regard to events: But it is somewhat extraordinary, that historians, afterwards, should not form a founder judgment of them.

MASSINISSA, ATTALUS, PRUSIAS, in gratifying their private paffions, were, all of them, the inftruments of the Roman greatnefs; and never feem to have fufpected, that they were forging their own chains, while they advanced the conquefts of their ally. A fimple treaty and agreement between MASSINISSA and the CARTHA-GINIANS, fo much required by mutual intereft, barred the ROMANS from all entrance into AFRICA, and preferved liberty to mankind.

The only prince we meet with in the ROMAN hiftory, who feems to have underftood the balance of power, is HIERO king of SYRACUSE. Though the ally of ROME, he fent affiftance to the CARTHAGINIANS, during the war of the auxiliaries; " Effeeming it requifite," fays POLYBIUS*, " both in order to retain his dominions in " SICILY, and to preferve the ROMAN friendfhip, that " CARTHAGE fhould be fafe; left by its fall the re-" maining power fhould be able, without contraft or " oppofition, to execute every purpofe and undertaking.

Digitized by Google

* Lib. i. cap. 83. A a 3

" And

⁴⁶ And here he acted with great wifdom and prudence. ⁴⁷ For that is never, on any account, to be overlooked; ⁴⁶ nor ought fuch a force ever to be thrown into one ⁴⁶ hand, as to incapacitate the neighbouring flates from ⁴⁷ defending their rights againft it." Here is the aim of modern politics pointed out in express terms.

In fhort, the maxim of preferving the balance of power is founded fo much on common fenfe and obvious reafoning, that it is impoffible it could altogether have efcaped antiquity, where we find, in other particulars, fo many marks of deep penetration and difcernment. If it was not fo generally known and acknowledged as at prefent, it had, at leaft, an influence on all the wifer and more experienced princes and politicians. And indeed, even at prefent, however generally known and acknowledged among fpeculative reafoners, it has not, in practice, an authority much more extensive among those who govern the world.

After the fall of the ROMAN empire, the form of government, established by the northern conquerors, incapacitated them, in a great measure, for farther conquests, and long maintained each flate in its proper boundaries. But when vaffalage and the feudal militia were abolifhed, mankind were anew alarmed by the danger of univerfal monarchy, from the union of fo many kingdoms and principalities in the perfon of the emperor CHARLES, But the power of the house of AUSTRIA, founded on extensive but divided dominions, and their riches, derived chiefly from mines of gold and filver, were more likely to decay, of themfelves, from internal defects, than to overthrow all the bulwarks raifed against them. In lefs than a century, the force of that violent and haughty race was shattered, their opulence diffipated, their splentor eclipfed. A new power fucceeded, more formidable to the liberties of EUROPE, poffeffing all the advantages of the former, and labouring under none of its defects, except a fhare of that fpirit of bigotry and perfecution, with which the houfe of AUSTRIA was fo long, and ftill is fo much infatuated.

Digitized by Google

Of the BALANCE of POWER.

In the general wars, maintained against this ambitious power, GREAT BRITAIN has stood foremost; and she still maintains her station. Beside her advantages of riches and situation, her people are animated with such a national spirit, and are so fully sensible of the blessings of their government, that we may hope their vigour never will languish in so necessary and so just a cause. On the contrary, if we may judge by the pass, their passionate ardour seems rather to require some moderation; and they have oftener erred from a laudable excess than from a blameable deficiency.

In the first place, we feem to have been more possesfied with the ancient GREEK spirit of jealous emulation, than actuated by the prudent views of modern politics. Our wars with FRANCE have been begun with justice, and even, perhaps, from neceffity; but have always been too far pushed from obstinacy and passion. The fame peace, which was afterwards made at Ryswick in 1697. was offered to early as the year ninety-two; that concluded at UTRECHT in 1712 might have been finished on as good conditions at GERTRUYTENBERG in the year eight; and we might have given at FRANKFORT, in 1743, the fame terms, which we were glad to accept of at AIX-LA-CHAPELLE in the year forty-eight. Here then we fee, that above half of our wars with FRANCE, and all our public debts, are owing more to our own imprudent vehemence, than to the ambition of our neighbours.

Digitized by Google

In

In the fecond place, we are fo declared in our opposition to FRENCH power, and fo alert in defence of our allies, that they always reckon upon our force as upon their own; and expecting to carry on war at our expence, refuse all reasonable terms of accommodation. Habent fubjectos, tanquam fuos; viles, ut alienos. All the world knows, that the factious vote of the House of Commons, in the beginning of the last parliament, with the professed humour of the nation, made the queen of HUNGARY inflexible in her terms, and prevented that agreement with PRUSSIA, which would immediately have restored the general tranquillity of EUROPE.

In the third place, we are fuch true combatants, that, when once engaged, we lofe all concern for ourfelves and our pofterity, and confider only how we may beft annoy the enemy. To mortgage our revenues at fo deep a rate, in wars, where we were only acceffaries, was furely the moft fatal delufion, that a nation, which had any pretenfion to politics and prudence, has ever yet been guilty of. That remedy of funding, if it be a remedy, and not rather a poifon, ought, in all reafon, to be referved, to the laft extremity; and no evil, but the greateft and moft urgent, fhould ever induce us to embrace fo dangerous an expedient.

These excesses, to which we have been carried, are prejudicial; and may, perhaps, in time, become still more prejudicial another way, by begetting, as is usual, the opposite extreme, and rendering us totally careless and suppose extreme, and rendering us totally careless and suppose to the fate of EUROPE. The ATHENIANS, from the most bushling, intriguing, warlike people of GREECE, finding their error in thrushing themfelves into every quarrel, abandoned all attention to foreign affairs; and in no contest ever took part on either fide, fide, except by their flatteries and complaifance to the victor.

. . Digitized by Google

Of the BALANCE of Power.

Enormous monarchies are, probably, deftructive to human nature; in their progrefs, in their continuance*, and even in their downfal, which never can be very diftant from their establishment. The military genius, which aggrandized the monarchy, foon leaves the court, the capital, and the center of fuch a government; while the wars are carried on at a great diftance, and interest fo fmall a part of the ftate. The ancient nobility, whofe affections attach them to their fovereign, live all at court : and never will accept of military employments, which would carry them to remote and barbarous frontiers. where they are diftant both from their pleafures and their fortune. The arms of the state, must, therefore, be entrusted to mercenary strangers, without zeal, without attachment, without honour; ready on every occasion to turn them against the prince, and join each desperate malcontent, who offers pay and plunder. This is the neceffary progress of human affairs : Thus human nature checks itfelf in its airy elevation : Thus ambition blindly labours for the destruction of the conqueror, of his family, and of every thing near and dear to him. The Bour-BONS, trufting to the fupport of their brave, faithful, and affectionate nobility, would push their advantage, without referve or limitation. Thefe, while fired with glory and emulation, can bear the fatigues and dangers of war : but never would fubmit to languish in the garrifons of HUNGARY or LITHUANIA, forgot at court, and facrificed to the intrigues of every minion or miftrefs, who ap-

* If the ROMAN empire was of advantage, it could only proceed from this, that mankind were generally in a very diforderly, uncivilized condition, before its eftablifument,

Digitized by Google

proaches,

proaches the prince. The troops are filled with CRA-VATES and TARTARS, HUSSARS and COSSACS; intermingled, perhaps, with a few foldiers of fortune from the better provinces: And the melancholy fate of the ROMAN emperors, from the fame caufe, is renewed over and over again, till the final diffolution of the monarchy.

Digitized by Google

,362

(363)

ESSAY VIII,

Of TAXES,

THERE is a prevailing maxim, among fome reafoners, that every new tax creates a new ability in the fubject to bear it, and that each encrease of public burdens encreases proportionably the industry of the people. This maxim is of fuch a nature as is most likely to be abused; and is fo much the more dangerous, as its truth cannot be altogether denied: but it must be owned, when kept within certain bounds, to have some foundation in reason and experience.

When a tax is laid upon commodities, which are confumed by the common people, the necessary confequence may feem to be, either that the poor must retrench fomething from their way of living, or raife their wages, fo as to make the burden of the tax fall entirely upon the rich. But there is a third confequence, which often follows upon taxes, namely, that the poor encrease their industry, perform more work, and live as well as before, without demanding more for their labour. Where taxes are moderate, are laid on gradually, and affect not the neceffaries of life, this confequence naturally follows; and it is certain, that fuch difficulties often ferve to excite the industry of a people, and render them more opulent and laborious, than others, who enjoy the greateft advantages. For we may observe, as a parallel instance, that that the most commercial nations have not always pofseffed the greatest extent of fertile land; but, on the contrary, that they have laboured under many natural disadvantages. Tyre, Athens, Carthage, Rhodes, GENOA, VENICE, HOLLAND, are ftrong examples to this purpose. And in all history, we find only three instances of large and fertile countries, which have poffessed much trade; the NETHERLANDS, ENGLAND, and The two former feem to have been allured FRANCE. by the advantages of their maritime fituation, and the neceffity they lay under of frequenting foreign ports, in order to procure what their own climate refused them. And as to FRANCE, trade has come late into that kingdom, and feems to have been the effect of reflection and observation in an ingenious and enterprizing people, who remarked the riches acquired by fuch of the neighbouring nations as cultivated navigation and commerce.

The places mentioned by CICERO *, as posselied of the greatest commerce in his time, are ALEXANDRIA, COLCHUS, TYRE, SIDON, ANDROS, CYPRUS, PAM-PHYLIA, LYCIA, RHODES, CHIOS, BYZANTIUM, LESBOS, SMYRNA, MILETUM, COOS. All these, except ALEXANDRIA, were either small islands, or narrow territories. And that city owed its trade entirely to the happiness of its fituation.

Since therefore fome natural neceffities or difadvantages may be thought favourable to industry, why may not artificial burdens have the fame effect? Sir WIL-LIAM TEMPLE +, we may observe, ascribes the industry of the DUTCH entirely to neceffity, proceeding from their natural difadvantages; and illustrates his doctrine by a striking comparison with IRELAND; "where,"

Digitized by Google

• Epift. ad ATT. lib, ix. ep. 11.

+ Account of the NETHERLANDS, chap. 6.

fays

Of TAXES.

fays he, " by the largeness and plenty of the foil, and " fcarcity of people, all things neceffary to life are fo " cheap, that an industrious man, by two days labour, " may gain enough to feed him the reft of the week. " Which I take to be a very plain ground of the lazine(s "" attributed to the people. For men naturally prefer " eafe before labour, and will not take pains if they can " live idle; though when, by neceffity, they have been " inured to it, they cannot leave it, being grown a cuf-' " tom neceffary to their health, and to their very enter-" tainment. Nor perhaps is the change harder, from " conftant eafe to labour, than from conftant labour to " eafe." After which the author proceeds to confirm his doctrine, by enumerating, as above, the places where trade has most flourished, in ancient and modern times ; and which are commonly observed to be such narrow confined territories, as beget a necessity for industry.

The beft taxes are fuch as are levied upon confumptions, efpecially those of luxury; because fuch taxes are leaft felt by the people. They seem, in some measure, voluntary; fince a man may chuse how far he will use the commodity which is taxed: They are paid gradually and infensibly: They naturally produce sobriety and frugality, if judiciously imposed: And being consounded with the natural price of the commodity, they are fcarcely perceived by the confumers. Their only difadvantage is, that they are expensive in the levying.

Taxes upon poffeffions are levied without expence; but have every other difadvantage. Most flates, however, are obliged to have recourse to them, in order to fupply the deficiencies of the other.

But the most pernicious of all taxes are the arbitrary. They are commonly converted, by their management, into punishments on industry; and also, by their unavoidable voidable inequality, are more grievous, than by the real burden which they impose. It is furprising, therefore, to fee them have place among any civilized people.

SSAY VIII. Ë.

*66

In general, all poll-taxes, even when not arbitrary, which they commonly are, may be effeemed dangerous : Because it is so easy for the sovereign to add a little more, and a little more, to the fum demanded, that these taxes are apt to become altogether opprefive and intolerables On the other hand, a duty upon commodities checks itfelf; and a prince will foon find, that an encrease of the impost is no encrease of his revenue. It is not easy, therefore, for a people to be altogether ruined by fuch taxes.

Historians inform us, that one of the chief causes of the destruction of the ROMAN state, was the alteration. which CONSTANTINE introduced into the finances, by fubstituting an universal poll-tax, in lieu of almost all the tithes, cuftoms, and excifes, which formerly composed the revenue of the empire. The people, in all the provinces, were fo grinded and opprefied by the publicans. that they were glad to take refuge under the conquering arms of the barbarians; whofe dominion, as they had fewer neceffities and lefs art, was found preferable to the refined tyranny of the ROMANS.

It is an opinion, zealoufly promoted by fome political writers, that, fince all taxes, as they pretend, fall ultimately upon land, it were better to lay them originally there, and abolifh every duty upon confumptions. But it is denied, that all taxes fall ultimately upon land. If a duty be laid upon any commodity, confumed by an artifan, he has two obvious expedients for paying it; he may retrench fomewhat of his expence, or he may encrease his labour. Both these resources are more easy and

and natural, than that of heightening his wages. We fee, that, in years of fcarcity, the weaver either confumes lefs or labours more, or employs both these expedients of frugality and industry, by which he is enabled to reach the end of the year. It is but just, that he should fubject himself to the same hardships, if they deferve the name, for the fake of the publick, which gives him protection. By what contrivance can he raife the price of his labour? The manufacturer who employs him, will not give him more: Neither can he, becaufe the merchant, who exports the cloth, cannot raife its price, being limited by the price which it yields in foreign Every man, to be fure, is defirous of pufhing markets. off from himfelf the burden of any tax which is imposed, and of laying it upon others : But as every man has the fame inclination, and is upon the defensive; no fet of men can be fupposed to prevail altogether in this contest. And why the landed gentleman should be the victim of the whole, and should not be able to defend himself, as well as others are, I cannot readily imagine. All tradefmen, indeed, would willingly prey upon him, and divide him among them, if they could: But this inclination they always have, though no taxes were levied; and the fame methods, by which he guards against the imposition of tradefmen before taxes, will ferve him afterwards, and make them fhare the burden with him. They must be very heavy taxes, indeed, and very injudiciously levied, which the artifan will not, of himfelf, be enabled to pay, by fuperior industry and frugality, without raising the price of his labour.

I fhall conclude this fubject with obferving, that we have, with regard to taxes, an inftance of what frequently happens in political inftitutions, that the confequences of things are diametrically opposite to what we should should expect on the first appearance. It is regarded as a fundamental maxim of the TURKISH government, that the Grand Signior, though abfolute mafter of the lives and fortunes of each individual, has no authority to impofe a new tax : and every OTTOMAN prince, who has made fuch an attempt, either has been obliged to retract. or has found the fatal effects of his perfeverance. One would imagine, that this prejudice or established opinion were the firmeft barrier in the world against oppression ; vet it is certain, that its effect is quite contrary. The emperor, having no regular method of encreasing his revenue, must allow all the bashaws and governors to opprefs and abufe the fubjects : And thefe he fqueezes after their return from their government. Whereas, if he could impose a new tax, like our EUROPEAN princes. his interest would so far be united with that of his people. that he would immediately feel the bad effects of thefe diforderly levies of money, and would find, that a pound, raifed by a general imposition, would have less pernicious effects, than a shilling taken in fo unequal and arbitrary a manner.

Digitized by Google

(369)

E S

S

Of PUBLIC CREDIT.

T appears to have been the common practice of an-I tiquity, to make provision, during peace, for the neceffities of war, and to hoard up treasures before-hand. as the inftruments either of conquest or defence; without truffing to extraordinary impolitions, much lefs to borrowing, in times of diforder and confusion. Besides the immenfe fums above mentioned *, which were amaffed by ATHENS, and by the PTOLEMIES, and other fucceffors of ALEXANDER; we learn from PLATO +, that the frugal LACEDEMONIANS had also collected a great treasure; and ARRIANT and PLUTARCH || take notice of the riches which ALEXANDER got poffeffion of on the conquest of SUSA and ECBATANA, and which were referved, some of them, from the time of CYRUS. If I remember right, the scripture also mentions the treasure of HEZEKIAH and the JEWISH princes; as profane hiftory does that of PHILIP and PERSEUS, kings of MA-CEDON. The antient republics of GAUL had commonly large sums in referve §. Every one knows the treasure

• Effay V. † ALCIB. Y. ‡ Lib. ift. PLUT. in suite ALEY. He makes thefe treasures amount to So,000 talents, or about 15 millions fierl. QUINTUS CURTIUS (lib. v. cap. 2.) fays, that ALEXANDER found in SUSA above 50,000 talents. 5 Son and the first § STRABO, lib. iv. . Vot. I.

Bb

Digitized by Google

feized

ĖSŠAY IX.

feized in ROME by JULIUS CÆSAR, during the civil wars: and we find afterwards, that the wifer emperors, AUGUSTUS, TIBERIUS, VESPASIAN, SEVERUS, &c. always difcovered the prudent forefight, of faving great fums againft any public exigency.

On the contrary, our modern expedient, which has become very general, is to mortgage the public revenues, and to truft that posterity will pay off the incumbrances contracted by their ancestors: And they, having before their eyes, so good an example of their wife fathers, have the fame prudent reliance on their posterity; who, at laft, from neceffity more than choice, are obliged to place the fame confidence in a new posterity. But not to waste time in declaiming against a practice which appears ruinous, beyond all controversy; it feems pretty apparent, that the ancient maxims are, in this respect, more prudent than the modern ; even though the latter had been confined within fome reafonable bounds, and had ever, in any inftance, been attended with fuch frugality, in time of peace, as to discharge the debts incurred by an expensive war. For why should the case be fo different between the public and an individual, as, to make us eftablish different maxims of conduct for each? If the funds of the former be greater, its necessary expences are proportionably larger; if its refources be more numerous, they are not infinite; and as its frame should be calculated for a much longer duration than the date of a fingle life, or even of a family, it fhould embrace maxims, large, durable, and generous, agreeably to the fupposed extent of its existence. To trust to chances and temporary expedients, is, indeed, what the neceffity of human affairs frequently renders unavoidable; but whoever voluntarily depend on fuch refources, have not neceffity, neceffity, but their own folly, to accuse for their miffortunes, when any such befal them.

370

Of Public CridIt.

If the abufes of treasures be dangerous, either by engaging the flate in rafh enterprizes, or making it neglect military discipline, in confidence of its riches; the abufes of mortgaging are more certain and inevitable; poverty, impotence, and subjection to foreign powers.

According to modern policy war is attended with every deftructive circumftance; lofs of men, encreafe of taxes, decay of commerce, diffipation of money, devaftation by fea and land. According to ancient maxims, the opening of the public treasure, as it produced an uncommon affluence of gold and filver, ferved as a temporary encouragement to industry, and atoned, in fome degree; for the inevitable calamities of war.

It is very tempting to a minifter to employ fuch an expedient, as enables him to make a great figure during his adminiftration, without overburthening the people with taxes, or exciting any immediate clamours againft himfelf. The practice, therefore, of contracting debt will almost infallibly be abufed, in every government. It would fearcely be more imprudent to give a prodigal fon a credit in every banker's fhop in London, than to impower a ftatesman to draw bills, in this manner, upon posterity.

What then fhall we fay to the new paradox, that public incumbrances, are; of themfelves, advantageous, independent of the neceffity of contracting them; and that any flate, even though it were not prefied by a foreign enemy, could not poffibly have embraced a wifer expedient for promoting commerce and riches, than to create funds, and debts, and taxes, without limitation? Reafonings, fuch as thefe, might naturally have paffed & B b 2

Digitized by Google

E 5 5 A Y IX.

for trials of wit among rhetoricians, like the panegyrics on folly and a fever, on BUSIRIS and NERO, had we not feen fuch abfurd maxims patronized by great miniflers, and by a whole party among us.

Let us examine the confequences of public debts, both in our domeftic management, by their influence on commerce and industry; and in our foreign transactions, by their effect on wars and negociations.

Public fecurities are with us become a kind of money, and pais as readily at the current price as gold or filver. Wherever any profitable undertaking offers itfelf, how expensive foever, there are never wanting hands enow to embrace it; nor need a trader, who has fums in the public flocks, fear to launch out into the most extensive trade ; fince he is possessed of funds, which will answer the most fudden demand that can be made upon him, No merchant thinks it neceffary to keep by him any confiderable cafh. Bank-flock, or India-bonds, efpecially the latter, ferve all the fame purpofes; becaufe he can difpose of them, or pledge them to a banker, in a quarter of an hour; and at the fame time they are not idle, even when in his fcritoire, but bring him in a constant revenue. In short, our national debts furnish merchants with a fpecies of money, that is continually multiplying in their hands, and produces fure gain, befides the profits of their commerce. This must enable them to trade upon lefs profit. The fmall profit of the merchant renders the commodity cheaper, causes a greater confumption, quickens the labour of the common people, and helps to fpread arts and industry throughout the whole fociety.

There are also, we may observe, in ENGLAND and in all states, which have both commerce and public debts.

3 - I

372

Of PUBLIC CREDIT.

debts, a fet of men, who are half merchants, half ftockholders, and may be supposed willing to trade for small profits; becaufe commerce is not their principal or fole Support, and their revenues in the funds are a fure refource for themselves and their families. Were there no funds, great merchants would have no expedient for realizing or fecuring any part of their profit, but by making purchases of land; and land has many difadvantages in comparison of funds. Requiring more care and infpection, it divides the time and attention of the merchant; upon any tempting offer or extraordinary accident in trade, it is not fo eafily converted into money; and as it attracts too much, both by the many natural pleafures it affords, and the authority it gives, it foon converts the citizen into the country gentleman. More men, therefore, with large flocks and incomes, may naturally be fuppofed to continue in trade, where there are public debts; and this, it must be owned, is of fome advantage to commerce, by diminishing, its profits, promoting circulation, and encouraging induftry.

But, in opposition to these two favourable circumflances, perhaps of no very great importance, weigh the many difadvantages which attend our public debts, in the whole interior acconomy of the flate: You will find no comparison between the ill and the good which result from them.

First, It is certain, that national debts caufe a mighty confluence of people and riches to the capital, by the great fums, levied in the provinces to pay the intereft; and perhaps, too, by the advantages in trade above mentioned, which they give the merchants in the capital above the reft of the kingdom. The question is, whether; in our cafe, it be for the public intereft, that fo B b 3 maz many privileges fhould be conferred on LONDON, which has already arrived at fuch an enormous fize, and feems fill encreafing ? Some men are apprehenfive of the confequences. For my own part, I cannot forbear thinking, that, though the head is undoubtedly too large for the body, yet that great city is fo happily fituated, that its exceffive bulk caufes lefs inconvenience than even a fmaller capital to a greater kingdom. There is more difference between the prices of all provisions in PARIS and LANGUEDOC, than between those in LONDON and YORKSHIRE. The immenie greatness, indeed, of LON-DON, under a government which admits not of difcretionary power, renders the people factious, mutinous, feditious, and even perhaps rebellious. But to this evil the national debts themfelves tend to provide a remedy. The first visible eruption, or even immediate danger of public diforders, must alarm all the stockholders, whole property is the most precarious of any; and will make them fly to the fupport of government, whether menaced by Jacobitish violence or democratical frenzy.

Google

Secondly, Public flocks, being a kind of paper-credit have all the difadvantages attending that fpecies of money. They banish gold and filver from the most confiderable commerce of the state, reduce them to common circulation, and by that means render all provisions and labour dearer than otherwise they would be.

Thirdly, The taxes, which are levied to pay the interefts of these debts, are apt either to heighten the price of labour, or be an oppression on the poorer fort.

Fourthly, As foreigners posses a great share of our national funds, they render the public, in a manner, tributary

Digitized by Google

butary to them, and may in time occasion the transport of our people and our industry.

Fifthly, The greater part of the public flock being always in the hands of idle people, who live on their revenue, our funds, in that view, give great encouragement to an ufelefs and unactive life.

But though the injury, that arifes to commerce and industry from our public funds, will appear, upon balancing the whole, not inconfiderable, it is trivial, in comparison of the prejudice that refults to the flate confidered as a body politic, which must fupport itself in the fociety of nations, and have various transactions with other flates in wars and negociations. The ill, there, is pure and unmixed, without any favourable circumflance to atone for it; and it is an ill too of a nature the higheft and most important.

We have, indeed, been told, that the public is no weaker upon account of its debts; fince they are mostly due among ourfelves, and bring as much property to one as they take from another. It is like transferring money from the right hand to the left; which leaves the perfor neither richer nor poorer than before. Such loofe reafonings and specious comparisons will always pass, where we judge not upon principles. I alk, Is it poffible, in the nature of things, to overburthen a nation with taxes, even where the fovereign refides among them? The very doubt feems extravagant; fince it is requifite, in every community, that there be a certain proportion observed between the laborious and the idle part of it. But if all our present taxes be mortgaged, must we not invent new ones? And may not this matter be carried to a length that is ruinous and destructive ?

Digitized by Google

In

In every nation, there are always fome methods of levying money more eafy than others, agreeably to the way of living of the people, and the commodities they make use of. In GREAT BRITAIN, the excises upon malt and beer afford a large revenue; because the operations of malting and brewing are tedious, and are impossible to be concealed; and at the fame time, these commodities are not fo absolutely necessary to life, as that the raising of their price would very much affect the poorer fort. These taxes being all mortgaged, what difficulty to find new ones! what yexation and ruin of the poor!

Duties upon confumptions are more equal and eafy than those upon possible films. What a loss to the public, that the former are all exhausted, and that we must have recourse to the more grievous method of levying taxes!

Were all the proprietors of land only flewards to the public, much not neceffity force them to practife all the arts of opprefilion used by flewards; where the absence or negligence of the proprietor render them secure against enquiry 2.

It will fcarcely be afferted, that no bounds ought ever to be fet to national debts; and that the public would be no weaker; were twelve or fifteen fhillings in the pound, land-tax, mortgaged, with all the prefent cuftoms and excifes. There is fomething, therefore, in the cafe, befide the mere transferring of property from the one hand to another. In 500 years, the pofterity of those now in the coaches, and of those upon the boxes, will probably have changed places, without affecting the public by these revolutions.

Suppose the public once fairly brought to that conditlon, to which it is hastening with such amazing rapidity; suppose fuppofe the land to be taxed eighteen or nineteen fhillings in the pound; for it can never bear the whole twenty; fuppofe all the excifes and cuftoms to be forewed up to the utmost which the nation can bear, without entirely losing its commerce and industry; and fuppofe that all those funds are mortgaged to perpetuity, and that the invention and wit of all our projectors can find no new imposition, which may ferve as the foundation of a new loan; and let us confider the neceflary confequences of this fituation. Though the imperfect state of our political knowledge, and the narrow capacities of men, make it difficult to foretel the effects which will refult from any untried measure, the feeds of ruin are here feattered with fuch profusion as not to escape the eye of the most careles observer.

In this unnatural flate of fociety, the only perfons, who poffefs any revenue beyond the immediate effects of their industry, are the stock-holders, who draw almost all the rent of the land and houses, befides the produce of all the cultoms and exciles. These are men, who have no connexions with the state, who can enjoy their revenue in any part of the globe in which they chufe to refide, who will naturally bury themfelves in the capital or in great cities, and who will fink into the lethargy of a stupid and pampered luxury, without spirit, ambition, or enjoyment. Adieu to all ideas of nobility, gentry, The flocks can be transferred in an inflant. and family. and being in fuch a fluctuating flate, will feldom be tranfmitted during three generations from father to fon. Or were they to remain ever fo long in one family, they convey no hereditary authority or credit to the poffeffor; and by this means, the feveral ranks of men, which form a kind of independent magistracy in a state, instituted by the

the hand of nature, are entirely loft; and every man in authority derives his influence from the commiffion alone of the fovereign. No expedient remains for preventing or fuppreffing infurrections, but mercenary armies: No expedient at all remains for refifting tyranny: Elections are fwayed by bribery and corruption alone: And the middle power between king and people being totally removed, a grievous defpotifm muft infallibly prevail. The landholders, defpifed for their poverty, and hated for their oppreffions, will be utterly unable to make any oppofition to it.

Though a refolution fhould be formed by the legiflature never to impose any tax which hurts commerce and discourages industry, it will be impossible for men, in subjects of such extreme delicacy, to reason to justly as never to be mistaken, or amidst difficulties for urgent, never to be feduced from their resolution. The continual fluctations in commerce require continual alterations in the nature of the taxes; which exposes the legislature every moment to the dauger both of wilful and involuntary error. And any great blow given to trade, whether by injudicious taxes or by other accidents, throws the whole fystem of government into confusion.

But what expedient can the public now employ, even fuppoling trade to continue in the molt flourifhing condition, in order to fupport its foreign wars and enterprizes, and to defend its own honour and intereft, or those of its allies? I do not alk how the public is to exert fuch a prodigious power as it has maintained during our late wars; where we have fo much exceeded, not only our own natural ftrength, but even that of the greateft empires. This extravagance is the abule complained of, as the fource of all the dangers, to which we are at prefent fent exposed. But fince we must fill suppose great commerce and opulence to remain, even after every fund is mortgaged; these riches must be defended by proportional power; and whence is the public to derive the revenue. which supports it? It must plainly be from a continual taxation of the annuitants, or, which is the fame thing, from mortgaging anew, on every exigency, a certain part of their annuities; and thus making them contribute to their own defence, and to that of the nation. But the difficulties, attending this system of policy, will easily appear, whether we suppose the king to have become absolute master, or to be still controuled by national councils, in which the annuitants themselves must neceffarily bear the principal fway.

Digitized by Google

OF PUBLIC CREDIT.

If the prince has become abfolute, as may naturally be expected from this fituation of affairs, it is to easy for him to encrease his exactions upon the annuitants, which amount only to the retaining money in his own hands. that this fpecies of property would foon lofe all its credit, and the whole income of every individual in the ftate must lie entirely at the mercy of the fovereign: A degree of defpotifin, which no oriental monarchy has ever yet attained. If, on the contrary, the confent of the annuitants be requisite for every taxation, they will never be perfuaded to contribute fufficiently even to the fupport of government ; as the diminution of their revenue muft in that cafe be very fenfible, would not be difguifed under the appearance of a branch of excife or cuftoms, and would not be thared by any other order of the flate, who are already supposed to be taxed to the utmost. There are inftances, in some republics, of a hundredth penny. and fometimes of the fiftieth, being given to the fupport of the ftate; but this is always an extraordinary exertion of power, and can never become the foundation of a con-ftant national defence. We have always found, where a government has mortgaged all its revenues, that it neceffarily finks into a ftate of languor, inactivity, and impotence.

Digitized by Google

Such are the inconveniencies, which may reafonably be forefeen, of this fituation, to which GREAT BRITAIN is vifibly tending. Not to mention, the numberlefs inconveniencies, which cannot be forefeen, and which muft refult from fo monftrous a fituation as that of making the public the chief or fole proprietor of land, befides invefting it with every branch of cuftoms and excife, which the fertile imagination of minifters and projectors have been able to invent.

I must confess, that there is a strange supineness, from long cuftom, creeped into all ranks of men, with regard to public debts, not unlike what divines fo vehemently complain of with regard to their religious doctrines. We all own, that the most fanguine imagination cannot hope, either that this or any future ministry will be possefied of fuch rigid and steady frugality, as to make a confiderable progress in the payment of our debts; or that the fituation of foreign affairs will, for any long time, allow them leifure and tranquillity for fuch an undertaking. What then is to become of us? Were we ever fo good Christians, and ever fo refigned to Providence; this, methinks, were a curious question, even confidered as a fpeculative one, and what it might not be altogether impoffible to form fome conjectural folution of. The events here will depend little upon the contingencies of battles, negociations, intrigues, and factions. There feems to be a natural progrefs of things, which may guide our reasoning. As it would have required but a moderate fhare of prudence, when we first began this practice practice of mortgaging, to have foretold, from the nature of men and of minifters, that things would neceflarily be carried to the length we fee; fo now, that they have at laft happily reached it, it may not be difficult to guefs at the confequences. It muft, indeed, be one of these two events; either the nation muft deftroy public credit, or public credit will deftroy the nation. It is impossible that they can both fubfish, after the manner they have been hitherto managed, in this, as well as in fome other countries.

380

Of PUBLIC CREDIT.

There was, indeed, a scheme for the payment of our ' debts, which was proposed by an excellent citizen, Mr. HUTCHINSON, above thirty years ago, and which was much approved of by fome men of fenfe, but never was likely to take effect. He afferted, that there was a fallacy in imagining that the public owed this debt; for that really every individual owed a proportional fhare of it, and paid, in his taxes, a proportional fhare of the interest, befide the expence of levying these taxes. Had we not better, then, fays he, make a distribution of the debt among ourfelves, and each of us contribute a fum fuitable to his property, and by that means difcharge at once all our funds and public mortgages? He feems not to have confidered, that the laborious poor pay a confiderable part of the taxes by their annual confumptions, though they could not advance, at once, a proportional part of the fum required. Not to mention, that property in money and flock in trade might eafily be concealed or difguifed; and that visible property in lands and houses would really at last answer for the whole: An inequality and oppression, which never would be submitted to. But though this project is not likely to take place; it is not altogether improbable, that, when the nation becomes " heartily fick of their debts, and is cruelly opprefied high · them,

Ŋ

C$

38I

382

them, fome daring projector may arife with vifionary, fehemes for their difcharge. And as public credit will begin, by that time, to be a little frail, the leaft touch will deftroy it, as happened in FRANCE during the regency; and in this manner it will die of the doctor.

But it is more probable; that the breach of national faith will be the neceffary effect of wars, defeats, miffortunes, and public calamities, or even perhaps of victories and conquests. I must confess, when I fee princes and flates fighting and quarrelling, amidit their debts, fund, and public mortgages, it always brings to my mind a match of cudgel-playing fought in a China fhop. How can it be expected, that fovereigns will fpare a fpecies of property, which is pernicious to themfelves. and to the public, when they have fo little compaffion on lives and properties, that are useful to both? Let the time come (and furely it will come) when the new funds. created for the exigencies of the year, are not fubfcribed to, and raife not the money projected. Suppose, either that the cash of the nation is exhausted; or that our faith, which has hitherto been fo ample, begins to fail Suppose, that, in this diffres, the nation is threatus. ened with an invalion; a rebellion is fulpected or broken out at home; a squadron cannot be equipped forwant of pay, victuals, or repairs; or even a foreign fubfidy cannot be advanced. What must a prince or minister do in such an emergence? The right of felfprefervation is unalienable in every individual, much more in every community. And the folly of our statefmen must then be greater than the folly of those who first contracted debt, or, what is more, than that of those who trufted, or continue to truft this fecurity, if these statesmen have the means of fafety in their hands, and do not employ them. The funds, created and mortgaged, will, by that time, bring in a large yearly revenue, fufficient for the

Of PUBLIC CREDIT.

the defence and fecurity of the nation: Money is perhaps lying in the exchequer, ready for the difcharge of the quarterly intereft: Neceffity calls, fear urges, reafon exhorts, compaffion alone exclaims: The money will immediately be feized for the current fervice, under the most folemn protestations, perhaps, of being immediately replaced. But no more is requisite. The whole fabric, already tottering, falls to the ground, and buries thousands in its ruins. And this, I think, may be called the natural death of public credit: For to this period it tends as naturally as an animal body to its diffolution and deftruction.

So great dupes are the generality of mankind, that, notwithstanding fuch a violent shock to public credit, as a voluntary bankruptcy in ENGLAND would occasion, it would not probably be long ere credit would again revive in as flourishing a condition as before. The prefent king of FRANCE, during the late war, borrowed money at a lower interest than ever his grandfather did; and as low as the BRITISH parliament, comparing the natural rate of interest in both kingdoms. And though men are, commonly more governed by what they have feen, than by what they forefee, with whatever certainty; yet promifes, protestations, fair appearances, with the allurements of present interest, have such powerful influence as few are able to refift. Mankind are, in all ages, caught by the fame baits : The fame tricks, played over and over again. still trepan them. The heights of popularity and patriotifm are still the beaten road to power and tyranny; flattery; to treachery; flanding armies to arbitrary government; and the glory of God to the temporal interest of the clergy. The fear of an everlafting destruction of credit. allowing it to be an evil, is a needlefs bugbear. A prudent man, in reality, would rather lend to the public immediately immediately after we had taken a fpunge to our debts. than at prefent; as much as an opulent knave, even though one could not force him to pay, is a preferable debtor to an honeft bankrupt : For the former, in order to carry on business, may find it his interest to difcharge his debts, where they are not exorbitant: The latter has it not in his power. The reasoning of TACIrus +, as it is eternally true, is very applicable to our present case. Sed vulgus ad magnitudinem beneficiorum aderat : Stultisfimus quisque pecuniis mercabatur : Apud sapientes cassa habebantur, qua neque dari neque accipi, falva republica, poterant. The public is a debtor, whom no man can oblige to pay. The only check which the creditors have upon her, is the interest of preserving credit; an interest, which may eafily be overbalanced by a great debt, and by a difficult and extraordinary emergence, even fupposing that credit irrecoverable. Not to mention, that a prefent neceffity often forces states into measures, which are, strictly fpeaking, against their interest.

These two events, supposed above, are calamitous, but not the most calamitous. Thousands are thereby facrifaced to the fastery of millions. But we are not without danger, that the contrary event may take place, and that millions may be facrificed for ever to the temporary fastry of thousands*. Our popular government, perhaps, will render it difficult or dangerous for a minister to venture on so desperate an expedient, as that of a voluntary bank ruptcy. And though the house of Lords be altogether composed of proprietors of land, and the house of Commons chiefly; and consequently neither of them can be supposed to have great property in the funds. Yet the connections of the members may be so great with the > † Hift. 11b. iii. • See NOTE [S].

> > Digitized by Google

proprietors,

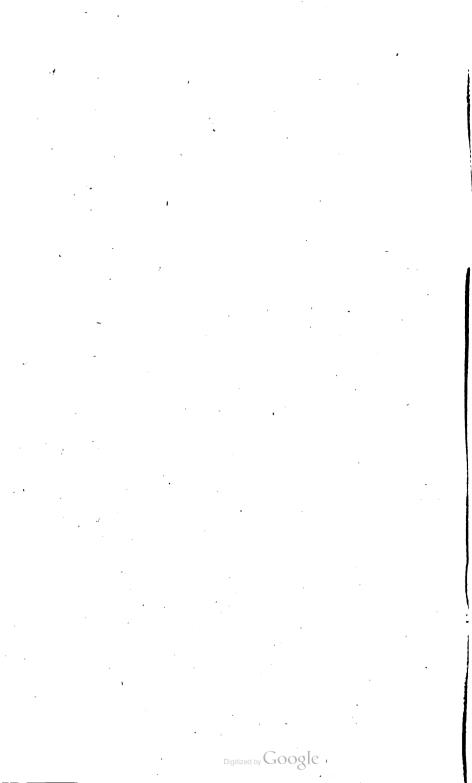

Of PUBLIC CREDIT.

proprietors, as to render them more tenacious of public faith, than prudence, policy, or even juffice, ftrictly fpeaking, requires. And perhaps too, our foreign enemies may be fo politic as to difcover, that our fafety lies in defpair, and may not, therefore, fhow the danger, open and barefaced, till it be inevitable. The balance of power in EUROPE, our grandfathers, our fathers, and we, have all deemed too unequal to be preferved without our attention and affiftance. But our children, weary of the ftruggle, and fettered with incumbrances, may fit down fecure, and fee their neighbours opprefied and conquered; till, at laft, they themfelves and their creditors lie both at the mercy of the conqueror. And this may properly enough be denominated the violent death of our public credit.

These seems to be the events, which are not very remote, and which reason foresees as clearly almost as she can do any thing that lies in the womb of time. And though the ancients maintained, that, in order to reach the gift of prophecy, a certain divine fury or madness was requisite, one may fassely affirm, that, in order to deliver such prophecies as these, no more is necessary than merely to be in one's senses, free from the influence of popular madness and delusion.

VOL. I.

Digitized by Google

(387)

ESSAY X.

Of SOME REMARKABLE CUSTOMS,

I SHALL obferve three remarkable cuftoms in three celebrated governments; and fhall conclude from the whole, that all general maxims in politics ought to be eftablifhed with great caution; and that irregular and extraordinary appearances are frequently difcovered in the moral, as well as in the phyfical world. The former, perhaps, we can better account for, after they happen, from fprings and principles, of which every one has, within himfelf, or from obfervation, the ftrongeft affurance and conviction : But it is often fully as impoffible for human prudence, before-hand, to forefee and foretel them.

I. One would think it effential to every fupreme council or affembly, which debates, that entire liberty of fpeech fhould be granted to every member, and that all motions or reafonings fhould be received, which can any wife tend to illuftrate the point under deliberation. One would conclude, with ftill greater affurance, that, after a motion was made, which was voted and approved by that affembly in which the legiflative power is lodged, the member who made the motion muft for ever be exempted from future trial or enquiry. But no political maxim can, at firft fight, appear more undifputable, than C c 2 that that he must, at least, be fecured from all inferior jurifdiction; and that nothing less than the fame supreme legislative assembly, in their subsequent meetings, could make him accountable for those motions and harangues, to which they had before given their approbation. But these axioms, however irrefragable they may appear, have all failed in the ATHENIAN government, from causes and principles too, which appear almost inevitable.

ESSAY X.

By the ypapn wapavouw, or indictment of illegality, (though it has not been remarked by antiquaries or commentators) any man was tried and punished in a common court of judicature, for any law which had paffed upon his motion, in the affembly of the people, if that law appeared to the court unjust, or prejudicial to the public. Thus DEMOSTHENES, finding that thip-money was levied irregularly, and that the poor bore the fame burden as the rich in equipping the gallies, corrected this inequality by a very ufeful law, which proportioned the expence to the revenue and income of each individual. He moved for this law in the affembly; he proved its advantages *; he convinced the people, the only legislature in ATHENS; the law passed, and was carried into execution: Yet was he tried in a criminal court for that law, upon the complaint of the rich, who refented the alteration that he had introduced into the finances +. He was indeed acquitted, upon proving anew the ufefulnefs of his law.

CTESIPHON moved in the affembly of the people, that particular honours should be conferred on DEMO-STHENES, as on a citizen affectionate and useful to the commonwealth: The people, convinced of this truth.

Digitized by Google

voted

His harangue for it is fill extant ; weps Zuppupping.

+ PIO CTELIPHONTE.

Of SOME REMARKABLE CUSTOMS. 389

voted those honours: Yet was CTESIPHON tried by the $\gamma_{PR} On wasparopum.$ It was afferted, among other topics, that DEMOSTHENES was not a good citizen, nor affectionate to the commonwealth: And the orator was called upon to defend his friend, and confequently himfelf; which he executed by that sublime piece of eloquence, that has ever fince been the admiration of mankind.

After the battle of CHÆRONEA, a law was passed upon the motion of HYPERIDES, giving liberty to flaves, and inrolling them in the troops *. On account of this law, the orator was afterwards tried by the indicament above mentioned, and defended himfelf, among other topics, by that stroke celebrated by PLUTARCH and LONGINUS. It was not I, faid he, that moved for this law: It was the necessities of war; it was the battle of CHÆRONEA. The orations of DEMOSTHENES abound with many instances of trials of this nature, and prove clearly, that nothing was more commonly practifed.

The ATHENIAN Democracy was fuch a tumultuous government as we can fcarcely form a notion of in the prefent age of the world. The whole collective body of the people voted in every law, without any limitation of property, without any diffinction of rank, without controul from any magistracy or fenate +; and confequently without regard to order, juffice, or prudence. The ATHENIANS foon became fensible of the mischiefs

* PLUTARCHUS in with decem oratorum. DIMOSTNENES gives a different account of this law. Contra ARISTOGITON. orat. II. He fays, that its purport was, to render the arised smithed, or to reflore the privilege of bearing offices in those who had been declared incapable. Perhaps these were both clauses of the fame law.

٢

† The fenate of the Bean was only a lefs numerous mob, cholen by log from among the people; and their authority was not great.

Cc3

Digitized by Google

attending

390

attending this conflitution : But being averfe to checking themfelves by any rule or reftriction, they refolved, at leaft, to check their demagogues or counfellors, by the fear of future punifhment and enquiry. They accordingly inftituted this remarkable law; a law efteemed fo effential to their form of government, that ÆSCHINES infifts on it as a known truth, that, were it abolished or neglected, it were impossible for the Democracy to. fubfift*.

The people feared not any ill confequence to liberty from the authority of the criminal courts; becaufe thefe were nothing but very numerous juries, chofen by lot from among the people. And they juftly confidered themfelves as in a flate of perpetual pupillage; where they had an authority, after they came to the use of reason, not only to retract and controul whatever had been determined, but to punish any guardian for measures which they had embraced by his persuasion. The fame law had place in THEBES +; and for the fame reason.

It appears to have been a ufual practice in ATHENS, on the establishment of any law esteemed very useful or popular, to prohibit for ever its abrogation and repeal. Thus the demagogue, who diverted all the public revenues to the support of shows and spectacles, made it criminal so much as to move for a repeal of this law ‡. Thus LEPTINES moved for a law, not only to recal all the immunities formerly granted, but to deprive the

• In CTESIFHONTEM. It is remarkable, that the first step after the diffolution of the Democracy by CRITIAS and the Thirty, was to annul the γεαφη was avoluon, as we learn from DEMOSTHENES xara Τιμοκ. The orator in this oration gives us the words of the law, establishing the γεαφη παgavoluon, pag. 297. ex edit. ALDI. And he accounts for it, from the fame principles we here reason upon.

Digitized by Google

+ PLUT. in vita PELOP.

1 DEMOST. Olynth. 1. 2.

2

people

OF SOME REMARKABLE CUSTOMS. 391

people for the future of the power of granting any more *. Thus all bills of attainder + were forbid, or laws that affected one ATHENIAN, without extending to the whole commonwealth. These absurd clauses, by which the legislature vainly attempted to bind itself for ever, proceeded from an universal fense in the people of their own levity and inconstancy.

II. A wheel within a wheel, fuch as we observe in the GERMAN empire, is confidered by Lord SHAFTES-BURY 1 as an abfurdity in politics : But what must we fay to two equal wheels, which govern the fame political machine, without any mutual check, controul, or fubordination: and yet preferve the greatest harmony and concord ? To eftablish two distinct legislatures, each of which posses full and absolute authority within itself. and stands in no need of the other's affistance, in order to give validity to its acts; this may appear, before-hand, altogether impracticable, as long as men are actuated by the paffions of ambition, emulation, and avarice, which have hitherto been their chief governing principles. And should I affert, that the state I have in my eye was divided into two distinct factions, each of which predominated in a diffinct legislature, and yet produced no clashing in these independent powers; the supposition may appear incredible. And if, to augment the paradox. I should affirm, that this disjointed, irregular government was the most active, triumphant, and illustrious commonwealth, that ever yet appeared; I should certainly be told, that fuch a political chimera was as abfurd as any vision of priests or poets. But there is no need for

* DEMOST. contra LEPT.

+ DEMOST. contra ARISTOCRATEM.

1 Effay on the freedom of wit and humour, part 3. § 2.

Cc 4

Digitized by Google

fearching

391 BESSALLY X.

fearching long, in order to prove the reality of the foregoing suppositions: For this was actually the case with the ROMAN republic.

The legislative power was these lodged in the conitia centuriata and comitia tributa. In the former, it is well known, the people voted according to their confus; fo that when the first class was unanimous, though it contained not, perhaps, the hundredth part of the commonwealth, it determined the whole ; and, with the authority of the fenate, established a law. In the latter, every vote was equal; and as the authority of the fenate was not there requifite, the lower people entirely prevailed, and gave law to the whole flate. In all party-divisions, at fift between the PATRICIANS and PLEBEIANS, afterwards between the nobles and the people, the interest of the Aristocracy was predominant in the first legislature ; that of the Democracy in the fecond : The one could always deftroy what the other had established: Nay, the one, by a fudden and unforeseen motion, might take the flart of the other, and totally annihilate its rival, by a vote. which, from the nature of the constitution, had the full authority of a law, But no fuch contest is observed in the hiftory of ROME : No inftance of a quarrel between thefe two legislatures : though many between the parties that governed in each. Whence arole this concord, which may feem to extraordinary ?

The legislature established in ROME, by the authority of SERVIUS TULLIUS, was the comitia centariata, which, after the expulsion of the kings, rendered the government, for fome time, very aristocratical. But the people, having numbers and force on their fide, and being elated with frequent conquests and victories in their foreign wars, always prevailed when pushed to extremity, and first first extorted from the fenate the magistracy of the tribunes, and next the legislative power of the comitia tributa. It then behoved the nobles to be more careful, than ever not to provoke the people. For befide the force. which the latter were always possessed of, they had now got pofferfion of legal authority, and could instantly, break in pieces any order or inflitution which directly. opposed them. By intrigue, by influence, by money, by combination, and by the respect paid to their character, the nobles might often prevail, and direct the whole machine of government: But had they openly fet their comitia centuriata in opposition to the tributa, they had foon loft the advantage of that inflitution, together with their confuls, prætors, ediles, and all the magistrates' elected by it. But the comitia tributa, not having the fame reason for respecting the centuriata, frequently repealed laws favourable to the Aristocracy: They limited the authority of the nobles, protected the people from oppression, and controuled the actions of the senate and magistracy. The centuriata found it convenient always to fubmit; and though equal in authority, yet being inferior in power, durft never directly give any shock to the other legislature, either by repealing its laws, or eftablishing laws, which, it forefaw, would foon be repealed by it.

Of some REMARKABLE CUSTOMS. 393.

No inftance is found of any opposition or ftruggle between these comitia; except one flight attempt of this kind, mentioned by APPIAN in the third book of his civil wars. MARK ANTHONY, refolving to deprive DECIMUS BRUTUS of the government of CISALPINE GAUL, railed the Forum, and called one of the comitia, in order to prevent the meeting of the other, which had been ordered by the senate. But affairs were then fallen into fuch confusion, and the ROMAN constitution was

Digitized by Google

5

2

ć

Ļ

3 ä

5

4

لت ļ

į,

ż -

oì

to near its final diffolution, that no inference can be drawn from fuch an expedient. This conteft, befides, was founded more on form than party. It was the fenate who ordered the comitia tributa, that they might obstruct the meeting of the centuriata, which, by the constitution, or at least forms of the government, could alone dispose of provinces.

CICERO was recalled by the comitia centuriata, though banifhed by the tributa, that is, by a plebifcitum. But his banifhment, we may obferve, never was confidered as a legal deed, arifing from the free choice and inclination of the people. It was always afcribed to the violence alone of CLODIUS, and to the diforders introduced by him into the government.

III. The third cuftom, which we purpose to remark, regards ENGLAND; and though it be not fo important as those which we have pointed out in ATHENS and ROME. is no lefs fingular and unexpected. It is a maxim in politics, which we readily admit as undifputed and universal, that a power, however great, when granted by law to an eminent magistrate, is not fo dangerous to liberty, as an authority, however inconfiderable, which he acquires from violence and usurpation. For, befides that the law always limits every power which it beftows, the very receiving it as a concession establishes the authority whence it is derived, and preferves the harmony of the conflitution. By the fame right that one prerogative is affumed without law, another may also be claimed, and another, with still greater facility; while the first usurpations both ferve as precedents to the following, and give force to maintain them. Hence the heroifm of HAMPDEN's conduct, who fuftained the whole violence of royal profecution, rather than pay a tax of twenty fhillings, not imposed by parliament; hence the care of all all ENGLISH patriots to guard against the first encroachments of the crown; and hence alone the existence, at this day, of ENGLISH liberty.

394

OF SOME REMARKABLE CUSTOMS. 395

There is, however, one occasion, where the parliament has departed from this maxim ; and that is, in the preffing of feamen. The exercise of an irregular power is here tacitly permitted in the crown; and though it has frequently been under deliberation, how that power. might be rendered legal, and granted, under proper refrictions, to the fovereign, no fafe expedient could ever be proposed for that purpose; and the danger to liberty always appeared greater from law than from ufurpation. While this power is exercised to no other end than to man the navy, men willingly fubmit to it, from a fenfe of its use and necessity; and the failors, who are alone affected by it, find no body to support them, in claiming the rights and privileges, which the law grants, without distinction, to all ENGLISH subjects. But were this power, on any occasion, made an instrument of faction or ministerial tyranny, the opposite faction, and indeedall lovers of their country, would immediately take the alarm, and fupport the injured party; the liberty of ENGLISHMEN would be afferted; juries would be implacable: and the tools of tyranny, acting both against law and equity, would meet with the feverest vengeance. On the other hand, were the parliament to grant such an authority, they would probably fall into one of these two inconveniencies: They would either beftow it under fo many reftrictions as would make it lofe its effect, by cramping the authority of the crown; or they would render it fo large and comprehensive, as might give occafion to great abufes, for which we could, in that cafe, have no remedy. The very irregularity of the practice, at at prefent, prevents its abuses, by affording to easy a remedy against them.

I pretend not, by this reafoning, to exclude all poffibility of contriving a register for feamen, which might man the navy, without being dangerous to liberty. I only oblerve, that no fatisfactory fcheme of that nature has Rather than adopt any project yet been proposed. hitherto invented, we continue a practice feemingly the most abfurd and unaccountable. Authority, in times of full internal peace and concord, is armed against law. Α continued violence is permitted in the crown, amidst the greatest jealoufy and watchfulness in the people; nay proceeding from those very principles : Liberty, in a country of the highest literty, is left entirely to its own defence, without any countenance or protection : The wild ftate of nature is renewed, in one of the most civilized focieties of mankind : And great violence and diforder are committed with impunity; while the one party pleads obedience to the supreme magistrate, the other the fanction of fundamental laws.

Digitized by Google

ESSAY XI.

Of the Populousness of Ancient Nations.

HERE is very little ground, either from reason or observation, to conclude the world eternal or in-.corruptible. The continual and rapid motion of matter. the violent revolutions with which every part is agitated, the changes remarked in the heavens, the plain traces as well as tradition of an universal deluge, or general convulfion of the elements; all these prove strongly the mortality of this fabric of the world, and its passage, by corruption or diffolution, from one flate or order to another. It must therefore, as well as each individual form which it contains, have its infancy, youth, manhood, and old age; and it is probable, that, in all these variations, man, equally with every animal and vegetable, will partake. In the flourishing age of the world, it may be expected, that the human species should possifies greater vigour both of mind and body, more prosperous health, higher spirits, longer life, and a stronger inclination and power of generation. But if the general fystem of things, and human fociety of course, have any fuch gradual revolutions, they are too flow to be difcernible in that fhort period which is comprehended by hiftory and tradition. Stature and force of body, length of life, even courage and extent of genius, feem hitherto to have been been naturally, in all ages, pretty much the fame. The arts and fciences, indeed, have flourished in one period, and have decayed in another : But we may observe, that, at the time when they role to greatest perfection among one people, they were perhaps totally unknown to all the neighbouring nations; and though they univerfally decayed in one age, yet in a fucceeding generation they again revived, and diffused themselves over the world. As far, therefore, as observation reaches, there is no universal difference discernible in the human species; and though it were allowed, that the universe, like an animal body, had a natural progress from infancy to old age; yet as it must still be uncertain, whether, at present, it be advancing to its point of perfection, or declining from it, we cannot thence prefuppose any decay in human nature *. To prove, therefore, or account for that fuperior populoufnefs of antiquity, which is commonly fuppofed, by the imaginary youth or vigour of the world, will fcarcely be admitted by any just reasoner. These general physical causes ought entirely to be excluded from this question.

ESSAY XI.

There are indeed fome more particular phyfical caufes of importance. Difeafes are mentioned in antiquity, which are almoft unknown to modern medicine; and new difeafes have arifen and propagated themfelves, of which there are no traces in ancient hiftory. In this particular we may obferve, upon comparifon, that the difadvantage is much on the fide of the moderns. Not to mention fome others of lefs moment; the fmall-pox commit fuch ravages, as would almoft alone account for the great fuperiority afcribed to ancient times. The tenth or the twelfth part of mankind, deftroyed every generation, fhould make a vaft difference, it may be thought,

* See NOTE [T].

Digitized by Google

in

in the numbers of the people ; and when joined to venereal diffempers, a new plague diffufed every where, this difeafe is perhaps equivalent, by its conftant operation, to the three great fcourges of mankind, war, peftilence, and famine. Were it certain, therefore, that ancient times were more populous than the prefent, and could no moral caufes be affigned for fo great a change; thefe phyfical caufes alone, in the oplnion of many, would be fufficient to give us fatisfaction on that head,

ķ

2

S,

Ļ

But is it certain, that antiquity was fo much more populous, as is pretended? The extravagancies of Vossius, with regard to this fubject, are well known. But an author of much greater genius and difcernment has ventured to affirm, that, according to the best computations which these subjects will admit of, there are not now, on the face of the earth, the fiftieth part of mankind, which existed in the time of JULIUS CÆSAR *. It may eafily be observed, that the comparison, in this cafe, must be imperfect, even though we confine ourfelves to the scene of ancient history; EUROPE, and the nations round the MEDITERRANEAN. We know not exactly the numbers of any EUROPEAN kingdom, or even city, at prefent : How can we pretend to calculate those of ancient cities and states, where historians have left us fuch imperfect traces? For my part, the matter appears to me fo uncertain, that, as I intend to throw together fome reflections on that head, I shall intermingle the enquiry concerning caufes with that concerning facts; which ought never to be admitted, where the facts can be afcertained with any tolerable affurance. We shall, first, confider whether it be probable, from what we know of the fituation of fociety in both periods,

* Lettres PERSANES, See alfo L'Efprit de Lein, liv. xxiiie cap. 17, 183

Digitized by Google

that

that antiquity must have been more populous; fecondly, whether in reality it was fo. If I can make it appear, that the conclusion is not fo certain as is pretended, in favour of antiquity, it is all I afpire to.

In general, we may observe, that the question, with regard to the comparative populoufnels of ages or kingdoms, implies important confequences, and commonly determines concerning the preference of their whole police, their manners, and the conftitution of their government. For as there is in all men, both male and female. a defire and power of generation, more active than is ever univerfally exerted, the reftraints, which they lie under, must proceed from some difficulties in their situation. which it belongs to a wife legiflature carefully to obferve and remove. Almost every man, who thinks he can maintain a family, will have one; and the human species, at this rate of propagation, would more than double every generation. How fast do mankind multiply in every colony or new fettlement; where it is an eafy matter to provide for a family; and where men are nowife straitened or confined, as in long eftablished governments ? History tells us frequently of plagues, which have fwept away the third or fourth part of a people : Yet in a generation or two, the deftruction was not perceived; and the fociety had again acquired their former number. The lands which were cultivated, the houses built, the commodities raised, the riches acquired, enabled the people, who efcaped, immediately to marry, and to rear families, which supplied the place of those who had perified *.

This too is a good realon why the fmall-pox does not depopulate conntries fo much as may at first fight be imagined. Where there is room for more people, they will always arife, even without the affiftance of naturalistion-bille. It is remarked by DON GARON DE USTATZ, that she provinces of SPAIN, which fend most people to the INDIES, are most gopulane; which proceeds from their superior riches.

Digitized by Google

And

And for a like reafon, every wife, juft, and mild government, by rendering the condition of its fubjects eafy and fecure, will always abound moft in people, as well as in commodities and riches. A country, indeed, whofe climate and foil are fitted for vines, will naturally be more populous than one which produces corn only, and that more populous than one which is only fitted for pafturage. In general, warm climates, as the neceffities of the inhabitants are there fewer, and vegetation more powerful, are likely to be moft populous : But if every thing elfe be equal, it feems natural to expect, that, wherever there are moft happines and virtue, and the wiseft inftitutions, there will also be moft people.

The queftion, therefore, concerning the populoufnefs of ancient and modern times, being allowed of great importance, it will be requifite, if we would bring it to fome determination, to compare both the domestic and political fituation of these two periods, in order to judge of the facts by their moral causes; which is the first view in which we proposed to confider them.

ß

1

1

1

r.

Ø

ġ

¢

1

Ż

Ż

ġ

5

ł,

ź

1

The chief difference between the domestic ceconomy of the ancients and that of the moderns confifts in the practice of flavery, which prevailed among the former, and which has been abolished for some centuries throughout the greater part of EUROPE. Some paffionate admirers of the ancients, and zealous partizans of civil liberty (for these sentiments, as they are, both of them. in the main, extremely just, are found to be almost in. feparable), cannot forbear regretting the loss of this inftitution; and whilft they brand all fubmiffion to the government of a fingle perfon with the harfh denomination of flavery, they would gladly reduce the greater part of mankind to real flavery and fubjection. But to one who confiders coolly on the fubject, it will appear, that human Vol. I. Dd nature, nature, in general, really enjoys more liberty at prefent. in the most arbitrary government of EUROPE, than it ever did during the most flourishing period of ancient times. As much as fubmifion to a petty prince, whofe dominions extend not beyond a fingle city, is more grievous than obedience to a great monarch; fo much is domeffic flavery more cruel and oppreffive than any civil subjection whatsoever. The more the master is removed from us in place and rank, the greater liberty we enjoy; the lefs are our actions infpected and controled; and the fainter that cruel comparison becomes between our own fubjection, and the freedom, and even dominion of another. The remains which are found of domeftic flavery, in the AMERICAN colonies, and among fome EUROPEAN nations, would never furely create a defire of rendering it more universal. The little humanity, commonly observed in persons, accustomed, from their infancy, to exercise to great authority over their fellow-creatures, and to trample upon human nature. were fufficient alone to difgust us with that unbounded dominion. Nor can a more probable reafon be affigned for the fevere, I might fay, barbarous manners of ancient times, than the practice of domestic flavery; by which every man of rank was rendered a petty tyrant, and educated amidst the flattery, submission, and low debalement of his flaves.

ESSAY XI.

According to ancient practice, all checks were on the inferior, to reftrain him to the duty of fubmiffion; none on the fuperior, to engage him to the reciprocal duties of gentlenefs and humanity. In modern times, a bad fervant finds not eafily a good mafter, nor a bad mafter a good fervant; and the checks are mutual, fuitably to the inviolable and eternal laws of reafon and equity.

Digitized by Google.

The

The cuftom of exposing old, useles, or fick flaves in an island of the TYBER, there to flarve, feems to have been pretty common in ROME; and whoever recovered, after having been to exposed, had his liberty given him, by an edict of the emperor CLAUDIUS; in which it was likewife forbidden to kill any flave merely for old age or fickness*. But supposing that this edict was strictly obeyed, would it better the domestic treatment of flaves, or render their lives much more comfortable? We may imagine what others would practife, when it was the professed maxim of the elder CATO, to fell his superannuated flaves for any price, rather than maintain what he efteemed a useles burden \pm .

The ergafula, or dungeons, where flaves in chains were forced to work, were very common all over ITALY, COLUMELLA \ddagger advifes, that they be always built under ground; and recommends \parallel it as the duty of a careful overfeer, to call over every day the names of these flaves; like the muftering of a regiment or fhip's company, in order to know prefently when any of them had deferted. A proof of the frequency of these ergafula, and of the great number of flaves ufually confined in them.

A chained flave for a porter, was ufual in ROME, as appears from OVID §, and other authors ¶. Had not thefe people fhaken off all fense of compassion towards that unhappy part of their species, would they have presented their friends, at the first entrance, with such an image of the severity of the masser, and misery of the flave?

Nothing fo common in all trials, even of civil caufes, as to call for the evidence of flaves; which was always

* SURTONIUS in vita CLAUDII. + P

+ PLUT. in vita CATONIS. || Id. lib. xi. cap. 1.

Digitized by Google

§ Amor. lib. i. eleg. 6.

1 Lib. i. cap. 6.

3

c

Ľ.

Y

ų.

S

R

£.

ő

ġ

Ē

3

2

Æ

ź

ž

1

5.

t

!!

ŀ

ŭ

ú

ć

2

.

¶ SUETON. de claris rhetor. So allo the ancient poet, Janitoris tintinnice impedimenta audio.

D d 2

extorted

extorted by the most exquisite torments. DEMOSTHENES fays *, that, where it was possible to produce, for the fame fact, either freemen or flaves, as witness, the judges always preferred the torturing of flaves, as a more certain evidence +.

SENECA draws a picture of that diforderly luxury, which changes day into night, and night into day, and inverts every flated hour of every office in life. Among other circumflances, fuch as difplacing the meals and times of bathing, he mentions, that, regularly about the third hour of the night, the neighbours of one, who indulges this falfe refinement, hear the noife of whips and lafhes; and, upon enquiry, find that he is then taking an account of the conduct of his fervants, and giving them due correction and difcipline. This is not remarked as an inflance of cruelty, but only of diforder, which, even in actions the most usual and methodical, changes the fixed hours that an eftablished custom had affigned for them \ddagger .

But our prefent bulinefs is only to confider the influence of flavery on the populoufnefs of a flate. It is pretended, that, in this particular, the ancient practice had infinitely the advantage, and was the chief caufe of that extreme populoufnefs, which is fuppofed in those times. At prefent, all mafters difcourage the marrying of their male fervants, and admit not by any means the marriage of the female, who are then fuppofed altogether incapacitated for their fervice. But where the property

* In Oniterem orat. 1.

+ The fame practice was very common in ROME; but CICERO feens not to think this evidence fo certain as the testimony of free-citizens. Pro Calis.

‡ See NOTE [U].

Digitized by Google

đ

of the fervants is lodged in the mafter, their marriage forms his riches, and brings him a fucceffion of flaves. that fupply the place of those whom age and infirmity have difabled. He encourages, therefore, their propagation as much as that of his cattle; rears the young with the fame care; and educates them to fome art or calling, which may render them more useful or valuable to him. The opulent are, by this policy, interested in the being at leaft, though not in the well-being of the poor : and enrich themfelves, by encreafing the number and industry of those who are subjected to them. Each man. being a fovereign in his own family, has the fame intereft with regard to it, as the prince with regard to the flate; and has not, like the prince, any opposite motives of ambition or vain-glory, which may lead him to depopulate his little fovereignty. All of it is, at all times, under his eye ; and he has leifure to infpect the most minute detail of the marriage and education of his fubjects *.

Such are the confequences of domeftic flavery, according to the first aspect and appearance of things: But if we enter more deeply into the fubject, we shall perhaps find reason to retract our hasty determinations. The comparison is shocking between the management of human creatures and that of cattle; but being extremely 'just, when applied to the present subject, it may be proper to trace the confequences of it. At the capital, near all great cities, in all populous, rich, industrious provinces, few cattle are bred. Provisions, lodging, attendance, labour are there dear; and men find their

* We may here observe, that if domestic flavery really encreased populoniness, it would be an exception to the general rule, that the happiness of any society and its populousness are necessary attendants. A master, from humour or interess, may make his flaves very unhappy, yet be careful, from interess, to encrease their number. Their marriage is not a matter of shoice with them, more than any other action of their life, account

Dd 3

ESSAY XI.

406

account better in buying the cattle, after they come to a certain age, from the remoter and cheaper countries. These are consequently the only breeding countries for cattle; and by a parity of reason, for men too, when the latter are put on the fame footing with the former. To rear a child in LONDON, till he could be ferviceable, would coft much dearer, than to buy one of the fame age from SCOTLAND or IRELAND; where he had been bred in a cottage, covered with rags, and fed on oatmeal or Those who had flaves, therefore, in all the potatoes. richer and more populous countries, would discourage the pregnancy of the females, and either prevent or deftrov the birth. The human species would perifh in those places where it ought to encrease the fastest; and a perpetual recruit be wanted from the poorer and more defert provinces. Such a continued drain would tend mightily to depopulate the flate, and render great cities ten times more destructive than with us : where every man is mafter of himfelf, and provides for his children from the powerful inftinct of nature, not the calculations of fordid interest. If LONDON, at prefent, without much encreasing, needs a yearly recruit from the country, of 5000 people, as is usually computed, what must it require, if the greater part of the tradefmen and common people were flaves, and were hindered from breeding by their avaricious mafters ?

All ancient authors tell us, that there was a perpetual flux of flaves to ITALY from the remoter provinces, particularly SYRIA, CILICIA *, CAPPADOCIA, and the Leffer ASIA, THRACE, and ÆGYPT: Yet the number of people did not encreafe in ITALY; and writers complain of the continual decay of industry and agriculture *. Where then is that extreme fertility of the Ro-MAN flaves, which is commonly fuppofed ? So far from multiplying, they could not, it feems, fo much as keep up the flock, without immenfe recruits. And though great numbers were continually manumitted and converted into ROMAN citizens, the numbers even of thefe did not encreafe +, till the freedom of the city was communicated to foreign provinces.

* Ten thousand flaves in a day have often been fold for the use of the ROMANS, at DELUS in CILICIA. STRAYO, lib. xiv.

tur

Populousness of Ancient Nations. 407

The term for a flave, born and bred in the family, was verna \ddagger ; and these flaves seem to have been entitled by custom to privileges and indulgences beyond others; a fufficient reason why the masters would not be fond of rearing many of that kind \parallel . Whoever is acquainted with the maxims of our planters, will acknowledge the justness of this observation §.

ATTICUS is much praifed by his hiftorian, for the care which he took in recruiting his family from the flaves

* COLUMELLA, lib. i. proæm. et cap. 2. et 7. VARRO, lib. iii. cap. 1. HURAT. lib. ii. od. 15. TACIT. onnal. lib. iii. cap. 54. SUETON. in vita AUG. cap. xlii. PLIN. lib. xviii. cap. 13.

† Minore indies plebe ingenua, says TACITUS, ann. lib. xxiv. cap. 7.

[†] See NOTE [X].

ĩ

ť

ľ

3

::

١.

2

3

ī.

7

-

تعا jt

Ţ,

ļí

÷

ç,

1

$

3 ú

į,

5

|| Verna is used by ROMAN writers as a word equivalent to feurra, on account of the petulance and impudence of those stars. MART. lib. i. ep. 42. HORACE also mentions the vernæ procaces; and PETRONIUS, cap. 34. vernula urbanicas. SENECA, de provid. cap. I. vernularum licentia.

§ It is computed in the WEST INDIES, that a flock of flaves grow worfs five per cent. every year, unlefs new flaves be bought to recruit them. They are not able to keep up their number, even in thofe warm countries, where cloaths and provisions are fo tafily got. How much more muft this happen in EUROPEAN countries, and in or near great cities? I fhall add, that, from the experience of our planters, flavery is as little advantageous to the mafter as to the flave, wherever hired fervants can be procured. A man is obliged to slowth and feed his flave; and he does no more for his fervant : The price of the first purthale is, therefore, fo much loss to him : not to mention, that the fear of punifhment will never draw fo much labour from a flave, as the dread of being turned off, and not getting another fervice, will from a freeman.

Dd4

Digitized by Google

born

born in it *: May we not thence infer, that this practice was not then very common ?

The names of flaves in the GREEK comedies, SYRUS, MYSUS, GETA, THRAX, DAVUS, LYDUS, PHRYX, &c. afford a prefumption, that, at ATHENS at leaft, moft of the flaves were imported from foreign countries. The ATHE-NIANS, fays STRABO +, gave to their flaves, either the names of the nations whence they were bought, as LYDUS, SYRUS; or the names that were moft common among those nations, as MANES or MIDAS to a PHRYGIAN, TIEIAS to a PAPHLAGONIAN.

DEMOSTHENES, having mentioned a law which forbad any man to firike the flave of another, praifes the humanity of this law; and adds, that, if the barbarians, from whom the flaves were bought, had information that their countrymen met with fuch gentle treatment, they would entertain a great effeem for the ATHE-NIANS ‡. ISOCRATES || too infinuates, that the flaves of the GREEKS were generally or very commonly barbarians. ARISTOTLE in his Politics § plainly fuppofes, that a flave is always a foreigner. The ancient comic writers reprefented the flaves as fpeaking a barbarous language ¶. This was an imitation of nature.

It is well known that DEMOSTHENES, in his nonage, had been defrauded of a large fortune by his tutors, and

* CORN. NEPOS in vita ATTICI. We may remark, that ATTICUS's effate lay chiefly in EPIRUS, which, being a remote, defolate place, would render it profitable for him to rear flaves there.

 + Lib. vii.
 ‡ In MIDIAM, p. 221. ex edit. ALDI.

 + Panegyr.
 § Lib. vii. cap. 10. fub fin.

¶ ARISTOPH. Equites, l. 17. The ancient fcholiaft remarks on this public βαξδαρίζει ως δαλ@.

Digitized by Google

that

that afterwards he recovered, by a profecution at law, the value of his patrimony. His orations, on that occasion. ftill remain, and contain an exact detail of the whole fubstance left by his father *, in money, merchandife, houses, and flaves, together with the value of each particular. Among the reft were 52 flaves, handicraftsmen, namely, 32 fword-cutlers, and 20 cabinet-makers +; all males; not a word of any wives, children or family, which they certainly would have had, had it been a common practice at ATHENS to breed from the flaves : And the value of the whole must have much depended on that circumstance. No female flaves are even fo much as mentioned, except fome houfe-maids, who belonged to his This argument has great force, if it be not mother. altogether conclusive.

Confider this paffage of PLUTARCH ‡, fpeaking of the Elder CATO. " He had a great number of flaves, whom " he took care to buy at the fales of prifoners of war; " and he chofe them young, that they might eafily be " accuftomed to any diet or manner of life, and be in-" ftructed in any bufinefs or labour, as men teach any " thing to young dogs or horfes.— And efteeming " love the chief fource of all diforders, he allowed the " male flaves to have a commerce with the female in his " family, upon paying a certain fum for this privilege : " But he ftrictly prohibited all intrigues out of his family." Are there any fymptoms in this narration of that care which is fuppofed in the antients, of the marriage and propagation of their flaves ? If that was a common practice, founded on general intereft, it would furely have

- * In Amphobum orat. 1.
- + zhivowow, makers of these beds which the ancients lay upon at meals.
- 1 In vita CATONIA been

410

been embraced by Cato, who was a great æconomift, and lived in times when the ancient frugality and fimplicity of manners were still in credit and reputation.

It is expressly remarked by the writers of the ROMAN law, that fcarcely any ever purchase flaves with a view of breeding from them *,

Our lackeys and houfe-maids, I own, do not ferve much to multiply their fpecies: But the ancients, befides those who attended on their person, had almost all their labour performed, and even manufactures executed, by flaves, who lived, many of them, in their family; and some great men possible to the number of 10,000. If there be any suspicion, therefore, that this infitution was unfavourable to propagation (and the same reason, at least in part, holds with regard to ancient flaves as modern fervants), how destructive must flavery have proved?

Hiftory mentions a ROMAN nobleman, who had 400 flaves under the fame roof with him : And having been affaffinated at home by the furious revenge of one of them, the law was executed with rigour, and all without exception were put to death +. Many other ROMAN noblemen had families equally, or more numerous; and I believe every one will allow, that this would fcarcely be practicable, were we to fuppofe all the flaves married, and the females to be breeders \pm .

• See NOTE [Y],

+ TACIT. ann. lib. xiv. cap. 43.

¹ The flaves in the great houses had little rooms affigned them, called eelle. Whence the name of cell was transferred to the monks room in a coavent. See farther on this head, JUST. LIPSIUS, Saturn. i. cap. 14. These form flrong prefumptions against the marriage and propagation of the family flaves.

Digitized by Google

Sø

So early as the poet HESIOD*, married flaves, whether male or female, were efteemed inconvenient. How much more, where families had encreafed to fuch an enormous fize as in ROME, and where the ancient fimplicity of manners was banifhed from all ranks of people?

ЭĽ

.

Ζ.

___

127 rba

24

. X

347

۲; ۵

c J

3

 $\mathbf{2}$

11

T

تېلغ ترې

10

itas Nati

; # ______

i i i

alt aisi

:. H

ا و

ŷ

XENOPHON in his Oeconomics, where he gives directions for the management of a farm, recommends a firict care and attention of laying the male and the female flaves at a diffance from each other. He feems not to fuppofe that they are ever married. The only flaves among the GREEKS that appear to have continued their own race, were the HELOTES, who had houses apart, and were more the flaves of the public than of individuals +.

The fame author ‡ tells us, that NICIAS's overfeer, by agreement with his mafter, was obliged to pay him an obolus a day for each flave; befides maintaining them, and keeping up the number. Had the ancient flaves been all breeders, this last circumstance of the contract had been superfluous.

The ancients talk fo frequently of a fixed, flated portion of provisions affigned to each flave \parallel , that we are naturally led to conclude, that flaves lived almost all fingle, and received that portion as a kind of boardwages.

The practice, indeed, of marrying flaves feems not to have been very common, even among the country-labourers, where it is more naturally to be expected. CATO §, enumerating the flaves requifite to labour a vineyard of a hundred acres, makes them amount to 15; the overfeer

* Opera et Dies, lib. ii. l. 24. alfo l. 220.

1 De ratione redituum.

Digitized by Google

|| See CATO de re ruftice, cap. 56. Donatus in Phormion, 1. 2. 9. SENECÆ epift. 80.

§ Dere ruft. cap. 10, 11.

Т STRABO, lib. viii.

and

and his wife, villicus and villica, and 13 male flaves; for an olive plantation of 240 acres, the overfeer and his wife, and 11 male flaves; and fo in proportion to a greater or lefs plantation or vineyard.

VARRO*, quoting this paffage of CATO, allows his computation to be juft in every respect, except the last. For as it is requisite, says he, to have an overseer and his wife, whether the vineyard or plantation be great or small, this must alter the exactness of the proportion. Had CATO's computation been erroneous in any other respect, it had certainly been corrected by VARRO, who seems fond of discovering fo trivial an error.

The fame author +, as well as COLUMELLA ‡, recommends it as requifite to give a wife to the overfeer, in order to attach him the more flrongly to his mafter's fervice. This was therefore a peculiar indulgence granted to a flave, in whom fo great confidence was repofed.

In the fame place, VARRO mentions it as an uleful precaution, not to buy too many flaves from the fame nation, left they beget factions and feditions in the family: A prelumption, that in ITALY, the greater part, even of the country labouring flaves (for he fpeaks of no other), were bought from the remoter provinces. All the world knows, that the family flaves in ROME, who were inftruments of fhow and luxury, were commonly imported from the eaft. Hoc profecere, fays PLINY, fpeaking of the jealous care of mafters, mancipiorum legiones, et in domo turba externa, ac fervorum quoque caufa nomenclator adbibendus [].

* Lib. i. cap. 18. † Lib. i. cap. 17. ‡ Lib. i. cap. 18. # Lib. xxxiii. cap. 1. So likewile TACITUS, annal. lib. xiv. cap. 44. It

Digitized by Google

412.

It is indeed recommended by VARRO*, to propagat young fhepherds in the family from the old ones. For as grafing farms were commonly in remote and cheap places, and each fhepherd lived in a cottage apart, his marriage and encreafe were not liable to the fame inconveniencies as in dearer places, and where many fervants lived in the family; which was univerfally the cafe in fuch of the ROMAN farms as produced wine or corn. If we confider this exception with regard to fhepherds, and weigh the reafons of it, it will ferve for a firong confirmation of all our foregoing fufpicions \dagger .

COLUMELLA ‡, I own, advifes the mafter to give a reward, and even liberty to a female flave, that had reared him above three children : A proof, that fometimes the ancients propagated from their flaves; which, indeed, cannot be denied. Were it otherwife, the practice of flavery, being fo common in antiquity, muft have been deftructive to a degree which no expedient could repair. All I pretend to infer from these reasonings is, that flavery is in general difadvantageous both to the happiness and populous for mankind, and that its place is much better supplied by the practice of hired fervants.

The laws, or, as fome writers call them, the feditions of the GRACCHI, were occasioned by their observing the encrease of flaves all over ITALY, and the diminution of free citizens. APPIAN || ascribes this encrease to the propagation of the flaves: PLUTARCH § to the purchafing of barbarians, who were chained and imprisoned, $\beta \alpha \rho \beta \alpha \rho \alpha \alpha \delta c \rho \omega \sigma n \rho \alpha q$. It is to be prefumed that both causes concurred.

SICILY,

* Lib. ii. cap. 10.

3

Ţ.

3

į.

áľ

D)

.

1

ŀ

k.

đ 1

+ Paftoris duri eft hic filius, ille bubulci. Juven. fat. 11. 151.

1 Lib. i. cap. 8. || De bel. civ. lib. i.

§ In vita TIB. & C. GRACCHI.

¶ To the fame purpofe is that paffage of the elder SENECA, ex controverfiz 5, lib. v. "Arata quondam populis rura, fingulornm ergaflulorum funt; '' latiufque

414

SICILY, fays FLORUS*, was full of ergafula, and was cultivated by labourers in chains. EUNUS and ATHE-NIO excited the fervile war, by breaking up these monftrous prifons, and giving liberty to 60,000 flaves. The younger POMPEY augmented his army in SPAIN by the fame expedient +. If the country labourers, throughout the ROMAN empire, were fo generally in this fituation, and if it was difficult or impossible to find separate lodgings for the families of the city fervants, how unfavourable to propagation, as well as to humanity, must the inftitution of domestic flavery be effcemed ?

CONSTANTINOPLE, at prefent, requires the fame recruits of flaves from all the provinces, that Rome did of old; and these provinces are of consequence far from being populous.

EGYPT, according to Monf. MAILLET, fends continual colonies of black flaves to the other parts of the TURMISH empire; and receives annually an equal return of white: The one brought from the inland parts of AFRICA; the other from MINGREZIA, CIRCASSIA; and TARTARY.

Our modern convents are, no doubt, bad inflitutions : But there is re fon to fulpect, that anciently every great family in ITALY, and probably in other parts of the world.

" latiusque nunc villici, quam olim reges, imperant. At nunc eadem," says PLINT, ("vincti pedes, damnatæ manus, inferipti vultus exercent." Lib. zviii. cap. 3. So alfo MARTIAL.

"Et sonet innumera compede Thuscus ager." Lib. ix. ep. 23. And LUCAN. "Tum longos jungere fines

Digitized by

Agrorum, et quondam duro sulcata Camilli,

Vomere et antiquas Curiorum passa ligones, Longa sub ignotis extendere rura colonis."

Lib. i.

". Vincto foffore coluntur Hefperiæ fegetes ----- " • Lib. iii. cap. 19. ----

Lib. vii.

+ Id. lib. iv. cap. 8.

· W28

Populousness of Ancient Nations. 415

was a fpecies of convent. And though we have reafon to condemn all those popsific inflitutions, as nurferies of superfittion, burthensome to the public, and opprefive to the poor prisoners, male as well as female; yet may it be questioned whether they be so deftructive to the populoufness of a state, as is commonly imagined. Were the land, which belongs to a convent, bestowed on a nobleman, he would spend its revenue on dogs, horses, grooms, footmen, cooks, and house-maids: and his family would not furnish many more citizens than the convent.

The common reason, why any parent thrusts his daughters into nunneries, is, that he may not be overburthened with too numerous a family; but the ancients had a method almost as innocent, and more effectual to that purpose, to wit, exposing their children in early infancy. This practice was very common ; and is not spoken of by any author of those times with the horror it deferves, or fcarcely* even with difapprobation. PLU-TARCH, the humane, good-natured PLUTARCH+, mentions it as a merit in ATTALUS, king of PERGAMUS, that he murdered, or, if you will, exposed all his own children, in order to leave his crown to the fon of his brother, EUMENES; fignalizing in this manner his gratitude and affection to EUMENES, who had left him his heir preferably to that fon. It was SOLON, the most celebrated of the fages of GREECE, that gave parents permission by law to kill their children t.

Shall we then allow these two circumstances to compensate each other, to wit, monastic vows and the expoling of children, and to be unfavourable, in equal degrees, to the propagation of mankind? I doubt the 1 SEXT, EMP. lib. iii, cap. 24.

Digitized by Google

6

advantage

^{*} TACITUS blames it. De morib.Germ.

⁺ De fraterno amore. SENECA also approves of the exposing of fickly infirm children. De ira, lib, i, cap. 15.

´ĔSSĂŸ XI.

advantage is here on the fide of antiquity. Perhaps, by an odd connexion of caufes, the barbarous practice of the ancients might rather render those times more populous. By removing the terrors of too numerous a family it would engage many people in marriage; and such is the force of natural affection, that very few, in comparifon, would have resolution enough, when it came to the push, to carry into execution their former intentions.

CHINA, the only country where this practice of expoling children prevails at prefent, is the molt populous country we know of; and every man is married before he is twenty. Such early marriages could fearcely be general, had not men the prospect of so early a method of getting rid of their children. I own, that * PLUTARCH speaks of it as a very general maxim of the poor to expole their children; and as the rich were then averle to marriage, on account of the courtship they met with from those who expected legacies from them, the public must have been in a bad fituation between them \pm .

Of all fciences there is none, where first appearances are more deceitful than in politics. Hospitals for foundlings seem favourable to the encrease of numbers; and, perhaps, may be so, when kept under proper restrictions. But when they open the door to every one, without distinction, they have probably a contrary effect, and are pernicious to the state. It is computed, that every ninth child born at PARIS, is sent to the hospital; though it seems certain, according to the common course of human affairs, that it is not a hundredth child whose parents are altogether incapacitated to rear and educate him. The great difference, for health, industry, and morals,

* De amore prolis.

+ See NOTE [Z].

5

Digitized by Google

between

between an education in an holpital and that in a private family, fhould induce us not to make the entrance into the former too eafy and engaging. To kill one's own child is fhocking to nature, and must therefore be fomewhat unufual; but to turn over the care of him upon others, is very tempting to the natural indolence of mankind.

R

b

đ

g.

Ø,

.

ð

.

¢,

b

ø

j,

Ż

1

Having confidered the domeflic life and manners of the ancients, compared to those of the moderns; where, in the main, we seem rather superior, so far as the present question is concerned; we shall now examine the political customs and institutions of both ages, and weigh their influence in retarding or forwarding the propagation of mankind.

Before the encreale of the ROMAN power, or rather till its full establishment, almost all the nations, which are the scene of ancient history, were divided into small territories or petty commonwealths, where of course a great equality of fortune prevailed, and the center of the government was always very near its frontiers.

This was the fituation of affairs not only in GREECE and ITALY, but also in SPAIN, GAUL, GERMANY, AFRIC, and a great part of the Leffer AsIA : And it muft be owned, that no inftitution could be more favourable to the propagation of mankind. For, though a man of an overgrown fortune, not being able to confume more than another, must share it with those who serve and attend him; yet their poffession being precarious, they have not the fame encouragement to marry, as if each had a fmall fortune, fecure and independent. Enormous cities are, befides, deftructive to fociety, beget vice and diforder of all kinds, starve the remoter provinces, and even starve themselves, by the prices to which they raise VOL. I. Еe all all provisions. Where each man had his little houfe and field to himfelf, and each county had its capital, free and independent; what a happy fituation of mankind! How favourable to industry and agriculture; to marriage and propagation! The prolific virtue of men, were it to act in its full extent, without that reftraint which poverty and neceffity impose on it, would double the number every generation: And nothing furely can give it more liberty, than fuch small commonwealths, and fuch an equality of fortune among the citizens. All small states naturally produce equality of fortune, because they afford no opportunities of great encrease; but small commonwealths much more, by that division of power and authority which is effential to them.

When XENOPHON * returned after the famous expedition with CYRUS, he hired himfelf and 6000 of the GREEKS into the fervice of SEUTHES, a prince of THRACE; and the articles of his agreement were, that each foldier fhould receive a daric a month, each captain two darics, and he himfelf, as general, four: A regulation of pay which would not a little furprife our modern officers.

DEMOSTHENES and ÆSCHINES, with eight more, were fent ambaffadors to PHILIP of MACEDON, and their appointments for above four months were a thousand drachmas, which is less than a drachma a day for each ambaffador +. But a drachma a day, may fometimes two \ddagger , was the pay of a common foot-foldier.

A centurion among the ROMANS had only double pay to a private man, in POLYBIUS'S time ||; and we accord-

Digitized by Google

|| Lib. vi. cap. 37.

* Do exp. Cyn. lib. vii.

🕇 Thucyd. lib. ii

ingly

[†] DEMOST. de falfa leg. He calls it a confiderable fum.

ingly find the gratuities after a triumph regulated by that proportion *. But MARK ANTHONY and the triumvirate gave the centurions five times the reward of the other +. So much had the encrease of the commonwealth encreased the inequality among the citizens \ddagger .

It muft be owned, that the fituation of affairs in modern times, with regard to civil liberty, as well as equality of fortune, is not near fo favourable, either to the propagation or happinefs of mankind. EUROPE is fhared out moftly into great monarchies; and fuch parts of it as are divided into fmall territories, are commonly governed by abfolute princes, who ruin their people by a mimicry of the greater monarchs, in the fplendor of their court and number of their forces. SWISSERLAND alone and HOLLAND refemble the ancient republics; and though the former is far from poffeffing any advantage either of foil, climate, or commerce, yet the numbers, of people, with which it abounds, notwithftanding their enlifting themfelves into every fervice in EUROPE, prove fufficiently the advantages of their political inftitutions.

The ancient republics derived their chief or only fecurity from the numbers of their citizens. The TRACHI-NIANS having loft great numbers of their people, the remainder, inflead of enriching themfelves by the inheritance of their fellow-citizens, applied to SPARTA, their metropolis, for a new flock of inhabitants. The SPARTANS immediately collected ten thousand men 3 among whom the old citizens divided the lands of which the former proprietors had perifhed ||.

* TIT. LIV. lib. xli. cap. 7. 13. & alibi paffim.

+ APPIAN. De bell. civ. lib. iv.

† CESAR gave the centurions ten times the gratuity of the common foldiers. De bello Gallico, lib. viii. In the RHODIAN cartel, mentioned afterwards, no diffinction in the ranfom was made on account of ranks in the army.

DIOD. SIC. lib. xii. THUCYD. lib. iii.

Digitized by Google

After

ĖSŠAŸ XI.

After TIMOLEON had banifhed DIONYSIUS from Sy-RACUSE, and had fettled the affairs of SICILY, finding the cities of SYRACUSE and SELLINUNTIUM extremely depopulated by tyranny, war, and faction, he invited over from GREECE fome new inhabitants to repeople them *. Immediately forty thousand men (PLUTARCH + fays fixty thousand) offered themselves; and he diftributed fo many lots of land among them, to the great fatisfaction of the ancient inhabitants : A proof at once of the maxims of ancient policy, which affected populoufnefs more than riches; and of the good effects of these maxims, in the extreme populousness of that small country, GREECE, which could at once fupply fo great a colony. The cafe was not much different with the ROMANS in early times. He is a pernicious citizen, faid M. CURIUS, who cannot be content with feven ‡ acres. Such ideas of equality could not fail of producing great numbers of people.

We muft now confider what difadvantages the ancients lay under with regard to populoufnefs, and what checks they received from their political maxims and infitutions. There are commonly compenfations in every human condition; and though these compenfations be not always perfectly equal, yet they ferve, at leaft, to restrain the prevailing principle. To compare them and estimate their influence, is indeed difficult, even where they take place in the same age, and in neighbouring countries: But where several ages have intervened, and only feattered lights are afforded us by ancient authors ; what can we do but amuse ourselves by talking pro and con, on an interesting subject, and thereby correcting all hasty and violent determinations?

* DIOF. SIC. lib. xvi. † In vita TIMOL. ‡ Sce NOTE [AA].

Digitized by Google

Firft,

Fir β , We may observe, that the ancient republics were almost in perpetual war, a natural effect of their martial spirit, their love of liberty, their mutual emulation, and that hatred which generally prevails among nations that live in close neighbourhood. Now, war in a small state is much more destructive than in a great one; both because all the inhabitants, in the former case, must serve in the armies; and because the whole state is frontier, and is all exposed to the inroads of the enemy.

The maxims of ancient war were much more deftructive than those of modern; chiefly by that diffribution of plunder, in which the foldiers were indulged. The private men in our armies are such a low set of people, that we find any abundance, beyond their simple pay, breeds confusion and disorder among them, and a total disfolution of discipline. The very wretchedness and meanness of those, who fill the modern armies, render them less destructive to the countries which they invade: One instance, among many of the deceitfulness of first appearances in all political reasonings *.

Ancient battles were much more bloody, by the very nature of the weapons employed in them. The ancients drew up their men 16 or 20, fometimes 50 men deep, which made a narrow front; and it was not difficult to find a field, in which both armies might be marfhalled, and might engage with each other. Even where any body of the troops was kept off by hedges, hillocks, woods, or hollow ways, the battle was not fo foon de-

* The ancient foldiers, being free citizens, above the loweft rank, were all married. Our modern foldiers are either forced to live unmarried, or their marriages turn to fmall account towards the encrease of mankind. A sircumftance which ought, perhaps, to be taken into confideration, as of some confequence in favour of the ancients.

Digitized by Google

Ee 3

cided

cided between the contending parties, but that the others had time to overcome the difficulties which oppofed them, and take part in the engagement. And as the whole army was thus engaged, and each man clofely buckled to his antagonift, the battles were commonly very bloody, and great flaughter was made on both fides, efpecially on the vanquifhed. The long thin lines, required by fire-arms, and the quick decifion of the fray, render our modern engagements but partial rencounters, and enable the general, who is foiled in the beginning of the day, to draw off the greater part of his army, found and entire.

The battles of antiquity, both by their duration and their refemblance to fingle combats, were wrought up to a degree of fury quite unknown to later ages. Nothing could then engage the combatants to give quarter, but the hopes of profit, by making flaves of their prifoners. In civil wars, as we learn from TACITUS *, the battles were the most bloody, because the prifoners were not flaves.

What a flout refiftance muft be made, where the vanquifhed expected fo hard a fate ! How inveterate the rage, where the maxims of war were, in every refpect, fo bloody and fevere !

Instances are frequent, in ancient history, of cities befieged, whose inhabitants, rather than open their gates, murdered their wives and children, and rushed themfelves on a voluntary death, sweetened perhaps by a little prospect of revenge upon the enemy. GREEKS †, as well as BARBARIANS, have often been wrought up to

* Hift. lib. ii. cap. 44.

+ As ABYDUS, mentioned by LIVY, lib. XXX. cap. 17, 18. and POLYB. lib. XVI. As also the XANTHIANS, APPIAN. de bell. civil. lib. iv,

Digitized by Google

this

this degree of fury. And the fame determined fpirit and cruelty muft, in other inftances lefs remarkable, have been deftructive to human fociety, in those petty commonwealths, which lived in close neighbourhood, and were engaged in perpetual wars and contentions.

Sometimes the wars in GREECE, fays PLUTARCH*, were carried on entirely by inroads, and robberies, and piracies. Such a method of war must be more destructive in small states, than the bloodiest battles and sieges.

By the laws of the twelve tables, possession during two years formed a prefcription for land; one year for moveables +: An indication, that there was not in ITALY, at that time, much more order, tranquillity, and fettled police, than there is at prefent among the TARTARS.

The only cartel I remember in ancient hiftory, is that between DEMETRIUS POLIORCETES and the RHO-DIANS; when it was agreed, that a free citizen fhould be reftored for 1000 drachmas, a flave bearing arms for 500 [‡].

But, fecondly, It appears that ancient manners were more unfavourable than the modern, not only in times of war, but also in those of peace; and that too in every respect, except the love of civil liberty and of equality, which is, I own, of confiderable importance. To exclude faction from a free government, is very difficult, if not altogether impracticable; but fuch inveterate rage between the factions, and fuch bloody maxims, are found, in modern times, amongst religious parties alone. In ancient history we may always obferve, where one party prevailed, whether the nobles or

* In wita ARATI.

+ INST. lib. ii. cap. 6.

1 DIOB. SJCUL. lib. xx.

Ec4

people

Digitized by Google

people (for I can observe no difference in this respect *), that they immediately butchered all of the opposite party who fell into their hands, and banished such as had been so fortunate as to escape their surger. No form of process, no law, no trial, no pardon. A fourth, a third, perhaps near half of the city was flaughtered, or expelled, every revolution; and the exiles always joined foreign enemies and did all the mischief possible to their fellow-citizens; till fortune put it in their power to take full revenge by a new revolution. And as these were frequent in such violent governments, the diforder, diffidence, jealous, enmity, which must prevail, are not easy for us to imagine in this age of the world.

There are only two revolutions I can recollect in ancient hiftory, which paffed without great feverity, and great effufion of blood in maffacres and affaffinations, namely, the reftoration of the ATHENIAN Democracy by THRASYBULUS, and the fubduing of the ROMAN republic by CÆSAR. We learn from ancient hiftory, that THRASYBULUS paffed a general amnefty for all paft offences; and first introduced that word, as well as practice, into GREECE +. It appears, however, from many orations of LYSIAS ‡, that the chief, and even fome of the fubaltern offenders, in the preceding tyranny, were tried, and capitally punifhed. And as to CÆSAR's clemency, though much celebrated, it would not gain great applause in the prefent age. He butchered, for inftance, all CATO'S

* LYSIAS, who was himfelf of the popular faction, and very narrowly efcaped from the thirty tyrants, fays, that the Democracy was as violent a government as the Oligarchy. Oral. 24. de flatu popul.

+ CICERO, PHILIP. I.

1 As orat. 11. contra ERATOST. erat. 12. contra AGORAT. erat. 15. pro MANTITH.

fenate

424

Digitized by Google

fenate, when he became mafter of UTICA *; and thefe, we may readily believe, were not the moft worthlefs of the party. All those who had borne arms against that usurper, were attainted; and, by HIRTIUS's law, declared incapable of all public offices.

These people were extremely fond of liberty; but feem not to have underftood it very well. When the thirty tyrants first established their dominion at ATHENS, they began with feizing all the fycophants and informers, who had been so troublesome during the Democracy, and putting them to death by an arbitrary sentence and execution. Every man, fays SALLUST + and LYSIAS +, was rejiced at these punishments; not confidering, that liberty was from that moment annihilated.

The utmost energy of the nervous style of THUCY-DIDES, and the copiousness and expression of the GREEK language, feem to fink under that hiftorian, when he attempts to defcribe the diforders, which arole from faction throughout all the GRECIAN commonwealths. You would imagine, that he still labours with a thought greater than, he can find words to communicate. And he concludes his pathetic description with an observation, which is at once refined and folid : " In these contests," fays he, " those who were the dullest, and most stupid, " and had the least forefight, commonly prevailed. For " being confcious of this weakness, and dreading to be " over-reached by those of greater penetration, they " went to work hastily, without premeditation, by the " fword and poniard, and thereby got the ftart of their

* APPIAN. de bel. civ. lib. ii.

+ See CESAR's Speech de bell. Catil.

‡ Orat. 24. And in orat. 29. he mentions the factious fpirit of the popular affemblies as the only caule why these illegal punishments should displease.

Digitized by Google

🦸 antagonifts,

" antagonifts, who were forming fine fchemes and pro-" jects for their deftruction "."

Not to mention DIONYSIUS + the elder, who is computed to have butchered in cool blood above 10.000 of his fellow-citizens; or AGATHOCLES 1, NABIS ||, and others, still more bloody than he; the transactions, even in free governments, were extremely violent and deftructive. At ATHENS, the thirty tyrants and the nobles, in a twelvemonth, murdered, without trial, about 1200 of the people, and banifhed above the half of the citizens that remained §. In ARGOS, near the fame time, the people killed 1200 of the nobles; and afterwards their own demagogues, because they had refused to carry their profecutions farther ¶. The people also in CORCYRA killed 1500 of the nobles, and banished a thousand . These numbers will appear the more furprising, if we sonfider the extreme smallness of these states. But all ancient history is full of fuch instances ++.

When ALEXANDER ordered all the exiles to be reftored throughout all the cities; it was found, that the whole amounted to 20,000 men ‡‡; the remains probably of ftill greater flaughters and maffacres. What an aftonifhing multitude in fo narrow a country as ancient GREECE !

* Lib. iii. + PLUT. de virt. & fort. ALZX.

1 DIOD. SIC. lib. xviii, xix.

TIT. Liv. xxxi. xxxiii. xxxiv.

G DIOD. SIC. lib. xiv. ISOCRATES fays there were only 5000 banished. He makes the number of those killed amount to 1500. AREOP. ÆSCHI-NES contra CTESIPH. affigns precisely the same number. SINECA (de Wang. anim. cap. v) fays 13000.

I DIOD. SIC. lib. xv.  DIOD. SIC. lib. xiii.

++ See NOTE [BB].

Digitized by Google

11 Dion Sic, lib, zviii.

And

#26

And what domefic confusion, jealous, partiality, revenge, heart-burnings, must tear those cities, where factions were wrought up to such a degree of fury and despair.

It would be easier, fays ISOCRATES to PHILIP, to raife an army in GREECE at prefent from the vagabonds than from the cities.

Even when affairs came not to fuch extremities (which they failed not to do almost in every city twice or thrice every century), property was rendered very precarious by the maxims of ancient government. XENC-PHON, in the Banquet of SOCRATES, gives us a natural unaffected description of the tyranny of the ATHENIAN people. " In my poverty," fays CHARMIDES, " I am " much more happy than I ever was while possessed of " riches : as much as it is happier to be in fecurity than " in terrors, free than a flave, to receive than to pay " court, to be trufted than fuspected. Formerly I was " obliged to carefs every informer; fome imposition " was continually laid upon me; and it was never al-" lowed me to travel, or be absent from the city. At " prefent, when I am poor I look big, and threaten " others. The rich are afraid of me, and flow me every kind of civility and respect; and I am become a " kind of tyrant in the city *."

In one of the pleadings of LYSIAS +, the orator very coolly speaks of it, by the bye, as a maxim of the ATHE-NIAN people, that, whenever they wanted money, they put to death fome of the rich citizens as well as ftrangers, for the sake of the forfeiture. In mentioning this, he seems not to have any intention of blaming them; fill

Digitized by Google

• Pag. 885. ex edit. LEUNCLAVe + Oret, 29. is NICOMe

lefs

lefs of provoking them, who were his audience and judges.

Whether a man was a citizen or a flranger among that people, it feems indeed requifite, either that he fhould impoverifh himfelf, or that the people would impoverifh him, and perhaps kill him into the bargain. The orator laft mentioned gives a pleafant account of an effate laid out in the public fervice *; that is, above the third of it in raree-flows and figured dances.

I need not infift on the GREEK tyrannies, which were altogether horrible. Even the mixed monarchies, by which most of the ancient states of GREECE were governed, before the introduction of republics, were very unfettled. Scarcely any city, but ATHENS, fays Iso-CRATES, could show a succession of kings for four or five generations \dagger .

Befides many other obvious reafons for the inftability of ancient monarchies, the equal divifion of property among the brothers in private families, muft, by a neceffary confequence, contribute to unfettle and difturb the ftate. The univerfal preference given to the elder by modern laws, though it encreafes the inequality of fortunes, has, however, this good effect, that it accuftoms men to the fame idea in public fucceffion, and cuts off all claim and pretenfion of the younger.

The new fettled colony of HERACLEA, falling immediately into faction, applied to SPARTA, who fent HERI-PIDAS with full authority to quiet their differitons. This man, not provoked by any opposition, not inflamed by party rage, knew no better expedient than immediately putting to death about 500 of the citizens ‡. A

* See NOTE [CC].

, Digitized by Google

+ Panath.

1 Dion. Sic. lib. xiv.

ftrong

428

ftrong proof how deeply rooted these violent maxims of government were throughout all GREECE.

If fuch was the difpolition of men's minds among that refined people, what may be expected in the commonwealths of ITALY, AFRIC, SPAIN, and GAUL, which were denominated barbarous? Why otherwife did the GREEKS fo much value themfelves on their humanity, gentleness, and moderation, above all other nations? This reasoning feems very natural. But unluckily the history of the ROMAN commonwealth, in its earlier times, if we give credit to the received accounts, prefents an oppofite conclusion. No blood was ever fhed in any fedition at ROME, till the murder of the GRACCHI. DIONYSIUS HALICARNASS ÆUS*, observing the fingular humanity of the ROMAN people in this particular, makes use of it as an argument that they were originally of GRECIAN extraction : Whence we may conclude, that the factions and revolutions in the barbarous republics were ufually more violent than even those of GREECE above mentioned.

If the ROMANS were fo late in coming to blows, they made ample compensation, after they had once entered upon the bloody fcene; and APPIAN's history of their civil wars contains the most frightful picture of maffacres, proferiptions, and forfeitures, that ever was prefented to the world. What pleases most, in that historian, is, that he seems to feel a proper resentment of these barbarous proceedings; and talks not with that provoking coolness and indifference, which custom had produced in many of the GREEK historians +.

The maxims of ancient politics contain, in general, fo little humanity and moderation, that it feems fuper-

> * Lib. I. † See NOTE [DD].

fluous '

fluous to give any particular reason for the acts of violence committed at any particular period. Yet I cannot forbear observing, that the laws, in the later period of the ROMAN commonwealth, were fo abfurdly contrived, that they obliged the heads of parties to have recourse to these extremities. All capital punishments were abolished: However criminal, or, what is more, however dangerous any citizen might be, he could not regularly be punished otherwise than by banishment : And it became necessary, in the revolutions of party, to draw the fword of private vengeance; nor was it eafy, when laws were once violated, to fet bounds to these fanguinary proceedings. Had BRUTUS himfelf prevailed over the triumvirate, could he, in common prudence, have allowed OCTAVIUS and ANTHONY, to live, and have contented himself with banishing them to RHODES or MARSEILLES, where they might still have plotted new commotions and rebellions ? His executing C. ANTONIUS, brother to the triumvir, fhows evidently his fense of the matter. Did not CICERO, with the approbation of all the wife and virtuous of ROME, arbitrarily put to death CATILINE's accomplices, contrary to law, and without any trial or form of process? And if he moderated his executions, did it not proceed, either from the clemency of his temper, or the conjunctures of the times ? A wretched fecurity in a government which pretends to laws and liberty !

Thus, one extreme produces another. In the fame manner as exceffive feverity in the laws is apt to beget great relaxation in their execution; fo their exceffive lenity naturally produces cruelty and barbarity. It is dangerous to force us, in any cafe, to pass their facred boundaries.

Digitized by Google

One

430

One general caufe of the diforders, fo frequent in all ancient governments, feems to have confifted in the great difficulty of eftablishing any Aristocracy in those ages, and the perpetual discontents and feditions of the people. whenever even the meaneft and most beggarly were excluded from the legislature and from public offices. The very quality of freemen gave fuch a rank, being opposed to that of flave, that it feemed to entitle the poffeffor to every power and privilege of the commonwealth. So-LON's * laws excluded no freeman from votes or elections, but confined fome magistracies to a particular cenfus; yet were the people never fatisfied till those laws were re-By the treaty with ANTIPATER +, no ATHEpealed. RIAN was allowed a vote whose census was less than 2000 drachmas (about 60 l. Sterling). And though fuch a government would to us appear fufficiently democratical, it was fo difagreeable to that people, that above twothirds of them immediately left their country 1. CAS-SANDER reduced that cenfus to the half ||; yet ftill the government was confidered as an oligarchical tyranny, and the effect of foreign violence.

SERVIUS TULLIUS'S § laws feem equal and reafonable, by fixing the power in proportion to the property: Yet the ROMAN people could never be brought quietly to fubmit to them.

In those days there was no medium between a fevere. jealous Aristocracy, ruling over discontented subjects; and a turbulent, factious, tyrannical Democracy. At prefent, there is not one republic in EUROPE, from one extremity of it to the other, that is not remarkable for justice, lenity, and stability, equal to, or even beyond

Digitized by Google

PLUTARCHUS in vita Solon. + DIOD. SIC. lib. xviii. 1 Id. ibid. § TIT. LIV. lib: i. cap. 43. Id. ibid. MARSEILLES, MARSEILLES, RHODES, or the most celebrated in antiquity. Almost all of them are well-tempered Aristocracies.

But thirdly, There are many other circumftances, in which ancient nations feem inferior to the modern, both for the happiness and encrease of mankind. Trade. manufactures, industry, were no where, in former ages. fo flourishing as they are at present in EUROPE. The only garb of the ancients, both for males and females, feems to have been a kind of flannel, which they wore commonly white or grey, and which they fcoured as often as it became dirty. TYRE, which carried on, after CARTHAGE, the greatest commerce of any city in the MEDITERRANEAN, before it was deftroyed by ALEX-ANDER, was no mighty city, if we credit ARRIAN's account of its inhabitants*. ATHENS is commonly fuppofed to have been a trading city: But it was as populous before the MEDIAN war as at any time after it, according to HERODOTUS +; yet its commerce, at that time, was fo inconfiderable, that, as the fame hiftotian observes t, even the neighbouring coafts of ASIA were as little frequented by the GREEKS as the pillars of HERCULES: For beyond thefe he conceived nothing.

Great interest of money, and great profits of trade, are an infallible indication, that industry and commerce are but in their infancy. We read in LYSIAS \parallel of 100 per rent. profit made on a cargo of two talents, fent to no greater distance than from ATHENS to the ADRIATIC: Nor is this mentioned as an inftance of extraordinary profit. ANTIDORUS, fays DEMOSTHENES $, paid three

* Lib. ii. There were Soco killed during the fiege; and the captives amounted to 30,000. DIODORUS SIEVLUS, lib. xvii. fays only 13,000: But he accounts for this small number, by faying that the TYRIANS had fent away before-hand part of their wives and children to CARTHAGE.

Digitized by Google

+ Lib. v. he makes the number of the citizens amount to 30,000.

1 Ib. v. || Orat. 33. adverf. DLAGIT.

S Contra APHCE. p. 25. ex edit. ALDI.

talents

432

talents and a half for a house which he let at a talent a vear : And the orator blames his own tutors for not employing his money to like advantage. My fortune fays he, in eleven years minority, ought to have been tripled. The value of 20 of the flaves left by his father. he computes at 40 minas, and the yearly profit of their labour at 12*. The most moderate interest at ATHENS, (for there was higher + often paid) was 12 per cent. 1. and that paid monthly. Not to infift upon the high interest. to which the vast sums distributed in elections had raifed money § at ROME, we find, that VERRES. before that factious period, flated 24 per cent. for money which he left in the hands of the publicans: And though CICERO exclaims against this article, it is not on account of the extravagant usury; but because it had never been cuftomary to flate any interest on such occasions #. Interest, indeed, sunk at ROME, after the fettlement of the empire: But it never remained any confiderable time fo low, as in the commercial flates of modern times ¶.

Among the other inconveniencies, which the ATHE-NIANS felt from the fortifying of DACELIA by the LACEDEMONIANS, it is reprefented by THUCYDIDES . as one of the most confiderable, that they could not bring over their corn from EUBEA by land, paffing by OROPUS; but were obliged to embark it, and to fail round the promontory of SUNIUM. A furprifing instance of the imperfection of ancient navigation ! For the water-carriage is not here above double the land,

* Id. p. 19. + Id. ibid. 1 Id. ibid. and ÆSCHINES contra CTESIPH. & Epift. ad ATTIC. lib. iv. epift. 15. Contra VIRR. oral. 3. ¶ See Effay IV.  Lib. vii. Vol. I.

·Ff

Digitized by Google

I de

I do not remember a passage in any ancient author. where the growth of a city is ascribed to the effablishment of a manufacture. The commerce, which is faid to flourish, is chiefly the exchange of those commodities, for which different foils and climates were fuited. The fale of wine and oil into AFRICA, according to DIODO-RUS SICULUS*, was the foundation of the riches of AGRIGENTUM. The fituation of the city of SYBARIS, according to the fame author +, was the caufe of its immense populousness; being built near the two rivers CRATHYS and SYEARIS. But thefe two rivers, we may obferve, are not navigable; and could only produce fome fertile vallies, for agriculture and tillage; an advantage fo inconfiderable, that a modern writer would fcarcely have taken notice of it.

The barbarity of the ancient tyrants, together with the extreme love of liberty, which animated those ages, must have banished every merchant and manufacturer, and have quite depopulated the state, had it subsisted upon industry and commerce. While the cruel and sufpicious DIONYSIUS was carrying on his butcheries, who, that was not detained by his landed property, and could have carried with him any art or skill to procure a subsistence in other countries, would have remained exposed to fuch implacable barbarity? The perfecutions of PHILIP II. and LEWIS XIV. filled all EUROPE with the manufacturers of FLANDERS and of FRANCE.

I grant, that agriculture is the fpecies of industry chiefly requisite to the subfishence of multitudes; and it is possible, that this industry may flourish, even where manufactures and other arts are unknown and neglected. SWISSERLAND is at present a remarkable instance; where we find, at once, the most skilful husbandmen, and the moft

Digitized by Google

*, Lib. xiii.

+ Lib. xii.

moft bungling tradefmen, that are to be met with in EUROPE. That agriculture flourifhed in GREECE and ITALY, at leaft in fome parts of them, and at fome periods, we have reafon to prefume: And whether the mechanical arts had reached the fame degree of perfection, may not be effecemed fo material; efpecially, if we confider the great equality of riches in the ancient republics, where each family was obliged to cultivate, with the greateft care and induftry, its own little field, in order to its fubfiftence.

But is it just reasoning, because agriculture may, in fome inftances, flourish without trade or manufactures, to conclude, that, in any great extent of country, and for any great tract of time, it would subsist alone? The most natural way, furely, of encouraging husbandry, is, first, to excite other kinds of industry, and thereby afford the labourer a ready market for his commodities, and a return of such goods as may contribute to his pleasure and enjoyment. This method is infallible and universal; and, as it prevails more in modern government than in the ancient, it affords a prefumption of the superior populouss of the former.

Every man, fays XENOPHON *, may be a farmer: No art or fkill is requifite: All confifts in induftry, and in attention to the execution. A firong proof, as COLU-MELLA hints, that agriculture was but little known in the age of XENOPHON.

All our later improvements and refinements, have they done nothing towards the eafy fubfiftence of men, and confequently towards their propagation and encreafe? Our fuperior fkill in mechanics; the difcovery of new worlds, by which commerce has been fo much enlarged;

> * Oecon. Ff2

> > Digitized by Google

the

the eftablishment of posts; and the use of bills of ex + change: These seems all extremely useful to the encouragement of art, industry, and populous fields. Were we to firike off these, what a check should we give to every kind of business and labour, and what multitudes of families would immediately perish from want and hunger? And it feems not probable, that we could supply the place of these new inventions by any other regulation or in-flitution.

Have we reafon to think, that the police of ancient flates was any wife comparable to that of modern, or that men had then equal fecurity, either at home, or in their journies by land or water? I queffion not, but every impartial examiner would give us the preference in this particular *.

Thus, upon comparing the whole, it feems impossible to affign any just reason, why the world should have been more populous in ancient than in modern times. The equality of property among the ancients, liberty, and the fmall divisions of their states, were indeed circumftances favourable to the propagation of mankind: But their wars were more bloody and destructive, their governments more factious and unsettled, commerce and manufactures more feeble and languishing, and the general police more loofe and irregular. Thefe latter difadvantages feem to form a fufficient counterbalance to the former advantages; and rather favour the oppofite opinion to that which commonly prevails with regard to this fubject.

But there is no reasoning, it may be faid, againft matter of fact. If it appear, that the world was then more populous than at present, we may be assured, that

Digitized by Google.

* See Part I. Effay XI.

our

436

. بر ^{الم}ريد ال

Populousness of Ancient Nations. 437

our conjectures are falle, and that we have overlooked fome material circumstance in the comparison. This I readily own : All our preceding reasonings, I acknowledge to be mere trifling, or, at leaft, fmall fkirmines and frivolous rencounters, which decide nothing. But unluckily the main combat, where we compare facts, cannot be rendered much more decifive. The facts, delivered by ancient authors, are either fo uncertain or fo imperfect as to afford us nothing politive in this matter. How indeed could it be otherwife? The very facts. which we must oppose to them, in computing the populousness of modern states, are far from being either certain or complete. Many grounds of calculation proceeded on by celebrated writers, are little better than those of the Emperor HELIOGABALUS, who formed an effimate of the immense greatness of ROME, from ten thousand pound weight of cobwebs which had been found in that city *.

It is to be remarked, that all kinds of numbers are. uncertain in ancient manufcripts, and have been fubject to much greater corruptions than any other part of the text; and that for an obvious reafon. Any alteration, in other places, commonly affects the fenfe or grammar, and is more readily perceived by the reader and tranfcriber.

Few enumerations of inhabitants have been made of any tract of country by any ancient author of good authority, fo as to afford us a large enough view for comparison.

It is probable, that there was formerly a good foundation for the number of citizens affigned to any free city; because they entered for a share in the government, and

> • ÆLII LAMFRID. in vita HELIOGAB. cap. 26. Ff 3 there

> > Digitized by Google

there were exact registers kept of them. But as the number of flaves is feldom mentioned, this leaves us in as great uncertainty as ever, with regard to the populoufnefs even of fingle cities.

The first page of THUCYDIDES is, in my opinion, the commencement of real history. All preceding narrations are fo intermixed with fable, that philosophers ought to abandon them, in a great measure, to the embellishment of poets and orators *.

With regard to remote times, the numbers of people affigned are often ridiculous, and lofe all credit and authority. The free citizens of SYBARIS, able to bear arms, and actually drawn out in battle, were 300,000. They encountered at SIAGRA with 100,000 citizens of CROTONA, another GREEK city contiguous to them; and were defeated. This is DIODORUS SICULUS'S + account; and is very ferioufly infifted on by that hiftorian. STRABO ‡ alfo mentions the fame number of SYEARITES.

DIODORUS SICULUS §, enumerating the inhabitants of. AGRIGENTUM, when it was defiroyed by the CAR-THAGINIANS, fays, that they amounted to 20,000 citizens, 200,000 firangers, befides flaves, who, in fo opulent a city as he reprefents it, would probably be, at leaft, as numerous. We muft remark, that the women and the children are not included; and that therefore, upon the whole, this city muft have contained near two millions of inhabitants ||. And what was the reafon of fo immenfe an encreafe ! They were induffrious in culvivat-

* Sce NOTE [EE].

+ Lib. xii. ‡ Lib. vi. § Lib. xiii. || D: OGENES EASETTUS (in vita EMPEDOCLIS) fays, that AGRIGEN-TUM contained only 800,000 inhabitants.

Digitized by Google

2

ing

ing the neighbouring fields, not exceeding a fmall ENG-LISH county; and they traded with their wine and oil to AFRICA, which, at that time, produced none of these commodities.

PTOLEMY, fays THEOCRITUS*, commands 33,339 cities. I fuppofe the fingularity of the number was the reafon of affigning it. DIODORUS SICULUS + affigns three millions of inhabitants to ÆCYPT, a finall number : But then he makes the number of cities amount to 18,000 : An evident contradiction.

He fays \ddagger , the people were formerly feven millions. Thus remote times are always most envied and admired.

That XERXES'S army was extremely numerous, I can readily believe; both from the great extent of his empire, and from the practice among the eaftern nations, of encumbering their camp with a fuperfluous multitude: But will any rational man cite HERODOTUS'S wonderful narrations as an authority? There is fomething very rational, I own, in LYSIAS'S || argument upon this fubject. Had not XERXES'S army been incredibly numerous, fays he, he had never made a bridge over the HELLESPONT : It had been much eafier to have transported his men over fo fhort a passage, with the numerous fhipping of which he was master.

POLYBIUS § fays, that the ROMANS, between the first and fecond PUNIC wars, being threatened with an invasion from the GAULS, mustered all their own forces, and those of their allies, and found them amount to seven hundred thousand men able to bear arms: A great number surely, and which, when joined to the flaves, is probably not lefs, if not rather more, than that extent of country affords

• Idyll. 17. † Lib. i. ‡ Idyll. 17. § Orat. funebris. § Lib. ii. Ff 4

Digitized by Google

81

at prefent *. The enumeration too feems to have been made with fome exactness; and POLYBIUS gives us the detail of the particulars. But might not the number be magnified, in order to encourage the people?

DIODORUS SIGULUS + makes the fame enumeration amount to near a million. These variations are sufpicious. He plainly too supposes, that ITALY in his time was not so populous: Another sufpicious circumstance. For who can believe, that the inhabitants of that country diminissed from the time of the first PUNIC war to that of the triumvirates?

JULIUS CESAR, according to APPIAN ‡, encountered four millions of GAULS, killed one million, and made another million prifoners ||. Supposing the number of the enemy's army and that of the flain could be exactly affigned, which never is poffible; how could it be known how often the fame man returned into the armies,' or how diffinguish the new from the old levied foldiers? No attention ought ever to be given to fuch loofe, exaggerated calculations; efpecially where the author does not tell us the mediums, upon which the calculations were founded.

PATERCULUS § makes the number of GAULS killed by CÆSAR amount only to 400,000: A more probable account, and more eafily reconciled to the hiftory of thefe wars given by that conqueror himfelf in his Commentaries . The most bloody of his battles were fought against the HELVETH and the GERMANS.

* The country that fupplied this number, was not above a third of ITALY, viz. the Pope's dominions, TUSCANY, and a part of the kingdom of NAPLES: But perhaps in those carly times there were very few flaves, except in ROME, or the great cities.

T CELTICA.

|| PLUTARCH (in vita CÆS.) makes the number that CÆSAR fought with amount to three millions; JULIAN (in CÆSARIBUS) to two.

§ Lib. ii. cap. 47.

+ Lib. ii.

 See NOTE [FF].

Digitized by Google

One

One would imagine, that every circumstance of the life and actions of DIONYSIUS the elder might be regarded as authentic, and free from all fabulous exaggeration; both because he lived at a time when letters flourished most in GREECE, and because his chief historian was PHILISTUS, a man allowed to be of great genius, and who was a courtier and minister of that prince. But can we admit, that he had a ftanding army of 100,000 foot, 10,000 horfe, and a fleet of 400 gallies * ? Thefe, we may observe, were mercenary forces, and subsisted upon pay, like our armies in EUROPE. For the citizens were all difarmed ; and when DION afterwards invaded SICILY, and called on his countrymen to vindicate their liberty, he was obliged to bring arms along with him, which he diffributed among those who joined him t. In a ftate where agriculture alone flourishes, there may be many inhabitants; and if these be all armed and disciplined, a great force may be called out upon occafion : But great bodies of mercenary troops can never be maintained, without either great trade and numerous manufactures, or extensive dominions. The United Provinces never were mafters of fuch a force by fea and land, as that which is faid to belong to DIONYSIUS; yet they poffefs as large a territory, perfectly well cultivated, and have much more refources from their commerce and industry. DIODORUS SICULUS allows, that, even in his time, the army of DIONYSIUS appeared incredible; that is, as I interpret it, was entirely a fiction; and the opinion arole from the exaggerated flattery of the courtiers, and perhaps from the vanity and policy of the tyrant himfelf.

It is a ufual fallacy, to confider all the ages of antiguity as one period, and to compute the numbers contained in the great cities mentioned by ancient authors, as if these cities had been all cotemporary. The GREEK colonies flourished extremely in SICILY during the age of ALEXANDER: But in AUGUSTUS'S time they were so decayed, that almost all the produce of that fertile island was confumed in ITALY*.

* DIOD. SIC. lib. ii.

+ PLUTARCH in with DIONYS. S tained ESSAY XI.

Let us now examine the numbers of inhabitants affigned to particular cities in antiquity; and omitting the numbers of NINEVEH, BABYLON, and the EGYPTIAN THEBES, let us confine ourfelves to the fphere of real hiftory, to the GRECIAN and ROMAN flates. I muft own, the more I confider this fubject, the more am I inclined to fcepticifm, with regard to the great populoufnefs afcribed to ancient times.

ATHENS is faid by PLATO † to be a very great city; and it was furely the greateft of all the GREEK ‡ cities, except SYRACUSE, which was nearly about the fame fize in THUCYDIDES'S || time, and afterwards encreafed beyond it. For CICERO § mentions it as the greateft of all the GREEK cities in his time; not comprehending, I fuppofe, either ANTIOCH or ALEXANDRIA under that denomination. ATHENÆUS ¶ fays, that, by the enumeration of DEMETRIUS PHALEREUS, there were in ATHENS 21,000 citizens, I0,000 ftrangers, and 400,000 flaves. This number is much infifted on by those whose

* STRABO, lib. vi.

+ Apolog. Sock.

Digitized by Google

[†] ARGOS feems also to have been a great city; for LYCIAS contents himfelf with faying that it did not exceed ATHENS. Orat. 34.

Lib. vi. See also PLUTARCH in vita NICIÆ.

§ Orat. contra VERREM, lib. iv. cap. 52. STRABO, lib. vi. fays, it was twenty-two miles in compass. But then we are to confider, that it contained two harbours within it; one of which was a very large one, and might be regarded as a kind of bay.

¶ Lib. vi. cap. 20.

opinion

44.2

Populousness of Ancient Nations. 443

opinion I call in queffion, and is effeemed a fundamental fact to their purpose: But, in my opinion, there is no point of criticism more certain, than that ATHE-NAEUS and CTESICLES, whom he quotes, are here mistaken, and that the number of flaves is, at least, augmented by a whole cypher, and ought not to be regarded as more than 40,000.

First, When the number of citizens is faid to be 21,000 by ATHENÆUS*, men of full age are only understood. For, (1.) HERODOTUS fays +, that ARISTA-GORAS, ambaffador from the IONIANS, found it harder to deceive one SPARTAN than 20,000 ATHENIANS; meaning, in a loofe way, the whole flate, fuppofed to be met in one popular affembly, excluding the women and children. (2.) THUCYDIDES 1 fays, that, making allowance for all the absentees in the fleet. army, garrifons, and for people employed in their private affairs, the ATHENIAN affembly never rofe to five thousand. (3.) The forces, enumerated by the fame historian #, being all citizens, and amounting to 13,000 heavyarmed infantry, prove the fame method of calculation : as also the whole tenor of the GREEK historians, who always understand men of full age, when they affign the number of citizens in any republic. Now, these being but the fourth of the inhabitants, the free ATHENIANS were by this account 84,000; the strangers 40,000; and the flaves, calculating by the fmaller number, and allowing that they married and propagated at the fame rate with freemen, were 160,000; and the whole of the in.

Digitized by Google

Lib. ii. DIODORUS SICULUS'S account perfectly agrees, lib. xii.

habitants

^{*} DEMOSTHENES affigns 20,000; contra ARISTAG.

⁺ Lib. v.

¹ Lib. viii.

habitants 284,000: A number furely large enough. The other number, 1,720,000, makes ATHENS larger than LONDON and PARIS united.

Secondly, There were but 10,000 houses in A. THENS*.

Thirdly, Though the extent of the walls, as given us by THUCYDIDES +, be great (to wit, eighteen miles, bolide the fea-coaft): Yet XENOPHON \ddagger fays, there was much wafte ground within the walls. They feem indeed to have joined four diffinct and feparate cities \parallel .

Fourthly, No infurrection of the flaves, or fuspicion of infurrection, is ever mentioned by historians; except one commotion of the miners §.

Fifthly, The treatment of flaves by the ATHENIANS is faid by XENOPHON \P , and DEMOSTHENES , and PLAUTUS \dagger , to have been extremely gentle and indulgent: Which could never have been the cafe, had the difproportion been twenty to one. The difproportion is not fo great in any of our colonies; yet are we obliged to exercise a rigorous military government over the pegroes.

Sixthly, No man is ever efteemed rich for poffeffing what may be reckoned an equal diffribution of property in any country, or even triple or quadruple that wealth. Thus every perfon in ENGLAND is computed by fome to fpend fix-pence a day: Yet is he efteemed but poor who has five times that fum. Now TIMARCHUS is faid by

* XENOPHON. Man. lib. ii. + Lib. ii. || See NOTE [GG], § ATHEN. lib. vi. * PHILIP. 3.

1 De ratione red.

¶ Derep. Athen. †† Sticho.

Digitized by Google

Æschings!

Populousness of Ancient Nations. 449

ÆSCHINES * to have been left in eafy circumftances ; but he was mafter only of ten flaves employed in manufactures. LYSIAS and his brother, two ftrangers, were proferibed by the thirty for their great riches; though they had but fixty a-piece +. DEMOSTHENES was left very rich by his father; yet he had no more than fiftytwo flaves ‡. His workhoufe, of twenty cabinet-makers; is faid to be a very confiderable manufactory §.

Seventhly, During the DECELIAN war, as the GREEK hiftorians call it, 20,000 flaves deferted, and brought the ATHENIANS to great diffrefs, as we learn from THUCY-DIDES ||. This could not have happened, had they been only the twentieth part. The beft flaves would not defert.

Eightbly, XENOPHON ¶ propoles a scheme for maintaining by the public 10,000 flaves: And that so great a number may possibly be supported, any one will be convinced, fays he, who confiders the numbers we possible before the DECELIAN war. A way of speaking altogether incompatible with the larger number of ATHE-NÆUS.

Ninthly, The whole cenfus of the flate of ATHENS was lefs than 6000 talents. And though numbers in ancient manufcripts be often fufpected by critics, yet this is unexceptionable; both becaufe DEMOSTHENES , who gives it, gives alfo the detail, which checks him; and becaufe POLYBIUS ++ affigns the fame number, and reafons upon it. Now, the most vulgar flave could yield by his labour an obolus a day, over and above his main-

* Contra TIMARCH. † Contra Aphos. ¶ Lib. vii.  De classibus. † Orat. 11.
§ Ibid.
¶ De rat. red.
↑† Lib. ii. cap. 62.

Digitized by Google

tenance;

tenance, as we learn from XENOPHON*, who fays, that NICIAS's overfeer paid his master fo much for flaves. whom he employed in mines. If you will take the pains to effimate an obolus a day, and the flaves at 400,000, computing only at four years purchase, you will find the fum above 12,000 talents; even though allowance be made for the great number of holidays in ATHENS. Befides, many of the flaves would have a much greater value from their art. The lowest that DEMOSTHENES effimates any of his + father's flaves is two minas a head. And upon this fupposition, it is a little difficult, I confefs, to reconcile even the number of 40,000 flaves with the census of 6000 talents.

Tenthly, CHIOS is faid by THUCYDIDES ‡, to contain more flaves than any GREEK city, except SPARTA. SPARTA then had more than ATHENS, in proportion to the number of citizens. The SPARTANS were gooo in the town, 30,000 in the country ||. The male flaves. therefore, of full age, must have been more than 78,000: the whole more than 3,120,000. A number impossible to be maintained in a narrow barren country, fuch as LACO-NIA, which had no trade. Had the HELOTES been fo very numerous, the murder of 2000 mentioned by THUCY-DIDES §, would have irritated them, without weakening them.

Befides, we are to confider, that the number affigned by ATHENÆUS ¶, whatever it is, comprehends all the inhabitants of ATTICA, as well as those of ATHENS.

1 Lib. viii. + Contra APHOBUM. * De rat. red. § Lib. iv.

PLUTARCH. in wita LYCURG.

¶ The fame author affirms, that CORINTH had once 460,000 flaves; ÆGINA 470,000. But the foregoing arguments hold fironger against these facts, which are indeed entirely abfurd and impossible. It is however remarkable, that ATHENEUS cites fo great an authority as ARISTOTLE for this laft fact : And the fcholiaft on PINDAR mentions the fame number of Saves in ÆGINA.

The

Populousness of Ancient Nations. 447

The ATHENIANS affected much a country life, as we learn from THUCYDIDES*; and when they were all chafed into town, by the invation of their territory during the PELOPONNESIAN war, the city was not able to contain them; and they were obliged to lie in the porticoes, temples, and even ftreets, for want of lodging \dagger .

The fame remark is to be extended to all the other GREEK cities; and when the number of citizens is affigned, we must always understand it to comprehend the inhabitants of the neighbouring country, as well as of the city. Yet, even with this allowance, it must be confessed, that GREECE was a populous country, and exceeded what we could imagine concerning fo narrow a territory, naturally not very fertile, and which drew no supplies of corn from other places. For, excepting ATHENS, which traded to PONTUS for that commodity, the other cities feem to have substituted chiefly from their neighbouring territory \ddagger .

RHODES is well known to have been a city of extensive commerce, and of great fame and fplendor; yet it contained only 6000 citizens able to bear arms, when it was befieged by DEMETRIUS ||.

THEBES was always one of the capital cities of GREECE§: But the number of its citizens exceeded not those of RHODES ¶. PHLIASIA is faid to be a small city by XENOPHON , yet we find, that it contained 6000 citizens ++. I pretend not to reconcile these two facts. Perhaps, XENOPHON calls PHLIASIA a small

* Lib. ii. ‡ See NOTE [HH].	† Thucyd. lib. ii.
I DIOD. SIC. Ib. XX. See NOTE [II].	§ Isocr. paneg.
 Hift. GRÆC. lib. vii.	†† Id. lib. vii,

Digitized by Google

town,

town, becaufe it made but a fmall figure in GREECE; and maintained only a fubordinate alliance with SPARTA; or perhaps the country, belonging to it, was extensive; and most of the citizens were employed in the cultivation of it, and dwelt in the neighbouring villages.

MANTINEA was equal to any city in Arcadia *: Confequently it was equal to MEGALOPOLIS, which was fifty stadia, or fix miles and a quarter in circumference +. But MANTINEA had only 3000 citizens t. The GREEK cities, therefore, contained often fields and gardens, together with the houfes; and we cannot judge of them by the extent of their walls. ATHENS contained no more than 10,000 houses; yet its walls, with the sea-coast. were above twenty miles in extent. SYRACUSE was twenty-two miles in circumference; yet was fcarcely ever fpoken of by the ancients as more populous than ATHENS. BABYLON was a square of fifteen miles, or fixty miles in circuit; but it contained large cultivated fields and inclosures, as we learn from PLINY. Though AURELIAN'S wall was fifty miles in circumference || ; the circuit of all the thirteen divisions of ROME. taken apart, according to PUBLIUS VICTOR, was only about forty-three miles. When an enemy invaded the country, all the inhabitants retired within the walls of the ancient cities, with their cattle and furniture, and inftruments of hufbandry : and the great height, to which the walls were raifed, enabled a fmall number to defend them with facility.

SPARTA, fays XENOPHON §, is one of the cities of GREECE that has the feweft inhabitants. Yet POLY-

* Polyb. lib. ii.

1 LYSIAS, orat. 34.

Digitized by Google

BIUS

448

は代かいが開

⁺ Potyb. lib. ix. cap. 20.

VOPISCUS in vita AUREL.

[§] De rep. LACED. This paffage is not eafily reconciled with that of PLUTARCH above, who fays, that SPARTA had 9000 citizens, BIUS * fays, that it was forty-eight fladia in circumference, and was round.

All the ÆTOLIANS able to bear arms in ANTIPATER'S time, deducting fome few garrifons, were but ten thoufand men \uparrow .

POLYBIUS ‡ tells us, that the ACHÆAN league might, without any inconvenience, march 30 or 40,000 men : And this account feems probable : For that league comprehended the greater part of PELOPONNESUS. Yet PAUSANIAS §, fpeaking of the fame period, fays, that all the ACHÆANS able to bear arms, even when feveral manumitted flaves were joined to them, did not amount to fifteen thousand.

The THESSALIANS, till their final conqueft by the ROMANS, were, in all ages, turbulent, factious, feditious, diforderly ||. It is not therefore natural to fuppofe, that this part of GREECE abounded much in people.

We are told by THUCYDIDES ¶, that the part of PELOPONNESSUS, adjoining to PYLUS, was defart and uncultivated. HERODOTUS fays , that MACEDONIA was full of lions and wild bulls; animals which can only inhabit vaft unpeopled forefts. These were the two extremities of GREECE.

All the inhabitants of EPIRUS, of all ages, fexes and conditions, who were fold by PAULUS ÆMILIUS, amounted only to 150,000 ++. Yet EPIRUS might be double the extent of YORKSHIRE.

* POLYE. lib. ix. cap	. 20. † DIOD.	S1c. lib. xviii.
1 LEGAT.		§ In ACHAICIS.
TIT. LIV. lib. xxiv	cap. 51. PLATO in CRIT	ONE.
T Lib. vii.	 Lib. vi	•
†† TIT. LIV. lib. x	v. cap. 34.
Vol. I.	Gg	JUSTIN

Digitized by Google

JUSTIN * tells us, that, when PHILIP of MACEDON was declared head of the GREEK confederacy, he called a congress of all the states, except the LACEDEMONIANS, who refused to concur; and he found the force of the whole, upon computation, to amount to 200,000 infantry, and 15,000 cavalry. This must be understood to be all the citizens capable of bearing arms. For as the GREEK republics maintained no mercenary forces, and had no militia diffinct from the whole body of the citizens, it is not conceivable what other medium there could be of computation. That fuch an army could ever, by GREECE, be brought into the field, and be maintained there, is contrary to all hiftory. Upon this fuppolition, therefore, we may thus reason. The free GREEKS of all ages and fexes were 860,000. The flaves, estimating them by the number of ATHENIAN flaves as above, who feldom married or had families, were double the male citizens of full age, to wit, 430,000. And all the inhabitants of ancient GREECE, excepting LACONIA, were about one million two hundred and ninety thoufand : No mighty number, nor exceeding what may be found at prefent in SCOTLAND, a country of not much greater extent, and very indifferently peopled.

We may now confider the numbers of people in ROME and ITALY, and collect all the lights afforded us by fcattered paffages in ancient authors. We shall find, upon the whole, a great difficulty, in fixing any opinion on that head; and no reason to support those exaggerated calculations, so much infisted on by modern writers.

DIONYSIUS HALICARNASSÆUS + fays, that the ancient walls of ROME were nearly of the fame compass

* Lib. ix. cap. 5.

+ Lib, iv.

Digitized by Google

with

with those of ATHENS, but that the suburbs ran out to a great extent; and it was difficult to tell, where the town ended or the country began. In fome places of ROME. it appears, from the fame author *, from JUVENAL + and from other ancient writers 1, that the houses were high, and families lived in feparate storeys, one above another: But it is probable, that thefe were only the poorer citizens, and only in fome few ftreets. If we may judge from the younger PLINY's § account of his own house, and from BARTOLI's plans of ancient buildings. the men of quality had very fpacious palaces; and their buildings were like the CHINESE houfes at this day. where each apartment is separated from the reft, and rifes no higher than a fingle ftorey. To which if we add, that the ROMAN nobility much affected extensive porticoes, and even woods || in town; we may perhaps allow Vossius (though there is no manner of reason for it) to read the famous passage of the elder PLINY T his own way, without admitting the extravagant confequences which he draws from it.

The number of citizens who received corn by the public diffribution in the time of AUGUSTUS, were two hundred thousand . This one would effeem a pretty certain ground of calculation: Yet is it attended with fuch circumstances as throw us back into doubt and uncertainty.

Did the poorer citizens only receive the diffribution? It was calculated, to be fure, chiefly for their benefit. But it appears from a paffage in CICERO ++ that the rich

* Lib. x. + Satyr. iii. l. 269; 270.

‡ See NOTE [KK]. § See NOTE [LL].

|| VITRUV. lib. v. cap. 11. TACIT. annal. lib. zi. cap. 3. SUZTONO. In with OCTAV. cap. 72, &cc.

¶ See NOTE [MM].

 Ex monument. Ancyr. ++ Tufe. Queft, lib, iii, cap, 48. might G g 2 might also take their portion, and that it was effected no reproach in them to apply for it.

Digitized by Google

To whom was the corn given; whether only to heads of families, or to every man, woman, and child? The portion every month was five modii to each * (about $\frac{1}{2}$ of a bufhel). This was too little for a family, and too much for an individual. A very accurate antiquary $\frac{1}{7}$, therefore, infers, that it was given to every man of full age : But he allows the matter to be uncertain.

Was it flrictly enquired, whether the claimant lived within the precincts of Rome; or was it fufficient, that he prefented himself at the monthly distribution? This last feems more probable \pm .

Were there no false claimants? We are told §, that CÆSAR ftruck off at once 170,000, who had creeped in without a just title; and it is very little probable, that he remedied all abuses.

But, laftly, what proportion of flaves must we affign to these citizens? This is the most material question; and the most uncertain. It is very doubtful, whether ATHENS can be established as a rule for ROME. Perhaps the ATHENIANS had more flaves, because they employed them in manufactures, for which a capital city, like ROME, seems not fo proper. Perhaps, on the other hand, the ROMANS had more flaves, on account of their fuperior luxury and riches.

· Licinius apud Salluß, bif. frag. lib. iii.

+ Nicolaus Hortensius de re frumentaria Roman.

T Not to take the people too much from their bufinefs, Αυσυντυν ordained the diffribution of corn to be made only thrice a-year: But the people, finding the monthly diffributions more convenient (as preferving, I fuppofe, a more regular æconomy in their family), defined to have them reftored. SURTON. AUGUST. cap. 40. Had not fome of the people come from fome diffance for their corn, AUGUSTUS's precaution feems fuperflous.

Digitized by Google

Sueson. in Jul. cap. 41.

There

452

There were exact bills of mortality kept at ROME; but no ancient author has given us the number of burials, except SUETONIUS*, who tells us, that in one feason, there were 30,000 names carried to the temple of LIBITINA: But this was during a plague; which can afford no certain foundation for any inference.

The publick corn, though diffributed only to 200,000 citizens, affected very confiderably the whole agriculture of ITALY + : A fact no wife reconcileable to fome modern exaggerations with regard to the inhabitants of that country.

The beft ground of conjecture I can find concerning the greatness of ancient ROME, is this: We are told by HERODIAN[‡], that ANTIOCH and ALEXANDRIA were very little inferior to ROME. It appears from DIODO-RUS SICULUS §, that one ftraight ftreet of ALEXANDRIA, reaching from gate to gate, was five miles long; and as ALEXANDRIA was much more extended in length than breadth, it seems to have been a city nearly of the bulk of PARIS ||; and ROME might be about the fize of LON-DON.

There lived in ALEXANDRIA, in DIODORUS SICU-LUS'S time ¶, 300,000 free people, comprehending, I fuppofe, women and children . But what number of flaves ? Had we any just ground to fix these at an equal number with the free inhabitants, it would favour the foregoing computation.

There is a paffage in HERODIAN, which is a little furprifing. He fays politively, that the palace of the

* In wita Neronis. ‡ Lib. iv. cap. 5. † Sucton. Aug. cap. 42. § Lib. xvii.

See NOTE [NN].

¶ Lib. xvii.

•• He fays ελευθεροι, not woλισαι, which laft expression must have been understood of citizens alone, and grown men.

Gg3

Digitized by Google

Emperor

ESSAY XI.

454

Emperor was as large as all the reft of the city *. This was NERO'S golden houfe, which is indeed reprefented by SUETONIUS + and PLINY as of an enormous extent ‡; but no power of imagination can make us conceive it to bear any proportion to fuch a city as LONDON.

We may obferve, had the historian been relating NERO's extravagance, and had he made use of such an expression, it would have had much less weight; these rhetorical exaggerations being fo apt to creep into an author's style, even when the most chaste and correct. But it is mentioned by HERODIAN only by the by, in relating the quarrels between GETA and CARACALLA.

It appears from the fame hiftorian §, that there was then much land uncultivated, and put to no manner of ufe; and he afcribes it as a great praife to PERTINAX, that he allowed every one to take fuch land either in ITALY or elfewhere, and cultivate it as he pleafed, without paying any taxes. Lands uncultivated, and put to no manner of u/e! This is not heard of in any part of CHRISTENDOM; except in fome remote parts of HUNGARY; as I have been informed. And it furely corresponds very ill with that idea of the extreme populoufness of antiquity, fo much infifted on.

We learn from VOPISCUS ||, that there was even in ETRURIA much fertile land uncultivated, which the Emperor AURELIAN intended to convert into vineyards, in order to furnish the ROMAN people with a gratuitous distribution of wine; a very proper expedient for depopu-

§ Lib. ii, cap. 15.

Digitized by Google

In AURELIAN, cap. 48.

lating

^{*} Lib. iv. cap. z. πασης πολεως. POLITIAN interprets it " ædibua f majoribus etiam reliqua urbe."

⁺ See NOTE [OO].

[†] PLINIUS, lib. XXXVI. cap. 15. "Bis vidimus urbem totam cingi se domibus principum, CAII 20 NIRONIS."

Populousness of Ancient Nations. 455:

lating still farther that capital and all the neighbouring territories.

It may not be amifs to take notice of the account which POLYBIUS * gives of the great herds of fwine to be met with in TUSCANY and LOMBARDY, as well as in GREECE, and of the method of feeding them which was then practifed. " There are great herds of fwine," fays he, " throughout all ITALY, particularly in former times, " through ETRURIA and CISALPINE GAUL. And a herd frequently confitts of a thousand or more fwine. When " one of these herds in feeding meets with another, they " mix together; and the fwine-herds have no other " expedient for feparating them than to go to different " quarters, where they found their horn; and thefe " animals, being accustomed to that fignal, run imme-" diately each to the horn of his own keeper. Whereas " in GREECE, if the herds of fwine happen to mix in " the forefts, he who has the greater flock, takes cun-" ningly the opportunity of driving all away. And " thieves are very apt to purloin the ftraggling hogs, " which have wandered to a great diftance from their " keeper in fearch of food."

May we not infer from this account, that the north of ITALY, as well as GREECE, was then much lefs peopled, and worfe cultivated, than at prefent ? How could thefe vaft herds be fed in a country fo full of inclofures, fo improved by agriculture, fo divided by farms, fo planted with vines and corn intermingled together ? I muft confefs, that POLYBIUS'S relation has more the air of that peconomy which is to be met with in our AMERICAN colonies, than the management of a EUROPEAN country.

> • Lib. xii. cap. 2. G g 4

> > Digitized by Google

We

We meet with a reflection in ARISTOTLE's * Ethicks. which feems unaccountable on any fuppolition, and by proving too much in favour of our prefent reafoning, may be thought really to prove nothing. That philofopher, treating of friendship, and observing, that this relation ought neither to be contracted to a very few, nor extended over a great multitude, illustrates his opinion by the following argument : " In like manner," fays he, " as a city cannot subsist, if it either have so few " inhabitants as ten, or fo many as a hundred thousand; " fo is there a mediocrity required in the number of " friends; and you deftroy the effence of friendship by " running into either extreme." What ! impossible that a city can contain a hundred thousand inhabitants ! Had ARISTOTLE never feen nor heard of a city to populous? This, I must own, passes my comprehension.

PLINY † tells us that SELEUCIA, the feat of the GREEK empire in the Eaft, was reported to contain 600,000 people. CARTHAGE is faid by STRARO ‡ to have contained 700,000. The inhabitants of PEKIN are not much more numerous. LONDON, PARIS, and CONSTANTINOPLE, may admit of nearly the fame computation; at leaft, the two latter cities do not exceed it. ROME, ALEXANDRIA, ANTIOCH, we have already fpoken of. From the experience of paft and prefent ages, one might conjecture that there is a kind of impofibility, that any city could ever rife much beyond the proportion. Whether the grandeur of a city be founded on commerce or on empire, there feem to be invincible obffacles, which prevent its farther progrefs. The feats of vaft

* Lib. ix. cap. 10. His expression is andgewoos, not workerns; inhabitant, not citizen.

Digitized by Google

+ Lib, vi, cap. 2%.

1 Lib. xvii.

monarchies,

456

monarchies, by introducing extravagant luxury, irregular expence, idlenefs, dependence, and falfe ideas of rank and fuperiority, are improper for commerce. Extensive commerce checks itfelf, by raifing the price of all labour and commodities. When a great court engages the attendance of a numerous nobility, poffeffed of overgrown fortunes, the middling gentry remain in their provincial towns, where they can make a figure on a moderate income. And if the dominions of a flate arrive at an enormous fize, there necessarily arife many capitals, in the remoter provinces, whither all the inhabitants, except a few courtiers, repair for education, fortune, and amufement *. LONDON, by uniting extensive commerce and middling empire, has, perhaps, arrived at a greatnes, which no city will ever be able to exceed.

Chuse DOVER OF CALAIS for a center: Draw a circle of two hundred miles radius: You comprehend LONDON, PARIS, the NETHERLANDS, the UNITED PROVINCES, and some of the best cultivated parts of FRANCE and ENGLAND. It may fafely, I think, be affirmed, that no spot of ground can be found, in antiquity, of equal extent, which contained near so many great and populous cities, and was so stocked with riches and inhabitants. To balance, in both periods, the states, which possible most art, knowledge, civility, and the best police, feems the truest method of comparison.

It is an obfervation of L'ABBE DU Bos, that ITALY is warmer at prefent than it was in ancient times. "The " annals of ROME tell us," fays he, " that in the year

Digitized by Google

" 480

^{*} Such were Alexandria, Antioch, Carthage, Ephesus, Lyons, Sc. in the Roman empire. Such are even Bourdraux, Tholouse, Dijon, Rennes, Rouen, Aix, Sc. in France; Dublin, Edinburgh, York, in the Britism dominions.

458

⁶⁶ 480 ab U. C. the winter was fo fevere that it deftroyed ⁶⁶ the trees. The TYBER froze in ROME, and the ⁶⁶ ground was covered with fnow for forty days. When ⁶⁶ JUVENAL* defcribes a fuperfitious woman, he re-⁶⁶ prefents her as breaking the ice of the TYBER, that ⁶⁶ fhe might perform her ablutions :

" Hybernum fracta glacie descendet in amnem, " Ter matutino Tyberi mergetur.

46 He fpeaks of that river's freezing as a common event. 47 Many paffages of HORACE fuppole the ftreets of 48 ROME full of fnow and ice. We fhould have more 49 certainty with regard to this point, had the an-49 cients known the use of thermometers: But their 40 writers, without intending it, give us information, 40 fufficient to convince us, that the winters are now 40 much more temperate at ROME than formerly. At 40 prefent the TYBER no more freezes at ROME than the 41 MILE at CAIRO. The ROMANS effeem the winters 42 very rigorous, if the fnow lie two days, and if one 43 fee for eight and forty hours a few icicles hang from 44 a fountain that has a north exposure."

The observation of this ingenious critic may be extended to other EUROPEAN climates. Who could difcover the mild climate of FRANCE in DIODORUS SICU-LUS's + description of that of GAUL? " As it is a "northern climate," fays he, " it is infested with cold i" to an extreme degree. In cloudy weather, instead of " rain there fall great snows; and in clear weather it " there freezes so exceffive hard, that the rivers acquire " bridges of their own substance, over which, not only " fingle travellers may pass, but large armies, accom-" panied with all their baggage and loaded waggons,

* Sat. 6.

+ Lib. iv.

⁶⁶ And there being many rivers in GAUL, the RHONE, ⁶⁶ the RHINE, & c. almost all of them are frozen over; ⁶⁷ and it is usual, in order to prevent falling, to cover ⁶⁶ the ice with chaff and straw at the places where the ⁶⁷ road passes." Colder than a GALLIC Winter, is used ⁶⁸ by PETRONIUS as a proverbial expression. ARISTOTLE fays, that GAUL is fo cold a climate that an als could pot live in it *.

North of the CEVENNES, fays STRABO +, GAUL produces not figs and olives: And the vines, which have been planted, bear not grapes that will ripen.

OVID politively maintains, with all the ferious affirmation of profe, that the EUXINE fea was frozen over every winter in his time; and he appeals to ROMAN governours, whom he names, for the truth of his affertion ‡. This feldom or never happens at prefent in the latitude of TOMI, whither OVID was banifhed. All the complaints of the fame poet feem to mark a rigour of the feafons, which is fearcely experienced at prefent in PETERSBURGH or STOCKHOLM.

TOURNEFORT, a Provençal, who had travelled into the fame country, observes, that there is not a finer climate in the world: And he afferts, that nothing but OVID's melancholy could have given him such disfinal ideas of it. But the facts, mentioned by that poet, are too circumstantial to bear any such interpretation.

POLYBIUS || fays, that the climate in ARCADIA was very cold, and the air moift.

"ITALY," fays VARRO S, " is the most temperate climate in EUROPE. The inland parts" (GAUL, | Lib. iv. cap. 21.

GERMANY,

§ Lib. i, cap. 2.

^{*} De generat. anim. lib. ii. + Lib. iv.

¹ Triff. lib. iii. eleg. 9. De Ponte, lib, iv. eleg. 7. 9. 10.

ESSAY XI.

GERMANY, and PANNONIA, no doubt) " have almost " perpetual winter."

The northern parts of SPAIN, according to STRABO*. are but ill inhabited, because of the great cold.

Allowing, therefore, this remark to be just, that EUROPE is become warmer than formerly; how can we account for it? Plainly, by no other method, than by supposing, that the land is at prefent much better cultivated, and that the woods are cleared, which formerly threw a fhade upon the earth, and kept the rays of the fun from penetrating to it. Our northern colonies in AMERICA become more temperate, in proportion as the woods are felled +; but in general, every one may remark, that cold is still much more feverely felt, both in North and South AMERICA, than in places under the fame latitude in EUROPE.

SASERNA, quoted by COLUMELLA[‡], affirmed, that the difpolition of the heavens was altered before his time, and that the air had become much milder and warmer; as appears hence, fays he, that many places now abound with vineyards and olive plantations, which formerly, by reason of the rigour of the climate, could raise none of these productions. Such a change, if real, will be allowed an evident fign of the better cultivation and peopling of countries before the age of SASERNA #; and if it be continued to the prefent times, is a proof, that thefe

* Lib. iii.

53

460

+ The warm fouthern colonies also become more healthful: And it is remarkable, that in the SPANISH hiftories of the first discovery and conquest of these countries, they appear to have been very healthful ; being then well peopled and cultivated. No account of the fickness or decay of CORTES's or PIZARRO's fmall armies.

1 Lib. i. cap. 1.

|| He feems to have lived about the time of the younger AFRICANUS; lib. i. cap. I. advantages advantages have been continually encreasing throughout this part of the world.

Populousness of Ancient Nations. 461

Let us now caft our eye over all the countries which are the scene of ancient and modern history, and compare their past and present situation : We shall not, perhaps, find fuch foundation for the complaint of the prefent emptiness and desolation of the world. ÆGYPT is reprefented by MAILLET, to whom we owe the best account of it, as extremely populous; though he effeems the number of its inhabitants to be diminished. SYRIA. and the Leffer ASIA, as well as the coaft of BARBARY, I can readily own, to be defart in comparison of their ancient condition. The depopulation of GREECE is alfo obvious. But whether the country now called TURKY in EUROPE may not, in general, contain more inhabitants than during the flourishing period of GREECE, may be a little doubtful. The THRACIANS feem then to have lived like the TARTARS at prefent, by pasturage and plunder *: The GETES were still more uncivilized +: And the ILLYRIANS were no better t. These occupy nine-tenths of that country: And though the government of the TURKS be not very favourable to industry and propagation; yet it preferves at least peace and order among the inhabitants; and is preferable to that barbarous, unfettled condition, in which they anciently lived.

POLAND and MUSCOVY in EUROPE are not populous; but are certainly much more fo than the ancient SAR-MATIA and SCYTHIA; where no hufbandry or tillage was ever heard of, and pafturage was the fole art by which the people were maintained. The like obfervation may be extended to DENMARK and SWEDEN. No one ought + Ovid. paffim, Se. Strabo, lib. vii. I Polyb. lib. ii. cap. 12.

Digitized by Google

to ^{*} Xenoph. Exp. lib. vii. Polyb. lib. iv. cap. 45.

to effeem the immenfe fwarms of people, which formerly came from the North, and over-ran all EUROPE, to be any objection to this opinion. Where a whole nation, or even half of it remove their feat; it is eafy to imagine, what a prodigious multitude they muft form; with what defperate valour they muft make their attacks; and how the terror they firike into the invaded nations will make thefe magnify, in their imagination, both the courage and multitude of the invaders. SCOTLAND is neither extensive nor populous; but were the half of its inhabitants to feek new feats, they would form a colony as numerous as the TEUTONS and CIMBRI; and would fhake all EUROPE, fuppofing it in no better condition for defence than formerly.

GERMANY has furely at prefent twenty times more inhabitants than in ancient times, when they cultivated no ground, and each tribe valued itfelf on the extensive defolation which it fpread around; as we learn from CÆSAR*, and TACITUS +, and STRABO ‡. A proof, that the division into fmall republics will not alone render a nation populous, unlefs attended with the fpirit of peace, order, and induftry.

The barbarous condition of BRITAIN in former times is well known, and the thinnefs of its inhabitants may eafily be conjectured, both from their barbarity, and from a circumftance mentioned by HERODIAN ||, that all BRITAIN was marfhy, even in SEVERUS'S time, after the ROMANS had been fully fettled in it above a century.

It is not eafily imagined, that the GAULS were anciently much more advanced in the arts of life than their northern neighbours; fince they travelled to this island

· De Bello Gallico, lib. vi.

1 Lib. viin

† De Moribus Germ. || Lib. iii. cap. 47.

for

Populousness of Ancient Nations. 463

for their education in the mysteries of the religion and philosophy of the DRUIDS *. I cannot, therefore, think, that GAUL was then near so populous as FRANCE is at present.

Were we to believe, indeed, and join together the testimony of APPIAN, and that of DIODORUS SICULUS, we must admit of an incredible populoufness in GAUL. The former hiftorian + fays, that there were 400 nations in that country; the latter ‡ affirms, that the largeft of the GALLIC nations confifted of 200,000 men, besides women and children, and the leaft of 50,000. Calculating, therefore, at a medium, we must admit of near 200,000,000 of people, in a country, which we effeem populous at prefent, though fuppofed to contain little more than twenty §. Such calculations, therefore, by their extravagance, lofe all manner of authority. We may observe, that the equality of property, to which the populoufnefs of antiquity may be afcribed, had no place among the GAULS ||. Their intestine wars also, before CESAR's time, were almost perpetual q. And STRA-BO  observes, that, though all GAUL was cultivated, vet was it not cultivated with any fkill or care; the genius of the inhabitants leading them lefs to arts than arms. till their flavery under ROME produced peace among themfelves.

CÆSAR ++ enumerates very particularly the great forces which were levied in BELGIUM to oppose his conquests; and makes them amount to 208,000. These were not the whole people able to bear arms: For the

* CESAR de Bello Gallico, lib. xvi. STRAEO, lib. vii. fays, the GAULS were not much more improved than the GERMANS.

+ Celt. pars 1.

CESAR de Bello Gellico, lib. vi.

 Lib. iv.

1 Lib. v.

¶ Id. ibid.

Digitized by Google

fame

5

[§] Ancient GAUL was more extensive than modern FRANCE.

tt De Bello Gallice, lib. if.

fame historian tells us, that the BELLOVACI could have brought a hundred thousand men into the field, though they engaged only for fixty. Taking the whole, therefore, in this proportion of ten to fix, the fum of fighting men in all the states of BELGIUM was about 350,000: all the inhabitants a million and a half. And BELGIUM being about a fourth of GAUL, that country might contain fix millions, which is not near the third of its prefent inhabitants*. We are informed by CESAR, that the GAULS had no fixed property in land; but that the chieftains, when any death happened in a family, made a new division of all the lands among the feveral members of the family. This is the cuftom of Taniftry, which for long prevailed in IRELAND, and which retained that country in a state of misery, barbarism, and desolation.

The ancient HELVETIA was 250 miles in length, and 180 in breadth, according to the fame author+; yet contained only 360,000 inhabitants. The canton of BERNE alone has, at prefent, as many people.

After this computation of APPIAN and DIODORUS SICULUS, I know not, whether I dare affirm, that the modern DUTCH are more numerous than the ancient BATAVI.

SPAIN is, perhaps, decayed from what it was three centuries ago; but if we ftep backward two thousand years, and confider the reftles, turbulent, unfettled condition of its inhabitants, we may probably be inclined to think, that it is now much more populous. Many SPA-NIARDS killed themselves, when deprived of their arms by the ROMANS ‡. It appears from PLUTARCH §,

* See NOTE [PP].

that

POPULOUSNESS OF ANCIENT WATIONS. .

that robbery and plunder, were effected honourable among the SPANIARDS. HIRTIUS.* represents in the fame light the fituation of that country in CESAR's time, and he fays, that every man was obliged to live in caffles and walled towns for his fecurity. . It was not till its final conquest under Augustus, that these disorders were represed +. The account which STRABO 1 and JUSTINS give of SPAIN, corresponds exactly with those above mentioned. How much, therefore, must it diminish from our idea of the populoulnels of antiquity, when we find, that TULLY, comparing ITALY, AFRIC, GAUL. GREECE, and SPAIN, mentions the great number of inhabitants, as the peculiar circumstance, which rendered this latter country formidable || ?

ITALY, however, it is probable, has decayed: But how many great cities does it still contain? VENICE. GENOA, PAVIA, TURIN, MILAN, NAPLES, FLORENCE. LEGHORN, which either fubfifted not in ancient times, or were then very inconfiderable? If we reflect on this, we shall not be apt to carry matters to fo great an extreme as is usual, with regard to this subject.

When the ROMAN authors complain, that ITALY, which formerly exported corn, became dependent on all the provinces for its daily bread, they never afcribe this alteration to the encrease of its inhabitants, but to the neglect of tillage and agriculture q. A natural effect of + Vell. Paterc. lib. ii, § go. De Bello Hilp. 6 Lib. zliv. 1 Lib. iii.

1 . Nec numero Hifpanos, nec robore Gallos, nec calliditate Petnos; nec " artibus Græcos, nec denique hoc ipio hujus gentis, ac terræ domefiice " nativoque fenfu, Italos iplos ac Latinos ---- fuperavimus." De barufp. refp. cap. g. The diforders of SPARN feem to have been almost proverbial : " Nec impacatos a tergo horrebis Iberos." Virg. Georg. lib. iii. The IBERI are here plainly taken, by a poetical figure, for robbers in general.

J VARRO de re ruffica, lib. ii. prof. Columelta pref. Surton. Audust. cap. 42. Hh

Digitized by Google

Vol. I.

🗑 35-35 (A. (Ý) (SX1., 17)

that perificious practice of importing corn, in order to diffribute it gratis among the ROMAN citizchs, and a very bad means of multiplying the inhabitants of any country*. The fportula, fo much talked of by MARTIAL and JU-VENAL, being prefents regularly made by the great lords to their finaller clients, muft have had a like tendency to produce idlenefs, debauchery, and a continual decay among the people. The parifib-rates have at prefent the fame had confequences in ENGLAND.

Were I to affign a period, when I imagine this part of the world might pollibly contain more inhabitants than at prefent, I fhould pitch upon the age of TRAJAN and the ANTONINES; the great extent of the ROMAN empire being then civilized and cultivated, fettled almost in a profound peace both foreign and domestic, and living under the fame regular police and government ‡. But we are told, that all extensive governments, especially absolute monarchies, are pernicious to population, and contain a fecret vice and poifon, which defiroy the effect of all these promising appearances ‡. To confirm this, there is a passage cited from PLUTARCH §, which being fomewhat fingular, we shall here examine it.

That author, endeavouring to account for the filence of many of the oracles, fays, that it may be alcribed to the prefent defolation of the world, proceeding from former wars and factions; which common calamity, he adds, has fallen heavier upon GREECE than on any other

* Though the observations of L'Abbé du Bpe fisculd be admitted, that ITALY is now warmer than in former times, the confequence may not be neceffary, that it is more populous or better cultivated. If the other countries of EUROPE were more favage and woody the cold winds that blew from them, might affect the climate of ITANT.

Digitized by Google

- + See NOTE [QQ].
 - 1 L'Efprit de Loix, liv. xxiii. chap. 19.

S De Gree. Defellur.

country :

184

POPULOUSNESS OF ANCIENT NATIONS. 469

country; infomuch, that the whole could fcarcely at prefent furnish three thousand warriors; a number which, in the time of the MEDIAN war, were supplied by the fingle city of MEGARA. The gods, therefore, who affect works of dignity and importance, have suppressed many of their oracles, and deign not to use so many inperpreters of their will to so diminutive a people.

I must confeis, that this passage contains so many difficulties, that I know not what to make of it. You may observe, that PLUTARCH alligns, for a cause of the decay of mankind, not the extensive dominion of the ROMANS, but the former wars and factions of the several states; all which were quieted by the ROMAN arms. PLU-TARCH's reasoning, therefore, is directly contrary to the inference, which is drawn from the fact he advances.

POLYBIUS fuppoles, that GREECE had become more proferous and flourishing after the establishment of the ROMAN yoke*; and though that historian wrote before these conquerors had degenerated, from being the patrons, to be the plunderers of mankind; yet as we find from TACITUS 1, that the severity of the emperors afterwards corrected the licence of the governors, we have no reason to think that extensive monarchy to destructive as it is enften represented.

We learn from STRABO[‡], that the ROMANS, from their regard to the GREEKS, maintained, to his times moft of the privileges and liberties of that celebrated nation; and NERO after, wards rather encreafed them §. How therefore can we imagine, that the ROMAN yoke

- See NOTE [RR].
- Annal. lib. i. cap. 2. PLUTARCH. De bis qui fere a Numine puniuneur.

Hh 2

Digitized by Google

Was

468 ESSAY XI.

was to burdentome over that part of the world? The opprettion of the proconfuls was checked; and the magistracies in GREECE being all bestowed, in the feveral cities, by the free votes of the people, there was no necessity for the competitors to attend the emperor's court. If great numbers went to feek their fortunes in ROME, and advance themfelves by learning or eloquence; the commodities of their native country, many of them would return with the fortunes which they had acquired, and thereby enrich the GRECIAN commonwealths.

But PLUTARCH fays, that the general depopulation had been more fenfibly felt in GREECE than in any other country. How is this reconcileable to its fuperior privileges and advantages ?

Befides, this paffage, by proving too much, really proves nothing. Only three thousand men able to bear arms in all GREECE! Who can admit fo ftrange a proposition, especially if we confider the great number of GREEK cities, whole names still remain in history, and which are mentioned by writers long after the age of PLU-TARCH? There are there furely ten times more people at prefent, when there scarcely remains a city in all the bounds of ancient GREECE. That country is still tolerably cultivated, and furnishes a fure supply of corn, in case of any scarcity in SPAIN, ITALY, or the South of FRANCE.

We may observe, that the ancient frugality of the GREEKS, and their equality of property, flill fubfifted during the age of PLUTARCH; as appears from LU-CIAN*. Nor is there any ground to imagine, that that De mercede conductis.

Digitized by Google

country

Populousness of Ancient Nations. 469

country was posselled by a few masters, and a great number of flaves.

It is probable, indeed, that military discipline, being entirely useles, was extremely neglected in GREECE after the establishment of the ROMAN empire; and if these commonwealths, formerly fo warlike and ambitious, maintained each of them a small city-guard, to prevent mobbish diforders, it is all they had occasion for: And these, perhaps, did not amount to 3000 men, throughout all GREECE. I own, that, if PLUTARCH had this fact in his eye, he is here guilty of a gross paralogism, and affigns causes no wise proportioned to the effects. But is it fo great a prodigy, that an author should fall into a mistake of this nature * ?

But whatever force may remain in this paffage of PLUTARCH, we shall endeavour to counterbalance it by as remarkable a passage in DIODORUS SICULUS, where after mentioning NINUS's army of the historian. 1,700,000 foot and 200,000 horfe, endeavours to support the credibility of this account by fome pofterior facts: and aids, that we must not form a notion of the ancient populousness of mankind from the present emptiness and depopulation which is fpread over the world +. Thus an author, who lived at that very period of antiquity which is represented as most populous 1, complains of the defolation which then prevailed, gives the preference to former times, and has recourse to ancient fables as a foundation for his opinion. The humour of blaming the prefent, and admiring the past, is flrongly rooted in human nature, and has an influence even on perfons endued with the profoundeft judgment and most extensive learning.

* See NOTE [SS].

† Lib. ii.

1 He was cotemporary with CESAR and AUGUSTUS.

Hh 3

Digitized by Google

for the weather of the second states and the second states and the second states and the second states and the

.

. 11.1 * Nel grad provide a state and set of the and the state of the second second Provention of the water of the state of the state of a second · · · · · · · the product of the second second na di kalandara manana di . . . E and a second barren and a second se

(b) Some and the second sec

Digitized by Google

31X (47. 2)

A Y

rate cub sur F

States and the second

1.85

man de la

.... Of the ORIGINAL GONTRACT. و المراجع المراجع الم S no party, in the prefent age, can well support itfelf, without a philosophical or speculative lystem of principles, annexed to its political or practical one, we accordingly find, that each of the factions, into which this nation is divided, has reared up a fabric of the former kind, in order to protect and cover that scheme of actions, which it purfues. The people being commonly very rude builders, especially in this speculative way, and more especially still, when actuated by party-zeal; it is natural to imagine, that their workmanship must be a little unfhapely, and discover evident marks of that violence and hurry, 'in which it was raifed. The one party, by tracing up government to the DEITY, endeavour to render it so facred and inviolate, that it must be little less than facrilege, however tyrannical it may become, to touch or invade it, in the smallest article. The other party, by founding government alrogether on the confent of the PEOPLE, suppose that there is a kind of original contract, by which the subjects have tacitly referved the power of refifting their fovereign, whenever they find themfelves aggrieved by that authority, with which they have, for certain purposes, voluntarily entrusted him. These are the speculative principles of the two parties; and these too are the practical confequences deduced from them.

H h 🔺

Digitized by GOOGLE

I thall

I fhall venture to affirm, That both these fystems of spesulative principles are just; though not in the sense intended by the parties: And, That both the schemes of practical consequences are prudent; though not in the extremes, to which each party, in opposition to the other, has commonly endeavoured to carry them.

That the DEITY is the ultimate author of all government, will never be denied by any, who admit a general providence, and allow, that all events in the universe are conducted by an uniform plan, and directed to wife purpofes. As it is impossible for the human race to subfift, at least in any comfortable or fecure state, without the pro-'tection of government; this inflitution must certainly have been intended by that beneficent Being, who means the good of all his creatures: And as it has univerfally, in fact, taken place, in all countries, and all ages; we may conclude, with still greater certainty, that it was intended by that omniscient Being, who can never be deceived by any event or operation. But fince he gave rife to it, not by any particular or miraculous interpofition, but by his concealed and universal efficacy; a fovereign cannot, properly speaking, be called his vicegerent, in any other fenfe than every power or force, being derived from him, may be faid to act by his commission. Whatever, actually happens is comprehended in the general plan or intention of providence; nor has the greatest and most lawful prince any more reason, upon that account, to plead a peculiar facredness or inviolable authority, than an inferior magistrate, or even an usurper, or even a robber and a pyrate. The fame divine superintendant, who, for wife purposes, invested a TITUS or a TRAJAN with authority, did alfo, for purposes, no doubt, equally wife, though unknown, bestow power on a BORGIA or an ANGRIA. The fame caules, caules, which gave rife to the fovereign power in every flate, established likewise every petty jurisdiction in it, and every limited authority. A^D constable, therefore, no less than a king, acts by a digine commission, and possesses an indefeasible right.

472 .

When we confider how nearly equal all men are in their bodily force, and even in their mental powers and faculties, till cultivated by education; we must necelfatily allow, that nothing but their own confent could, at first, affociate them together, and subject them to any authority. The people, if we trace government to its first origin in the woods and defarts, are the fource of all power and jurifdiction, and voluntarily, for the fake of peace and order, abandoned their native liberty, and received laws from their equal and companion. The conditions," upon which they were willing to fubinity were either expressed, or were to clear and obvious, that it might well be effected superfluous to express them. If this, then, be meant by the original contract, it cannot be denied, that all government is, at first, founded on a contract, and that the most ancient rude combinations of mankind, were formed chiefly by that principle, In vain, are, we alked in what records this charter of our liberties is registered. It was not written on parchment, nor yet on leaves or barks of trees. It preceded the use of writing and all the other civilized arts of life. But we trace it plainly in the nature of man, and in the equality, or fomething approaching equality, which we find in all the individuals of that fpecies. The force, which now prevails, and which is founded on fleets and armies, is plainly political, and derived from authority, the effect of established government. A man's natural force confifts only in the vigour of his limbs, and the firmness of his courage; which could never subject multitudes titudes to the command of one. Nothing but their own confent, and their lense of the advantages resulting from peace and order, could have had that influence.

474

Vet even this confent was long very imperfect, and could not be the basis of a regular administration. The chieftain, who had probably acquired his influence during the continuance of war, suled more by persuation than command ; and till he could employ force to reduce the refractory and diffededient, the fociety could fcarcely be faid to have attained a flate of civil government. No compact or agreement, it is evident, was expressly formed for general fubmiffion; an idea far beyond the comprebenfion of fayages: Each exertion of authority in the chieftain muft have, been particular, and called forth by the prefent exigencies of the cafe: The fentible utility, refulting from his interpolition, made these exertions become daily more frequents and their frequency gradually produced an habitual, and, if you please to call it fo, a voluntary, and therefore precatious, acquiescence in the people.

But philosophers, who have embraced a party (if that be not a contradiction in terms) are not contented with these conceffions. They affert, not only that government in its 'earliest' infancy arole from consent, or rather the voluntary acquiescence of the people; but also, that, even at present, when it has attained its full maturity, it rests on no other foundation. They affirm, that all men are still born equal, and owe allegiance to no prince or government, unless bound by the obligation and fanction of a promise. And as no man, without some equivalent, would forego the advantages of his native liberty, and subject himself to the will of another; this promise is always understood to be conditional, and imposes on him no obligation, unless he meet with juffice and protection, from his fovereign. These advantages the fovereign promises him in return; and if he fail in the execution, he has broken, on his part, the articles of engagement, and has thereby freed his fubject from all obligations to allegiance. Such, according to these philosophers, is the foundation of authority in every government; and fuch the right of resultance, possible by every fubject.

Digitized by Google

But would thefe reasoners look abroad into the world. they would meet with nothing that, in the leaft, correfoonds to their ideas, or can warrant fo refined and philofoolnical a fyftom. On the contrary, we find, every where, princes, who claim their subjects as their property, and affert their independent right of fovereignery, from conquest or succession. We find also, every where, subjects, who acknowledge this right in their prince, and suppose themselves bern under obligations of obedience to a certain fovereign, as much as under the ties of reverence and duty to certain parents. These connexions are always conceived to be equally independent of our confent, in PERSIA and CHINA; in FRANCE and SPAIN: and even in HOLLAND and ENGLAND, whereever the doctrines above-mentioned have not been care. fally inculcated. Obedience or fubjection becomes fo familiar, that most men never make any enquiry about its origin or cause, more than about the principle of gravity, refistance, or the most universal laws of nature. Or if curiolity ever move them; as foon as they learn, that they themselves and their ancestors have, for feveral ages, or from time immemorial, been fubject to fuch a form of government or such a family; they immediately acquiesce, and acknowledge their obligation to allegiance. Were you to preach, in most parts of the world, that political connexions are founded altogether on voluntary confent . 476 ETSO'S ALTY TAXILORI () confent of a mutual promile, the magistrate would foor imprison you, as seditious; for loosening the ties of obedience; if your friends did not before shut you up as delirious, for advancing such absurdities. It is strange; that an act of the mind, which every individual is supposed to have formed, and after he came to the use of reason too; otherwise it could have no authority; that this act, I fay, should be for much unknown to all of them, that, over the face of the whole earth, there scarcely remain any traces or memory of it.

- But the contract; communich government is founded. is faid to be the original contract ; and confequently may be supposed too old to fall under the knowledge of the prefent generation. If the agreement, by which favage men first affociated and conjoined their force, be here meant, this is acknowledged to be real; but being for ancient, and being obliterated by a thousand changes of government and princes, it cannot now be supposed to retain any authority. ... If we would fay any thing to the purpofe, we must affert, that every particular governe ment, which is lawful, and which imposes any duty of allegiance on the fubject, was, at first, founded on confent and a voluntary compact. But befides that this fuppofes the confent of the fathers to bind the children, even to the most remote generations (which republican writers will never allow), befides this, I fay, it is not justified by history or experience, in any age or country. of the world.

Almost all the governments, which exist at present, or of which there remains any record in flory, have been founded originally, either on usurpation or conquest, or both, without any pretence of a fair consent, or voluntary subjection of the people. When an artsui and bold man is placed at the head of an army or faction, it is often often eafy for him, by employing, fometimes violence, fometimes falle pretences, to eftablish his dominion over a people a hundred times more numerous than his partizans. He allows no fuch open communication, that his enemies can know, with certainty, their number or force. He gives them no leifure to affemble together in a body to oppose him. Even all those, who are the inftruments of his usurpation, may wish his fall; but their ignorance of each other's intention keeps them in awe, and is the fole cause of his fecurity. By such arts as these, many governments have been established; and this is all the original contrast, which they have to boaft of.

The face of the earth is continually changing, by the encrease of small kingdoms into great empires, by the diffolution of great empires into smaller kingdoms, by the planting of colonies, by the migration of tribes. Is there any thing discoverable in all these events, but force and violence? Where is the mutual agreement or voluntary affociation fo much talked of ?

Even the fmootheft way, by which a nation may receive a foreign mafter, by marriage or a will, is not extremely honourable for the people; but fuppofes them to be difpofed of, like a dowry or a legacy, according to the pleafure or intereft of their rulers.

But where no force interposes, and election takes place; what is this election fo highly vaunted? It is either the combination of a few great men, who decide for the whole, and will allow of no opposition: Or it is the fury of a multitude, that follow a feditious ringleader, who is not known, perhaps, to a dozen among them, and who owes his advancement merely to his own impudence, or to the momentary caprice of his fellows.

Digitized by Google

Are

Are these diforderly elections, which are take too, of such mighty authority, as to be the only lawful foundation of all government and allegiance ?

In reality, there is not a more terrible event, than a total diffolution of government, which gives liberty to the multitude, and makes the determination or choice of a new eftablishment depend upon a number, which nearly approaches to that of the body of the people: For it never comes entirely to the whole body of them. Every wife man, then, wifhes to fee, at the head of a powerful and obedient army, a general, who may speedily feize the prize, and give to the people a master, which they are fo unfit to chuse for themselves. So little correspondent is fact and reality to those philosophical notions.

Let not the eftablifhment at the Revolution deceive us, or make us fo much in love with a philofophical origin to government, as to imagine all others monffrous and irregular. Even that event was far from corresponding to these refined ideas. It was only the fucceffion, and that only in the regal part of the government, which was then changed: And it was only the majority of feven hundred, who determined that change for near ten millions. I doubt not, indeed, but the bulk of those ten millions acquiesced willingly in the determination : But was the matter left, in the least, to their choice? Was it not justly supposed to be, from that moment, decided, and every man punished, who refused to submit to the new fovereign? How otherwise could the matter have sever been brought to any issue or conclusion?

The republic of ATHENS was, I believe, the most extensive democracy, that we read of in history: Net if we make the requisite allowances for the women, the flaves, and the firangers, we fhall find, that that effablishment was not, at first, made, nor any law ever voted,

478

t:,

• voted, 'by 'a tenth part of these who were bound to pay obedience to it : Not to mention the infantas and foreign dominions, which the ATHENIANS claimed as theirs by right of conqueft. And as it is well known, that popular affemblies in that city were always full of licence and diforder, notwithftanding the inflitutions and laws by which they were checked: How much more diforderly muft they prove, where they form not the eftablifhed conflitution, but meet tumultuoufly on the diffolution of the ancient government, in order to give rife to a new one? How chimerical muft it be to talk of a choice in fuch circumffances ?

The ACHZANS enjoyed the freeft and most perfect democracy of all antiquity; yet they employed force to oblige fome cities to enter into their league, as we learn from POLYBIUS*.

HARRY the IV th and HARRY the VIIth of ENGLAND, had really no title to the throne but a parliamentary election; yet they never would acknowledge it, left they thould thereby weaken their authority. Strange, if the only real foundation of all authority be confent and promife !

It is in vain to fay, that all governments are or fhould be, at first, founded on popular confent, as much as the necessity of human affairs will admit. This favours entirely my pretension. I maintain, that human affairs will never admit of this confent; seldom of the appearance of it. But that conquest or usurpation, that is, in plain terms, force, by disfolving the ancient governments, is the origin of almost all the new ones, which were ever established in the world. And that in the few safes, where consent may seem to have taken place, it was commonly fo irregular, fo confined, or fo much . intermixed either with fraud or violence, that it cannot have any great authority.

• Lib. ii. cap. 39.

Was

E S S A Y XII.

My intention here is not to exclude the confent of the people from being one juft foundation of government where it has place. It is furely the beft and most facred of any. I only pretend, that it has very feldom had place in any degree, and never almost in its full extent. And that therefore fome other foundation of government must also be admitted.

Were all men possessed of fo inflexible a regard to juffice, that, of themfelves, they would totally abitain from the properties of others; they had for ever remained in a state of absolute liberty, without subjection to any magistrate or political fociety: But this is a state of perfection, of which human nature is justly deemed incapable. Again; were all men possessed of so perfect an understanding, as always to know their own interests, no form of government had ever been fubmitted to, but what was established on confent, and was fully canvaffed by every member of the fociety: But this ftate of perfection is likewife much fuperior to human nature. Reafon, hiftory, and experience fnew us, that all political focieties have had an origin much lefs accurate and regular; and were one to chuse a period of time, when the people's confent was the least regarded in public transactions, it would be precisely on the establishment of a new government. In a fettled conftitution, their inclinations are often confulted; but during the fury of revolutions, conquefts, and public convultions, military force or political craft ufually decides the controverfy.

When a new government is effablished, by whatever means, the people are commonly diffatisfied with it, and pay bay obedience more from fear and neceffity, than from any idea of allegiance or of moral obligation. The prince Is watchful and jealous, and must carefully guard against every beginning or appearance of infurrection. Time, by degrees, removes all thefe difficulties, and accustoms the nation to regard, as their lawful or native princes, that family, which, at first, they confidered as usurpers or foreign conquerors. In order to found this opinion. they have no recourse to any notion of voluntary confent or promise, which, they know, never was, in this case, either expected or demanded. The original establishment was formed by violence, and fubmitted to from neceffity. The fublequent administration is also supported by power. and acquiesced in by the people, not as a matter of choice; but of obligation. 'They imagine not, that their confent gives their prince a title : But they willingly confent; because they think, that, from long possession, he has acquired a title, independent of their choice or inclination.

480

۰,

Should it be faid, that, by living under the dominion of a prince, which one might leave, every individual has given a tacit confent to his authority, and promifed him obedience; it may be anfwered, that fuch an implied confent can only have place, where a man imagines, that the matter depends on his choice. But where he thinks (as all mankind do who are born under effablifhed governments) that by his birth he owes allegiance to a certain prince or certain form of government; it would be abfurd to infer a confent or choice, which he exprefsly, in this cafe, renounces and difclaims.

Can we ferioufly fay, that a poor peafant or artizanhas a free choice to leave his country, when he knows no foreign language or manners, and lives from day to VOL. I. I i day, day, by the fmall wages which he acquires? We may as well affert, that a man, by remaining in a veffel, freely confents to the dominion of the mafter; though he was carried on board while afleep, and must leap into the ocean, and perifh, the moment he leaves her.

What if the prince forbid his subjects to quit his dominions; as in TIBERIUS'S time, it was regarded as a crime in a ROMAN knight that he had attempted to fly to the PARTHIANS, in order to escape the tyranny of that emperor*? Or as the ancient MUSCOVITES prohibited all travelling under pain of death? And did a prince observe, that many of his subjects were feized with the frenzy of migrating to foreign countries, he would doubtles, with great reason and juffice, restrain them, in order to prevent the depopulation of his own kingdom. Would he forfeit the allegiance of all his subjects, by so wise and reasonable a law? Yet the freedom of their choice is furely, in that case, ravished from them.

A company of men, who fhould leave their native country, in order to people fome uninhabited region, might dream of recovering their native freedom; but they would foon find; that their prince ftill laid claim to them, and called them his fubjects, even in their new fettlement. And in this he would but act conformably to the common ideas of mankind.

The trueft tacit confent of this kind, that is ever obferved, is when a foreigner fettles in any country, and is beforehand acquainted with the prince, and government, and laws, to which he must fubmit: Yet is his allegiance, though more voluntary, much lefs expected or depended on, than that of a natural born subject. On the contrary, his native prince still afferts a claim to him. And if he punish not the renegade, when he feizes him in war with his new prince's commission; this clemency is not founded on the municipal law, which in all countries condemns the prifoner; but on the confent of princes, who have agreed to this indulgence, in order to prevent reprifals.

* TACIT, Ann, lib. vi, cap. 14.

depended

482

Did one generation of men go off the stage at once. and another fucceed, as is the cafe with filk-worms and butterflies, the new race, if they had fenfe enough to chuse their government, which furely is never the case with men, might voluntarily, and by general confent, establish their own form of civil polity, without any regard to the laws or precedents which prevailed among their anceftors. But as human fociety is in perpetual flux, one man every hour going out of the world, another coming into it, it is neceffary, in order to preferve ftability in government, that the new brood fhould conform themfelves to the established constitution, and nearly follow the path which their fathers, treading in the footsteps of theirs, had marked out to them. Some innovations must necessarily have place in every human inflitution, and it is happy where the enlightened genius of the age give these a direction to the fide of reason, liberty, and juffice : But violent innovations no individual is entitled to make : They are even dangerous to be attempted by the legislature : More ill than good is ever to be expected from them : And if history affords examples to the contrary, they are not to be drawn into precedent, and are only to be regarded as proofs, that the science of politics affords few rules, which will not admit of fome exception, and which may not fometimes Ii 2 be

482

ized by Google

be controuled by fortune and accident. The violent innovations in the reign of HENRY VIII. proceeded from an imperious monarch, feconded by the appearance of legiflative authority: Thofe in the reign of CHARLES I. were derived from faction and fanaticifm; and both of them have proved happy in the iffue: But even the former were long the fource of many diforders, and fill more dangers; and if the measures of allegiance were to be taken from the latter, a total anarchy must have place in human fociety, and a final period at once be put to every government.

Suppose, that an usurper, after having banished his lawful prince and royal family, fhould eftablish his dominion for ten or a dozen years in any country, and should preferve fo exact a discipline in his troops, and fo regular a difpolition in his garrifons, that no infurrection had ever been raised, or even murmur heard, against his administration: Can it be afferted, that the people, who in their hearts abhor his treason, have tacitly consented to his authority, and promifed him allegiance, merely because, from necessity, they live under his dominion? Suppose again their native prince reftored, by means of an army, which he levies in foreign countries: They receive him with joy and exultation, and shew plainly with what reluctance they had fubmitted to any other voke. I may now afk, upon what foundation the prince's title ftands? Not on popular confent furely : For though the people willingly acquiesce in his authority, they never imagine, that their confent made him fovereign. They confent; because they apprehend him to be already, by birth, their lawful fovereign. And as to that tacit content, which may now be inferred from their ; living under his dominion, this is no more than what they formerly gave to the tyrant and ufurper.

When

484 -

485

When we affert, that all lawful government arifes from the confent of the people, we certainly do them a great deal more honour than they deferve, or even expect and defire from us. After the ROMAN dominions became too unwieldy for the republic to govern them, the people, over the whole known world, were extremely grateful to AUGUSTUS for that authority, which, by violence, he had established over them; and they fnewed an equal disposition to submit to the succesfor, whom he left them by his laft will and testament. It was afterwards their misfortune, that there never was, in one family, any long regular fucceffion; but that their line of princes was continually broken, either by private affaffinations or public rebellions. The prætorian bands, on the failure of every family, fet up one emperor; the legions in the East a second; those in GER-MANY, perhaps, a third : And the fword alone could decide the controverfy. The condition of the people, in that mighty monarchy, was to be lamented, not becaufe the choice of the emperor was never left to them; for that was impracticable: But becaufe they never fell under any fuccession of masters, who might regularly follow As to the violence and wars and bloodfhed. each other. occasioned by every new settlement; these were not blameable, becaufe they were inevitable.

The houfe of LANCASTER ruled in this island about fixty years; yet the partizans of the white role feemed daily to multiply in ENGLAND. The prefent establishment has taken place during a still longer period. Have all views of right in another family been utterly extinguissed; even though scarce any man now alive had arrived at years of discretion, when it was expelled, or could have confented to its dominion, or have promised it allegiance? A sufficient indication surely of the general

Ii3

E,SSAY XII.

ral fentiment of mankind on this head. For we blame not the partizans of the abdicated family, merely on account of the long time, during which they have preferved their imaginary loyalty. We blame them for adhering to a family, which, we affirm, has been juftly expelled, and which, from the moment the new fettlement took place, had forfeited all title to authority.

But would we have a more regular, at leaft a more philosophical, refutation of this principle of an original contract or popular confent; perhaps, the following obfervations may fuffice.

All moral duties may be divided into two kinds. The first are those, to which men are impelled by a natural infinct or immediate propensity, which operates on them, independent of all ideas of obligation, and of all views, either to public or private utility. Of this nature are, love of children, gratitude to benefactors, pity to the unfortunate. When we reflect on the advantage, which refults to fociety from such humane inftincts, we pay them the just tribute of moral approbation and esteem; But the person, actuated by them, feels their power and influence, antecedent to any such reflection.

The fecond kind of moral duties are fuch as are not fupported by any original inftinct of nature, but are performed entirely from a fenfe of obligation, when we confider the neceffities of human fociety, and the impoffibility of fupporting it, if these duties were neglected. It is thus juffice or a regard to the property of others, fidelity or the observance of promises, become obligatory, and acquire an authority over mankind. For as it is evident, that every man loves himself better than any other person, he is naturally impelled to extend his acquisitions as much as possible; and nothing can restrain him him in this propenfity, but reflection and experience, by which he learns the pernicious effects of that licence, and the total diffolution of fociety which muft enfue from it. His original inclination, therefore, or inftinct, is here checked and reftrained by a fubfequent judgment or obfervation.

486 '

The cafe is precifely the fame with the political or civil duty of allegiance, as with the natural duties of juftice and fidelity. Our primary inftincts lead us, either to indulge ourfelves in unlimited freedom, or to feek dominion over others : And it is reflection only, which engages us to facrifice fuch ftrong paffions to the interefts of peace and public order. A fmall degree of experience and obfervation fuffices to teach us, that fociety cannot poffibly be maintained without the authority of magiftrates, and that this authority muft foon fall into contempt, where exact obedience is not payed to it. The obfervation of thefe general and obvious interefts is the fource of all allegiance, and of that moral obligation, which we attribute to it.

What neceffity, therefore, is there to found the duty of allegiance or obedience to magisfrates on that of fidelity or a regard to promifes, and to fuppole, that it is the confent of each individual, which fubjects him to government; when it appears, that both allegiance and fidelity ftand precifely on the fame foundation, and are both fubmitted to by mankind, on account of the apparent interefts and neceffities of human fociety? We are bound to obey our fovereign, it is faid; because we have given a tacit promise to that purpose. But why are we bound to obferve our promise? It must here be afferted, that the commerce and intercourse of mankind, which are of fuch mighty advantage, can have no fecurity where I i 4 men men pay no regard to their engagements. In like manner, may it be faid, that men could not live at all in fociety, at leaft in a civilized fociety, without laws and magiftrates and judges, to prevent the encroachments of the ftrong upon the weak, of the violent upon the juft and equitable. The obligation to allegiance being of like force and authority with the obligation to fidelity, we gain nothing by refolving the one into the other. The general interefts or neceffities of fociety are fufficient to effablifh both.

Digitized by Google

487

If the reason be asked of that obedience, which we are bound to pay to government, I readily answer, because fociety could not otherwise fub ft: And this answer is clear and intelligible to all mankind. Your answer is, because we should keep our word. But besides, that no body, till trained in a philosophical system, can either comprehend or relish this answer: Besides this, I fay, you find yourself embarrassed, when it is asked, why we are bound to keep our word? Nor can you give any answer, but what would, immediately, without any circuit, have accounted for our obligation to allegiance.

But to whom is allegiance due? And who is our lawful fovereign? This queftion is often the most difficult of any, and liable to infinite discuffions. When people are so happy, that they can answer, Our prefent sovereign, wha inherits, in a direct line, from ancestors, that have governed us for many ages; this answer admits of no reply; even though historians, in tracing up to the remotest antiquity, the origin of that royal family, may find, as commonly happens, that its first authority was derived from usurpation and violence. It is confessed, that private justice, or the abstinence from the properties of others, is a most cardinal virtue: Yet reason tells us, that there is

488

is no property in durable objects, fuch as lands or houfes, when carefully examined in paffing from hand to hand, but muft, in fome period, have been founded on fraud and injuffice. The neceffities of human fociety, neither in private nor public life, will allow of fuch an accurate enquiry: And there is no virtue or moral duty, but what may, with facility, be refined away, if we indulge a falfe philofophy, in fifting and fcrutinizing it, by every captious rule of logic, in every light or polition, in which it may be placed.

The queftions with regard to private property have filled infinite volumes of law and philosophy, if in both we add the commentators to the original text; and in the end, we may fafely pronounce, that many of the rules, there established, are uncertain, ambiguous, and arbitrary. The like opinion may be formed with regard to the fuccession and rights of princes and forms of government. Several cases, no doubt, occur, especially in the infancy of any constitution, which admit of no determination from the laws of justice and equity: And our historian RAPIN pretends, that the controversy between EDWARD the Third and PHILIP DE VALOIS was of this nature, and could be decided only by an appeal to heaven, that is, by war and violence.

Who fhall tell me, whether GERMANICUS or DRUSUS ought to have fucceeded to TIBERIUS, had he died, while they were both alive, without naming any of them for his fucceffor ? Ought the right of adoption to be received as equivalent to that of blood, in a nation, where it had the fame effect in private families, and had already, in two inftances, taken place in the public? Ought GERMANICUS to be effected the elder fon becaufe he was born before DRUSUS: or the younger, becaufe he was adopted after the birth of his brother ? Ought the right of the elder to be regarded in a nation, where he had no advantage in the fucceffion of private families? Ought the ROMAN empire at that time to be deemed hereditary, becaufe of two examples; or ought it, even fo early, to be regarded as belonging to the ftronger or to the prefent poffeffor, as being founded on fo recent an ufurpation ?

was

Digitized by Google

SSAY XII.

COMMODUS mounted the throne after a pretty long fuccession of excellent emperors, who had acquired their title, not by birth, or public election, but by the fictitious rite of adoption. That bloody debauchee being murdered by a confpiracy fuddenly formed between his wench and her gallant, who happened at that time to be Protorian Prafect; these immediately deliberated about choofing a mafter to human kind, to speak in the ftyle of those ages; and they cast their eyes on PERTINAX. Before the tyrant's death was known, the Prafett went fecretly to that fenator, who, on the appearance of the foldiers, imagined that his execution had been ordered by COMMODUS. He was immediately faluted emperor by the officer and his attendants; cheerfully proclaimed by the populace; unwillingly fubmitted to by the guards; formally recognized by the fenate; and paffively received by the provinces and armies of the empire.

The difcontent of the Prætorian bands broke out in a fudden fedition, which occafioned the murder of that excellent prince: And the world being now without a mafter and without government, the guards thought proper to fet the empire formally to fale. JULIAN, the purchaser, was proclaimed by the foldiers, recognized by the fenate, and fubmitted to by the people; and must alfo

Digitized by Google

490

alfo have been fubmitted to by the provinces, had not the envy of the legions begotten opposition and refistance. PESCENNIUS NIGER in SYRIA elected himself emperor, gained the tumultuary confent of his army, and was attended with the fecret good-will of the fenate and people of ROME. ALBINUS in BRITAIN found an equal right to fet up his claim; but SEVERUS, who governed PANNONIA, prevailed in the end above both of them. That able politician and warrior, finding his own birth and dignity too much inferior to the imperial crown, profeffed, at first, an intention only of revenging the death of PERTINAX. He marched as general into ITALY; defeated JULIAN; and without our being able to fix any precife commencement even of the foldiers' confent, he was from necessity acknowledged emperor by the fenate and people; and fully established in his violent authority by fubduing NIGER and ALBINUS *.

Inter bæc Gordianus CÆSAR (fays CAPITOLINUS, fpeaking of another period) fublatus a militibus. Imperator est appellatus, quia non erat alius in præsenti. It is to be remarked, that GORDIAN was a boy of fourteen years of age.

Frequent inftances of a like nature occur in the hiftory of the emperors; in that of ALEXANDER's fucceffors; and of many other countries: Nor can any thing be more unhappy than a defpotic government of this kind; where the fucceffion is disjointed and irregular, and muft be determined, on every vacancy, by force or election. In a free government, the matter is often unavoidable, and is also much lefs dangerous. The interests of liberty may there frequently lead the people, in their own de-

* HERODIAN, Lib. ii,

Digitized by Google

fence,

ESSAY XII.

fence, to alter the fucceffion of the crown. And the confliction, being compounded of parts, may ftill maintain a fufficient ftability, by refling on the ariftocratical or democratical members, though the monarchical be altered, from time to time, in order to accommodate it to the former.

492

In an absolute government, when there is no legal prince, who has a title to the throne, it may fafely be determined to belong to the first occupant. Instances of this kind are but too frequent, efpecially in the eaftern monarchies. When any race of princes expires, the will or deftination of the last fovereign will be regarded as a title. Thus the edict of LEWIS the XIVth, who called the baftard princes to the fucceffion in cafe of the failure of all the legitimate princes, would, in fuch an event, have some authority*. Thus the will of CHARLES the Second disposed of the whole SPANISH monarchy. The ceffion of the ancient proprietor, especially when joined to conquest, is likewife deemed a good title. The general obligation, which binds us to government, is the intereft and neceffities of fociety; and this obligation is very ftrong. The determination of it to this or that particular prince or form of government is frequently more uncertain and dubious. Prefent poffession has confiderable authority in these cases, and greater than in private property; because of the diforders which attend all revolutions and changes of government.

We fhall only observe, before we conclude, that, though an appeal to general opinion may justly, in the speculative sciences of metaphysics, natural philosophy, or astronomy, be deemed unfair and inconclusive, yet

* See NOTE [TT].

Digitized by Google

in,

in all queftions with regard to morals, as well as criticifm, there is really no other flandard, by which any controversy can ever be decided. And nothing is a clearer proof, that a theory of this kind is erroneous, than to find, that it leads to paradoxes, repugnant to the common fentiments of mankind, and to the practice and opinion of all nations and all ages. The doctrine, which founds all lawful government on an original contract, or confent of the people, is plainly of this kind; nor has the most noted of its partizans, in profecution of it, fcrupled to affirm, that abfolute monarchy is inconfistent with civil fociety, and fo can be no form of civil government at all*; and that the fupreme power in a flate cannot take from any man, by taxes and impositions, any part of his property, without his own confent or that of his representatives +. What authority any moral reafoning can have, which leads into opinions, fo wide of the general practice of mankind, in every place but this fingle kingdom, it is eafy to determine.

The only passage I meet with in antiquity, where the obligation of obedience to government is ascribed to a promise, is in PLATO'S Crito: where SOCRATES refuses to escape from prison, because he had tacitly promised to obey the laws. Thus he builds a tory confequence of passive obedience, on a whig foundation of the original contract.

New discoveries are not to be expected in these matters. If scarce any man, till very lately, ever imagined that government was founded on compact, it is cer-

Digitized by Google

* See LOCKE on Government, chap. vii. § 90.

+ Id. chap. xi. § 138, 139, 140.

tain,

493

494

tain, that it cannot, in general, have any fuch foundation.

The crime of rebellion among the ancients was commonly expressed by the terms νεωτεριζειν, novas res meliri.

(495) .

ESSAY XIII.

Of PASSIVE OBEDIENCE.

I N the former effay, we endeavour to refute the fpecillative lystems of politics advanced in this nation; as well the religious fystem of the one party, as the philo-fophical of the other. We come now to examine the prattical confequences, deduced by each party, with regard to the measures of fubmission due to fovereigns.

As the obligation to juffice is founded entirely on the interests of society, which require mutual abstinence from property, in order to preferve peace among mankind 1 it is evident, that, when the execution of justice would be attended with very pernicious confequences, that virtue must be suspended, and give place to public utility, in fuch extraordinary and fuch preffing emergencies. The maxim, fiat Justitia & ruat Caelum, let justice be performed, though the universe be destroyed, is apparently falfe, and by facrificing the end to the means, fhews a preposterous idea of the subordination of duties. What governor of a town makes any fcruple of burning the fuburbs, when they facilitate the approaches of the enemy? Or what general abitains from plundering a neutral country, when the necessities of war require it. and he cannot otherwife fubfift his army? The cafe is the fame with the duty of allegiance; and common fenfa fense teaches us, that; as government binds us to obédience only on account of its tendency to public utility; that duty must always, in extraordinary cases, when public ruin would evidently attend obedience, yield to the primary and original obligation. Salus populi forprema Lex, the fastety of the people is the supreme law. This maxim is agreeable to the sentiments of mankind in all ages: Nor is any one; when he reads of the infurrections against NERO or PHILIP the Second, so infatuated with party systems, as not to wish success to the enterprize; and praise the undertakers. Even our high monarchical party, in spite of their sublime theory, are forced, in such cases, to judge, and feel, and approve, in conformity to the rest of mankind.

7

ESSAY XIII.

496

Refiftance, therefore, being admitted in extraordinary emergencies, the question can only be among good reasoners, with regard to the degree of necessity, which can juftify refiftance, and render it lawful or commend-And here I must confess; that I shall always able incline to their fide, who draw the bond of allegiance very close, and confider an infringement of it, as the last refuge in desperate cases, when the public is in the higheft danger, from violence and tyranny. For befides the mischiefs of a civil war, which commonly attends infurrection; it is certain, that, where a difpolition to rebellion appears among any people, it is one chief caufe of tyranny in the rulers, and forces them into many violent measures which they never would have embraced, had every one been inclined to fubmiffion and obedience. Thus the tyrannicide or affaffination, approved of by ancient maxims, instead of keeping tyrants and usurpers in awe, made them ten times more fierce and unrelenting; and is now justly, upon that account, abolished by the laws of nations, and univerfally condemned as a bafe and

Of PASSIVE OBEDIENCE.

and treacherous method of bringing to justice these disturbers of fociety.

Besides, we must confider, that, as obedience is our duty in the common course of things, it ought chiefly to be inculcated; nor can any thing be more prepofterous than an anxious care, and folicitude in flating all the cafes, in which refiftance may be allowed. In like manner, though a philosopher reasonably acknowledges, in the course of an argument, that the rules of justice may be difpenfed with in cafes of urgent neceffity; what fhould we think of a preacher or cafuift, who fhould make it his chief fludy to find out fuch cafes, and enforce them with all the vehemence of argument and eloquence? Would he not be better employed in inculcating the general doctrine, than in difplaying the particular exceptions, which, we are, perhaps, but too much inclined, of ourfelves, to embrace and to extend ?

There are, however, two reasons, which may be pleaded in defence of that party among us, who have, with fo much industry, propagated the maxims of refistance; maxims, which, it must be confessed, are, in general, fo pernicious, and fo destructive of civil fociety. The first is, that their antagonists carrying the doctrine of obedience to such an extravagant height, as not only never to mention the exceptions in extraordinary cases (which might, perhaps, be excusable), but even positively to exclude them; it became necessary to infiss on these exceptions, and defend the rights of injured truth and liberty. The fecond, and, perhaps, better reason, is founded on the nature of the BRITISH constitution and form of government.

It is almost peculiar to our constitution to establish a first magistrate with such high pre-eminence and dignity, Vot. I. K k that,

Digitized by Google

ESSAY XIII.

498

that, though limited by the laws, he is, in a manner, fo far as regards his own perfon, above the laws, and can neither 'be questioned' nor punished for any injury or wrong, which may be committed by him. His ministers alone, or those who act by his commission, are obnoxious to juffice; and while the prince is thus allured, by the profpect of perfonal fafety, to give the laws their free course, an equal security is, in effect, obtained by the punishment of lesser offenders, and at the fame time a civil war is avoided, which would be the infallible confequence, were an attack, at every turn, made directly upon the fovereign. But though the conflicution pays this falutary compliment to the prince, it can never reasonably be understood, by that maxim, to have determined its own destruction, or to have established a tame fubmiffion, where he protects his minifters, perfeveres in injuffice, and usurps the whole power of the commonwealth. This cafe, indeed, is never expressly put by the laws; because it is impossible for them, in their ordinary courfe, to provide a remedy for it, or eftablish any magistrate, with superior authority, to chastife the exorbitancies of the prince. But as a right without a remedy would be an abfurdity; the remedy in this cafe, is the extraordinary one of refiftance, when affairs come to that extremity, that the conflictution can be defended by it alone. Refistance therefore must, of course, become more frequent in the BRITISH government, than in others, which are fimpler, and confift of fewer parts and movements. Where the king is an abfolute fovereign, he has little temptation to commit fuch enormous tyranny as may justly provoke rebellion: But where he is limited, his imprudent ambition, without any great vices, may run him into that perilous fituation. This is frequently supposed to have been the case with CHARLES the

Of PASSIVE OBEDIENCE. 499

the First; and if we may now speak truth, after animofities are ceased, this was also the case with JAMES the Second. These were harmless, if not, in their private character, good men; but mistaking the nature of our constitution, and engroffing the whole legislative power, it became necessary to oppose them with some vehemence; and even to deprive the latter formally of that authority, which he had used with such imprudence and indiscretion.

K k 2

(50i)

ESSAY XIV.

Of the COALITION of PARTIES.

V abolish all distinctions of party may not be practicable, perhaps not defirable, in a free government. The only dangerous parties are fuch as entertain opposite views with regard to the effentials of government, the fuccession of the crown, or the more confiderable privileges belonging to the feveral members of the conftitution; where there is no room for any compromife or accommodation, and where the controverfy may appear fo momentous as to justify even an opposition by arms to the pretensions of antagonists. Of this nature was the animolity, continued for above a century paft; between the parties in ENGLAND; an animofity which broke out fometimes into civil war, which occasioned violent revolutions, and which continually endangered the peace and tranquillity of the nation. But as there have appeared of late the ftrongeft fymptoms of an universal defire to abolish these party diffinctions; this tendency to a coalition affords the moft agreeable profpect of future happiness, and ought to be carefully cherished and promoted by every lover of his country.

There is not a more effectual method of promoting fo good an end, than to prevent all unreasonable infult and triumph of the one party over the other, to encourage K k 3 moderate moderate opinions, to find the proper medium in all disputes, to perfuade each that its antagonist may possibly he fometimes in the right, and to keep a balance in the praise and blame, which we bestow on either fide. The two former Effays, concerning the original contract and paffive obedience, are calculated for this purpose with regard to the philosophical and practical controversies between the parties, and tend to flow that neither fide are in these respects to fully supported by reason as they endeavour to flatter themfelves. We shall proceed to exercise the fame moderation with regard to the bistorical difputes between the parties, by proving that each of them was justified by plaufible topics; that there were on both fides wife men, who meant well to their country; and that the paft animofity between the factions had no better foundation than narrow prejudice or interested passion.

The popular party, who afterwards acquired the name of whigs, might justify, by very specious arguments, that opposition to the crown, from which our present free conflitution is derived. Though obliged to acknowledge, that precedents in favour of prerogative had uniformly taken place during many reigns before CHARLES the First, they thought, that there was no reason for fubmitting any longer to fo dangerous an authority. Such might have been their reafoning : As the rights of mankind are for ever to be deemed facred, no prefcription of tyranny or arbitrary power can have authority fufficient to abolish them. Liberty is a bleffing to ineftimable, that, wherever there appears any probability of recovering it, a nation may willingly run many hazards, and ought not even to repine at the greatest effusion of blood or diffipation of treasure. All human institutions, and none more than government, are in continual fluctua-Kings are fure to embrace every opportunity of tion. extending 9 extending their prerogatives: And if favourable incidents be not alfo laid hold of for extending and fecuring the privileges of the people, an univerfal defpotifm muft for ever prevail amongft mankind. The example of all the neighbouring nations proves, that it is no longer fafe to entruft with the crown the fame high prerogatives, which had formerly been exercifed during rude and fimple ages. And though the example of many late reigns may be pleaded in favour of a power in the prince fomewhat arbitrary, more remote reigns afford inflances of ftricter limitations imposed on the crown; and those pretensions of the parliament, now branded with the title of innovations, are only a recovery of the juft rights of the people.

Of the COALITION of PARTIES. 503

Thefe views, far from being odious, are furely large, and generous, and noble: To their prevalence and fuccefs the kingdom owes its liberty; perhaps its learning, its induftry, commerce, and naval power: By them chiefly the ENGLISH name is diffinguifhed among the fociety of nations, and afpires to a rivalfhip with that of the freeft and most illustrious commonwealths of antiquity. But as all these mighty confequences could not reasonably be forefeen at the time when the contest began, the royalists of that age wanted not specious arguments on their fide, by which they could justify their defence of the then established prerogatives of the prince. We shall frate the question, as it might have appeared to them at the assessments on the crown, began the civil wars.

The only rule of government, they might have faid, known and acknowledged among men, is use and practice: Reason is so uncertain a guide that it will always be exposed to doubt and controvers could it ever render itself prevalent over the people, men had always retained it as their sole rule of conduct: They had still K k 4 continued continued in the primitive, unconnected flate of nature, without fubmitting to political government, whole fole basis is, not pure reason, but authority and precedent. Diffolve these ties, you break all the bonds of civil society, and leave every man at liberty to confult his private interess, by those expedients, which his appetite, disguised under the appearance of reason, shall dictate to him. The spirit of innovation is in itself permicious, however favourable its particular object may sometimes appear: A truth so obvious, that the popular party themselves are fensible of it; and therefore cover their encroachments on the crown by the plausible pretence of their recovering the ancient liberties of the people.

But the prefent prerogatives of the crown, allowing all the fuppofitions of that party, have been inconteftably eftablished ever fince the accession of the House of TUDOR; a period, which, as it now comprehends a hundred and fixty years, may be allowed fufficient to give stability to any constitution. Would it not have appeared ridiculous, in the reign of the Emperor ADRIAN, to have talked of the republican constitution as the rule of government; or to have supposed, that the former rights of the fenate, and confuls, and tribunes were still subfissing?

But the prefent claims of the ENGLISH monarchs are much more favourable than those of the ROMAN emperors during that age. The authority of AUGUSTUS was a plain usurpation, grounded only on military violence, and forms such an epoch in the ROMAN history, as is obvious to every reader. But if HENRY VII. really, as some pretend, enlarged the power of the crown, it was only by infensible acquisitions, which escaped the apprehension of the people, and have scarcely been remarked even by historians and politicians. The new government, if it deferve the epithet, is an imperceptible transition transition from the former; is entirely engrafted on it; derives its title fully from that root; and is to be confidered only as one of those gradual revolutions, to which human affairs, in every nation, will be for ever fubject.

Of the COALITION of PARTIES. 505

The Houfe of TUDOR, and after them that of STUART, exercifed no prerogatives, but what had been claimed and exercifed by the PLANTAGENETS. Not a fingle branch of their authority can be faid to be an innovation. The only difference is, that, perhaps, former kings exerted thefe powers only by intervals, and were not able, by reafon of the opposition of their barons, to render them fo fleady a rule of administration. But the fole inference from this fact is, that those ancient times were more turbulent and feditious; and that royal authority, the conflictution, and the laws, have happily of late gained the ascendant.

Under what pretence can the popular party now fpeak of recovering the ancient conflitution? The former controul over the kings was not placed in the commons, but in the barons: The people had no authority, and even little or no liberty; till the crown, by fuppreffing these factious tyrants, enforced the execution of the laws, and obliged all the fubjects equally to refpect each others rights, privileges, and properties. If we must return to the ancient barbarous and feudal conflitution ; let those gentlemen, who now behave themselves with so much infolence to their fovereign, fet the first example. Let them make court to be admitted as retainers to a neighbouring baron; and by fubmitting to flavery under him, acquire fome protection to themfelves; together with the power of exercifing rapine and oppression over their in-This was the condition of the ferior flaves and villains. commons among their remote anceftors.

But

But how far back must we go, in having recourse to ancient constitutions and governments? There was a constitution still more ancient than that to which these innovators affect fo much to appeal. During that period there was no magna charta: The barons themselves posfessive few regular, stated privileges: And the house of commons probably had not an existence.

It is ridiculous to hear the commons, while they are affuming, by ufurpation, the whole power of government, talk of reviving ancient infitutions. Is it not known, that, though reprefentatives received wages from their conflituents; to be a member of the lower houfe was always confidered as a burden, and an exemption from it as a privilege? Will they perfuade us, that power, which, of all human acquifitions, is the most coveted, and in comparison of which even reputation and pleasure and riches are flighted, could ever be regarded as a burden by any man?

The property, acquired of late by the commons, it is faid, entitles them to more power than their anceftors enjoyed. But to what is this encrease of their property owing, but to an encrease of their liberty and their fecurity? Let them therefore acknowledge, that their anceftors, while the crown was restrained by the feditious barons, really enjoyed less liberty than they themfelves have attained, after the fovereign acquired the ascendant: And let them enjoy that liberty with moderation; and not forfeit it by new exorbitant claims, and by rendering it a pretence for endless innovations.

The true rule of government is the prefent established practice of the age. That has most authority, because it is recent: It is also best known, for the fame reason. Who has affured those tribunes, that the PLANTAGENETS did not exercise as high acts of authority as the TUDORS? Historians,

Digitized by Google

Of the COALITION of PARTIES. 507

Hiftorians, they fay, do not mention them. But hiftorians are alfo filent with regard to the chief exertions of prerogative by the TUDORS. Where any power or prerogative is fully and undoubtedly established, the exercise of it passes for a thing of course, and readily escapes the notice of history and annals. Had we no other monuments of ELIZABETH's reign, than what are preserved even by CAMDEN, the most copious, judicious, and exact of our historians, we should be entirely ignorant of the most important maxims of her government.

Was not the prefent monarchical government, in its full extent, authorized by lawyers, recommended by divines, acknowledged by politicians, acquiefced in, nay paffionately cherifhed, by the people in general; and all this during a period of at leaft a hundred and fixty years, and till of late, without the fmalleft murmur or controverfy? This general confent furely, during fo long a time, muft be fufficient to render a conflictution legal and valid. If the origin of all power be derived, as is pretended, from the people; here is their confent in the fulleft and moft ample terms that can be defired or imagined.

But the people must not pretend, because they can, by their consent, lay the foundations of government, that therefore they are to be permitted, at their pleasure, to overthrow and subvert them. There is no end of these feditious and arrogant claims. The power of the crown is now openly ftruck at: The nobility are also in visible peril: The gentry will foon follow: The popular leaders, who will then assume the name of gentry, will next be exposed to danger: And the people themselves, having become incapable of civil government, and lying under the restraint of no authority, must, for the fake of peace, admit, instead of their legal and mild monarchs, a fuccession of military and despotic tyrants.

Thefe

These consequences are the more to be dreaded, as the present fury of the people, though glossed over by pretenfions to civil liberty, is in reality incited by the fanaticism of religion; a principle the most blind, headstrong, and ungovernable, by which human nature can possibly be actuated. Popular rage is dreadful, from whatever motive derived: But must be attended with the most pernicious consequences, when it arises from a principle, which disclaims all controul by human law, reason, or authority.

These are the arguments, which each party may make use of to justify the conduct of their predecessors, during that great crifis. The event, if that can be admitted as a reason, has shown, that the arguments of the popular party were better founded; but perhaps, according to the established maxims of lawyers and politicians, the views of the royalists ought, before-hand, to have appeared more folid, more fafe, and more legal. But this is certain, that the greater moderation we now employ in reprefenting paft events; the nearer shall we be to produce a full coalition of the parties, and an entire acquiescence in our present establishment. Moderation is of advantage to every establishment: Nothing but zeal can overturn a fettled power : And an over-active zeal in friends is apt to beget a like fpirit in antagonists. The transition from a moderate opposition against an establishment, to an entire acquiescence in it, is eafy and infenfible.

There are many invincible arguments, which fhould induce the malcontent party to acquiefce entirely in the prefent fettlement of the conftitution. They now find, that the fpirit of civil liberty, though at first connected with religious fanaticism, could purge itself from that pollution, and appear under a more genuine and engaging aspect; a friend to toleration, and an encourager of all the

Digitized by Google

Of the COALITION of PARTIES. 509

the enlarged and generous fentiments that do honour to They may observe, that the popular human nature. claims could ftop at a proper period; and after retrenching the high claims of prerogative, could still maintain a due respect to monarchy, to nobility, and to all ancient inftitutions. Above all, they must be fensible, that the very principle, which made the ftrength of their party, and from which it derived its chief authority, has now deferted them, and gone over to their antagonists. The plan of liberty is fettled; its happy effects are proved by experience; a long tract of time has given it stability; and whoever would attempt to overturn it, and to recal the paft government or abdicated family, would, befides other more criminal imputations, be exposed, in their turn, to the reproach of faction and innovation. While they peruse the hiftory of past events, they ought to reflect, both that those rights of the crown are long fince annihilated, and that the tyranny, and violence, and oppreffion, to which they often gave rife, are ills, from which the established liberty of the constitution has now at last happily protected the people. These reflections will prove a better fecurity to our freedom and privileges, than to deny, contrary to the clearest evidence of facts, that fuch regal powers ever had an existence. There is not a more effectual method of betraying a cause, than to lay the ftrefs of the argument on a wrong place, and by disputing an untenable post, enure the adversaries to fuccels and victory.

(511)

ESSAY XV.

Of the PROTESTANT SUCCESSION.

I SUPPOSE, that a member of parliament in the reign of King WILLIAM or Queen ANNE, while the establishment of the Protestant Successfor was yet uncertain, were deliberating concerning the party he would chufe in that important question, and weighing, with impartiality, the advantages and difadvantages on each fide. I believe the following particulars would have entered into his confideration.

He would eafily perceive the great advantage refulting from the reftoration of the STUART family; by which we fhould preferve the fucceffion clear and undifputed, free from a pretender, with fuch a fpecious title as that of blood, which, with the multitude, is always the claim, the ftrongeft and most easily comprehended. It is in vain ' to fay, as many have done, that the question with regard to governors, independent of government, is frivolous, and little worth diffuting, much less fighting about. The generality of mankind never will enter into these sentiments; and it is much happier, I believe, for fociety, that they do not, but rather continue in their natural prepoffeffions. How could stability be preferved in any 'monarchical government (which, though, perhaps, not the beft, is, and always has been, the most common of any), unless men had to passionate a regard for the true heir heir of their royal family; and even though he be weak in understanding, or infirm in years, gave him so fensible a preference above perfons the most accomplished in fhining talents, or celebrated for great atchievements ? Would not every popular leader put in his claim at every vacancy, or even without any vacancy; and the kingdom become the theatre of perpetual wars and convultions? The condition of the ROMAN empire, furely, was not, in this respect, much to be envied; nor is that of the Eastern nations, who pay little regard to the titles of their fovereign, but facrifice them, every day, to the caprice or momentary humour of the populace or foldiery. It is but a foolifh wildom, which is fo carefully difplayed. in undervaluing princes, and placing them on a level with the meaneft of mankind. To be fure, an anatomist finds no more in the greatest monarch than in the lowest peasant or day-labourer; and a moralist may, perhaps, frequently find lefs. But what do all thefe reflections tend to? We, all of us, ftill retain these prejudices in favour of birth and family; and neither in our ferious occupations, nor most careless amusements, can we ever get entirely rid of them. A tragedy, that should reprefent the adventures of failors, or porters, or even of private gentlemen, would prefently difguft us; but one that introduces kings and princes, acquires in our eyes an air of importance and dignity. Or fhould a man be able. by his fuperior wildom, to get entirely above fuch prepoffeffions, he would foon, by means of the fame wildom. again bring himfelf down to them, for the fake of fociety, whose welfare he would perceive to be intimately connected with them. Far from endeavouring to undeceive the people in this particular, he would cherifh fuch fentiments of reverence to their princes; as requisite to preferve a due fubordination in fociety. And though the lives

ESŞAY XV.

Of the PROTESTANT SUCCESSION. 513

lives of twenty thousand men be often facrificed to maintain a king in possible poss

The advantages of the HANOVER succession are of an opposite nature, and arife from this very circumstance, that it violates hereditary right; and places on the throne a prince, to whom birth gave no title to that dignity. It is evident, from the history of this island, that the privileges of the people have, during near two centuries, been continually upon the encrease, by the division of the. church-lands, by the alienations of the barons' effates. by the progress of trade, and above all, by the happiness of our fituation, which, for a long time, gave us fufficient fecurity, without any ftanding army or military eftablishment. On the contrary, public liberty has, almost in every other nation of EUROPE, been, during the fame period, extremely upon the decline; while the people were difgufted at the hardships of the old feudal militia, and rather chose to entrust their prince with mercenary armies, which he eafily turned against themselves. It was nothing extraordinary, therefore, that fome of our BRITISH fovereigns mistook the nature of the constitution, at least the genius of the people; and as they embraced all the favourable precedents left them by their anceftors, they overlooked ' all those which were contrary, and which supposed a limitation in our government. They were encouraged in this militake, by the example of all the neighbouring Vol. I. LI princes.

ESSAY XV.

princes, who bearing the fame title or appellation, and being adorned with the fame enfigns of authority, naturally led them to claim the fame powers and preroga-It appears from the speeches and proclamations tives. of. JAMES I. and the whole train of that prince's actions. as well as his fon's, that he regarded the ENGLISH government as a fimple monarchy, and never imagined that any confiderable part of his fubjects entertained This opinion made those monarchs a contrary idea. discover their pretensions, without preparing any force to fupport them; and even without referve or difguife, which are always employed by those who enter upon any new project, or endeavour to innovate in any government. The flattery of courtiers farther confirmed their prejudices; and above all, that of the clergy, who from feveral paffages of scripture, and these wrested too, had erected a regular and avowed fystem of arbitrary. power. The only method of deftroying, at once, all these high claims and pretensions, was to depart from the true hereditary line, and chuse a prince, who, being plainly a creature of the public, and receiving the crown on conditions, expressed and avowed, found his authority eftablished on the fame bottom with the privileges of the By electing him in the royal line, we cut off all people. hopes of ambitious subjects, who might, in future emergencies, diffurb the government by their cabals and pretensions: By rendering the crown hereditary in his family, we avoided all the inconveniencies of elective monarchy; and by excluding the lineal heir, we fecured all our conffitutional limitations, and rendered our government uniform and of a piece. The people cherifh monarchy, because protected by it: The monarch favours liberty, because created by it. And thus every advantage

Digitized by Google

Of the PROTESTANT SUCCESSION. SFS

Advantage is obtained by the new effablishments as far as human, skill and widdom can extend itself.

These are the separate advantages of fixing the fuccession, either in the house of STUART, or in that of HANOVER. There are also disadvantages in each establishment, which an impartial patriot would ponder and examine, in order to form a just judgment upon the whole.

The difadvantages of the proteftant fucceffior confift in the foreign dominions, which are poffeffed by the princes of the HANOVER line, and which, it might be fuppofed, would engage us in the intrigues and wars of the continent, and lofe us, in fome measure, the ineftimable advantage we poffefs, of being furrounded and guarded by the fea, which we command. The difadvantages of recalling the abdicated family confift chiefly in their religion, which is more prejudicial to fociety than that eftablished amongst us, is contrary to it, and affords no toleration, or peace, or fecurity to any other communion.

It appears to me, that these advantages and difadvantages are allowed on both fides; at least, by every one who is at all fufceptible of argument or reafoning. No fubject, however loyal, pretends to deny, that the difputed title and foreign dominions of the prefent toyal family are a lofs. Nor is there any partizan of the STUARTS, but will confess, that the claim of hereditary, indefeafible right, and the Roman Catholic religion, are alfo difadvantages in that family. It belongs, therefore, to a philosopher alone, who is of neither party, to put all the circumstances in the scale, and affign to each of them its proper poife and influence. Such a one will readily, at first, acknowledge that all political questions are infinitely complicated, and that there Lla fcarcely fcarcely ever occurs, in any deliberation, a choice, which is either purely good, or purely ill. Confequences, mixed and varied, may be forefeen to flow from every meafure: And many confequences, unforefeen, do always, in fact, refult from every one. Hefitation, and referve, and fulpenfe, are, therefore, the only fentiments he brings to this effay or trial. Or if he indulges any paffion, it is that of derifion against the ignorant multitude, who are always clamorous and dogmatical, even in the nicess full more than of understanding, they are altogether unfit judges.

E S S A Y XV

But to fay fomething more determinate on this head, the following reflections will, I hope, fhow the temper, if not the underftanding, of a philosopher.

Were we to judge merely by first appearances, and by past experience, we must allow that the advantages of a parliamentary title in the houfe of HANOVER are greater than those of an undisputed hereditary title in the house of STUART; and that our fathers acted wifely in prefer-. ring the former to the latter. So long as the houfe of STUART ruled in GREAT BRITAIN, which, with fome interruption, was above eighty years, the government was kept in a continual fever, by the contention between the privileges of the people and the prerogatives of the crown. If arms were dropped, the noise of disputes continued: Or if these were filenced, jealoufy still corroded the heart, and threw the nation into an unnatural ferment and diforder. And while we were thus occupied in domestic disputes, a foreign power, dangerous to public liberty, erected itself in EUROPE, without any opposition from us, and even fometimes with our offiftance.

But

Of the PROTESTANT SUCCESSION. 517

· But during these last fixty years, when a parliamentary eftablishment has taken place; whatever factions may have prevailed either among the people or in public affemblies, the whole force of our constitution has always fallen to one fide, and an uninterrupted harmony has been preferved between our princes and our parlia-Public liberty, with internal peace and order. ments. has flourished almost without interruption : Trade and manufactures, and agriculture, have encreased : The arts, and fciences, and philosophy, have been sultivated, Even religious parties have been necessitated to lay afide their mutual rancour : And the glory of the nation has spread itself all over EUROPE; derived equally from our progrefs in the arts of peace, and from valour and fuccefs. in war. So long and fo glorious a period no nation almost can boast of: Nor is there another instance in the whole hiftory of mankind, that fo many millions of people have, during fuch a fpace of time, been held together, in a manner fo free, fo rational, and fo fuitable to the dignity of human nature.

But though this recent experience feems clearly to decide in favour of the prefent effablishment, there are fome circumstances to be thrown into the other scale; and it is dangerous to regulate our judgment by one event or example.

We have had two rebellions during the flourishing period above mentioned, besides plots and confpiracies without number. And if none of these have produced any very fatal event, we may ascribe our escape chiefly to the narrow genius of those princes who difficuted our establishment; and we may esteem ourselves so far fortunate. But the claims of the banished family, I fear, are not yet antiquated; and who can foretel, that their future attempts will produce no greater diforder ?

L13

The

#18 E S S A Y XV.

The diffutes between privilege and prerogative may eafily be composed by laws, and votes, and conferences, and conceffions; where there is tolerable temper or prudence on both fides, or on either fide. Among contending titles, the question can only be determined by the fword, and by devastation, and by civil war.

A prince, who fills the throne with a diffuted title, dares not arm his fubjects; the only method of fecuring a people fully, both against domestic oppression and fureign conquest.

Notwithstanding our riches and renown, what a critical escape did we make, by the late peace, from dangers, which were owing not fo much to bad conduct and ill fuccess in war, as to the pernicious practice of mortgaging our finances, and the still more pernicious maxim of never paying off our incumbrances ? Such fatal meafures would not probably have been embraced, had it not been to secure a precarious establishment.

But to convince us, that an hereditary title is to be embraced rather than a parliamentary one, which is not fupported by any other views or motives; a man needs only transport himself back to the zera of the restoration, and suppose, that he had had a feat in that parliament which recalled the royal family, and put a period to the greatest diforders that ever arose from the opposite pretenfions of prince and people. What would have been thought of one, that had proposed, at that time, to set afide CHARLES II. and fettle the crown on the Duke of YORK or GLOUCESTER, merely in order to exclude all high claims, like those of their father and grandfather? Would not fuch a one have been regarded as an extravagant projector, who loved dangerous remedies, and could tamper and play with a government and national constitution, like a quack with a fickly patient?

Įą

Of the PROTESTANT SUCCESSION. 519

In reality, the reason affigned by the nation for excluding the race of STUART, and so many other branches of the royal family, is not on account of their hereditary title (a reason, which would, to vulgar apprehensions, have appeared altogether absurd), but on account of their religion. Which leads us to compare the disadvantages above mentioned in each establishment.

I confels, that, confidering the matter in general, it were much to be wifhed, that our prince had no foreign dominions, and could confine all his attention to the government of this island. For not to mention fome real inconveniencies that may refult from territories on the continent, they afford fuch a handle for calumny and defamation, as is greedily feized by the people, always disposed to think ill of their superiors. It must, however, be acknowledged, that HANOVER, is, perhaps, the fpot of ground in EUROPE the least inconvenient for a King of ENGLAND. It lies in the heart of GERMANY. at a distance from the great powers, which are our natural rivals: It is protected by the laws of the empire, as well as by the arms of its own fovereign : And it ferves only to connect us more clofely with the house of Aus-TRIA, our natural ally.

The religious perfuation of the house of STUART is an inconvenience of a much deeper dye, and would threaten us with much more difmal confequences. The Roman Catholic religion, with its train of priefts and friars, is more expensive than ours: Even though unaccompanied with its natural attendants of inquisitors, and stakes, and gibbets, it is lefs tolerating: And not content with dividing the facerdotal from the regal office (which must be prejudicial to any state), it bestows the former on a foreigner, who has always a separate interest from that of the public, and may often have an opposite one.

Digitized by Google

But

L14

But were this religion ever fo advantageous to fociety, it is contrary to that which is effablished among us, and which is likely to keep possession, for a long time, of the minds of the people. And though it is much to be hoped, that the progress of reason will, by degrees, abate the acrimony of opposite religions all over EUROPE; yet the spirit of moderation has, as yet, made too flow advances to be entirely trufted.

Thus, upon the whole, the advantages of the fettlement in the family of STUART, which frees us from a diffuted title, feem to bear fome proportion with those of the fettlement in the family of HANOVER, which frees us from the claims of prerogative: But at the fame time, its difadvantages, by placing on the throne a Roman Catholic, are greater than those of the other effablishment, in fettling the crown on a foreign prince. What party an impartial patriot, in the reign of K. WILLIAM or Q. ANNE, would have chosen amidst these opposite views, may, perhaps, to fome appear hard to determine.

But the fettlement in the house of HANOVER has actually taken place. The princes of that family, without intrigue, without cabal, without folicitation on their part, have been called to mount our throne, by the united voice of the whole legislative body. They have, fince their acceffion, displayed, in all their actions, the utmost mildness, equity, and regard to the laws and conflictution. Our own ministers, our own parliaments, ourselves have governed us; and if aught ill has befallen us, we can only blame fortune or ourselves. What a reproach must we become among nations, if, disgusted with a fettlement fo deliberately made, and whose conditions have been fo religiously observed, we should throw every thing again into confusion; and by our levity and rebellious disposition.

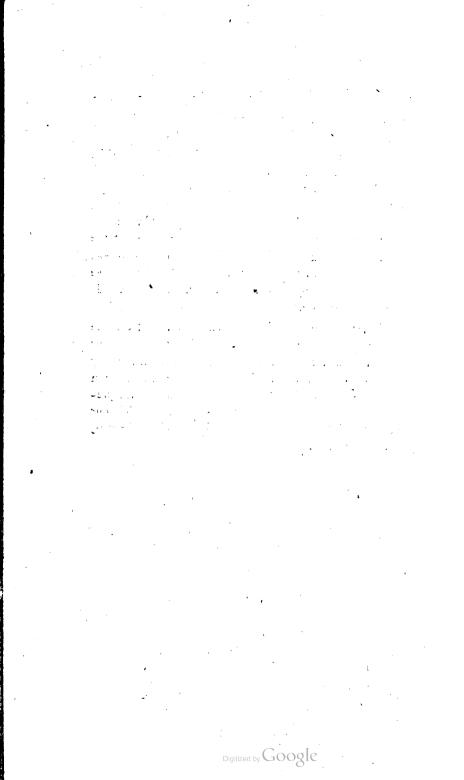

T

Of the PROTESTANT SUCCESSION. 521

fition, prove ourfelves totally unfit for any flate but that of abfolute flavery and fubjection?

The greatest inconvenience, attending a disputed title, is, that it brings us in danger of civil wars and rebellions. What wise man, to avoid this inconvenience, would run directly into a civil war and rebellion ? Not to mention, that so long possession, fecured by so many laws, must, ere this time, in the apprehension of a great part of the nation, have begotten a title in the house of HANOVER, independent of their present possession: So that now we should not, even by a revolution, obtain the end of avoiding a disputed title.

No revolution made by national forces, will ever be able, without fome other great neceffity, to abolifh our debts and incumbrances, in which the intereft of fo many perfons is concerned. And a revolution made by foreign forces, is a conqueft: A calamity, with which the precarious balance of power threatens us, and which our civil differitions are likely, above all other circumstances, to bring upon us.

ESSAY XVI.

IDEA of a PERFECT COMMONWEALTH.

T is not with forms of government, as with other artificial contrivances; where an old engine may be rejected, if we can discover another more accurate and commodious, or where trials may fafely be made, even though the fuccess be doubtful. An established government has an infinite advantage, by that very circumffance of its being established; the bulk of mankind being governed by authority, not reason, and never attributing authority to any thing that has not the recommendation of antiquity. To tamper, therefore, in this affair, or try experiments merely upon the credit of fuppofed argument and philosophy, can never be the part of a wife magistrate, who will bear a reverence to what carries the marks of age; and though he may attempt fome improvements for the public good, yet will he adjust his innovations, as much as possible, to the ancient fabric. and preferve entire the chief pillars and supports of the conftitution.

The mathematicians in EUROPE have been much divided concerning that figure of a fhip, which is the moft commodious for failing; and HUYGENS, who at laft determined the controverfy, is juftly thought to have obliged the learned, as well as commercial world; though COLUMBUS

524

ESSAY XVI.

COLUMBUS had failed to AMERICA, and Sir FRANCIS DRAKE made the tour of the world, without any fuch discovery. As one form of government must be allowed more perfect than another, independent of the manners and humours of particular men; why may we not enquire what is the most perfect of all, though the common botched and inaccurate governments feem to ferve the purpofes of fociety, and though it be not fo eafy to eftablifh a new system of government, as to build a vessel upon a new construction ? The subject is surely the most worthy curiofity of any the wit of man can poffibly devife. And who knows, if this controverly were fixed by the universal confent of the wife and learned, but, in some future age, an opportunity might be afforded of reducing the theory to practice, either by a diffolution of some old government, or by the combination of men to form a new one, in fome diftant part of the world? In all rafes, it must be advantageous to know what is most perfect in the kind, that we may be able to bring any real conflitution or form of government as near it as polfible, by fuch gentle alterations and innovations as may not give too great diffurbance to fociety.

All I pretend to in the prefent effay is, to revive this fubject of fpeculation; and therefore I fhall deliver my fentiments in as few words as poffible. A long differtation on that head would not, I apprehend, be very acceptable to the public, who will be apt to regard fuch difquifitions both as ufelefs and chimerical.

All plans of government, which fuppofe great reformation in the manners of mankind, are plainly imaginary. Of this nature, are the Republic of PLATO, and the Utopia of Sir THOMAS MORE. The OCEANA is the only valuable model of a commonwealth, that has yet been offered to the public.

Digitized by Google

The

IDEA of a PERFECT COMMONWEALTH. 525

The chief defects of the OCEANA feem to be thefe. First. Its rotation is inconvenient, by throwing men, of whatever abilities, by intervals, out of public employment. Secondly, Its Agrarian is impracticable. Men will foon learn the art,' which was practifed in ancient ROME, of concealing their possessions under other people's name; till at laft, the abufe will become fo common, that they will throw off even the appearance of reftraint. Thirdly, The OCEANA provides not a fufficient fecurity for liberty, or the redrefs of grievances. The fenate must propose, and the people confent; by which means, the fenate have not only a negative upon the people, but, what is of much greater confequence, their negative goes before the votes of the people. Were the King's negative of the fame nature in the ENGLISH conflitution, and could he prevent any bill from coming into parliament, he would be an absolute monarch. As his negative follows the votes of the houses, it is of little confequence: Such a difference is there in the manner of placing the fame thing. When a popular bill has been debated in parliament, is brought to maturity, all its conveniencies and inconveniencies, weighed and balanced; if afterwards it be presented for the royal affent. few princes will venture to reject the unanimous defire of the people. But could the King cruth a difagreeable bill in embryo (as was the cafe, for fome time, in the SCOTTISH parliament, by means of the lords of the articles), the BRITISH government would have no balance. nor would grievances ever be redreffed : And it is certain, that exorbitant power proceeds not, in any government from new laws, fo much as from neglecting to remedy the abuses, which frequently rife from the old ones. A government, fays MACHIAVEL, must often be brought back to its original principles. It appears then,

that.

Digitized by Google

526 ESSAY XVI.

that, in the OCEANA, the whole legislature may be faid to reft in the fenate; which HARRINGTON would own to be an inconvenient form of government, especially after the Agrarian is abolished.

Here is a form of government, to which I cannot, in theory, difcover any confiderable objection.

Let GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND, or any territory of equal extent, be divided into 100 counties, and each county into 100 parifhes, making in all 10,000. If the country, proposed to be erected into a commonwealth be of more narrow extent, we may diminish the number of counties; but never bring them below thirty. If it be of greater extent, it were better to enlarge the parishes, or throw more parishes into a county, than encrease the number of counties.

Let all the freeholders of twenty pounds a-year in the county, and all the householders worth 500 pounds in the town parishes, meet annually in the parish church, and chuse, by ballot, fome freeholder of the county for their member, whom we shall call the county representative.

Let the 100 county reprefentatives, two days after their election, meet in the county town, and chufe by ballot, from their own body, ten county magisfrates, and one fenator. There are, therefore, in the whole commonwealth, 100 fenators, 1100 county magisfrates, and 10,000 county reprefentatives. For we shall bestow on all fenators the authority of county magisfrates, and on all county magisfrates the authority of county representatives.

Let the fenators meet in the capital, and be endowed with the whole executive power of the commonwealth; the power of peace and war, of giving orders to generals, admirals. IDEA of a PERFECT COMMONWEALTH. 527 admirals, and ambassiadors, and, in short, all the prerogatives of a BRITISH King, except his negative.

Let the county representatives meet in their particular. counties, and posses the whole legislative power of the commonwealth; the greater number of counties deciding the question; and where these are equal, let the senate have the caffing vote.

Every new law must first be debated in the fenate; and though rejected by it, if ten fenators infift and protest, it must be fent down to the counties. The fenate, if they please, may join to the copy of the law their reasons for receiving or rejecting it.

Becaufe it would be troublefome to affemble all the county reprefentatives for every trivial law, that may be requifite, the fenate have their choice of fending down the law either to the county magistrates or county reprefentatives.

The magiftrates, though the law be referred to them, may, if they pleafe, call the reprefentatives, and fubmit the affair to their determination.

Whether the law be referred by the fenate to the county magiftrates or reprefentatives, a copy of it, and of the fenate's reasons, muft be fent to every reprefentative eight days before the day appointed for the affembling, in order to deliberate concerning it. And though the determination be, by the fenate, referred to the magiftrates, if five reprefentatives of the county order the magiftrates to affemble the whole court of reprefentatives, and submit the affair to their determination, they muft obey.

Either the county magistrates or representatives may give, to the fenator of the county, the copy of a law to be proposed to the senate; and if five counties concur in

Digitized by Google

the

528 ESSAY XVI.

the fame order, the law, though refused by the fenate, must come either to the county magistrates or representatives, as is contained in the order of the five counties.

Any twenty counties, by a vote either of their magifirates or representatives, may throw any man out of all public offices for a year. Thirty counties for three years.

The fenate has a power of throwing out any member or number of members of its own body, not to be reelected for that year. The fenate cannot throw out twice in a year the fenator of the fame county.

The power of the old fenate continues for three weeks after the annual election of the county reprefentatives. Then all the new fenators are flut up in a conclave, like the cardinals; and by an intricate ballot, fuch as that of VENICE or MALTA, they chufe the following magifirates; a protector, who reprefents the dignity of the commonwealth, and prefides in the fenate; two fecretaries of flate; these fix councils, a council of flate, a council of religion and learning, a council of trade, a council of religion and learning a council of the admiralty, each council confifting of five perfons; together with fix commiffioners of the treafury and a first commiffioner. All these must be fenators. The fenate alfo names all the ambaffadors to foreign courts, who may either be fenators or not.

The fenate may continue any or all of thefe, but must re-elect them every year.

The protector and two fecretaries have feffion and fuffrage in the council of ftate. The bufine's of that council is all foreign politics. The council of ftate has feffion and fuffrage in all the other councils.

The

Digitized by Google

IDEA of a Perfect Commonwealth. 529

The council of religion and learning infpects the universities and clergy. That of trade inspects every thing that may affect commerce. That of laws infpects all the abuses of law by the inferior magistrates, and examines what improvements may be made of the municipal law. That of war inspects the militia and its difcipline, magazines, ftores, &c. and when the republic is in war, examines into the proper orders for generals. The council of admiralty has the fame power with regard to the navy, together with the nomination of the captains and all inferior officers.

None of these councils can give orders themselves, except where they receive fuch powers from the fenate. In other cafes, they must communicate every thing to the fenate.

When the fenate is under adjournment, any of the councils may allemble it before the day appointed for its meeting.

Besides these councils or courts, there is another called the court of competitors; which is thus conftituted. If any candidates for the office of fenator have more votes than a third of the representatives, that candidate, who has most votes, next to the senator elected, becomes incapable for one year of all public offices, even of being a magistrate or representative : But he takes his feat in the court of competitors. Here then is a court which may fometimes confift of a hundred members, fometimes have no members at all; and by that means, be for a year abolifhed.

The court of competitors has no power in the commonwealth. It has only the infpection of public accounts, and the accusing of any man before the fenate. If the fenate acquit him, the court of competitors may, if they pleafe,

VOL. I.

Μm

pleafe, appeal to the people, either magiftrates or reprefentatives. Upon that appeal, the magiftrates or reprefentatives meet on the day appointed by the court of competitors, and chufe in each county three perfons; from which number every fenator is excluded. Thefe, to the number of 300, meet in the capital, and bring the perfon accufed to a new trial.

The court of competitors may propose any law to the fenate; and if refused, may appeal to the people, that is, to the magistrates or representatives, who examine it in their counties. Every fenator, who is thrown out of the fenate by a vote of the court, takes his feat in the court of competitors.

The fenate possel of the judicative authority of the house of Lords, that is, all the appeals from the inferior courts. It likewise appoints the Lord Chancellor, and all the officers of the law.

Every county is a kind of republic within itfelf, and the reprefentatives may make bye-laws; which have no authority 'till three months after they are voted. A copy of the law is fent to the fenate, and to every other county. The fenate, or any fingle county, may, at any time, annul any bye-law of another county.

The representatives have all the authority of the BRI-TISH justices of peace in trials, commitments, &c.

The magistrates have the appointment of all the officers of the revenue in each county. All caufes with regard to the revenue are carried ultimately by appeal before the magistrates. They pass the accompts of all the officers; but must have their own accompts examined and passed at the end of the year by the representatives.

Digitized by Google

The

IDEA OF a PERFECT COMMONWEALTH. 531

The magistrates name rectors or ministers to all the parishes.

The Prefbyterian government is eftablished; and the highest ecclesiaftical court is an assembly or synod of all the prefbyters of the county. The magistrates may take any cause from this court, and determine it themfelves.

The magistrates may try; and depose or suspend any presbyter.

The militia is eftablished in imitation of that of SWIS-SERLAND, which being well known, we shall not infift upon it. It will only be proper to make this addition, that an army of 20,000 men be annually drawn out by rotation, paid and encamped during fix weeks in fummer; that the duty of a camp may not be altogether unknown.

The magiftrates appoint all the colonels and downwards. The fenate all upwards. During war, the general appoints the colonel and downwards, and his commiffion is good for a twelvemonth. But after that, it must be confirmed by the magistrates of the county, to which the regiment belongs. The magistrates may break any officer in the county regiment. And the fenate may do the fame to any officer in the fervice. If the magistrates do not think proper to confirm the general's choice, they may appoint another officer in the place of him they reject.

All crimes are tried within the county by the magiftrates and a jury. But the fenate can ftop any trial, and bring it before themselves.

Any county may indict any man before the fenate for any crime.

The

532 E S S A Y XVI.

The protector, the two fecretaries, the council of fatc, with any five or more that the fenate appoints, are possibled, on extraordinary emergencies, of dictatorial power for fix months.

The protector may pardon any perfon condemned by the inferior courts.

In time of war, no officer of the army that is in the field can have any civil office in the commonwealth.

The capital, which we fhall call LONDON, may be allowed four members in the fenate. It may therefore be divided into four counties. The reprefentatives of each of these chuse one fenator, and ten magisfrates. There are therefore in the city four fenators, forty-four magistrates, and four hundred representatives. The magistrates have the fame authority as in the counties. The representatives also have the fame authority; but they never meet in one general court: They give their votes in their particular county, or division of hundreds.

When they enact any bye-law, the greater number of counties or divisions determines the matter. And where these are equal, the magisfrates have the casting vote.

The magistrates chuse the mayor, sheriff, recorder, and other officers of the city.

'In the commonwealth, no representative, magisfrate, or fenator, as such, has any falary. The protector, secretaries, councils, and ambassadors, have falaries.

The first year in every century is set apart for correcting all inequalities, which time may have produced in the representative. This must be done by the legislature.

The following political aphorifms may explain the reason of these orders.

The

IDEA OF a PERFECT COMMONWEALTH. 533

The lower fort of people and fmall proprietors are good judges enough of one not very diftant from them in rank or habitation; and therefore, in their parochial meetings, will probably chufe the beft, or nearly the beft reprefentative: But they are wholly unfit for countymeetings, and for electing into the higher offices of the republic: Their ignorance gives the grandees an opportunity of deceiving them.

Ten thousand, even though they were not annually elected, are a basis large enough for any free government. It is true, the nobles in POLAND are more than 10,000, and yet these oppress the people. But as power always continues there in the fame perfons and families, this makes them, in a manner, a different nation from the people. Besides the nobles are there united under a few heads of families.

All free governments muft confift of two councils, a leffer and greater; or, in other words, of a fenate and people. The people, as HARRINGTON observes, would want wisdom, without the fenate: The fenate, without the people, would want honefty.

A large affembly of 1000, for inftance, to reprefent the people, if allowed to debate, would fall into diforder. If not allowed to debate, the fenate has a negative upon them, and the worft kind of negative, that before refolution.

Here therefore is an inconvenience, which no government has yet fully remedied, but which is the eafieft to be remedied in the world. If the people debate, all is confusion: If they do not debate, they can only refolve; and then the fenate carves for them. Divide the people into many feparate bodies; and then they may M m 3 debate debate with fafety, and every inconvenience feems to be prevented.

Digitized by Google

534 ESSAY XVI.

Cardinal de RETZ fays, that all numerous affemblies, however composed, are mere mob, and fwayed in their debates by the least motive. This we find confirmed by daily experience. When an absurdity firikes a member, he conveys it to his neighbour, and so on, till the whole be infected. Separate this great body; and though every member be only of middling fense, it is not probable, that any thing but reason can prevail over the whole. Influence and example being removed, good fense will always get the better of bad among a number of people.

There are two things to be guarded againft in every fenate: Its combination, and its division. Its combination is most dangerous. And against this inconvenience we have provided the following remedies. I. The great dependence of the fenators on the people by annual elections; and that not by an undistinguishing rabble, like the ENGLISH electors, but by men of fortune and education. 2. The small power they are allowed. They have few offices to dispose of. Almost all are given by the magistrates in the counties. 3. The court of competitors, which being composed of men that are their rivals, next to them in interest, and uneasy in their prefent fituation, will be fure to take all advantages against them.

The division of the fenate is prevented, 1. By the fmallnefs of their number. 2. As faction fuppoles a combination in a feparate intereft, it is prevented by their dependence on the people. 3. They have a power of expelling any factious member. It is true, when another member of the fame fpirit comes from the county, they have no power of expelling him: Nor is it fit they fhould; fhould; for that fhows the humour to be in the people, and may poffibly arife from fome ill conduct in public affairs. 4. Almost any man, in a fenate fo regularly chofen by the people, may be supposed fit for any civil It would be proper, therefore, for the fenate to office. form fome general refolutions with regard to the difpoling of offices among the members : Which refolutions would not confine them in critical times, when extraordinary parts on the one hand, or extraordinary flupidity on the other, appears in any fenator; but they would be fufficient to prevent intrigue and faction, by making the disposal of the offices a thing of course. For instance, let it be a refolution, That no man shall enjoy any office, till he has fat four years in the fenate: That, except ambassadors, no man shall be in office two years following: That no man shall attain the higher offices but through the lower: That no man shall be protector twice, The fenate of VENICE govern themfelves by fuch છેત. resolutions.

IDEA of a Perfect Commonwealth, 535

In foreign politics the intereft of the fenate can fcarcely ever be divided from that of the people; and therefore it is fit to make the fenate abfolute with regard to them; otherwife there could be no fecrecy or refined policy. Befides, without money no alliance can be executed; and the fenate is ftill fufficiently dependant. Not to mention, that the legiflative power being always fuperior to the executive, the magiftrates or reprefentatives may interpofe whenever they think proper,

The chief fupport of the BRITISH government is the opposition of interests: but that, though in the main ferviceable, breeds endless factions. In the foregoing plan, it does all the good without any of the harm. The competitors have no power of controlling the fonate: M m 4 They

Digitized by Google

536

They have only the power of accufing, and appealing to the people.

It is neceffary, likewife, to prevent both combination and division in the thousand magistrates. This is done fufficiently by the separation of places and interests.

But left that fhould not be fufficient, their dependence on the 10,000 for their elections, ferves to the fame purpofe.

Nor is that all: For the 10,000 may refume the power whenever they pleafe; and not only when they all pleafe, but when any five of a hundred pleafe, which will happen upon the very first fuspicion of a feparate interest.

The 10,000 are too large a body either to unite or divide, except when they meet in one place, and fall under the guidance of ambitious leaders. Not to mention their annual election, by the whole body of the people, that are of any confideration.

A fmall commonwealth is the happieft government in the world within itfelf, becaufe every thing lies under the eye of the rulers: But it may be fubdued by great force from without. This fcheme feems to have all the advantages both of a great and a little commonwealth.

Every county-law may be annulled either by the fenate or another county; becaufe that fhows an oppolition of intereft: In which cafe no part ought to decide for itfelf. The matter muft be referred to the whole, which will beft determine what agrees with general intereft.

As to the clergy and militia, the reafons of thefe orders are obvious. Without the dependence of the clergy on the civil magiftrates, and without a militia, it is in vain to think that any free government will ever have fecurity or flability.

Digitized by Google

In

IDEA of a PERFECT COMMONWEALTH. 537

In many governments, the inferior magistrates have no. rewards but what arife from their ambition, vanity, or The falaries of the FRENCH judges amount public foirit. not to the interest of the sums they pay for their offices. The DUTCH burgo-mafters have little more immediate profit than the ENGLISH justices of peace, or the members of the house of commons formerly. But left any should fuspect, that this would beget negligence in the adminiftration (which is little to be feared, confidering the natural ambition of mankind), let the magistrates have competent falaries. The fenators have access to fo many honourable and lucrative offices, that their attendance There is little attendance required needs hot be bought. of the representatives.

That the foregoing plan of government is practicable, no one can doubt, who confiders the refemblance that it bears to the commonwealth of the United Provinces, a wife and renowned government. The alterations in the prefent scheme seem all evidently for the better. T. The representation is more equal. 2. The unlimited power of the burgo-mafters in the towns, which forms a perfect aristocracy in the DUTCH commonwealth, is corrected by a well-tempered democracy, in giving to the people the annual election of the county reprefentatives. 3. The negative, which every province and town has upon the whole body of the DUTCH republic, with regard to alliances, peace and war, and the imposition of taxes, is here removed. 4. The counties, in the prefent plan, are not fo independent of each other, nor do they form feparate bodies fo much as the feven provinces; where the 'jealoufy and envy of the fmaller provinces and towns against the greater, particularly HOLLAND and AMSTER-DAM, have frequently diffurbed the government. 5. Larger powers, though of the fafeft kind, are intrufted to

to the fenate than the States-General poffefs; by which means, the former may become more expeditious and fecret in their refolutions, than it is poffible for the latter.

The chief alterations that could be made on the BRI-TISH government, in order to bring it to the most perfect model of limited monarchy, feem to be the following. First, the plan of CROMWELL's parliament ought to be reftored, by making the reprefentation equal, and by allowing none to vote in the county elections who poffers not a property of 200 pounds value. Secondly, As fuch a house of Commons would be too weighty for a frail house of Lords, like the prefent, the Bishops and SCOTCH Peers ought to be removed: The number of the upper house ought to be raifed to three or four hundred : Their feats not hereditary, but during life : They ought to have the election of their own members; and no commoner fhould be allowed to refuse a feat that was offered him. By this means the house of Lords would confist entirely of the men of chief credit, abilities, and interest in the nation; and every turbulent leader in the house of Commons might be taken off, and connected by interest with the houfe of Peers. Such an ariftocracy would be an excellent barrier both to the monarchy and against it. At present, the balance of our government depends in some measure on the abilities and behaviour of the fovereign ; which are variable and uncertain circumstances.

This plan of limited monarchy, however corrected, feems still liable to three great inconveniences. First, It removes not entirely, though it may soften, the parties of court and country. Secondly, The king's personal character must still have great influence on the government. Thirdly, The sword is in the hands of a single person, who

538

Digitized by Google

IDEA of a PERFECT COMMONWEALTH. 539

who will always neglect to difcipline the militia, in order to have a pretence for keeping up a flanding army.

We shall conclude this subject, with observing the falfehood of the common opinion, that no large state, such as FRANCE or GREAT BRITAIN, could ever be modelled into a commonwealth, but that fuch a form of government can only take place in a city or fmall territory. The contrary feems probable. Though it is more difficult to form a republican government in an extensive country than in a city; there is more facility, when once it is formed, of preferving it fleady and uniform, without tumult and It is not easy, for the distant parts of a large faction. state to combine in any plan of free government; but they eafily confpire in the efferem and reverence for a fingle perfon, who, by means of this popular favour, may feize the power, and forcing the more obstinate to submit, may eftablish a monarchical government. On the other hand, a city readily concurs in the fame notions of government. the natural equality of property favours liberty, and the nearnefs of habitation enables the citizens mutually to affist each other. Even under absolute princes, the fubordinate government of cities is commonly republican ; while that of counties and provinces is monarchical. But these fame circumstances, which facilitate the erection of commonwealths in cities, render their conftitution more frail and uncertain. Democracies are turbulent. For however the people may be separated or divided into fmall parties, either in their votes or elections; their near habitation in a city will always make the force of popular tides and currents very fenfible. Aristocracies are better adapted for peace and order, and accordingly were most admired by ancient writers; but they are jealous and oppreffive. In a large government, which is modelled with masterly skill, there is compass and room enough enough to refine the democracy, from the lower people who may be admitted into the first elections or first concoction of the commonwealth, to the higher magistrates, who direct all the movements. At the fame time, the parts are so distant and remote, that it is very difficult, either by intrigue, prejudice, or passion, to hurry them into any measures against the public interest.

540 ESSAY XVI.

It is needless to enquire, whether fuch a government would be immortal. I allow the justness of the poet's exclamation on the endless projects of human race, Man and for ever ! The world itself probably is not immortal. Such confuming plagues may arife as would leave even a perfect government a weak prey to its neighbours. We know not to what length enthusiasm, or other extraordinary movements of the human mind, may transport men. to the neglect of all order and public good. Where difference of interest is removed, whimfical and unaccountable factions often arife, from perfonal favour or enmity. Perhaps, ruft may grow to the fprings of the most accurate political machine, and diforder its motions. Laftly, extensive conquests, when pursued, must be the ruin of every free government; and of the more perfect governments fooner than of the imperfect; becaufe of the very advantages which the former posses above the And though fuch a flate ought to establish a funlatter. damental law against conquests; yet republics have ambition as well as individuals, and prefent interest makes men forgetful of their posterity. It is a sufficient incitement to human endeavours, that fuch a government would flourish for many ages ; without pretending to bestow, on any work of man, that immortality, which the Almighty feems to have refused to his own productions.

т.

Digitized by Google

(541)

N O T E S

TO THE

FIRST VOLUME.

NOTE [A], p. 20.

HAVE taken it for granted, according to the fuppofition of MACHIAVEL, that the ancient PERSIANS had no nobility : though there is reason to suspect, that the FLORENTINE fecretary, who feems to have been better acquainted with the ROMAN than the GREEK authors, was mistaken in this particular. The more ancient PERSIANS, whose manners are defcribed by XENOPHON, were a free people, and had nobility. Their oportions were preferved even after the extending of their conquefts and the confequent change of their government. ARRIAN mentions them in DARIUS's time, De exped. ALEX. lib. ii. Hiftorians also speak often of the persons in command as men of family. TYGRANES, who was general of the MEDES under XERXES, was of the race of ACHMENES, HEROD. lib. vii. cap. 62. ARTACHEAS, who directed the cutting of the canal about mount ATHOS, was of the fame family. Id.cap. 117. MEGABYZUS was one of the feven eminent PERSIANS who confpired against the MAGI. His fon, ZOPYRUS, was in the higheft command under DARIUS, and delivered BABYLON to him. His grandson, MEGABYZUS, commanded the army, defeated at MARATHON. His great-grandson, ZOPYRUS, was also eminent, and was banished PERSIA. HEROD. lib. iii. THUC. lib.i. ROSACES, who commanded an army in EGYPT under ARTAXERXES, was also descended from one of the seven conspirators, DIOD. SIC. lib. xvi. AGESILAUS, in XENO-PHON, Hift. GRÆC. lib. iv. being defirous of making a marriage riage betwixt king Corvs his ally, and the daughter of SFITHRIDATES, a PERSIAN of rank, who had deserted to him. first asks Corrs what family SPITHRIDATES is of. One of the most confiderable in PERSIA, says Corvs. ARIÆUS, when offered the fovereignty by CLEARCHUS and the ten thoufand GREEKS, refused it as of too low a rank, and faid, that fo many eminent PERSIANS would never endure his rule. Id. de Some of the families descended from the seven exped. lib. ii. PERSIANS above mentioned remained during allALEXANDER'S fucceffors; and MITHRIDATES, in ANTIOCHUS's time, is faid by POLYBIUS to be defcended from one of them, lib. v. cap. 43. ARTABAZUS was effeemed; as ARRIAN fays, is TOLS TEWTORS And when ALEXANDER married in one day Tiegowy. lib. iii. So of his captains to PERSIAN women, his intention plainly was to ally the MACEDONIANS, with the most eminent PER-SIAN families. Id. lib. vii. DIODORUS SICULUS fays they were of the most noble birth in PERSIA, lib. xvii. The government of PERSIA was despotic, and conducted in many respects, after the eastern manner, but was not carried fo far as to extirpate all nobility, and confound all ranks and orders. It left men who were still great, by themselves and their family, independent of their office and commission. And the reason why the MACEDONIANS kept fo easily dominion over them was owing to other caufes eafy to be found in the hiftorians; though it must be owned that MACHIAVEL's reasoning is, in itfelf, just, however doubtful its application to the prefent cafe.

NOTE [B], p. 45.

B Y that influence of the crown, which I would juffify, I mean only that which arifes from the offices and honours that are at the difpofal of the crown. As to private bribery, it may be confidered in the fame light as the practice of employing fpies, which is fcarcely juftifiable in a good minister, and is infamous in a bad one: But to be a fpy, or to be corrupted, is always infamous under all ministers, and is to be regarded as a fhamelefs profitution. POLYBIUS juftly effecems the pecuniary influence of the fenate and cenfors to be one of the regular and conflictutional weights, which preferved the balance of the ROMAN government. Lib. vi. cap. 15.

NQTE

Digitized by Google

Notes to the FIRST VOLUME.

NOTE [C], p. 61.

SAY, in part; for it is a vulgar error to imagine, that the ancients were as great friends to toleration as the ENG. LISH or DUTCH are at prefent. The laws against external fuperstition, amongst the ROMANS, were as ancient as the time of the twelve tables; and the JEWS as well as CHRISTIANS were fometimes punished by them; though, in general, these laws were not rigoroufly executed. Immediately after the conquest of GAUL, they forbad all but the natives to be initiated into the religion of the DRUIDS; and this was a kind of perfecution. In about a century after this conquest, the emperor, CLAUDIUS, quite abolished that superstition by penal laws; which would have been a very grievous perfecution, if the imitation of the ROMAN manners had not, before-hand. weaned the GAULS from their ancient prejudices. SUETO-NIUS in vita CLAUDII. PLINY ascribes the abolition of the Druidical fuperfitions to TIBERIUS, probably becaufe that emperor had taken fome fleps towards reftraining them (lib. xxx. cap. i.). This is an inftance of the ufual caution and moderation of the ROMANS in fuch cafes; and very different from their violent and fanguinary method of treating the Christians. Hence we may entertain a fuspicion, that those furious perfecutions of Christianity were in fome measure owing to the imprudent zeal and bigotry of the first propagators of that fect : and Ecclefiattical history affords us many reasons to confirm this fuspicion.

NOTE [D], p. 109.

T HE orators formed the tafte of the ATHENIAN people, not the people of the orators. GORGIAS LEONTINUS was very taking with them, till they became acquainted with a better manner. His figures of fpeech, fays DIODORUS SICU-LUS, his antithefis, his 1000x72, his optiotrateuror, which are now defpifed, had a great effect upon the audience. Lib. xii. page 106. ex editione RHOD. It is in vain therefore for modern orators to plead the tafte of their hearers as an apology for their lame performances. It would be firange prejudice in favour of antiquity, not to allow a BRITISH parliament to be naturally

Digitized by Google

naturally fuperior in judgment and delicacy to an ATHENIAN mob.

NOTE [E], p. 126.

T F it be asked how we can reconcile to the foregoing prin-L ciples the happiness, riches, and good police of the CHI-NESE, who have always been governed by a monarch, and can fcarcely form an idea of a free government : I would anfwer. that though the CHINESE government be a pure monarchy, it is not, properly speaking, absolute. This proceeds from a peculiarity in the fituation of that country : They have no neighbours, except the TARTARS, from whom they were. in some measure, secured, at least seemed to be secured, by their famous wall, and by the great fuperiority of their numbers. By this means, military discipline has always been much neelected amongst them ; and their standing forces are mere militia, of the worft kind ; and unfit to suppress any general infurrection in countries fo extremely populous. The fword. therefore, may properly be faid to be always in the hands of the people, which is a fufficient restraint upon the monarch. and obliges him to lay his mandarins or governors of provinces under the reftraint of general laws, in order to prevent those rebellions, which we learn from hiftory to have been fo frequent and dangerous in that government. Perhaps, a pure monarchy of this kind, were it fitted for defence against foreign enemies, would be the best of all governments, as having both the tranquillity attending kingly power, and the moderation and liberty of popular affemblies.

NOTE [F], p. 179.

W ERE I not afraid of appearing too philofophical, I fhould remind my reader of that famous doftrine, fuppofed to be fully proved in modern times, "That tailes and "colours, and all other fenfible qualities, lie not in the "bodies, but merely in the fenfes." The cafe is the fame with beauty and deformity, virtue and vice. This doftrine, however, takes off no more from the reality of the latter qualities, than from that of the former; nor need it give any umbrage either to critics or moralifts. Though colours were allowed to lie only in the eye, would dyers or painters ever be lefs regarded or effected? There is a fufficient uniformity in the Notes to the FIRST VOLUME.

the fenfes and feelings of mankind, to make all these qualities the objects of art and reasoning, and to have the greatest influence on life and manners. And as it is certain, that the discovery above-mentioned in natural philosophy, makes no alteration on action and conduct; why should a like discovery in moral philosophy make any alteration?

NOTE [G], p. 191.

T HE Sceptic, perhaps, carries the matter too far, when he limits all philosophical topics and reflections to these two. There seem to be others, whose truth is undeniable, and whose natural tendency is to tranquillize and soften all the passions. Philosophy greedily seizes these, studies them, weighs them, commits them to the memory, and familiarizes them to the mind: And their influence on tempers, which are thoughtful, gentle, and moderate, may be considerable. But what is their influence, you will fay, if the temper be antecedently disposed after the fame manner as that to which they pretend to form it? They may, at least, fortify that temper, and furnish it with views, by which it may entertain and nourish itself. Here are a few examples of such philosophical reflections.

1. Is it not certain, that every condition has concealed ills? Then why envy any body?

2. Every one has known ills; and there is a compensation throughout. Why not be contented with the prefent?

3. Cuftom deadens the fense both of the good and the ill, and levels every thing.

4. Health and humour all. The reft of little confequence, except these be affected.

5. How many other good things have I? Then why be vexed for one ill?

6. How many are happy in the condition of which I complain? How many envy me?

7. Every good must be paid for : Fortune by labour, favour by flattery. Would I keep the price, yet have the commodity?

8. Expect not too great happiness in life. Human nature admits it not.

Vol. I.

Digitized by Google

9. Propose

545

9. Propose not a happines too complicated. But does that depend on me? Yes: The first choice does. Life is like a game: One may choose the game: And passion, by degrees, feizes the proper object.

10. Anticipate by your hopes and fancy future confolation, which time infallibly brings to every affliction.

11. I defire to be rich. Why? That I may possess many fine objects; houses, gardens, equipage; &c. How many fine objects does nature offer to every one without expence? If enjoyed, fufficient. If not: See the effect of custom or of temper, which would foon take off the relish of the riches.

12. I defire fame. Let this occur : If I act well, I shall have the effeem of all my acquaintance. And what is all the rest to me?

These reflections are so obvious, that it is a wonder they occur not to every man : So convincing, that it is a wonder they perfuade not every man. But perhaps they do occur to and perfuade most men; when they confider human life, by a general and calm furvey : But where any real, affecting incident happens; when paffion is awakened, fancy agitated, example draws, and counfel urges; the philosopher is loft in the man, and he feeks in vain for that perfuation which before feemed to firm and unfhaken. What remedy for this inconvenience? Affift yourfelf by a frequent perufal of the entertaining moralists: Have recourse to the learning of PLU-TARCH, the imagination of LUCIAN, the eloquence of CICE-RO, the wit of SENECA, the gaiety of MONTAIGNE, the fublimity of SHAFTESBURY. Moral precepts, fo couched, frike deep, and fortify the mind against the illusions of passion. But truft not altogether to external aid : By habit and findy acquire that philosophical temper which both gives force to reflection, and by rendering a great part of your happiness independent, takes off the edge from all diforderly paffions, and tranquillizes the mind. Defpise not these helps; but confide not too much in them neither; unless nature has been favourable in the temper, with which fhe has endowed you.

Digitized by Google

NOTE

NOTE [H], p. 215.

T is a faying of MENANDER, Kould's spaliatry, is a ri $\pi\lambda\alpha\dot{\tau}$ by ∂_{α} Outify yinor $\dot{\alpha}$. MEN. apud STOBEUM. It is not in the power even of God to make a polite foldier. The contrary observation with regard to the manners of foldiers takes place in our days. This seems to me a prefumption, that the ancients owed all their refinement and civility to books and fludy; for which, indeed, a foldier's life is not fo well calculated. Company and the world is their sphere. And if there be any politeness to be learned from company, they will certainly have a confiderable share of it.

NOTE [I], p. 215.

HOUGH all mankind have a ftrong propensity to religion at certain times and in certain dispositions; yet are there few or none, who have it to that degree, and with that constancy, which is requisite to support the character of this profession. It must, therefore, happen, that clergymen, being drawn from the common mais of mankind, as people are to other employments, by the views of profit, the greater part, though no atheifts or free-thinkers, will find it necessary, on particular occasions, to feign more devotion than they are, at that time, possessed of, and to maintain the appearance of fervor and feriousness, even when jaded with the exercises of their religion, or when they have their minds engaged in the common occupations of life. They must not, like the rest of the world, give fcope to their natural movements and fentiments: They must fet a guard over their looks and words and actions: And in order to support the veneration paid them by the multitude, they must not only keep a remarkable referve, but must promote the spirit of superstition, by a continued grimace and hypocrify. This diffimulation often deftroys the candor and ingenuity of their temper, and makes an irreparable breach in their character.

If by chance any of them be posselled of a temper more furceptible of devotion than usual, fo that he has but little occafion for hypocrify to support the character of his profession; it is so natural for him to over-rate this advantage, and to think that it atones for every violation of morality, that frequently he is not more virtuous than the hypocrite. And though few dare openly avow those exploded opinions, that every thing is lawful to the faints, and that they alone have property in their goods; yet may we observe, that these principles lurk in every bosom, and represent a zeal for religious observances as so great a merit, that it may compensate for many vices and enormities. This observation is so common, that all prudent men are on their guard, when they meet with any extraordinary appearance of religion; though at the same time they confess, that there are many exceptions to this general rule, and that probity and superfit tion, or even probity and fanaticism, are not altogether and in every instance incompatible.

Nn 2

that

. 547

Most men are ambitious; but the ambition of other men may commonly be fatisfied, by excelling in their particular profession, and thereby promoting the interests of fociety. The ambition of the clergy can often be fatisfied only by promoting ignorance and superstition and implicit faith and pious frauds. And having got what ARCHIMEDES only wanted, (namely, another world, on which he could fix his engines) no wonder they move this world at their pleasure.

Most men have an overweaning conceit of themselves; but the/e have a peculiar temptation to that vice, who are regarded with fuch veneration, and are even deemed facred, by the ignorant multitude.

Most men are apt to bear a particular regard for members of their own profession; but as a lawyer, or physician, or merchant, does, each of them, follow out his business apart, the interests of men of these professions are not so closely united as the interests of clergymen of the fame religion; where the whole body gains by the veneration paid to their common tenets, and by the supression of antagonists.

Few men can bear contradiction with patience; but the clergy too often proceed even to a degree of fury on this head: Because all their credit and livelihood depend upon the belief, which their opinions meet with; and they alone pretend to a divine and supernatural authority, or have any colour for representing prefenting their antagonists as impious and prophane. The Odium Theologicum, or Theological Hatred, is noted even to a proverb, and means that degree of rancour, which is the most furious and implacable.

Revenge is a natural paffion to mankind; but feems to reign with the greateft force in priefts and women: Becaufe, being deprived of the immediate exertion of anger, in violence and combat, they are apt to fancy themfelves defpifed on that account; and their pride fupports their vindictive difposition.

Thus many of the vices of human nature are, by fixed moral caufes, inflamed in that profession; and though feveral individuals escape the contagion, yet all wife governments will be on their guard against the attempts of a fociety, who will for ever combine into one faction, and while it acts as a fociety, will for ever be actuated by ambition, pride, revenge, and a perfecuting spirit.

The temper of religion is grave and ferious; and this is the character required of priefts, which confines them to ftrict rules of decency, and commonly prevents irregularity and intemperance amongst them. The gaiety, much lefs the exceffes of pleafure, is not permitted in that body; and this virtue is, perhaps, the only one which they owe to their profession. In religions, indeed, founded on speculative principles, and where public discourses make a part of religious fervice, it may also be supposed that the clergy will have a confiderable state in the learning of the times; though it is certain that their taste in eloquence will always be greater than their proficiency in reasoning and philosophy. But whoever possession, as very many of them, no doubt, do, is beholden for them to nature or reflection, not to the genius of his calling.

It was no bad expedient in the old ROMANS, for preventing the firong effect of the prieftly character, to make it a law that no one should be received into the facerdotal office, till he was paft fifty years of age, DION. Hal. lib. i. The living a layman till that age, it is prefumed, would be able to fix the character.

NOTE

NOTE [K], p. 216.

ESAR (de Bello GALLICO, lib. i.) fays, that the GAL-LIC horfes were very good; the GERMAN very bad. We find in lib. vii. that he was obliged to mount fome GER-MAN cavalry with GALLIC horfes. At prefent, no part of EUROPE has fo bad horfes of all kinds as FRANCE : But GER-MANY abounds with excellent war horfes. This may beget a little fuspicion, that even animals depend not on the climate; but on the different breeds, and on the skill and care in rearing them. The north of ENGLAND abounds in the best horfes of all kinds which are perhaps in the world. In the neighbouring counties, north fide of the Tween, no good horses of any kind are to be met with. STRABO, lib. ii. rejects, in a great measure, the influence of climates upon men. All is cuftom and education, fays he. It is not from nature, that the ATHENIANS are learned, the LACEDEMONIANS ignorant, and the THEBANS too, who are still nearer neighbours to the former. Even the difference of animals, he adds, depends not on climate.

NOTE [L], p. 219.

A Small fect or fociety amidft a greater are commonly moft regular in their morals; becaufe they are more remarked, and the faults of individuals draw diffuonour on the whole. The only exception to this rule is, when the fuperflition and prejudices of the large fociety are fo firong as to throw an infamy on the fmaller fociety, independent of their morals. For in that cafe, having no character either to fave or gain, they become careless of their behaviour, except among themfelves.

NOTE [M], p. 222.

I Am apt to fuspect the negroes to be naturally inferior to the whites. There fearcely ever was a civilized nation of that complexion, nor even any individual eminent either in action or fpeculation. No ingenious manufactures amongst them, no arts, no feiences. On the other hand, the most rude and barbarous of the whites, fuch as the ancient GERMANS.

GERMANS, the prefent TARTARS, have still fomething eminent about them, in their valour, form of government, or fome other particular. Such a uniform and conflant difference could not happen, in fo many countries and ages, if nature had not made an original diffinction between these breeds of men. Not to mention our colonies, there are NEGROE flaves dispersed all over EUROPE, of whom none ever discovered any symptoms of ingenuity; though low people, without education, will start up amongst us, and diftinguish themselves in every profession. In JAMAICA, indeed, they talk of one negroe as a man of parts and learning; but it is likely he is admired for flender accomplifhments, like a parrot, who fpeaks a few words plainly.

NOTE [N], p. 235.

PAinters make no fcruple of representing diftress and forrow as well as any other of the second se as well as any other paffion : But they feem not to dwell fo much on these melancholy affections as the poets, who, though they copy every motion of the human breaft, yet pafs quickly over the agreeable fentiments. A painter reprefents only one inftant; and if that be paffionate enough, it is fure to affect and delight the spectator : But nothing can furnish to the poet a variety of scenes and incidents and sentiments. except diffress, terror, or anxiety. Complete joy and fatisfaction is attended with fecurity, and leaves no farther room for action.

NOTE [O], p. 275.

THE more ancient ROMANS lived in perpetual war with all their neighbours: And in old LATIN, the term boftis, expressed both a stranger and an enemy. This is remarked by CICERO; but by him is afcribed to the humanity of his anceftors, who foftened, as much as possible, the denomination of an enemy, by calling him by the fame appellation which fignified a stranger. De Off. lib. ii. It is however much more probable, from the manners of the times, that the ferocity of those people was fo great as to make them regard all strangers as enemies, and call them by the fame name. It is not, befides, confiftent with the most common maxims of policy or of nature, that any flate flould regard its public enemies

Nn4

Digitized by Google

55 L

mies with a friendly eye, or preferve any fuch fentiments for them as the ROMAN orator would afcribe to his anceftors. Not to mention, that the early ROMANS really exercifed piracy, as we learn from their first treaties with CARTHAGE, preferved by POLYBIUS, lib. iii. and confequently, like the SALLEE and ALGERINE rovers, were actually at war with most nations, and a stranger and an enemy were with them almost fynonymous.

NOTE [P], p. 300.

Private foldier in the ROMAN infantry had a denarius a day, fomewhat lefs than eightpence. The ROMAN emperors had commonly 25 legions in pay, which allowing 5000 men to a legion, makes 125,000. TACIT. Ann lib. iv. It is true, there were also auxiliaries to the legions; but their numbers are uncertain, as well as their pay. To confider only the legionaries, the pay of the private men could not exceed 1,600,000 pounds. Now, the parliament in the last war commonly allowed for the fleet 2,500,000. We have therefore 000,000 over for the officers and other expences of the ROMAN legions. There feem to have been but few officers in the Ro-MAN armies, in comparison of what are employed in all our modern troops, except some Swiss corps. And these officers had very fmall pay: A centurion, for inftance, only double a common foldier. And as the foldiers from their pay (TACIT. Ann. lib. i.) bought their own cloaths, arms, tents, and baggage; this must also diminish confiderably the other charges of the army. So little expensive was that mighty government, and fo eafy was its yoke over the world. And, indeed, this is the more natural conclusion from the foregoing calculations. For money, after the conquest of ÆGYPT, seems to have been nearly in as great plenty at ROME, as it is at prefent in the richeft of the EUROPEAN kingdoms.

NOTE [Q], p. 305.

T HESE facts I give upon the authority of Monf. du Tor in his Reflections politiques, an author of reputation. Though I must confers, that the facts which he advances on other occasions, are often to fulpicious, as to make his authority lefs in this matter. However, the general observation, that that the augmenting of the money in FRANCE does not at first proportionably augment the prices, is certainly just.

By the by, this feems to be one of the best reasons which can be given, for a gradual and univerfal encreafe of the denomination of money, though it has been entirely overlooked in all those volumes which have been written on that question by ME-LON, DU TOT, and PARIS de VERNEY. Were all our money. for instance, recoined, and a penny's worth of filver taken from every shilling, the new shilling would probably purchase every thing that could have been bought by the old; the prices of every thing would thereby be infenfibly diminished; foreign trade enlivened; and domeffic industry, by the circulation of a great number of pounds and shillings, would receive fome encrease and encouragement. In executing such a project, it would be better to make the new shilling pass for 24 halfpence, in order to preferve the illusion, and make it be taken for the fame. And as a recoinage of our filver begins to be fequifite, by the continual wearing of our shillings and finpences, it may be doubtful, whether we ought to imitate the example in King WILLIAM's reign, when the clipt money was raifed to the old standard.

NOTE [R], p. 333.

T must carefully be remarked, that throughout this dif-L courfe, wherever I speak of the level of money, I mean always its proportional level to the commodities, labour, induftry, and skill, which is in the feveral states. And I affert, that where these advantages are double, triple, quadruple, to what they are in the neighbouring flates, the money infallibly will also be double, triple, quadruple. The only circumstance that can obstruct the exactness of these proportions, is the expence of transporting the commodities from one place to another; and this expence is fometimes unequal. Thus the corn, cattle. cheefe, butter, of DERBYSHIRE, cannot draw the money of LONDON, fo much as the manufactures of LONDON draw the money of DERBYSHIRE. But this objection is only a feeming one : For fo far as the transport of commodities is expensive, so far is the communication between the places obftructed and imperfect.

Digitized by Google

NOTE

-NOTE [S], p. 384.

T Have heard it has been computed, that all the creditors of L the public, natives and foreigners, amount only to 17,000. These make a figure at present on their income; but in case of a public bankruptcy, would, in an inftant, become the loweft, as well as the most wretched of the people. The dignity and authority of the landed gentry and nobility is much better rooted; and would render the contention very unequal, if ever we come to that extremity. One would incline to affign to this event a very near period, fuch as half a century, had not our fathers' prophecies of this kind been already found fallacious, by the duration of our public credit fo much beyond all reafonable expectation. When the aftrologers in FRANCE were every year foretelling the death of HENRY IV. These fellows, fays he, must be right at last. We shall, therefore, be more cautious than to affign any precise date; and shall content ourselves with pointing out the event in general.

NOTE [T], p. 398.

COLUMELLA fays, lib. iii. cap. 8. that in ÆGYPT and AFRICA the bearing of twins was frequent, and even cuftomary; gemini partus familiares, ac pene folennes funt. If this was true, there is a phyfical difference both in countries and ages. For travellers make no fuch remarks on these countries at prefent. On the contrary, we are apt to fuppofe the northern nations more prolific. As those two countries were provinces of the ROMAN empire, it is difficult, though not altogether abfurd, to fuppofe that fuch a man as COLU-MELLA might be miftaken with regard to them.

NOTE [U], p. 404.

E^{PIST.} 122. The inhuman fports exhibited at ROME, may justly be confidered too as an effect of the people's contempt for flaves, and was alfo a great caufe of the general inhumanity of their princes and rulers. Who can read the accounts of the amphitheatrical entertainments without horror? Or who is furprifed, that the emperors flould treat that people in the fame way the people treated their inferiors? One's One's humanity is apt to renew the barbarous wifh of CA-LIGULA, that the people had but one neck: A man could almost be pleafed, by a fingle blow, to put an end to fuch a race of monsters. You may thank God. fays the author above cited, (epiff. 7.) addreffing himself to the Ro-MAN people, that you have a master (to wit the mild and merciful NERO) who is incapable of learning cruelty from your example. This was spoke in the beginning of his reign: But he fitted them very well asterwards; and, no doubt, was considerably improved by the fight of the barbarous objects, to which he had, from his infancy, been accustomed.

NOTE [X], p. 407.

S fervus was the name of the genus, and verna of the 1 fpecies, without any correlative, this forms a ftrong presumption, that the latter were by far the least numerous. It is an universal observation which we may form upon language, that where two related parts of a whole bear any proportion to each other, in numbers, rank or confideration, there are always correlative terms invented, which answer to both the parts, and express their mutual relation. If they bear no proportion to each other, the term is only invented for the lefs, and marks its diffinction from the whole. Thus man and woman, master and servant, father and son, prince and subject, firanger and citizen, are correlative terms. But the words feaman, carpenter, fmith, tailor, &c. have no correspondent terms, which express those who are no seamen, no carpenters, &c. Languages differ very much with regard to the particular words where this diffinction obtains; and may thence afford very firong inferences, concerning the manners. and cuftoms of different nations. The military government of the ROMAN emperors had exalted the foldiery fo high, that they balanced all the other orders of the flate : Hence miles and paganus became relative terms; a thing, till then, unknown to ancient, and still fo to modern languages. Modern fuperfitition exalted the clergy fo high, that they overbalanced the whole flate : Hence clergy and laity are terms opposed in all modern languages; and in these alone. And from the fame principles I infer, that if the number of flaves bought

by

by the ROMANS from foreign countries, had not extremely exceeded those which were bred at home, verna would have had a correlative, which would have expressed the former species of flaves. But these, it would seem, composed the main body of the ancient flaves, and the latter were but a few exceptions.

NOTE [Y], p. 410.

TON temerè ancillæ ejus rei causa comparantur ut " pariant." Digeft. lib. v. tit. 3. de hæred. petit. lex 27. The following texts are to the fame purpofe, " Spa-« donem morbofum non esse, neque vitiosum, verius mihi " videtur ; fed fanum effe, ficuti illum qui unum testiculum " habet, qui etiam generare potest." Digest. lib. ii. tit. 1. de ædilitio edicto, lex 6. § 2. " Sin autem quis ita spado fit, " ut tam necessaria pars corporis penitus absit, morbosus est." Id. lex 7. His impotence, it feems, was only regarded fo far as his health or life might be affected by it. In other respects, The fame reafoning is employed with he was full as valuable. regard to female flaves. " Quaritur de ea muliere qua fem-" per mortuos parit, an morbofa fit ? et ait Sabinus, fi vulvæ " vitio hoc contingit, morbofam effe." Id. lex 14. It had even been doubted, whether a woman pregnant was morbid or vitiated; and it is determined, that she is found, not on account of the value of her offspring, but because it is the natural part or office of women to bear children. " Si mulier " prægnans venerit, inter omnes convenit fanam eam este. " Maximum enim ac præcipuum munus fæminarum accipere " ac tueri conceptum. Puerperam quoque fanam effe; fi " modo nihil extrinfecus accedit, quod corpus ejus in aliquam " valetudinem immitteret. De sterili Cœlius distinguere " Trebatium dicit, ut si natura sterilis fit, sana sit; si vitio " corporis, contra." Id.

NOTE [Z], p. 416.

THE practice of feaving great fums of money to friends, though one had near relations, was common in GREECE, as well as ROME; as we may gather from LUCIAN. This practice prevails much lefs in modern times; and BEN JON-SON'S VOLPONE is therefore almost entirely extracted from ancient authors, and fuits better the manners of those times.

It

It may justly be thought, that the liberty of divorces in ROME was another difcouragement to marriage. Such a practice prevents not quarrels from humour, but rather encreases them; and occasions also those from interest, which are much more dangerous and destructive. See farther on this head. Part I. Eflay XVIII. Perhaps too the unnatural lufts of the ancients ought to be taken into confideration, as of some moment.

NOTE [AA], p. 420.

DLIN. lib. xviii. cap. 3. The fame author, in cap. 6. Says, Verumque fatentibus latifundia perdidere ITALIAM; iam vero et provincias. Sex domi semissem AFRICE possidebant, cum interfecit eos NERO princeps. In this view the barbarous butchery committed by the first ROMAN emperors, was not. perhaps, fo deftructive to the public as we may imagine. These never ceased till they had extinguished all the illustrious families, which had enjoyed the plunder of the world, during the latter ages of the republic. The new nobles who arofe in their place, were less splendid, as we learn from TACIT. Ann. lib. iii. cap. 55.

NOTE [BB], p. 426.

7 E shall mention from DIODORUS SICULUS alone a few maffacres, which paffed in the courfe of fixty years, during the most shining age of GREECE. There were banished from SYBARIS 500 of the nobles and their partizans; lib. xii. p. 77. ex edit. RHODOMANNI. Of CHIANS, 600 citizens banished ; lib. xiii. p. 189. At Ephesus, 340 killed, 1000 banished; lib. xiii. p. 223. Of CYRENIANS, 500 nobles killed, all the reft banished; lib. xiv. p. 263. The CORING THIANS killed 120, banished 500; lib. xiv. p. 304. PHE-BIDAS the SPARTAN banished 300 BEOTIANS; lib. xv. p. 342. Upon the fall of the LACEDEMONIANS, Democracics were reftored in many cities, and fevere vengeance taken of the nobles, after the GREEK manner. But matters did not end there. For the banished nobles, returning in many places, butchered their adversaries at PHIALE, in CORINTH, in MEGARA, in PHLIASIA. In this last place they killed

300

300 of the people; but thefe again revolting, killed above 600 of the nobles, and banished the reft; lib. xv. p. 357. In ARCADIA 1400 banished, besides many killed. The banifhed retired to SPARTA and to PALLANTIUM: The latter were delivered up to their countrymen, and all killed ; lib. xv. p. 373. Of the banished from ARGOS and THEBES, there were 500 in the SPARTAN army; id. p. 374. Here is a detail of the most remarkable of AGATHOCLES's cruelties from the fame author. The people before his usurpation had banished 600 nobles; lib. xix. p. 655. Afterwards that tyrant, in concurrence with the people, killed 4000 nobles, and banished 6000; id. p. 647. He killed 4000 people at GELA; id. p. 741. By AGATHOCLES's brother 8000 banished from SYRACUSE; lib. xx. p. 757. The inhabitants of ÆGESTA, to the number of 40,000, were killed, man, woman, and child; and with tortures, for the fake of their money; id, p. All the relations, to wit, father, brother, children, 802. grandfather, of his LIBYAN army, killed; id. p. 803. He killed 7000 exiles after capitulation ; id. p. 816. It is to be remarked, that AGATHOCLES was a man of great fense and courage, and is not to be fuspected of wanton cruelty, contrary to the maxims of his age.

NOTE [CC], p. 428.

I N order to recommend his client to the favour of the people, he enumerates all the fums he had expended. When $\chi_{\omega\varrho\eta\gamma\sigma\varsigma}$, 30 minas: Upon a chorus of men 20 minas; $\omega\sigma w v \varrho v \gamma \sigma \varsigma$, 30 minas; $\omega v \partial_{\varrho} \alpha \sigma i$ $\chi_{0\varrho\eta\gamma\omega\gamma}$, 50 minas; $\pi v \kappa \lambda i \pi \omega$ $\chi_{\omega\varrho\omega}$, 3 minas; Seven times trierarch, where he fpent 6 talents: Taxes, once 30 minas, another time 40; $\gamma v \mu v \alpha \sigma i \alpha \varrho \chi \omega \eta$, 12 minas; $\chi_{0\varrho\eta\gamma}$ \mathfrak{S} \mathfrak{S} and \mathfrak{S} $\mathfrak{S$

5

another

another place, he introduces a fpeaker, who fays that he had fpent his whole fortune, and an immenfe one, eighty talents, for the people. Orat. 25. de prob. EVANDRI. The µetroixon, or ftrangers, find, fays he, if they do not contribute largely enough to the people's fancy, that they have reason to repent it. Orat. 30. contra PHIL. You may fee with what care D-MOSTHENES displays his expences of this nature, when he pleads for himfelf de corona; and how he exaggerates MIDIAS's ftingines in this particular, in his accusation of that criminal. All this, by the by, is a mark of a very iniquitous judicature : And yet the ATHENIANS valued themsfelves on having the most legal and regular administration of any people in GREECE.

NOTE [DD], p. 429.

• HE authorities above cited, are all historians, orators, and philosophers, whose testimony is unquestioned. It is dangerous to rely upon writers who deal in ridicule and fatire. What will posterity, for instance, infer from this paffage of Dr. Swirt : " I told him, that in the kingdom of " TRIBNIA (BRITAIN) by the natives called LANGDON " (LONDON) where I had fojourned fome time in my travels. " the bulk of the people confift, in a manner, wholly of " discoverers, witnesses, informers, accusers, profecutors, " evidences, fwearers, together with their feveral fubfervient " and fubaltern inftruments, all under the colours, the con-" duct, and pay of ministers of state and their deputies. " The plots in that kingdom are usually the workmanship " of those perfons," &c. GULLIVER's travels. Such a reprefentation might fuit the government of ATHENS; not that of ENGLAND, which is remarkable, even in modern times. for humanity, justice, and liberty. Yet the Doctor's fatire. though carried to extremes, as is usual with him, even beyond other fatirical writers, did not altogether want an object. The Bishop of ROCHESTER, who was his friend, and of the fame party, had been banished a little before by bill of attainder, with great justice, but without fuch proof as was legal, or according to the first forms of common law.

NOTE

NOTE [EE], p. 438.

I N general, there is more candour and fincerity in ancient historians, but lefs exactnefs and care, than in the moderns. Our speculative factions, especially those of religion, throw such an illusion over our minds, that men seem to regard impartiality to their adversaries and to heretics, as a vice or weakness: But the commonness of books, by means of printing, has obliged modern historians to be more careful in avoiding contradictions and incongruities. DIODORUS SICULUS is a good writer, but it is with pain I see his narration contradict, in fo many particulars, the two most authentic pieces of all GREEK history, to wit, XENOPHON'S expedition, and DEMOSTHENES'S orations. PLUTARCH and APPIAN feem fcarce ever to have read CICERO'S epifiles.

NOTE [FF], p. 440.

PLINY, lib. vii. cap. 25. fays, that CÆSAR used to boaft, that there had fallen in battle against him one million one hundred and ninety-two thousand men, besides those who perished in the civil wars. It is not probable, that that conqueror could ever pretend to be so exact in his computation. But allowing the fact, it is likely, that the HELVETII, GER-MANS, and BRITONS, whom he flaughtered, would amount to near a half of the number.

NOTE [GG], p. 444.

W E are to observe, that when DIONYSIUS HALYCAR-NASSEUS fays, that if we regard the ancient walls of ROME, the extent of that city will not appear greater than that of ATHENS; he must mean the ACROPOLIS and high town only. No ancient author ever speaks of the PYREUM, PHALERUS, and MUNYCHIA, as the fame with ATHENS. Much less can it be supposed, that DIONYSIUS would confider the matter in that light, after the walls of CIMON and PERICLES were destroyed, and ATHENS was entirely separated from these other towns. This observation destroys all Vossius's reasonings, and introduces common sense into these calculations.

NOTE

560 à th

NOTE [HH], p. 447.

EMOST. contra LEPT. The ATHENIANS brought yearly from PONTUS 400,000 medimni or bushels of corn, as appeared from the cuftom-house books. And this was the greater part of their importation of corn. This by the by is a ftrong proof that there is fome great miltake in the foregoing paffage of ATHENÆUS. For ATTICA itfelf was fo barren of corn, that it produced not enough even to maintain the peafants. TIT. LIV. lib. xliii. cap. 6. And 400,000 medimni would fcarcely feed 100,000 men during a twelvemonth. LUCIAN, in his navigium five vota, fays, that a fhip, which. by the dimensions he gives, seems to have been about the fize of our third rates, carried as much corn as would maintain all ATTICA for a twelvemonth. But perhaps ATHENS was decayed at that time; and befides, it is not fafe to truft to fuch loofe rhetorical calculations.

NOTE [II], p. 447.

IOD., SIC. lib. xvii. When ALEXANDER attacked THEBES, we may fafely conclude, that almost all the inhabitants were prefent. Whoever is acquainted with the fpirit of the GREEKS, especially of the THEBANS, will never fuspect, that any of them would defert their country, when it was reduced to fuch extreme peril and diffrefs. As ALEX-ANDER took the town by form, all those who bore arms were put to the fword without mercy; and they amounted only to 6000 men. Among these were some strangers and manumitted flaves. The captives, confifting of old men, women, children, and flaves, were fold, and they amounted to 30,000. We may therefore conclude that the free citizens in THEBES. of both fexes and all ages, were near 24,000; the strangers and flaves about 12,000. These last, we may observe, were fomewhat fewer in proportion than at ATHENS; as is reafonable to imagine from this circumstance, that ATHENS was a town of more trade to fupport flaves, and of more entertain_ ment to allure strangers. It is also to be remarked, that thirty-fix thousand was the whole number of people, both in the city of THEBES, and the neighbouring territory : A very moderate number, it must be confessed; and this com-Vol. I. putation.

0 0

putation, being founded on facts which appear indifputable, must have great weight in the present controversy. The above-mentioned number of RHODIANS too were all the inhabitants of the island, who were free, and able to bear arms.

NOTE [KK], p. 451.

C T R'ABO, lib. v. fays, that the emperor Augustus pro-I hibited the raising houses higher than feventy feet. In another paffage, lib. xvi. he fpeaks of the houses of ROME as remarkably high. See also to the fame purpose VITRUVIUS, lib. ii. cap. 8. ARISTIDES the fophift, in his oration ILS POUPNI, fays, that ROME confifted of cities on the top of cities; and that if one were to fpread it out, and unfold it, it would cover the whole furface of ITALY. Where an author indulges himfelf in fuch extravagant declamations, and gives so much into the hyperbolical style, one knows not how far he must be reduced. But this reasoning seems natural : If ROME was built in fo scattered a manner as DIONYSIUS fays, and ran fo much into the country, there must have been It is very few fircets where the houfes were raifed to high. only for want of room, that any body builds in that inconvenient manner. /

NOTE [LL], p. 451.

L IB. ii. epift. 16. lib. v. epift. 6. It is true, PLINY there defcribes a country-house: But fince that was the idea which the ancients formed of a magnificent and convenient building, the great men would certainly build the fame way in town. "In laxitatem ruris excurrunt," fays SENECA of the rich and voluptuous, epift. II4. VALERIUS MAXIMUS, lib. iv. cap. 4. speaking of CINCINNATUS's field of four acres, fays, "Anguste fe habitare nunc putat, cujus domus "tantum patet quantum CINČINNATI rura patuerant." To the fame purpose fee lib. xxxvi, cap. 15. also lib. xviii. cap. 2.

NOTE [MM], p. 451.

" MOENIA ejus (Romæ) collegere ambitu imperatoribus, cenforibufque Vespasianis, A. U. C. 828. paff. xiii. MCC. complexa montes feptem, ipfa dividitur iu regiones quatuordecim, compita earum 265. Ejufdem " fpatii

(in vita Severi) that the five-mile flone in via Lavicana was out of the city. (7) OLXMPIODORUS and PUBLIUS VICTOR fix the number of houfes in ROME to be betwixt forty and fifty thoufand. (8.) The very extravagance of the confequences drawn by this critic, as well as LIPSIUS, if they be neceffary, deftroys the foundation on which they are grounded: That ROME contained fourteen millions of inhabitants; while the whole kingdom of FRANCE contains only five, according to his computation, &c.

The only objection to the fenfe which we have affixed above to the paffage of PLINY, feems to lie in this, That PLINY, after mentioning the thirty-feven gates of ROME, affigns only a reafon for fupprefling the feven old ones, and fays nothing of the eighteen gates, the fireets leading from which terminated, according to my opinion, before they reached the Forum. But as PLINY was writing to the ROMANS, who perfectly knew the difpolition of the fireets, it is not firange he fhould take a circumflance for granted, which was fo familiar to every body. Perhaps too, many of thefe gates led to wharfs upon the river.

NOTE [NN], p. 453.

UINTUS CURTIUS fays, its walls were ten miles in circumference, when founded by ALEXANDER; lib.iv.cap.8. STRABO, who had travelled to ALEXANDRIA, as well as DIODORUS SICULUS, fays it was fcarce four miles long, and in most places about a mile broad; lib. xvii. PLINY fays it refembled a MACEDONIAN caffock, ftretching out in the corners; lib. v. cap. 10. Notwithstanding this bulk of ALEX-ANDRIA, which feems but moderate, DioDorus Siculus. speaking of its circuit as drawn by ALEXANDER (which it never exceeded, as we learn from AMMIANUS MARCELLI-NUS, lib. xxii. cap. 16.), fays it was unyides diapeeorla, extremely great, ibid. The reason which he assigns for its surpassing all cities in the world (for he excepts not ROME) is, that it contained 300,000 free inhabitants. He also mentions the revenues of the kings, to wit, 6000 talents, as another circumftance to the fame purpose: No fuch mighty fum in our eyes, 003 even even though we make allowance for the different value of money. What STRABO fays of the neighbouring country. means only that it was well peopled, our spire radue. Might not one affirm, without any great hyperbole, that the whole banks of the river from GRAVESEND to WINDSOR are one city? This is even more than STRABO fays of the banks of the lake MÆROTIS, and of the canal to CANOPUS. It is a vulgar faying in ITALY, that the king of SARDINIA has but one town in PIEDMONT; for it is all a town. AGRIPPA in JOSE-PHUS de bello JUDAIC. lib. ii. cap. 16. to make his audience comprehend the excessive greatness of ALEXANDRIA: which he endeavours to magnify, describes only the compass of the city as drawn by ALEXANDER : A clear proof that the bulk of the inhabitants were lodged there, and that the neighbouring country was no more than what might be expected about all great towns, very well cultivated, and well peopled.

Digitized by Google

NOTE [00], p. 454.

H E fays (in NERONE, cap. 30.) that a portico or piazza of it was 3000 feet long; "tanta laxitas ut porticus "triplices milliarias haberet." He cannot mean three miles. For the whole extent of the house from the PALATINE to the ESQUILINE was not near fo great. So when VOPISC. in AU-RELIANO mentions a portico in SALLUST'S gardens, which he calls porticus milliarens, it must be understood of a thoufand feet. So alfo HORACE:

" Nulla decempedis

" Metata privatis opacam

" Porticus excipiebat Arcton." Lib. ii. ode 15.

So also in lib. i. fatyr. 8.

" Mille pedes in fronte, trecentos cippus in agrum

" Hic dabat."

NOTE [PP], p. 464.

T appears from CÆSAR'S account, that the GAULS had no domettic flaves, who formed a different order from the Plebes. The whole common people were indeed a kind of flaves

Notes to the FIRST VOLUME.

" spatii mensura, currente a milliario in capite Roм. Fori " statuto, ad fingulas portas, quæ sunt hodie numero 37, " ita ut duodecim portæ femel numerentur, prætereanturque " ex veteribus septem, quæ esse desierunt, efficit passum per " directum 30,775. 'Ad extrema vero tectorum cum caitris " prætoriis ab eodem Milliario, per vicos omnium viarum, " menfura collegit paulo amplius feptuaginta millia paffuum. " Quo fi quis altitudinem tectorum addat, dignam profecto, " æftimationem concipiat, fateaturque nullius urbis magni-" tudinem in toto orbe potuisse ei comparari." PLIN. lib. iii. cap. 5.

All the beft manufcripts of PLINY read the paffage as here cited, and fix the compass of the walls of ROME to be thirteen miles. The question is, What PLINY means by 30,775 paces, and how that number was formed ? The manner in which I. conceive it. is this. ROME was a femicircular area of thirteen miles circumference. The Forum, and confequently the Milliarium, we know, was fituated on the banks of the Tr-BER, and near the center of the circle, or upon the diameter of the femicircular area. Though there were thirty-feven gates to ROME, yet only twelve of them had ftraight ftreets. leading from them to the Milliarium. PLINY, therefore. having affigned the circumference of ROME, and knowing that that alone was not fufficient to give us a just notion of its furface, uses this farther method. He supposes all the fireets. leading from the Milliarium to the twelve gates, to be laid together into one ftraight line, and fuppofes we run along that line, fo as to count each gate once: In which cafe, he fays, that the whole line is 30,775 paces: Or, in other words, that each fireet or radius of the femicircular area is upon an average two miles and a half; and the whole length of ROME is five miles, and its breadth about half as much, befides the fcattered suburbs.

PERE HARDOUIN understands this passage in the same manner; with regard to the laying together the feveral freets of ROME into one line, in order to compose 30,775 paces: But then he supposes, that streets led from the Milliarium to every gate, and that no fireet exceeded 800 paces in length. But

002

Digitized by Google

(1.) 2

(1.) a femicircular area, whole radius was only 800 paces, could never have a circumference near thirteen miles, the compals of ROME as affigned by PLINY. A radius of two miles and a half forms very nearly that circumference. (2.) There is an abfurdity in fuppofing a city fo built as to have fireets running to its center from every gate in its circumference. These fireets mult interfere as they approach. (3.) This diminishes too much from the greatness of ancient ROME, and reduces that city below even BRISTOL OF ROTTERDAM.

The fense which Vossius in his Observationes varia puts on this passage of PLINY, errs widely in the other extreme. One manuscript of no authority, instead of thirteen miles, has affigned thirty miles for the compais of the walls of ROME. And Vossius understands this only of the curvilinear part of the circumference; fuppofing, that as the TYBER formed the diameter, there were no walls built on that fide. But (1.) this reading is allowed to be contrary to almost all the manufcripts. (2.) Why fhould PLINY, a concife writer, repeat the compass of the walls of ROME in two fucceffive fentences ? (3.) Why repeat it with fo fensible a variation? (4.) What is the meaning of PLINY's mentioning twice the MILLIARIUM, if a line was measured that had no dependence on the MILLIARIUM? (5.) AURELIAN'S wall is faid by VOPISCUS to have been. drawn laxiore ambitu, and to have comprehended all the buildings and fuburbs on the north fide of the TYBER; yet its compais was only fifty miles; and even here critics fufpect fome mistake or corruption in the text; fince the walls, which remain, and which are supposed to be the same with AURE-LIAN's, exceed not twelve miles. It is not probable, that ROME would diminish from Augustus to Aurelian. It remained still the capital of the fame empire; and none of the civil wars in that long period, except the tumults on the death of MAXIMUS and BALBINUS, ever affected the city. CARACALLA is faid by AURELIUS VICTOR to have encreased ROME. (6.) There are no remains of ancient buildings, which mark any fuch greatness of ROME. Vossius's reply to this objection feems absurd. That the rubbish would fink fixty or feventy feet under ground. It appears from SFARTIAN (in ATHENÆUS, (lib. i. cap. 25.) who flourished during the reign of the ANTONINES, that the town MAREIA, near ALEXAN-DRIA, which was formerly a large city, had dwindled into a village. This is not, properly speaking, a contradiction. SUIDAS (AUGUST.) fays, that the Emperor AUGUSTUS, having numbered the whole ROMAN empire, found it contained only 4,101,017 men ($\alpha_{\rm roger}$). There is here furely fome great mistake, either in the author or transcriber. But this authority, feeble as it is, may be fufficient to counterbalance the exaggerated accounts of HERODOTUS and DIODORUS SICU-LUS with regard to more early times.

NOTE [RR], p. 467.

IB. ii. cap. 62. It may perhaps be imagined, that POLYBIUS, being dependent on ROME, would naturally extol the ROMAN dominion. But, in the fir/t place, POLY-BIUS, though one fees fometimes inflances of his caution, difcovers no fymptoms of flattery. Secondly, This opinion is only delivered in a fingle flroke, by the by, while he is intent upon another fubject; and it is allowed, if there be any fufpicion of an author's infincerity, that thefe oblique propositions difcover his real opinion better than his more formal and direct affertions.

NOTE [SS], p. 469.

I Must confess that that discourse of PLUTARCH, concerning the filence of the oracles, is in general of so odd a texture and so unlike his other productions, that one is at a loss what judgment to form of it. It is written in dialogue, which is a method of composition that PLUTARCH commonly but little affects. The personages he introduces advance very wild, absurd, and contradictory opinions, more like the visionary systems or ravings of PLATO than the plain fense of PLUTARCH. There runs also through the whole an air of superstition and credulity, which refembles very little the fpirit that appears in other philosophical compositions of that author. For it is remarkable.

remarkable, that, though PLUTARCH be an hiftorian as fuperfitious as HERODOTUS or LIVY, yet there is fcarcely, in all antiquity, a philofopher lefs fuperfititious, excepting CI-CERO and LUCIAN. I must therefore confefs, that a passage of PLUTARCH, cited from this difcourse, has much lefs authority with me, than if it had been found in most of his other compositions.

There is only one other difcourse of PLUTARCH liable to like objections, to wit, that concerning those whose punishment is delayed by the Deity. It is also writ in dialogue, contains like fuperstitious, wild visions, and seems to have been chiefly composed in rivalship to PLATO, particularly his last book de republica.

And here I cannot but obferve, that Monf. FONTENELLE, a writer eminent for candor, feems to have departed a little from his ufual character, when he endeavours to throw a ridicule upon PLUTARCH on account of paffages to be met with in this dialogue concerning oracles. The abfurdities here put into the mouths of the feveral perfonages are not to be afcribed to PLUTARCH. He makes them refute each other; and, in general, he feems to intend the ridiculing of thofe very opinions, which FONTENELLE would ridicule him for maintaining. See Hiftoire des oracles.

NOTE [TT], p. 492.

T is remarkable, that, in the remonstrance of the duke of BOURBON and the legitimate princes, against this destination of LOUIS the XIVth, the doctrine of the original contrast is insisted on, even in that absolute government. The FRENCH nation, fay they, chusing HUGH CAPET and his posterity to rule over them and their posterity, where the former line fails, there is a tacit right referved to chuse a new royal family; and this right is invaded by calling the bastrand princes to the throne, without the consent of the nation. But the Comte de BOULAINVILLIERS, who wrote in defence of the bastrand princes, ridicules this notion of an original contrast.

Digitized by Google

567

flaves to the nobility, as the people of POLAND are at this day: And a nobleman of GAUL had fometimes ten thousand dependents of this kind. Nor can we doubt, that the armies were composed of the people as well as of the nobility. The fighting men amongst the HELVETII were the fourth part of the inhabitants; a clear proof that all the males of military age bore arms. See CESAR de bello Gall. lib. i.

We may remark, that the numbers in CESAR'S commentaries can be more depended on than those of any other ancient author, because of the GREEK translation, which still remains, and which checks the LATIN original.

NOTE [QQ], p. 466.

HE inhabitants of MARSEILLES loft not their fuperiority over the GAULS in commerce and the mechanic arts, till. the ROMAN dominion turned the latter from arms to agriculture and civil life. See STRABO, lib. iv. That author, in feveral places, repeats the observation concerning the improvement arifing from the ROMAN arts and civility : And he lived at the time when the change was new, and would be more fensible. So also PLINY : " Quis enim non, commu-" nicato orbe terrarum, majestate Romani imperii, profe-" cisse vitam putet, commercio rerum ac societate festa pacis, " omniaque etiam, quæ occulta antea fuerant, in promifcuo " uíu facta. Lib. xiv. proœm. Numine deûm electa (speak-" ing of ITALY) quæ cælum ipfum clarius faceret, sparfa " congregaret imperia, ritusque molliret, & tot populorum " discordes, ferasque linguas fermonis commercio contrahe-" ret ad colloquia, & humanitatem homini daret; breviter-" que, una cunctarum gentium in toto orbe patria fieret;" lib. ii. cap. 5. Nothing can be ftronger to this purpose than the following passage from TERTULLIAN, who lived about the age of SEVERUS. " Certè quidem ipfe orbis in promptu " est, cultior de die & instructior pristino. Omnia jam pervia, " omnia_nota, omnia negotiofa. Solitudines famofas retro " fundi amœnissimi obliteraverunt, silvas arva domuerunt, " feras

Digitized by Google .

" feras pecora fugaverunt; arenæ feruntur, faxa panguntur, " paludes eliquantur, tantæ urbes, quantæ non cafæ quon-" dam. Jam nec insulæ horrent, nec scopuli terrent ; ubique " domus, ubique populus, ubique respublica, ubique vita. " Summum testimonium frequentiæ humanæ, onerofi fumus " mundo, vix nobis elementa sufficiunt ; & necessitates-arc-" tiores, et querelæ apud omnes, dum jam nos natura non-" suffinet." De anima, cap. 30. The air of rhetoric and declamation which appears in this passage, diminishes somewhat from its authority, but does not entirely deftroy it. The fame remark may be extended to the following passage of ARISTIDES the fophist, who lived in the age of ADRIAN, " The whole world," fays he, addreffing himfelf to the Ro-MANS, " feems to keep one holiday; and mankind, laying " afide the fword which they formerly wore, now betake " themfelves to feaffing and to joy. The cities, forgetting " their ancient animofities, preferve only one emulation, " which shall embellish itself most by every art and ornament : " Theatres every where arife, amphitheatres, porticoes, aque-" ducts, temples, fchools, academies; and one may fafely " pronounce, that the finking world has been again railed by " your aufpicious empire. Nor have cities alone received an " increase of ornament and beauty; but the whole earth, like " a garden or paradife, is cultivated and adorned: Info-" much, that fuch of mankind as are placed out of the limits " of your empire (who are but few) feem to merit our fym-" pathy and compassion."

It is remarkable, that though DIODORUS SICULUS makes the inhabitants of ÆGYPT, when conquered by the ROMANS, amount only to three millions; yet JOSEPH. de bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 16. fays, that its inhabitants, excluding thofe of ALEXANDRIA, were feven millions and a half, in the reign of NFRO: And he expressly fays, that he drew this account from the books of the ROMAN publicans, who levied the polltax. STRABO, lib. xvii. praifes the fuperior police of the ROMANS with regard to the finances of ÆGYPT, above that of its former monarchs: And no part of administration is more effential to the happingers of a people. Yet we read in ATHENEUS, tract, efpecially when applied to HUGH CAPET; who mounted the throne, fays he, by the fame arts, which have ever been employed by all conquerors and ufurpers. He got his title, indeed, recognized by the flates after he had put himfelf in poffeffion: But is this a choice or contract? The Comte de BOULAINVILLIERS, we may obferve, was a noted republican; but being a man of learning, and very converfant in hiftory, he knew that the people were never almost confulted in thefe . revolutions and new establishments, and that time alone beflowed right and authority on what was commonly at first founded on force and violence. See Etat de la France, Vol. III.

Notes to the FIRST VOLUME.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

ioogle.

57I

