Extract from the MINUTES of a CONVERSATION,

Between the Rev. Mr. J. Wesley, and others, at a publick Conference held in London, August 7, 1770, and printed by W. Pine, Bristol.

TAKE heed to your Doctrine.

We faid in 1744, "We have leaned too much toward Calvinifm." Wherein?

1. With regard to Man's Faithfulnefs. Our Lord himfelf taught to use the expression. And we ought never to be assumed of it. We ought steadily to assume fert, on his authority, that if a man is not faithful in the unrighteous mammon, God will not give him the true riches.

2. With regard to working for life. This also our Lord has expressly commanded us.

us. Labour ERGAZESTHE, literally work for the meat that endureth to everlasting life. And in fact, every believer, till he comes to glory, works for as well as from life.

3. We have received it as a maxim, that "a man is to do nothing, in order to Juftification." Nothing can be more false. Whoever defires to find favour with God, should cease from evil and learn to do well. Whoever repents, should do works meet for repentance. And if this is not in order to find favor, what does he do them for ?

Review the whole affair.

1. Who of us is now accepted of God?

He that now believes in Chrift, with a loving obedient heart.

2. But who among those that never heard - of Christ?

He that feareth God, and worketh rightoufnefs according to the light he has.

3. Is this the fame with, "He that is fincere?"

Nearly, if not quite.

4. Is

[7]

4. Is not this, " Salvation by works?"

Not by the merit of works, but by works as a condition.

5. What have we then been difputing about for these thirty years?

I am afraid about words.

6. As to merit itself, of which we have been to dreadfully afraid: we are rewarded, according to our works, yea, because of our works. How does this differ from for the fake of our works? And how differs this from fecundum merita operum? As our works deferve? Can you split this hair?

I doubt, I cannot.

7. The grand objection to one of the preceding propolitions, is drawn from matter of fact. God does in fact justify thole, who by their own confession, neither feared God nor wrought righteousness. Is this an exception to the general rule ?

It is a doubt, God makes any exception at all. But how are we fure, that the perfon in queftion never did fear God and work righteoufnefs? His own faying fo is .

is not proof: For we know, how all that are convinced of fin, undervalue themfelves in every refpect.

8. Does not talking of a juftified or a fanctified ftate, tend to miflead men? Almost naturally leading them to truft, in what was done in one moment? Whereas we are every hour and every moment pleafing or displeasing to God, according to our works? According to the whole of our inward tempers, and our outward behaviour.

A CON-

[9]

A CONVERSATION between Richard Hill, Efq; the Rev. Mr. Madan, and Father Walfb, Superior of a Convent of Englifb Benedictine Monks at Paris, held at the faid Convent, July 13th, 1771, in prefence of Thomas Powys, Efq; and others.

Mr. Madan. SIR, I fuppofe you have often heard of the different fects amongst the Protestants in England?

Superior. Very often, fir.

Mr. Madan. Have you ever heard of the Methodifts?*

* By Methodifts was meant by the Querift, Mr. J. Wesley and his followers.

Supe-

[10]

Superior. Yes, fir, very often.

Mr. Madan. I can fhew you their tenets, fettled by fome of their chiefs at their laft conference at London. Here they are. [giving the extract of the minutes. See page 5, 6, 7, 8.]

After the Superior had carefully perused them, he was asked by Mr. Madan. Do you agree with that doctrine, fir ?

Superior. No indeed, fir, we do not hold fuch principles as those.

Mr. Madan. What fault do you find with them?

Supe-

[11]

Superior. They are too near Pelagianism. *

Mr. Hill. The principles of the Roman Catholick Church are nearer to the Church of England than those?

Superior. A great deal, fir; those of that paper are too near Pelagianism, the author is a Pelagian.

* Pelagius lived in the end of the fourth century. He denied the doctrines of election, perfeverance, the imputation of Adam's fin and Chrift's righteoufnefs. He taught, that our falvation depended on man's faithfulnefs; and that man could do fomething in order to procure juftification, and to find favour with God. St. Augustin vindicated the doctrines of God's fovereign grace, and man's inability, against this heretic, who was publickly excommunicated by the whole Catholick Church.

Mr.

Mr. Madan. What do you think of the author's afferting, that those who are convinced of fin undervalue themfelves in every respect; do you think finners can undervalue themselves?

Superior. No, by no means; having too high thoughts of themfelves makes them live in fin.

Mr. Madan. Can we have any good in us before Justification?

Superior. Certainly not; our Juftification is by Chrift alone: for if St. Paul fays, that we are not fufficient of ourfelves to have a good thought, how much lefs to perform good works.

Mr. Madan. Can we ceafe to do evil, and learn to do well, before Faith?

Superior. No, we cannot.

Mr. Madan. St. Paul faith, whatfoever is not of faith, is fin.

Superior. Undoubtedly.

Mr. Madan. I with, fir, you would favour us with fome ftrictures upon that paper in writing?

Superior. Sir, I am fo taken up, that I have not time, or Icould fay a great deal upon it.

Mr. Hill. Your doctrine is nearer that of the Protestants?

Superior. O, fir, a great deal, that is Pelagianism.

Several

Several other particulars occurred in the fame converfation, which cannot be fo minutely recollected as the above, but throughout the whole, the Superior fhewed a deteftation of the principles in the minutes, as attributing too much power and goodnefs to man, whom he acknowledged to be fo fallen in Adam as to be defititute of both.

We do verily believe, from what the Superior faid, that the principles in the extract are too rotten for even a Papift to reft upon.

And from a review of all that passed, it may be supposed, that Popery is about the midway between [15] tween Protestantism and Mr. J. Wesley.

ſ

Since the above converfation and remarks were committed to paper, I have been informed that Mr. Wefley, at his late conference held at Briftol, complained of a mifreprefentation of his fentiments, and that he and upwards of fifty of his preachers then affembled, figned the following manifesto.

Whereas, the doctrinal points in the minutes of a conference, held in London, August 7, 1770, have been understood to favour justification by works:
now we, the Rev. John Wessey and [16]

' and others, affembled in confe-' rence, do declare, that we had ono fuch meaning; and that we · abhor the doctrine of juftifica-· tion by works, as a most peri-· lous and abominable doctrine; and as the faid minutes are not ' fufficiently guarded in the way ' they are expressed, we hereby ' folemnly declare, in the fight of God, that we have no truft or confidence, but in the alone · merits of our Lord Jesus Christ, · for justification or falvation, either in life, death, or the · day of judgment; and though ' no one is a real christian be-· liever, (and confequently can-' not be faved) who doth not ' good works, where there is time

I7]

time and opportunity, yet our works have no fhare in meriting or purchafing our juftification, either in whole, or in part.'

Now, I would only obferve, that the fole defign of writing or fpeaking is to convey ideas, and in whatever point of view any number of words or fentences ftrike the hearer or reader, there we are to look for the true fenfe of what is written or fpoken. If this were not the cafe, there would be no use at all in letters, or even in speech itself; the plainest affirmations and clearest decifions would be ftill nothing but mere ambiguities, and liable

to

to a thousand different constructions, infomuch that no man's real fentiments could ever be known; even Mr. John Wefley's fine courtly performance, intitled ' Free thoughts on the present state of publick affairs,' might be interpreted as a fevere libel upon the king, the ministry, and the princefs dowager, and as the higheft eloge upon Wilkes, liberty, and forty-five: for it is not at all more certain, that the political labours of Mr. Wefley are intended as a defence of his majefty and his ministers, than that his theological labours (I mean as given us in the minutes of 1770) are a defence of justification by works. And we have just as much reason to fuppose that the declaration itself does not convey its proper meaning, as the minutes themfelves which gave rife to it.

But as a ftriking proof how little any of Mr. Wefley's affertions are to be depended upon, I beg leave to prefent the reader with the following contraft, containing on the one fide, what he has advanced in favour of imputed righteoufnefs; on the other, what he has faid againft it. *

* I also intended to have drawn another contrast, from Mr. Wesley's various affertions upon the doctrine of finless perfection, but I was fearful of extending my little piece into a folio volume.

Why fhould you think it a frange thing that the righteodinefs of Christ frould be imputed? Mr. Wef.ey's Christ. Lib. vol. ix. p. 231.

Christ bestoweth his righteousues on us by imputation. Christ. Lib. wel. xiv. p. 281.

Come then, IMPUTE, impart,

To me, thy righteoufness. Again,

Let faith and love combine

To guard thy valiant breaft; The plate be righteoufnefs divine, IMPUTED and imprest. Mr. J. Wesley's Hymns.

The righteoufnels that faveth us, is wrought already by God. — Mr. Wylity's Chrift. Lib.

We are only to believe and accept this righteoufnefs which is offered us. When that is done, it is God's part to frame us and fashion us for a holy life. — Ibid.

Christ's obedience in fulfilling the law, is imputed to all that believe unto rightcournes, as if themfelves had fulfilled it. Christ. Lib. vol. xiv. p. 221. For Christ's fake do not dipute for the particular phrafe, the imputed righteouinefs of Christ. Mr. Wesley's letter to Mr. Hervey.

The use of that term (viz. the imputation of righteousness) is not furptural; it is not necessary; it has done immense hurt. —— Ibid.

To fay, the righteoufnefs which juilines is already wrought out. is a crude, unferiptural expremion. — Ibid.

The nice metaphyfical doftrine of imputed righteoufnefs, leads not to repentance, but to licentioufnefs, and makes men fatisfied without any holinefs at all. — Ibid.

It is neither a fafe nor fcriptural way of fpeaking, to fay, the obedience of our furety is accepted inflead of our own. — Ibid.

Notwithstanding these manifest contradictions, Mr. Wesley affirms, that his opinion has been always one and the fame on this head, and if he were to go on affirming and contradicting forty years more, I fear he would never have the candour to acknowledge his own inconfistencies. And yet this identical gentleman has written a book, entitled, 'A preservative against unsettled notions in religion :' and to this very day both he and his difciples are blaming the reft of the christian world, as void of charity and brotherly love towards them, and are for ever crying out, union, union. But how is this union to be maintained? Only by wading after after Mr. John Welley through the quagmires of Pelagianism and Arminianism: --- by paying the most facred deference to all his cautions against what authors are to be read, and what preachers to be heard ; --- by putting out one's eyes to believe him confiftent through all his inconfistencies; --- and by tamely giving up the most precious and effential truths of the gospel, whensoever they clash with any of his own favourite opinions. Upon these eafy terms, union with Mr. John Wesley might foon be established. But whofoever would prefume to bear an open honeft teftimony against any of his dogmatical decisions, or dare to mention his strange preprevarications, is immediately held forth as a perfecuting, vindictive, blood-thirfty monfter, actuated by curfed party fpirit, and under the influence of fatan himfelf. * All attempts to reafon with fuch furious bigots as thefe, would

* These mild and dove-like expressions have lately been vented from the shop of a staunch admirer of Mr. Wesley, (probably one of his perfect class) in a printed circular letter, dated July 2, 1771, and written, as I suppose by the post mark, from Bristol. The letter itself is too poor to deferve any notice; however, what is wanting in skill is amply made up in bitter invective against Calvinism, and in true zeal for the Weslean system; whils the author, like a thoroughly exasperated Arminian, happlily displays his candour, in bringing up the old story of Servetus, and attributing the same spirit which caused him to be put

would be only like whiftling to the wind. But I am fully perfuaded, that there are many humble, excellent, catholick-fpirited chriftians, in fociety with Mr. Wefley, though thefe are for the most part kept in much bon-to death, to all who have the misfortune of differing from Mr. Wefley. He alfo greatly laments the lofs of that charity among profeffors, which believeth all things, and endureth all things; though all the idea he feems to have of it himfelf, confifts in believing all things which Mr. John believes, and in enduring all things which Mr. John choofes should be endured by his own followers, concerning marriage, tea, source is fould be endured by his own followers, concerning marriage, tea, source cifed his pen, whils the remained a stranger to the happines of drinking a comfortable dish of tea, with Mrs. Wesley, his present lady.

dage, by being continually fent to pore upon their own corrupted hearts, instead of being led to view themfelves always compleat in Christ; and whenever they begin to tafte the fweetness of free gospel falvation, are frightened from it by bugbear cautions, to beware of Calvinifm, Antinomianifm, a partial God, &c. It is therefore for fuch as these that this little piece is chiefly intended, and if it prove a word in featon but to one foul, I shall not tegret my labour.

With regard to Mr. Wesley. himself, it is not for me or any other man to determine concerning his state as a christian. It is D certain certain there may be much zeal which is not according to knowledge; and it is also certain, that much fea and land may be compaffed to make profelytes, by those who are neverthelefs ftrangers to real conversion themselves. I confels however, I had for many years an high veneration for Mr. Wefley, even though I differed from him in those points deemed calvinistical. But his late minutes have obliged me to form very different fentiments of him; and these fentiments are fo far from being changed into more favourable ones, by the late declaration at Briftol, that I am thereby more than ever convinced of his unfettled fettled principles, and prevaricating difposition.

ľ

I shall not enter into any difpute with the author of the circular letter, concerning the propriety or impropriety of the printed paper, dated Bath, and figned Walter Shirley. Suffice it to fay, that I was not prefent when that paper was drawn up, nor did I know the contents of it till it was fent to me after its publication. I readily acknowledge that Mr. J. Wesley, as leader of a fect diffenting from the articles of the church of England, has a right to maintain his own principles; and yet I think it the duty of every christian, so far as he believes D 2 lieves those principles to be unfound and dangerous, to testify his abhorrence of them.

I would conclude with obferving, that there cannot be a more unfair way of proceeding, than to condemn doctrines on account of the practices of fome individuals who hold those doctrines. That there have been, in all ages, those who profess to know God, whilst in works they deny him, is but too certain; and we might as well charge the fins of David, Lot, Noab, the incestuous Corinthian, and even, of Judas himfelf, upon our Lord. and the apostles and prophets, as attribute the perfonal crimes of any any one or more profetting what is called Calvinism, to the system of divinity taught by that eminent reformer John Caloin. ľ mention this, becaufe a late writer in the prefent controverly has defended his cause with some weapons of this fort; but however he and I may differ in fome particular points, I have the highest veneration for his many and great excellencies, and know his candour to be fuch, that I am perfuaded upon a review of that part of his publication, he will fincerely with it had been left out; not only for the reasons I have mentioned, but becaufe he must be very fensible how much thefe these things expose religion, in the eyes of the world, and that he hath thereby opened a door of retaliation, against certain persons of his own principles, which, however, I forbear to make use of.

The

[3¹]

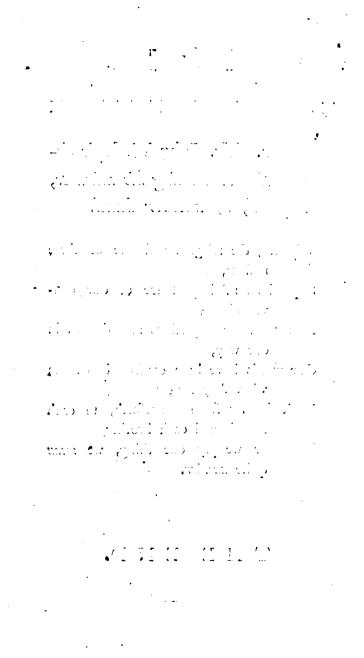

The Rev. Mr. John Wefley's declaration concerning his minutes, versified, by another hand.

- Whereas, the religion and fate of three nations,
- Depend on th' importance of our conversations;
- And as fome objections are thrown in our way,
- Our words have been conftrued to mean what they fay;
- Be 't known from henceforth, to each friend, and each brother,
- Whene'er we say one thing, we mean quite another.

THE END.
